

Róża Luxemburg, Listy do Irena Jogichesa-Tyszecki edited by Feliks Tych, Książka i Wiedza, 1968.

From the introduction by Tych p. XXXIX: (Vol I)

As is known, the illegal arrival of Rosa Luxemburg at the end of December of 1905 to Warsaw was to lead to the arrest of both revolutionaries on 6 of March 1906. Tsar's Czhirana needed only a little more than two months to determine that the two German journalists: Anna Matschke and Otto Engelman, living in the pension of countess Walewska on Jasna Street near Zielony /Green/ Plazza (now Labrowski Plazza), are in reality none other than Rosa Luxemburg and Iren Jogiches. Czhirana was helped in this case by the denunciations of the German press, particularly "Die Post". A closer illumination of the circumstances and consequences of the arrest of both revolutionaries we /I/ give elsewhere².

²See Feliks Tych: Ostatni pobyt Róży Luksemburg w Warszawie. /Last stay of RL in Warsaw/ In: Szkice z dziejow Warszawy powstaniowej /Sketches of post uprising Warsaw/ (in print) PWN, Warszawa 1963.

From the introduction by Tych p. XVI:

In this period both of them belong to the ^{forefront} organizers and leaders of the group Spartacus. In March 1918 Jogiches also was arrested. He, as well as Rosa were released only by the November revolution in Germany. There starts for them a feverish period of organizing ~~in~~ the German Communist Prty in the midst of revolution. In ^{early} ~~the~~ ~~beginning~~ of December came to them the emissary of the, then being formed, Communist Workers Party of Poland, Josef Giszewski, presenting them the program comprising the ideological basis ~~for~~ the soon expected uniting of PPS ^{Left} and SDKPIL. That unity and its ideological basis are approved by both founders and long-time leaders of Polish socialdemocracy. It was to be, however, their last contact with the Polish prty.

June 2 1909 RL attacks Trotski "Panarchy of terror and its party":

However, Trotski's praised article, particularly in part I, completely superficial and even just plain false, repeats Tkacz's idiotic ideas about hanging "in the air" absolutism, totally dismissed by Engels, and he repeats that -- after the 3rd Duma!

RL, Listy do Leona Jogichosa-Tyszki, edited by Feliks Tych, Ksiazka i Wiedza, Warszawa '71
From the preface to Vol III by F. Tych:

(p. VII) In the beginning of 1908 the party affairs force them /RL and LJ/, despite tense personal relationship, to start correspondence. In any case from that time is dated the first preserved letter after a two-year pause. L. Jogiches spent then a lot of time in Krakow, where the secretariat of the party was located and where its theoretical organ "Przeglad Socjaldemokratyczny" /Socialdemocratic Review/ was published. However, even then, his "base camp" was Berlin. He lived in a hotel room in Steglitz /a part of Berlin -U.W./ and to these two addresses, in Krakow and Berlin, are addressed the letters of RL (the actual envelopes were not preserved). But in the apt. in Friedenau on Granachstr. 58 there remained their common library-archive, the work-room of both Jogiches has a key to that apt. and uses it often to work in their ex-common study. RL, as is shown in the letters, as an imposition by Tyszka of his presence, intrusion into her own world. Because of that, part of that year in which she was not tied to the party school (it lasted, usually, from November to April), she tried to spend outside the house not to aggravate old wounds. Until the summer of 1911 she will move to Súdende /another part of Berlin - U.W./...

(p. XVII): At the same time the letters show clearly that SDKPiL still fought and sharply criticized liquidationism and all other anti-bolshevik tendencies in SDKPiL, all tries to mount anti-bolshevik blocks inside that party, as for example the so-called August block in 1912 whose main inspirer was Leon Trotski.
