

WOM - theories of imperialism

The valuable points he makes are: (1) the recognition that it makes no difference whether it's private or state that own the means of production, insofar as class relations are concerned. (2) That he recognizes the "contributions" by Marxists, esp. Varga who developed more the concept of state monopoly capitalism. But he puts the emphasis through from an opposite point of view, when e.g. Stalin, but it, that post-war economy, ~~could~~ ~~avoid~~ ~~the~~ ~~serious~~ ~~ones~~. (3) He criticizes RU for being "too Marxist" which would surprise Marx to no end, but credits her with seeing the non-capitalist world more fundamentally than anyone. ~~to~~ ~~come~~ ~~to~~ ~~an~~ ~~interesting~~ ~~conclusion~~: "We have here not so much a theory in the strict sense, but rather a kind of ~~phenome~~ ~~nology~~ of imperialism." His main point is completely wrong, because, just when he seems to have somewhat of a point by saying that "no single cause" can account for imperialism, he tries to conclude that imperialism does not arise of any inherent necessity in the socio-economic system--Lordy!!
