

2. re Kant rough notes

"Every quotation is also an interpretation."

The momentous world historic <sup>and</sup> age was struggling to find expression at one and the same time

Whether LT likes it or not--and I know he doesn't; and whether he's conscious of it or not, (and I know he wasn't)--his is a Kantian philosophy of history, not as "men of good will" for his men were always proletarian and the world was always revolutionary-- ~~nevertheless it was always an outside force~~ <sup>but as</sup> and not an internal dialectic which was the final determinant. Dualism within subject and object. Just as when Karl Kautsky in 1909 ~~proclaimed~~ <sup>reclaimed</sup> that "Marx proclaimed no philosophy but the end of all philosophy", so LT was forever expressing a dualism in his philosophy.

*He would have given... Theoretically disagreed but... Kantian... whether he's conscious of it or not...
 dualism...
 internal dialectic...

.....

The most characteristic feature in all of ~~HTG~~
Trotsky's "dialectics" was ~~shear~~ <sup>shear</sup> mechanistic, formalistic dualistic ways of saying "taking ~~the~~ power," "the road to power," "holding power." (Note p. 29 of P&R, dualism not only in practice of dialectics as if that were only 'organizational' but in theory, in methodology.
Also note p.132.)
