Campus faculty supports American draft dodger

The Faculty Committee on Vietnam has issued a statement in support of draft resisters.

"All Canadians should greet those who have chosen to live here with friendly assistance," the statement says.

"There are many reasons for helping these youngsters who, rather than blindly follow the orders of their government, have sought refuge here," it went on to say.

The committee pointed out that draft resisters are faced with intolerably painful choice — participate in a war they consider unjustifiable, spend their best years in jail or emigrate with little hope of ever returning.

They have a right to emigrate from their country, says the statement. The fact that their decision has been influenced by their country's military policies should not cause prejudice against them.

Canada's national policy encourages the immigration of skilled and educated people, it continues. To discriminate against young males in this category would be particularly hypocritical and contradictory for Canada.

They will doubtlessly make a valuable contribution to our society, particularly because many of them are motivated by idealism and compassion, the letter declares.

"Certainly it is better to flee than to participate in a war of which one disapproves."

Arthurs sparks Law over Vic

By GELLIUS LACROSSE

Box lacrosse, like student apathy and May exams, is indigenous to the University of Toronto. According to Spalding's "Official Box Lacrosse Guide," the first indoor lacrosse league in existence was that formed at U of T in the Autumn of 1931. Vic defeated OCE to win the title that year.

This year's lacrosse finals began yesterday with Law, led by Don Arthur's brilliant 8 (eight)-goal performance, crushing Vic I, 13-7. Gary Grierson had 3 for Law, and Pashby and Davies the others. Blyth (3), Elleker (2), Evans and Murphy were the Vic scorers. Second game of the best 2-of-3 games series will be at Hart House tomorrow. Incidentally, if Law wins tomorrow, as seems likely (in fact, I predict Law will win), it will mark the end of the remarkable career of Law's Don Arthurs, one of the most outstanding lacrosse players in U of T history; so if you've never seen a game of box lacrosse, tomorrow might be a useful time to start. Ladies will be admitted if accompanied by tractor.

HOCKEY

St. Michael's A, led by Bannon's bat trick and 3 goals, shut-out PHE, 5-0. Sullivan and Hurley scored the other Irish goals; McNally earned the shut-out.

St. Michael's B edged Scarborough 3-2. St. Mike's goals went to McCarthy (2) and Rae. Hanley and Corribeau scored for Scar etc.

School of Business, paced by a goal from Con-Man Corley and the eponymous Sharpe, beat Innis by the margin (note subtle pun) of 3-2. Uyede scored both Innis goals.

BASKETBALL

The powerful PHE A squad took two important games in recent action, trouncing Sr. Engineering 48-33 and St. Mike's 48-34. Crouter led PHE in the first game with 18 points; O'Connor had a like number (figure it out) for Skule. McKenzie led PHE against St. Mike's with 13; O'Neill had 9 for the Irish.

Elsewhere, Jr. Engineering, paced by Austris Lieja's 11 points, topped Law I, 31-28. Garbe had 10 for Law.

MINOR SPORTS

The New College Steamboat-Racing team wishes to challenge any persons interested in high altitude tests of endurance to a match of, predictably enough, steamboat racing. Such interested persons should contact Jack McCaffrey, Varsity jazz critic and head of the New College squad, preferably in some suitably clandestine manner. Teams are restricted to 8 arms each (that is, one octopus, 4 people, 2/25 centipede, etc).

Inkmen rally to rout Radiorats 7-6

Screaming obscene libel and brandishing copies of The Realist, Varsity Inkmen scared off Radio Varsity in the dying moments to score the winning goal as they came from behind (cheap sensationalism) to rape (further cheap sensationalism) the tube-boobs, 7-6. Said the lone spectator before, during, and after the game, "Who's playing?"

Author of the winning marker was newsie veteran Paul Carson who let go a blistering drive from two feet out which tore into the net an inch over the goal-line. Radio goalie, Bullet Bob Clark, Inkmen's traditional secret weapon, complained after his annual shower, "I was screened on the play by my arch-rival, Phil Bingley." Observers scorned Clark's feeble excuse pointing out that Bingley was the opposing goaltender.

The game started on a worrisome note for Inkmen coach, Flash Mickleburgh, as his dependable leftwinger, Bob Parkins, collapsed after the first 20 seconds, groaning faintly, "God, do I want a cigarette." The incredibly-unconditioned Parkins was used only sparingly thereafter, but during his brief sorties on the ice, managed to score a goal and lose 15 pounds. The famed Brute Hulk dwindled into almost nothingness as his weight dropped to a lowly 69.

Radio ringers blazed to an early 3-1 lead but were cooled out by a pair of vegetables from the squash team (cf. Howie and the Plug). The dextrous squash duo notched Radio's goal tree for two goals to even the score 3-3 at the end of the first half (?). Happiest player when the gong gonged was a whimpering Bob Parkins, foud fatigued on the dressing room floor after an extra-long 40 second shift.

In the second half of the stirring duel, Radio quickly stormed into a 6-4 blizzard lead. With five minutes left, Caesar's ghost appeared before Radio coach, Doug Payne, and forewarned, "I'll see you at Pbilipi."

This led to a noticeable sag in the Radiorat squad and Inkmen girded their loins and lirded their groins for three goals and a brilliant, cut-throat (cheap sensationalism) victory. Brian Cruchley, who knew enough to leave the bottom button of his fly undone, garnered two markers, while Carson scored the winner.

For the final minute of the game, Inkmen put on a full-breasted attack with Donni Bohnen, Cathy Adams, and Sherry Brydson tying Radiorats in knots. Once Brydson actually touched the puck.

The game was saved in the final half-second when Phil Bingley sprawled spectacularly to make a lunging grab of a difficult roller from centre ice.

Other highlights of the crowdteasing math were Mike Kesterton's collapse, Paul MacRae's nothingness during play, Larry Haiven's Varsity-padded-arms, Jim Cowan's passion, Laurie Redman's playmaking, and New-sie Lalonde.

Entertainment reigns in 3-3 draw

By PAUL CARSON

The savvy of the NHL Old Timers and the youthful legs of Varsity Blues cancelled each other out last night in the most entertaining hockey game Varsity Arena has witnessed in many years.

After sixty minutes of clever, exciting action, Blues and Old Timers ended in a 3-3 standoff. Staged to raise funds for Blues trip to the World Student Games in January, the evening's action netted about $1,500.

Blues skated onto the ice to the U of T school song but the LGMB decided to welcome the Old Timers with lazy renditions of Auld Lang Syne and The Skaters' Waltz.

However, both Blues and the band were caught by surprise as the old pros stormed to the attack forcing Blues starting netminder John Wrigley to make several outstanding saves.

On Blues first rush, defenseman Bob Goldham displayed the style which made him famous for Leafs and Detroit as he fell to his knees to stop a close-in drive. Goldham later casually caught a blistering slap shot from Blues defenseman Doug Jones.

Old Timers opened the scoring after eight minutes as Bob Hunter blasted Danny Lewicki's perfect pass past a helpless Wrigley.

Blues tied it up when Bob Hamilton batted in Murray Stroud's rebound after Goldham gave the puck away.

In the second period play started slowly but the tempo soon increased with both teams making rink-length rushes.

Blues took the lead when Gord Cunningham took passes from Passi and Laurent before beating OldTimer's goalie Ivan Wamsley with a high backhand.

But within seconds Cunningham had taken a cheap holding penalty, and from the faceoff oldie Bob Beckett slipped a screen shot by Blues' second netminder Pete Adamson.

The OldTimers came on strong and Lewicki combined with Beckett to give them a 3-2 lead before the period ended.

Blues threw everything into the attack during the final stanza and ex-Leaf Eddie Litzenberger pleaded with the officials to "speed up the damn clock."

Referee Bob Friday finally decided to give the clutch-and-grabbers a penalty. Until then he had managed to skillfully ignore a veritable melange of deft hooking, holding and interference on the part of the OldTimers.

While former Ranger Ivan Irwin was serving an interference penalty, Blues center Paul Laurent took a Passi pass and whipped a wrist shot to the short side past Wamsley.

With two minutes to go, Danny Lewicki burst into the clear and faced Adamson on a clean breakaway. However, Blues goalie stood his ground and came up with a clutch leg save to preserve the tie.

Blues stormed back but time ran out just as Captain Peter Speyer wound up for a screened slap shot.

BLUENOTES: Attendance for the game was 1,499 but there should have been more ... three stars chosen by oldtime Varsity sports editor Rick Kohlhus were Old Timers Irwin, Goldham and Lewicki ... Blues had a 33-29 edge in shots ... Speyer and Stroud stood out for Blues who showed great reluctance to shoot until too late ... next home game is Friday at 8 p.m. against McGill ... Blues and OldTimers last faced each other in December 1962; score that time was also 3-3.

Squash Blues climb the Ivy

Varsity squash Blues head south today for their annual invasion of Ivy League colleges. Blues take on some of the best intercollegiate squash teams in the United States as they play five matches in three days.

Wesleyan and Yale are scheduled for tomorrow. Harvard and Amherst, Friday, and Williams College, Saturday afternoon.

All five schools are ranked in the top ten with Harvard ranked No. 1 in the nation. Anal Nayar of Bombay, India, is Harvard's top ranked player and U.S. intercollegiate champ. Nayar defeated Peter Martin of McGill, Canadian intercollegiate champ for the title.

Last year Blues had a 23 record defeating Wesleyan and Trinity and losing to Amherst, Williams and West Point.

They are sending the same nine men that made up last year's squad. A concerted conditioning effort along with excellent competition within the club has resulted in a marked improvement in overall play.

In addition, Blues have planned a vicious campaign of psychological warfare. The long-haired, sideburned squad have been well-dressed by wardrobe director Mike Zimmerman in all methods from guerrilla tactics to flower power.

Blues are especially eager for their match against Amherst where they lost 10-0 last year. Coach Ralph Rimmer provided the tenth loss to Amherst coach Ed Serues, but has been training diligently in preparation for the upcoming grudge match.

Members of the club making the trip, along with Coach Rimmer, in order of ranking are: Frank Buck, Vic Harding, Mike Gardiner, Dave Gunn, Terry Swinton, Mike Zimmerman, Howie Fluxgold, Captain Gary Miller, D'Arcy Martin and spare Harvey Derrington.

Vic, PHE in women's basketball final

By JOAN STEVENSON

Victoria eliminated Meds from further play in women's basketball playoffs yesterday in a thrilling defensive struggle that wasn't settled until late in the first overtime period.

Tied 17-17 after regulation time the two squads battled on even terms until Vic's

Sandra Pett sank a four shot to garner the win for the Scarlet and Gold.

High-scoring Violet Shadd 'ed Medicine with 7 points; Miss Pett potted 7 for Vic and Ann Thompson contributed another six.

The basketball finals will be played tomorrow at 6 p.m. in the main gym of the Benson Building. Opposing Vic is PHE, who ousted Pharmacy 29-13.

Charlton listens to Faulkner...

Charlton and Faulkner continue to battle it out

Tom Faulkner continued to attack Bill Charlton's stand against the Students Administrative Council deciding moral issues in two lunchtime presidential campaign confrontations Wednesday.

He spoke with Charlton before 150 engineers in the Mechanical Building and before about 175 students from the entire university in Convocation Hall.

"SAC stands for action," Faulkner said to the engineers.

He promised them a bar in the campus centre. "And I'm not going to bring in the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the Brute Force Committee for a debate over whether there should be a bar. SAC will take a firm position."

Consistent with previous campaign speeches, Faulkner brought up the issues of the quality of education, the shortage of lunch units on campus, student aid, as well as the Campus Centre.

"That's a good speech for a March presidential campaign," Charlton replied, "but it's no good in this election".

"Over 2,000 men have signed a petition to prevent SAC from making them second class citizens

Faulkner and Charlton will battle it out next Wednesday evening live on the Channel 6 program The Day It Is. The debate will be broadcast from the Hort House Debates Room at 7 p.m.

because their opinions oppose those of Mr. Faulkner... that's what this election is about," Charlton said.

An engineer asked Charlton how he proposed to budget his time if he were elected SAC president. Charlton, a law student, is a New College don, a political science tutor and editor of the law weekly newspaper, The Advocate.

Charlton said he would have to study the job first and determine its scope.

The engineer persisted, wanting a break-down of time spent at various activities, including hours in the library.

The audience became annoyed with this picaresque questioning and another engineer shouted out: "How long does it take to brush your teeth?"

At 1 p.m. the candidates shifted over to Convocation Hall and gave the same speeches.

However the larger Convocation Hall stage gave Charlton an opportunity to provide the audience with an adept demonstration of one-upmanship.

U of T administration turns down Dow

The University of Toronto administration has refused an application from the Dow Chemical Co. of Canada for the use next week of the Placement Service, says Ernie Pearson, the vice-president of the Engineering Society.

"I was talking to Mr. Bill White, the personnel director of Dow," said Pearson (IV APSC). "He said that Dow might appeal the decision to the board of governors."

But Registrar Robin Ross said in an interview Dow has been asked to wait until the administration has made a decision.

The advisory committee on the placement service is to meet today for the first time in Simcoe Hall to discuss the role of the Placement Service.

"The committee will adverse the administration," said Mr. Ross, "but will not make a decision on inviting Dow back."

GSU can account for all money spent

Last year's Graduate Students Union budget can be satisfactorily accounted for, says David MacRae, treasurer of the new GSU executive.

"While the present executive may not agree with the way the money was spent," MacRae said in a letter to The Varsity yesterday, "it is clear that at least the expenditures were above board."

In an interview Monday with Varsity news editor Tim Colton, GSU President Joseph DePazza said he was "unsure" whether records left by the administration of former president John Bradford "represent a case of gross mismanagement only — which is certainly bad enough — or more."

Yesterday's letter, "completely endorsed" by the executive, including DePazza, says

Survey studies campus housing

By ANNE BOODY

A housing questionnaire has been sent to University of Toronto students in an attempt to solve some of the problems in the campus housing situation.

The housing commission responsible for the survey was appointed by the Students Administrative Council this fall.

"Our duty is not to handle the individual problems of the students," says Edward

Clark (III UC), the chairman of the committee. "We are here to find facts."

Since its formation the commission has made an objective study of all institutional housing, especially of cost factors.

"Our problem now is to discover why there is such a difference in costs," said Clark. "For instance, why are the prices of denominational residences so much more than university owned ones?"

Clark pointed out problems of student accommodation. First, there is not enough institutional housing. This includes co-ops and fraternity houses as well as residences.

Although there is enough room for male arts students, there is a serious shortage for female and students of other faculties.

"New College was unable to handle 30 per cent of engineering applications for residence," said Clark.

Second, the severe shortage of housing in the city as a whole aggravates the problem.

"The study found there are 7,200 U of T students living away from home; 3,500 are living in off-campus dwellings. The next step is a detailed study of these students and the housing they

that "all money can be accounted for except for a few dollars."

"This is satisfactory to me and to the auditors; thus it should be to everyone else."

The letter deplored the way in which the article was reported:

"I have considerable evidence that the attempts to generate a scandal around the GSU finances is due to reckless rumormongering and sensational reporting by those connected with The Varsity."

Colton said:

"I reported exactly what DePazza told me, and I've got notes to prove it. If that's sensationalism, then that's fine.

"Beyond that, it's their problem, not mine."

In view of increasing interest in the election for the SAC presidency, The Varsity will appear Wednesday as well as Friday next week. Advertising for the Wednesday paper will be accepted until noon Monday.

Questionnaire probes housing situation

use. This is the purpose of the questionnaire."

Questions range from what kind of furnishings are in the residences to the academic record of the student and the income of his parents.

"Is it the wealthy, parent-supported student who lives in the university residences and the independent student who lives in a room off-campus?" asked Clark. "This is what we have set out to find by the survey."

Clark emphasized that all respondants to the questionnaire would be anonymous.
He urged all recipients of the forms to submit them to the committee by next Wednesday.

Charlton, Faulkner tangle over stands

As Faulkner spoke, the weathered, sincere SAC politician said "Charlton refuses to take a position."

At that point Charlton, seated directly behind Faulkner in the middle of the stage, got up and walked to Faulkner's right, (the audi-
edge of the stage.

Faulkner defended SAC action in moral issues with a quote from the late President Kennedy:

"—The true democracy ...

elects men who will exercise their conscientious judgement ... with the faith that the people will not condemn those whose devotion to principle leads them to improper courses."

Charlton repeated his argument against student councils taking moral stands.

"Too many people today are forcing their moral views on others. That's what the Americans are doing; and that's what Mr.
Faulner is doing."

VOTE CHARLTON

"This University is devoted to freedom of thought, discussion, and opinion. Those freedoms may only be preserved where there is no fear of rebuke or interference by officialdom. Those freedoms may only be preserved where all opinions are granted the same respect, where the beholders are assured of the same privileges regardless of their position. Neither shall these freedoms survive where an official creed is proclaimed by an official executive, or by a consensus, or by any other means. Truth and moral righteousness are seldom joined, though the righteous can never distinguish the two.

Officialdom at this University, whether student or faculty or administration, should surely concern itself with preserving the context within which persons here may feel free to express themselves and to choose their own moral positions.

Some argue that to be concerned is to take sides; that to be moral is to expel witches; that to have taken a vote is to have found what is right. I hold with none of these assertions, nor do most of the persons at this University. It is to those persons that my appeal is addressed."

- W. G. Charlton

SAC reps speak on upcoming election

Students Administrative Council representatives would be expected to have opinions on who is the best man to head their organization. To let their constituents know whom they pick between Tom Faulkner and Bill Charlton, The Varsity is printing brief comments from as many as could be contacted.

"If the election is run on personalities, I'll vote for Faulkner, but if it's run on issue, I'll vote for Charlton," said Art McIlwain (II APSC).

McIlwain expressed his approval for Charlton's "style of speaking and the points he made" but was doubtful about his knowledge of campus problems.

"But he could soon grasp them and do a good job if he were elected."

Richard Seppala (IV APSC) indicated that he was not supporting anyone. "I feel, as a SAC rep, that I should remain neutral." But Seppala came out strongly for Charlton's program. "He stands for more representative government, and I think that is the proper stand."

"I think the election will decide if SAC has the right to speak on moral issues."

Henry Ferber (I Dents), supports Charlton as an alternative to Faulkner. "I feel that I cannot support a candidate who is repeatedly sympathetic to the radical elements on this campus.

"I believe in freedom of individual choice, of speech, and of the right and privilege within the community of scholars to consider all viewpoints.

"Anyone who inhibits this basic need and right does not represent the student body, as a whole and does not act responsibly."

John Mathany (II Vic) is backing Faulkner because he doesn't think "that Charlton can come in and continue Tom's policies in education, and, most important, in housing."

"I think this election is being fought on anti-Faulknerism," he said. "Too many other things are clouding the main issue—the horizons and scope of student government."

"I feel SAC has the right to make moral decisions representing the student body. We are responsible to our constituents and can be recalled if they don't like our decisions."

"In spite of our differences in opinion," said John Karl (II SMC), "Faulkner has done a good job this far, and I support him."

"I've disagreed with many of his policies, but on the whole he has done a good job, mostly on the non-controversial matters."

Karl said he doubted that Charlton would have the time or energy to act as an effective president. "We need a full-time president," he said.

"I'm supporting Faulkner because I think he has handled his job excellently," said Spencer Estabrooks (Knox).

"While I am in sympathy with the objections to the discussion of moral issues by SAC, I don't think that it is realistic to keep moral issues out of SAC business. It's impossible to draw a line."

Lorraine Garton (SGS) has "faith in Tom Faulkner."

"He is committed and dedicated," she said. "I'm very convinced that he's a very good president."

"SAC should take a stand on issues outside of the university."

Charlton would protect student rights

By SUE HELWIG

Bill Charlton, Students Council presidential candidate, said yesterday that he would have attended the sit-in last month at the Placement Service to defend the rights of students.

He was speaking to 150 students at the faculty of dentistry who had assembled to listen to a debate between him and incumbent president Tom Faulkner.

"What would you do in a time of crisis if you were president?" someone asked Charlton.

(Charlton had previously said the job of SAC president should be and can be handled by a full-time student.)

"There has already been a crisis," Charlton replied. "Students seeking interviews with the Dow Chemical Co. were prevented from entering the Placement Service for interviews."

"I would have been there to see that the individual rights of students of both opinions were protected", he added.

At this point Faulkner asked if he could be given the microphone to explain his position on the issue.

"On the night before the sit-in, I advised the registrar of this university that the city police be called in if any law were broken by the protesters," he explained.

"The university administration did not call in the city police."

"How would Mr. Charlton have protected the rights of students?" he continued. "He would probably have arranged a debate on the spot to discuss the issue. But the debaters could not have come to a decision since he does not believe in taking a stand on a moral issue."

A few minutes later, Charlton had the floor again.

"I fail to see why Tom Faulkner should call certain persons in this university unclean because they hold moral views of their own."

"The only reason they are kicking Dow out is because they think war is bad. We all think war is bad."

The audience sat in silence. On the platform, Faulkner munched a sandwich until he was given a chance to explain his point of view.

"The question as to how the placement service should be used is one which should be decided by students," he said.

"For the first time in 20 years students have a voice and a vote in the running of the service. This is a direct result of the work of this council, which set up a university-wide placement service committee last summer.

"I shall defend the rights of any company to come and speak on campus.

"But I believe that it is proper for the students that there be control over the companies which use the service."

Behind his back, Charlton crossed and uncrossed his legs, rolled his eyes up to the ceiling and scanned the audience as if to see how many eyes he had attracted.

"At some point, you must come to a decision," Faulkner continued. "When you have made your stand you must then hold yourself responsible to the voters."

"That is what this election is all about."

Montreal council censures editor

MONTREAL (CUP)—The student council of the University of Montreal Monday censured the editor of Le Quartier Latin for allegedly not pressuring for changes within the university.

Le Quartier Latin is the political organ of the student council. Its constitutional role is to promote the policies of council and its executive.

Student council President Jean Doré privately asked for editor Guy Sarazin's resignation a week ago, but was refused.

At the Monday council meeting Sarazin conceded Le Quartier Latin had not achieved the standards council had established. He said he had encountered "growing organizational difficulties that he hoped to iron out."

He said he had no intention of resigning. Sarazin's newspaper is to contest the structures of society by pressuring for changes within the university framework. He said Le Quartier Latin was not performing this function.

Engineering, as the closest coupling of science to society, is too widely celebrated for its utility and not enough for its creativity."

—Paul Weiss, "Science in the University," The Contemporary University: U.S.A.

the dichotomy which was missed, alas...

Last week 400 Engineers gathered in Convocation Hall and without making much fuss and taking much time, they impeached one of their representatives to the Students' Administrative Council.

There are a mass of constitutional formalities that must be followed before the member, Allan Bruce, is removed from office. But, other than the fact that this proves the impeachment was done properly, this fact is irrelevant. Mr. Bruce had said he intended to resign anyway because he felt he did not represent Engineers in spirit.

Last week was not the first time an attempt was made to remove him from office. The Engineering Society tried to impeach him earlier this year but failed by four votes. Last week's general meeting was 285-50 in favor of impeachment.

Mr. Bruce fell out of favor with his constituents when he voted in favor of a SAC donation to aid draft-dodgers and spoke in favor of banning Dow from this campus. He abstained from the final vote, however.

The issue is minority rights, clearly. Most of the Engineers have taken a strong stand against SAC acting on the Dow issue on the grounds that SAC action endangers their rights to seek employment where they wish. Engineering spokesmen have said such action denies the right of the individual to make his own decisions and may destroy individual expression of thought and stifle the campus diversity of opinion.

Thus the Engineers removed Mr. Bruce from office. What they did not consider is that Mr. Bruce was a spokesman for a minority view within the Engineering student body—both the group who voted for him last year and the persons who believe his stand was justified. Notice that 50 students chose to vote against impeachment. Therefore, the Engineers have stifled a minority to see that the majority view is solidly represented at SAC.

The Engineers refused to see wider issues in the whole matter of morality and its use in time of war as opposed to the right of a company to be aided in its search for trained personnel.

The minority representation argument surely applies in this case too.

LETTERS

Sir:

I should like to correct the impression given by your report on my feelings about Mr. Charlton. Unfortunately, your reporter either misunderstood or wrenched my statement out of context.

In only a very limited sense does Mr. Charlton "stand for what I stand for." I have no way of knowing what his political views are. He may be a liberal, a conservative, or a socialist for all I know, or for all I care. His politics are immaterial; and he may very well disagree with me 80 percent of the time. But, and this is the point, he does not seek to foist his private views or morality, or that of any pressure group or even that of SAC itself, on the rest of the student body. Do we want SAC making moral or partisan political statements and decisions on behalf of us all, often without any consultation and never with the aid of a referendum? This is the crucial issue in the campaign. Both candidates are of good character and possess executive ability. We are being given a clear alternative on this vital issue of student government.

Mr. Charlton says that it is up to the individual to make his own moral and political decisions. SAC should respect this freedom and should not impose its views on the student body. To this extent, and to this extent only, can I confidently say that Mr. Charlton's views and mine coincide.

To the best of my knowledge The Varsity has never tried "to characterize the students (perhaps, they mean students) as following" the views of the Edmund Burke Society. Nor have I ever claimed to be St. Mike's representative.

Such maturity, though, would probably be beyond these men who have never had the fairmindedness to go much beyond gossip and Varsity news reporting in forming their condemnation of the Edmund Burke Society as an "idiot group". Among the beliefs, which they claim they disagree with completely, are our support for law and order, for freedom of the individual, and for a limited government.

I am flattered that the nine gentlemen from St. Mike's consider me to have been speaking as a representative of St. Michael's College. If this was the impression created across campus, perhaps it has been because concerned individuals like Mr. Genovese and myself have been willing to become actively involved in student and political affairs while the true(?) representatives of St. Mike's sit back and remain silent. Considering, though, the general support for the war in Vietnam and the heavy response in favour of the anti-Faulkner petition at St. Mike's, I wonder if the nine are not themselves the "idiot" fringe.

F. Paul Fromm (II SMC),
Chairman of the U of T EBS

Sir:

The forthcoming election to the presidency of the SAC is just the latest of a series of disappointments for us as freshmen at this university. Clearly, the entire student power structure of this multi-versity is being abused in a fashion more "immoral" than many of the injustices you discuss in The Varsity. The whole rotten philosophy of the New Morality is practised by those in influential places, and while Mr. Faulkner is an unlikely representative of that philosophy, he uses it constantly, and, worse, it uses him.

Suppose Tom Faulkner is re-elected. Faulkner's main platform seems to be the right of the SAC to make decisions relating to the larger community. Fine — our government should have that right! However, when the normal elections roll around later this year and (say) Faulkner carries a victory into that campaign (whether as a candidate or an example for someone else's candidacy) it will be very easy to make people believe that the December vote was a vote of confidence in actual decisions made, and not the Council's right to make them.

Your editorial of Dec. 4 makes reference to these actual decisions made. We don't intend to pass judgement on these: anybody with the intelligence to reach this university can do so without our help and without so much of yours, too. It would be sufficient for this newspaper to report factually and comment editorially. But on too many occasions (although not always) the comment is skillfully woven into the actual report, colouring the reader's opinion from the beginning. The account of the engineer who used someone's stomach as the sidewalk at the Dow row was an obvious use of the irrelevant to gain sympathy for a cause. The right of Dow Chemical to be invited to this campus in no way relates to the personal conduct of those involved in the incident; in fact, those demonstrators who refused access to the building were inviting trouble.

The Dow incident is a clear example of what we dislike most about the New Left and its shaky rationale that you support and that Faulkner either supports or ignores. This group believes it has the absolute right to do anything even vaguely defensible as "Civil Rights". At the same time, society has no right to oppose or to interfere. Anything goes — and the theory seems to be "innocent even if proven guilty." When will those holding power at this university realize that there is more to determining right and wrong than the statutes of law or the constitution of the university?

Finally, we are not going to stand for your yellow journalism approach to "both sides of the issue". All criticism of the New Left gospel you preach is presented either as sponsored by the Engineering Society, who you paint as anti-intellectual, or as the "conservative" point-of-view, presented by that insipid little fisher, Paul Fromm. You don't have to restrict other peoples' rights nor distort the facts to protest the war in Vietnam. It is this kind of thing that is destroying the fibre of this university. Ask any student and he will associate the growing preoccupation in moral issues with a breakdown of cohesion at the U of T. And you can take the brunt of the blame. Faulkner has done much directly to improve affairs directly related to the university. Why not publicize this more? The students have lost faith in their own government, no thanks to you.

Many veteran students, not to mention Frosh are confused by the whole structure of SAC. How about scratching an article on the scientific cultivation of opium or the evils of the marks in your next issue and explain SAC by printing its constitution, reviewing its history, and examining its structure, elections, and present aims or potentials?

Roger Smith (Trin. I)
Don Young (UC I)
Andy Spiece (Vic I)

Dear Sir:

Regarding your answer to my letter published in The Varsity today, I do not believe you. If you are as open-minded as you claim, you would have published my last letter. Your rhetorical use of emotionalism through the juxtaposition of pictures of Vietnamese children and pro-American letters-to-the-editor reek of argumenta ad misericordiam and political double standards. If your intellectually impoverished position requires the pillar of emotionalism why haven't you published accounts by John Steinbeck of how the VietCong treat women and children. You seem however only too eager to quote mental midgets like Krassner.

Joanus Prods

Dear Sir:

I feel compelled to voice an objection to the campaign tactics apparently being used by Mr. Charlton.

Signs appeared in the first floor lecture rooms of Sid Smith on Thursday reading in effect "Keep Fascists off SAC-Vote Bill Charlton." In addition Mr. Charlton in the latest issues of Random is quoted as saying: "Aha! The gentleman on my right (Faulkner) has declared that . . . fascism must come."

For a campaign supposedly being fought on moral grounds, Mr. Charlton's requires much rethinking. Personally I cannot support a candidate who huris such meaningless charges at an opponent who, if nothing else has always endeavoured to do the fair and honourable thing.

I can only hope that Mr. Charlton will disclaim the posters and suggest that he didn't quite mean what he said.

Don Short (II Pol. Sci.)

Sir:

Bill Charlton is a master of upstage. Wednesday in Simcoe Hall he displayed this mastery to the delight of most present. As Tom Faulkner spoke, Charlton sauntered about the stage, tested several of the chairs from the middle to the far right of the platform, draped and redraped his legs over chair arms or each other, variously frowning, smiling, grimacing or inspecting the dome as his opponent's words affected him.

What were his opponent's words? It's difficult to say; Charlton's acting techniques drew most of the attention; serious debate was aborted.

Charlton has a good sense of noblesse oblige, and also of timing, of destroying the validity of uncomfortable questions with well-placed quips. "Hi, Norm," he greeted a questioner — halfway through the question. "On the left hand there seems to be a committed group." Laughter. Write off any remarks and questions from that part of the audience no matter their sincerity.

Expertly and confidently he found his way through the debate in this fashion, making use of subtle ridicule to downgrade opposition.

Charlton will be an effective lawyer. Will he be a good SAC president?

Jennifer Penney (II UC)

Shallow Play Ineptly Done

BY KEN KLONSKY

*With Punch's stick (he holds it in his hand)
Beat fertility into a sterile land...*

James Reaney's "Invocation to the Muse of Satire" from A Suit of Nettles says most of what needs to be said about Robertson Davies' play, Fortune, My Foe, which opened at the Central Library Theatre Wednesday night. These lines not only bring to light the play's central thesis but also, unfortunately, uncover the play's great weakness.

Fortune, My Foe is a satire (for want of a better label) on the Canadian 'intellectual' environment. At James Steele's drinking club near Kingston, congregated an assortment of dry, aphoristic professors, a hum selling pornographic photos, and an occasional masculinized female. Most of them are self-absorbed and care only for the moments in their lives which took place while they were travelling or living in Europe. The professors are uniformly self-conscious and ashamed at being Canadians. Briefly, and one will lose nothing by brevity here, a dishwasher at Chilly's by name of Franz Szarbo (Hans Seifert) is discovered to be a professional puppeteer from Czechoslovakia. The dull crowd devises schemes for helping him to gain acceptance with the Canadian populace, but it is clear that they are interested more in their own petty satisfactions than in poor Franz. Edward Weir (Kurt Jacobs), a professor, convinces Mrs. E.C. Philpott (Wilma Murray) and Orville Tapscoff (Jim Feather) from the YWCA to audition Franz for a recreation program. In the grand catharsis scene, Idris Roylands (Tony Miller), another of the professors, throws the duo from the Y out of Chilly's place for profaning Franz's Don Quixote puppet show as "maladjusted" and immoral. Art triumphs, but it seems a pity because, in the process, the only two decent actors in the play are forced to leave the stage.

Fortune, My Foe is as dry as the people it attempts to mock. The "serious" characters are depthless; the clowns are painfully obvious. One cannot substitute allusion for metaphor, soap opera for subtlety, drab intellectuality for drama.

The inept performance of most of the cast could partially be attributed to the uninspiring script. However, there was simply no excuse for George Hayward, the last professor, who stumbled over line after line, and unnerved the entire company by the end. The final moments of the play deteriorated into a garbled maze of lines and gestures until the stage manager had the mercy and good sense to draw the curtain on this futility. Almost as miserable as Hayward were Daphne McCoy and Barbara Andrews, the former a dominating bitch, the latter a devoted communist. Altogether, there was not an attractive character in the lot with the possible exception of "Chilly" who, as the nickname would suggest, remains innocuous enough to avoid close scrutiny.

Playwriting, like puppeting, is an act of artistic passion. Fortune, My Foe is no such thing. The play is much like a balloon slowly losing air through the top, where a string has been carelessly tied. Instead of the thrilling "pop" or the mad, whirling final flight, one is left with a limp, gasping, sputtering, pathetic lump.

Married Alive — Not To Be Buried Alive

BY ALAN GORDON

A Broadway try-out is at the O'Keefe, and as the term implies, Married Alive! is at the stage now where anything done to it can't help but improve it.

Married Alive! is a musical version of a play which was a dramatization of a novel, Buried Alive by Arnold Bennett. The plot concerns the attempt of a Gauguin-Augustus John-type painter to flee the social vacuities of Edwardian nobility by taking the identity of his recently deceased butler, Henry Leek, and leaving Leek to rest eternally in Westminster Abbey as the great Sir Priam Farll, artist extraordinaire. Leek's life has attached to it an incipient marriage and an idyllic existence of unimaginable ordinariness, just what the man requires. The events of the play centre around Farll/Leek's discovery of the joys of a mundane existence with Alice Chalice, a middle-aged widow that Leek had managed to seduce through the auspices of a matrimonial agency.

Opening notices that generally suggest that Married Alive! should be buried alive at the end of its O'Keefe run, the show has in just two days managed to pare about twenty minutes off its running time and assume a cohesion that in the next few weeks should pay off with a bright, charming show.

As the show stands now, it is an over-long, over-written, and under-rehearsed exercise in tedium with enough bright moments springing up throughout the evening to suggest to us that the play will, eventually, take a direction of its own and evolve into a winning evening.

The basic problem of the show is that it is static and a little too self-consciously mannered. E. Y. Harburg's multi-syllabic, internal rhymes confuse calculation with wit, and Lee Theodore's choreography mistakes immobility and boredom for understatement. This confusion goes all the way down the line. The climatic trial scene is treated as a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta and is based in an absurdity that completely contradicts the bonesty of the Alice-Farll relationship. Oliver Smith's settings are muted to the point of nonentity and Raoul Pene du Bois' costumes manage to be striking without being beautiful. The production as a whole is ear-marked with a touch of bold caution.

The players are generally excellent. Patricia Routledge is a brilliant comedienne who can play seemingly infidite variations on the general theme of a no-nonsense, warm and cuddly widow who is bent on marriage. Teddy Green is fine as the young bachelor-about-Putney who can, as only musical-comedy young male leads can, sing and dance up a storm. At the moment, he (and the show) suffers from an under-developed treatment of his role. The idea of having a young impetuous romance going on at the same time as a mature relationship is a good one, only indicated now. It should really be worked on.

Peter Woodthorpe and Brenda Forbes as the parasitic cognoscenti have just the right amount of larceny and lace.

But a fault, dear Brutus, lies in the star. Vincent Price lacks the vitality and excitement needed to pull the show together. His pauses are seconds too long, his inflection is a fraction too condensing and uninvolved. Price never convinces us that Farll, the passionate artist, committed to art and soul, is interested in anything. And as Price goes, in this situation, so goes the show.

The plus factors of Married Alive! override the negative ones. They are most of the players, a literate and intelligent book, an interesting plot, and the charm of the novel on which the show is based. Not compelling, but interesting. The show could be a good entertainment. And there's nothing wrong with that.

Tiger, Tiger...

BY KEN KLONSKY

The Victoria College Dramatic Society opened Jean Giraudoux's lyrical play of war and futility, Tiger at the Gates, at Hart House on Wednesday night. This fine work was given an understanding but somewhat strained performance by the company.

Giraudoux's play is set in Troy on the days leading up to the Trojan War. The people of the city, upon hearing that the Greeks are coming to demand the return of Helen, are hot with debate. The old men, as usual, want war; materialists, logicians, mathematicians and poets are all certain, for their own personal reasons, that war is necessary. Hector (Christopher Golding) has come to see war in terms of dead men and senseless cruelty. He does all in his power to avert it. But Cassandra (Marni Jackson), intuitively sensing human folly, has prophesied war. Arguments can be twisted and bent both pro and con, in fact all the dialectic of war through the ages passes our ears.

It is ironic that in a play of picturesque lines and phrases, words really mean so little. Paris (Pat Young) will keep Helen and the war will commence. Hector will gain our sympathies and we will agree that his reasoning is right, but Tiger at the Gates will not end on the side of humanitarian reason. But it does not really end on the side of warmongers either. The play seems to say that war makes itself. Human beings are so designed that the uncertainty of peace makes them restless and insecure. Andromache (Anna Maleszyk) can take her hands off her ears only when Hector can tell her that there definitely will be a war. War is real and tangible and can be a means for self-realization. Human beings, however, are powerless to either avert war or bring it about; they are merely raw materials in the making of it.

The performance of the cast was probably somewhat victimized by the sparse (about 1/5 full) audience. In a play where actors should be speaking directly to the audience for much of the time, there was little, if any of such communication. Many of the flowering lines sounded awkward when spoken to another character. Laird Orr as Priam had a fine speaking voice but failed to turn his head out one time. Christopher Golding was a strong Hector but had occasional lapses into self-consciousness. Miss Maleszyk moved about beautifully but spoke somewhat monotonously. Pat Young had the most forceful stage presence and was the only actor who succeeded in communicating fully with the audience. Marni Jackson as Cassandra had the choicest lines in the play but she was a bit too smug to give them anything more than intrinsic value. Miss Naumoff played Helen with the detachment that the script demanded. The old men, and they were doddering in abundance, should have worn beards for the obvious reason that they resembled nineteen-year-olds with white powder in their hair.

The players did well enough to make Giraudoux's "Tiger" enjoyable to hear if not so much to see. But, again, the fault must be given to the advertisers who failed to give a great play its proper publicity.

Trinity hit

BY ALLISON LANG

Tuesday's audience of the Trinity College Dramatic Society, "The Babies" and "Tom Thumb", responded well to both productions — and with reason. Both comedies were well staged, competently performed and attention holding.

"The Babies", a contemporary work by Anna Davies, is a dialogue between two sleeper-clad, high chair inhabitants of modern society. It is a penetrating comment upon a meaningless life of conformity, with no relation to reality. HE and SHE live in a well-regulated society, where everything is easy; as long as you stay in your high chair, you'll never have to "touch ground". The dialogue is a skillful blend of our favourite clichés and moral postures with ironic observations. For all its dramatic exaggerations you cannot forget the play is directed at you.

The characters' lives are traced from courtship on, in a light-hearted manner, by a series of well-integrated incidents. In this advanced society, SHE remarks, "We mature quicker". Thus, girls date at twelve and wear girdles at fourteen. She goes on to convince him to marry her.

Both characters ate a disturbing mixture of childish complexes and sophisticated attitudes as they drift through their easy life. "Being children, that was easy". "Sex was easy... in a high chair". HE even decides that having a baby would be like watching TV. This absurd strain is particularly humorous when applied to married life and their quarrels about work.

Only for a brief moment at the end do they realize their situation. Too late — the closest HE ever came to individuality was standing up in his high chair to view the world. Their complacent attitude "We couldn't do anything to change the world" consoles them. But the chilling realization that "Death is probably the same as life" is what they fear, and what the play expresses so dramatically.

Robert Thompson as HE and Mary Cane as SHE gave evenly matched performances as the infantile adults. SHE is the egocentric, superior intellect; HE is obtuse and just as self-centered. They are as spiritually insignificant as their physical appearance is imposing.

The stage effects such as the sound track are an asset, while the clever back-

WHO TALK WITH MACHINES

THE CHALLENGE

The Computer is running into trouble! Even installations costing millions of dollars in rental and can not function without detailed hand devised guidance. The most versatile Computers are forced increasingly to perform well below their potential. The problem is one of telling the machine what to do and how to do it through an arcane shorthand of codes, languages, programs and systems.

THE REWARD

The use of Computers is expected to more than double within the next three years. The demand and competition have put computer programming among the highest paid occupations. Personal satisfaction and security for the future, combined with excellent working conditions and prestige make a computer career most desirable.

THE PROGRAM

Aptitude, attitude and educational background combined with intense training by qualified instructors at FICH INSTITUTE (TORONTO) LTD., are requisites to accomplishment. FICH emphasizes the practical approach to interpret the theories of computer programming. There will be a special course given to University of Toronto students only, at a greatly reduced group rate. Please call 922-1186 or apply in person at FICH INSTITUTE 240 Bloor St. W. (opposite Varsity Stadium) and refer to this advertisement.

drop allows swift and convincing changes of mood through lighting alone. This compensates for the play's restricted action.

"Tom Thumb, The Tragedy of Tragedies" is an early farce by Henry Fielding, an amusing parody on the pompous pretentious drama of his day. Well-rooted in Augustan satire, the play uses all the traditional mock-heroic machinery to good advantage.

A most imposing hero, Tom the great carries out feats of such epic proportion as a battle with the giants while being carried about on a velvet cushion. The plot centres around the complications of love as Tom woos the princess Huncamunca while her mother is secretly enamoured with him. Ludicrous situations such as these abound; the king loves the captive giantess, Glumdalka. The great extravagance of language, the epic similes, the apostrophes to the gods and heroic comparisons match such momentous deeds. The epic similes are always well timed, e.g. in the middle of the ghosts warning, for the maximum effect. The fearful ghost provides a supernatural element, while an absurd catastrophe puts a suitable end to this adroit play — and justifies its title.

Among the characters in the play several performances stand out. Huncamunca, played by Clare Coulter, was particularly striking in her oedipal expressions and infidelity to Tom. Many very humorous mock heroic flatteries are given to her; elegant manners contrast with vulgarized language such as "cheeks as red as beef". Grizzle (Andrew Held), her unfortunate suitor lacks any nuances of malicious character, yet his rants and bombasts are as amusing as the king's, while his death speech is hilarious. Liza Hutchison's giantess is an uncomfortable mixture of parody and real stiffness.

Tom Thumb is well handled and allows his custodian, Noodle (Andrew Bethell), many marvellous opportunities for absurd actions and expressive grimaces. Several brief appearances — the ghost and the parson — are effective. The make-up and costumes deserve some of the credit. The action is well arranged on the small stage and well integrated with Sally Gower and Martha Black's original and inventive sets.

Yet for all these assets, this play lacked an intensity of impact.

Successful "Anger"

By PAUL MACRAE

Toss out any lingering ideas you may have had about Scarborough College as the University of Toronto's cultural backwater. Last weekend's production of John Osborne's Look Back in Anger, performed by the Scarborough College Dramatic Society, was ample proof that Scarborough has finally arrived.

Osborne's play isn't easy to watch. It's undercurrent of physical violence as played out in a constant stream of verbal lashings is remarkably similar to Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, transposed to a dirty little tenement in London.

Virginia Woolf features a married couple tearing each other's guts out. Look Back is more subtle—Jimmy and Alison Porter, the main characters, married four years, still in love, hating each other.

Jimmy is loud, always on the attack against his society, his women, himself. Alison is the sounding board, almost the object. She rarely fights back verbally or physically. Her weapon is silence.

The Scarborough troupe have taken this difficult, emotion-charged play and made it work.

Robert Ezrin plays Jimmy and is mainly responsible for making the production a success. His control over his character never falters along the broad spectrum of moods Osborne has given him.

Beside the obvious talent of Ezrin, June Lindley as Alison is able to hold her own which is a tremendous achievement in itself. As a result, she matches Ezrin line for line, and Alison never loses her essential humanity under Jimmy's blistering attacks.

The merging of these two very capable talents climaxes in the last scene. In it, Alison and Jimmy confront each other with their essential infidelities—Jimmy's physical, Alison's emotional. The reconciliation is in brutal contrast with the predominantly angry tone of Jimmy, the bewildered helplessness of Alison. In less than capable hands, the scene is corny and lifeless. Ezrin and Lindley make it.

The supporting cast are less effective than Ezrin and Miss Lindley, but quickly warm up to their portrayals. Katherine Kertesz as Alison's friend Helena does it best.

It's too late to catch Look Back in Anger, but this particular group is one to watch for the future. Especially if they ever tackle Virginia Woolf.

IMF: The Charm of Infallibility

By MEL BRADSHAW

Television series naturally tend to be variations on a theme, and since complete originality from week to week is impossible the longevity of a show must depend largely on a given situation.

This granted, the success of Bruce Geller's Mission: Impossible can I think be attributed to a well-chosen theme handled with virtuosity. The basic strength of the Impossible Missions Force can perhaps best be seen by comparison with an older organization with similar ends, the UNCLE. Under its veneer of suavity, The Man From UNCLE relied heavily on traditional action clichés for its popularity: gun and fist fights, outlandish tortures and implausible escapes. In order to produce such suspenseful conflict, agents Solo and Kuryakin had to make mistakes big enough to give their enemies a momentary advantage. The incredible stupidity of their errors all too often turned the debonaire heroes into objects of ridicule.

It is this danger which Jim Phelps (Peter Graves) and his crew so happily avoid. In a word, they are infallible. They never risk their lives in a gun battle; they never rely on any one beside themselves (with the occasional exception of the police); they are never unintentionally taken prisoner; they never womanize.

Rather than seeking suspense in hand to hand combat whose outcome can never really be doubted (after all, the good guys have to be back next week) Mission: Impossible interests us in an altogether different way. The IMF are given a mission. At the beginning of the program we learn just enough of the role to be played by each member in its execution to arouse our curiosity. Throughout the hour we see a number of unexplained and apparently unrelated incidents. We have to wait until the end, not to find out if Phelps' plan is successful—that is a foregone conclusion—but to find out what his plan is. Each episode is less of a competition than a demonstration of expertise, a dazzling display of ingenuity.

Needless to say, the program often creates difficulties merely for the sake of solving them gracefully. The IMF's object is never merely to eliminate their victims but to make them eliminate themselves by creating internal divisions. But at least this system has the virtue of making the villains, rather than the heroes, appear the fools.

Truffaut: Uncertain, But Pungent And Stylish

By MARY OMATSU

Truffaut's "Four Hundred Blows" heralded a new age in French film-making. When the critics of Cahiers du Cinema — Truffaut, Godard, Chabrol, and Rivette, looked to celluloid rather than newsprint for expression, "La Nouvelle Vague" was born.

The "Cahiers" group, admirers of Hitchcock, and the violence and melodrama of grande B American films, saw the camera merely as another means of communication. Feeling limited in movement by dollies and camera stands they took to cinema-verite, hand-held camera techniques, improvising scenes rather than closely following scripts, and disorienting the viewer spatially as well as temporally, through jump-cuts, flashbacks, and dissolves. They advocated a new freedom, and rejected all their predecessors except perhaps Renoir.

1959 saw the actualization of Astruc's theory of "Le Camera-Style", Astruc believed that the camera "would create its own language, and become the actual instrument of direct creation". New wave filmmakers spoke of a "Cinema-d'auteurs", in which the camera would imitate and consummate the act of film writing.

Thus at Cannes in 1959, when Truffaut won the award for direction for his "Quatre Cents Coups" and Renais's "Hiroshima Mon Amour" won the International Critic's Prize, the rumblings and renovations that had been going on in the French film industry were brought to the attention of the movie-going public.

"Four-Hundred Blows" was a landmark in Truffaut's young career. It was his first feature length film. Fashioned after a short of his called, "Les Mistons", "Quatre Cent Coups" traces the life of thirteen year old Antoine Doinel, from school-boy prankster to reformatory inmate. The film largely autobiographical, captures the limbo state of child into adolescent, with such authenticity and wit that we sympathize with Antoine as he is put down and pedantised by the world.

Following on the success of his first film, Truffaut's second, "Tirez sur le Pianiste" (1960) received mixed reaction from his admirers.

Criticisms have been levelled at Truffaut for failing to create an entirely original film. Of his five films "Quatre Cents Bouts", "Tirez Sur le Pianiste", "Jules and Jim", "La Peau Douce" and "Fahrenheit 451", only two original scripts and all five were collaborated on.

Truffaut seems unwilling as of yet to accept the responsibility of a total effort. As he explains, "The worst thing when you are the complete author of a film is that you are more troubled by doubt".

Other critics dislike Truffaut's "frivolity". They feel that as an artist, he has an obligation to take moral and political positions. However, Truffaut refuses to fit into Orwell's mold. He says that "I don't tackle the 'problems of our times because the characters in a film interest me more than the story, so I can't make a film of ideas'".

But one serious defect in his film-making that even he himself acknowledges, is the fact that he tries to please the public. Eight years as film critic of "Cahiers du Cinema" have left him with the attitude that the public must be entertained. In itself, this is not a bad idea, but it places Truffaut in a paradox—an artist will, by definition, displease the public. Why? Because the artist is someone outside society and he is addressing himself to society.

Consequently, his films reflect this psychic Indian wrestling. But should the time ever come when Truffaut can work out his hang-up, we would truly see a film as mercurial, witty and pungent as Truffaut himself.

Stage Magic Lost In Shuffle

By PETER GODDARD

Sometimes I am relieved that there is such a thing as pop culture, and that at times I am a part of it. After seeing at the Crest two examples of what is considered cultural—Puccini's La Bohème and Shakespeare's Othello—I was once again glad of my graceless state.

Director Franco Zeffirelli's Bohème runs (if that is the word for it) well over two hours. In transit it discloses some of the most patently phony process shots done, to my recollection. All the side lighting (sunsets), picturesque grouping of characters and soda-fountain colors seem inspired from by the soggiest nineteenth-century religious chromos.

As a film, the Bohème had all the vices of cinema-verité techniques and none of its saving graces. For in merely re-producing La Scala's stage production and not transforming it into cinematic terms, Zeffirelli has finally shown what has been suspected for a long time, that opera singers cannot act.

On stage such performers seem to blunder to eventual triumph. But shot up close, their semaphoring, half-articulate style of playing cannot overcome the weak dramaturgy, the vulgar compositions and colors. Before our eyes they seem to battle the technical preoccupations of their semi-singing. Sniffing melodrama in the air each lets his part play him, replacing any chance at realism with loose bits of rhetoric.

To suit the syrup-dimmed eye that envisioned this film, the pace is funereal. Only in the Christmas Eve in the Latin Quarter scene at the beginning of act two did the production have any sparkle. But the movement generated here by the crowd is motion-for-motion's sake, not for variety's. Zeffirelli can conceive of only two modes—the cloying intimate and the bustling grandiose, neither of which can be blended together.

The singing, in turn, is thin in production and dilutes the picture's few climaxes. This, as might be expected, was not solely the singers' faults. It achieved the effect of hearing an old 78 on the best of stereo; and added to this the fact that the music was pre-recorded and dubbed over the singers' silently moving lips, the result was stilted.

Unintentionally, the result of this technique was occasionally comical. It was as if someone else was singing for each character, ventriloquially, through their limp jaws.

Stuart Burge's production of Othello is a problem of a more subtle nature. One had a tendency to forget the static sets, the omnipresent orange sunset, and some curious camera technique when faced with two actors of Laurence Olivier's and Frank Finlay's abilities.

These two made the microscopic nature of the camera all the more startling. And what we saw was bound-bursting acting in a tight and limiting production. Vocally the production is flawless, visually it is as open and as meaningless as a picture frame.

Finlay's Iago is tight-lipped and humorless. He is a moral bantam-weight fighter slugging it out with a heavy-weight. Never cowed, what he has lost in stature he makes up for in cunning. Here, the camera serves him well.

While befriending the Moor, a full-screen shot of the contemptuous curl of the lips betrays him to us. His imposture seems total and, therefore terrifying.

And Olivier's Othello becomes all the more imposing before the lens. For not only does this actor's character, but his technique become evident. But in this virtue lays the vice. One is amazed but not involved. One watches, compares, and applauds but is not involved. It was like scanning a Rembrandt with a magnifying glass.

Olivier's Othello is more Uncle Tom than Cassius Clay. At moments of raging climax, his sense of pain at the treachery of Iago is equalled by a sense of loss of pride. There is weight and majesty here. But it is of "a great stunned animal strapped to the rack" not of a civilized man.

Olivier licks his pink lips, bellows, hums, and rages in an animal frenzy. When at last he has realized the complexities of a quicker mind, and the destruction caused by his own naive jealousies he dies. In effect, the way Olivier plays him, the Moor's spirit died before his body did.

Although the production was remodelled to suit the cinema, the camera merely created a new type of stage. And it was Shakespeare, and not Burge, that prevailed.

Yet of the two productions, it was the latter that received a more stylish reproduction. It allowed all the atmosphere and nuances of the drama to unfold without getting in the way. It didn't expand the play's implications, but neither did it restrict them as Zeffirelli did the opera.

All of which points out, that while grand themes don't change, techniques must. And the lucidity of the camera will become an altogether new criteria of whether a production is technically and emotionally well-constructed.

Unabashed, Goonish Good Times

By ROD MICKLEBURGH

Like a soft summer rain on a stifling afternoon comes jaunty Bob Downey to the underground film scene. To the unfortunately pervasive Warhol world of cinematic pretension, Downey's current film (Chafed Elbows at Cinecity) brings a commodity which is notably lacking underground—humour. His film is a full sixty minutes of unabashed, goonish, good times which leave even the long-haired pseudos chuckling self-consciously.

Downey, of course, cheerfully denies that Chafed Elbows is an underground film ("What does 'underground' mean, man; I don't know."), and his recent presence in Toronto to unaffectedly plug his product attests rather obviously to this claim. (One isn't supposed to be interested in making money so openly, you know—it's not cool.) A native New Yorker, Downey frowns on most of the 'underground' stuff which is burrowing out of his home city. "About three-quarters of it is just about quers."

For his confrontation with the daily press, Downey had put in a formal appearance, complete with double-breasted suit, hair neatly combed and shiny shoes. Contrasted with his groovy mannerisms and speech, this caught the Toronto press totally off guard, and they searched desperately for a convenient label. Finally, one reporter labelled him helplessly as "a hippie in straight clothing."

When I talked to him informally the next day, Downey was wearing a rough brown jacket over an open-necked shirt, his pants were ordinary cords, and his shoes soft scruffy. Rumpled hair topped a face lit by an apple-pie grin. He looked comfortable. I asked him about his suit. "Oh, I just wear it for special occasions; it's the only one I have, man." So much for a "hippie in straight clothing." Downey doesn't fit into a nifty, precise slot; he's just a nice guy who, incidentally, knows where it's at.

We talked, inevitably, of drugs and the hippie movement. "Yes I've tried LSD a few times and I smoke pot occasionally, but the drug scene just doesn't interest me, man. I can't see anything creative about it. At least not personally." Hippies? "They're too much like organized religion. Besides, I don't believe people should drop out. It's too easy, man."

After brief posturing from a Toronto Life 'man' ("and what is your connection with the film, Mr. Downey?"), we got around to Chafed Elbows itself. "I'm glad you enjoyed it, but quite frankly I'm almost sick of it. It took three years to make and a three year joke is too much."

Downey's next film will be a way-out thing about a Negro who takes over a white ad agency (watermelon breaks instead of coffee breaks). Typically off-beat, he plans to include Rap Brown and Stokely Carmichael in the film.

I asked him what he thought of Chelsea Girls, and Bob Downey snorted with laughter. "Andy Warhol hates my guts. I went up to him after it was over and said, 'It kind of dragged after the second day.'"

Caroline: We're Still Waiting

By MEL BRADSHAW

One of Ron Kelly's avowed purposes in making Waiting for Caroline was to create a Canadian motion picture industry. Whether this is a desirable objective in an age when movies are becoming less of an industry is perhaps doubtful. With government sponsoring films through the CBC and NFB we might be thinking in terms of artistic rather than commercial success.

Unfortunately, Waiting for Caroline has neither.

It centers around a mixed up girl and two boys, both in love with her: an absolutely stock situation, but this need not be a mark against it. A poster of Jeanne Moreau in Jules and Jim in Caroline's cluttered Quebec City apartment recalls Truffaut's masterpiece whose basic ingredients were no more original. But what an unhappy allusion for Caroline. Truffaut's wit and verve are wholly lacking here. The only thing unique to the film are glimpses of Vancouver and Quebec (and in fact Hitchcock used the mood of latter much more effectively when he shot I Confess on location there).

At least we cannot accuse Kelly of flippancy. His major problem, I would say, is that he takes himself too seriously with the result that his film is ponderous and dull. Even a trip to a Quebec farmhouse for Christmas where Caroline and her two boy friends have a romp in the snow with the horses, is dismally low key. Using Bach's Well-Tempered Harpsichord to the exclusion of all other music does not matter where a sprightly Michel Legrand is obviously what is required.

The prologue warns us we may become exasperated with Caroline and we do, but not for the expected reasons. She has been billed as a kook and does not live up to expectations. She has a slight Electra complex and we catch her sucking her thumb in an airplane, but she does nothing interestingly offbeat. As for her two lovers, they cannot decide whether to hate each other like square Anglo-Saxons or be buddies à la française. It is not easy to see why either would cross the country for the sake of a girl as capricious and dull as Caroline.

The logic of giving films one intends to show commercially a television première (The Ernie Game, Waiting for Caroline, and later this month The Paper People) has been severely criticized, but after all, seeing that we are still waiting for good Canadian cinema we might just as well wait at home as rush out to a theatre to have our hopes shattered.

Nirvana. The Beatles have never lost it; the Rolling Stones have finally found it. The Beatles are now the court-jesters of the new sound, the plasticine porters with looking glass ties. The Stones had seemed to have come to the burnt-out ends of their sexy, smoky days. But soft, a word or two before you go . . .

No album in recent years has been issued in the midst of so much foofaraw as Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band. Prior to release, radio stations were bidding as much as $1,000 for a bootleg copy of it. Capitol records was filing suit against stations who jumped the release date. A million copies were reportedly ordered in advance.

Meanwhile the rock'n' roll intellectuals were claiming the album as a masterpiece, a pop symphony with 'movements' and 'themes' and things. And musicologist Henry Pleasants said: "The Beatles are where music is right now." But the Beatles had an answer to all this band-wagon-jumping. "Nothing is real," sang George Harrison in Strawberry Fields Forever, "and nothing to get hung about."

But had they an answer for their next album? In Sgt. Pepper they had successfully distilled the mood of their time. What would be next? Where would they go on their next album?

On a Magical Mystery Tour (which by the way is the name of the album.)

The album is an audible and visual Sgt. Pepper. Although six of the songs are taken from a Beatles-produced TV show by the same name (to be shown in North America early January) and the other six are a compendium of recent hits, a strange type of unity has been achieved.

On one level the message is clear and Beatle-consensual enough. Gone are the frothy pitches and teen-age libidos; in their place is the message, 'Dig Yourself. With a little help from your friends it's getting better all the time. And it really doesn't matter if you're wrong or right.'

The logic is magic. Having seen pain and having thought of death, the Beatles seemed to have turned to save themselves and their friends through magic. And the lyrics have become elusive and allusive. The music, not profound, but indefinite. At its best, Magical Mystery Tour is pop music of the highest significance; at its worst it is trite. The title tune is the latter. It is redundant without making a point in its redundancy. Someone will find meaning in it but a little grass will help. Pot makes everything seem significant.

But suddenly, in it's second tract, the album takes on a new life. The Fool On The Hill sets a dark mood. By implication and imagery, this melancholy, disturbing little piece suggests the spiritual deadness of a day.

The Beatles are, more than any other group, hip to death. Eleanor Rigby was dead long before the obsequies; and in Day in the Life, death grins at the man "who blew his mind out in a car." The Fool on the Hill depicts the auto-anesthesia of those who only see a physical and not the spiritual in the air today.

Next tract. A melody unfolds and goes on as if it was conceived for the turn-of-the-century music hall. Thus begins Your Mother Should Know, a remarkable, tight, well-written salute to nostalgia. The lyrics are trite, the melody common-place, but in the Beatles' hands the result is a eerie little song streaked with humour and compassion.

And with the next song, I Am The Walrus, the Beatles' vaudeville-show of the absurd begins. Taking off from Lewis Carroll's line, "The time has come, the walrus said, to talk of many things . . ." the song takes an LSDisneyland trip to the theatre of the surreal. This is the new magic. The meandering, unstructured, free-association do-it-yourself-Rorschakism is the Beatles' attempt to return to the unexplainable, to magic as a substitute for belief.

In an interview in the International Times Paul McCartney says: "With any kind of thing, my aim seems to be to distort it, distort it from what we know it as, even with music and visual things and to change it from what it is to see what it could be. To see the potential in it all. To take a note and wreck it and see in that note what else there is in it, that a simple act like distorting it has caused.

"To take a film and to superimpose on top of it so you can't quite tell what it is anymore, it's all trying to create magic, it's all trying to make things happen so that you don't know why they've happened."

In the rest of the album never has complexity seemed so simple, almost naive. In Hello Goodby, or Penny Lane or All You Need is Love the Beatles have a way of making experience sound like innocence. And their audacity and the power to hold that simple dream-like quality well past the breaking point until it glistens into a dazzling series of sense impressions are unique in the new music.

Nirvana. They've never left it. "In this carnation," says George Harrison, "we're the Beatles, and it's a little scene and we're playing and we're pretending to be the Beatles, like Harold Wilson is pretending to be the Prime Minister . . . They're all playing.

"The Queen is the Queen. The idea that you could wake up and it happens that you're Queen, it's amazing but you imagine it . . .

"You see, we haven't really started yet, the Beatles. The future stretches out beyond our imagination. There is a musical infinity as well. We've only just discovered what we can do as musicians. What threshold we can cross. It doesn't matter so much anymore if we're No. 1 or on the chart.

"It's all right if people dislike us, Just don't deny us."
If William Burroughs were ever to make a record he could no more than the Rolling Stones have in their latest: Their Satanic Majesties Request. The Stones in this album, or non-record, seem, like Burroughs, to be "attempting to create a new mythology for the space age."

This is the Stones' spiritual autobiography. In it they are uninfected by any trace of humanistic sentimentality. Through it their imagery is that of the most corrosive nightmare. Their voice has become hard, derisive, inventive, free, funny, serious, poetic and abrasive.

It is as if the group arrived at this record dead. Like the Beatles, they have hurried the old hand in a grave marked by marijuana leaves in full bloom. But this is not the Stones' answer to Sgt. Pepper. It represents where the Beatles are going. It has a magic as well. But their's is black. Where the Beatles present a surreal version of fuzzy friendliness, the Stones have come up with a depraved, brilliantly perverted version, of Tolkein vision, of deranged beauty. In it, the Stones have achieved their satisfaction.

From the blurred, three-dimensional cover that hides pictures of the Beatles in both lower corners, to the last song the same images recur: the castle, the joint, planets, side-show carney operators, putrid cocktail bars.

It is terrifying, and beautiful. And it, and not Sgt. Pepper, represents the apotheosis of rock. A heresy? Perhaps, but listen, just listen. The experience found here will make Jimi Hendrix's sound like a trip to the Riverdale Zoo by comparison.

The Stones seem to want to illuminate almost every level of their wonderland-cum-hell by bouncing light off a chaotic collection of drug-induced fantasies. From the brass-induced baroque and rhythm'n'blues magic here, it is a long way to the delta southland. The Stones can't go home again. Ever.

As an album it comes closest to the totally-integrated work. At it's heart is a satire at the expense of those people who deal in pigeon-holes, categories, and generalizations, seeking to pin down to a consistent pattern the unrepeated variety of the human mind. Essentially, it celebrates the glorious uniqueness of everything that might be.

And it reaffirms my belief that rock'n'roll is a texture—a total entity, not a sum of many related parts. Electronic music, tightly constructed and deftly superimposed on the group's sound exists alongside haunting medieval melodies, west African chants, the Beatles singing background in She's A Rainbow, and wisps of conversation half-heard, half-said and, probably, half-hearted.

The effect is of all pandemonium constantly breaking loose only to be re-organized. Side one forms a unit. The words of the first songs, Sing This All together appear as a type of reprise on the side's last cut. In transit, the Stones passed through a section of hard-core rock, Bill Wyman's allusive In Another Land and the folk-influenced 2000 Man.

Side two She's A Rainbow fits a Nelson Riddle-like orchestration, Mozart and Mick Jagger in one mould. Carefully, the music is becomingly simplified. And the record grows, past The Lantern and Gomper, to its climax in 2000 light years from home. This is Jagger & Co's A Day in the Life. Yet no two records could be more dissimilar.

Never before in the new sound has the music of two cultures and two ages been so satisfactorily meshed. And the differences between the Stones and the Beatles become all the more clear. For while the latter draw everything from the past to the present and somehow change in doing so, the Stones leave everything where it is, yet impose their indelible personality on it.

Following these songs there is an appropriate vaudeville final replete with the bawdiest line ever recorded (if you can pick it out), the strippers, the hoofers, the lady-who-was-cut-in-half, the woozy piano player, the luses all pushing into the act.

Their Majesties Request, then, roves the fields, fairs, and knolls of a psychedelic King Jagger's Court, where images spun in the darkest of nights hang lush and rich as ripe fruit on trees.

But here I must stop. I am falling into the very trap the Rolling Stones have set for a critical approach. I am explaining instead of experiencing.

The question is, where did this record come from. No one is going to deny the Stones have been influenced to a great degree by Negro rock and roll and rhythm and blues. Yet it is too easy to over-estimate this type of music on this record's final worth. Can one correlate the Mississippi delta or Chicago's East Side to Their Satanic Majesties Request? Only indirectly, if at all.

I think that other relations would have more relevance; that is, women, genre movies, comic books, modern dance, Stravinsky, Genet, abstract painting and poetry, ways of dealing with the abstract craziness found on any street in any city in a day, John Barth, Ken Kesey, J. P. Donleavy, Beethoven, Joseph Heller, Thomas Pynchon, John Lennon, Jack Kerouac, Susan Langer, Jesus Christ, Marshall McLuhan, Bertolt Brecht, Susan Sontag, Charlie Chaplin, Paul McCartney, Variety, Rave, Jean-Luc Godard, Francois Truffaut, Jean-Paul Belmondo, The Realist. ## Volcanic Music

By JACK McCAFFREY

Last weekend, unheralded by any advance publicity, a musical event of uncanny significance and far-reaching impact occurred in a dingy, musty, old, loft above the Coach House Theatre on Huron St. From the depths of the New York Underground movement there surfaced a strange and terrifying new group.

Leon Beiderbecke is the leader of this collection of very weird individuals wielding instrument that produced sounds such as have never before been heard by the human ear. Beiderbecke has short hair, neatly parted in the middle, and wears an old double-breasted suit which gives him an air of belonging to a bygone era of "sweet" music and bath tub gin. He has an innocent face an aura of country wholesomeness about him — in marked contrast to your average vicious, depraved-looking Underground artist type. The rest of the men in the band are similar in appearance to their leader — they all look like people resurrected from the late 1920's. No doubt this is an attempt to reject the stylized costume of the highly self-conscious artist of the '60's.

Aided by the light of one flickering candle, the musicians picked their way among the tombstones and anvils strategically placed on the stage. They solemnly placed Tarot card and horseshoes on their apparatus, and then uttered eerie cries for a prolonged period of time (well over an hour). Then suddenly disappearing behind the forge at the rear of the stage, they emerged with their horns and at once startled the listeners by creating and sustaining fantastic quarterwauling and demented beast-like sounds for four hours.

The purpose of having the ominous objects surrounding them as they pour out their frenzy of noises is to create a new symbolism that will mesh with the satanic sounds to produce unheard-of levels of psychic probing into the as yet undiscovered dark areas of the libido which hide the most terrifying powers and energies which, if only they could be unleashed, would lead to the most apocalyptic consequences imaginable. It is the intention of Beiderbecke and his henchmen to release this energy through concentrated invocation to the mystic forces of Pluto and Vulcan, which they conceive to be the hidden psychophages of the human psyche.

As they reached the climatic point in the music, the musicians seized the anvils and hurled them at one another in a ritualistic self-sacrifice. The main message that emerged from this performance was that Leon Beiderbecke is dead.

In order to grasp the compelling, vital new message of these men, you have to get outside yourself and ignore all your preconceptions of what music should be. Beiderbecke is (or rather was) saying something of real importance which cannot be put into conventional terms.

Although the musicians perished in their attempt to get their point across, all is not lost. Whole legions of followers have sprung up in Toronto alone. Men like Broomer, Pringle, etc., have dedicated themselves to pursuing the lofty aims of their lamented guru, and perhaps one day they will succeed in freeing the spirit of Vulcan in all of us.

The Way It Is With Some New LP's

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

This summer Eric Burdon went to San Francisco and found God. That's the only explanation I can see for his current predicament (and his last album—Winds of Change (MGM SE-4484).

You see Eric, who made himself a wide reputation as a blues singer with The Animals, has gotten over his Negro complex (it seems that every white rock 'n' roll singer has to go through that complex) and has now decided to try and keep up with the acid-rocking music world around him.

What characterizes this LP is Burdon's excitement at his conversion and his strange mixture of humility and conceit. The album is a mistake, that's all there is to it. San Francisco Nights was on the radio and needs no further comment. What Burdon was trying to do in Man, Woman is beyond me. He shouts out a small domestic drama and piously moralizes at the end. Later he sings the moral "When I was drinking, I should have been thinking," in Hotel Hell, wherein Burdon expertly draws the scene of his displacement. It's All Meat, is self-explanatory; his version is pretty strongly reminiscent of the Cream's Spoonful. Eric has many directions in which to keep up. Shame, though, He was doing such good work before. Now he's only confused.

Concurrent with an Animals LP, you can usually expect a Righteous Brothers effort, and the two non-(generically)-related singers' latest is Souled Out (Verve V6-5031.) This is another example of non-progress. Remember the sound Phil Spector used to drape around the brothers? Ok, for the last few LPs, the Bros. have been dressing themselves—without the earlier temple-rite excitement.

The latest is competent and will appeal to the Righteous Brothers fan. But it doesn't grab. There's nothing special here. The songs are new but the LP has been done before.

Meanwhile Vanilla Fudge (ATCO SD 33-224) is still fun, as the group's four members explore some well-known material. They get into a song like Ticket to Ride, exploring all the corners, feeling around for new things to say.

The sound is slightly surrealistic, as the organ flits across the thin line that separates a smooth, sweet note from a slicing one. The organ oozes like a whipped-cream wave, while the Fudge bass man plays interesting little tunes on his instrument and the guitarist plays pretty intricate little figures over, under and around, into a symbolic structure.

One problem, though, is that vocally (and even instrumentally by the end of side 2) the group has very few new things to offer. They lengthen a song to study it and take it apart. (They lengthen Eleanor Rigby to 8:24, giving us a more detailed picture than Paul McCartney did in his 2.11 original.)

People Get Ready shows exactly where the group is at. The Impressions' original version was 2:37. The Fudge's is 6:30, but the Fudge gospel style, parts of the arrangement, and the atmosphere is taken right out of that short version. It is this gospel sound that the Fudge try to apply in most of the 10 songs on this LP, and that's what often doesn't work.

Completely different in its intentions is the Bee Gees' (ATCO SD-33-223) which should be more widely known than it is. (It's been out since late summer).

Vocally and in terms of production the Bee Gees have adopted much from the Beatles, their harmonies, their vocal textures, their use of classical references (like the Bach-fugue-like counterpoint in Turn of the Century) and their orchestration ideas. Not everywhere but enough.

The Bee Gees' contributions are the songs themselves — all original. There's something satisfying about the structure of the lyrics on top of the music. The songs aren't predictable, but once you've heard a line, it becomes as familiar as an old standard — it's so appropriate. One Minute Woman is my favorite, although the tense drama of New York Mining Disaster and the intricate harmonies in Every Christian Lion-Hearted Man Will Show You have been pointed out by other people.

The Bee Gees' music is Englishly delicate, 18th century aristocratic. Most of their cuts are orchestrated with string accompaniments; all are orchestrated to fit the mood and character of the song perfectly. The Bee Gees, their first time out, have received the best production possible for their music.

Glass: Sheer Pleasure

By JOAN MURRAY

Why Glass?

It's beautiful. It's also one of the best mediums for expressing the form-aesthetic of our century, and so inevitably it attracts us. Why? Because it's transparent or opaque and this leads to limited spatial volumes, a handling of space preferred by a century which does not like its boundaries to be too defined. Glass also reflects light, and we are oriented to this kind of viewing since the Impressionists. Furthermore, old glass has an accidental quality about it, seen in its bubbles and strange melting of colours which is attractive to moderns awakened to the power of the accident by modern art. (As Turner once said, "I never lose an accident.")

Of course for some, there's the sheer pleasure of antiquarian knowledge about the subject.

For others, especially here in Canada, there are nationalistic overtones. John Yaremko, in an introduction to a recent Canadian book on glass, put the whole matter succinctly:

What an experience to learn that a piece of glass is Canadian. Immediately the view has a tendency to be through pink-coloured lenses; the design seems so much purer — the sparkle so much brighter!

This is quite true, and one can't object to such an enthusiasm for Canadian work, especially after the apathy of recent years which let Henry Ford purchase the Farrar pottery of St. Johns, Quebec, and move it to the U.S. as an "Early American" pottery.

Work on Canadian glass is comparatively recent. The authority is Gerald Stevens, who has been studying the subject ever since he retired from running the Stevens Art Gallery in Montreal.

Several books have established his prominence, among them The Canadian Collector of 1957, Early Canadian Glass, (originally published in 1960, and now reissued in paperback by Ryerson Press (181 pages, $3.95) is Stevens' classic statement on the subject. It deals mainly with the glass houses of nineteenth century Canada and with the process from raw material to glass blower. Malorytown is the earliest factory in Canada (c. 1825) and Stevens was the one to discover and excavate it.

This text is written in a manner halfway between the detective novel and the art historical text. Interviews are recorded, as are directories, reports, and newspapers of the period. Chemical analyses also appear.

Basically, we have here the rough of research. Stevens was the first to authenticate Canadian glass and his work was absolutely pioneering. This accounts for the difficulty he obviously feels in standing back further from the material and relating it to the general development of nineteenth century glass in a proper perspective.

The latest book by Stevens, Canadian Glass C. 1825-1925 (Ryerson, 262 pages, $17.50) extends the known material in basically the same format as the earlier text, with the inclusion of extensive though medium-good photographs and drawings. The book also extends Stevens' faults. Yaremko (citing Kipling) says in the introduction that the book answers the What? Why? When? How? Where? Who? of Canadian glass. This is not true. We never get the What? and Why? answered. There is no visual analysis of the material, and no real attempt to relate it to the tantalizing problem of influence. After all, the glass blowers were trained in France, England, Scandinavia, and the U.S. What about it, Was there influence? Clearly much of Canadian glass was the child of a flirtation with American factories. Well, how much?

The book never answers these questions.

There is, of course, a tendency for the national decorative arts to be treated in an insular manner, whether in the U. S. or here, but surely Stevens, who knows such a great amount, could tell his readers much more, and tell it more significantly.

When that is said, the fact still remains that this is the most valuable, though overpriced book on the subject. There's a valuable glossary attached, as well as a helpful bibliography.

A book by Mr. and Mrs. Spence, A Guide to Early Canadian Glass (Longmans, 112 pages, $10) is a helpful visual guide to the material. It is directed to the enthusiastic amateur, and does not pretend to the authority of Stevens' text. Some of the comments are interesting like the notation of the "distinctive rounding of the foot of the 'Maple Leaf' comport, an apparently distinctive Canadian feature.

As usual with this kind of book, the slant taken is the idea of art as an investment. "Look in your cellar — you may find a fortune!" say the authors. Well, maybe.

Since this book was published in 1966, some of the material which appears has been corrected by Stevens, like the idea of a glass industry under the French Regime (there probably wasn't any). The Canadian or Cape Cod pattern problem is solved by Stevens who discovered shards of it at the Burlington glass works, and now has identified it as a typically Canadian design, with buildings similar to those found in Picturesque Canada.

The photos in this book are very beautiful and one is grateful for the author's honesty. A section on "Enigmas and Wild Surmises" is helpful for future research.

A last book, D. Daniels' Price Guide to American Cut Glass (McLeod Lim., 110 pages, $12.50) makes a good contrast to the Canadian material. American cut glass was unusually beautiful during the so-called "Brilliant period" (1880-1905) that the author deals with here. Each of 50 patterns (out of the more than 500 of the period) are well illustrated and the book is unusually helpful in identifying patterns. It is actually a price guide; costs are given. As Mrs. Daniels points out, these costs are only a fraction of the real worth in the sense of materials and labor.

In contrast to pressed glass, cut glass has more luster, weight, and sparkle. The edges feel keen to the touch.

The patterns which were used perfectly express the Victorian aesthetic of all-over design, variety of silhouette and boldness of form.

Many of the patterns were named for girls like "Gladys", "Zenda", and "Carolyn". Some of the names implied value judgements like "Regal", "Peerless", and "Vogue". Some referred to places like "Florence", "Tokio", and even "Delft".

The shapes on the glass came largely from natural forms like stars, pebbles, snowflakes, wheat, daisies, tulips, rosettes, and even such Victorian specialities as elephant tusks!

Charming works in an interesting, useful book.

O The Chimneys

BY LARRY HAIVEN

"Effulgence of light enters into the dark verse blows with the banner called understanding I am to go out and search horror Finding is elsewhere—"

To Nelly Sachs, the world holds horrors that only nightmares make real. Her poems are pieces of nightmares that our age has made real.

Who can speak after the horrors of the concentration camps? Who can find words to express the horror, the shame and the agony of the Hebrew people? Nelly Sachs, a tiny, frail woman, an exile from Germany in Sweden undertook the almost superhuman task of mirroring the agony in words, the horror in images and the mute question, "Why?", in poems of unique strength and beauty.

Only in the last few years has Nelly Sachs received the recognition she deserves. Born in Germany in 1891, she was the daughter of a wealthy manufacturer. She was taught in private schools and nurtured in the arts. At 17, she began to write quite insignificant romantic poetry, legends and tales.

Around this time Nelly Sachs became familiar with the writings of the Swedish poetess Selma Lagerlof and exchanged letters with her. This correspondence was to save the life of Nelly Sachs.

Early in 1940, with the aid of the Swedish Royal Family, Selma Lagerlof managed to save Nelly Sachs and her aging mother from Hitler's henchman. The rest of the family died in the concentration camps of the Third Reich.

In exile, obsessed with the horror she had seen, she was to produce her best work. It consists of numerous short poems, several long poems and mystery plays. For these she was awarded the Nobel Prize in 1966 along with another Hebrew writer S.Y. Agnon. The Nobel prize was awarded to them for their outstanding contribution to the literature of the Jewish people. All of Nelly Sachs' works are in German.

Before one comes to read the poems of Nelly Sachs, he must know that they cannot be read out of context for then they will appear to be a confusing mass of words and images that lead in a thousand different directions at once.

They must be read with the knowledge that they are intimately bound up in the sufferings of the Hebrew people. Nelly Sachs takes as her inspiration the Zohar, a mystic Hebrew writing which laid the basis for the books of the Kabbalah. In it the Five Books of Moses are examined between the lines and among the words to find answers to the mysteries of the universe and of the existence of God. It is considered one of the most beautiful works of Hebrew literature. Like the Zohar, the poems of Nelly Sachs stress that every human act has its effect on the universal course. Like it also, they express the idea that all the joy and suffering of the world is mirrored in the fate of the Hebrew people.

The Zohar and the subsequent Kabbalah instilled into words themselves mystical meanings. And indeed much of Hebrew religious literature shows a fascination with words, their combinations, acrostics and the unraveling of mysteries by the use of them.

In such a way the poems of Nelly Sachs show a fascination with words and their mystic content. She seems to try and make the words come flying up at one just as the words of the Holy Books so precious to the Jews are said to have flown to heaven when the scrolls on which they were printed were burned but the raiding mobs of the pogroms. With her treasure of words and combinations she succeeds brilliantly.

"The alphabet's corpse rose from the grave, alphabet angel, ancient crystal, immured by creation in drops of water that sang"

At first the poems appear difficult to read and grasp. One can easily get lost in the multiplicity of images. When one considers that in Hebrew tradition one cannot start the learning of the Zohar until he has acquired thirty years of knowledge

In a lifetime of lectures, you'd never learn what the world is really like. You have to see it — the laboratory with three billion teachers. You might learn political economy from a Muscovite (or English from a Cockney bartender). Discover high finance in a Caribbean marketplace (or sales psychology in a Paris souvenir shop). Get a refresher course in ancient history (or just about anything) from a cabbie in Rome. Or be taught something new and unforgettable somewhere on your own continent. When you're ready to take the lab course in learning (and living it up), call Air Canada. We've got a good way to get you to class.

then one realizes that one must have patience. With patience and concentration, the work of Nelly Sachs makes itself clear.

The poems are a collection of images pictures, dreams of ideas, some of which are subtle, others of which are terrifying, all of which are striking and full of sadness. They make one uncomfortable and uneasy. They never let one lapse into soporific poetic comfort.

They hammer home the fragility of man's existence on the earth:

*"When the man seduced by sleep rises guilt-laden from the wellshaft of morning
he does not know that he is wrapped in the nightclothes of the chrysalis for still he has not experienced his prebirth nor abandoned himself to

They stare in wonder silently accusing those who perpetrate injustice. They give words to a people that has seen horrors that nobody dreamed possible and who have no consolation nor answer to their suffering.

The first group, entitled "In the Habitations of Death" was published in 1946. It is a horrifying picture of the concentration camps and the agony of the victims. No films of corpses stacked in heaps can bring home more clearly the agony endured. Nelly Sachs knows the victims, has experienced their pain. The thing that effects one most in these first poems is the compassion, the understanding that she has for those who have died and especially for those who have survived. These poems are the most violent and condemnatory in the works of the author.

Through poetry, Nelly Sachs brings home to the reader the nightmare that was Auschwitz and Buchenwald. She paints the raw, abject horror with a penetrating clarity. Perhaps the best poem in the whole collection comes from this group. The last stanza of "O the Night of the weeping Children" reads

*"Yesterday Mother still drew Sleep toward them like a white moon,
There was the doll with cheeks derouged by kisses
In one arm
The stuffed pet, already Brought to life by love,
In the other—
Now blows the wind of dying
Blows the shifts over the hair
That no one will comb again ...*

The next six groups of poems are quieter, more and more introspective. They bear names such as "Eclipse of the Stars," "And No One Knows How to Go On," and "Flight and Metamorphosis." These are essentially variations on the original themes, exploring the mysteries in the aftermath of the terror. Some are terror-filled like the first ones:

NELLY SACHS

"At night when dying proceeds to sever all seams the landscape of screams tears open the black bandage"

Others, however are tender and compassionate but contain the profound sadness and lack of comfort that infuses all the poems:

*"Line like
drawn deathnightobscured
to you"*

A verse play, "Eli," finishes the collection. It is "a mystery play of the Sufferings of Israel," which was written in the first few nights after Nelly Sachs' flight from Germany. In it one can find a summation of the basic lines which run through her poetry:

"What are riches in a Jew but an ice pit around a frozen tear!"

Essentially it is very much like her poetry but is interesting because of its apparent simplicity. One would be wise to start by reading the play.

What Nelly Sachs does in these last poems is try to find a home for her people. This is not a physical home; it is a solace, an answer for the unanswerable a spiritual and universal meaning for "this chain of enigmas hung on the neck of night."

The first English edition of the poetry of Nelly Sachs became available only two months ago and contains translations from all of her collections after the exile.

It would seem that the poetry of a Nobel laureate would defy the barriers of translation, and hence any attempt by intelligent trans-lation, and hence any attempt by intelligent transla-tors would be successful. It turns out that this is not so.

Back in 1962, Michal Hamburger, one of the chief translators of this English edition was co-editor of Modern German Poetry, a fine translation of modern German poets from Rilke to Gunter Grass. But in this book, Hamburger omitted the works of several poets including those of Nelly Sachs, saying that she was a poet "whose work resisted translation or could only be turned into versions which gave that impression."

German is a language that is much like English and it can be one of the easiest to translate into English.

Despite the apparently insurmountable problems involved the English translation is by no means a failure. The translators have been careful to make a painstaking, word for word interpretation from the original. They try not to stray from the original in any way, showing a great respect for the author. This is where the enigma rises.

Nelly Sachs poetry is so intense and so personal that any attempts to tamper with it leaves the translator in worse trouble than he started with. The poetry, like the Hebrew religion itself, is, although universal in concept and idea, personal and almost parochial in style and practice.

Even in translation the poetry of Nelly Sach transmits her view of horror and her mystic disturbing search for truth.

It is a work that will survive the test of time to become an important and integral part of Hebrew lyrical literature. It an artistic mirror of the multilingual and multicultural Jewish life in the diaspora and a mouth-piece for the suffering of a race.

'Man On The Back Concession' - Power Tycoon

By TOM WOOD

MITCH HEPBURN Neil McKenty, McClelland & Stewart, Toronto 1967, $8.95.

In the preface to Mitch Hepburn (McClelland & Stewart 1967) Neil McKenty announces that his book is "intended to be a political profile of the man who has been considered to be one of the most colourful premiers in the province's history." He achieves his limited purpose in the best Bruce Hutchison (Mr. Prime Minister) tradition, for his work produces a lively, fascinating and utterly frustrating sketch of the back-concession politician who ruled Ontario like a dictator from 1934 until the early forties.

The problem with profiles or sketches of this type is that they can do little more than outline the rough contours of their subjects personality. They can show what he did but are unable to spend time analysing why he did it. With a person as erratic as Mitch Hepburn this sort of portrait is woefully inadequate. The golden tongued "Boy from Yarmouth" who caught the imagination of a depression-ridden Ontario in 1934 was a confused bundle of apparent contradictions and legends which both deserve and need a serious analysis. Neil McKenty does little more than restate them in an odd non-temporal sequence which whets the readers imagination and interest without satisfying either.

Hepburn's entire political career was dominated by an irrational and largely one-sided feud with Mackenzie King. This battle although largely a clash of personalities soon developed into a full-blown dispute over federal-provincial jurisdictional rights which came perilously close to destroying confederation. From 1937 onwards Hepburn sealed off Ontario from the federal Liberal party. Constituency machines were no longer available for running elections. Bay St. fund raisers were forbidden to solicit contributions for the national organization and the weight of the Ontario Liberal party was occasionally used indirectly to further the chances of opposition candidates.

By 1940 Hepburn was in open revolt. He made several attempts to form coalitions with the Conservative opposition in the legislature; a strategy which, if successful, would have made him a virtual dictator in the province. At the same time he struck up a close friendship with Quebec's premier Maurice Duplessis with the avowed intention of forming a central Canada party to challenge the federal Liberals.

When Duplessis' defeat in Quebec destroyed these plans Hepburn transferred his political favour to "Bible Bill" Aberheart of Manitoba for whose Social Credit theories he had formerly had nothing but ridicule. Here again he was engaged in an open attempt to extend his political power base beyond the borders of Ontario. This immoral game of power politics was far more serious than anyone realised at the time. Mitch was extremely powerful in his own province and he could command tremendous financial resources. Only a combination of chance and King's political skill kept him from achieving potential federal power and in doing so damaging the structure of Canadian politics, perhaps beyond repair.

Hepburn was playing a game of pure power. His party would have had no ideological base beyond the desire to depose Mackenzie King and no coherence beyond the demagogic eloquence of Hepburn himself. His would have been a morally bankrupt party but a potentially powerful one and the damage it could have done to a war-torn Canada would have been immense.

It is dealing with this aspect of Hepburn's life that the book is at its most frustrating. Every aspect of the struggle is chronicled from the first minor annoyances over political appointments to the Premier's final mental breakdown destroyed by his own machinations and Mackenzie King's wrath. However one has the feeling that there was far more to the struggle than McKenty chooses to record. Certainly the two personalities were irreconcilable. Obviously Hepburn entertained serious Federal ambitions. Perhaps he felt (as he maintained) that Canada was being sold down the river by the Liberal Government. Perhaps he really was demented and power-mad from 1939 onwards. The book ventures on solutions.

The goal of every politician is to be all things to all men but Ontario's eleventh premier carried the idea beyond all reasonable limits. He was swept into power as the champion of the "man on the back concession" and always identified himself with the Small Ontario farmer. However no sooner was he in power than he began choosing Bay St. Financiers and American tycoons as his personal friends and political allies. As has been mentioned he felt no qualms at the thought of allying himself with such incompatible politicians as Maurice Duplessis, George Drew, and William Aberheart, and displayed throughout his career a hearty contempt for political ideology of any kind.

Why should Hepburn have acted in this manner? Was he no more than "a ruthless, unprincipled, back-concession politician on the make.... combining the worst attributes of Huey long and Walter Winchell?" It would seem not, for he had a great capacity for personal loyalty and his administrative record was in many ways outstanding. His personal generosity was famous and many small farmers still speak lovingly of Mitch who made them personal loans during the depression. Was he then a statesman of great potential whose career was marred and eventually destroyed by mental instability manifesting itself in personal vendettas and shifting political allegiances? (Not to mention the alcoholism and loose living for which he was notorious). McKenty offers nothing.

The problem with Mitch Hepburn lies not in the book itself but in the genre McKenty has chosen to adopt. A short political profile is simply not adequate to deal with a man such as Hepburn. For Democratic politics are clearly not the answer to what made him tick.

The book was written with the aid of a centennial grant and no doubt there was great pressure to get it out during 1967. If this is the case one would hope that the author will expand his work into a full scale biography which might provide further insights into the character of Ontario's most colourful (and dangerous) premier.

BLOC-NOTES

Letters to the Editor

Dear Mr. Barclay,

The difference between the poet and his disciples in their respective reactions to a criticism of his poetry is that the former will either shrug off the "peripheral irrelevancies" or offer a valid (if somewhat emotional) defense against them, whereas the disciple, (and that is you, Mr. Barclay), frothing at the subjective intellect, will leap at any whose "guts" do not burn at the sight of his master.

You admit the validity of the academics systemized literary theories concerning Cohen. But bitterly—"as if the essential significance of his writings and life can be explained in categories." Certainly you're not trying to convince the "castrated" pedants with this defiant snort, Mr. Barclay. Who then, Maybe you're just a little tiny bit worried that old Lenny is becoming public property. Why else the paranoid defense of your own pain?

Life is rather sad. First the myopics got Dylan. Now Cohen. Disciples become unemployed.

Andy Wainwright

The Literary Scene On Campus

We received a very nice personal note from Mike Ignatieff this week, assuring us that Random was not going to become an editorial mouthpiece for either he or Jon Caulfield, and explaining some of the reasons, financial and personal, for Random's shift to a weekly. Certainly, we shall reserve further judgment on the new Random until the editors have had a chance to get hold of the new format and timetable.

However, one thing that soothed our disappointment about the loss of a magazine was the appearance today of Catalyst, a literary magazine, and the news from SAC-PRESS that Al Kamin's first issue of The Gargoyle will be coming out early next week.

We will be reviewing both Catalyst and The Gargoyle in greater depth next week. Nonetheless, my first impressions, while reading the proofs which one of the editors kindly brought around, were favourable.

One thing which interested me, though, was the predominance in quality—and quantity—of poetry over prose. The two short stories are marked by a naivety that is charming and quite pleasant, but a little surprising. The first, by Robert Nunn, has a restless, hasty quality which weakens the intensity and plausibility of the story, and flaws the really quite vivid conclusion. The jerkiness and lack of continuity between the vivid glimpses made me think that this was the work of someone more at ease in poetry than in prose.

Similarly, the second story, by Elizabeth Greene, had a naive artificiality in its dealing with the almost cliché-ridden vignette of Student-poet-on-park-bench-meets-simple-man-and-can't-talk-sympathetically.

On the other hand, most of the poetry, particularly the three poems by Raphael Barreto-Rivera, seemed to me to have control and surprising sophistication.

Something Worth Buying . . .

Every Thursday, The Star Weekly hits the stands—usually just as one of us wanders over to Mac's for lunch. Week by week, now, there is something worth buying the magazine for. And, for the past three weeks, The Weekly has featured Canadian novelists writing non-fiction.

Last week, it was David Lewis Stein, writing about how one stops getting homesick in Paris and London if you stay for a while (but how one decides it's worth coming back after all); the week before, Hugh Hood writing on Cardinal Leger's decision to go to Africa. (A well-written, but embarrassingly pious piece.)

Today, The Weekly's cover story is on the Grey Cup Weekend — by Mordecai Richler. It is a very funny piece which catches our national foibles with the cool and withering glance of a returning expatriate.

Enjoyable as the article is — and parts of it are very funny — I am beginning to get a little fed up of reading, in absolutely everything Richler writes, whether about Expo, separatism, comic books, or the Grey Cup, about how Mordecai Richler was a poor lower-class Jewish boy who grew up in the slums of Montreal. One wonders whether anyone dares to edit Richler's copy, now that he is a Great Expatriate Canadian Writer.

FILM

Next week at the Electra two very different Monica Vittis: as Giuliana in Antonioni's Red Desert and Modesty Blaise in Joseph Losey's film of the same name. The most promising looking new film this week-end is The Thief of Paris at the International Cinema. It stars Canada's Genevieve Bujold and France's Jean-Paul Belmondo. The director Louis Malle's other credits include Zaz!, Viva Maria!, and Le Feu Follet. Chafed Elbows and Scorpio Rising are still on at Cinecity and Othello will be shown Saturday and Sunday at the Crest.

THEATRE

After the feast, the famine. Perhaps it's just as well, with all the tests and essays and all. There are some things going on worth noticing. Tom Thumb and The Babies are at St. Hilda's this week, Tiger at the Gates is at Hart House. Giraudoux is the best playwright, as far as I'm concerned, to come out of Europe in the past fifty years. Married Alive! is going through its life-throes at O'Keefe, and Impossible Years opens at the Royal Alex for the month. Back on home ground, Reiner Sauer's production of Noah's Ark for the P.L.S. opens next week sometime, for an erratic run that will take them to Chicago and other exotic places. Dentistics, the Faculty of Dentistry's annual romp is at North Toronto Collegiate this weekend, and Daffydil will anatomate next week at Hart House. Richard Reoch's play Under the Sea to Sunrise previews at St. Hilda's next Wednesday and Thursday before it goes into the Poor Alex from December 19th to the 23rd. The show is being produced by Prospero Productions and the Trinity College drama Society, with the support of Brian Parker's Drama Centre.

SCHNITZEL HOUSE

Langouring in the sick-bed, prey to the heinous in-destructible virus, Tarvainen ponders with Ennis his overdue library books which he can't get delivered, and too weak to finish his essays, ponders upon the state of the nations.

Viet Nam will soon be over; not the war, Viet Nam. Scattered Earthquakes in the Gulf of California forewarn the destruction of a major portion of that state soon by natural causes as the San Andreas Fault quivers anew. Lots of snow before Christmas in Toronto.

The year of the Losers is coming to an end; 1968 is officially The Year of the Heroic Winner. Most everywhere.

The Faulkner-Charlton contest may be close; Faulkner, while not everybody's ideal student politician, has represented himself with honesty, has improved ten-fold from last year, and is open-minded enough to make things interesting; even that is something which I haven't seen too much of in SAC for the last four years. Many who normally don't vote in SAC elections might think of doing so this time; vote Faulkner if you do.

Ennis subtracts himself.

One of the unsung delights near the campus, and Deserving Good Things is George's Kibbitzeria, at Huron and Harbord. The food is extremely good, the atmosphere pleasant, and more than that, Lonnie Johnson sings in the evening.

Johnson is a part of jazz history — an intriguing old-timer who sang with Louis Armstrong back in the 'twenties, and who believes in the old-fashioned credo that an entertainer's job is to make people happy. For anyone with a respect for the roots of jazz and blues, and an admiration for skill and craft, The Kibbitzeria should be a regular habit.

The Sobot Gallery will be showing a wide selection of its painters' work in the lounge of the St. Mike's Student Centre. Until Xmas.

Daffydil, the Meds show which has a history of suppression that rivals Peyton Place's treatment in Boston, (Daffydil was banned and censored in 1922 and 1939, resumed only after reluctant Faculty consent) opens next Tuesday, and runs through next weekend.

The Design Centre beside the Colonnade has been presenting a weekly selection of Thursday night films. Next Thursday; 3 Danish films.

And, for unnerving entertainment, Charlton will be at Innis at noon today, followed by Faulkner at 1.00.

Columnist Fekete loses scholarship

MONTREAL (Special)—John Fekete, the McGill Daily columnist who last month printed the controversial Realist article, will not receive his $1,000 English Literature Scholarship from the Beta Sigma Phi Sorority due to "his unfavourable publicity in the past few weeks." The scholarships was to have been presented Nov. 18.

In a letter to Fekete, Mrs. L. M. Price, the President of the Beta Sigma Phi Sorority said: "We cannot afford to make a public presentation of a scholarship in such a large amount, thereby causing unfavourable publicity to us."

In response to this letter, C. L. Sheppard, Fekete's lawyer, advised the Sorority that their proceedings were illegal since the scholarship had been awarded to Fekete several months ago and confirmed in August by the Beta Sigma Phi Scholarships Committee.

Sheppard advised the sorority that if the $1,000 was not received legal proceedings would be taken.

The money has not yet been received.

Brunet wants Quebec colleges united

MONTREAL (CUP)—All six Quebec universities should be combined into a single government-sponsored institution, said Dr. Michel Brunet, the vice-dean of letters at the University of Montreal said last week.

Dr. Michel Brunet told an alumni group government sponsorship would ensure that funds would be properly allocated and would allow the less-developed universities in the province to achieve academic equality.

Dr. Brunet classed the U of M with those which were "behind" and cited McGill as one in a "privileged position."

McGill's academic vice-principal, Michael Oliver, later told the gathering the average level of education of French Quebecers reaching university is lower than that of the English group. But the government currently grants much less money to English schools for administrative and educational purposes than to the French.

More SAC reps speak on election

Ian Sadinsky (IV UC) said he had not made up his mind yet.

"I've had my disagreements with Faulkner but he is a good leader. Anyway, he's a fair person. But a fair person isn't always a good leader."

He said he would listen to the issues and then decide.

Brian Greenspan (III UC), said he supports Faulkner.

"Tom and I don't always agree," he said, "but I don't feel you can opt out of moral positions entirely, where these are related to the student community."

Cliff Lax (III Law) said he doesn't support anyone in particular.

"I support Tom Faulkner as an administrator and Bill Charlton for his views."

Linda Buell (IV Fd. Sc.), said that while she does not agree with Faulkner's conception of SAC as a body that can make moral decisions, Faulkner had not made these decisions alone.

"He needs the backing of the majority of SAC to have anything passed. The whole of SAC should have been asked to resign rather than one person."

"I'm sure Tom is the better man," she said. "He got students interested in SAC. Now any student knows what is going on and what the issues are."

"I believe SAC should be involved in moral and political issues," said Bernie Zuckerman (II New) and I strongly support Tom Faulkner.

"I would resign if Charlton won. I ran to be involved, not to run dances. Any high school council could do that."

Bob Bossin (III Innis), SAC education commissioner, is backing Faulkner for the presidency.

"We are involved in what's going on outside the campus, and anyone that says we aren't involved, is lying."

Paul Belford (III Scar), supports Faulkner.

"I feel he's the best man for the job."

"Charlton seems to be a very capable fellow, but I wonder if he's really all that concerned with student business, or if he's just running to get his name in the paper."

"I'm in complete agreement with Tom Faulkner's ideas of student government."

So said George MacIntosh (III Vic). "I'm for the SAC getting involved, and that seems to be the main issue in the election."

MacIntosh wondered "what Charlton's motives are." "Is he playing a political game? I think his definition of student politics is definitely too narrow."

Leslie Gary (III New), said Faulkner "has proven himself for the job."

"He has a pretty good chance of winning. If Tom doesn't win, the student movement is going to be set back 10 years."

She said she knew nothing about Charlton.

Grant Joyner (III Dent) supported Charlton, but thought Faulkner would be elected.

"I am disenchanted with the way Faulkner has handled himself," he said.

"Charlton has his feet on the ground more than Faulkner; he is more practical."

Finance Commissioner Jan Duinker (SGS) said Faulkner was "the best man for the job."

"I support him in his stand on moral issues in SAC," he added. "Charlton wouldn't have the time, experience, or qualifications for the job."

Law Lords lock up lacrosse

LACROSSE
Law won the Dr. W.A. Dafoe trophy and simultaneously the interfaculty Lacrosse championship Wednesday for the sixth time in 37 years and the third year in a row by defeating Vic 16-9. Don Arthurs (sec adv't. in Wednesday Roundup led Law with 7 goals; Gary Grierson played a strong game and had 6. Hill, Major, and Pashby rounded out Law scoring. Evans (2), Blyth (2), Hiscler (2), Elleker, Murphy and James scored for Vic, who made a good effort but couldn't match Law's size and experience.

SWIMMING

Engineering won the Junior Interfaculty Swim Meet held sometime in the distant past (carbon-14 testing indicates on or about Nov. 28. Our reporter Qwert Yuiopus, was swallowed by a large whale lurking unnoticed in the Hart House pool) with 80 points, closely pursued by PHE, with 77. Scarborough (44), Meds (26), Vic (8), New (12), UC (9), and SMC (3) followed. Morris Vaillancourt of PHE was the individual hero, winning three events; Larry Bobbett of PHE was a double winner.

BASKETBALL

Vic I added insult, injury, and 7 points by Tom Ouchterlony (Ach der Lony, oberlieutenant) to defeat Meds A, 36-33. Lewis had 12 for Meds and Lloyd Rosman, despite playing the second half in an iron lung, had 8.

O'Neill scored 12 points to lead St. Michael's A over UC, 44-40. Feldman had 13 for Redmen.

Law I pulverized Dents A, 37-26. Garbe had 10 for Law; Mon Koptain led Dents with 7.

Scarborough, with Courzon scoring 16, defeated Architecture, 48-38; Kindree, with 12 points, was the heart of the Artichoke team.

Lochinvar Sprogis hit for 18 to lead Erindale over Pharmacy, 43-27. Fejuk had 11 for Pharmacy.

Vic II (vic II, Brute?) sparked by Harris' 9 points, trimmed Meds B, 37-25.

HOCKEY

Sullivan, Donovan Burman and Hurley scored to give SMC A a 4-1 win over Vic. Emin replied for Vic.

Trinity and Law battled, in the traditional manner, to a 2-2 draw. Fitzpatrick and Elliott (Law) and Llewellyn and Dennison (Trin-Trin) scored the goals.

UC, Mother of us All, trounced Jr. Engineering, 3-1. Clelland had 2 for UC and Werbicki the other (sc. "goal"). McCallum scored for Jr. Skule.

VOLLEYBALL

The Senior Engineers vol-

leyed but Vic I had the ball (cheap sensationalism), and Vic beat the toolmen for the first time in four years' 8-15, 15-8, 15-12. The entire squad of the mature Skulemen (read senior) was not enough to overcome the dazzling footwork and rugged good looks of Peter Vineyard (read grapey for Vic (as in)).

CULTURAL EVENTS

CBC (that's #6 around here I think) continues its fine coverage of Expo's World Festival by showing highlights of the Mulock Cup game Saturday at 3:30. You read the story in the Varsity; now see the movie.

Wrestling and water polo on tap Saturday at Varsity

Saturday afternoon at two o'clock, University of Toronto wrestlers host Waterloo as the grapplers inaugurate another season.

Both teams have undergone considerable rebuilding this year, and both have new coaches. The result leaves a pair of rather unknown quantities squaring off on Saturday.

However, despite rebuilding, Toronto still retains a hard core of veterans, and with coach, Kirk Wipper stressing the importance of a solid victory in their opening match, Blues must be considered slight favourites.

But Waterloo are eager underdogs and their coach was actually disappointed because some of his boys didn't turn out for Sunday practices.

New faces with Blues this year and scheduled to wrestle tomorrow afternoon include Steve Casselman (123), Rod Vinter (152), Bob Glass (177), and Vic Helfand (191).

Among the veterans, Jim Doner has moved up a notch to the 130 lb. division, Rick Kesten remains at 137, Roy Wilson at 145, stocky René St. Aubin will wrestle at 160, while Bill Allison and Mike Wright are entered at 167 lbs. and Heavyweight, respectively. Wright wrestled at 191 last year.

WATER POLO

Also at two o'clock Saturday afternoon in Hart House is top water polo action. Blues' aquamen swim off against McGill in the second and concluding game of the annual Herschorn Cup competition.

Redmen will be out for revenge after their last quarter rally was thwarted two weeks ago in Montreal, as Toronto won the opener 17-11.

Varsity are defending champs, having last relinquished the Cup in 1964.

On Wednesday, Blues overwhelmed McMaster 15-3 in Hamilton. Leading scorers were Al Pyle and Bruce Warburton with five goals each. Chris McNaught tallied two, while rookie Dave Breech, defenseman Ki Skip Bergman, and rover Gaye Stratton scored one apiece.

Varsity's Tom Watt not a coach to stand pat

By PHIL BINGLEY

Usually when a hockey team wins its first six games of the season—all by comfortable scores—the coach of that team is content to sit back in his office chair and stick with the successful combination.

However, this has not been the case for Tom Watt, coach of the league leading Varsity Blues. Although Blues won their three preseason games, their first three league games and held the NHL old-timers to a 3-3 tie earlier this week, Watt has again decided to reshuffle his lineup. The reasoning behind this juggling: "I want to give everyone on the team an equal chance to show me what he can do. On top of this, if a player isn't sure he is playing each game, he naturally works a little harder in practice."

For tonight's game against

McGill University Redmen, Varsity fans will see the results of Watt's latest shake-up. Peter Speyer will move up from his defensive spot to take the left wing position on a line with Brian St. John and Mike Riddell. To fill the hole made by Speyer, Terry Parsons will dress and take a regular turn with Jim Miles on defense. And, just to make things more complicated, Fred Pollard will dress as the extra forward, playing on the power-play and filling in on spot assignments.

Other than that, Blues will start the same team that opened the season.

For McGill, Bruce Glen-cross will start in goal with Brian Kelly, Courtney Pratt, Rod McCarthy and G. B. Maughan playing defense. The latter foursome form one of the better blueline units in the league and could well make things uncomfortable for Blues freewheeling forwards—maybe.

On the forward lines, McGill coach Dave Copp has been having his troubles. The Redmen attack has been ineffective so far although Terry Harron, Skippy Kerner, Peter Burgess, Harry Griffiths and John Tibbitts are all potential lamplighters.

After last week's unexciting game against Queen's, the question arises whether other teams in the league plan to play the lay-back-and-wait-for-break style of hockey against Blues this year. According to coach Watt, this will be the exception rather than the rule. "When teams do that, they are expecting to fluke a couple of goals. However, I don't think this will happen when you consider the strong goaltending we have."

letters we like to get

Dear Mr. Mickleburgh:

I am one of the many fans who are so ably entertained on wintry Friday evenings by the Varsity hockey squad. Furthermore, as a member of another Varsity team (gymnastics — a minor sport), I am well aware of the need for support by the student body for Varsity team junkets.

Hence, while academic pressures prevent me from being entertained this evening (Tuesday's Oldtimer's game), I am nevertheless kicking in my dollar towards the team junket with regrets that it isn't more. I hope you will ensure that it gets to the correct place.

Thank you,

Arthur N. Stein

PUCKSTER PREVIEW

Warriors bridesmaid again?

By PHIL BINGLEY

WATERLOO WARRIORS

1966-67 Record: 11-3-2

COACH: DON HAYES

Always a bridesmaid, never a bride. This seems to be the problem again facing coach Hayes and his crew. Warriors have lost top scorer Gerry Lawless, badman Marc Ruest and goaltender Arlen Popkey.

Returnees Mel Baird, Ron Smith, Don Mervyn, Terry Cooke, and Bob Murdoch along with Orest Romashyna, Hugh Conlin, Laverne Miller and Doug Shuh should be enough to give Warriors second place.

Newcomers include Dave Rudge, Vince Mulligan, Stu Eccles, Doug Jodoin and Joe Modeste. At this time it appears that Waterloo is not ready to knock Varsity Blues off the SIHL throne.

MONTREAL CARABINS

1966-67 Record: 5-9-2

(6th Place)

COACH: CLAUDE CHAPLEAU

Carabins are already shaping up as the league's darkhorse entry. Last year they improved steadily as the schedule went on and finished the schedule with a 4-4 tie with Varsity Blues here in Toronto.

Coach Chapleau has recruited several players from the Montreal Junior 'A' league leaving Carabins with a good shot at this year's playoffs.

Petit Pierre Barbeau is Carabins answer to Jacques Plante while Jean Delorme, Yvon Gingras, Marc Picard, Robert Dedue, Pierre Bazinet, Andre Hayes and Jacques Larin are the men to watch in what should be a potent attack.

LAVAL ROUGE ET OR

1966-67 Record: 5-9-2

(6th Place)

COACH: JEAN PAUL POULIN

Coach Poulin, who is starting his fifteenth and final year as head mentor of the Red and Gold is faced with the task of improving on last year's sixth place finish.

Laval are weak on defence and must rely heavily on the goaltending of Jacques Audy and André Turcotte.

Up front, Rouge et Or are fairly solid with top scorers Guy Morel, Normand Cote, Yvon Gagnon, Gilles Berube and Jean Riaux leading the way.

With some luck and hard work, Laval could find themselves in the middle of a fight for fourth place in the nine team league.

McGILL REDMEN

1966-67 Record: 4-11-1

(8th Place)

COACH: DAVE COPP

Redmen's leading scorer John Taylor, goaltender Jim Tennant, and most improved player John Rteeve have all joined the grad gang leaving coach Copp with troubles galore.

McGill do have a strong defense in the persons of Brian Kelly, Courtney Pratt, Rod McCarthy, and G. B. Maughan but they will need some high-scoring from Terry Harron, Skippy Kerner, Peter Burgess, Harry Griffiths and John Tibbitts if they are to improve their 8th place finish of last season.

Bruce Glenerss should give Redmen solid goaltending with help from Dave Craig.

GUELPH REDMEN

1966-67 Record: 2-13-1

COACH: BRIGGS CRICHTON

Redmen are blessed with good goaltending in the skates of Jim Horton, a former Junior 'A' netminder with St. Catharines. However, after that Crichton's field of talent reaps no harvest.

Mike Cummings appears to be the best of Redmen's forwards while Barry Poag and Mike Doersam provide an adequate defense combination.

Waiter Kincaid, Jim Forbes Doug Weaver, Jay Blackwood, and Steve Proctor will all have to produce or Guelph may have difficulties maintaining their two wins per season average.

Basketball Blues travel south to face Rochester

By JIM MORRISON

It's back south again for basketball Blues this weekend, as they head to Rochester for more baptismal fire in American-style basketball. Friday night, Roberts Wesleyan College provide the opposition, while Saturday's game features the University of Rochester.

Missing from Blues' lineup for the trip is forward Arvo Neidre, who has a Meds exam facing him. His place in the roster will be taken by rookie guard Larry Trafford.

Blues warmed up for the trip on Tuesday night, by defeating York University

Bruce Dempster led Toronto scorers with 18 points and played well from his backcourt slot. Mike Kirby impressed again with his performance at forward.

Forward Ron Veake turned in his first game since suffering an arm injury a month ago. However, he returned home to San Diego on Wednesday, and will miss Blues season opener against Western.

Board Banter.

Ex Blue Jim Holowachuk has decided against playing for Western Mustangs in the coming season—a break for Varsity ... early SIHL scoring leader is rookie Guelph performer Leigh Hammond with 55 points in two games.

Vic wins women's basketball over PHE

By JOAN STEVENSON

Victoria College rules the women's basketball court for the second straight year as they squeezed out PHE, IV in a scrappy lowscoring game. The Thompson sisters, Ann and Jackie, broke through PHE's defensive ring in the first half to drop three each.

PHE then tightened up their defense and started whittling away at Vic's lead. Bev Dello, the hard working center of PHE came up with several spectacular plays to narrow the lead.

But the Vicettes had about 3" extra height on Phys Ed and were able to control the backboards. In the dying moments of the last quarter, Sandy Pett killed PHE's hopes with her long shots.

Top scorers in the game were Bev Dello of Phys Ed and Sandy Pett, Vic.

This is the tenth time Vic has won the Interfaculty championship since 1913, whereas PHE has taken the booty 14 times since 1943.

This weekend 80 U of T women in basketball, volleyball, archery, fencing and badminton will board the Rapido to meet McGill.

Placement Service will not change operations

By JIM COWAN

The advisory committee to the Placement Service has recommended that no changes be made in the service, and the anti-war group which staged the Nov. 20 sit-in has called another demonstration for today.

The committee was unable to resolve during the weekend the question of who should use university recruiting facilities.

A statement from Acting President John H. Sword said, "The members (of the committee) were evenly divided on the issue as to whether one or more companies previously declared eligible should now be declared ineligible."

"Unable to resolve this, the committee voted by a large majority that, pending further discussion, the Placement Service should not change its arrangements."

Notice of the decision has been sent to all companies concerned, including Dow Chemical of Canada.

The effect of the committee's decision is to allow all those companies currently scheduled, to carry on interviews at the Placement Service.

In reply, the Ad Hoc Committee Against Campus Complicity issued a statement last night calling for a "definite decision" on the question of recruitment by Vietnam war suppliers.

"Unfortunately, the administration has taken advantage of this unclear situation, and rather than waiting for a definite decision, has taken the unwarranted step of inviting Dow back on campus to continue recruitment."

The director of the Placement Service, Allan Headrick, and Registrar Robin Ross refused to comment on whether Dow would be on campus today. Mr. Headrick said Dow would be back before Christmas.

Paul Hoch, the secretary of the Ad-Hoc Committee, said he believes Dow will be at the Placement Service today. He has called a meeting at the University College Junior Common Room at 1 p.m., to be followed by a demonstration at the Placement Service.

He said that a sit-in was unlikely and that there would probably be no forcible blockade of the entrance.

Registrar Ross yesterday reiterated the administration's position that it will not object to "orderly demonstrations," but that "demonstrations involving physical force are contrary to everything for which this university stands."

The advisory committee met for two and a half hours Friday and three hours Saturday. Three motions were considered.

History professor J. B. Conacher proposed the first motion, which commended SAC for its stand but said it was neither possible nor desirable for the committee to recommend guidelines as suggested by SAC. This motion was defeated 7-6.

A counter-proposal by Steve Langdon (III Trn), one of five students on the committee, asked that all companies wishing to use the Placement Service make application to the advisory body, and that this body establish guidelines such as those proposed by SAC.

No majority could be obtained on this resolution and it was unanimously tabled.

The third motion, proposed by engineering dean J. M. Ham was a compromise between the first two. It said that, pending further discussion no change should be made in Placement Service Policy.

There was considerable disagreement on this motion. Some regarded it as an interim measure, effective only until the committee meets again. Others, like Landdon, voted against it, feeling it was an attempt to bury the issue.

Despite these misgivings, the motion was passed by an 11-2 majority

The deadlock over the question of guidelines could be broken the motion says, when the faculty representatives find out how the staff feel about allowing companies producing war materials to recruit on campus.

"The discussion was very basic and philosophical," said Langdon. "The committee will probably go on to less controversial and more important topics. It's not going to die in spite of definite action on this issue."

McMaster senate will seat students

HAMILTON (VNS)—The McMaster University administration has agreed to a list of major reforms including the granting of three student seats on the university senate.

The recommendations, which the university has promised to implement, were contained in a report prepared by an 11-man committee, released last weekend.

The report says the committee was originally opposed to student representation but was won over by "the very pertinent and constructive views" of the student members of the committee. The students demanded one-third of the 46 seats on the senate.

Students council President Ivan Cairns said students would continue to press for greater representation. He will discuss implementation of the recommendations with the senate tomorrow.

It has not been decided how the student representatives will be chosen, but they will be one graduate and two undergraduates with good academic standing.

The report also provides for an increase in faculty representation on the senate. The faculty will elect 23 members and alumni representatives will be cut to four from 10.

The senate, the senior academic body, will have the right to make recommendations to the board of governors, but the board will continue to exercise final authority.

The report rejects the concept of the university as a "knowledge factory whose purpose is to man the wheels of industry."

Did you know?

Bill Chorlton (II Law) is running against Tom Faulkner (SGS) for the SAC presidency. Join the race! It starts tomorrow at 8:30 a.m., ends 6 p.m. Polls practically everywhere.

For your reading pleasure, the Varsity features other election goodies.

Here's your chance to get in on the Christmas spirit. It's not too late to give donations to the SHARE campaign. And just a little more will put the campaign over the $13,000 mark - the most ever raised by SHARE on campus. Just send donations by university mail or drop them by the SAC office as soon as possible.

Stone sees a catch in student representation

By SHERRY BRYDSON

The Innis College Council may be using its student members to legitimize unpopular decisions says Ken Stone, Innis College Student Society president.

In its regular meeting Monday the ICC the supreme body of the college, vetoed a Student Society proposal to hold a dance with a cash bar on Sir John A. Macdonald's birthday next month.

"It's the first time I can remember the ICC voting down a Student Society proposal," said Stone (IV Inn).

"I'm very much afraid the Council will use its student members as justification for passing such measures," he continued. "It's so easy for them to say students had a part in the decision, since they sit on the council."

"The Council has 14 faculty members, four administrators, and five students. At the meeting which turned down the liquor proposal, one student was away, one abstained and three voted for the proposal.

Stone feels the reasons given for rejecting the proposal are not valid. The ICC said the party was in poor taste.

"But," says Stone, "the Student Society executive decided it wasn't in poor taste. What right has the council to impose standards of taste?"

The party, said one dissenter, would discriminate against the two-thirds of the college who would be unable to drink. "The Common Room would be divided into two areas," says Stone.

"One would be licensed and the other not. This is the same sort of thing that happens at weddings and bar mitzvahs, where all the guests aren't over 21."

Another objection—"It's not good for the college"—drew a laconic "Is that so?" from Stone.

At the same meeting, the College Council also passed a motion regarding student discipline which, says Stone, "puts Innis way behind the rest of the university."

The proposal contains a clause which would allow a subcommittee of the Council to discipline students for "conduct prejudicial to the college."

"The effect of this decision means that, as in the case of the pot-smoking student at Western (who was expelled from the university after being disciplined in the civil courts) Innis College students stand in double jeopardy, first from the civil authorities and second from the university."

Stone proposed an amendment to the proposal that would restrict the subcommittee's powers to "matters not covered by civil and criminal law."

The amendment was defeated.

Stone was quiet and resigned last night as he explained the effect of the motions. He was worried about being "used" by the administration.

"There is a growing tendency at Innis for anyone justifying an unpopular measure to say that students took part in making it," he said.

"The reason students were given representation on the ICC was to give them a part in making decisions, and to let the rest of the students know what the council is doing."

"But if the ICC keeps making unpopular decisions what use is student representation?" he asked.

Stone and Bob Bossin, another student representative, are questioning their purpose on the council.

"If I stay on, it will only be for one reason—to report back to the students," said Stone.

He sighed. "I wonder if Innis will ever be a true academic community?"

Little response to housing survey

A housing questionnaire sent to 1,075 students has received less than 260 replies, says Edmund Clark (II UC), the chairman of the Students Council housing study.

"If we don't get 400 to 500 back, the study is worthless," he said yesterday. "How can students complain so much about housing, yet be so apathetic when asked to do something about it?"

He urged students to complete the questionnaire.

Al Sudan dominates Black Power panel

"There's no way to understand Black Power unless you're black!" Nazzam Al Sudan, a Black Nationalist poet and playwright, told one perplexed questioner at a panel discussion, "Why Black Power?", last Thursday night.

Moderator Dr. R. O. Kroger, a psychologist, tried more than once to stimulate a stalemated panel stymied by Al Sudan's tirades. After one particularly long silence, he turned to a panel member and said, "Maybe you would like to react?"

Al Sudan was quick to censure the term "Negro" used in the discussion. "A Negro is a dead person," he said, "A Negro has no control over his life."

Another Black Power advocate shouted from the audience, "A Negro is a robot!" "He is a robot," echoed Al Sudan.

Finally he was pinned down by a member of the audience who wished to know exactly what the Black Power movement wanted. "We want freedom, justice, liberty..." There was a pause and then, "Land... we want land anywhere we desire it."

Mr. J. Midanek, another panel member and chairman of the Canadian Civil Liberties Union was flabbergasted: "Land anywhere you want it... now?"

Al Sudan: Yes, Midanek. What about... Al Sudan (softly): What about what?

Another silence followed. Somebody in the audience told him that he wasn't being practical. Al Sudan answered, "You're the oppressor and I'm the oppressed; you can't tell me what's practical!"

Canada a land of parasites: Lapierre

"Canada is a nation of screwers, screwing things together," Laurier Lapierre, a vice-president of the national NDP, charged Wednesday night.

He said Canada is "a land of parasites" and "lives off the fat of the United States."

Mr. Lapierre was speaking at St. Michael's College on what he called The Canada Game.

"The Canada Game is played by people who have nothing else to play with," he explained. "It is a game played by fools and people who have lost the will to live"

He called on Canadians to awake from their lethargy and become involved in all matters, from "the loneliness and poverty that exist everywhere in Canada" to "our complicity in the murder in Vietnam."

"We want to find out what he concluded, "we need a national dimension."

Vic ponders campus political position

The Victoria College Union Council is taking advantage of the controversy stirred up by the Students Council presidential election to examine its own role in campus politics.

An open meeting of all Vic students at 4 p.m. today will consider the aims, duties and responsibilities of VCUC members.

The meeting was called after 10 Vic students signed a petition requesting one.

During the VCUC meeting last Thursday, Vice-President Steve Grant (I Vic) said:

"We want to find out what we're doing here... and what the students think we're doing."

The meeting will be chaired by President Glen Brownlee (IV Vic).

Independent socialists plan new club

A new political club is being formed on campus, the University of Toronto Independent Socialist club.

Bill Johnston (SGS), one of the organizers, said the club's purpose is to complement rather than to rival established political clubs.

"We will be performing an educational function which no other group on campus is performing," he says.

The initial program of lectures and discussions will be based on the themes of student power, worker's control, the "new working class" and the welfare state.

The organizational meeting takes place tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the south sitting room of Hart House.

The SAC presidential television debate will take place at 7 p.m. tonight in the Hart House Debates Room.

Both candidates will speak in Room 125 of the Medical Building at 1 p.m. and New College at 7:30 p.m.

"On the advice of the Advisory Committee to the Placement Service, the University will not distinguish among any of the companies involved in the current

— J. H. Sward, Dec. 10

Placement committee

Statements released on last week-end's initial deliberations of the Placement Service advisory committee are unusually guarded but between the lines the whole story comes out. And it shows that all that talk by the administration that students will be involved in making real decisions is a sham. The administration is working as usual behind a facade of consultation.

The committee considered three motions, the first of which said it would be impractical to set guidelines between companies manufacturing materials for use in the Vietnam War and others. By defeating this motion 7-6, the committee accepted the principle that guidelines could be set.

This vote occurred Friday during a 2½ hour debate that must have shocked the administration appointees both in its bitterness and in the strength of the student position.

After all, the committee is set up so that the five student members will be in the minority alongside the five faculty, two administration members and one alumnus. Yet, on this first vote, two faculty members seem to have voted with the students.

Saturday was another day of bitter debate producing two motions. One of the students moved that guidelines be drawn and that these be used to govern the running of the Placement Service. Steve Langdon, who moved it, said the committee couldn't come to a majority decision and finally tabled the motion.

Acting President J. H. Sward's statement said the committee was evenly divided on the issue. He didn't say it, but that means 7-7, which must mean that committee chairman Robin Ross voted. But chairmen don't usually vote unless a tie has to be broken; in this case he created a tie, thereby tying up the discussion and making it impossible for the committee to act.

The last motion, that pending further discussions the Placement Service be run as usual, was passed 11-2. Mr. Ross didn't vote, it seems.

Registrar Ross' actions in this committee are highly questionable. He should not have voted. Also, we are told by a non-student member that he pointed out at the start of the committee's meeting Friday that it would be acting only in an advisory capacity.

What this means is clear. Even if the committee had reached a decision this would not have been binding on the administration. So the committee is powerless unless it decides what the administration wants.

It only goes to show what was obvious all along, that given the position of the university in society, the grants it gets from the government and so on, Dow and any other big company will not be told to go away. The role of the modern university is at stake.

vote faulkner

By SUE HELWIG

Yesterday, after a week of campaigning, Tom Faulkner and Bill Charlton, finally confronted the real point of difference between them: their view of student government.

Despite all the talk of Dow, Placement Service and full-time presidents, this is the fundamental issue they are talking about.

Yet on precisely this question both Faulkner and Charlton seem to start from a point of agreement; their analyses of the problems facing the university in the twentieth century.

Yesterday in a discussion at University College, Charlton interpreted Faulkner's idea of a university as being "very Bismarckian and Germanic." He explained that it was Bismarck who developed the departmental university designed to produce servants of the state.

One would conclude from this that Charlton thinks that there is something wrong with this kind of a university.

Earlier in the day, in a talk given to the African Students' Union, Faulkner had given his point of view in the following terms:

"The twentieth century added a new dimension to the role of the university," he said. "It became a centre for the application of knowledge, supplying necessary research for its society. The danger of the application of knowledge is that the university can be and is being used by society," he added.

"Will the time come when the economic needs of a nation overrule the needs and desires of the individual student?" he asked.

Are they not both trying to preserve the independence of the university community itself within the greater society?

And are they not both trying to protect the integrity of the individual student in his university?

But when the discussion moves into the question of methods, Faulkner and Charlton separate as they examine the role of student government.

Charlton denies that a student council can call itself a government.

But Charlton, who admitted to me privately his dissatisfaction with the system and who admits that change is necessary, will do nothing beyond what he can accomplish as an individual.

Faulkner, on the other hand is willing to work for change with a political system such as SAC undeniably is. He wants SAC to act like a government to be more effective.

Tom Faulkner is reacting against the view that "the role of a university is to perpetuate and not to change its society."

On the contrary he believes that the university is the conscience of its society and that involvement in the community should be valued within the university.

Bill Charlton seems to misinterpret this view to represent the election issue in extreme terms:

"If you choose to preserve the integrity of this institution," he warns, "you will not give this council the mandate it seeks."

"You will be sanctioning power within this university and power to move against you," he adds.

It seems to me that this argument has been used to build up a fear of SAC in the minds of those who listen to Charlton's words.

But it is obvious the SAC he warns of is not the type of council Faulkner has been speaking about.

Sue Helwig and Brian Cruchley have covered the two candidates' speeches for more than a week. Here they give their final impressions.

By BRIAN CRUCHLEY

Black power and flower power are catchy slogans. To those who believe in the mass media, black power unites the black people and flower power unites the flower children.

After a summer of ghetto riots and love-ins, two of this year's biggest newsmakers, what could be more appropriate than a power slogan that would legitimize the aspirations of university student councils by exposure through the mass media? And what could be a more appropriate slogan than student power?

However the mass media has a reputation of distorting situations to alarm the public and bring attention (and advertising dollars) to itself.

Consequently many people think most colored people are black power evangelists and most drug-users are flower power drop-out Learyites.

Recently the student power slogan has been tossed between page one, the 11 o'clock wrap-up and the editorial columns.

It appears that the mass media has been successful in persuading many people that student power is an expression of most students.

Unfortunately student power is a terrible misnomer. Both words misrepresent what university student councils are all about.

When we talk about student power, we are talking about what the concerned student activist elite is thinking and trying to do.

The student activist elite at U of T are leftist, moral decision-makers on SAC, the editors of The Varsity, Paul Hoch, Laurel Limpus and other assorted people who hang around University College.

The student activist elite does not represent the professional faculties and a large part of the arts colleges.

We could then say that student power is student activist elite power except the last word of that phrase is incorrect.

The only power that student activist elite has is through the $8 fee that SAC collects from each student.

When SAC decides to instruct its representatives on a Placement Service Advisory Board to discriminate against companies producing war materials, it is seeking to augment its power at the expense of engineers.

Two weeks ago 2,385 students signed a petition expressing their dissatisfaction with the latest SAC attempt to bring power and self-importance onto itself.

Bill Charlton stepped forth and championed the cause of the petitioners.

His campaign meetings with Faulkner have proved to the now paranoid student activist elite that Charlton is not merely the upstart spokesman of conservative backlash against SAC.

Charlton has been criticized for his showmanship and adept debating tactics, while Faulkner is taking the election and his campaign contests with the jovial rugby player from Law School in a more serious, super-sincere vein.

But then again, not everyone wants to put his faith in student power.

STUDENTS' ADMINISTRATIVE COUNCIL

THE CANDIDATES

By TOM FAULKNER

has been claimed that SAC, specifically the SAC President, should not take on "moral and political issues". This assumption is, of course, that some issues are political and some are not. We should "keep politics off the campus". It might seem that no politics are involved in building a residence, such as the Tartu College project for four hundred and seventy-four students which is being developed by SAC, and which opened in 1969. No politics, that is, unless you have to decide whether to spend money on Tartu or on some other project, or until you have to get the site leased by the City, or until you try to persuade the Canadian government to offer a tax rebate on construction material for SAC. Building a cheap, liveable residence for students is a service, but to offer SAC had to become political. SAC isn't building Tartu College for $10,000 per bed just because it's cheaper than other students, either. We're doing it because we believe that it is wrong for a university to build residences for $10,000 per bed and demand government subsidies. The job can be done for the same price with less cash, and, as citizens, we should be concerned about the government spending its tax money. We save in residence costs can go towards more residences or more housing for low-income families. We can't take our role as student and as citizen; they are the same. The point of the Tartu example is this: issues are moral and political; the quarrel is over controversial issues. Should SAC be going out and looking for controversial issues, should SAC spend its time with them, should SAC deal with them by debate but take no action? SAC has dealt only with controversial issues on which students have asked SAC to take action. Nor have the issues which press have found so attractive occurred, most, or even a large part of them, or my time. But when they arise, we cannot ignore them. By taking no action at all, SAC says "yes" to the status quo in the name of all of us. The status quo is not "apolitical" or free of "power"; it is heavily value-laden. We must actively to debate the way racist land-use policies, the way the Housing Service, the way the Ontario Government administers student aid, the way the University administers its buildings residences, or the way certain companies use the Placement Service to take no action, is to take a stand. The SAC's inaction would impose certain values on individuals by defaulting to the status quo.

In its actions this year, SAC has functioned as a responsible government. A responsible government debates issues that its constituents think are issues. It debates these issues openly. It then takes action in what it believes are the interests of the constituents. And then it holds itself answerable to the constituents should there be disagreement with its actions. Responsible and active student government at the University of Toronto must continue.

THE DOW ISSUE

Individual students have the right to work for the company they choose. Neither I nor the SAC has ever denied this. They are still free to do so. But, the student body has the right and responsibility to participate in the decision as to how the University's Placement Service should be used, just as it decides how the Housing Service should be used.

THE CAMPUS CENTRE

This campus needs a bar in the Campus Centre, and a co-educational facility such as a sauna bath and pool. The Campus Centre's restaurant must provide good meals at cheap prices. The Campus Centre provides much more for its four million dollar cost. It took student political action to get it this far, and will take political action to finish the job next year.

POSAP — STUDENT AID

Last year, 3,000 students and faculty went with SAC to Queen's Park to demand the improvement of POSAP. The result: now the province's funds has 3 1/2 times as much money for us. That's not all — we are continuing to pressure government until it further increases grants, and helps married and foreign students. Robarts provincial graduate fellowships must be opened up to those in engineering and the professional faculties. This takes solid research and a firm stand.

BLUE AND WHITE

Waterloo, Western, and our own University College have discovered the secrets of planning student-run exciting and dynamic social events. SAC has offered funds to entice big name performers and groups under the new, re-organized Blue and White. I believe this campus deserves talent, like Ray Charles at Western, not events which continually fall through.

By BILL CHARLTON

I fully support the present Students Administrative Council policies and activities concerning student residences, the campus centre, and other like activities.

However, I do not think SAC should seek the power to declare on the value of a moral position, let alone seek the power to legislate on the basis of that decision.

My reasoning for this is as follows: this is a University, and one of its central purposes is to grant the same respect and privileges to all persons here, regardless of their beliefs. That is to say, that whether or not consensus or majority opinion is with one, or against one, the same respect shall be officially shown regardless. In a University, there are no official truths. Truth may be found anywhere, and is, perhaps, usually found on both sides of a particular issue. To ask officialdom to declare, be it student or faculty or administrative officialdom, on behalf of a particular view, is to ask that this University's integrity be destroyed.

When left- or right-wing professors are fired from American Universities, we take notice, and realize that these are not honest institutions, because they have expelled the advocate of a particular view.

But the difference between expelling a professor and expelling Dow Chemical is only a difference of degree. To say that you will give Dow a soap-box from which to proclaim their position is quite noble, indeed, but it misses the point: you have still declared against them. Surely you should allow all employers to use the designated facilities, or none.

Many students here would like to see this University keep itself morally clean, and thus influence society at large. The purpose is surely good, but the method is disastrous. Firstly, we only keep this "house," or this University, clean, by keeping within it all positions, viewpoints, and opinions. Secondly, to legislate a moral view is to ape the methods of states, not to lead society. Surely we seek not imposition of our view, but a context within which all persons may hold their own views. That should surely be our "message" to society.

Mr. Faulkner has said that he had to act on the Dow problem, because people came to him. If 1,000 people come to the next meeting, and ask the Roman Catholic's position on abortion be declared immaterial, will the Council act? If so, what action will it take? Mr. Faulkner has said that responsible student government will act. Will they seek the power to remove the R.C. Church from certain places at this University? If not, why not?

To argue that my position leads to inaction is to misrepresent me. There is a distinct qualitative difference between seeking to put students on library committees, and seeking to declare a moral position, or its beholder, wrong. If you fail to see the difference, you fail to see the argument.

This is a University, wherein no idea or value shall be officially denounced or proclaimed. That is the issue. When Mr. Faulkner points to the other things he has done, he points to things with which we have no quarrel. He must show us that a University's officialdom should proclaim on behalf of a moral or political position. It seems to me that it should not, because Universities are built precisely for the purpose of exposing us to all argument, opinion, and values, and in the firm belief that this purpose is best served by paying equal respect to all positions, regardless of the numbers adhering to each.

I would ask you all to address very seriously to this question. Upon the decision as to this issue, depends the integrity of this institution. There shall be no posters, or balloons, or horns blown on my behalf. Nor have I caused to be posted any posters of any sort, though apparently someone has seen fit to post some puerile ones, from which I dissociate myself entirely.

And a Merry Christmas to each of you.

The job they want and how SAC has changed

by INGRID VABALIS and ANNE BOODY

New student activism has grown up since the days of all the right people saying that racial prejudice in the United States and South Africa was a bad thing, and that peace and universal accessibility to university were good things.

The questions are tough ones now. Like whether money should be given to help young Americans dodge the draft. Or whether an Engineer should be allowed to wander unmoistened into an office to look for a job making napalm — well, working for a company that does.

The questions are getting nasty now, and there aren't always nice liberal positions right in the middle of the fence.

And SAC has been coming down hard — or at least harder than it used to.

"SAC has a right and in fact the duty to take a stand on moral issues," says Tom Faulkner.

The people who used to get excited when SAC took a stand on nice moral issues now see SAC taking a stand on the nasty ones.

Oh, SAC has been taking moral stands for a long time now — back in 1964 was the first one. SAC voted to boycott South African products. But then who really wanted African oranges for breakfast.

Opposition came not because anybody thought South Africa was right but because they didn't really agree that SAC was right in taking action on a moral decision. The Student Medical Society, in those days the greatest sh-disturbers, supported SAC but said that future moral issues should be decided only by referendum.

Mary Brewin Lewis (SGS), past president, sees

SAC's declaration of independence from the board of governors in 1964 as a step forward in its effectiveness.

Dave Hunter (SGS), past vice-president, argues however that SAC's role began to change only when politically active students were attracted to SAC.

This happened in 1963-64 with Doug Ward as president and a high powered council under him. SAC became increasingly involved in political and social change.

"Then SAC's image began to change. No longer is it interested only in B&W, Remembrance Day ceremonies and other campus concerns."

Right now SAC is involved in an educational revolution in the form of the Rochdale and Tartu College experiments. The most vital part of these experiments is that they are student-planned, student-built and student-run.

SAC is directly responsible for the campus Centre, the housing commission and involvement in international questions.

SAC's metamorphosis has attracted mass media attention. Radio and television coverage of SAC's issues has heightened student awareness and involvement with these issues.

Now people are wondering what what would happen to these developments if Charlton were elected. Hunter commented it would mean a return to the 1950's.

book on the history of Canadian universities, which he has been writing for ten years.

He said he will also visit Australia for a couple of months to study universities there.

"Australian universities were started about the same time as Canadian ones, 125 years ago," Harris said. "But they haven't had the same French, American and Scottish influences that have effected the development of Canadian universities."

He said his graduate course on the development of Canadian higher education will not be offered next year, but his undergraduate course on university government will be taught by Dr. Edward Sheffield, also a professor of higher education.

He is the first principal of Innis College since its formation in 1963.

Windsor council protests senate interference in student newspaper

WINDSOR (CUP)—Windsor University student council last week told a senate committee to keep hands off the student newspaper.

The senate had earlier voiced disapproval of some of the content of the student newspaper, The Lance, and termed "the quality of language in The Lance during the last few months" a problem for the whole university.

The incident followed the Lance's publication of an analysis of university education in western society entitled The Student as Nigger.

The senate committee requested student council support. But the council voted down a senate motion for changes in the board of publications and a new code of ethics to replace that of The Canadian University Press.

The council said the issue was not the printing of obscenities in The Lance, but the paper's right to operate freely, subject only to approval by the student board of publications.

WEEKEND WRAP-UP

(as they say in the cumulative biz)

Well, as you've probably deciphered by now, Tom Watt's hockey Blues scored three converted touchdowns Friday night to sluther (new word; copyright RM) McGill Redmen 21-4. Blues' bombastic barrage set an SIHL record for most goals by one team in a single game. The old phonograph was held by last year's Varsity powerhouse — 19 against Guelph.

Redmen goalie, Bruce Glencross, was still experiencing the effects of 'Oh Canada' (standing at attention) when Gord Cunningham let go a lazy shot from the blueline to open the scoring at the eight second mark. By the end of the night, Glencross was perspiring more from red light heat than anything else. 'Flying' Bob McClelland hustled his way to four goals and five assists to twirl the baton for Blues' scoring parade (note interfac roundup influence).

BASKETBALL

South of the border in the land of nuts and neurosis, Varsity's basketballers weak-ended in Rochester and put on their best visiting display ever against American competition. On witch-infested Friday night, Blues lost to ever-competent Roberts Wesleyan by only 20 points, and followed up with a tough 91-79 loss to University of Rochester. In that game, Blues were down 15 points at the half, but came back to narrow the margin to 81-79 with just a minute remaining. Unfortunately atrocious avarice by Rochester ("Yes, Mr. Benny?") in the final sixty seconds waxed an ultimate 12 pt. margin. Mark White and Bruce Dempster, fast shaping up as all-star guards; scored a total of 67 points in the two games. Rookie Brian Shaw also impressed coach John McManus with an even dozen in each contest.

SCORING: At Roberts Wesleyan — Dempster 13, Shaw 12, White 9, Slater 8, Trafford 7, Faust 6, Kirby 2, Wilkie 2, McNaughton 2. At Rochester — Dempster 27, White 18, Shaw 12, Wilkie 7, Kirby 7, Slater 4, McNaughton 2, Trafford 2.

Elsewhere in the SIBL, McMaster came within an eyelash (not mine, sweetie) of upsetting perennial champs, Windsor Lancers, right in Windsor. With two and a half minutes left to go, Mac led 82-75. Final score: 90-82 for Windsor. The famed Lancer press chalks up another victim. Varsity Blues open their schedule Friday night in London against Western Mustangs.

WATER-POLO

The Herschorn Cup flotat floated its way to U of T for the fourth straight year last Saturday, as Blues' liquid polo types H2Oed McGill Redmen 11-6 at Hart House to win the total goals series 28-17. Chris McNaught led Varsity's watery warriors (cheap alliteration for cheap effect) with four markers while Al Pyle chukka-ed his way to a bathing-cap trick. (Note Varsity humour at its lowest level in years.) Gaye Stratton had two with Skip Bergman and Bruce Warburton waving in singletons.

WRESTLING

Varsity wrestling Blues opened their season in impressive fashion as they donned nifty blue grappling togs for their meet against Waterloo Warriors. Then Blues showed they were agile as well as fashionable by tomahawking Warriors 38-5. Steve Casselman, Rick Kesten, and Bob Glass sat their way to five point forfeit victories, while Jim Doner (10-1) and Vic Hefland (6-5) took decisions. Pins were found and sharply applied by aggressive Rod Vinter (3.55), smoothly-conditioned Bill Allison (4.52) and gridiron grappler Mike Wright (3.40). Ron Wilson fought to a draw (bang bang), while René St. Aubin lost a tough decision to his gigantic opponent.

BLUES HIT THE ROAD (OUCH)

Varsity's ice Blues encounter their first strong opposition of the season on Thursday as they travel to London to take on Western Mustangs. Coach Tom Watt is undecided on any line-up changes, except to say that Peter Speyer will move back to defense. Last Friday's fiasco against McGill was hardly the best tune-up in the world for a tough hockey game. And Mustangs always play well at home.

TOMORROW'S ELECTION

As a relatively unbiased sportsie, it is inconceivable to me how any one could possibly vote against Tom Faulkner in tomorrow's election. Certainly Charlton has raised a somewhat valid debating point concerning the "Dow-row", but to turn out Faulkner on only that one issue, and allow it to negate the tremendously impressive job he's done otherwise as SAC President, strikes me as incredible folly. During Faulkner's tenure, the university administration and faculty at long last have started to pay rapt attention to student opinion. We are now being considered as more than ineffectual underlings.

Dow or no Dow, a vote for Charlton would send the position of students at this university back to a dark past where discussion is rampant but no decisions are made. Simcoe Hall types are not influenced by discussion but by pressure put on them by firm student decisions.

As a Xmas goodie, here's a re-run of Dave Isaac's scintillating pic taken at last week's Oldtimer game. This time, hopefully, our dear printers will see fit to leave in some rather important details which they hocked out previously — like the net and the puck.

Faulkner returned to office by 800-vote majority

By PAUL MACRAE

Tom Faulkner yesterday retained his position as president of the Students Administrative Council by a slim margin of 803 votes over Bill Charlton.

Final vote was 5,084 for Faulkner to 4,281 for Charlton. About 50 per cent of the 19,000 eligible voters cast ballots.

"I feel very good, very good indeed," said Faulkner (SGS) after the results were announced. For once he seemed at a loss for words, and had even had "two small glasses" of champagne. Faulkner doesn't ordinarily drink.

"From here on I guess we'll continue to do what we've been doing all along—serving the interests of students."

"The students have chosen—they want a government which takes an active stand on issues we can deal with."

Did he think he had obtained a mandate for action? "I don't really believe in the mandate system," he replied. "Mandates mean if you don't have a specific direction you can't do anything."

Charlton (II Law) said he was "very pleased" by the results of the election.

"It was an amazing turnout, and an amazing turnout for us," he said. What did the election mean? "It's impossible to say." He said there was no need for a recount.

"We lost at UC, Scarborough and Sidney Smith," he said. "Those three alone made up the 800 votes."

"Maybe I'll try again, there's no telling."

Charlton spent a good part of his evening at the Kappa Alpha Society, a private school graduates fraternity. He was there for an hour after the results were announced, then went home to study for a final test today.

At 9 p.m. Charlton came into the ballot-counting room in University College.

At that time Faulkner was about 1,000 votes ahead.

"Well, it looks like Tom is going to win," he said with strained joviality. Why? "He got more votes."

Jokes about a possible miscount of 1,000 votes, smiles and a thumbs-up sign as he left after what must have been a very disappointing 15 minutes.

Faulkner held court most of the evening in the SAC office with friends. He was pale and shaky but perked up when the results from Dentistry came in. The vote was close—90-80 for Charlton. Faulkner expected to do worse.

"What's a landslide, Tom?" someone asked.

"Fifty-one per cent." Everybody laughed.

As the pizzas, Brio, Pepsi and Wilson Cola disappeared, and as the margin of victory widened, someone went out for champagne. Before the final totals were announced the group climbed into cars and went to the victory party which might have been a wake.

As returns from the 23 ballot boxes poured in, several trends in voting emerged.

Engineering was pro-Charlton three to one and law two to one. The rest of the faculties were split down the middle except POTS solidly Faulkner.

Victoria College, Scarborough, Erindale and University College were solidly behind Faulkner, Trinity solidly for Charlton. St. Michael's was close for Faulkner, and Charlton took New College by six votes.

But the election may be a warning of storm clouds ahead for the Students Administrative Council.

Bob Miller, pharmacy SAC representative, said the election results would probably increase the feeling within professional faculties that "we're not getting anything out of SAC."

Earlier yesterday Miller said his faculty might seriously consider withdrawing from SAC "if its members continue to go off on their left-wing tangents."

Bob Bossin (III Innis), SAC education commissioner, said the election had proven "terrifically valuable."

"People now realize that SAC has power and that students have power and were concerned enough about it to want to change presidents."

"They also voted that they want to keep it that way. The issues have been brought out and I have no qualms about going ahead."

"I'm ecstatic," he added thoughtfully.

Joseph De Pazza, president of the Graduate Students Union, said he hoped Faulkner would not see his margin of victory as a mandate for SAC to "encroach on the rights of the individuals to make moral decisions."

"Faulkner expected a landslide."

At 1 am this morning Mr. De Pazza phoned The Varsity (see De Pazza page 3)

"You must think I'm crazy," said Faulkner, as he put in time waiting for election results at the SAC office.

Pickers picket picketers on Dow issue

By ANNE BOODY

Peaceful anti-war picketers and 175 indignant but jovial engineers met Wednesday at the Placement Service, and shouted at each other for a while.

The 85 picketers were protesting an advisory board's decision to allow Dow Chemical of Canada recruiters back on campus.

The board, made up of students, alumni and faculty, met last weekend but could not come to a clear consensus on whether Dow should be allowed back.

"There was not a great enough majority to keep Dow away," said Registrar Robin Ross Monday.

The board decided not to impose any restrictions at present and therefore the administration asked Dow back.

This defeated the purpose of the two faculty members and five students on the board who were against Dow's return, claimed the demonstrators.

However, Chandler Davis, a faculty member who protested, said if it were only a question of the administration having acted wrongly, he would not have been at the demonstration. "I was there because I am against students taking jobs with companies making war weapons," he said. "There were many others that felt the same."

Following a bull session at University College the group filed over to the Placement Service on Wilcocks St. at 1 p.m.

But the engineers were there to greet them. They jeered, hissed and mocked the protesters as they arrived. "There goes Goldilocks but where are the three bears?" shouted one as David Hembler, an organizer of the march, went by. Hembler is a teaching fellow in English.

"There they are!" replied another as three long-haired marchers followed behind him.

At one point the situation nearly erupted into an ugly scene. Engineers swarmed onto the sidewalk which had been cleared by police for the marchers. Philosophy Professor David Gauthier, one of the protesters, was jostled. But the blow of a Brute Force Committee whistle brought back relative order.

None of the 22 engineers being interviewed by Dow was barred entrance.

Trelevan "new" SAC head

By INGRID VABALIS
and SUE CARTER

There's a new SAC president loose on campus as of Wednesday night. John Trelevan (SGS), former vice-president, announced his engagement and delivered his inaugural address.

In his first two minutes in office, Trelevan said he had already surpassed Tom Faulkner, and denounced him for not living up to SAC presidential traditions.

Trelevan's fiancée is Beth Terleski, of Lethbridge, Alta. Three previous presidents have become engaged during their tenures and later married. "I can't even get a date" muttered Faulkner from the sidelines.

Trelevan will hold office for one month. This long tenure is due to the fact that a new president has to take an oath of office before SAC and the next SAC meeting won't be until Jan. 10.

President Trelevan valiantly promised to surpass everything Faulkner has done before this date.

The meeting was grim.

At 10 o'clock there was a motion to adopt Central European Time. "It looks like midnight to me," ruled the speaker. "I think SAC is taking unreasonable power" shouted meek, mild Bob Bossin. He was overruled and it became midnight.

Now Faulkner's resignation took effect and SAC mourned its illustrious leader, presenting him with a silver beer mug.

Joe Merber lacrimoniously eulogized for the departing Faulkner and Santa Claus was there.

In case anybody's interested (the SAC members weren't) there were a few serious moments.

The Canadian Union of students resolution on student-centred teaching was passed. The resolution criticized the existing system of education as ignoring the student and proposed experimentation in setting up new models of teaching.

In conjunction with this, SAC endorsed the establishment of a committee to recommend a student-centred educational program for Tartu College.

The other serious item discussed was a proposal to establish a student co-operative bookstore on campus. This step will be taken only if negotiations with the present bookstore do not bring the 10-per-cent discount on all textbooks demanded by SAC.

At 10:30 p.m. (12:30 a.m. Central European time) the elusive quorum vanished and the meeting adjourned.

Little student interest in Victoria council open meeting

The Victoria College Union Council held an open meeting Wednesday to discuss the "duties, purposes and responsibilities" of the VCUC.

Fewer than 50 students were concerned enough to show up.

Since 100 students are required for a quorum under the VCUC constitution, president Glenn Brownlee (IV Vic) dispensed with the formal discussion and threw the meeting open to general debate.

An unannounced but obvious purpose of the meeting was to discover how Vic students feel about having their council discuss moral issues.

Brownlee said later, "The fact that there was no blow-up over moral issues shows there may be a consensus at Vic on this matter." He added that he would continue to lead the VCUC into discussions on questions of morality.

Not all the opinions rattling around the sparsely-populated lecture hall supported Brownlee. Several students felt the council should confine itself to university affairs. VCUC member David Fraser (II Vic) said the university should make moral decisions but it should not exceed its jurisdiction.

It was pointed out that the recently amended constitution makes no mention of purposes. The council can consider anything it wishes to. There are no constitutional limitations.

David Brown (I Vic) said he did not think the council had been trying to find out what the students wanted. He suggested there may be a grass roots consensus.

The aftermath

Faulkner ...

By SUE HELWIG

The Tom Faulkner vigil bubbled over into a victory spirit last night in the SAC office as the votes piled up towards the final 800 vote lead.

By the time Bill Charlton came to congratulate Tom at 9:15, the early tensions had long been dissolved as campaigners played with yo-yos, smoked eight-inch cigars and sipped champagne.

Radio Varsity announcers contributed to the spirit of the election by giving a combination of serious and mock-serious attempts at election analysis.

"This is a Radio Varsity Projection on the engineering vote," the announcer declared at 8:30 when the outcome was still in question.

"Charlton — 700 votes, Faulkner 300," the voice continued. "Now don't take this as gospel truth. And on to the Rolling Stones."

Jennifer Penney, SAC rep from UC, bounced in to say that the percentage of voters to turn out at that college was the highest in recent memory.

"Does that ever destroy the legend around here," Tom commented. (UC has a reputation for being the most apathetic among colleges at elections.)

When supporters felt secure that Tom had won the election, three SAC reps appeared with the victory lubricant: three 52-ounce bottles of champagne.

... Charlton

By BRIAN CRUCHLEY

A little over two weeks ago, nobody on campus would have associated Bill Charlton with SAC politics.

The jovial, heavy-set law student had no experience in the SAC political arena and yet yesterday he polled 46 per cent of the votes in a contest with the most experienced, best-respected student politician on this campus.

During his short campaign, a question that repeatedly arose was whether Charlton could handle both the job of SAC president and his law studies.

This question can be answered indirectly by his present involvement in activities beyond his law course.

It was revealed last night that Charlton teaches a History of Political Thought course at York University and lectures a political science course at Scarborough College. It is also rumored that he works for a Toronto law firm.

In addition to holding a donship at New College, he tutors political science on the main campus and edits the law newspaper, The Advocate.

Bill Charlton lost an election but woke a lot of students up to what SAC is doing. He helped generate the most attention the Students Administrative Council has enjoyed in at least three years.

And he provided the best entertainment on campus doing it.

Opinions vary on future protest action

stole the show.

"Dow makes your false teeth and the rims for your glasses. It makes plastic coffee cups and coffee burns tongues. If you wear nylon underwear, Dow probably had a hand in it," he shouted jovially.

Despite the frolicking, many engineers showed a concern over the issue of Dow's use of the placement centre.

"Eighty per cent of the people the centre serves are engineers," said Brian Levitt (III APSC). "Let it be controlled by those it serves."

Bob MacCallum (III APSC), vice president of the engineering society, emphasized he did not support the demonstration, but he did not deny the demonstrators their right to protest. "And therefore they should not deny us the right to use our placement centre."

After two hours of fruitless marching the protesters and a sprinkling of the engineers shifted to Sincce Hall. But they did not stay long. Paul Hoch, a post-doctorate fellow, suggested they move on to University College to draw up more effective means of protesting.

"Some of us want to end the war in Vietnam, while others are after student power," said Hoch. "We have to come to grips with one major issue and influence the campus to work with us. Through ineffective means we will only draw further hostility."

Carl Gilbert (SGS) proposed a motion to break down all communications on campus and to use force if necessary. He was hissed.

"All protesters have been invited to a convention at Hart House at the end of the month to discuss effective means of achieving our aims," said Marlie Ritchie (II Vic).

The protestors decided not to take any further action until January. "By then we should be able to draw up hundreds or even thousands of students to protest with us when companies come to recruit full-time employees," said Hembien.

DePazza cautious on Faulkner victory

to release a GSU statement claiming the election is "completely invalid" due to a supposedly misleading SAC advertisement in Wednesday's paper.

Some graduate students erroneously believed they couldn't vote because through an administrative error their ATL cards were not stamped 'SAC-CUS', the GSU statement claimed.

In his own personal statement to the Varsity, DePazza accused The Varsity, SAC, and Faulkner in particular of contributing to the supposed disenfranchisement of graduate and professional students.

"Mr. Faulkner certainly had much to gain by attempting to exclude graduate students from the polls," he said.

the sac election

Wednesday night three dozen people gathered in Hort House music room to carry on SAC work. The number was too small for a quorum and, thus, they couldn't do anything but talk.

About the same time about 400 of their constituents sat down in the Great Hall singing Christmas carols at the annual Christmas Tree.

SAC members were involved in a long procedural hassle on recall machinery — all on the behalf of students, while the 400 totally enjoyed themselves singing.

That's not to say that SAC is irrelevant — it isn't by any means — or that the Christmas Tree was totally successful — it had some very awkward moments, especially when Sonto came in.

The fact is that such contrasts will be with us regardless of yesterday's presidential election.

Some people said it was good to have the election to inform people about all the good things SAC is doing.

It is doubtful that many people were really informed though — elections simplify issues; they don't explain them. And the main issue in this election was clouded by emotionalism.

The large turnout was the result of that emotionalism, not a sign that the campus had become aware that SAC's activities are for people to get involved in.

Public discussions have been too long hoarded by the lunatic right vs the left with its various groups of various degrees of sense.

Few will consider the election result a mandate for SAC to act on all controversial issues. People who voted for Faulkner had various reasons including the full-time dedicated president reason.

However, since Faulkner was not dumped, it is likely that SAC will act on moral issues and that means we'll have an interesting term to come back to in '68. It would have been a shame to follow this term with its many controversial issues with one in which there are no issues to get angry about and take sides on and write letters about.

The spring SAC election will depend more than usual on what SAC actually does. In the past SAC members have often been chosen on non-political platforms. Issues and policies will become important simply because the election has allowed SAC to remain more than a service-station council.

placement service

Please read the first letter before this.

We were much too hard on Mr. Ross in Wednesday's paper when we questioned his actions in last weekend's premier meeting of the Placement Service advisory committee.

Mr. Ross has always been unusually sympathetic to student demands — even over the granite conservatism so evident at Simcoe Hall.

At the meeting, the second motion (not the first which split 7-6) led to a long and some say bitter, others say "vigorous and frank" discussion on whether certain companies should be bonned from the campus Placement Service.

This is the vote we thought may have ended in a 7-7 division, or "evenly divided" as J. H. Sword put it, but evidently it never came to a vote. When members found that the discussion was producing no clear majority division, they tabled the motion.

Committee decisions are being made on a near-consensus basis so that if opinions are polarized in such a way, the vote is postponed pending more discussion. The three-hour meeting must have worn the members down and they passed a motion calling for operation as usual until otherwise notified. This received only two nay votes.

The motion was necessary to the administration because there was a Dow man asking for permission to come back.

And that brings us back to what we said Wednesday. It is unlikely that the committee will have the power to ban large companies from the Placement Service, despite what Mr. Ross says about committee decisions being considered by Simcoe Hall. The university is financed to supply trained personnel to man Ontario's expanding industries.

In subsequent meetings the SAC contingent won't be as unified as it was last weekend. The five students, all SAC members, obviously respected SAC's council order to oppose war material manufacturers recruiting on campus. But these students are on the committee temporarily.

There was no time to consider applications from others.

In the future, SAC will appoint non-members to the committee and they are much less likely to feel bound by the council's vote.

robin ross replies

Sir:
I refer to your editorial on the Placement Committee in the 13th December issue of The Varsity. Your editorial inferred that I voted on the motion brought forward by Professor Conacher and thereby tied the vote. This is untrue. The vote was divided by seven votes to six in the committee, as reported in the news items of page 1 of the issue of The Varsity which included your editorial.

When the motion was defeated by the majority of one vote, the committee argued that this meant that for all practical purposes they were evenly divided on the important issue brought forward for discussion in the motion. They also agreed that in view of such a division of opinion they were in no position at present to give advice on a matter of such broad importance to all sections of the university community, and indeed to the community outside the university.

2) As you say, the committee is an advisory body. Its terms of reference, accepted by all members when they agreed to join the committee, are that it will "advise the Director of the Placement Service on the general functions and operations of that service". This is consistent with the view of the Students' Administrative Council, as expressed in their resolution, that an advisory body should be established, and also with the recommendations of a special Presidential Advisory Committee on the Placement Service, which reported four weeks ago. The President of the SAC was a member of that Presidential Committee.

You have inferred that its advisory function means that the views of the committee will have no effect upon the decision made concerning the Placement Service. This is simply untrue.

3) The committee will meet again on the 20th December to consider further the issue brought forward in Professor Conacher's motion.

Robin Ross,
Vice-President and Registrar

lax emergency care

Sir:
At 2:00 a.m. December, one of the girls in our residence was taken seriously ill. Since this is a co-op residence with no attached medical staff, we phoned the after hours emergency service which put us in touch with the police and an ambulance. When we arrived at the emergency ward at Western Hospital, she was unconscious. After fifteen minutes she still hadn't been examined by a doctor or nurse. She was not examined until a quarter to five.

Under the circumstances — she had taken one pill according to a prescription given by her family doctor and was obviously having a serious reaction — even after considering that the night shift on emergency is reputedly the worst in the whole hospital; there were no excuses that could be made for that type of treatment. She could have very easily have become unconscious during the period from the time she was admitted until we found we could see her. No one in a position to recognize the symptoms or treat her in any way performed any exhaustive examination — the conclusion, before she was discharged, was that the drug should be discontinued.

Beyond insinuations from the police that she was drunk and from the examining doctor that she had taken an overdose, considering that the situation was considered serious by three student nurses and that the girl was semi-conscious semi-coherent and secondarily that other students in the house had independently had very similar symptoms (which would suggest even to the layman a combination of circumstances) — all of which were told to the nurse at admission; the treatment was practically non-existent. We are, with considerable understatement, disgusted and quite upset.

Marg McWhirter, II Premed and was taken to the Toronto General Hospital where the residents in charge considered the matter sufficiently serious that the examination was exhaustive and immediate.

The contrast in the treatment at the two hospitals was overwhelming.

interesting comparison

Sir:
A situation rather analogous to the Dow Chemical issue arose last year at this University and has been completely overlooked by this year's SAC and Mr. Faulkner. We are referring to UC Principal LePan's refusal to allow the use of UC facilities to the UC Lit. and Ath. Society during last year's Psychedelia Festival. This refusal was based on LePan's belief that Timothy Leary was dangerous in some way or other to the University Community and that innocent students must be protected. His decision brought on a heated debate at the SAC which passed a motion condemning LePan's action and SAC President Tom Faulkner sent the following telegram to University President Claude Bissell on vacation in the Bahamas:

"The SAC believes that the essence of education is a responsible presentation of ideas. If the presentation is incomplete it can only be labelled irresponsible. The SAC believes that it is contrary to the nature of a University that academic freedom should be limited within one part of our University by an administrative decision." (Varsity, Feb. 10, 1967)

The issue brought other comments from campus leaders: Alan Kamin, co-Chairman of the Festival said that the refusal to LePan to allow Leary use of UC's facilities was "... an insult to the integrity and the ability of students to come to grips with an issue." (Varsity, Feb. 10, 1967). Ernie Lightman, a UC SAC rep said that "... denial of facilities constituted an infringement of free speech on campus and cannot be tolerated." "... any duly constituted government should be able to use the campus facilities and not be subject to the arbitrary whims of any members of the University Administration." (Varsity, Feb. 17, 1967)

It seems to us that the SAC has now switched places with the administration and believes that it has the right to impose its arbitrary whims on the administration and indeed on all the students at this university. No doubt the SAC is as sincere in its beliefs that Dow is evil because it makes napalm as Mr LePan was in believing that Timothy Leary was evil because he advocated LSD. But since Tom Faulkner and the rest of the SAC members hold themselves as the be all and end all on moral judgments I guess they have the right to decide who uses campus facilities that they deny the administration.

THE SCHIZOPHRENIC DILEMMA

By GRAHAM FRASER

Somehow, I had thought that 1967 would be a tedious anti-climax. Sitting grimly over a drink on New Year's Eve 1966, looking at the fireworks exploding from Queen's Park, I winced—and thought that most of this year's Centennial Spirit would be, for me, at least, grinning and bearing the Xmas-Eaton's-style coloured lights on the front of Queen's Park, and waiting until Bobby Gimby submerged to the bubbly-coy supper-music stunts he had been playing before he discovered Ca-Na-Da.

But, Charles de Gaulle, Rene Levesque, Robert Stanfield, Daniel Johnson, Laurendeau & Dunton, and now Lester Pearson have made 1967 anything but anti-climatic. The problem—perennial and cliché-ridden to the point of tiresomeness—is immediate and very very real.

It is an immediacy that makes pundit-prose irrelevant and misleading, and, in fact, contribute to the state of national schizophrenia that seems to be chronic in Canada.

(We chose the phrase "The Schizophrenic Dilemma" carefully. Schizophrenia is "a form of mental disease in which the personality is disintegrated and detached from its environment" (Shorter Oxford), and involves an inability to relate or define the self in terms of reality).

This kind of unawareness of the fact that there are several viable options open for Canada—and Quebec—has left most of us in a haze of either ruffled indignation or frenetic unease at the developments that French Canada has gone through in the past six years.

THE UNHELPFUL PRESS

To a great extent, the politicians and the press have been in a kind of misguided collusion over the problem. A recent, and quite shocking — example was the press coverage of the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference. On the Monday of the conference, the Telegram ran a banner headline to the effect that the conference was on the point of collapse, and that Johnson was about to walk out. This was ridiculous. A complete fallacy. The conference was, by all reasonable criteria, (the limited criteria that one must use to apply to a meeting of provincial premiers) a success. It was not the fiasco that many observers were pessimistically predicting, and was never, at any point, for any reason, on the point of collapse.

Similarly, had Daniel Johnson taken so much as one of the positions that Premier Bennett of British Columbia has recently, the furor would have been unprecedented. Aside from his consistently unco-operative, even threatening statements about the federal government, Bennett did not have a B.C. pavillion built at Expo, did not participate in the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference, and stayed away from the Federal-Provincial Conference on Housing, this past week. There has been little or no press comment on this.

THE EXCEPTIONS

Nonetheless, there have certainly been exceptions to the traditional suspicion with which the English-Canadian papers have viewed developments in Quebec.

Scott Young, in the Globe and Mail, has perhaps been the most consistently perceptive journalist writing in the daily press. His article which appeared on Thanksgiving Monday 1964, after the Queen's visit to Quebec City, was a deeply moving piece which gripped the human frustration and resentment that animates so much of the separatist passion, and conveyed it with sympathy and compassion.

Similarly, and more recently, The Montreal Star and The Toronto Star have been presenting reasoned and reasonable editorials that have attempted to seriously pose the necessity for English-Canada to face its problems of nationality.

To a considerable extent, that is what the Laurendeau-Dunton Report should be interpreted as: a manifesto to us. If we cannot learn to accomodate "separateness," we shall have to learn to accustom ourselves to separation.

EX-SEPARATIST

A few months ago, I might have opted for separatism as the only logical hope for French-Canada. Quebec is the homeland for a nation—whose conquerors have done little to extend that homeland beyond the Ottawa River. The alternative seemed to me pretty clear: some definition of separateness for Quebec.

It's really a pretty appealing idea for anyone with a respect and affection for Quebec. The irrelevance of Quebec literature, music, film, television, journalism, labour unions, education and social problems to the rest of us makes it very easy for anyone who comes to learn something about Quebec society to sympathize with the desire to make that nation a state.

Much of that I still feel. I have little or no feeling that separatism in itself would be a bad thing.

However, on one point, I have gone through a considerable change of heart. I now feel that separatism as it now seems it would be would a victory for the more reactionary and antilibertarian elements in Quebec society. The elements of authoritarianism in current Quebec nationalism seem to be unmistakable, and ring of statist corporatism.

This is something that Pierre Trudeau has been saying for years, to the annoyance of most French-Canadian intellectuals.

DEFER, WE HOPE

To present, hopefully, a deeper kind of analysis of the Canadian dilemma, we present a series of different looks at men who have spoken out on the Canadian Dilemma. The titles which they used are revealing titles like: The Search For Identity, and Unfinished Business.

How important these men are, and to what extent they have been able to solve, if only for themselves, the schizophrenic dilemma, is a moot point. But things will change. If nothing else, 1967 will have changed the leadership of both federal parties.

... nal proprietorships and partnerships— not if the problem is urgent . . . This does not mean that we have to accept the international corporation on its own terms or that we must adapt our educational system and orient our social and cultural environment so we many become the better "socialized" to the world of big business. It does mean that we cannot refuse to recognize the facts of life and face the Western World as it has evolved. We do not live in the nineteenth century and we cannot go back to it. Nor can we search for a dream world which will replace the corporate civilization overnight.

Lurking beneath these lines, and many others in Mr. Kierans' disappointing book, is just that "search for a dream world", but that search seems to be disciplined neither by a philosophical mind, nor surprisingly by the abrasive facts of every-day political life. He seems unable to see a Canadian identity today, and he has not presented us with a consistent and viable pattern for the future.

Le fédéralisme et la société canadienne-française, Pierre Elliot Trudeau, Collection Constables, Volume 10, éditions HMH, Montréal, 1967, 227 pages.

The reader should search for no other basis for my thought than that of opposing accepted ideas."

Pierre Elliot Trudeau's cocky remark in his foreword to a collection of previously published essays, may seem superficial. But the cockiness is, I think, only the bubbling surface of an ordered and energetic mind addressing itself to our most vexing national problems. For example, in an essay called: "The separatists, the Counter-revolutionaries"; he says:

"In 1960 . . . an entire generation was finally free (from Duplessis' oppression) to apply all its creative energies to putting its retarded province in step with its planet. All that was required was audacity, intelligence, and work. Alas! liberty seems to have been too heady a liquor to be poured into French Canadian youth of 1960. Having scarcely tasted it they felt the need to scurry after some more reassuring milk, some new dogma. They condemned my generation for failing to propose any "doctrine" — we who had spent the power of our youth in trying to demolish the idea of servile doctrines — and hid themselves in the breast of their mother, the sanctified Nation."

The separatists are merely replacing one form of oppression with another, rejecting any debate with an appeal to chauvinism and "national interest", the same appeals that led Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, et al. to absolute power. Thus, they stifle the true revolution that is, the struggle for individual liberties in the face of capital, tradition, the the church, the nation, and even the state.

Believing, of course, in the necessity of freedom of speech to achieve the true revolution, Trudeau presents documentation from separatist sources advocating abolition of individual freedoms. From the journal, Parti Pris, for example, he cites a "refusal to engage in dialogue" or again, "there is a necessity for 'totalitarianism'". And he quotes Jean-Marc Lévesque, an editorial writer for Le Devoir, as saying, "French parents must be forbidden to enjoin their children in English establishments in Quebec." Trudeau's scorn for this type of thinking is unlimited.

Pollution of mass media

"Thus they wish to abolish liberty and impose the dictatorship of their minority. They are in calm possession of the truth, and so others have only to follow. And when things don't move fast enough, they have recourse to illegality and violence. In public they call themselves persecuted. Look at them, the poor little things! They fill the editorial pages of our newspapers, they pollute the CBC and the Film Board, they push with all their weight (?) in the mass media, and yet they find unjust the place which is given them in this society."

This is the cocky Trudeau, delighted with the nervous vitality and ingenuity of his thought and expression, but also angered and frustrated by the totalitarian tendencies of Quebec youth. This article is successful only in part because of its shock value; its main impact results from Trudeau's accuracy and logical force.

Quebec and the Constitution

A more disciplined expression of his abilities emerges from a serious paper, "Le Québec et le problème constitutionnel", prepared for the Quebec Legislative Committee on the Constitution in 1965. Indeed, I feel that it will remain, regardless of whether or not our country splits, one of the most significant documents on this subject.

Developed from a brief discussion of the nature of constitutions and societies, the paper considers the economic, social and cultural objectives of the province of Quebec, and concludes that all of these are best served within Canada under a federal system.

The constitution of a democratic country should be designed to permit the growth and development of all values considered important by the members of the society. At the same time it should be seen as the shield of the poor against the arbitrary intervention of political power. Those who would amend our constitution should be aware that those people most susceptible to being harmed by amendment are those who live on the economic fringe of existence, and who are incapable of fortifying themselves against economic upheavals wrought even inadvertently by constitutional change.

From these two principles, Trudeau develops some ideas on the relationships among linguistic geographic and cultural forces operating on the province of Quebec, emphasizing that the tens of thousands of French Canadians who have emigrated to New England are proof that if economically pressed too hard, people will overcome linguistic or cultural inertia.

(In a comparative examination, he notes that Cuba was able to rebuke the United States for nationalistic reasons only because Russia provided subsidies of $300 million per year. From this illustration, he confidently concludes, "In the case of Quebec, nothing indicates that a friendly country would be prepared to pour $300 millions a year on us."... Little did he know...!)

It goes without saying (Mr. Lévesque notwithstanding) that Quebec's economic goals are best served within a federal state of Canada, and since social goals (welfare measures which increase the possibility of so-called "equal opportunity") depend on the strength of an economy to support welfare they too are best served within Canada. Furthermore, since the present Canadian constitution puts jurisdiction for social welfare in provincial hands, each province can work out programs best suited to the "peculiar genius" of its population.

Cultural goals

Trudeau's arguments about cultural goals are more significant. He notes that the technology which creates abundance and material happiness presupposes a mass undifferentiated from consumers, and thus tends to minimize the values by which the human person acquires and retains his own identity, values which I group here under the vague term "cultural". The political order established by the state must fight against this depersonalization in pursuing cultural objectives.

Aware of the hazards and pitfalls of "state culture" from sculpture to regulation of package labelling, he pleads for an "open culture" which shares the long-term goals of the human race rather than "cultural protectionism" which, he feels, will weaken a culture.

He deplores the concept of "the national state of French Canadians", seeing it tend toward intolerance (vide Israel). This thinking he adds, could be applied to the detriment of French Canadians in the nine other provinces, and therefore in the federal government as well. "Thus, the idea of a national state is inadmissible in theory and in practice to anyone who does not wish to see French Canadians retire from the Canadian scene and fold themselves up exclusively in Quebec". And, of course, the economic and social goals of the province cannot be gained (the deGaulle option excluded) if the province decides to withdraw.

This is the only point in the paper with which I would seriously disagree. While we cannot accept the idea of an "ethnic" state, be it composed of Jews or Aryans, we know, historically at least, that linguistic uniformity has been a characteristic of almost every stable nation. Indeed, our concept of "nation" (in English or French) has been conditioned even if unconsciously, by the idea of a common language. Historically, I doubt that language has ever been a major nationalistic force, whereas recently, in an age when communications between nations have mushroomed regardless of language, a strange linguistic mystique has grown up in countries like Belgium, India and Canada. I suspect that this fight for language preservation is merely a substitute for other unstable "national feelings", and perhaps such national feelings can be constructive. Certainly there is no evidence that linguistic uniformity (as opposed to ethnic uniformity) leads to intolerance. (The Germans do not detest the British because they speak a different language.) Therefore, I think it might be fruitful to explore the areas in which the "national state of French-Canadians" could be acceptable within a confederation. Mr. Johnson was probably trying to formulate something along these lines at the recent Toronto conference in his references to the "group of ten" and the "group of two".

Trudeau argues convincingly against a categorical "two nation theory", which would split Canada's international voice and thus weaken it. He also objects to "special status" fearing that it would tend to turn Quebec on itself, rather than force it to face the cultural exchanges and confrontation which would enlarge its sympathies. He acknowledges Quebec's "specialness" as a province with 84% of its population French-speaking, but sees (wrongly in part, I think) within Canadian federalism of the sort he has suggested an ideal medium for its unique expression.

He might have added that while confederation somehow made possible the gross oppression under which Quebec suffered for years, it has also been a basis for the tremendous flowering we have seen in that province in the last ten years.

If all this is very attractive to the English-speaking Canadian, we should keep in mind that our performance in the area of tolerance of our partners in Confederation to date has been far less impressive than theirs. Mr. Trudeau simply has the courage to present to Quebecers the argument that the bigotry of English-speaking Canada in the past is no justification for similar "counter-revolutionary" behavior on the part of French-Canadians in the future.

Constitutional changes

Trudeau's recommendations for constitutional change are modest. First, a declaration of individual liberties, putting French and English on an equal footing before the law; second, residual powers to the provinces; third, "we should free the constitution of certain imperial phraseology"; fourth, a tribunal for conflicts of federal provincial jurisdiction; and fifth, senate reform to represent the provincial entities more directly.

In all, this is an impressive performance. It has provoked a good measure of invective from chauvinistic French-Canadians who consider Trudeau a sell-out and a traitor to the cause, but to my knowledge, little concrete rebuttal. Indeed, Mr. Johnson's stand at the Confederation of Tomorrow Conference, when freed of the necessary political posturing, is similar to Trudeau's. And Mr. Robarts' call for "special status for all" possibly emerged from this school of thought.

The other essays in Trudeau's book are equally stimulating, particularly when the author turns with obvious relish to treating "Of certain obstacles to democracy in Quebec" or "The new treason of the clerics".

Needless to say, his frequent attacks on French-Canadian institutions have rendered his political life somewhat tenuous. His unorthodox behavior, such as turning from battling the then strong federal government to joining Pearson (a man he had frequently ridiculed), has stripped him completely of political support from Quebecers". Le Droit a Hull newspaper, has called him "the slave of the Pearson Government", a rather dubious joke, since Mr. Trudeau would probably make a poor slave.

FARIBAUT'S RUFFLED CONSERVATISM

By BOB RAE

FRASER'S BALANCED OPTIMISM

By G. STEINSKY

Now that Centennial year with Expo and similar galas is slowly fading into the stuff of memories, the friendly people at the Centennial commission are assuring us that we have finally discovered that we are Canadians: the second hundred years is going to be a kind of nationalist nirvana. But—with the problems posed by people like René Levesque and his Quebec entourage, or Premiers Robarts and Bennett with their federal-provincial squabbles, the achievement of stability in the Canadian personality seems to take on hopeless dimensions.

However, that is to see Canada solely as a political entity: Tom Thomson saw Canada in the landscape; Stephen Leacock recognized the nation in the people. There is no ultimate analysis of that amorphous mystique called Canadian nationalism.

In this context one can view a recent contribution to the cult of Canada, Blair Fraser's The Search for Identity: Canada Post-war to Present. Mr. Fraser is a well-known Canadian journalist, highly knowledgeable about parliaments and parliamentarians and their relationship to the rest of the country. Postwar Canadian developments of which he writes lie within his own experience. His book falls into that limbo between journalism and history; the events he discusses are still real to living generations, but are gradually being seen in terms of the immediate rather than as actual present in themselves.

All in all, his stance of distanced immediacy makes for a highly interesting book. One cannot help joining Fraser in wondering "just why the great pipeline debate of 1956 was the crisis in Canadian parliamentary history, that in fact it was." Even the leader of the opposition had said that "All Canadians want this line built." With knowledge of the subsequent Liberal defeat, acquaintance with the personalities, sensitivity to the then-new "unique impact of television on the electorate," the author-analyst concludes that the "pipeline debate became a symbol of the pattern of behaviour that the (Liberal) Government had established . . . For better or worse the powers that were were accepted as ordained of God." Reinforcing this rational statement one finds an amusing, revealing statement by C.D. Howe to him after the Conservative victory. Before the pipeline fiasco Howe had suggested that both he and St. Laurent retire:

I guess he'd decided he was going to live forever, and everything was going to go on as it was going . . . — and look what happened.

Such juxtaposition of cool thought and warm anecdote recur to delight and instruct the reader.

However, do thoughtful comments, journalistic documentation, and personal memories build up to a definition of Canadian identity? As the messy reality of more immediate years defies the imposition of a pattern, the author's own view of "factors" that contributed to or impeded the idea of Canada, grows hazier. Fraser sees World War II and the period immediately following as the making of Canada from colony to nation. Canada had helped in the development of the atom bomb, and after the war became involved in commissions and treaty-making to preserve peace. Internally too transformations were taking place: the state began to take responsibility for the welfare of its citizens; increased immigration was changing the composition of the population, the economy was growing with the development of oil and gas in Alberta and the iron mines in northern Quebec. But, with more and more political wrangles the post-war nationalist euphoria was replaced either by collective alienation or overshadowed by ad hoc circumstances.

As a reflection of the questioning of the nature of nationalist faith Mr. Fraser's book reads like a spiritual diary. In the earlier chapters he can quite confidently assert that the Soviet spy case of the early 50's was a unifying shock that led to national self-confidence; scruples over nuclear weapons were a part of praiseworthy national character; natural resources development in Ungava-Labrador left Canadians youthful, strong, and sure of their national identity. But, after the prolonged flag debate, the Rivard episode, and their denouement in the pathetic Munsinger affair, Mr. Fraser seems more sober: even history will not be able to tell the effect of Canada's two years of scandal.

To use Marcel Faribault's own words, "There are few topics more hackneyed, and therefore as actual . . . than the perplexing one of national unity." The topic is a flogged horse that will not die: navel-gazing, not ice hockey, has been, is, and probably always will be the real Canadian national sport. As in all other sports, there are amateurs and professionals; spirited Sunday practioners and those nervously intent individuals who make their living by serving ad perpetuum the gods of cultural identity. Even Time Magazine's Canada Edition had the words "What does Canada want; Que veut le Quebec?" on the banner across its cover.

Both are silly questions, because many different people want many different things. Lester Pearson's national dream is not shared by Ernest Manning or Kenneth McNaught. Marcel Faribault's hopes and fears are not those of Pierre Bourgault or Jean Marchand.

Marcel Faribault's book is the latest addition to the massive literature already published by politicians on the Future of Canada. Appropriately titled Unfinished Business, his book provides one with some food for thought, but more of the breakfast variety than a three course meal.

The book, quite simply, deals with constitutional reform, with what is wrong with English Canada and the federal structure. There is not much here to probe the conscience or stir the soul, only the reasoned discussion of how the tax system should give more to the provinces, of the legal reforms necessary to make Quebec feel more at home in Canada. I doubt whether this book would outrage even W.A.C. Bennett: Faribault is, after all, a business man and a lawyer, and speaks in the language of the board room and legal brief.

Mr. Faribault is also an old Bleu, and one can scarcely look upon any of his suggestions or proposals as a striking or radical alternative to the present policy of the Federal Liberal government. His politics are just as open as Jean Marchand's or Maurice Sauvé's, except that the elitist trappings of the Estates General and the old Union Nationale party party have made strange bed partners Pierre Bourgault and the right wing establishment.

Quebec politics, in fact, make no ideological sense at all. Gilles Grogire has more in common with René Levesque than his ideological confrère Robert Thompson. The Estates General is scarcely representative — electorally speaking — of the Quebec population, has its roots in pre-Revolutionary France, and should have no more drawn the support of a so-called radical like Levesque than the annual meaning of the United Empire Loyalists. The left wing separatists at the University of Montreal are holding hands with such flaming radical reformers as General de Gaulle and Gilles Grogire.

Nationalism alone is the important factor: no matter what his political colouring, an English Canadian is on the outside; and so it is with any French Canadian political leader who dares to question the democracy of the Estates General or the appointment of Marcel Faribault to the Johnson cabinet without his holding a seat in the Legislature.

All this was written before the publication of the Bi & Bi Commission's first report. Its recommendations were quietly revolutionary, though it does not look as if Ontario is going to accept official bilingualism for some time.

The point is simply that bilingualism per se has no real roots — as yet — among English Canadians, and that roots take a long time to develop. Customs and habits do not have to be born; they can be created, but by the same token they have to implant themselves among the people of Toronto and Parry Sound.

What the Commission has said is that the ideal should be implanted right now.

Either the ideal of a bilingual nation becomes part of the national — and not only the official — conscience, or English Canada has nothing to offer the province of Quebec. The 'battle for Quebec' which the Federalists in Ottawa talk of with such vigorous determination should be fought in the rest of Canada, and not primarily in Montreal or Quebec City.

Canada will be a reasonable umbrella for Quebec nationalists only if the rest of the country makes it possible. Right now, one can sympathize with the Separatists because the national alternative is still weak: unless this changes, there will be nothing worth salvation.

Can there be a national identity, even if it expresses itself negatively in anti Americanism? The mellowed patriot concludes:

"What held such people together was not love for each other, it was love of the land itself, the vast empty land in which, for more than three centuries a certain type of man has found himself uniquely at home."

KIERANS' CALM FEDERALISM BY IAN RODGER

Challenge of Confidence: Kierans on Canada; Eric W. Kierans; McClelland and Stewart Ltd.; Toronto; 1967; 125 pages.

This book is no more and no less than a personal political platform. Mr. Kierans exposes his ideas on federal economics, constitutional problems, national purpose for Canadian and foreign policy. None of these topics is treated independently, for Mr. Kierans believes that: "An identity is clear when all policies, whether in the field of external affairs, external aid, trade and commerce, or defence, work in the same direction; an identity is independent when we have control of our own economy and our own monetary policy; it is distinct when Canadian national interests and objectives alone determine our attitudes." His real concern then seems to be to define a Canadian identity, and his ideas in these various fields are conditioned by his concern.

He is, for example, an economic nationalist, and being an economist, he devotes considerable space to suggesting ways in which we can rid ourselves of foreign investment, thereby gaining enough control over the economic sector to advance our own unique interests. Such a belief assumes that it is in the interest of the Canadian people to control the economy, whereas the facts of several elections show that Canadians are not prepared to sacrifice the benefits of foreign investment even in the short run. We have insisted on control of monetary policy, banking (The Mercantile Bank issue), transportation and communications (Senator Grattan O'Leary's Royal Commission on Publications), areas in which we feel our national interest could be directly and seriously challenged if they were controlled by foreigners. These decisions constitute a clear statement of what Canadians feel to be their national interest, and since they were decided by Canadians for Canadians, they declare a "national identity." Mr. Kierans may not like it, but his proposals for and definitions of "identity" are purely theoretical, and have no foundation in the Canadian experience.

On federal-provincial relationships, Mr. Kierans offers as a general principle that economic and fiscal authority (the levelling of ups and downs in the economy) should reside in Ottawa while social and cultural responsibilities should be left to the provinces. I thought that this arrangement was provided for by the constitution, notwithstanding any distortions that have resulted since 1867. However, as a principle, it is probably a bit too tidy, since, if the provinces take on increasing responsibility in government spending, they should probably have some say in determining when funds will be available for major capital programs and when they will not. This area is not one which I have studied carefully and therefore am not qualified to comment.

As an ordinary Canadian, I am qualified to object to Mr. Kierans' ideas of what it means to be a Canadian.

He's inconsistent; on the one hand rejecting distasteful American commercial values, and on the other calling for "greater efficiency and a better performance" to build the new Canada. Indeed, he seems to want to beat the Americans at their own game; "A constructive nationalism will set economic modernization as its goal and demand the necessary sacrifices in the name of national prestige and power."

He calls for "unity of purpose and stability of environment" and really believes we can "determine what is best for all twenty million of us at this particular point of time." Even more preposterous is the hope that "the meaning and the significance of the changes that are taking place in Canada will be clearly understood by all our citizens and accepted by them."

One of Mr. Kierans' recurrent themes is nationalism, and it recurs probably because he can't separate its good and bad aspects. Thus, he attempts a sentence such as: "Nationalism . . . provides (us) with grounds, incentives, and promise of new institutions which will replace the old," or he'll try it another way, "When nationalism is directed towards an increase in freedom and economic growth it is positive, creative and necessary", and then he arrives at the following positive statement of dubious value, "A strong and intense positive nationalism is the only means by which man can achieve a break with the past."

Another of his (and our) problems is the relationship among governments, corporations and our society. Faced with the facts that the capitalistic society has developed great wealth and that private enterprise is generally more efficient and imaginative than government, Mr. Kierans nevertheless dislikes the greedy profit motive, and so cannot decide what we should do with the corporation in our future.

"The existence of the large corporation and its capacity to change dramatically the development of entire regions cannot be denied. The unemployment of human and material resources in entire countries cannot be resolved by encouraging the formation of small family enterprises or individ-

Place d'Armes, by Scott Symons, McClelland & Stewart, $2.50.

In our homes, in our colleges, in our cities, in our land, we are forbidden to smile. Not the smile that comes from diversion or entertainment. We are prevented from smiling in the exultation that comes from inner joy, from a fulfilling of that inner place in our hearts that few of us ever know.

Walk down Bay Street. See the mechanical blandmen, the Baystreetboys who walk with emptiness pasted on their faces like a sign of death. Smile at them. Seek to touch them, to penetrate their eyes with warmth. Enter Toronto's efficient subway, extension of our contemporary wasteland. Smile some more into the eyes of the riders being moved to office, to home, to college, to stores: people merely being transported from one place to another. Why do they evade your warmth? Why are they afraid to acknowledge your presence with a response, with a smile? Why are you afraid to smile? Why do you join them in their endless death-dance, measuring out your life with coffee spoons?

Our land, our city, our lives, are grey. Our greysky, greybuildings, greyconcrete, greysnow, define our greyfaces. Bland; emasculated; joyless. We lack carnal, corporate presence. We prevent ourselves from letting our faces smile, our eyes dance, and our bodies flow. For we have known too much hurt, we seek to avoid further hurt through an invulnerability that becomes a life-in-death, a sterility of the emotions.

We immerse ourselves in the routine of sterile office buildings, amusing our souls with inconsequential memoranda. Or we chair committees in Ottawa to determine on which days we may celebrate our love of land, or which flag we may use to stir our heartless patriotism. Or we suck cigarettes in seminar rooms as we continue our academic ritual of anaesthetizing life into inoffensive theories.

Place d'Armes is one man's lament for such a nation. It is a whining plaint written by an English-Canadian novelist who will not allow his society to destroy his sensitivity. But Place d'Armes is also an intensely earnest act of faith, for it affirms the possibility of our salvation at the same time that it condemns the blandness that would stifle this knowledge of joy. It pleads, as does Douglas Le Pan in his poem "Nimbus": "Stranger, reconquer the source of feeling For an anxious people's sake."

Hugh Anderson, the hero of this novel of personal redemption, seeks to do just that. A former university professor and CBC producer, a rising figure in a Toronto publishing house, and the son of a Rosedale Colonel, Hugh enters Montreal ostensibly to write a novel about La Place d'Armes. But in fact his confrontation with La Place becomes a determined effort to escape from and then redeem his society, a society which "buried my sensibility before I ever had the chance to explore it, to exploit it, to grow into it."

His venture is a desperate one, for it necessitates his social and economic suicide. Against this he must weigh the encroaching reality of his own spiritual suicide, which he finally denies by entering into a carnal involvement with La Place. For Hugh, La Place is the spiritual centre of Montreal and of a redeemed Canada. It symbolizes that inner place in a man's heart which must be explored, and embodies the tactile, palpable vitality of his own sensitivity, and that of his nation.

As the heart of the French-Canadian sensibility, Montreal is a city which honours its Catholic sense of Body and Blood, of the flesh. It demands of Hugh a "permanent conjugal involvement with life," and enable him to achieve it. And this responsive sensibility is what characterizes its best architecture and its best artists. Whereas for Hugh, English-Canada is "a deep sleep of all sensibility." Place d'Armes brings the French-Canadian fact to English-Canada.

La Place must be confronted. And this confrontation undertaken by Hugh leads inevitably into the life which exists in and around La Place: the life of its antique shops, of its bank buildings, of its cathedrals, and of its homosexual night-club, Eden Rock. Each of the twenty-one days which make up the length of his combat constitutes a stage of his penetration of La Place, and La Place's penetration of him.

Essential to this penetration is his carnal self-immersion into the homosexual life emanating from Eden Rock. Three times he sleeps with a male prostitute. One of the most powerful and crucial scenes of the novel is one in which he loves two prostitutes in succession.

"To see La Place, to write my novel, to come alive, again, I must fall, utterly. To share my love, I must humiliate me ... must grovel. Stand waistdeep in the shit ... and then sing."

But there is a religious compassion in this apparent degradation that enables him to reacquire his capacity to love. This requisite honouring of this sensitivity is something which he does not at first understand. "Somewhere there was a path that used this capacity for joy without debasement. Somewhere. And somehow his capacity to love women was linked to his ability to accept his love for men."

Coupled with Leonard Cohen's Beautiful Losers, Scott Symons Place d'Armes has given us, in 1967, a definitive statement of the dilemma of our Canadian sensibilities. But Place d'Armes goes beyond Beautiful Losers in that it offers redemption. Its redemption lies in the fact that we can love men, women, and land sensuously, and know the ensuing joy.

To read Place d'Armes can be a terrifying and joyful experience. For it demands an intimate response from the reader. Many readers will flee from that experience after the first homosexual scene, for somehow it summons in them a primal instinct for self-preservation. Their existence seems threatened at the core of their feelings. The reader is implicated directly in Hugh Anderson's indictment of self and of nation. He is both the cause of Hugh's desperate, personal, quest for the Holy Grail, and the potential source of his, and our, salvation.

To retreat from this book is to betray ourselves, is to admit openly our guilt and our incapacity to love. For this extraordinary novel blatantly exposes our own sensitivity and accuses us of burying it. It is an indictment of everything that we, and our society, have done to "construct an elaborate defence against seeing, against being."

Place d'Armes is not a justification of homosexuality. It is a celebration of our homo-sentience, a plea that we possess the courage of our own tenderness. More than anything else, it honours the realization that "any human act accomplished with compassion is beautiful in itself ... any human act that contains compassion — even though it is doomed to failure from the start The only failure really, is to fail to try ..."

The quartet could carry the show by themselves. Their voices are rich and clear, blending into the kind of harmony that evokes colored threads woven into rainbows. And they're versatile — calypso, a medicine show, rock and roll, even a musical reading from Boyd's Pathology (it was all Latin to me).

High point of the production is a moving and beautiful dance recreation of birth, life and death. Steve Levinson, a tall, gaunt-faced, shock-haired performer held together by strings, creates a sensitive and powerful Everyman.

Directors Bill McKay, Greg McCain and Michael Wyman have paced their numbers well — the show is never flat for long. The girls are gorgeous. With few exceptions the acting is competent — Peter Hanson and Craig Johnston are stand-outs.

And you can be sure Dafyddil isn't afraid to call a corpus spongeosi a corpus spongeosi. Very few shows can make that statement.

a letter

Dear Mr. Wainright,

Thank you for your letter. I can only conclude from the manner in which it was written that you do not believe in what you are saying. For you respond to my article on Leonard Cohen and the academic with the very "frothing at the subjective intellect" of which you accuse me. But it's good to hear from you. Obviously your dander is up, which is a rather refreshing phenomenon at our university.

I am not a disciple of Leonard Cohen. I admire his guts and I admire what he is saying. I do have reservations about where he is at. My primary concern in reading a book is to understand what the author is saying and to respond openly to that. Is the author saying something important, or not? This is something that each individual must determine for himself. Personally, I believe that what Cohen is saying is significantly relevant to our contemporary society.

We have always made gods out of the critics. If we find that much of the response to a particular book is similar to that of a certain critic, then we often hand over to him the process of selecting books for us to read. Most critics have accepted this prestige given to them by the public, and abused it. They attempt to write from a position of near infallibility.

I am afraid I lack the arrogance to desire such a position. When I write in response to a book, I am presenting my reaction to it, and only my reaction. At no time is my opinion of a book any more valid than yours, or anyone else's, as long as both opinions are based upon an intimate, honest response. And at no time is it any less valid than yours. And certainly the critic's comments are never as important to the reader as what the author is saying.

The goal of the critic, I should think, must always be to get as close to an understanding of the book as possible, and to break down any prejudices or barriers between him and the book, so that both he and the reader can respond to it openly and intimately. It is a difficult task, particularly in dealing with contemporary literature, music, or art. Just look at Robert Fulford.

It is not with bitterness that I accept the validity of what Pacey and Djwa theorized about Cohen. Their comments were sound. What I find lacking in much academic criticism is any sense that the scholars are relating what the author is actually saying to our society. Perhaps literary critics should stay in their ivory towers and worry about which archetypal patterns they are going to catalogue various authors under. But it is not my thing. Literature is not scholarship. Mr. Wainright, it is life. And I intend to treat it as such.

What disappointed me about those two essays on Cohen was that both Djwa and Pacey wrote as if literature is scholarship, as if all authors write solely that they may be automatically fitted into categories and filed away. Sometimes I think that many of our Canadian writers do write that way. But not the best of them.

Yes, I am worried about the academics getting a hold of Leonard Cohen because I have little faith in their capacity to respond to a work of literature as anything more than the rough material for a publishable essay — preferably in the U. of T. Quarterly. I want some indication that they have had the guts to let a book touch them — actually touch them — before I want to hear their reaction to it, good or bad.

You are worried, of course, about emotional subjectivity. We all are. We get up tight whenever we see anyone displaying his feelings either in the flesh or on paper. We label it biased and therefore invalid. But the tragic consequence is that too often we have rejected our own personal responses as being "childish", "unmanly", "silly", or "trivial." And this is unfortunately true of our personal relations with others.

What do you think Sgt Papper's Lonely Hearts Club Band is all about? What do you think the New Morality is all about? What do you think the hippie thing is all about, when its idealism isn't distorted? What do you think the world needs today more than anything else? Academic theses? Or love?

Why in God's name do you think that everyone is running to psychiatrists these days? Why do you think that so many people, at the very moment you are reading this, are contemplating suicide? Why do you think that so many respectable marriages are devoid of any real meaning? Why Mr. Wainright? Because we haven't bowed sufficiently low to the sacred god, the objective intellect? When was the last time you knew a moment of genuine exultation?

I'm sorry, but if priorities are necessary, then I rank the need for love (which involves an acceptance of our own personal feelings) higher than I rank the need for more dry, dusty, academic treatises. You make one sound point in your letter. Life is rather sad. But must it be so?

In your reading of Cohen might I suggest that you ignore your concerns for his public image and listen to what the man is saying. You may not agree with him (your personal right), but at least listen to him. You may understand why I respond so strongly to what he is saying.

I might also point out that once upon a long, long time ago we got hung up on another 'hero' who became public property. I think they called him Christ.

Merry Christmas, and love.

CHRISTMAS, BY JOLLY, BY GOLLY

Well, Christmas time is here, by jolly, which means, by golly, special Christmas issues of the glossy American magazines (double the pages, double the ads, double the price). Life, for example, will probably churn out its customary special issue on the glory of the human spirit, the relevance of the Christmas message in these troubled times, and the rightness of the American (oops, Allied) cause in Vietnam.

However, should your reading tastes run a bit higher, fear not; December has been a good month for the good periodicals.

Since the arrival of aggressive editor Willie Morris, Harpers has undergone a fantastic renaissance and seems to be recapturing bit by bit its former lofty standards.

The current issue features a lead article "Return to Vietnam" by former New York Times correspondent David Halberstam (whose reports in 1962 and 63 were so disturbingly accurate JFK tried unsuccessfully to force his removal).

Halberstam finds government corruption approaching the super-saturation point and notes the American military tacticians are still overestimating the almost non-existent morale and fighting ability of the South Vietnamese army.

Halberstam asked a US pacification official for a realistic summary of the American position. The reply: "We are losing, we are going to lose, we deserve to lose."

Other articles of special worth include Freud as psycho-analyst, the political power of New York's late Cardinal Spellman and an excerpt from the autobiography of wunderkind Norman Podhoretz.

Atlantic Monthly still reigns in many circles as the best magazine published in English.

Its December issue focuses on a detailed examination of one Mrs. Mary Lasker, kingpin (or should it be queenpin) of the Washington "Health lobby," a collection of newsmaking doctors and shrewd wealthy sympathizers who have systematically syphoned more and more government millions into medical research.

If you don't think AM is

#1, chances are your vote goes to London-based Encounter.

Among its year-ending offerings: Schlesinger on the battle of Vietnam bibliography, Gore Vidal on French letters, poems by Pablo Neruda, notes on pornography and crime, and what's going on in the new astronomy (quite a lot).

Encounter's detractors claim its debts are paid by the CIA; if so, the master-spies have finally made a good investment.

Still available is the 45th anniversary issue (dated October) of Foreign Affairs Quarterly.

Contributors are a mixed lot from Kennan to Schlesinger to Mosley to Lichtheim to that up-and-coming New York lawyer, Richard Nixon.

For right thinking types, the National Review offers "The True Spirit of Christmas"; cf. Life (above) and adds some rarely used gerunds plus the usual assortment of oh so clever epigrams.

Best holiday news of all is the simultaneous publication of the annual collections of the editorial cartoons by the Star's Duncan Macpherson and Giles of the Daily Express.

Both volumes are, as usual, hilarious, clever, cheap, paperback, and available at the Bookroom.

IT WAS A NIGHT BEFORE

By H
Tarva

Listening to the radio a few days ago to some inane patter about the value of the belief in Santa Claus for the kids of our inimitable society, a voice from the past came across the airwaves and stopped the orange juice in its downward progress in my throat. The announcer-interviewer was coming on to people — 'the man in the street' — with his best jovial good-morning-sir-would-you-mind-telling-the — listening — audience-just-where-you're-at-with-respect-to-St. Nick, manner and all agreed that Santa was indeed the altogether when it came to something for the kids to believe in and learn by.

As the programme neared its conclusion, the housewives', friend blandly asserted himself in favour of such a positive myth, mentioned its Christian implications, and proceeded to finish things off by asking the last interviewee her name and whether or not she believed in Santa Clause, his actual existence, outside of myth.

"Lorraine Lemieux" replied Lorraine, in the half whisper, half murmur which sounded the same over the radio as it did when I first met her a year ago, "Yes I do", she said matter of factly to the radio personality's direct question. Lorraine Lemieux.

Lorraine Lemieux! She was supposed to be dead, at least that was the commonly held opinion two weeks after she had disappeared into the bush on Boxing Day near Sault Ste. Marie. The Métis girl was not well known in town, having just arrived from Winnipeg, "where she was born on a reserve" as the newscasts reported when the search party had decided she was dead.

Lorraine Lemieux ... talking to some guy on the radio in Toronto about Santa Claus. I first met Lorraine last year during the Christmas holidays in Northern Ontario; a group of us had driven to Espanola from Whitefish for the annual Broomball game between the miners of Coppercliff and the loggers of Espanola. Broomball is a game relatively unknown in Southern Ontario but enjoys a fair amount of popularity in the Northern Ontario communities. It is played on the ice like hockey, except the players wear no skates, a volleyball substitutes for a puck, and brooms are used in lieu of hockey sticks.

The teams often included members of both sexes, and Lorraine was out there swishing her broom around for the Espanola Loggers, by virtue of the fact that her uncle was manager of the team.

It was Christmas Eve, and the stands of the arena were empty except for the few of us watching our friends stumble about on the ice. Hot brandy in thermos jugs kept us warm in the stands and the players loose on the ice; towards the end of the last period Lorraine scored a goal against the Miners' goalie who was too far gone to care much, and the game was declared over as the score then stood at 14-2 for the Loggers. People were anxious to get out of the cold arena back to Whitefish for the Christmas Eve party, also an annual event, traditionally held at the farm of Jorma Lindquist, whose grandfather was one of the first settlers of the area.

As there was a shortage of cars for the drive back to Jorma's farm, we borrowed an old panel truck from one of the Indian loggers, packed twelve people in under blankets, and set off down the snowy road for Whitefish. I was driving, and Lorraine Lemieux, silent and reticent was sitting beside me in the front seat. The night was clear, but driving was difficult due to a heavy snowfall the night before; the only other traffic on the white highway consisted of a few transport trucks, a police cruiser, and the huge Department of Highways' snow clearing machines, which growled their way through the drifts and blew them to the side of the road creating large uniform banks of white which gave the impression of driving on a toboggan run.

Jorma and his wife were at the door shouting hello to us as we piled out of the truck, telling us to hurry because the turkey was getting cold, and the sauna was heated if we wanted to have one.

Inside the old farmhouse someone was playing an accordian, glasses were tinkling and carols were being sung in Ukrainian, Swedish, French, Finnish and English; most of people had European parents as was common in the Nickel Belt of Northern Ontario. Christmas is always a vigorous affair with these people who spend their lives on the farms, down in the mines and in the bush; before long the place was jammed with ethnic good cheer, dancing, singing and the shouts of people throwing snowballs at each other outside. Christmas day itself would be a quiet affair with the families.

I was talking with Jorma but concentrating on Lorraine; he asked me how school was going, when would I come and visit them again, and how were my parents and wasn't it a long time since we had last seen each other . . .

"Two years, yes," I replied looking at Lorraine sitting quietly, oblivious to the noisy Yule party. Very pretty. Smiling as she thought about something far away. Dark hair, high cheekbones, black eyes.

Outside someone had jumped off the barn roof spraining his ankle; a momentary lull occurred in the party as the injured man was brought in for treatment. At first it was thought the ankle was broken and someone suggested taking him to the hospital in Sudbury, but Lorraine who was by then attending to the man said that it wasn't necessary and proceeded to wrap the foot elaborately with a professional-looking binding and within ten minutes he was back on his feet and the party resumed.

She walked out to the porch staring at the distant slag hills of the Sudbury mines; most evenings the horizon would be red with the glow of molten slag as it was poured from the smelters. It was Christmas Eve however, the mines were shut, and the sky was clear except for the flickering madcap dances of the Northern Lights. She didn't seem to be much interested in talking but accepted the cigarette I offered her, shivering as she smoked.

I left her standing there and went back inside to say goodnight to Jorma and his wife. Someone else was driving the truck back to Espanola and I asked Jorma if I could borrow a pair of old skis to go home with. I would have normally waited for a ride, but the house lay across two miles of low bush and lake, the wind was light and I just felt like it.

I slipped the old leather thongs over my boots, waved goodbye to Lorraine still standing on the porch — have I neglected to tell you that she is a witch? — slipped down the hill by the barn to the lake-shore and started off across the lake.

Within half an hour I was across the lake on top of a low hill where I paused to rest, my muscles unused to the effort required in cross-country skiing. Below me the countryside shimmered in an unreal light from the reflections of the moon and the Northern Lights off the snow. The stars took care of everything else.

I could still see the lights from Jorma's farmhouse flickering across the lake where the party was still in progress. I saw something else too. Below me, near the middle of the lake, following the same course I had taken was a single figure, wearing snowshoes, judging from the swinging gait of its walk. I took off my skis immediately and walked to a clump of trees beside the trail and waited. I wasn't apprehensive or anything; I was scared. The figure looked like it was carrying a rifle and it was, after all, taking the same trail I had.

I waited. I soon heard the stamping sound of the snowshoes as the figure appeared on the crest of the hill where I had stopped. Just where I had taken off my skis it stopped too, and looked off towards the trail of my footprints directly at the trees where I was hiding. Lorraine Lemieux.

The rifle turned out to be a long walking stick which she used to steady herself with in the deep drifts. She continued staring at the trees, this beautiful witch, and I stepped out and said hello.

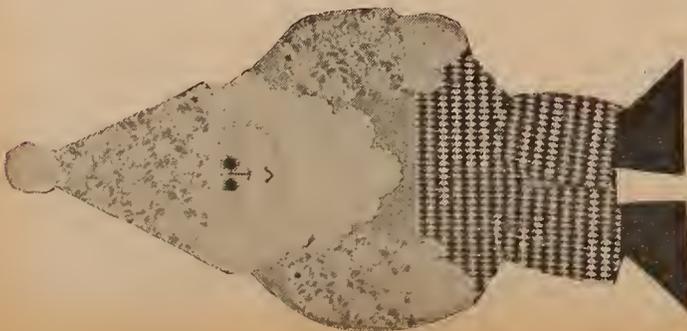

"Hello", she replied. "I followed your tracks. I didn't know anyone at the party." I just stared at her for a moment.

"Would you like some coffee?" I asked, "My place is just across the hill. She said yes thank you, and we continued on our way. She said a few things about Winnipeg where she was a nurse, and what winter was like on the reserve where she was born. I asked her if in fact she was a witch as I had surmised and she merely laughed.

The temperature was dropping but the exercise of the skis and snowshoes had us both in a sweat by the time we reached the old house which I was renting for the holidays.

"Is someone home?" she asked, pointing to a light which was on in the living room window. I answered that I must have left the light on, took off my skis and walked into the living room and surprised a tiny man sitting on the couch smoking a pipe, dressed up just like Santa Claus. A practical joke, a thief, or a nut I figured.

A large brown sack lay crumpled on the floor beside him, empty; the thief theory was rapidly taking hold in my mind, for the bag, I surmised was for carrying anything he might have found there, and the Santa outfit was a good disguise on a Christmas Eve etc. etc. Under the pressure of the moment logic faltered, and I later realized that these reasons were not very sound for assuming that he was a thief.

Lorraine had stepped in shortly after me and the two of us stood staring at the short fellow who seemed harmless enough. She began to laugh, deep down in her throat.

"There's nothing to steal here, if that's what you're after" I said somewhat nervously. The tiny man drew himself up and fastened the black belt about his waist, tapped his pipe against an ash-tray but said nothing; a smile played at the corners of his lips which were engulfed by an immaculately white beard, and he just stared back. I continued, a bit bolder now.

"Look, if you're not here to steal, then why are you here. You can't just walk into this house. There's no party here, maybe you've got the wrong address." His silence was infuriating. Lorraine touched me on the shoulder, laughing, and whispered into my ear to shut-up for a second, and walked to the window and looked out.

"Well?" I said after a moment. The man cleared his throat, swayed on his heels, adjusted the white tassled red cap on his head and very gently said,

"I'm terribly sorry; I didn't mean to upset you. I had no idea that anyone was staying here in this house; you see it's usually vacant at this time of year . . . I just stopped by to rest for an hour or so. Please excuse me, I meant no harm . . .". He trailed off for a moment, staring at me very hard. Then he chuckled and said "Your name's Tarvainen isn't it? Henry Tarvainen?"

More laughter from Lorraine at the window. Confusion. Rampant confusion. "What's going on . . ." I ventured meekly and the old fellow chuckled again:

"Your hair's darker now, the freckles are gone, but it's the same face; you were a pretty good kid — like most kids." I then began to understand; somewhere back in Toronto my friends had carefully planned this; they told me before I left to look for an unexpected surprise around Christmas. This was it — and it was well done. Fun.

"Very good," I finally said, after thinking through, "you look like the real brand. You really had me going for a minute." By now I was laughing and sat down taking off my coat and boots. I looked at Lorraine who was still by the window and asked.

"Did you have anything to do with this?"

She looked at me as if she didn't understand the question and then shook her head. The old fellow also looked somewhat puzzled and also informed me that he didn't understand either. He was trying hard. I thought for another moment and decided to go along to see how well he knew his part. He had by now picked up his bag and was making motions as if to leave;

"Sit down and relax for a minute. I'll make some coffee," I said, throwing a log onto the hearth; there were two foot-prints in the ashes. I knew I had locked the doors and windows but I avoided, for the moment, asking him how he got in.

Meanwhile, Lorraine left her post at the window and offered to make the coffee if I wanted to stay in the living room and chat. Chat! it was difficult not to be too flip; I asked him where he was coming from and he said the South. Where in the South? Oh all over. And where was he going? North of course. He began to relax, took off his red jacket and with a tiny whisk broom began to whisk off some loose soot from the collar. Soot. Confusion.

I walked over to the window where Lorraine had been and looked out; it was there all right — a tiny red one parked in the back with twelve animals which had to be reindeer hitched up. At least there was no red-nosed thirteenth.

"Are they all right?" he asked. "I bring them over from Lapland every year; It's not as cold there and they're not used to the Canadian winters — but they do a pretty good job anyway."

I replied that they appeared to be all right, but then again I couldn't really know, not being familiar with reindeer; they were quiet. I reconsidered my situation; it was no practical joke, not with the reindeer and the sleigh. An old eccentric who liked to play at Santa Claus I reasoned; a nice old nut with a good game. Probably wealthy with the reindeer and all. Lorraine Lemieux . . . somewhere she was in on it. I looked at him more closely as he sucked his pipe.

Very small — maybe four feet tall; his face was weathered and his skin looked like tough old leather with a million wrinkles which moved around like quick-silver when he spoke. Flashing eyes capped with thick white eyebrows. His voice was rough and deep and his fluent English was cut with slight traces of a foreign accent; maybe German, but it was hard to tell.

"I wish I could stay and talk with you but I must be off" he said getting up when he had finished brushing off his coat. "Very few people happen upon me as you did — and when they do they either run away, get angry, or try to convince themselves that they're drunk. I don't try to convince them you know because it would be too dogmatic. It's just as hard for them to be convinced that I actually am who I am — just as hard as it is when they were forced to stop believing in me when they grew up. It's a terrible moment in a kid's life when he sits on the Eaton's Santa Claus knee and realizes that he's not the real thing, or when he sees the Kiwanis Santa getting drunk with the boys after the kid's part of the Christmas party is over. And once the kid knows that it's all a fake and suffers that bit of news, you can't really expect him to come back as a grown man and tell him that I really am."

"Anyhow I have less work each year; parents and orphanages generally do my job on Christmas Eve for the kids. But there are still some poor ones and I do what I can; — you know I just wish the parents wouldn't tell them that it was Santa who gives them the toys, because some day the kid is going to have to face the fact that his momma and poppa were lying to him. If they didn't give the kids anything and believed in me too then I'd be there every year.

"Mr. Tarvainen you have been most kind; I must be off. I should caution you about repeating this incident to even your friends for they will not believe you and if you persist, they will have some doubts as to the soundness of your mind. I'm certain that you still have some doubts yourself and I don't blame you. Goodnight and Merry Christmas! And Merry Christmas to you Miss Lemieux!"

I smiled and wished him a Merry Christmas as did Lorraine. If everyone was nuts like him wouldn't it be nice I thought. He was really very charming. We stepped out into the clear cold night to watch him leave.

"Do you think he lives around here?" I asked Lorraine as the bells of his sleigh began to jingle; the reindeer were straining at the bits and the sleigh began to pick up speed as he turned it towards a flat open field. I turned to go back into the warm house when I realized that there was no road for his sleigh at the end of that field; he couldn't go through the woods as they were too thick.

"Look!" Lorraine called out and pointed towards the field. The sleigh was speeding along the perimeter of the open spaces when the lead reindeer gave a kind of leap as did those following him in turn. The sleigh was airborne and just managed to clear the trees, the old man was shouting them on; he turned the sleigh, getting higher and higher, towards the house and passed across the face of the moon above our heads, waved at us and was gone.

We stood silently for a long time. A very long time.

"Lorraine Lemieux," I finally said, "you are a witch." She laughed softly and said no, and went back into the house.

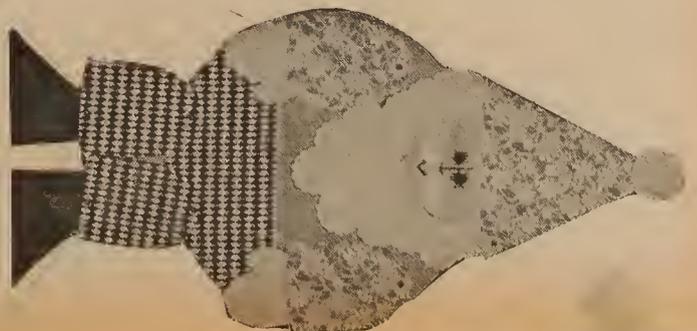

The next day, Christmas, my friends arrived from Toronto — the unexpected surprise. Lorraine was gone and I had nothing to tell them except that I had gone to a broomball game, a party and skied across the lake. On Boxing Day Lorraine Lemieux was lost in the bush and two weeks later she was officially dead.

Until two days ago — Lorraine Lemieux was telling this announcer about Santa Claus on the radio as I was having breakfast. He was getting nervous as she kept insisting with a laugh in her voice that she had seen Santa Claus last year.

"Thank you Miss Lemieux" the announcer finally said and turned us over to the post office worker who informed us that all the mail sent by kids addressed to Santa Claus North Pole was sent to some huge room and marked No Such Address.

Lorraine Lemieux, I hope you read this, we saw Santa Claus together; my friends don't think I'm nuts, they just don't believe me or they say it's a good story. I'd rather they thought I was nuts.

Lorraine Lemieux, you must be a witch.

Karsh: Only The Great Make It Into His Book

By JOAN MURRAY

Yousuf Karsh. Karsh Portfolio. U. of T. Press, 1967, 202 pages, $10.95.

Karsh is greatly admired by photographers and the general public. His name is enthused over and creates a golden glow, especially in Bourgeoisie circles: a successful emigrant, he rose from the ranks to move among the great.

In contrast to these opinions, I think that Karsh is a panderer to the great, a huge snob. His snobbery is implicit in his very choice of subject matter. Only the great make it into his book. And Karsh talks with them, as he stresses, on equal terms. So he's great too.

I find the whole phenomenon despicable. It is a by-play on the kind of mentality that orients itself towards Hollywood, the hero-worshipping Mob.

One of the most distressing features of the book are the gossipy interviews full of clichés which accompany the photos. Karsh plied all his subjects (except the Queen) with "significant" questions, often in their own field. "Who", he asked Sir Alex Fleming "was the 'Man of the Century'?" He asked Einstein his views on human immortality. Concerning Hemingway, one of the few who kept his mouth shut, Karsh says "Every book was a new challenge, I gathered, an experiment and an adventure".

These sections are hugely preposterous.

The photographs are something else again. They are based on Karsh's conception of human personality. He says that the 'revelation' of personality "will come in a small fraction of a second with an unconscious gesture, a gleam of the eye, a brief lifting of the mask that all humans wear to conceal their innermost selves from the world".

I find this concept of the human being a shoddy one, and particularly outdated. It was all right for Yeats or O'Neill to rumble on about Masks, but this is 1967. Nor do I believe that personality really reveals itself in a split-second, unconscious gesture; rather I find the personality is maintained throughout an individual's lifetime and cannot be escaped. Nor do I find the Karsh photographed those "seconds of revelation" anyway.

That brings us to the photos. Through them, we find a frozen world of melodramatic images in blacks which are too dense. The lighting makes the faces look wet as though they perspired. There is no air in which the figures breathe or space in which they move. They are hieroglyphs of themselves, lacking personality except for an extreme self-consciousness. All the pictures are corny, and obvious (Robert Frost with his leg draped over a chair). The corniest is of Dame Margot Fonteyn as the 'airy fairy' of ballet. Sentimentality is the rule of the day. For instance, Camus, wearing that play-boy grin in his face, is photographed with a Voltaire portrait in the background.

The thing that is especially lacking is a sense of humor, with the moderating balance that humor brings with it. This is especially apparent in the portrait of Picasso, arch-clown, who has been so extensively and delightfully photographed by D. Duncan in his The Private World of Pablo Picasso and Picasso's Picassos.

Sometimes Karsh calls on Art History for an image as in the photo of Church where the fullness of form and geometry of composition recalls Holbein.

When you finish the book you begin to wonder about the narcissicism of the people who sat for a Karsh portrait.

The blurb on the front of the book's jacket says: "Who owns this volume may live with greatness and majesty daily". I would say that if you own this volume, you'll have your bit of Kitsch.

Buy Toronto - If You Want To Buy Jazz

By JACK McAFFREY

If you have any jazz fans on your Christmas shopping list be sure not to get them any Dave Brubeck records. There are still a few real jazz records available.

Oddly enough, two of the most significant records to be released this year were produced in Toronto. Why Toronto? Well, for one reason, Toronto jazz fans seem to have a special affection for the particular musicians involved. And it seems that no one in the big commercial music centers gives a damn about recording music that is becoming so rare that it is on the verge of extinction. Fortunately, there are a few people left in this city who are more interested in preserving the music than selling thousands of records.

Last year, Willie the Lion Smith and Don Ewell, exponents of a style of piano playing that was at the height of its popularity almost a half century ago in Harlem, met in a Toronto CBC studio. After this first encounter, realizing that they were two of the most compatible musicians anywhere in the world, they played together every night for a long spell in the winter of 66-67.

They were supposed to have played again this week and next at the Colonial Tavern. However it appears that Ewell is not going to be able to make it. Possibly, Claude Hopkins, another fine pianist, may join the seventy-one-year-old Lion and saxophonist Eddie Barefield at the Colonial.

But if you want to hear what all the fuss was about last year, just rush out and buy GRAND PIANO (Exclusive records 501, mono and stereo). On it you can hear a beautifully preserved representation of what went on at the Golden Nugget Tavern. Although recorded in a studio, the music is spontaneous and has not been tampered with — no cutting, splicing, or retakes. The Lion and Ewell just stomp it right on out the way they would in a club. These piano duets have great vigor, élan, and joyousness, and preserve the spirit of the good old-time jazz.

As you must know by now, one of the few jazz groups that Toronto has taken especially to heart is the Saints and Sinners, probably the only organized band left that keeps alive the jazz of the Swing Era. Due to the popularity of the Saints and Sinners in Toronto, this city is one of the few that is still privileged to be able to hear this kind of music and thereby maintain an awareness of the jazz heritage.

Up until now the Saints and Sinners have made only one record (in New York and Los Angeles, you see, they put out Dave Brubeck and Jimmy Smith records by the ton, but they don't even know about the Saints and Sinners). However, a couple of months ago, the Saints and Sinners began a regular series of engagements at the Cav-A-Bob (the next one will be in Feb.), and on occasion day in Ontario, they assembled in a Toronto studio to make their second record. Again, it was only the interest, and the willingness to come up with the cash, of some Toronto people that made this record possible.

By this weekend, the results of that session should be available at Sam the Record Man. Entitled the Saints and Sinners in Canada, on the Cav-A-Bob label, it is a very good representative sample of what the band does on the stand. Like the Ewell-Smith record, the music is left alone. If there are a few fluffs, so what? The essential point is that this record catches the real spirit of the only group that is still playing this kind of relaxed, easy to take music.

One of the highlights of the record is a splendid version of Creole Love Call, an early Ellington composition that is heard only rarely, if ever, these days. Featuring the low, moaning, dark tone of Rudy Powell's clarinet, the beautiful Harmon muted responses of Herman Autrey's trumpet, and the ominous growling of Vic Dickenson's trombone, this piece, recorded in only one take, captures exactly the atmosphere intended by Ellington.

As well as the good job that has been done of recording the music, another advantage of this record is the generous playing time — over three-quarters of an hour — that allows the musicians to play everything just as they would in a club, without having to hurry or cut. The record deserves the serious attention of anyone who has a real interest in jazz.

Of course, not all the good records came from Toronto this year. From the U.S., and well worth including on your Christmas list:

MILES SMILES (Columbia Records) — the Miles Davis Quintet — The rapport between the musicians is astonishing, making for extremely absorbing listening. On the only ballad of the collection, Circle, Davis gets the most fantastically haunting, melancholy sound from his muted trumpet. And the support he receives from the very sensitive Ron Carter, Tony Williams, and Herbie Hancock (the most beautifully integrated rhythm section in jazz today) is positively telepathic.

MEAN WHAT YOU SAY (Milestone Records) — the Thad Jones-Pepper Adams Quintet. Jones is one of the best jazz musicians on the scene today; his flugelhorn sound and unusual, complex melodic lines are featured in the context of thoughtfully conceived arrangements of both original and standard material.

SWEET HONEY BEE (Blue Note Records) The Duke Pearson Sextet — Not terribly significant, perhaps, but pleasant, unpretentious modern jazz.

Redding: A Eulogy

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

Otis Redding didn't even make the top five in this summer's Soul Magazine readers' poll but polls only show the common denominator, not the qualitative best. If they did Redding would have been right up there, shoving James Brown and Wilson Pickett down a notch.

Redding's greatest fame came through the Rolling Stones who loved recording his better songs, Pain in My Heart, That's How Strong My Love Is, and I've Been Loving You To Long and he returned the compliment by doing Satisfaction, his only bad recording.

Redding didn't get a large mass audience because the bulk of the audience is white and they can't take unrestrained Negro sexuality. So, they prefer Mick Jagger doing it for them.

Redding's approach to a song was earthy, steeped heavily in church gospels and blues, but he always managed to find a way to go in a little deeper than anybody else. He had an amazing voice that he would snap and whip, or flow almost lyrically, chatter in meaningless words or just plain moan, or make related sounds to bring across his emotions, his occasional despair ("My life it is such a weary thing") always kept alive by hope and self affirmation. That's why it's so enjoyable to follow Redding down into the problems he sings about because just before the bottom there's always that revived hope to refresh. Redding had the power to make it all a little more vivid than anyone else, certainly more vivid than Pickett, who is basically a rocker, than Brown, basically a screamer, and more vivid than the Chicago blues people whose thing may be love but is expressed on the level of sex.

Redding left seven LPs since he started recording in 1962, one with Carla Thomas and one live, and five of just him. Any of them are worth buying especially Volt 412, Otis Blue and Volt 415, his Dictionary of Soul.

Stax records work pretty freely — letting the singer and the musician get together and just play. This and Otis Redding's own style of making up or altering the words as he sings them, gave his records a warm personal quality. He was great because he always followed his own advice: "Always think different from the next person."

'Earning and learning.'

It's a great combination.'

An Interview with Julius Kohanyi

By KEN DANCYGER

Julius Kohanyi, 31 years old, has to date directed a half-dozen short films. He studied film at UCLA from 1955-57 and currently runs a film workshop in Toronto. His latest, most ambitious effort is Teddy, a half-hour short to be seen next at Cinecity with Pasolini's The Hawks and the Sparrows. Teddy has already won special prizes at the San Francisco and Edinburgh film festivals. The following is a conversation with Julius Kohanyi.

One of your first films, The Herring Belt (about the Kensington fish market) is probably unique among independently-made shorts. It made back all its investments.

"We decided to show it in the Mousehole Coffee House that opened at the same time that my film was finished. Channel 9 was down with their cameras, newsmen too. They gave me a fantastic write-up. Then the CBC called me and the film was shown on the Observer. Then both other channels bought it. The Herring Belt won an award at the Montreal film festival.

Your next documentaries, The Artists' Workshop and Little Monday both won prizes as well?

"Little Monday was the only Canadian film accepted at Venice in 1966."

Why did you form the Film Workshop?

"The Artists' Workshop asked me if I wouldn't run a course in film making. It got such a good response that I began a workshop on my own."

What do you expect to accomplish there?

"Just the basics. What can you do in 20 weeks? We shoot our own films — its a mere exercise, getting close enough to feel what its like. If I could have had that kind of experience at the very beginning I could have saved a lot of money in wasted footage."

Let's turn to Teddy. It is the story of an alienated child.

"He lives in a working man's neighbourhood. His parents are working people. They are frustrated at each other and frustrated in their relationship. He feels he is the outgrowth of this. He just happened to be — not somebody who was really wanted."

Teddy has the appearance of a polished, professional film. This is unusual for a Toronto, let alone an independent filmmaker. Why do you tend towards a more contemporaries' practice of filming rather than your contemporaries' practice of underground, grainy filming?

"Any filmmaker, underground or not, would like to show his images more clearly but he has no choice over the matter. He hasn't got the sophisticated equipment. Some people use grainy film for the sake of being grainy — they think it adds artistic effect. I don't believe that. I think: If you are showing something visual, show it as clearly as possible. Superb films like A Man and a Woman and Fellini's films, none of those are out of focus or grainy. The images are not commercial, the content is not commercial, but you might call the style commercial (it has neither grain nor out-of-focus shots)."

What do you try to achieve in your films?

Whose style do you admire or follow?

"I don't follow anyone's style. I like how Fellini treats his stories, personal, self-exploratory. I think he is the tops. Francois Truffaut also is great. He is an honest-statement type of guy. Such things as Jules and Jim do happen."

You haven't mentioned any American directors. Is it because you do not admire the American approach to filmmaking?

"I admire it — its fantastic — they give you everything technically: its money. I like Stanley Kramer, John Huston."

Since Teddy have you made any films?

"Yes, I've just finished a film about Henry Moore and his works for an American TV network and I'm going to do another short film based on Sholom Aleichem's character Tevye, using the etching of Saul Field. In the spring I'm doing a feature."

What is the theme of your proposed feature?

"It's about a girl who wants to make it but hasn't the convictions to carry through her desires. The message of the film is if you want something, you have to go out and work for it, you can't dream about it for the rest of your lifetime and then wake up one day and say, "Life was really cruel to me." Everyone is the maker of their own luck or graveyard."

JULIUS KOHANYI WITH HENRY MOORE

The Paper People

By PETER GODDARD & TERRY FOORD

CBC's production on Wednesday Night of Timothy Findley's Paper People had in abundance all the attributes of a great film. Yet it lacked the basic quality necessary to make it a good one.

The cinematic technique was superb, the actors well chosen, the dramatic framework allusive and engrossing. Yet, search as one might, it had no (here, I'm tempted to say heart) core.

But compared to CTV's Rumble of Silence or the CBC-NFB co-productions, The Ernie Game and Waiting for Caroline, Paper People was a surprising achievement, a successful attempt in sheer intellectual agility.

The question is; was this success merely technical? For no cinematic subtlety escaped the producers; indeed, at times they seemed to be giving us four different interpretations, four different realities, simultaneously.

Paper People had many echoes to other films: the initial scene where a crane picked up a car was reminiscent of the opening shot in La Dolce Vita, of a helicopter hoisting up a statue of Christ; a crowd's reactions to the interviewer's questions were a la Blow Up.

There were hints of Fellini and Antonioni. Director Dave Gardner attempted to free his works from the constrictions of narrative, having a beginning, middle and end. In doing so, the frames of the story took on the aspects of poetry with metre and cadence. The theatrical bizzarerie, the subliminal references, the volatile rhythms produced a style caught half-way between the stage and the movie screen.

As a televised trompe d'oeuil it succeeded. As a trompe d'esprit? This is another matter.

It wasn't concerned with communication, a subject that has given rise to an entirely new theatrical cant, but with reality. The result was an odd mixture of Pirandello and Pierrot le Fou.

At first appearances it is a play within a play or, rather, a film within a film. An arch-typal CBC producer — played by Marigold Charlesworth — plans to do a documentary on a just-arrived-artist figure (Marc Strange).

The artist makes paper-statues of people which he later burns. This is the only type of fire in the entire production. There are strong parallels drawn between the people of paper and those of flesh. For the latter live an existence of shared hopelessness. Of a delicate balance between angst and ennui.

As the producer interviews his new bed-mate, his mother, and a fly-by-week girl-friend, (Kate Reid, playing, one superb, Kate Reid) she discovers that there is an artifice not only in his works but also to his life. Disgusted, her film becomes not a documentary, but an indictment.

All this happens in a seemingly random, peripheral course of development, following the characters through inconsistencies and inadversities. Rather than being concerned with what they have to tell us, we are content to merely follow them. The sum of the parts adding up to something verging on infinity.

An Infinity, however, that does not necessarily imply profundity. For Paper People is so introverted in nature, so interior in conception, and the rhythms of the picture run so quickly, that the film approached the superficial. As the Tely's Bob Blackburn stated "Put your own interpretation on it all. And yours, and your..."

For the characters in the film were intelligent and active. But the atmosphere was cool. Instead of being constructed in an architectural sense, where theme and characters are interwoven, Paper People began to dominate the real people. Abstract elements began to take over and drama and character and even narrative sense were frozen into carefully spliced scenes.

And what resulted was a series of porcelain-hard snapshots of the first order. The pace of the film may have been brisk but each of the characters seemed to be dying of a slow strangulation. Of what? Of living in a glass-walled pleasure dome like Toronto? Of boredom with casual sex? Of life that is becoming as two-dimensional as pop-art?

There are no answers here. And Paper People became like an elaborate Rorschach test — you were to interpret it as you want. A riddle, in which all the solutions are correct.

The film ended with the artist being deserted by his friends. The producer will proceed to over-expose his pose to the public and, supposedly, hero will begin to fade. But the picture has gone full circle. For she will go on to "expose" other human frauds and not realizing that her life is much a part of the artifice as everyone else's is.

Far as Paper People suggested, "she thinks she's in a play and she is anyway..."

Belmondo: The Bourgeois Thief

By MEL BRADSHAW

After his riotous Viva Maria of two years ago, director Louis Malle's new film, The Thief of Paris (currently showing at the International Cinema) is serious — but not too serious.

From a novel by Georges Darien, Malle has, with the invaluable assistance of set-designer Jacques Saulnier, constructed an exquisite period piece. The period is the 1890's in the France of the Third Republic. Ineptness and dishonesty has brought about the bankruptcy of de Lessups' Panama Canal Company and stirred up a wave of hate against Jewish financiers. Discredited by the scandal, the moderate republican government is also attacked by reactionaries and undermined by bomb-throwing anarchists and general social unrest. The old order is rotting away.

The blame for this decay goes to the Frenchman's favorite scapegoat: not the Jew but the bourgeois. In the film an orphan, Georges Randal (Jean-Paul Belmondo), is brought up by his uncle whom he despises as the embodiment of the upper middle class. The old man tries to educate his charge in the virtue of avarice: "Don't bite your nails, boy. If you must bite nails, bite somebody else's. Have some respect for your own property." When Georges returns from his military service, he finds uncle has defrauded him of his father's estate and is about to marry off his beloved cousin Charlotte (Genevieve Bujold). Out of spite and frustration Georges steals the fiance's family jewels and turns professional thief.

He goes about his business with a veneer of dandyism and near-wooden composure. But in many ways Randal is the typical Belmondo hero: daring, vulgar, virile. His burglary technique resembles El Cordobes' bull-fighting, making up in sheer boldness for what he lacks in sophisticated style. Wantonly smashing pains of glass and fine old furniture, he excuses himself: "Its a dirty job I do and I do it dirtily."

As it happens the times favor this kind of job. Since bankers are not to be trusted, money is kept in safes at home. There are some electric alarms but as yet they are unreliable. Wives and mistresses of the incautious rich are willing to sell tip-offs for a measure of financial independence. House-breakers are equipped with every newly-invented gadget from pocket jimmies to battery operated electric drills.

Ironically crime is so easy and so profitable that the thieves live as well as their victims, they are bourgeois in spite of themselves. Their ambitions are often laughably middle class: one fellow, an amateur painter, steals until he has saved enough for a trip to Venice and then retires. Georges is aware of the incongruity of the situation and ultimately rejects such a settled existence, although he does not mind passing for a gentleman. Thus he moves in a circle of uniform elegance; his world is corrupt but never squalid. The supposedly suppressed proletariat struggling for the eight hour day and the desperately poor driven to theft in order to eat are neither seen nor mentioned. This fact makes the highly-detailed, often satiric, occasionally cruel, portrait of the upper crust consistently delightful to watch and at the same time saves it from any real sting or serious message.

There is some talk of using burglary as a means of striking out in the name of social justice. Many of Randal's colleagues are or become anarchists, but for Georges' life is too good for him to think of destroying the system. He steals for money, for revenge, above all for the pure pleasure of stealing, but he never pretends to steal for principles or for humanity.

Like Clyde Barrow, Georges Randal can be seen as the product of a certain era. But Georges, despite the odd quail, manages to remain a part of the society that bred him while Clyde openly rebels against it. Randal is simply further proof of the corruption of his time, his opulence literal confirmation of anarchist Pierre Proudhon's maxim "Property is theft."

The Deluge and Before

By DAVID PAPE

When the roof literally falls in and you're not deterred, then you must be generally very good or particularly the Pocuili Ludique Societas.

They are back in West Hall again, not with Christmas Revels as they usually produce at this time of year, but with a staging of The Slaying of Abel and Noah's Flood from the 15th century Towneley Cycle. After the performance ends here it will be taken to Chicago for presentation to the annual meeting of the MLA (Modern Language Association.

As we have come to expect from Reiner Sauer's productions, there is a huge playing area in the middle of the hall, free-moving but clearly defined staging, and good drama mixed with delightful music, costume and dance. Thanks are in order to Ian Amos for the choreography, Francis Braunlich for the music, and Ann Hutchinson for the costumes.

The two plays form a continuous piece which amplifies on the Biblical sketches of Cain's first sin, God's vengeance on a world before the race of Cain, and His mercy to Noah after the Flood.

As written by the Wakefield Master, these plays are among the best medieval drama has to offer; and Mr. Sauer and his group have long ago shown that there is dramatic richness in those olde bokes.

The Biblical stories are developed by reference to humanity. Cain becomes our 'telawe', as Baudelaire was also to address us: Hypocrite lecteur, mon semblable, mon frère.

We can see why God rejected his offering, and we also feel the jealous indignation towards bleedin' Abel with his weird spiritualism. For the hard-handed, struggling farmer that Cain is, giving sacrifice to God is the utmost in ridiculous self-deprivation. For Cain, even if God does exist, all the talk about 'His bounty' is no more than claptrap that experience repudiates. And so in a moment the murder is done, and man is cast as a wanderer upon the face of the earth.

Skip Shand as Cain has proved to be a truly excellent actor; and Randy McLeor as Abel somehow captures a mystical experience in his devotion to God. David Klausner as Garcio, Cain's man was clownishly robust though tending towards the self-conscious.

In Noah's Flood, the humour is social as well as farical. Mrs. Noah (Bron Drainie) is a 15th century shrew who would rather go to town or do her spinning than get on the folly her old man built in the back yard. She is a lesson to the women on how to beshrew a husband; and Noah's retaliations present an appealing rebuttal on how to tame a wife.

The spectacle of this play is grand. Not only do we have vigorous acting, but an honest to goodness ark (Mrs. N. can't tell the front from the back) and a dance of animals. Mr. Sauer's sense of humour matches the playwright's: the increasingly chaotic dance of the beasts is suddenly brought to order by an astounding unicorn. As he dances in, even the lions kneel. He restores decorum and then leaves in majestic splendour. Porouck, 'e missed the boat!

The acting ability of these productions is always various. Cain, Abel and Noah were outstanding, while Noah's sons seemed as awkward as Huey, Dooey, and Looney. I've always felt that this element of the unpolished added just the right touch of sincerity to an ambitious but unpretentious production. After all, these plays were performed by craftsmen (carpenters and the like) and Shakespeare's portrayal of them in the Pyramus and Thisby episode of the Dream is probably close to its mark.

The plays are on during the afternoons of this and next week with evening performance on weekends. Not to be missed!

Corpus Spongiosi

By PAUL MACRAE

At times, one wonders what the Medsmen would do for humor without the sex and eliminative organs. At other times the '68 Daffydill, at Hart House theatre until tomorrow night, is good enough to answer that question — Medsmen produce the best light comedy and variety offering on campus so far this year.

But first the smut. Would you believe: — a ravishing young virgin ravished by three great apes and a Western sheriff — in a church?

— a real, live "Johnny-on-the-spot"?

— that most of Sigmund Freud's dreams were all wet?

— that physicians rarely lose their patients — the bodies are too large?

Many may find parts of the production extremely distasteful. For example, a long-thy skit records a group of student activists who have climbed to the fourteenth story of the still-skeletal Medical Complex on south campus, there to perform one of the basic physiological functions.

Indeed, portions of the audience seemed to agree that this was an appropriate form of tribute to the university as it has become. Unfortunately, the Review editor did not and you will have to attend the show to draw your own conclusions.

Fortunately, this kind of thing isn't all Daffydill has to offer. Among other treats it boasts four terrific singers (John, Bruce, John and Bill) and a number of apparently original and very funny songs.

The Impossible Years

By Arnold Rubenstein

The audience applauded before the curtain for the second act went up, they were still laughing as they left the theatre, and Sam Levene in "The Impossible Years" had hit Toronto with a show that will be remembered long after it has completed its current four-week engagement at the Royal Alexandra Theatre.

After seeing the show it is easy to understand why it had a two-year run on Broadway and was hailed by New York critics as the funniest comedy to come along in years.

Authors Boh Fisher and Arthur Marx have done a fine piece of work. They have written tightly and economically and the laugh lines flow one after another. Taking a simple premise, What's wrong with the younger generation? they surround it with a situation which is neither trite nor pretentious.

To deal with the problem of the younger generation we have Dr. Jack Kingsley, psychiatrist, currently writing a book on the problem of today's teenager.

All the action takes place in the Kingsley residence, a typical American upper middle-class establishment with a pool and Picasso thrown in.

The fact that the doctor is an authority in his field doesn't mean a thing when it comes to dealing with his teeny-bopping daughter Linda.

She loves rock 'n' roll music, parties and picnics. But she doesn't like keeping her room clean. It's a shambles. Her clothes are hung on the floor and the room is knee-deep in cigarette butts and dirty dishes. In fact Kingsley says that every time he goes into her room he feels like throwing up but if he did she wouldn't notice it anyway.

Linda just doesn't fit in at all with her old man's idea of how a teen-ager should behave. He can't understand why she hates gym class when all she has to do to pass is "show up and take a shower."

He doesn't even like her choice of boy friends. One of them who frequents the Kingsley residence to do "homework" with Linda, carries a pizza in his briefcase and all the work he is interested in doing is "going all the way" with her. He is diagnosed by the doctor as "a pornographic-pizza-pusher."

The actors have a beautiful script to work with and, with one or two exceptions, they take full advantage of it. Messrs. Fisher and Marx have given them characters which are never allowed to slip into caricature.

In the role of Dr. Kingsley, Sam Levene, to put it conservatively, is outstanding. The veteran of 40 years of theatre, in wringing the ultimate out of his comic role, was always focus of attention. Each take, each move, each line, was brilliantly executed.

What's more, in his dual role as actor-director, Mr. Levene brings with him a strong supporting cast. As Linda, Madeleine Fisher never fails to hold her own in the company of Mr. Levene. As his leading lady in the role of Mrs. Kingsley, Elizabeth Fleming gave a good comic performance.

However, the most memorable performances among the supporting players were those of Abe Vigoda as Dr. Harold Fleisher, the doctor who contracts his patients' maladies; Alexander Cort as Bartholomew Smuts, the coolest of cats (you've got to see this one to believe him); and Judith Tillman as the definitive gym instructress, Miss Hammer.

An extremely good and very, very funny show. Don't miss it!

Sea: Gentle Satire

By Allison Lang

Don't be fooled by promises of "grand Christmas entertainment" and "a feast of delight for the little folk". "Under the Sea to the Sunrise" has no reference to Santa Claus, nor does it present sufficient spectacle to spellbind big folk. Written and directed by Richard Roach it will be at the Poor Alex next week. For a play meant as pure enjoyment it was unnecessarily long, while a slight deficiency in content made several scenes verge on tedium.

Famine is rampant. The king, whose favorite phrase next to "I must be obeyed" is a petulant "I can't do anything" has gathered all the remaining food into his castle. His solution is optimistic speech and the prohibition of potato growing (the staple food). Teardrop, the hunchback court fool is moved to rebellion by the people's suffering. After distributing a sack of stolen potatoes to the starving prisoners, he escapes from the castle. The loss is discovered and though the country is being invaded, the matter is most important to the King. The Royal Inquisition on Potatoes discovers Teardrop's guilt. Through Teardrop's meeting with the sea maiden, the reason why the land is suffering is clarified. We learn that the people have forgotten their birthright, and have built walls between the sea and the land — hence the drought.

What begins as a gentle satire on misrule and blind injustice takes on a broader significance as the dramatist begins to reveal the cause of the land's misfortunes and the identity of the invaders becomes clearer. Warped values have removed the beauty, youth and freedom of the land; the perfect man has become a misshapen fool to whom only the children listen. Those fleeing the invaders have only escaped "from death to death". Because salvation is through water, the symbol-conscious have much to occupy themselves.

But the theme is dwelt on so much that the playwright approaches preaching. Unfortunately, the dialogue in the scenes with the sea maiden is limited to variations of flowery descriptions of atmospheric condition. The content is so slight that little is done to sustain the action. Lines such as "the sunrise through the foamy clouds" and "all is washed and sweetened by the scent of ocean wind" soon wear thin.

Here is the main fault of Mr. Roach. Restraint is needed to control length of these scenes and to limit the verbiage. Several of the performances and much of the action rise above these obvious shortcomings. The scene in the prison has suitable chilling atmosphere and terse dialogue, while the Royal Inquisition on Potatoes exploits the mock quality of the situation.

As the sensitive, disillusioned Teardrop, Roderick Beattie brought a quiet strength to a role which covers a fair range of emotion—gay, rebellious, forlorn and victorious. He never achieved, though, the commanding presence the part could have been given.

As the ineffective king, Christopher Crawford is often just that. His more comic scenes show him at his best though, at first annoyed by being awakened so early about the potato theft, he pronounces "when it's a matter of potatoes, it's never too early."

The consistent strength of Brian George's portrayal of Murd, the hypocrite who "nobly" betrays his best friend (for cabbage) is outstanding. As the philosopher, Douglas Lancaster's performance gradually acquires more authority. Without doubt, the two most engaging characters are the stalwart soldiers, Dimple (Douglas Watters) and Drastic (James Barras). The humour and convincing simple-mindedness they bring to their cleverly written parts are certainly highlights of the play.

This is a promising production of a light-hearted drama in a traditional form.

BLOC-NOTES

Book for a Birdbrain

The Birds of Britain. John d Green (photog.), David Tree (art direction). Collier-Macmillan Co., $11.95.

The Victorians had their "keepsakes" or "Books of Beauty" where pretty-pretty girls stared coyly out of gauzy settings. We have books like the Birds of Britain. Not only is it a girly book but it is a take-off on Blow-Up. John d Green (the photographer) is directly on the Blow-Up image. He's said to be a "wild, exciting advertising photographer. The daring young man on the air with the greatest ease... A normal working day is a burn-up. Impossible deadlines, crazy time schedules — frequently involving whistle stops around the world — leave him cool." He races cars, power boats, and is generally successful with woman (sez the book).

Other mementos of Blow-Up: several of the girls of the book appeared in the movie (Sarah Miles, Jane Fonda) and the entire selection is based on the Blow-Up milieu — the London world of modelling, boutiques, discotheques, and debutantes, all that "fizzing champagne" world that we readers don't belong to. Plenty of sadistic overtones too; girls being hanged, guillotined or spread with oil.

The book is dedicated to the British girl who has suddenly become "the most attractive, the most desirable, the most startling girl in the world". The 55 girls selected are supposed to show that. They're young swingers and etc.

The comments which accompany the text are quite incredible. Are these really "perfectly natural girls"?

One would like to think that the book is a spoof. It is, of sorts, on the public. Reading the hip title again, The Birds of Britain, you irresistibly feel like adding "Book for a birdbrain"

S. M

It is good to have the Gargoyle magazine back. But the issue which came out this week is not exactly the kind of gift that you want to find under your tree on Christ's birthday. It shakes the faith.

I almost wish I had taken Peter Rowe's advice on the first page: "The following will put you morally up tight and I suggest you do not waste your time reading it." For this issue is composed in such a way that it seems to give the effect of taking the reader on an awareness-expanding trip that comes dangerously close to a panic-filled freak-out. The most frightening article is Adam Czerechovic's penetrating vision of a horrifying contemporary wasteland that is running away with our lives:

"... and we're having a gay old lark and no one can understand why these people keep BLEEDING AND BLEEDING all over everybody and why the guts ooze all over the street so you slip and sometimes fall and everyone is laughing and giggling and drowning in the blood and the parade or something passes and i am a passenger..."

Catalyst appears to be aspiring to comfortable com-years ago by the deaths of Jargon and Torontonensis. Its debut is impressive if inoffensive, for the quality of the Catalyst is high, but it lacks much impact either in its format or in its contents.

Like too many English-Canadian literary periodicals, Catalyst appears to be aspiring to comfortable competence rather than to relevance. Many of the contributions sound like re-statements of Eliot, earnestly written, but designed for the Canada Council Grants committee. This makes for some fine writing, but little that is of any great importance.

Gargoyle and Catalyst leave Random looking like a tired young pup.

THEATRE

What a happy holiday season we'll have. Noah's Flood is at West Hall, Impossible Years is at the Royal Alec and, after Married Alive goes on to Boston, The Nutcracker Suite in all of its scenic splendour and choreographic sterility will leap up and down the O'Keefe Centre Stage. Fortune and Men's Eyes will return to The Central Library Theatre the day after Christmas. The week before Christmas will see Richard Reocb's play, Under the Sea to Sunrise at the Poor Alec. Don't know about you, but the season's pickings look fairly meagre. Oh well Sweet Charity, Neil Simons latest Musical comedy with Chita Rivera opens at the O'Keefe, January the twoth.

FILM

The Centennial Film Board under the presidency of Mary Omatsu will start a twelve week course on Tuesday, January 9, at 7:00 (place to be announced), when Allan King and Ron Evans will discuss Canadian filmmaking. Other speakers in the series include Patrick Watson, Julius Kohanyi, Robert Fulford, and Iain Ewing. The price which includes film workshop is $3.00. For more information call Mary Omatsu at 922-7796.

Sunday at the Memory Lane Silent Film Club, 602A Markham St., 923-2838 are Laurel and Hardy's Pardon Us with Chaplin's The Tramp. D. W. Griffith's Broken Blossom with Lillian Gish plays today and tomorrow at the Little Queen Vic, 801 Yonge St., 929-3027. Next week at the Electra Luis Bunuel's Viridiana and Francesco Rosi's The Moment of Truth will be shown. On December 27, 28, and 29, Fellini's best film (in my opinion) will have a programme to itself at the Electra, 362 College St. at Brunswick, 921-3922.

Carol Reed's great Third Man will be showing at the New Yorker with Roger Vadim's decidedly less great The Game Is Over. Man for all Seasons will soon leave the Fairlawn (I hear Scofield's excellent performance is now on record). Far From the Madding Crowd offer good holiday entertainment, but not for Thomas Hardy haters.

MUSIC

SPECULATIONS DEPT.: After the 1968-69 season, Leonard Bernstein will be leaving the New York Philharmonic. Now, although any connection between this fact and Toronto's music scene seems rather tenuous, it really isn't. For the TS's musical-director and conductor, Seiji Ozawa, is one of the six prime candidates for the position at New York. In fact, as the Times' critic, Harold Schomberg put it, "Ozawa... is undoubtedly a comer".

Other candidates on the list are Pierre Boulez, Colin Davis, Carlo Maria Giulini, Zubin Mehta, Lorin Maazel and Stanislaw Skrowaczewski. But the New York' public's demand for musicianship, youthfulness (not necessarily youth), artistic panache, and sex-appeal place Ozawa high on the list. However, another criterion can be brought into play—recordings. If in the next four years the TS makes more recordings with Columbia Ozawa's position will be all the more solidified. And of course, by that time I will be looking for a job locally... z boehm

DINING

"Pick and choose but don't spend much—" is the easily followed advice at the top of "The Hind Quarter's" menu.

Under the same management as the "Provencal" this new restaurant on St. Thomas St. features the same fine food at prices more within the reach of a student.

An old English atmosphere is created by heavy oak ceiling beams, antique copper utensils on the walls, and costumed waitresses.

Beef is not the only item on the menu. They also serve an excellent baked onion soup, Ramequin pie (a main course dish for 50 cents) and various seafoods. Of little interest to students is the fact that the establishment is licensed.

"The Hind Quarter" is reportedly interested in attracting the student crowd, and deserves consideration as an after-theatre spot. It's open from 11:45 a.m. to 1 a.m. Tuesday to Saturday, and until 9 p.m. on Sunday and Monday.

Library staff wants union representation

By SUE HELWIG

Non-professional employees of the University of Toronto Library have been trying since last March to form a union.

The 380 employees involved work as photocopy service operators, book purchasers, keypunch operators, filing clerks and typists.

David Aylward and five other employees first made contact in March with the Canadian Union of Public Employees, which the group seeks to join.

A month later they ran into difficulty when they applied for certification by the Ontario Labor Relations Board.

Their application was challenged by the university's board of governors on the grounds that library employees did the same kinds of jobs as the 1,800 other office workers employed by the university.

Aylward says the library staff is unhappy about their salaries and feel that as a union they will be able to work more efficiently with professional librarians.

"The low salaries have a direct effect on the quality of service the library can provide," he explained in an interview.

"Because of low salaries there is a constant turn-over in staff. This causes a great deal of inefficiency in running the library.

"I know that new people are not paid enough to live on and that they will leave shortly.

"In the circulation department for instance, one quarter of the staff is always in the process of being trained."

Aylward feels that unionization would provide beneficial opposition that would improve efficiency.

"We hope to establish better contact between professionals and non-professionals to work towards a more smoothly running system.

"The trend seems to be for professionals to take over jobs which were formerly handled by non-professionals we hope to establish our position by means of a union."

The Labor Relations Board now has appointed an investigator to determine whether the library group represents a distinct "community of interest." The board of governors doesn't think it is.

This means that the library group had to prove that office employees from other sections could not do the library employees' jobs.

Arthur Riseley, the assistant director of the CUPE said in an interview that the hearing before the labour board may be held at the end of December.

"We will not have a complete decision within the next few weeks," he added.

The job descriptions prepared by the investigator give detailed analyses of each employee's job.

The binding service, for instance, employs 21 persons who, "prepare material to be sent to commercial binderies, mend material, and put material into pamphlet binders."

The 21 employees do the following jobs: eight prepare books, monographs, Xerox copies, and serials before they are sent out; three check the material when it is returned; one packs and unpacks books and does some mending; one is hired as a typist; six work as menders; one supervises and one is trained to replace him.

Aylward said the union organizers have effectively proven that the library is autonomous in one respect:

"We are autonomous in hiring and firing of library staff, but the labour board has final say in the matter," he explained.

He said organizers have run into difficulty because there is no precedent for such a union and the labor board is wary of making a decision.

Harris defends Innis Council decision

By LOUIS ERLICHMAN

College councils are justified in preventing anything they feel is not in the best interests of the college, says Innis College Principal Robin S. Harris.

"They are responsible for the general welfare of the college and college property," he explained in an interview Wednesday.

The Innis College Council vetoed Monday a proposal by the Innis College Student Society to set up a bar in the college for a John A. Macdonald birthday party.

Principal Harris said the procedure followed was no different from that generally used.

"Permission to use college property is always required from the college council."

The principal said he had opposed the "bar" motion because "it would divide the college into two groups," and "discriminate against the majority of students who are under 21."

"While technically legal, it might be very difficult to control and might encourage illegal acts in a publicly-supported institution."

He defended the creation of a disciplinary sub-committee, saying it was just a "fact-finding" body, which would report to the council.

"I don't believe in double jeopardy," he continued. "Once it's clear that a person will be disciplined by the courts, it will not be necessary for the council to take action."

"Anyway it's purely hypothetical now since there has not been a discipline case at Innis in three years and three months."

Harris also expressed his opposition to student members on college councils acting as "instructed delegates" forced to "represent the student point of view."

"Students are valuable in bringing a different type of experience to the councils," he said.

But, he added, they should not be compelled to take a certain stand any more than a mathematics professor would have to represent the opinion of the mathematics department on council.

McGill wants English at UGEQ meetings

MONTREAL (Special)—The McGill Students' Union yesterday passed a motion affirming "in principle that all members of UGEQ should be free to converse in either of the two official languages" of Quebec at the union's official meetings.

The official language of UGEQ, the Quebec students union, is French.

"I will not necessarily bring it up at the UGEQ congress as a constitutional amendment," said external vice-president Richard Burkart who introduced the motion.

"I do not intend to precipitate a confrontation. I will try to get all-round support," he said.

Michael Blau council member who was strongly in favour of the motion felt the students' council must assert the rights of English Canadians.

He said if Burkart doesn't bring it to UGEQ as a constitutional amendment "we ought to force him to."

PHE A, with Butler in goal, emasculated Sr. Engineering, 2-0, on goals by Wiloughby and Mallory.

Vic 11, led by Wright (2), and Dennison, felled Forestry, 3-1. Swindle, one of the shiftest stick-handlers on the ice, scored for the Ents.

PHE A, led by Crouter's fine 22-point effort, defeated UC, 51-44. Feldman had 9 for UC.

New Gnus is good Gnus, edging Erindale 40-38. Anderson and Tonnelly had 10 for New, Lochinvar Sprogis 15 (ellipsis) for Erindale.

Business topped Jr. Engineering 36-31. Mohinari scored 11 for Business; Ingle and Homer led Jr. Skule with 10 each.

Vic 11 followed up their epic 42-25 conquest of UC 11 with a superbly cathartic 35-21 Triumph over Pharmacy. Blacklock had 17 against UC; Albert replied with 12. Hawer was top Vic man against Pharmacy with 8.

Paced by Gordon's 14 points Scarborough snuck by UC 11, evilly leering, 37-34. Stern had 10 for UC 11.

Med B, topped by McCain's 10 points, (no, damn it, make that "the 10 points of McCain"), crushed Pharm (How you gonna keep them down on the Pharm ...?), 34-19. Fejuk scored 9 for Pharm.

VOLLEYBALL

There is little point in giving the scores of Volleyball games. They have the sound of surrealistic cribbage matches (15-8, 15-1, 15-13). I think a brief resume of who beat whom is sufficient.

GOOD GRIEF!! STILL MORE INTERFAC ROUNDUP

By GELLIUS
HOCKEY

SMC strengthened their position at the top of Group 1 (cf. Group 1 standings) edging second-place Law, 2-1, McGuinness and Donavan scored for the Irish, Park tallied for Law.

Mark Emin's goal stood up dramatically to give Vic 1 a 1-0 victory over Sr. Engineering. Merritt earned the shut-out (note manly refusal to say "Merritt merited").

UC edged SMC B 3-2. Cleland (2) and Brunskill scored for UC; Morrison and Christianson replied (metaphor) for (internal rhyme) SMC B

PHE B gleefully ground Knox into the earth, 7-1. Craigie had the hat-trick (technical term) for PHE; Sereda, Hughes, Nelson, Ashton added goals. McDonald scored for the School of Hard Knox.

Curriveau and Raino scored for Scarborough as the Stickmen (Men from the Sticks) tied Meds, 2-2. The Great Burl scored for Meds.

Architecture, led by Orlyved, Hartley and Bakker, topped Jr. Engineering 3-1. McCallum hit for Jr. Skule.

Dents, with Duggan (2) and Smith scoring, downed Pharmacy, 3-2. Halliday and Pitman (while the team was short-handed) scored for Pharm.

BASKETBALL

SMC A trampled Meds, 51-31. Longpre led the Irish with 14; Lewis had 10 for Meds. Lloyd Rossman scored 4 points before ascending to Heaven in a Flaming Pillar.

Trinity crushed Scarborough, 42-25. Scott had 12 for Trinity; O'Connor 10 for Scar.

wicz' 11 points and letters, hassled Dents, 31-27. Agar had 9 for the losers (Dents; q.v.)

Vic was going to sacrifice a virgin for Tom Faulkner before their game with Sr. Engineering, but Faulkner was the only virgin they could find. They won anyway, 43-30, led by Evans' 17 points. Sleky's had 8 for Skule, who satisfied themselves with burning a baby to Zeus.

Law ate Business alive, 44-30. Shivas hooped 14 for the winners; Molinari was sharp for SOB with 13.

Architecture mutilated UC 11 75-23 and fed the corpse to the Harpies. Kohn's 28 points was the tops in Interfac play this season (followed, I guess, by UC 11). Kraftchik had 11 for UC.

SMC B defeated Jr. Engineering, 41-30. Our reporter, Quertyiopus, was turned into an Impetigo, a type of South African antelope, by a wicked Witch, and we are thus unable to give you the names of the leading scorers.

Squash Blues win, lose in US

Varsity squash Blues brought home a 2-3 record from the United States last weekend against some of the toughest college competition they have ever faced.

In three days Blues took on Wesleyan ranked number 11; Yale, no. 5; Harvard, no. 2; Amherst, no. 4 and Williams, no. 7. Blues themselves are ranked no. 10 in the States. All rankings are based on last years performance.

Blues' recorded their victories over Wesleyan, 9-0 and Williams, 7-2. It was only the large number of miles logged sitting in a car that prevented Blues from improving on their record.

They lost to Yale 7-2, but three matches were lost in the fifth game including one by second seed Vic Harding who went down 18-17 in a well-played match against his ambidextrous Yale opponent.

At Harvard, Blues came up against the four best college squash players in the U.S. and put up a strong battle before succumbing 8-1.

This match took its toll later in the day when Blues played their arch-rivals Amherst but were only able to win two matches against the tough Amherst squad.

Captain Gary Miller playing in the number eight position had Blues' best record winning four of five matches. The only other Blues with winning records were Vic Harding, 3-2 and Mike Zimmerman in the no. 6 position who was also 3-2.

Others were: Frank Buck 1-4, Mike Gardiner 2-3, Dave Gunn 2-3, Terry Swinton 2-3, Howie Fluxgold 2-3, D'Arcy Martin 2-3 and Harvey Derington 1-3.

Blues' next match is tonight, when they travel to London to take on University of Western Ontario.

WHY

There's more than fabric superiority in Gant. In addition, "needled-into the warp and woof of every Gant shirt" — there's flair-fit show — three vital inredients that make all the difference when a man wears a Gant.

We chose Gant because they take shirt making seriously. They're hard to please (like we are) when it comes to fit of collar, its roll, its profile—how much it shows above the suit collar. They're fastidious about the way the body of the shirt drapes and folds. All must integrate to achieve that viable ingredient which gives comfort and aplomb. In substance, Gant shirts are keyed to the discerning tastes of well groomed men who appreciate quality. These men are our customers.

Blues trample Mustangs 6-2

By PAUL CARSON
Honorary Sportsc

LONDON, — Right-winger Bob McClelland maintained his torrid scoring pace last night as Varsity Blues overpowered Western Mustangs 6-2 in a scrappy display of unentertaining shinny.

McClelland notched twice bringing his season's total to 11 goals in only six games. The hard-checking veteran gets another chance to pad his total tonight as Blues battle Laval in Varsity Arena.

Last night's Blues simply had too much muscle and fire-power for Mustangs to cope with.

Varsity's first line of Paul Laurent between Ward Pass and Gord Cunningham finally played up to their potential and dominated play, throughout the game.

In the first period, they produced three breakaways, but were foiled by clever saves from veteran Western netminder Gary Bonney.

However, in the third stanza, the line's picture passing produced the inevitable result—two brilliant goals by Laurent as the trio passed the puck around, above and through the befuddled Western defence. Blues' other goals came on blue-line slapshots. Jim Miles powdered a scorching drive into the upper corner in the second period, and with thirteen minutes left, Peter Spever slid home a shot that never left the ice.

As for McClelland, how many superlatives can you use to describe his brilliant play so far this season?

Converted from centre to right wing by coach Tom Watt, he teams with Murray Stroud and Brian Jones to form an almost "text-book" line that attacks and back-checks with equal effectiveness.

McClelland broke the hearts of the 800 Western fans by opening the scoring with a screened wrist shot early in the game, and returned later to count Varsity's fifth goal on a goal-mouth tip-in.

Defenceman Doug Jones retained his title as chief Varsity muscleman with a series of crunching body-checks coupled with a deft use of his elbow pads.

Biggest Western victim was rearguard Rich Lauzon. Jones knock him into dreamland, removing two front teeth in the process. The ineptness of the officials defies description. The linesmen were continually behind the play while the referee ignored the most violent penalties until he finally lost control of the game.

The fans, ah yes, the fans. Thirty or so Western students, stewed to the gills, waltzed about the ice between periods during the rink attendants to throw them off (They didn't).

After the game, one besotted Stang supporter faced off with Varsity's supply of sticks.

He never made it to the door, as spare goalie Pete Adamson gave chase and felled the idiot with a flying tackle worthy of Mike Wright or Riivo lives.

BLURLINE FLASHES:

Western goals came from John Hospodar and Bill McAlpine . . . Varsity out-shot Stangs 27-23 . . . goaltender John Wrigley made eight or nine outstanding saves . . . game-time tonight is eight chimes . . . Blues beat Laval in November 11-3 but Rouge et Or are better than that.

Our beloved, dynamic, inventive, bearded, unbearded, courageous, literate, metaphysical, polemic and generally cheerful Sportsführer, R. (for Rodney) Mickleburgh was not with us last night. This night of all nights, our Christmas-election special, found the light of our lives sick (ha!), in bed (ha, ha!), at home in Newmarket (whatever that is! ! !). But he leaves for us and for you, faithful followers, a cheery Yuletide message, to wit . . .

Basket Blues open 67-68 season tonight

By JIM MORRISON

Varsity cagers venture for the first time into SIBL '67 warfare tonight with a game in London against Western Mustangs. And the match, like the league itself this year, promises to be an exciting one.

Coach Jerry Gonser's Mustangs are weaker than last year's second place finishers due to the loss of their All-Star guard Bob Horvath, who finished second to Blues' Jim Hoiowachuk in scoring with a 19 point average.

Horvath was the key man in the Western attack, and stopping him was the only way to victory over Mustangs—something Windsor and Mac alone were able to accomplish.

However, the remaining Mustang lettermen are all returning, and with most league teams missing one or more top players, Western's loss may be no-one's gain. Blues will still have difficulty disposing of a team that beat them 96-81 and 101-60 last year.

Heading the list of Mustang lettermen is All-Star center Marnix Heersink, who finished right behind Horvath in team scoring with 17 points-per-game. Heersink, however, missed the Guelph match and several exhibition games with an injured knee. If he is unable to play tonight, which is a possibility, Varsity's hand will be greatly strengthened.

Despite the fact that he was playing alongside Horvath, Mustang guard Greg Poole managed all-star honourable mention last season. This year he emerges from the shadow and teams with boldover Mac Bury to form a still-potent backcourt combination. Add quality forwards like Doug Mortou, Bob Larose, and Dave McGuffin, and you still come up with a contender.

Varsity's chief weapon in the game tonight is the momentum they picked up last weekend against the University of Rochester. If guards Bruce Dempster and Mark White perform the way they did against American opposition the game will be very close.

Blues can also count on Arvo Neidre and John Hadden, both of whom missed the Rochester swing, to add balance to the attack.

Others making the tip are guards Albie Garbe and Larry Trafford, forwards Mark Slater, Glen Wilkie, and Mike Kirby, and much improved center Brian Shaw.

While Western at a glance appears to have the mightier array of talent, the result of the game will probably hinge on the presence or absence of Heersink.

A fairy merry Christmas and a sadistic slap-happy New Year to you all.

Womens teams stage own McGill Weekend

By JOAN STEVENSON

U of T's womens intercollegiate athletic teams staged their own version of the McGill Weekend December 8th and 9th, and like the earlier male counterpart, it was a winning occasion.

Seven Varsity teams made the journey to McGill; only the game but outclassed badminton crew returned without a victory.

Paced by the accurate shooting of Violet Shadd, Virginia Hurst and Jean McLean, the Basketbelles easily swept aside their opposition. The Intermediates defeated Macdonald College 25-14 while the Seniors overcame McGill 27-20.

Varsity curlers capitalized on McGill errors to record a rare whitewash over the red-faced Redwomen 11-0.

Varsity's Fencettes took the team title but Sandy Anderson and Betty Bilslein were unable to dethrone McGill's individual champion, Sheila Neysmith.

Varsity's Senior Volleybelles, OQWAA representatives at last year's Canadian Intercollegiate Games in Winnipeg, romped to a series of exciting and impressive victories.

The Intermediate volleyball team followed suit, recording three straight wins.

Marion Ferguson led a well-coached archery contingent to a sharp-shooting triumph as each team member average over 500 (out of a possible 648) points per round.

To complete the successful weekend, U of T bowlers used Sandy Cathcart's striking performance to handily defeat their unlucky hosts.

Senate considers student seats

By PAUL CARSON

The University of Toronto student body may be granted seven positions on the university senate.

The senate will discuss a recommendation from its executive committee proposing that seven student representatives elected from the general student body be granted full voting membership.

Robin Ross, registrar of the university and secretary to the senate, said yesterday that he expects the senate to deal with the recommendation at its next regular meeting next Friday.

"At present, the senate will consider the seating of seven students but the actual number is liable to change pending further discussions," Mr. Ross said.

"There has been no firm decision as yet as to the method of election."

To facilitate debate among its 196 members the senate several years ago adopted a modified form of parliamentary procedure.

Accordingly, last month the recommendation was given "first reading", received only general discussion and was referred to a committee for further study.

Next Friday the recommendation will be thoroughly debated in "committee of the whole", and if approved on "second reading" it will be passed on to the board of governors for ratification.

When implemented the resolution will make Toronto the seventh of Ontario's 14 universities to have some form of student representation on top-level academic bodies.

The others are Queens, Brock, Western, Guelph, Windsor and York. SAC Vice-President John Treleven said SAC was not interested in student representation on the senate "unless this implies full voting positions for students on the important senate committees, such as library and bookstore."

In reply, Registrar Ross said "every member of the senate is both eligible and required to serve on committees".

"I believe the senate would wish student members to serve on some committees," he added.

A breakdown of senate membership reveals six separate areas of representation:

- 79 members of the teaching staff elected by the faculty councils of the various colleges, faculties and schools in the university;
- 49 alumni elected by all Varsity graduates;

- 5 representatives of the secondary schools in Ontario;

- 7 appointees of various professional licensing bodies such as the Royal College of Dentistry or the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons;

- 15 representatives of the federated universities and colleges;

- 41 ex-officio members including Acting President J. H. Sword, Chancellor O. M. Solandt, Provost Moffat Woodside, Henry Borden as chairman of the board of governors, the various faculty deans and college principals.

The seven student representatives would bring total membership to 203.

Stephen Langdon (III Trin), a SAC representative, said "the whole governmental structure" of the university must be overhauled to give any real meaning to student membership on the senate.

"The power exercised by the university administrators should be put on a democratic basis," says Langdon.

Mr. Ross disagreed with those who contend the present board-senate structure allows administrators to acquire "inordinate power".

"I'm an administrator and I most certainly don't think I've got anything close to 'inordinate power'."

Insanity strikes as UC unveils Babel

Tickets for University College's mass psychosis festival, Babel: Society as Madness and Myth, will go on sale Monday.

"We imagine tickets will sell as rapidly as last year's psychedelic festival tickets," said Hershel Ezrin (IV UC), publicity director. Last year 90 per cent of the tickets were sold in the first three days.

"To show you how optimistic we are, we have recruited people to sell tickets for only three days."

The festival begins Jan. 22 with Samuel Beckett's play Waiting for Godot, directed by Henry Tarvain. It will be presented in the Central Library Theatre until Jan. 29.

The first session on the myths of North America is on Wednesday evening of the festival week. The session will begin with an environmental film about mass psychosis produced for the festival.

Edgar Z. Friedenber, author of The Vanishing Adolescent, will speak on the effect of the "system" on adolescents. Gad Horowitz, a political science professor at the University of Toronto, will discuss Canadian social ethics.

Society as propaganda, advertising and the creation of myths by media will be the subjects of the second session on Thursday evening. The speakers will be Vance Packard, author of The Status Seekers and The Hidden Persuaders, and Harley Parker, a communications expert and an associate of Marshall McLuhan at Fordham University.

A film festival featuring National Film Board and underground films will begin Friday and continue throughout the weekend.

SAEWV protests campus war recruiting

By BRIAN JOHNSON

About 100 students from universities across Canada decided last week to hold a "bi-national day of protest" Feb. 9 against campus "complicity" in Vietnam and to organize a demonstration at the Liberal Party Convention April 3-6.

Delegates at the Student Assembly to Drive the Warmakers off Campus formulated the decisions after two days of meetings and workshops held after Christmas in Hart House, and a demonstration against Canadian Industries Ltd.

The Assembly was organized by the Student Association to End the War in Vietnam.

Other proposals of the steering committee's report were: organization of high school students by SAEWV; a cross-Canada tour by a Vietnam veteran; a speaking tour by a member of the SAEWV working committee.

"The university is very much a part of Canadian complicity in Vietnam," said SAEWV Chairman Joe Young of York University.

"We must stop war recruiting and war research on campus, and to do this we must link the anti-war movement with the student power movement."

Throughout the conference delegates faced the problem of establishing a "power base" in the student body by radicalizing student councils, rousing students from apathy and getting greater publicity.

Marlie Ritchie (II Vic), head of the U of T Committee to End the War in Vietnam, praised their recent Dow sit-in as an issue that aroused 50 per cent of the students from apathy to voting in the ensuing SAC election.

"For the first time students can understand how the war affects them directly," she declared.

Socialist Club President Harry Kopyto, of Osgoode Hall Law School, agreed students have taken the first steps and urged further action:

"As Johnson escalates his dirty and immoral war, it is our responsibility to stop him." His voice rose to a frenzy.

"Every time Hellyer comes to the campus to tell us 'The war is paying for your education,' we will tell him where to go. Untill!"

There was a round of applause and a few whistles.

Gary Perly, a non-student who claims membership in the National Liberation Front, said American imperialism is running our universities. Phil Macainey (Windsor) discussed a different kind of imperialism:

"There's a very high VD rate among the GI's in Vietnam," he said, "because there's a lot of guys, a lot of chicks, and a lot of booze—you know . . ."

Knowing smiles.

"The United States has sent their own hookers over there with the U.S. government stamp of approval," he added.

Loud laughter.

The second day of the Assembly was highlighted by a visit from Professor Laurier LaPierre, former co-host of the now defunct This Hour Has Seven Days, and a national NDP vice-president.

In a 10-minute speech, Prof. LaPierre fully supported the assembly and harshly condemned American involvement in the war in Vietnam. He could easily be distinguished

McMaster GSU president wins support in alleged misconduct charge by dean

HAMILTON (VNS) — The executive of the graduate student union at McMaster University has ordered its president to defy the university disciplinary committee.

David Guy, the graduate student president, has been requested to appear before the disciplinary committee Jan. 17 for an alleged misconduct against his dean.

Guy, a columnist for The Silhouette, has been involved in plans to build a McMaster student centre and student residence.

The misconduct charge arose after an exchange of letters between Guy and Dr. Melvin Preston, the dean of graduate studies.

Dr. Preston criticized a constitutional procedure of the graduate student union executive and Guy responded by labelling the dean's behaviour as "dishonest and reprehensible" in a report to his fellow graduate students.

A recent general meeting of the union decided to withdraw the words "dishonest and reprehensible." Many members felt "in the interest of co-operation between administration and graduates such strong language was ill advised."

A further motion refusing to "affirm their belief in the integrity and honesty of the dean" passed with a 36-vote majority.

About 150 students have declared their support for Guy's original allegation by signing a petition.

Guy has been instructed to appear before the disciplinary committee in person, but he may be represented by legal counsel, call witnesses and make submissions.

The union has appointed Vincent Kelly, a Toronto lawyer, as counsel for Guy.

Porter is new Sociology professor

Professor John Porter, the author of The Vertical Mosaic and a former research associate here, has been appointed a professor in the department of sociology, effective next July 1.

The Vertical Mosaic received both public and academic acclaim, and Prof. Porter won the MacIver Award of the American Sociological Association in 1966 "for his comprehensive analysis of stratification in Canadian society, and his contribution to macrosociology."

Prof. Porter took his BSc at the London School of Economics. He was a Canada Council Senior Fellow in 1957-58.

He is also the author of Canadian Social Structures: A Statistical Profile, and a co-editor of Canadian Society: Sociological Perspectives.

Prof. Porter has been on the staff of Carleton University since 1949, where he has been director of the social sciences division since 1963.

'Canadian history is fun, fun, fun!'

By PAUL CARSON

A contingent of 2,500 American historians descended on Toronto last week for the annual convention of the American Historical Association.

After 81 scholarly sessions, 11 formal luncheons and countless cocktail parties and receptions, they went their separate ways apparently convinced that Canadian history and historians are not as dull as one might have thought.

Welcoming the delegates at the main convention gathering, Professor J.M.S. Careless, the president of the Canadian Historical Association, said the first visit of an American group to Toronto "produced a great Canadian tradition — burning Parliament buildings."

"You Americans visited us in 1813, somebody dropped a match, and down came government house," said Prof. Careless, the former chairman of the University of Toronto's history department.

"The tradition of burning government buildings soon caught on, and in 1820 we did it all on our own," he added.

Other cases of unscheduled demolitions listed by Prof. Careless included legislative assembly buildings in Montreal, Quebec and Ottawa.

Prof. Careless admitted the discourse on bureaucracy burning was "an irrelevancy designed to establish my historical credentials and prove that Canadian history is fun, fun, fun."

During one of the closing sessions, he said Canadian historiography has produced expectations and enthusiasms out of touch with reality.

"There has been too much concern with the concept of nation building."

Class discontent has usually been expressed in a regional context as the trend to metropolitanism has enhanced regionalism and provincial power structures, Prof. Careless explained.

An "outside view" of Canadian problems was presented by Philippe Aubert de la Rue of the Centre d'Etudes de Politique Etrangere in Paris.

Quebec political leaders adopted the tactics of "a constitutional guerrilla war" to obtain concessions from the federal government, he said.

The constitutional system devised in 1867 was not well suited to the particular territorial situation of Canada with its expanse of disconnected areas especially in the North, he said.

During the question period, Laurier Lapierre, a national NDP vice-president, took issue with Dr. de la Rue's description of "the slow evolution of ties between Quebec and France."

"Is it not possible that de Gaulle is exploiting Quebec's ambitions to suit his own foreign policy objectives?" Prof. Lapierre asked.

"Is de Gaulle willing to pay the price in foreign aid for an independent Quebec?"

"French policy requires a strong Canada to counter the influence of the United States," Dr. de la Rue replied.

This is Bob Parkins (standing). He is general manager of The Varsity. He is pictured here bringing down his wrath on Paul MacRae. But it's one of the last times. Last week he was named 1968-69 field secretary for Canadian University Press at the annual CUP conference in Vancouver. That means U of T has almost seen the last of him. The Varsity figured elsewhere in Vancouver, MacRae was elected president of CUP's Ontario region. The Varsity also agreed to play host to next year's CUP conference. And it made a living legend out of four-oh-two and five-oh-one. But it was only second in competition for CUP's Southam Trophy for general excellence. The Ubyssy won the trophy — for the seventh straight time. So The Varsity helped a cause which resulted in trophy competitions being abolished. Fortius conamur.

interested in journalism??

Don't waste our time. We want and need people to write for The Varsity this term, we don't want and don't need people who:

- want to impress their friends with their names on top of brilliantly-written stories even though they've never written newspaper copy before. Bylines come with work, and you'll do more anonymous stories than you'll like with this attitude.

- are looking for a social group. We have Varsity parties which we think are pretty good. We normally have fun on production nights and, believe it or not, most of us like each other. But if we do, it's because we all have to work like hell—you'll be expected to do the same.
- quit easily. You'll come up to the office to apply, you'll find the atmosphere friendly but distant, you'll feel anonymous. We may not even have a story to give you and you'll have to come back again. We'll give you rewrites until you are sick of them, and they probably won't get in anyway. You'll be up late, miss supper, get home late, louse up your school-work.

About 150 people filled out "I'd like to work" forms last fall. So far maybe one-quarter of these have shown up at all. Since we do try to talk to everyone who comes in, we wasted a lot of time. Ours.

Some never showed up. Some came and couldn't hack it. Some wanted to come but wanted us to call them first. If you are in the latter category, don't wait. We don't want people who have to be phoned to come in.

If you're really interested, you'll show. We don't have to phone. If you're interested you're not going to tell us, "Well, I'd like to work for you. How about next week?" If you're interested you'll do the crap stories we give you, learn how to write copy, and graduate to good stories (with real bylines for your friends.)

That's the kind if person we want. Experience is not necessary — you'll get that. If you've got the time, so do we. So don't waste it. There's somebody up here most the day if you want to talk. No obligation. 91 St. George, second floor.

dropping out

Darcy Martin dropped out of university the last day of last term and today lies somewhere in Mexico. Except for a brief visit to the cold city, he expects to stay in Mexico for a while.

Tough to think about, isn't it? Especially since you know you'll have to confront your own conscience during reading week and your capabilities the last weeks of April. If you're a normal student, you probably think about dropping out yourself occasionally. But you never do it and don't really know why.

Darcy had the guts to do what we all think about. You might say he took the easy way out and that quitting is no answer. He should at least have finished the year he started and then — if still necessary — taken a year off. His mother might have commented that he is wasting a year he desperately needs for his future.

Nonsense. There's always time to stop and look around a little and ask yourself why you're here. That's dangerous thinking, mind you, because most of you won't find a good answer. So, its better you don't think about that.

Get back to Darcy who may have been afraid of failing his year and rather than face failure or the work to avoid it pulled out. That may be the case and you only have to look at the amount of school work he did last term and the amount of time he spent on his duties as SAC's Cultural Affairs Commissioner to find evidence to say that. And to reassure yourself you can dismiss him as a lazy-young man

But he was in third-year Modern History and no one seriously believes he will fail that course (or any other post first-year course). An unbelievably small amount of work strategically chosen will take anyone through and someone may even think him an intellectual.

Fears of academic failure may play a part but the person who waits until his third-year of university isn't a likely candidate for such failure. He may only have come to realize that university really isn't where it's at, at all — a truly shattering revelation.

It's especially shattering if the ideal of the scholar community has been idealized as much as it has in our society. It is very likely that today's dropout is more sensitive to real education than the person who stays in, gets A's, and goes on to graduate school and becomes a classified scholar. The problem with today's scholars is that they are career men; they don't question any more. They talk to each other only and even then don't bother to listen.

There's a sterile world in academia these days but society doesn't offer an exciting alternative. The technocratic and bureaucratic society builds its imagination into IBM machines.

That's the society we're all being sucked into while we play this funny game of answering questions for marks. Not much effort is needed and maybe, just maybe, Darcy Martin realized that merely passing courses isn't enough, when the standards are so low.

It's a necessary stage for him to pull out and take his experience first hand and at his leisure — not at the rate set by some curriculum committee.

The tragedy is that Darcy will be back. Not because university will have changed or that his mind will have changed about the relevancy of university, but because society requires him to bear a degree. When he's back the second time, dropping out will no longer be an alternative and the system will smack its lips with the deed accomplished.

In a free society you're free to drop out any time—and you probably should while you're still young—but don't ever imagine you'll get away with it. You might never contribute anything important to society, but society has to tame you so you can continue growing old.

an american view

Dear Sir:

I had occasion to read the November 22, 1967 edition of your newspaper while visiting relatives in Toronto. As a citizen of the USA I found your editorial "When human life becomes a matter of convenience" juvenile and insulting, and as a lawyer, I found the principles it espoused foolish and downright dangerous. Your comments on the "Dow issue" are good evidence that there is merit in the axiom: The fact that one writes well does not necessarily mean one can think well.

If you harbor a truly sincere hatred for those objects in society which kill and maim, why have you concentrated your meager efforts on such a poor example as napalm? Why not go after really big game such as the manufacturers of automobiles, cigarettes, rye whiskey or a myriad of other far more effective killers. Surely you realize that napalm's contribution to the world's daily carnage is minuscule to say the least.

The answer of course is obvious. For you and your fellow children napalm is a symbol—a symbol of your ill-conceived and naive anti-Americanism. Combining the latter with the perennial need of the emotionally and intellectually immature to have some cause celebre to serve as an excuse for ignoring life and its responsibilities, you emerge as a slightly sophomoric and not at all formidable spokesman for a noisy but rather shallow cause. The fact that so many faculty people join you in your antics should afford you no solace; academia has traditionally attracted to its ranks a host of misdirected souls who though unequipped to confront the competitive challenge of the real world, spend their lives meting out much criticism but few meaningful solutions.

As to the real thrust of your position — damn the USA whether she be right or wrong — my country needs no poor defense from me. However, although as a Republican I am no supporter of President Johnson, I suggest that time may well vindicate him for his position in Vietnam. Indeed, there may be some degree of virtue in a nation being willing to follow the strength of its convictions notwithstanding a continuous and abusive chorus of criticism.

An open letter about the Placement Service

Dear Students,

What do you look for in a job?

It's nice if it pays, that's obvious.

Location matters: one man wants to stay in the city, another wants a change of scene. The nature of the work matters: laboratory versus typewriter versus open air, and so on.

You look for an employer who offers what you want in the way of pay and conditions of work, and you strike a bargain. You put yourself at his disposal; you agree to let him decide what you're to do. Right?

We think there's more to it. You probably do care what your work accomplishes. A doctor can save people's lives; a teacher can teach people; an engineer can give people the fruits of science. They get pay, but they also get and deserve gratitude for what they've given. A special satisfaction goes with this.

On the other side, there are the dirty jobs, jobs where you grab what's in it for you, and the public be damned. Jobs of which you might say, "I wouldn't do that no matter what they paid me." Or, "I couldn't live with myself."

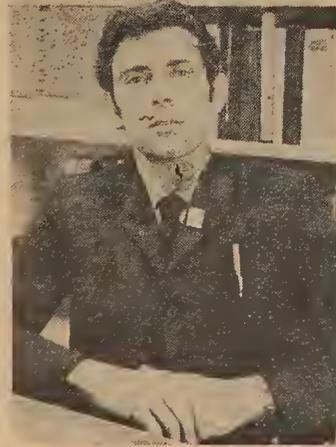

You couldn't live with yourself if you were making the Zyklon B that was gassing millions of Jews. No matter what they paid you.

That particular job offer isn't allowed on the market any more. But think carefully about the ones that are! It's not enough that your employer offers you what you want; you've got to think also whether he's directing you to do things you want done — because it's your time that's being bargained—your life.

That's what the placement service protest is about.

The biggest military machine in the world is unmercifully bombing a small Asian nation, aiming to break it's people's will to resist (Globe & Mail, Dec. 20, 1967, p. 4). It is dropping napalm and anti-personnel bombs on civilian populations (Globe & Mail, Dec. 20, 1967, p. 7; N.Y. Review of Books, Jan. 4, 1968), destroying crops with plant poisons (N.Y. Times, Mar. 24, 1966), and even deliberately levelling whole villages (Jonathan Schell, The Village of Ben Sue, 1967). Many people consider this a crime, an extraordinarily serious one. Under the Treaty of London, which was taken as the basis for the Nuremberg trials of Nazi war crimes, it would seem that the U.S. officials ordering the destruction of Vietnam may be guilty. If so, then under the same Treaty those who abet them are guilty too, even if they are "only following orders" or "only doing what they're paid to do".

CHANDLER DAVIS

Now the Pentagon's actions in Vietnam have not been adjudged criminal in Canadian courts yet. You can take a job making the Pentagon's bombs or planes or poisons, and Canadian law won't prosecute you.

But would you choose to — at any price? Could you live with yourself?

Wouldn't you rather use your life to help people?

We don't claim the choice is always easy. For instance, in a large corporation with many products, does an employee escape implication in the war if he personally does no work on weapons? Maybe, maybe not. Without claiming to have easy answers, we do insist that the questions are necessary. We ask them of ourselves, and we want them to be before everyone.

That's what the placement service protest is about.

Remember when you used to wear your hair short?

You really looked like a kid. But then you weren't very old either. Today your hair is longer and you're old enough to look back on things. Today you're old enough to wear Tampax tampons, the modern, internally worn sanitary protection for girls like you. Container-applicators are silken smooth. Easy to insert—your hands never need touch the Tampax tampon, and both tampon and applicator can be flushed away. You can stop worrying about belts, pins, pads, or odor. And concentrate on your next hairdo. Available in 3 absorbency-sizes—Regular, Super and Junior—wherever such products are sold.

Civil Libertarians and campus protest

By PAUL HOCH

Not long ago, most of us assumed that the Left could be depended upon to invite controversial speakers to university campuses and the Right could be depended upon to oppose their right to speak. At Berkeley, the Left stood for Free Speech, and the administrators who opposed them stood for "the Accepted Norms of Society." But now, strangely enough, the present controversy over the Placement Service has stimulated a revolution of Civil Libertarianism in the rooms of Simcoe Hall and the Galbraith Building, and the Left is being accused of trying to impose its moral censorship on the rest of the campus. By pure coincidence, many of the Civil Libertarians have business interests or job aspirations closely linked to the companies that SAC wishes to exclude from the campus.

Let's start with the latest "free speech" argument — it doesn't hold water. There is a very great difference between a student group inviting a speaker to the campus for educational purposes and a business-dominated "university government" inviting companies like Dow to the campus for recruitment. Furthermore, while there were undoubtedly students wishing to take advantage of the convenience of university facilities to see the Dow recruiter, there was also a fairly sizeable group of students (paying the same fees toward the operation of the Placement Service) who did not wish to see their facilities turned into channels of supply for the War Machine.

Must draw the line somewhere

Does anyone seriously claim that engineers have the right to be recruited into any sort of activity, no matter how heinous? Does anyone seriously claim that if a group of students wished to be recruited into the S.S., the rest of the university community would be obligated to make its Placement facilities available to the storm-troopers? If the answer is no, then clearly there is a point at which the university community must draw a line. The individual does not have an absolute right to be an accessory to murder. Nor does he have the right to demand that community facilities be used to recruit other accessories. In fact, by using university facilities (financially supported by all students) and for whom we are all responsible, the supporters of the war-suppliers are in a very real sense making the entire community their accessories. What about our rights not to be made accessories in mass inhumanity? What about the rights of the Vietnamese not to have napalm dumped on their villages?

Who decides? Who draws the line at which one individual's rights seriously infringe on the rights of other individuals? There can be only one answer: the entire student-staff community; not the engineers and not the anti-Dow demonstrators. The students have a freely elected government to make decisions in their name, and SAC has made its decision.

Suddenly, the new Civil Libertarians had to shift their ground: next they claimed SAC had no right to make moral and political decisions of any kind.

Student reps must make decisions

The important point that the Libertarians seemed to miss is that if student representatives are to play a role in the governing of the university, then they have to make decisions. As a trivial example — if the student body is to participate in the running of the Placement Service, then it has to decide criteria for letting recruiters onto the campus. Whether or not Dow is allowed back on campus the members of the Advisory Board for the Placement Service will have made a moral decision, either directly or by omission.

If students wish to be members of such governing bodies — whether of the Placement Service of the Board of Governors of any other university governing body, they must be prepared to make moral and political decisions and accept responsibility for those decisions. As the student body accepts more and more responsibility for the governing of the university, there will be more and more moral and political decisions to be made. Unfortunately, if every such decision has to be made by campus-wide referendum, this will quickly lead to the paralysis of student government, and to the destruction of the student voice within the university.

What about the War Machine?

So much for the tempest-in-a-teapot arguments. The really ominous issues were raised by those critics of the student government who claimed that "most of the major North American companies are complicit in the War Machine; the machinery of the Warfare State reaches into every corner of our society. How do you disassociate yourself from them?" Yes — that indeed is the problem. Business, labor, government, and even the university, are bound up in that War Machine (with the universities supplying the trained manpower to keep the machine working.)

It would be very nice if we lived in an Ivory Tower, and could placidly sit back contemplating our navels and discoursing on the rights of individuals to employ the Placement Service as they see fit. But in the last generation a Warfare State has grown up out there, and it's not going to disappear because we use wishful thinking or classical liberal rhetoric. At some point, we have to draw a line and put pressure on the individual corporate gears of that Machine, even if a few so-called rights are limited in the process. If we don't, within a generation there will be no more rights to worry about. There will be no more people to worry about them.

Arts I at UBC—the new education

By INGRID VABALIS

A truism to start off the new year—all is not well with the established system of education.

A prediction to follow—things are changing and the changes are coming up faster.

Both a revolution and a counter revolution are brewing almost simultaneously in the little tea-pot environment of universities.

The status of drop-outs has changed. Now normal students are saying they wished they had the "courage to drop out."

Here in Toronto, Rochdale and Tartu colleges are part of the student revolution against the present authoritarian and fragmented system of education. Both have a student-developed education program based on the principle of a student-centred approach to learning. The grade-giving professor is replaced by a resource person whom the students consult. Students set their own goals and achievement criteria.

Bring them back

But a counter-revolution is being staged by the University establishment—the faculty and administration. They don't like drop-outs; they want the bright students back in the system.

Our Macpherson recommendations (and similar reports in other Universities) are the establishment's answer. One concrete result of such report is the Arts I program at the University of British Columbia.

This is a new type of first year programme organized by the younger faculty members. It is not subject oriented but attempts to integrate disciplines. There are two groups with 120 students in each. Small seminar groups are organized from these. One group discusses topics on love, war, death, education; the other deals with themes on society, utopia, and communication.

"It leans towards philosophy," said Irene Wasilewski, 17, a student in the latter group. "We don't take apart poems and we don't memorize dates," she added with a half cynical, half enthusiastic smile.

Paul Knox, 17, is in group one. Here was a guy with a lot on the ball and again the comments came with a mixture of cynicism and enthusiasm.

"I've always been a guinea pig," said Knox, a veteran of the Etobicoke public school advancement program and various educational experiments. "Arts I was new and it sounded a lot more interesting than the regular courses."

Hippie thing

"Another thing is," he added thoughtfully, "the hippie movement was really big during the summer when high school kids were deciding what to do about university. To some people, Arts I sounded like a hippie thing to do."

He felt that students in the program were becoming stereotyped. And he was angered by the fact that they liked it.

Asked about how other students at the University related to the program, Dr. Ian Ross, chairman of Arts I, said "A lot of them are envious because, of course there are no grades or exams."

Arts II?

But there has been no rush on the seminars. At the opening of the Fall term, 300 people applied for the program but at registration only 243 showed up. The program was planned for 240 people. And there has been no radical demand for an Arts II program. Comments have been luke warm.

"I am pleased with the way things are going," said Ross "and we're thinking about following up with Arts II." Ross and Father Patrick McGuigan, co-chairman of the program said they wanted to encourage students to continue in a chosen field, bringing in other disciplines during the years.

Says Judy, "It would be hard to be thrown back into the mainstream next year" and is in favour of an Arts II.

"Part of our success" added Ross, comes from the building.

Schubert and the Beatles

Last Wednesday, one typically foggy Vancouver morning, I walked into the Arts I building ... it's just a great big grey two-storey shack.

In the seminar room immediately to the right of the main entrance, a heated argument was in progress. A sneaked look between the cracks showed Prof. Ross sitting back while two students had the floor and the ten others ready to join in at any moment.

Further along the hall was a huge common room. Schubert's Quintet in A major was playing, to be followed by the Beatles' Magical Mystery Tour. There was a TV in one corner and a huge mound of cushions in another—occupied then by someone reading War and Peace. The room was a soft grey color with ceiling to floor windows on both sides. A turquoise rug covered the floor, wall to wall. This is where most of the seminars and discussions are held. Another seminar room adjacent to the lounge is painted a bright sun yellow with a round table in centre—just a brief description of two environments used in the Arts I program to replace the sterile classroom situation.

Kurt Weill. Sweet Charity is great.

Run, do not walk to see Sweet Charity at the O'Keefe Centre. Chita Rivera has taken a cliché-ridden part and turned it to gold, and taken the show with her. This is the third time I've seen the show, and this production of it is a far superior version to the one in New York. Chita Rivera is superb. She gets roars where Gwen Verdon was satisfied with chuckles. She struts where her predecessor walked. And she managed to make the cloying "Where am I Going?" almost palatable and touching. There's artistry right there!

Sweet Charity is the sentimental saga of Charity Hope Valentine, a dance-hall waif who wants to be loved; or, failing that, at least respectably married. In any case, she wants to get out of the Fandango Ballroom where she has been in the used body business for eight years... How she gets out of the place is the thin peg on which Neil Simon hangs his meagre book, Cy Coleman loads his electrifying music and Bob Fosse pins his stunning choreography.

Technically, the show is a triumph. Robert Randolph has conceived a sparse, colorful New York, with a minimum of scene pieces and a maximum of imagination and brilliant lighting techniques. The design takes as its starting point from the idea that Sweet Charity is loosely based on Fellini's film, The Nights of Cabiria. With an extravagant use of delicate color in his back lighting, and striking set pieces, the effect is that of a cinematic close-up, focusing on the principal part of the picture, and the background becoming hazy. The huge stage scrim is transformed into a delicate water-colour. We see the stage as though we were looking through a gauze covered lens... or a tear.

Bob Fosse, who created the dances for How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying, The Pyjama Game, Damn Yankees and Little Me, has outdone himself here. The show is one huge dance number with only enough dialogue to serve as funny program notes. The dances successfully stop the show in no less than ten, count 'em ten striking moments. The hilarious, bally "Big Spender" was followed almost instantaneously by the acid "Rich Man's Frug" in which noses are lifted and bodies gleefully contorted to the raucous accompaniment of a throbbing electric guitar. Climaxes build on choreographic climaxes through the prancing "If My Friends Could See me Now", past the heady "There's gotta be something better Than This" until my favorite number, "The Rhythm of Life".

As excellent as the show is generally, there are some things that aren't quite up to snuff. Neil Simon's book is not that strong. Characters never become more than caricature, and Simon seems to have paid only nodding acknowledgement to plot development. The good fairy ending reduces the entire proceedings to the level of a collegiate skit. But the caricatures are dead-on, drawn with a wickedly accurate thick line, and if the show is only a skit, what a great skit it is. There are many instances of the shrewd Simon non-sequiter. When it's his turn to have a scene, Simon writes classics. The Rescue Scene (Does she look dead to you? I don't know, I've never seen her before!) and the elevator scene (If I could only get out for a few minutes!) are wildly inventive, the reconciliation scene in Charlie's Chili house touching.

The performers are uniformly excellent. Chita Rivera has a sincerity to her that never seems coy, she is never too pathetic, too pitiable. And can she dance! Hoboy, what a performer. Helen Gallagher is just a little to used to her part; she's a touch too calculating for my taste, but just a touch. James Luisi is a marvelous Italian straight man for Charity, and Lee Goodman, of Skippy Peanut Butter fame was just fine as the quietly paranoid Oscar Lindquist, Charity's final hope for respectability.

Sweet Charity is great.

Experts study US policy in Vietnam

NEW YORK (VNS) — A communist victory in Vietnam would encourage those advocating violence as the best instrument of social change, concludes a report prepared by 14 leading American experts on Southeast Asia.

The report, made public last week, pictures the North Vietnam leadership as believing the combination of domestic dissent and lack of foreign support will eventually compel the United States to withdraw from the war.

"In this sense," says the report, "the outcome is being decided on the streets and in the homes of America as much as in the jungles of Vietnam."

The 14 experts, mostly professors from leading U.S. universities, agreed a Communist victory would inevitably lead to a series of larger and costlier wars but warned that escalation of the Vietnam war would produce "a ruinous conflict involving other major powers."

The 6,700-word report generally supports the Asian policies of President Lyndon Johnson but suggests the U.S. administration support attempts to bring Communist China into the United Nations.

"The task of simultaneously restraining China and incorporating China peacefully into the international community will not be easy, but it is one of the greatest challenges facing us."

Nevertheless, say the experts, the best way to prevent a major war in Asia is an American policy designed to "deter, restrain and counterbalance Chinese power."

For the present, the report says, overt aggression from China is improbable but certainly not impossible.

Preparation and publication of the report was sponsored by the recently-founded Freedom House Public Affairs Institute, which claims financing from "voluntary non-Government sources."

The idea for the study came from Robert Scalapino, a political science professor at the University of California at Berkeley.

Several years ago at the first International Teach-In in Toronto, Prof. Scalapino was loudly booed and hissed by anti-Vietnam demonstrators when he attempted a defence of the American position.

Other professors who signed the report include Oscar Handlin (Harvard), A. Doak Barnett (Columbia), Paul Seabury (California) and Edward O. Reischauer, former U.S. ambassador to Japan.

Memorial students given senate seats

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (VNS) —The administration of Memorial University has agreed to student representation on four major senate committees.

The 3,400 students will have eight representatives divided among four senate committees: library operations, scholarships, graduate studies and undergraduate studies.

President Lord Stephen Taylor said students have gained access to "the most important and formative stage of university decision-making."

"Likely, we will have better teaching and programs if students help devise the curriculum and run the aspects they are most concerned with," he observed.

However, Lord Taylor implied that the eight student representatives would be expected to attend in camera meetings and withhold certain confidential information from the student body.

"The students would have to behave with the same degree of discretion as members of the faculty and would have to carry with them things they could not disclose."

Forgetful thieves lose out at York

An episode in the saga of crime that doesn't pay has been disclosed by security officials at York University.

Sometime during the Christmas holidays, thieves broke into a laboratory on the Steeles and Kcele campus and made off with three pieces of laser equipment valued at $5,500.

However, they forgot to take a small power cell resting on a table near the machine.

Now, say university officials, the 20 pounds of laser machinery are "about as valuable to the thieves as a flashlight without batteries."

As there are only 10 similar laser units in Canada, the thieves probably won't be able to sell their booty.

York security officers now suspect the theft may be nothing more than a "misguided student prank."

CUS will publish student magazine

OTTAWA (Special) — The Canadian Union of Students will publish two pilot issues of a national students magazine, CUS President Hugh Armstrong has announced.

The publication, to be called Issue, will appear twice early this year as a prelude to monthly publication in the 1968-69 academic year.

"The Issue will attempt to report and analyse the issues and problems facing the student and society as a whole today," Armstrong said. "It will be distributed to all CUC member campuses."

Terry Campbell, a 24-year old graduate of McMaster University will be the new editor. Mr. Campbell is a former managing editor of the McMaster Silhouette and received much of his journalistic training on the news staff of the Hamilton Spectator.

York professor knocks student power

An outspoken professor at York University believes universities are wrong in granting student representation on faculty councils.

Professor Robert Mitchell of the French department says university administrations are spoiling students by giving in to their demands indiscriminately. "As much as one believes in democracy," he said, "schools are basically authoritarian. Our generation never thought of asking for the challenges or making the demands students expect today.

"We are giving in far too much because we are afraid of losing our students. Such giving in can result in chaos."

Hate The Varsity? Love It? Plain Interested In It?

Then aim at a seat on The Varsity board of directors. Written applications for the remaining seats will be accepted until 5 p.m. Friday, Jan. 12. Applications should contain information on year and course of applicant and reasons for the applicant's interest in becoming a director.

Applications welcome from anyone and everyone.

Address them to: Executive Assistant's Office,

Committee study university squeeze

The Ontario department of university affairs has formed two committees to study space problems at Ontario universities.

A press release issued by Dr. Douglas Wright, chairman of the government-appointed committee on university affairs, announced the provincial government will contribute $200,000 to the two research projects.

A Toronto management firm will receive $75,000 for developing a detailed computer-assisted "perpetual inventory system."

Dr. Wright said the system "will facilitate the analysis of space available at Ontario universities, the space projected, and the use of such space in view of the needs of the universities."

The University of Waterloo will receive $120,000 for a two-year investigation into space management techniques based on theories developed at Purdue University.

The Waterloo project will investigate problems such as the arrangement of timetables to achieve the maximum use of university facilities and other methods of reducing the increasing wastage of costly building space.

Hippies intelligent but under-achievers concludes ADRF study

The common impression of hippies as unintelligent, unwashed social misfits has been challenged by a research team from the Alcoholism and Drug Research Foundation.

After interviewing 60 Yorkville hippies, the research team concluded hippies are "highly intelligent—well above the average of the college freshman."

Despite their intelligence, most hippies are "under-achievers" who become high school drop-outs after two or three years.

Reginald Smart, the chief of the ADRF study, says the hippie phenomenon is caused in part by adolescents rebelling against what they feel is artificiality and dishonesty in modern life.

New heads appointed in PHE & Computer Sciences

Dr. Harry J. Ebbs has been appointed director of the school of physical and health education, and Professor Thomas Hull was named chairman of the department of computer sciences.

Dr. Ebbs is returning to the post he held until 1964, when he resigned to devote his time to staff work at the Toronto Sick Children's Hospital.

Prof. Hull, who succeeds Calvin C. Gottlieb, has held posts at the California Institute of Technology, the Courant Institute and New York University.

Purse found

A woman's small change purse was found Wednesday in front of the Sidney Smith Building.

The owner of the purse can reclaim it today or Monday at the Varsity office, 91 St. George, second floor.

LaPierre blasts Americans in Vietnam

from the students by his well-tailored dark suit complete with vest and gold watch and a noticeable absence of a "Viva Che" button.

Prof. LaPierre said the Canadian government does not condemn the American presence in Vietnam because "our economy is so intertwined with the United States that it is best to please our customers."

"Essentially the country is not independent, and it is this that frightens me," he said.

He attacked Confederation, the Liberal party, John Diefenbaker, and society in general. He brought his campaign manager with him.

As Mr. LaPierre left the conference a student asked him to buy a copy of the SAEWN bulletin. He smiled and pulled a dollar out of a thick billfold for a year's subscription.

The delegates split into workshops Thursday afternoon and Friday morning to discuss individual issues.

Workshop Discussions

Students at the campus complicity workshop sought to check campus war research, defence industry recruitment, and administration involvement with the defence industry, but could not agree how they would do it.

"Compare the list of the Board of Governors with 'Who's Who in Canada' to find out how many are controlling large corporations," advised one student.

A list of "complicit companies" such as Canadian Arsenals was presented at the workshop. It included Bata Shoes — they manufacture combat boots.

"To get national coverage we must get militant and forget personal liberties," said Dave Carrell of the University of British Columbia.

"When Vietnamese are being slaughtered, I couldn't care less if some engineer doesn't get his job."

Merits and Defects of Co-operation

In another workshop, on student power and the anti-war movement, speakers argued whether cooperation with the student government would "dilute the strength and taint the purity" of their aims of protest.

"We should not look upon the students as a plastic mass that can be molded," said the ever-present Kopyto.

"The administration has tried to mold student power into the establishment," he added. "Any demands we make are radical demands."

Neil Lockland (SGS), a graduate of the London School of Economics and a professed radical, said: "The university is a corporation investing vast amounts in students. The ivory tower image is gone."

Chris Podmore of McMaster University said there should be on campus a group of leftist radicals independent of the student government.

Podmore nervously adjusted his "Viva Che" button from his right to his left pantleg as someone shouted: "That way we won't have enough radicals to go around."

After the workshop, Paul Hoch said about the Assembly, "It's a very amorphous discussion. It has been characteristic of all radical groups: it doesn't want to get its hands dirty."

Hoch, a well-known campus activist and a doctor in nuclear physics, was an organizer of the Dow sit-in at U of T. He continually made his presence felt in the Assembly.

He alone voted against the proposal to stage the national day of protest February 6.

"There is no future in a national protest" he said. "It seems like a giant conspiracy which can hurt you more than help you."

Hoch the Separatist

Hoch also unexpectedly stood up as an advocate of separatism after the reading of the Quebec report in French by Hélène Carnières.

"I appreciate very strongly the connection between the liberation movement in Vietnam and the liberation movement in Quebec," he said.

Before adjourning, the SADWC delegates elected a working committee to carry out the plans of the assembly: Joe Young (Chairman), Marlie Ritchie, Bill Johnston, Rob Fairly, Mira Friedlander, Eljije Kirsner and Myrna Wood.

Picket C.I.L. Office

During the Assembly 50 placard-waving students staged a smaller style of protest on Bloor Street against C.I.L.

"Pearson, Martin, C.I.L., how many weapons do you sell?" they chanted.

To the astonishment of bystanders, the demonstrators marched around the sidewalk in front of the C.I.L. Building, and trooped into the lobby-chanting continuously. Joe Young addressed the group:

"C.I.L. supplies TNT, rocket propellants, and small arms to the U.S. defence department. The directors of C.I.L. are merchants of death."

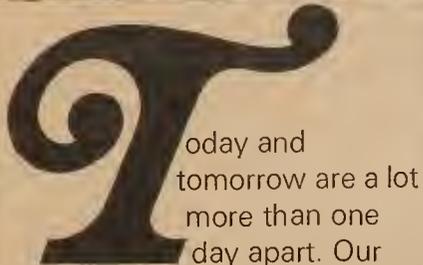

"C.I.L. stocks just went up two points," joked one on-looker.

"These kids are trespassing on private property," said another.

The protest lasted only 10 minutes.

C.I.L.'s Ontario manager, Don Learmount, issued a statement that C.I.L. arms sales were to a government controlled agency.

"Currently, C.I.L. is manufacturing these products at Valleyfield, Quebec," he said, "and is selling them to a Canadian government agency, the Canadian Commercial Corporation, partly for export to the U.S. government under the terms of the defence sharing agreements."

Today and tomorrow are a lot more than one day apart. Our world keeps changing and we expect you to stay ahead of the latest engineering developments after you join us. In fact, we'll pay the tuition at your choice of the many excellent evening graduate schools in the New Jersey-New York-Philadelphia areas.

Blues head for second title

By PHIL BINGLEY

MONTREAL — Playing without five regulars Varsity hockey Blues still managed to overpower Sir George Williams last night 12-3 in the opening game of the second annual Centennial College Hockey Tournament.

Blues easily won the title last year beating Sir George 8-4 and it appears that nothing short of an epidemic can prevent a repeat performance.

Goalie John Wrigley plus defencemen Doug Jones and Wayne Parsons were laid low by the flu. Mike Riddell couldn't make the trip due to exams and Fred Pollard is still on his Christmas vacation.

Parsons played the first period but couldn't fight the flu bug and had to leave the game.

Pete Adamson replaced Wrigley in goal and played an excellent game, turning aside 25 Sir George shots. He had little or no chance on the three that got by.

Looking around for extra bodies to replace the five absentees, coach Tom Watt settled on footballer Jim Ware.

Ware didn't look at all out of place on skates, and managed to collect an assist on Blues' second goal.

The fleet flanker fed a pass to captain Pete Speyer who then flipped a 70-foot bouncer that trickled into the SGW net.

Speyer later scored a legitimate goal by whipping home a short backhander after weaving through the entire Sir George team. Besides the two goals, the clever veteran collected three assists as Blues completely dominated the game.

Other Varsity scorers were Murray Stroud, Paul Laurent, Paul McCann, and Gord Cunningham.

All three Sir George goals came in the third period after Blues were forced to go with only three defencemen.

Varsity set the tone for the game early in the first period by holding the Montreal squad to only one shot on goal during one minute and twenty-one seconds of playing two men short. Blues also successfully killed a double penalty in the third period.

The 2,000 or so fans in attendance watched a relatively dull game that was never really close.

Blues outshot Sir George 57-28 and it was just a question of how high the score would go.

HOCKEY NIGHT IN CANADA

Two minutes and 3 seconds left in the 2nd period, New York leading Toronto 3-0 . . . Pronovski tries to pass to Walton, goes wide, picked up by Camille Henry . . .

It was early evening on New Year's Eve. I was standing in the bus station in Victoria B.C.

It was pretty bright and clean-looking for a bus station, but it wasn't exactly what you'd call cheerful. There were a few tired-looking travellers sitting reading the Sunday Victoria Colonist, but the room was pretty quiet and empty. It was raining outside.

Behind the ticket counter, two tired, bored-looking guys were twiddling: one was peeling the silver paper off a cardboard roller, and the other was playing with the ticket puncher. Foster Hewitt was announcing the New York-Toronto game from a small black plastic-cased radio in the corner. Toronto was getting cleaned.

The dismal sterility of that New Year's Eve scene made me think of what seemed like years and years of desperately lonely, restless, boring Saturday nights spent in rec rooms, residence and boarding school basements watching Hockey Night in Canada.

There was a vicious sameness to it all. The monotonous nasal commentary — slightly more strident if it was Danny Gallivan from the Forum — the dirty brick walls and cement floors of the residence basements or the linoleum plasticity of the rec-rooms . . . it all blends into a dead, lonely vision.

HOCKEY, PART OF OUR MYTHOLOGY

The spiritual vitality of this game — which somehow forms a very real part of the soul and the mythology of this country — is in the small towns, the suburban rinks, the back-alley lanes where kids play shinny in the doorways. Where anyone actually plays the game — even watches it in the flesh.

At home, there was something special about hockey over the Christmas holidays. It was usually the first week that the rink at the public school would stay frozen, and so, on Christmas Day, small flotillas of families would arrive at the rink, disrupting whatever nascent hockey games had been starting. Frustrated twelve-year-olds would wheel and swerve through the rink-crowd of four-year-olds, fathers, and girls in skating skirts, and would finally give up and play tag, or try and put snow down the neck of one of the girls in figure-skates and skating skirt.

The really beautiful times were later—when we would stay at school to play hockey, and skate till our toes froze about 10 p.m., and walk home alone, usually leaving our shoes in lockers at school, and shuffling home flat-footed, bundled feet stuck into galoshes. There were street lights on our street that hung over the middle of the street, and I would walk home directly under them, watching my shadow stretch out pale in front of me, and then disappear springing out short and black at my feet as I passed underneath the light, crunching through the fresh-fallen snow.

All this represented to me a kind of personal mythology that the Hewitts never seemed to reach or connect with.

ANNOUNCERS CAN BE EXCITING

However, there have been hockey announcers who made the game sound as exciting as it really is. The most famous was the late Rex Stimers, the hard-drinking, loudly biased, forgetful announcer, who used to roar through a game for CKTB-St. Catharines with a gusto that sounded like Leopold Bloom's tour through Dublin.

Stimers had trouble with names. When Mahovlich was playing Junior A, the combinations were baffling. (Maw-latch? Mahivvilitch?).

More often, though, he just didn't bother—and players became "The guy in red," "The big guy," "The guy behind him."

Hiccoughing and drawing, he would shout through whole periods without mentioning a name, a team or a score.

"He's goin down the wing! Pass it! Pass it! Jesus, he lost the damn thing! Uh . . . play stopped there . . . what's the penalty for? HOOKING? He didn't hook anybody. Who does that SOB think he is?"

This was hockey — the radio version of the hockey down the block, the pick-up teams on Saturday morning ("Anybody who wants a game against the boards!"), the battered, shredded-floored skating hut, shouted and groaned across the airwaves. To anybody interested in who really scored, it was a disaster; to anyone who wanted to hear the childhood shouts of inarticulate passion, it was unforgettable.

Blues' alternate netminder Pete Adamson got his shot at a starting role last night in the Centennial Tournament in Montreal. Adamson responded with several key saves as Varsity rolled over Sir George Williams 12-3.

BLUES' STRING SNAPS AT 26

Varsity hockey Blues' string of 26 victories against intercollegiate opposition was broken Dec. 30 by a 1-0 overtime loss to Cornell in the finals of a Buffalo tournament.

Blues outshot Cornell 26-21 but were beaten by a breakaway after only six seconds of overtime.

Vic Harding wins squash championship

Varsity Blues' Vic Harding captured the Toronto and District Junior squash championship over the holidays. Harding defeated Craig Benson in four games to take the title. Harding is currently seeded second on the Varsity team.

Last year D'Arcy Martin also a member of Blues' squash team, won the championship.

In other pre-Christmas squash action Peter Martin of McGill, intercollegiate champion, defeated Sam Howe of the United States to win the Gold Racquets Invitational tournament in New York.

Howe, the top ranked player in the U.S., is U.S. and Canadian National champion. Martin also defeated Colin Adair, Canada's top ranked player on his way to the championship.

Two SAC reps defy instructions; more protests possible

By ANNE BOODY

Dow Chemical Co. is returning and anti-war demonstrators are bracing themselves.

Dow of Canada and perhaps other companies supplying the U.S. war effort in Vietnam will arrive at the Placement Centre beginning next Thursday.

The advisory board of the Placement Centre decided Dec. 20 to welcome all companies to recruit on campus, it has been disclosed.

However, the decision was not easily come by. The board has five students, appointed by the Students Administrative Council and instructed by SAC to vote against recruitment by Dow or any other company supplying materials for the Vietnam war. Two of the students ignored the instructions.

The first time Dow came on campus, in November, anti-war pickets blocked the entrance to the Placement Service and later demonstrated on the steps of Simcoe Hall. After a fierce debate SAC called for the seating of students on a Placement Centre board, and issued its anti-Vietnam instructions.

There were two parts to the motion presented to the committee:

● That it be desirable and possible to establish the moral standards suggested by SAC, and that a sub-committee be established to invest practical ways of doing so during the Christmas holidays.

Seven opposed this and four were in favor. Harry Oussoran (III Eman) and Richard Seppala (IV APSC) decided to ignore SAC's instructions and opposed this part.

● That companies wishing to recruit on campus be asked to outline immediately the extent of their involvement in Vietnam military supply and that the university publish the answers to the questions as well as any independent research available.

Five opposed this and five were in favor. There was one abstention.

The motion was not carried and it was decided to allow Dow back.

Steve Langdon (III Trin), a student in favor of the original motion, said he was disappointed with the two students who failed to follow their instructions.

"It was generally expected that Seppala would be opposed to the motion, since he is of the engineering faculty," Langdon said.

"But they put their personal opinions ahead of their duty. They should have presented them during the heated debate that preceded the voting, but also, they should have voted as instructed."

Langdon said the two will be questioned about their actions at the SAC general meeting this Wednesday.

"There is still room for discussion on the matter," said Paul Hoch, one of the leaders of the protesting faction.

"The committee's decision is by no means a permanent settlement. There is another meeting of the advisory board scheduled for this week and the question will probably be raised again."

Hoch confessed he had doubts about the set-up of the committee. The students have an important role, he said, but then the Placement Centre is a service for the students.

The anti-war faction on campus is planning a non-obstructive demonstration for next Thursday, when companies begin to recruit at the Centre.

"The protest will be directed at not only banning complicit companies from the campus but also at convincing engineering and science students not to take jobs with these companies," Hoch said.

He said a committee of 80 anti-war students is presently contacting a group of 55 people from other campus groups opposing the return of the companies. Among them are the Company to End the War in Vietnam, The U of T Friends of the Toronto Aid the Draft Program and the Faculty Committee to End the War in Vietnam.

"Our tactics have not yet been decided," said Hoch.

"There are two factors involved, militancy and numbers. Both are important and we don't want to jeopardize one for the other."

In the meantime two demonstrations have been planned for this week. The first will be at the Hawker-Siddeley Co. offices on King St., this Wednesday at noon.

The second will be against Transport Minister Paul Hellyer this Thursday evening at the Royal York Hotel.

"Our campus demonstrators will be only a part of the large faction of other demonstrators expected to be present when Hellyer speaks," said Hoch.

Massey's legacy to U of T males

For the flood of freshmen who wash over this campus each year, the Gothic structure beside University College is just another feature of the university's somewhat intimidating landscape.

But Hart House is not just another campus building. It is an embodiment of the philosophy of Vincent Massey and a reminder of his contributions to this university.

Mr. Massey, then 19, entered University College in 1906 and graduated four years later with the customary honors bachelor of arts.

It was during his years as an undergraduate that Mr. Massey formulated his ideas of a student union.

In his autobiography, What's Past Is Prologue, Mr. Massey describes the founding of Hart House. He writes:

"I had realized that the University of Toronto was sorely in need of equipment for the extra-curricular life of the students and it seemed that a considerable sum of money from my grandfather's estate, of which I had been appointed a trustee, could appropriately be applied to the erection of a building for this purpose."

Delaying his departure for Oxford, Mr. Massey took close interest in the design and construction of Hart House, which he named after his grandfather Hart Massey.

From the outset Mr. Massey insisted that Hart House must be a reserve for the male members of the university community.

Writing in 1937, Mr. Massey said: "It seems to be occasionally necessary to reiterate the intention of the founders that the building should be for the men of the University and not for the women.

European toil, travel care of AIESEC

Jane Watson (IV Trin) spent two months in Marseilles last summer, and it didn't cost her a cent.

Jane was one of 27 University of Toronto students who travelled and worked abroad as members of l'Association Internationale des Etudiants en Sciences Economiques et Commerciales.

AIESEC got her a job as a sales girl in a Marseilles department store. In return, Jane had to find a job in Toronto for an AIESEC student coming here.

After the Marseilles job Jane spent a month travelling in France, Italy, Switzerland and Scandinavia.

"When I was travelling, I felt like a European," she says. "Staying in France for two months gave me a chance to learn French and acclimatize myself to the European atmosphere."

AIESEC is active in about 45 countries. The Ontario government supplies travel grants up to $250 for AIESEC members.

Any University of Toronto student who has taken or is taking one economics course is eligible for the plan.

And he will probably be able to work in any European country he chooses, says Richard McCrae (IV UC), another student who spent last summer in Europe with the help of AIESEC.

McCrae worked for a month in Lyon, France, for a government branch of the Chamber of Commerce. But, he confesses, he spent most of his working time studying French.

Information about AIESEC is available from the political economy department on the third floor of Sidney Smith Hall. Interested students can attend an AIESEC meeting at 4:30 p.m. today in Room 1067 of Sid Smith.

UC Lit uses its cash for investment

University College's Literary and Athletic Society has decided to go into big business.

Lit Treasurer Bill Sklar said his organization will shortly buy $5,000 worth of guaranteed investment certificates.

The interest from this investment will enable UC to initiate two $200 bursaries in September.

The recipients of the awards will be determined by UC registrar R.M.H. Shepherd.

The $5,000 is a budgetary surplus resulting from a raise in student levies four years ago. The raise of $2 per student was required to keep the Lit solvent.

Since then, this reserve fund has gone untrapped, and the Lit has decided it's time they let their money work for them.

SAC now faces a deficit of six reps

Six Students' Administrative Council representatives have left their posts in the last month.

Darcy Martin (III New), Stephen Hershey (II Mus), George MacIntosh (III Vic) and Mary Attersley (IV Nurs) have resigned for academic reasons. Allan Bruce (III APSC) was impeached by the Engineering Society Nov. 28 and Shelly Goodman (III APSC) resigned over SAC's handling of the DOW dispute.

The nursing election will be held Jan. 18 and the Engineers go to the polls Friday. The dates for elections at Victoria, New College and the music faculty have not been decided.

'I wanted to program computers.

Dwight Brady, a computer programmer with London Life

"That's why I joined London Life. Of all the companies I talked to in my final year of university, only London Life offered what I was after in a computer programming career. They wanted me to be more than a button-pusher. They wanted me to roll up my sleeves and do something. London Life offered me the chance to tackle several types of programming problems. And the opportunity to work with one of the largest, most modern and best recognized computer departments in Canada. It was exactly what I wanted."

Dwight graduated in math and physics from the University of New Brunswick in 1966. If you would like to know more about programming or other careers with London Life, see your placement officer. Or write to the Personnel Department, London Life Insurance Co., London, Ontario.

'Hart House exists for the use of men'

"In the view of those responsible for its erection, Hart House could not serve the purpose for which it was intended unless it was operated as a men's institution."

"... Hart House exists for the use of the men of the university."

When Mr. Massey referred to "the founders," he was, of course, referring to himself.

The present warden of the House, E. A. Wilkinson, said Sunday: "Hart House broke new ground ... it was an amazing conception. The total combination of facilities had never been tried before. A good many of the (student) unions in the U.S. have followed the Hart House concept."

One factor that may have convinced Mr. Massey of the need for a student union was his experience with Varsity fraternities. He was rushed by several frats but after much wavering joined one and then withdrew in disgust.

Of the experience he later wrote: "For one thing, they are mutually exclusive, and members are recruited, not as in ordinary clubs, but on ly on invitation and on a highly competitive basis. They are secret societies where new members are subjected to an initiation sometimes involving public humiliation."

After his return from Oxford's Balliol College, Mr. Massey served as dean of residence of Victoria College from 1913 to 1915 and was a lecturer in the history department.

His grandfather's estate provided the funds for Burwash Hall, and Mr. Massey supervised its initial operations.

He attempted to enforce regulations requiring the wearing of jackets at all meals. But he soon discovered that such prescriptions were unenforceable when, as a body, the men of Burwash cast off the jacket of conformity and finished their meal in shirt sleeves.

The experience made Mr. Massey a believer in student government, although with one important assumption:

"If an elected body of undergraduates was led to understand the reason for certain rules and conventions, then they would presumably enforce them themselves."

When Mr. Massey left the academic environment to become the first president of the National Liberal Federation and later the first Canadian ambassador in Washington, he never lost his interest in the affairs of the university.

He remained a member of the Hart House board of stewards and in 1947 was appointed to the Board of Governors.

He was university chancellor from 1952 to 1959, the same period in which he was Canada's first native-born governor-general.

One of his favorite projects, Massey College, began to take shape as his term in Rideau Hall came to a close.

He described the concept of the proposed college in his memoirs.

"The College should be a corporation known as Massey College, the members of which would be master and fellows; and that they should have control of the administration of students known as 'junior fellows.' The purpose of the institution would be ... to select the best men available and to form a distinguished collegiate community.

"The College means a great deal to me," he wrote.

"My roots are deep in academic soil and some of the happiest times in my life have been passed within the precincts of a university."

Mr. Massey prevailed upon Prince Philip, then visiting Toronto, to lay the cornerstone for the new college in May, 1962.

A few months later the college was open for business, once again on a "Females need not apply" basis.

SHOUT ventures into community health

By DONNI BOHNEN

Early in September, 40 idealistic health science students decided to break out of the classroom and clinic and into the community. Four months later, they are somewhat sobered and considerably more hard-headed, but their venture is underway.

The Student Health Organization of the University of Toronto (SHOUT), comprising student volunteers from the faculties of medicine, dentistry, pharmacy, physical and occupational grounds in real problem therapy and nursing, was founded to promote community health projects among potential health science professionals.

The organization was conceived at a summer community project conducted by the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Interns (CAMSI).

SHOUT's objectives are twofold, says its founder and president, Jerry Friedman (III Meds).

"Student volunteers are learning to relate to people from many different background — something that we do not meet with in classrooms or clinics.

"Secondarily, we are aiming at the team approach to the combined health services. Every medical and paramedical course is represented in the organization and has something to offer."

Friedman says tensions between practising medical and para-medical personnel can be relaxed and better co-operation established if health science undergraduates are encouraged to work to-## the successful canadian

It is natural that a man as distinguished and famous as Vincent Massey should receive the supremely laudatory eulogies that were spoken after his death last month. Natural, but not quite accurate.

Massey can be depicted as a sort of super-Canadian—as the eulogists have done—if we are looking for national heroes but to do so we have to overlook a great deal of clay underneath the surface gloss of his character and achievements.

He was, of course, a very successful businessman: directing the family farm-imp- liment company he inherited to the status of one of Canada's top native-owned corporations. While doing so he found time to serve on the board of several other companies including the large Bank of Commerce.

When he turned to politics in 1925, Massey started almost at the top. Mackenzie King appointed him Minister without Portfolio, a post he resigned when he lost his first and only election contest in his home riding of Durham. King then appointed him Canada's first ambassador to Washington, where he served until 1930, when the Conservatives came back into power.

Massey's contributions to the Liberal Party were rewarded however when he became president of the newly reorganized National Liberal Federation in 1932.

Three years later he left for London where he served as Canadian High Commissioner until 1946. In 1949 he served as chairman of The Royal Commission on National Development in the Arts, Letters and Sciences which proposed the creation of the Canada Council.

And, of course, in 1952, he became Canada's first native-born governor-general.

Massey's memoirs show his love for the University of Toronto where he earned his bachelor of arts, worked as a history lecturer and in 1913 became dean of residence at Victoria College. He served on the Board of Governors from 1947 and was appointed to a seven-year term as Chancellor in 1952.

Massey was a patron of the arts and of education. He was a man of more than average intelligence and wit, more than average wealth and, unfortunately, more than average prejudice.

He was very much the archtypal Upper Canada Anglophile. "One thing that annoys me," he wrote in 1922, "is the lack of interest on the part of the Government in immigration from Great Britain, the one thing that would prevent us from becoming Americanized would be a constant flow of good immigrants. The Australian and New Zealand Governments are apparently very keen about this, but our Cabinet, partly, I suppose, because of the French influence, seems very apathetic. In the meantime, Sir Clifford Sifton is indulging in rhapsodies about the hardy peasants of Central Europe of whom I think we have enough."

"He (the architect) was unfamiliar with university life and the purpose to be served by Hart House, but he and I worked together — very happily — and the plans of the building grew under our joint efforts. These sometimes involved tiresome details such as the arrangements of the kitchens, about which my diary states that the problem was 'household science versus household sense.' Cooking is a science but it is also an art. If it were better understood we would be spared institutional cooking in which taste is neglected in favor of calories and protein — important but not supreme." —Vincent Massey's memoirs, p.24.

His devotion to the British crown as the sole unifying force in Canada was sincere but somewhat irrational in his later years. Yet his opinions remained unchanged to the end. In an age when the crown is more divisive than unifying, Massey seemed to believe it emanated directly from natural law. He could not conceive of Canada as anything else but a 19th century monarchy.

Massey's thinking concerning the university was marred by several internal contradictions "The University suffered, and still suffers, from a convention under which it is ordained that no alcohol in any form shall be consumed on the premises," he once wrote.

In Hart House, which he donated to U of T, alcohol is served at faculty receptions but when students are present, the restrictions are rigidly enforced. At Massey College, which he also donated, alcohol is by no means proscribed.

As director of the Massey Foundation, which he set up in emulation of the Rockefeller Foundation, Massey personally formulated many of the regulations that Hart House operates under today.

When the house was opened in 1919, it was quite natural that it should be an exclusive men's club. After all there were relatively few female students at the university of that time, and their position was generally assumed to be inferior to that of the men.

Yet Massey himself said Hart House "should be organized and regarded as an educational institution and not simply a club ministering to the material needs of the undergraduate . . . we hoped that the students would find educational nourishment by taking part in its musical and artistic life and in debating, and by reading in the library." He refused to open these "educational" facilities to women and even attempted to exclude women from the Student Christian Movement office and from the SAC office (when it was still in the House).

In a letter to the House in 1937, he wrote: "It seems to be occasionally necessary to reiterate the intention of the Founders that the building should be for the men of the university and not for the women." He, of course, was the Founder.

Vincent Massey was born a Victorian aristocrat and nine days ago, when he died, he was still a Victorian aristocrat. He would have been a greater Canadian if he had perceived the necessity for change

What's past, after all, is past.

more demonstrations

Sir:

Allow me to comment on the recent election of Tom Faulkner, student power and anti-Americanism.

One often reads of students rebelling against a conservative university administration, demanding more rights and responsibilities in university affairs. However, I fail to see what we students really want. On one occasion we clamor for rights and responsibilities while on another we are indifferent and even vote our rights away. That 50% of the students voted is not something to be proud of. How can we demand rights when 10,000 didn't care about them; 5,000 voted against them and only 1/4 of the student body was concerned with the issue? (Only 4,281 "voted against them," i.e. for Mr. Charlton—ed.)

I think Mr. Faulkner distorted the real issue by comparing Dow with the Housing Service. In the case of the latter, a landlord will not be put on the bousing list if he discriminates against Negroes. That landlord would be breaking the Ontario Human Rights Code. Dow, on the other hand, did not break any law — it only offended the sensitivity (sincere?) of some people in this university.

Mr. Charlton stated clearly that SAC can vote to abolish the Placement Service but not to break the law by discriminating against a law-abiding company.

Taking the stand that he did, Mr. Faulkner was in effect saying: "It is my personal opinion that the US is absolutely wrong in her actions; it is entirely her fault that women and children are killed in Vietnam (men don't rate); others may have their opinions, but I will stick to mine. Since I happen to be president of SAC I will legislate to ban any companies supporting the US war effort. SAC will decide for the students whether the American presence in Vietnam is justified and therefore which companies (the doves) can use the Placement Service."

Similarly I say that Faulkner and company should not be allowed to use the Placement Service because it is a biased stand like his that encouraged the Viet Cong to use flame-throwers on Montagnard women and children.

The student body should not support this kind of thinking!

What about the people who feel it is their duty to stop American war crimes? I think it is shameful to compare the Americans with Nazis or to call their actions criminal.

We must realize that dead civilians, refugees and burned towns are consequences of any war. That is why as responsible students and citizens we must do our utmost to prevent wars in the first place.

During WW II many civilians were killed in German bombing raids and also when the Allies bombed German cities — that is war. Once nations decide to join the game, they play to win. The Nazis, however committed war crimes when they marched into some town in Holland, for example, and, out of personal hate and prejudice, searched houses for Jews, who they rounded up along with the good Christians who hid them, into cattle railway cars bound for the gas chambers in Auschwitz. What puzzles me most is that if a Nazi came to "lecture" at U of T and threatened Jews and Negroes with death (threatening is the definition of assault in the English law) these same sensitive humanists, I am sure, would uphold his right to threaten fellow citizens.

I think it is "in" to be anti-American. Some students and professors feel that they must speak out against war and injustice; by all means, let us see more such people. But the point is that these people are insincere in championing humanity. They vehemently condemn the US because it is very convenient to be anti-American — there is no effort in it.

I would rather see these humanists call for peace in Vietnam and not a one-sided American withdrawal. Start a Help-India campaign to prevent men, women and children from starving (death more terrible than napalm); demonstrate at the French embassy for refusing British entry into the Common Market; demonstrate at the Russian embassy for sending arms and flame throwers to North Vietnam and the Middle East; demonstrate at the Israeli and Arab embassies to let them know that the world wants to settle the refugee problem and not allow the refugees to be used as pawns in a political game; demonstrate at the US embassy when the CIA supports some lousy dictator against a band of Communists; but support the American cause when it is just.

Student power is not just a label. As students we have more time to express ourselves on political matters than people who are tied up supporting families. We are voters (some of us potential) and our government will take notice. It will act accordingly. Thus student power can influence the decisions of many governments.

I sincerely hope that students assume their rights and responsibilities. Let Tom Faulkner remain as president of SAC; allow him to continue showing the excellent leadership needed. But first of all he must know his place and the limit of SAC.

Arthur Dunec (I New)

The pretty UBC senator

By SUE HELWIG

What happens when a student sits on a university senate? — probably nothing at all.

This seems to be the first conclusion to be drawn from the experiences of student senators at the University of British Columbia after their first two meetings.

"To begin with, the real decision-making bodies are the senate committees and none of these has called a meeting since we were first elected," one of the new senators explained to me.

The girl I spoke to was Kirsten Emmott, a tall and graceful blonde who is an associate editor of the Ubsessey as well as a senator.

"And the UBC Senate is really an ultra-conservative body which plays the game with rules made up by the Board of Governors," Kirsten added shaking her shoulder-length hair behind her head.

"For instance, the senate has never given the Board of Governors a list of priorities for the spending of university funds."

This is one of the first proposals the student senators will make to the whole body, Kirsten says.

But the students are four out of about 50 members on the council and there is no guarantee of faculty support.

What about the senate committees which will be meeting for the first time with students in 1968?

Kirsten is a member of two of these. When I asked her what items students or the senators themselves wanted discussed, she replied in rather vague terms:

"No, there isn't anything immediate I can think of. We don't know the agendas yet."

But again, on a senate committee, a student senator would have only one vote out of ten.

In fact membership on the UBC senate doesn't seem to be a dynamic thing and it never seems to have caused much of a stir on campus.

A few years ago, the editor of the Ubsessey wrote a few editorials suggesting that students be given representation on governing bodies, Kirsten says.

"Then the Duff-Berdahl Report recommended the same thing and the senate itself made the proposal to students' council."

Last Spring, in a campus-wide election, Kirsten and three others won their senate seats in a hard fought campaign against four other candidates.

In spite of an unexciting history, the potential use of student membership on the UBC senate was dramatically demonstrated in five minutes one night last week.

In a CBC interview, the news camera focused on Kirsten who was introduced as a student senator.

In a very calm and articulate manner she attempted to convince listeners of the necessity for an increase in UBC's grant from the Bennett government.

And she expressed student concern for the university in terms of the responsibility students are anxious to accept.

Column and a half

the bells of St. Joe's

I wonder if the bells are still ringing at St. Joe's?

St. Joe's, which is really St. Joseph's College Women's Residence, is kind of special . . . it has House 29 — an old Tory Torontonian mansion with a ghost. And of course the bells.

The rest of the residence (also with bells) is new and dorm-like . . . long corridors, uniform doors . . .

But House 29 has a spiral staircase. The third floor where I lived has a circular hallway with ten rooms and right in the middle was the telephone.

It would ring once for Room 1, two rings for Room 2 and for room nine, the pink garret which PJC and I shared, the bell's rang nine times. (Room 10 had a don and a one-two ring. It didn't ring very often).

The first time the phone shrilled nine we thought it was a fire alarm. We tried to ignore it; second time around as a minor annoyance — when four angry voices quietly urged us to "answer THE PHONE!"

We caught on fast — 9 bells meant a call or a visitor for one of us and the fun began.

Fun is a euphemism for agony . . . new form of torture we found. Evenings were the worst.

PJC and I sat at our work-cluttered desks studying with a vengeance . . . oblivious to everything.

Ring . . . Ring . . . Ring . . . (reading stopped, we sat very still) Ring . . . Ring . . . and silence. A page was sharply turned in the pink garret, and work resumed. It was never interrupted.

A few minutes later, the house phone chimed (this happens when 3rd floor — busy but there are eleven other possible choices) ring...ring...ring...ring...ring...ring...ring...ring.

"I didn't hear a thing, did you Ingrid?"

"Not a thing! Nothing!!"

One, two, three . . . nine? Thump, dash, grab return . . . "It's for You."

And then there were times when I was expecting the "very important call."

Working or reading or anything was impossible . . . count, count, count, collapse. One sentence in one book for one hour . . .

Things got so bad that after the tremendous strain of waiting, the nine rings finally came and we didn't believe it. "You answer it, it won't be for me."

"No YOU get it, I know it's for you." And by the time that got settled the call was rung twice and then died.

"Why don't you answer on the FIRST nine" a sleepy, irate don would sweetly ask.

"You're doing it on purpose . . . you just want everybody to know that someone is phoning you" came the next most common accusation.

Earl's in second year I had my revenge. On assignment for the Varsity, I filled out a computer-dating questionnaire and got 25 names back. Each name called at least twice, but some called continually.

"Hello . . . yes . . . great . . . Friday night? . . . sure, yes . . . fine . . . gotta run now—bye."

On to the next phone on another floor, jeers, guffaws, hisses.

"Hello . . . oh yes, you called four times already? Saturday . . . yes . . . great, see you then . . . must go now."

And to the next.

"Hello . . . you called before? Friday is fine . . . oh, I'll be in this time . . . bye"

Three calls at the SAME time — it wasn't unusual.

"You have a call Ingrid, take it on Fontbonne 3 (one of the twelve phones on any of four different floors in three different parts of the residence . . . quite a chase).

"And when you finish there's another one on MaryHall 2" . . . "Will you answer the third in Siberia?"

I moved out of residence in the middle of second year. Choice or force?

Now I have my own phone under my bed. Sometimes I let it ring nine . . . just for old times sake.

rights are not sacred

Sir:

One of the central issues arising from the Dow sit in was the question of rights. Individual rights, rights as students and the right of SAC to legislate on new issues were widely discussed topics on our campus. The following remarks attempt to isolate several common misconceptions shared by many in this debate.

The rights which a society or a community considers most crucial are usually embodied in legislation or common law. Being formally recognized, these rights are continuously available for examination and modification in the light of new information and changing socio-economic conditions. These rights are not sacred. They are not a function of natural law. Men create rights and men redefine existing rights. God has very little participation in the process. How do I know? ask Him yourself.

At one time the housing service was as "open" as the placement service. However, we decided the racist student did not have the pure, absolute right to use our facilities for purposes which conflicted with the university standards. Standards, incidentally, defined by students and faculty not the administration. We decided that our ideals were not to be prostituted any longer. We did not deny his right to seek out a racist landlord; we simply placed conditions on his formerly "open" right.

Does SAC have the right to redefine my relationship with the Placement Service? Yes it does, providing that basic democratic procedures have been adhered to, such as unrestricted debate, majority rule, regular elections etc. Every community through its representatives adjusts present rights and creates new rights.

Is SAC simply a playpen for future parliamentarians hung up on next week's sock hop?

Are your opinions about Vietnam of such a private, intimate nature that SAC is invading your privacy when it discusses these and other questions? SAC has legislated on moral issues in the past, why all this talk about the right to legislate on supposedly "moral" issues — as if the line between moral and non-moral was obvious and self-evident for all to see. Technically all decisions have a moral content to them.

Do I detect a feeling of inadequacy by those who oppose SAC's involvement in "moral" issues? What is it you lack? Relevant criteria? Are you sure that talk about rights is not a camouflage for a very base form of self interest?

I would suggest that the lack of factual and politically credible arguments for America's military involvement in S.E. Asia as well as the viciousness of the war symbolized by the indiscriminate use of napalm does violate our universities most basic ideals. Many students and faculty members feel the war cannot be justified either strategically or "morally." Should they voice their disapproval through the urbane, civilized low risk vehicle of the referendum? Or should they get their "hands dirty" by "denying" the God-given right of fellow students to walk no more than five minutes to the Placement Center. Don't forget, if he or she is forced to walk ten minutes to an off-campus interview his rights have been denied.

When does this process of defining my rights stop? It doesn't. In a technological society, your rights are stable in the short run only. Sometimes old rights are taken away from us e.g., proposed anti-hate literature legislation. At other times we give ourselves more rights, an example would be the recent divorce, abortion and capital punishment legislation.

A STUDY IN SNOW

FROBISHER BAY, N.W.T. — Tuesday morning at 9 a.m., 12 Eskimos, books in hand, trek across the snow to a small house in Frobisher Bay.

They are the participants — two women, 10 men — in a basic adult education course run by Frontier College in this Baffin Island community 1000 air miles north of Montreal. Michael Denker, now on leave from his fourth year work in design at Antioch College, Ohio, has been running the project since mid-October.

Many of Frobisher Bay's adults have had almost no opportunity for education. "They can no longer live by the traditional skills — hunting and trapping," says Denker, "but they are unprepared for the new urban life now available in communities like this one."

Denker spends most of his teaching time on basic English and arithmetic. "When I first came here I was unable to communicate with my basic level students," he says. He began teaching English to this group. "We can now talk together in simple English. This is all the proof I want of initial success."

LITTLE OPPORTUNITY

One of his students is the Reverend Noah Nashook, 52, an Anglican minister from Igloolik. Reverend Nashook came down to Frobisher specially to take the course.

Atcheak, 27, from Cape Dorset, and Mosesie Jamesie, 28, from Broughton Island, have also travelled hundreds of miles in order to take part.

"The other students come from Frobisher Bay," says Denker. "The older people tend to have the least contact with English. I have divided the classroom into two groups: one at beginning level, the other more advanced."

Since 1954, the government has greatly expanded the school system for children in the eastern Arctic, but people over 20 have had little opportunity for education. "One of the purposes of this project," says Denker, "is to give these people a basic education to prepare them for vocational training in the South."

Most of the students are literate in Eskimo syllabics. The idea of a written language is, therefore, not new to them. "They catch on very quickly," says Denker.

One problem he has encountered is teaching the importance of correct word order in English. "Pauloosie from Frobisher explained to me that in Eskimo you ience in this field to back us up," says

It ran a similar project earlier this year in Frobisher Bay, from February to May. At that time, Bob Wiele, now studying for a master's degree in adult education at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, ran the project.

EDUCATIONAL VACUUM

Of his eight graduates (10 Eskimos started the course), two are in Ottawa continuing their education, one is in Moose Factory being treated for TB, one has returned to Frontier College for another term, and three are working. The eighth student, Joe, is studying in the Yellowknife prison where he is serving a two-year term for manslaughter. On his graduation day his parents had refused to come to the school and had got him drunk. Later that day a brawl at a neighbour's resulted in the shooting death of a two-year-old child.

Wiele talks of the "apparent vacuum" created by education: "While the government is generous in its desire to aid any Eskimo student, his education almost precludes re-entry into his society. No industries exist in Frobisher. Consequently, local employment is limited primarily to the government services. And because of the large numbers of children in school, the problem will increase sharply."

Be that as it may, Denker is continuing Wiele's program. In the evenings, Denker's house is a second home for the students; they come to do their homework, to watch films, and to talk informally over coffee. Many of the children of the community also crowd into Denker's small house. "They like my place," he says, "because it has a rug." The children call him "Mikee".

"I really enjoy the work here. I hope this project will be able to continue and to take in more adult students."

He spoke of Martin Frobisher, the first white man to come here, who visited the place in 1576 looking for gold. Frobisher found no gold, but kidnapped some Eskimos and took them back to England where they died.

"We discussed in class the irony of naming this town after Frobisher," said Denker. "My hope is that projects like this one can assist the Eskimo to help himself and to compete successfully in the modern world."

Teachers oppose critics of OCE curriculum at annual OSSTF meeting

Opposition to criticisms of the provincial colleges of education and support for a system of "merit pay" are the major results of the annual convention of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation.

Delegates severely criticized two resolutions calling Ontario College of Education courses "demeaning" and "overly concerned with high school course content."

"There's a hippie-authority attitude in some of these motions," one former OCE instructor charged. "What we are hearing are student complaints."

However, one Toronto high school teacher said the quality of teachers produced by OCE has degenerated to the sub-standard level.

"If we have to step on a few toes, I'm sorry, but something must be done."

Vocal opposition from several delegates led to the withdrawal of one controversial motion which said demeaning conditions in some OCE courses are alienating professional teachers.

The campaign for adoption of a system of "merit pay" for Ontario teachers received unexpected support from I. M. Robb, who retired after 22 years as OSSTF general secretary.

Reversing his lengthy opposition to merit pay, Mr. Robb told the convention OSSTF should "establish a policy which would enable a first-rate teacher to earn as much as he or she could hope to earn as an administrator."

Merit pay refers to a program whereby teachers are paid according to their individual ability.

Most school boards in Ontario prefer to use uniform salary schedules which stress teaching experience and university degrees.

Mr Robb said the retention of many inadequate teachers serves only to pull down the salaries of those with greater ability and qualifications.

He said OSSTF should not oppose the dismissal of inadequate or incompetent teachers.

"If we could succeed in convincing school boards that if they're dissatisfied with a teacher they can dispose of his services, the good teachers can win higher salaries."

Mr. Robb's arguments were supported by the incoming OSSTF president, Robert M. Smith of Burlington.

"A teacher should merit an annual increment in order to receive it," Smith said. "I don't think school boards have been withholding enough increments from people who are not worthy."

Convention delegates approved a demand for a 10-per-cent across-the-board salary increase and buried in committee a motion from a Toronto group that would have endorsed the right of teachers to strike for higher salaries or better working conditions.

Volunteers plunge into city projects

gether. He sees this kind of community health project as a good vehicle for fostering professional co-operation.

SHOUT is currently conducting six projects in the Toronto community.

Ten students are involved in a project with the Toronto Indian community. Their original plan was to set up a health information clinic and referral centre at the Indian Centre on Beverly Street.

Plans to invade the centre met with opposition from their Indian consultant, Wilf Pclletier.

"Wilf psyched us out," said project spokesman, Barb Baxter (I Meds). "Our 'dogooders dedication' was rudely jolted."

Communication was the greatest challenge for the Indian Centre group.

"We wanted so much to be involved," said Barb. "Now we are learning that involvement demands interaction."

The group has had several bull sessions with representatives from the Indian community and is now tutoring Indian high school students.

Plans are projected for an Indian liaison group to be set up on campus in co-operation with a national organization, Young Indian Canada.

A volunteer project that has been operating for two years at the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital on Queen St. joined SHOUT this year.

Project 999 involves about 10 students who give two hours a week in an effort to rehabilitate socially patients from a back ward of the hospital.

These patients, chronic mental cases, have been shut up in the ward for 10 to 40 years, with a minimum of care.

The volunteers, working on an individual basis with the patients, are trying to prepare them for psychiatric help and reintroduce them to the world outside.

Project spokesman, David Rozen (III Inn), reports appreciable progress. In the two years that volunteers have worked in the ward, 90 out of 150 patients have improved sufficiently enough to be transferred to other wards or nursing homes or return to function in society. The remaining patients are now permitted to leave the hospital under supervision.

SHOUT volunteers also are involved with the emotionally disturbed outside of the back wards. About six students are working for the Toronto Samaritans Distress Centre and Action Line, an organization that offers primary solace, comfort and advice to potential suicides.

The line is manned at all times by volunteers and people considering suicide may call to be talked out of it. Often people call if they are just lonely and want a sympathetic ear.

Volunteers take a four-week "sensitivity-training" course before they are permitted to man the phones.

Often a call from a distressed person is followed up by a personal interview and referral to a social worker or psychiatrist. The telephone number is 366-1121.

"Service at the Distress Centre is valuable experience for a potential medical professional who wants to learn about people," said Glenn Cameron (II Meds).

Thirteen volunteers are serving as a virtual welcome committee for new Canadians in a project conducted through the International Institute.

Recently arrived immigrant professionals in the health sciences are referred to a student volunteer of the same profession. The volunteer serves as a liaison between the new Canadian and the system and helps him adapt and function in a new and strange environment.

Frank Sommers (II Meds), a project spokesman, cited an example of the type of services provided.

"If a new Canadian were to call the college of pharmacy to enquire about tests and standards, his accent would work to his disadvantage. If you want to learn the ropes it helps not to have an accent. This is where we come in. We try to clear away the red tape and help the new Canadian adapt to the system as painlessly as possible."

"Immigrants initially have the idea that Canadians are pretty stuck-up," Sommers added. "In confronting each other in real life situations prejudices evaporate."

The relative success of these four projects is qualified by the relative failure of two others. A drop-in centre for alcoholics was discontinued due to lack of interest on the part of the alcoholics and plans for a health information service in the Yorkville area were dropped due to a lack of facilities.

Supplementary to the community projects, SHOUT is conducting a series of lectures, panels and workshops dealing with such topics as community development, the role of the health professional and relations with minority groups.

Friedman hopes a study of community health problems will be included in the new medical curriculum to go into effect shortly.

"There is more to health studies than physical science. Encounter with real human problems is as valuable as lectures and textbooks.

Vincent Massey, the founder of Hart House, was honored by house members at a brief memorial service Friday.

Thirty persons gathered in the Music Room to pay tribute to Mr. Massey, Canada's first native-born governor-general, who died late last month.

A resolution by the Hart House board of stewards read in part:

"We, the members of Hart House, recognize the outstanding contribution made by Vincent Massey to the life of his university, his country, and the community of scholars and artists throughout the world."

MIT grad students oppose the war

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (VNS) — The graduate student council of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has condemned the United States' Vietnam policy.

Sixty per cent of the students responding to a questionnaire, sent out last year to graduates and staff, were "opposed" to the war.

Only 25 per cent of the graduates and 15 per cent of the faculty returned the questionnaire.

Seventy-six per cent of student responding said the war's high costs "diverts our efforts away from domestic problems."

Forty-five per cent wanted cessation of bombing in North Vietnam and 17 per cent favored immediate withdrawal of troops.

Three-quarters of those supporting the war said that "to relinquish our commitment at this time would endanger our international prestige and influence."

Faculty and foreign students were more opposed to the war than American graduate students.

Only three per cent of the students foresaw military victory "in the near future" if the present military policy was continued.

Blues retain tourney crown

By PHIL BINGLEY

MONTREAL, — Whenever discussions in hockey circles have turned toward the topic of this year's Varsity Blues, the common agreement has been that Blues are not as strong as they were last year. With Steve and Henry Monteith departed, the consensus is that Blues may be ripe for dethronement as Canadian intercollegiate champs.

Well, if Varsity's play this past week-end is any indication, these so-called experts had better be ready to bite the dust again. Showing mitted errors, goaltender Andre Molino was there to stop Blues cold.

As a result, when the two teams skated from the ice for a rest after forty minutes of play, the huge Montreal Forum scoreboard incredibly showed Loyola 3, Toronto 1, although Varsity held a 25-19 margin in shots on goal.

With his team down two goals and not showing any signs of reversing the trend, Blues coach Tom Watt made several lineup changes. Ward Passi moved back to defense, and centre Brian St. John took over Passi's left wing spot on a line with in any league," while coach Watt simply added, "A great win."

Individually Varsity netminder John Wrigley was outstanding as he handled several tough chances including at least five in the all-important third period. Gord Cunningham played his best game of the season and although held without a point he skated tirelessly, set up several excellent scoring opportunities, and nearly had a couple of goals himself. Murray Stroud and Bob McClelland also came up with strong efforts and shared tournament scoring honours with six points apiece in the two games.

Goaltender Andre Molino along with defence man Norm Chouinard, and forwards Art Thomas and Rick Dawson were the pick of the Loyola team. Chouinard, Thomas and Dan Heffernan were the goal-scorers in the well-balanced Warrior attack.

AROUND THE NET ...

Blues outshot Warriors 44-26 in the final game ... Only six minor penalties were served in the hotly contested game—three to each team ... The game was Blues thirteenth of the season against intercollegiate competition. Their record now stands at twelve wins and one loss (1-0 to Cornell in overtime) ... McGill won the consolation over Sir George Williams 4-3 ... Blues resume SIHL play in Hamilton with McMaster Marlines on Wednesday night.

the mark of true champions, Blues handed Loyola Warriors a 3-1 lead after two periods and then came storming back to play their strongest hockey of the season and win 4-3 going away. The victory gave Blues the Loyola College Invitational Tournament and the accompanying J. David Molson Trophy for the second consecutive year.

Bob McClelland, continuing his form as Varsity's top scorer, gave Blues a 1-0 lead when he deflected Murray Stroud's pass-out into the net as the game was barely three minutes old. However, except for a few brief sparks, that was the last sign of life Blues demonstrated until the final twenty minutes.

Loyola, obviously hungry for an upset win, outthrusted and outhit the visitors continually and beat them to the puck on almost every play. And when Warrior forwards and defencemen com-

Paul Laurent and Gord Cunningham.

The new forward unit jelled on its second shift as St. John's pass-out banked off Laurent's skate past an outstretched Molino and the beginning of the end for Loyola's fondest dreams was apparent.

Murray Stroud scored the winner on a neat play with McClelland with less than six minutes to play after defenceman Jim Miles' booming slapshot had deadlocked the score.

A good indication of the excitement of play came following the final siren. The 3500 Loyola supporters gave both teams a long and loud standing ovation as J. David Molson presented the trophy to Blues' captain Peter Speyer.

Montreal Canadian's general manager Sam Pollock commented "This is the best game I've seen this season—

SAC reps accused of violating policy

There is an unwritten but standard policy that representatives of the Students Administrative Council on university committees vote in line with SAC policy, says SAC president Tom Faulkner.

"In the event an explicit SAC policy exists it is understood the SAC reps will vote in a manner consistent with that policy," Faulkner said last night.

This policy was apparently violated at the Dec. 20 meeting of the Placement Service advisory committee. Two of the SAC representatives, Richard Seppala (IV APSC) and Harry Oussoren (III Emu), helped to defeat a motion to establish standards for barring companies from campus.

Oussoren said there was no question of defying SAC. He said a deadlock had been reached.

"It was neither feasible nor possible to implement SAC's original motion, although I am still very much in favour of the moral principle involved," he said.

Faulkner said the five representatives had been chosen as articulate spokesmen for all the points of view in SAC, although with the understanding they would vote as a bloc.

Faulkner conceded the students had made "a mistake of judgement rather than conscience" in not coming back to the council for further instructions.

Oussoren said he didn't know what considerations were made in the appointment of SAC's representatives.

"We were sent to represent SAC, but not as robots."

At tonight's SAC meeting the names of permanent representatives for the placement service advisory committee will be proposed. About 30 applications were received. Faulkner said he expected SAC would make clear the issue of the responsibility of SAC representatives.

Winter floated in, as soft flakes blanketed the campus... a subtle transformation, a momentary whiteness... we forgot studies and romped in the snow...

Eng Soc asks for police to keep peace

The engineers are worried that violence may erupt at a demonstration planned in their area of the campus for Jan. 18.

Last night, they passed a motion at the Engineering Society meeting calling responsible conduct on the part of all Engineers and demonstrators and the presence of Metro police just in case. The motion proposed by second vice president Bob MacCallum (III APSC), asked the university administration to call the police to watch over the demonstration.

The Society had received a letter the day before from the Ad Hoc Committee Against the War in Vietnam announcing the demonstration. Signed by Judith Clavir, a graduate sociology student, the letter explained the demonstration would be "non-violent and non-obstructive."

Demonstrators are going to picket the Galbraith Building to, as the letter says, "convince those engineers who are applying for jobs, to recognize their moral responsibilities, and not to apply to those companies complicit in the war and to protest the use of university facilities by such companies."

It follows in the wake of two demonstrations at the Placement Service last term. "Some of the guys in Chemical Engineering are really serious," Morris said. "They've been waiting ever since the Dow thing to do something."

"You know how these things are. Our guys want to do something and these pacifists are as violent as anybody else and..."

Another motion passed at last night's meeting, called on Engineering club chairmen and other executive members to urge their friends to be peaceful at the demonstration.

The trick to speed reading...

By MARY KATE ROWAN

Speed reading claims—fact or fiction?

To find out, I spent $35 on a 20-week effective-reading course at York University. Every Saturday morning from 10 a.m. until noon I was at the Glendon campus re-learning how to read.

I thought that there was a trick to speed reading, and that all I had to do was learn the magic formula. I envisioned myself reading at phenomenal speeds — racing through three novels in an hour and zipping through the newspaper in five minutes.

I still can't read Gone With The Wind in 20 minutes and I don't have any magic formula to give you, but my normal reading rate has increased at least three times. All it took was effort, self-discipline and self-confidence.

The course emphasizes effective comprehension, not speed, because without good comprehension, mere speed is useless.

The first few weeks of the course I found myself baraged by tests, to discover my reading speed, level of comprehension and knowledge of vocabulary.

During one test I was hooked up to a machine and my eye movement graphed as I read. The resulting film showed the length of my eye span, the evenness of my reading speed, and the number of regressions I made as I read.

Regressing—looking back on what you have already read—is a common fault of slow readers. Regressions are an unnecessary habit that can be unlearned.

An average Saturday reading session consists of three parts—"tachistoscope" work, work with the controlled reader and either vocabulary or comprehension drills.

The tachistoscope presents numbers or figures on a screen. The length of time they appear can be adjusted.

I learned to control my blinking because if I blinked I missed the number. The first few times I did not even see a number, just a blur. Gradually everyone improved until scores on the tachistoscope work were nearly perfect.

The aim of these exercises is to increase eye span and to shorten the time your eyes must rest on a span before comprehending.

By far the most interesting and challenging of the reading exercises is the work with the controlled reader. With this machine it is possible to read a passage at a controlled reading rate. A line at a time is presented to prevent regressions.

First, the class rapidly skimmed the day's reading selection. Next, we skimmed the passage using the machine. At this speed, it is only possible to see words here and there. Occasionally you might see a complete phrase.

After we read the selection at the speed for the day (which was always considered) (see HOW page 3)

... pedestrians muttered at feet soaked with its melting, while drivers swore at the heartbreaking stall of a usually loyola motor.

Many problems face nurses: Attersley

Nurses are over-worked and haven't enough residence space, charges a recently-resigned Students Administrative Council representative.

Nurses take classes for 11 months of the year, says Mary Attersley (IV Nurs). "When do the nurses have time to make money for school?" she asks.

"I'm so tired from working in the hospital that I don't feel like working in the summer."

Nursing accommodation is no better, Miss Attersley said in an interview. In the nursing residence there is room for only 20 first-year students and two second-year girls who act as dons. The other 330 must seek space elsewhere.

Miss Attersley says she resigned from SAC because nurses wouldn't give her their full support. If she brought a program back from SAC, she would end up as the head of the committee to implement it.

But the nursing faculty scored well in one respect: Concerning the Macpherson report "Some of our lectures are more discussions than lectures and in some courses there will be no finals this year."

U of T debaters form inter-fac league

The University of Toronto Debating Union is expanding its inter-faculty competition into a league of six colleges and faculties.

Debates will be held each Wednesday night and will culminate in a final tournament for the Warden McCully trophy Feb. 9-10.

The schedule will be published in The Varsity. Tonight, St. Michael's is at University College and Engineering at New College. Thursday Wycliffe is at Trinity.

OCE sponsors Canadian school bleed-in

If you're feeling down and out because of iron deficient blood, then give the stuff away. You do have a chance; the Ontario College of Education is challenging all Canadian schools to a blood drive.

It all begins to flow this Friday at the College on Bloor at Spadina. Doors open at 9 a.m.

"We don't expect to win, but we are spearheading the attack," said Richard Start (OCE), the chairman of the drive. "We hope our drive will influence all other colleges to participate."

Forestry may seat students on council

An open meeting of forestry students has been called for 1 p.m. today to discuss seating five students on the forestry faculty council.

Dave Winston (IV For), the president of the forestry Students Council, said adequate representation on the council would eliminate much of the "confusion" now existing between students and faculty.

Winston said he expects little opposition to his plan from either the 130 forestry students or the faculty.

Lance co-editors forced to resign

WINDSOR (CUP) — The co-editors of the University of Windsor newspaper, The Lance, resigned yesterday after the university president and the senate discipline committee threatened to expel them if they remained in office.

The senate committee on student conduct Dec. 4 called for disciplinary action due to what it termed The Lance's "morbid obsession with squalid vulgarity."

At that time SCAD asked for student council support in cleaning up The Lance. Council refused, reiterating the right of the paper to operate freely.

The committee objected to several Lance articles in the first term, particularly The Student as Nigger, an analysis of university education in western society.

The article has appeared in The Georgian,

The Argus and several other campus papers with little reaction.

Co-editor Joyn Lalor said it became clear the committee would move to expel fellow co-editor Marian Johnstone and himself at yesterday's meeting if they did not resign beforehand.

The Windsor student council termed the senate's role in the case "unnecessary interference" which undermined the student body.

"It is further the belief of this council that the university community as a whole has been irreparably harmed from high-handed interference of certain members of the community at large who have, without regard to the rights and prerogatives of a student government to publish in the sole interest of its students, shackled the privileges of freedom of the press."

How to read a novel in 20 minutes...

ably slower than the skimming speed) we answered 10 difficult questions..

Your comprehension is calculated using the number of answers you have correct, for example, eight out of 10 answers correct—80 percent comprehension.

To calculate the effective reading speed, you take the comprehension percentage of the machine reading rate. If the machine reading speed is 800 words a minute and your comprehension is 80 percent, then your effective reading rate is 640 words a minute.

Other than saying that after taking the course we would be able to read an ordinary novel in 20 minutes, the instructors made few promises.

Speed reading, effective reading, or whatever you want to call it, is a skill. Like other skills, practice brings improvement.

There is no magic involved just hard work, faith in your ability and a desire to succeed. Just like any other goal, you can work towards it.

Most people have a reading rut. They find a comfortable speed and stay there.

The only way to read faster is to force yourself to. Obviously you can't carry a controlled reader around with you but you can control your reading rate by using a finger pattern.

For me, the best method is to place the tip of a pencil under the centre of the first line of the page and quickly draw it down the page, forcing my eyes to keep up. I just read the words as I see them.

Forcing myself to keep up has two advantages—it increases my speed and prevents regressions. Actually, speed reading is just perfected skimming with emphasis on comprehension.

What if you miss words? So what? You don't have to read every word to understand a passage. For example, in the phrase "in the spring," all you need to see is "spring" to get the idea.

Skeptical? So was I when I heard this and wondered how it was possible to see just the "right" words. I can't explain it but I guarantee it works.

Speed reading has one disadvantage. Because it takes intense concentration, it's very tiring. After speed reading for 30 minutes I'm tired.

Many people dismiss speed reading with a shrug and the comment, "Who wants to speed-read a good book anyway?"

I certainly don't. I could read an ordinary novel in one hour or less but I don't. I will read it at my normal reading rate. However, just by taking the course, my normal reading rate has tripled.

When I'm using a finger pattern, concentrating on what I'm reading and consciously trying to read quickly, I'm speed reading. If I am not consciously trying to read quickly, I'm reading at my normal reading rate.

You can't speed read everything. I would never speed read a math text or speed read to study for my finals. However, I will use my speed reading to preview my notes and texts at exam time.

I use speed reading for magazine articles, the newspaper (especially editorials and opinion articles), some novels and often for extra reading for my courses.

Although I think the principles of speed reading are great, I am disappointed in the York course. I quit three-quarters of the way through because I was finding the work unchallenging.

I felt that the course could have been condensed into 15 weeks. By dragging it out, they lost my interest.

The only valuable exercises were those with the controlled reader. This took up about 30 minutes of the two-hour session. The others took about 45 minutes.

The rest of the time was spent waiting—either for a machine, the right book or someone to conduct the exercises.

I feel that the methods they have to teach the reading and all the ideas behind the course are good, but the course is run in a haphazard manner.

If the course were run more efficiently it would be excellent.

Speed reading claims—fact or fiction? For me they're plainly fact.

Innis will drink Sir John A. dry

Tomorrow is Sir John A. Macdonald's birthday, and not everyone on campus will drink to the health of the Father of Confederation.

Last term the Innis College Students' Council unanimously passed a proposal to hold a party with alcohol to honor Sir John A. The college council vetoed it.

"This time it's dry," says the Innis student president, Ken Stone (IV Inn). "I guess I'll stay home and write essays. I don't want to be arrested."

But Ernie McCullough (IV Vic) the president of the campus Progressive Conservatives has other plans:

"We'll have a party tomorrow night in the old Sir John A., tradition—that fun and politics go together."

Liberal President George Davies (III Trin) will also celebrate.

NDP club president Daniel Houston (IV Trin) asked, "Who is Sir John A. Macdonald?"

No action until next year: Sword

No action will be taken on the Macpherson report until at least the next academic year, says J.H. Sword, the acting president of the university.

He told a Dec. 8 meeting of the Senate that studies of the implications for cost, space and staff are under way. Students are participating in these discussions. Mr. Sword explained that prior to the implementation of any of the recommendations widespread discussion was necessary.

No fixed schedule exists but the report must go through talks on the departmental college and faculty level.

redress . . .

Among all the bothersome press releases and publicity material that arrived in the office this week, the silliest was something called Campus Opinion, an attempt by the United States Information Service to interpret student sentiments for us.

There have been many demonstrations across the U.S. recently you see, and some of these have become obstructive. U of T had one over Dow recruiting; U.S. campuses have seen demonstrations over Dow and other companies, and more importantly over campus recruitment by the military and the Central Intelligence Agency.

So, Campus Opinion points out — with the help of quotations from widely scattered student journals and some university administrators — that sentiments are decidedly against such demonstrations. This is believable.

The silly part is where the USIS theorists point out: "The U.S. Constitution protects the people's right to free speech and free press, and to assemble peacefully as well as the right to petition the government for a redress of their grievances."

Sure, the Constitution does that all right, but for certain segments of the U.S. population, this doesn't work right now — 54 per cent of the U.S. population, according to some recent polls on the war in Viet Nam.

The article points out that peaceful demonstrations are all right but violence or obstruction cannot be tolerated and that demonstrators should respect the rights of everyone. What it doesn't point out is why the demonstrations are actually occurring and yet that is the essential point.

You have a war, you see, that many people don't agree should be fought. You also have a President in power who was elected because people thought he, unlike Goldwater, would bring about peace. You have a system of checks and balances built into the constitution to see that the executive cannot do anything without first consulting Congress and therefore the people. Yet the war has never been officially declared. Many of the demonstrators are students who have been taught the fine points of the U.S. constitution but fail to see them in operation right now.

Then suppose you're an American and after carefully analyzing the war, find yourself in opposition to the U.S. involvement. Who would you vote for next fall? Clearly you don't have a voice because there won't be a peace candidate.

Then you have the plain facts that the U.S. is not winning the war — it cannot even beat up one little backward south-east Asian country. Yet it is sending nearly a half million men and enough equipment to prompt the currently-imposed economic measures. In other words, the U.S. is even having trouble paying for it all.

That's all beside the many articles, such as in last month's Harper's (we won't mention Ramparts because Mr. Dreifelds doesn't like it, or the New York Times because he does like it) which explain the corruption that pervades all levels of South Vietnamese society. This corruption will make it impossible for the South Viet Nam government to rule even if the U.S. wins the war for it.

There are also the many historical parallels with the Chinese situation before the revolution in 1949: the corruption, the political repression, the lack of land and social reforms, etc. The people who are demonstrating have seen why the revolution in China occurred and can see similar things happening in Viet Nam.

Then there are the published stories of war-time atrocities. Sure, they occur on both sides, but if you grew up on American history books and movies, you came to see that the Americans always play fair. Mustard gas in the first world war was horrible; but napalm is necessary; those Commies have to be stopped.

So, there you can see the young man disillusioned with all this and yet knowing that he is likely to be sent off to the slaughter next week. The older people tell him to ask responsibly and demonstrate peacefully, if he must demonstrate at all. Protest is tolerated with an amused smile by the people who don't have to go.

What happens in such a situation? The protests become increasingly violent, of course. It's not a good situation, but it's happening.

Letters

Sir:

How can Mr. Hoch honestly compare Dow to the S.S.? The S.S. was an organization that our entire society, almost to a man, condemns for its blatant violations of individual freedom and draws a line at such activities. On the other hand, the recent SAC election indicates that our student society is anything but unanimous in its opinion regarding Dow. It is entirely probable that the anti-Dow forces are a minority.

How can Mr. Hoch honestly argue with you or me about what rights we, as individuals, possess and what limits there are on our rights? I doubt whether he knows what a right is.

In the midst of his article, Mr. Hoch states: "The individual does not have an absolute right to be an accessory to murder." In the next sentence he makes it plain that this applies to his opponents, the proponents of individual freedom in the Dow context. He is quite correct in denying the status of a right to a free choice that certain individuals reached for a variety of reasons by virtue of their right of liberty. But two sentences later, Mr. Hoch talks about the opposite free choice, the one that his gang has made and how does he put it? "What, he exclaims, "about our rights not to be made accessories in mass inhumanity?" Clearly this is nonsense. A right, if it is a right, applies equally to all. The only bonafide rights are of life, liberty and property. By capriciously expanding the list of rights to suit their whims, the Left and Right have contributed to a confusion of the concept of right in the minds of others in order to obscure their quasi-legal tactics of obstruction of others and their illegal tactics such as trespassing on the grounds of the Placement Service behind the respectability of a "right."

I can agree with only one part of Mr. Hoch's emotionally-organistic conclusion: "A few so-called rights must be limited." Especially those "rights" (properly named so-called) that limit an individual's actual right to liberty, and the freedom of choice it entails, by means that pay nothing more than intellectually dishonest lip-service to rational modes of argument and persuasion.

Sir:

I am afraid that your reporter failed to accurately convey my feelings on the Placement Service Committee in her front page report in the Monday Varsity.

My disappointment was not with the actions of the two students who voted against the motion to bar certain companies; I feel strongly that they honourably followed their own consciences in the choice they made; I respect the choice they made and will oppose any attempt to discipline or censure them at the SAC meeting this Wednesday. One must always follow one's personal opinions whether as an SAC member voting on a controversial motion which may displease one's constituents or as a student participant in sessions such as those on the placement service.

What I was doing in my other remarks was reporting to your reporter the feelings of those who have told me they intend to raise the question at the Wednesday SAC meeting. It is not a feeling I share as I tried to suggest to your reporter in our conversation.

In short, I was disappointed that the SAC position was not accepted by the Committee, but I did not expect any member of the committee, student or non-student, to vote for a position which he did not personally support.

Steven Langdon,
Trinity SAC Representative

Sir:

Thank you for the sanity (re: name withheld letter of Friday).

Lisa Sweeting, proofreader

Sir:

My attention has been drawn to a statement in your December 4th issue on the subject of the expulsion from the University of Western Ontario of a student, Mark Kirk, after he had pleaded guilty in a London court to possession of marijuana.

In your news story, you stated: "Because of agreements among universities, this means that Kirk will be unable to attend any university in Canada."

You followed this up, in an editorial of December 6th, with the statement: "Breaking Kirk's future (expulsion from any university means, because of an agreement made some years ago, that no other university will accept Kirk) was totally uncalled for."

There is no agreement of the kind implied here among universities. Each university in Canada is at liberty to accept or reject applications from students on the record presented to them. They are not bound or prejudiced by any "agreement" on this kind of matter.

G. C. Andrew,
Executive Director,
Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, Ottawa.

(ed. note: However, a student's expulsion, when noted in the report you mention, does have the effect of preventing him entry into other universities. The agreement is not hindering upon any university but does exist. It would be interesting to see examples of students who were accepted after an expulsion or to see another university accept Kirk.)

Sir:

Come now, Mr. Paul Hoch, just what do you take us for? Your article (Jan. 5) is in itself a classic example of rhetoric. It sounds convincing, plausible and it is even to be commended as a valiant attempt. Your last paragraph however is the point of departure.

In it you state, "At some point WE have to draw a line . . . even if a few so-called rights are limited in the process." The hidden axiom in this statement is of course that this "WE" refers to Paul Hoch et al. It does not refer, as he would have us believe, to the university community at large. He wants the right to restrict our freedom and he doesn't mind doing it. But let me ask, what would happen if someone else tried to restrict even one of Paul Hoch's so-called rights? What would his reaction be? Would he mind?

An incident related to this occurred on Dec. 13, 1967. On this date, the federal department of manpower and immigration was scheduled to hold interviews in the same building as Dow. Wishing to avoid an incident, manpower was moved to another building. In order to find this out, however, one had to cross the lines of protestors to read the notice. Talking with the interviewers from manpower I was informed that not one person showed up that morning at their new location. These are the facts; interpret them as you wish.

I ask you to remember that these people had a right to be interviewed on that day, at that particular time, in that building. Somehow their so-called rights were limited.

To those that have taken a stand to limit the so-called rights of others, I say that I too have taken a stand on the so-called rights of others based on freedom, justice and equality, three words which Mr. Paul Hoch et al tend to neglect.

College Placement Annual (College Placement Council, Inc., 35 East Elizabeth Ave., Bethlehem, Pa.)

"Wondering what company fits your objectives?" the Army's leading supplier of lethal nerve gas (FMC corporation) asks brightly.

"A constant flow of diversified, intellectually stimulating assignments," promises a leader in chemical warfare and counterinsurgency research and development (Booz-Allen Applied Research).

"Grow swiftly into positions of Responsibility and Exceptional Challenge ... probing not only purely military conditions, trends and forces, but also pertinent economic, social, cultural, physical, geographic and scientific factors." (Defense Intelligence Agency).

Not only is the work fascinating, its vital contribution to the nation's security is a source of personal satisfaction to those who carry it out. The CIA has its own career training program. Each year highly qualified college graduates are enrolled in it. This training provides a valuable foundation for a professional career in intelligence and produces many of CIA's future leaders and managers. Applications will be accepted from graduates with degrees in: Accounting, Biology, Business Chemistry, Computer Science, Earth Sciences, Economics, Electrical Engineering, Finance, Foreign Language and Area Studies, Geography, History, International Relations,

Law, Library Science Mathematics, Medicine, Photography, Physics, Police Science, Political Science, Psychology, Public Administration, Sociology, Space Technology and other specialized fields. The CIA offers liberal vacation, insurance and retirement benefits. Assignments are both in the United States and overseas. Salaries are commensurate with training and experience. The work is classified and U.S. citizenship is required. If you are presently in military service and are about to be separated, inquire about opportunities for men with training in CIC, CID, ONI, OSI, Communications, Electronics, Logistics, Photo Interpretation, Foreign Languages, Special Forces, and other specialties who may qualify without a college degree. CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY

Promises like these are written on doors that lead to careers with hundreds of organizations (private and governmental) which need a continual flow of fresh brainpower to keep American imperialism healthy and strong.

Remember scholarly, modest Jane who lived down the hall studying Mandarin Chinese way back when you were a soph? You say she was the pride and joy of the Asia Studies Department but nobody has heard from her lately? The odds are great that one of those doors swallowed her up. Will she ever return? One wonders if Jane's "special talents" really "find satisfying expression in a vital career with the CIA."

You may never get to know what lies beyond even a single one of the doors, but it certainly is revealing to know how many of them your college placement office will steer you toward if you give it half a chance. With the appearance of the Annual (described as a "tool in the placement directors' basic program of employment counseling wherein each student or alumnus is provided with the individual guidance vital to effective placement") finding out is relatively painless. It is to be found in the placement office of every educational institution belonging to one of the eight Regional Placement Associations of the U.S. and Canada.

In addition to hundreds of informative advertisements, the Annual provides handy descriptions of the organizations doing the recruiting and the particular kind of personnel (i.e., those who are certified as willing and able to do the jobs the outfit has in mind) each relishes. For example:

ARMY MATERIEL COMMAND

Seeks: Bacteriologists; Chemists, formal training — analytical, biological, general; Engineers — electronic, mechanical; Meteorologists. On the job training provided.

Features such as those make the Annual an indispensable reference source for anybody who wants to tell his friends about the business dealings of his college placement office, or who wants the broadest possible choice of recruiters to run out of town.

LETTER

The following is part of a letter received by a U of T student from Viet Nam. The writer is an American who studied Philosophy at University College. Two years ago he enlisted voluntarily.

Dear L. . . .

Merry Christmas! I hope you and your family have a very happy holiday. Have you had any snow yet, this winter? Today it is as bright and warm as ever here. It is certainly not at all like the weather at home but even so, I can keep my spirits a little higher knowing I will be leaving here the same day next month.

When I look back on this past year I cannot think it but a waste and even as something wrong. It must be true for men at all levels of combat—the who wages war destroys a bit of himself as he defeats his enemy. So much time devoted to tearing down and destroying! I feel I should take an equal number of years and use them to build, give, help—to make a measure of goodness, or happiness for someone; to equal, and thus compensate for the "work" of this year. I don't know whether you would agree with this but I think that the "myth" or fallacy that is most in need of discounting today is that one can prove his worth, his manliness, his patriotism, his loyalty to his family, and all other virtues by being a good soldier or fighter. When we think of war at home or while reading we conceive it in terms of literature — poetry or myth — man's dream or idealizations. Perhaps men wrote so gloriously of war in the past so we would not fear it but think it and honorable way to preserve the heritage. But when you leave these literary dreams at home and travel miles to the field you find no poetry there but only the basest living — not austere living (which is good) but foul living; the negation of humanity. I often think, as I read newspaper accounts of what men are doing and saying here and then look about, that the reporters here cannot see what is happening or that they do not want to discredit a myth.

They tried to drum it out of my head when I first came into the Corps that a man proves himself by what good things he does—what he builds or helps to prosper. They said, to be a man you must kill and think it noble; destroy the enemy and think it as building peace. But no; it is not so. And when I am free again, no one will tell me so, ever. War is for the ill-willed, the ambitious but untalented men, for the men who would knock a man down and walk on him to prove their own superiority to themselves, for the men who would kill other men for the sole reason that their very existence was a challenge to their egos.

I'm sorry. I must be depressing you with all my somber reflections on my life these past few years. But, God, how I pray I can find something to do to take amends for two years wasted on nonsense. It may not seem so, but I'm getting a bit more cheerful and optimistic as I near the end of my military duty. I've almost forgotten what it is like to live happily doing good and enjoyable things, learning about something, meeting good people and seeing friends. I'll probably act like a man from another planet when I first get home—not quite understanding how everything could be so different from what I have been used to. Have you ever met someone from Mars before?

Column and half

Plaid Power strikes again

I always feel bad talking about gentlemen of the coloured persuasion because, if they are bores or idiots (as the occasional one is) you can't say so or you're a bigot and you've got some guy called X following you around and asking your intimate friends if they might have the odd toenail or wisp of hair of yours.

However, I recently came across a Plaid Power advocate ("Burns, Baby, Burns") and because we share the same race, and a mutual dislike of "Woodie", I feel safe in reporting the following conversation.

Dermot MacX, as you might call him, a city hall chauffeur, has the same hang up many "Power" people have. He's in love with casualty lists.

As soon as you get him started, he'll produce a black oil-cloth book from his hip pocket and show you chart after chart of deaths. Metro traffic accidents, Viet Nam mortality figures ("especially the American deaths; they're more accurate") and starvation estimates from Indian provinces. He turns to the war news first in the evening papers. He listens to every newscast on the car radio.

A big battle in the Vietnamese DMZ zone is reported, and Dermot is elated all day. A Christmas spot check as effective as the last one and he "feels down in the dumps all day." He looks forward with eager anticipation to the new 400-passenger super-sonic air transports.

Anyone who hasn't actually talked to him might think that he's a vile-tempered but harmless old man. When his sister bought a budgie a few years ago, he let it out of its cage and it swooped around the living room until it flew into a fan.

"I hate dogs and little kids, but I hate dogs worse, because you can kick little kids."

He claims to have killed pigeons, rabbits and "thousands and thousands" of insects.

"I've left enough poisoned candy bars on subways and slashed enough tires that I must have accounted for a few people, too" he says "But I've never seen anything about it in the papers. I think the police must hush it up."

During my conversation with him, in a downtown restaurant, he left at least three or four times to wash his hands. I noticed that they were red and rough.

"Listen, My boss, Alderman — — — the damned DP, wants me looking 'up to scratch' all the time."

I tried to get him to tell be about some of the politicians he's met, but he told me instead about the other drivers he knows.

City hall chauffeurs have plenty of time on their hands, and they spend it in different ways. Some of the older ones memorize passages from the Bible, the younger ones think "mostly about sex." One fellow, whose boss has a telephone in the car, spends his waiting time listening to those radio stations with cash give-aways if you give them a call.

Another thing that came out of our conversation is the aversion that most politicians and chauffeurs have to fresh air. Literally, Dermot is under strict orders to drive with the windows rolled up until at least eleven o'clock in the morning, and he's glad to comply. He has seen some politicians get sick to their stomachs during drives through the country. I don't think he was exaggerating.

The point of all this is, Dermot, who's an ex-officio member of the Scottish Sinn Fein, is very much like other Power-advocate people I've met on campus. He is terribly concerned about over-population and reads and re-reads religiously the works of Ernest Hemingway. So there.

As any trade union leader can tell you, the parlour socialists that campuses all around the world have been breeding, are pale imitations of the real working-class thing. As you can see, the same goes for the vaguely-anarchist, concerned, nationalists we get. Life's the McCoy.

Accept no campus fire Brand-X. It's an unsatisfactory substitute.

New play and film fest highlight Babel

University College's festival, Babel, has acquired another drawing card for its week of lectures, discussions, music and mayhem.

The festival, Jan. 22-29, will present John O'Neill professor of sociology at York University.

Prof. O'Neill will discuss the Myth of American Abundance and Affluence during Babel's session on myths of North America.

Hersh Ezrin (IV UC), the publicity director for the festival, announced that American critic Andrew Kopkind will not be able to attend, as previously announced.

Kopkind, a Washington correspondent for The New Statesman and The New Republic and frequent critic for the New York Review of Books, said he could not come because he felt "uncomfortable" talking before large audiences.

However, Mr. Kopkind will send the festival a sample of his work to be read at some point during the week's activities.

Ezrin said the festival will also produce a prize-winning play by Eric Strauss.

The play, Wake Me When It's Over, was the 1967 winner of the University of Toronto's One Act Play Writing Festival. It will be directed by Henry Tarvainen (III UC) and will be presented at noon at UC's West Hall Tuesday through Friday.

The film festival, beginning Friday and running through the weekend, will present movies like The War Game, which won an Academy Award for best documentary, and Up Tight, Los Angeles is Burning, Shit, voted the best film at the 1966 Ann Arbor Film Festival.

Eclipse of a Sun Virgin and Hold Me While I'm Naked (filmed in washrooms throughout the United States) will represent the underground movie industry.

All films will be shown in Room 135 in the McLennan Building and in Room 102 of the Mechanical Building.

Babel will come to a screaming, pulsating climax Sunday evening at Convocation Hall with the aid of a New York rock group, the Mothers of Invention.

Tickets for the festival will be on sale in the Junior Common Room from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in Sidney Smith and the University College canteen if any are left.

Smith sees religion as 'poetry plus'

Religion should be regarded as "poetry plus, not as science minus," Dr. Wilfred C. Smith told an audience of 200 yesterday.

Dr. Smith, currently director of the Centre for the Study of World Religions at Harvard University, stressed the difference between faith and belief.

While the beliefs of various philosophers may vary considerably, he said, they share the faith of love of knowledge, the faith that the universe is intelligible.

Dr. Smith is scheduled to hold three open dialogues with faculty in his role as Centennial Professor for January.

Syndicalism creates new student image

Mr. LaTouche was a vice-president of the Quebec student union, UGEO, at its inception. Prior to that he was editor of the newspaper of the University of Montreal. He is currently studying political science at the University of British Columbia.

By DANIEL LATOUCHE

(CUP) — If all goes well (that is if it doesn't disappear first), the Canadian Union of Students should soon become the first English-speaking student union in the world to accept student syndicalism as its official dogma. And this, 22 years after the French and 12 years after the Quebec students made that move.

Here are a few notions about the whole concept of syndicalism. Even if you don't become a syndicalist yourself, you may find it useful to know what people are supposed to be talking about.

The history of student syndicalism

The concept could have originated only in post-1945 France. After five years of German occupation, after the involvement of thousands of students in the military resistance, after the clandestine establishment of hundreds of student associations devoted to the struggle of the French nation against the oppressor, the moment had come for a change in the basis for student action and student organization in the country. After six years of war, French students had realized that the only way to prevent future catastrophes was to take over, or at least to play an active role in the deciding of the future.

At the same time they didn't want a return to the world of the Thirties, with its arch-conservative social order. They hadn't fought or died to re-build such a world all over again.

The idea of student syndicalism received its official credentials with the publication in 1948 of its basic document, the Charta of Grenoble (La Charte de Grenoble). When student syndicalism made its first entry at the University of Montreal 10 years later this charta was considered to be the Magna Carta of the ideology. It still is. Unfortunately it has never been translated in English.

The Quebec case

In the traditional Catholic province of Quebec, Maurice Duplessis was the real father of this "prise de conscience" of the student class. The general apathy toward the social good that was reflected in the last years of the Duplessis rule had its tragic consequences for education. Our primary and secondary school systems — the best we were told then — succeeded effectively in forming human sub-products easily integrated at the lower echelons of our colonial economic structure.

At higher levels the lack of government funds prevented students from reaching university and also hampered the universities (the French-speaking ones, at least, since McGill had enough money from private sources and didn't think, at that time, of complaining) from developing normally.

However, 1958 was the turning point. Bypassing the university administration's interdictions, the Quebec students went on a general strike. For months after the strike, three students sat permanently at the door of the premier's office requesting a meeting. The movement had been launched.

Incoherent, contradictory and weak during its first years, it finally reached its consecration with the founding of the "Union General des Etudiants du Quebec" in October, 1964.

The ideology of student syndicalism

The ideology of student syndicalism is based on one definition and one axiom from which everything else is drawn.

The definition: a student is a young intellectual worker.

The axiom: There is no such problem; there are only student aspects of socio-national problems.

From the definition and the axiom spring the rights and obligations of the student association. These are illustrated in the following charta adopted by the University of Montreal students. Even though each student group in Quebec possesses its own charta, there is no great difference among these, since they are all offsprings of the Charta of Grenoble.

The student

The student has all the rights and assumes all the obligations of a free young citizen, who by his intellectual work within the university community is an apprentice in a profession with which he will in the future serve society.

Rights of students

As a free citizen: The student is entirely responsible for his own actions, and he is the first judge of his needs and interests. He must be given total freedom of thought, expression and action. This liberty must be complete. Consequently the University in respecting him must not interfere with student affairs and must not consider itself responsible for the actions of one of its students. No sanction or pressure must be undertaken by the university or the student body against an action or attitude of a student especially when he is expressing through the student news-boundaries of the law) on questions of politics, morality, thought or religion. Except to protect itself against judicial measures, the student body must not exercise any control on the actions of its members, including those who have the courage to express their opinions in the paper.

As a Young Adult: The student has a strict right to a future and a right to living conditions that will allow him to assume control of, to conserve and to develop the social heritage of his society. He has a right to influence social institutions and to contribute to their evolution. He must think over all cultural values and every social structure. He has a right to a dialogue with those in power, for it is the contemporary youth who will inherit today's achievements. He must be prepared to judge what is being built for tomorrow, because he will have to live under it.

As an Intellectual: The student has a right to material conditions that allow a decent life of the mind. He has a right to bring society to give a primordial attention to cultural life. These last two rights are the basis of all student demands on society:

CUSO: TEACHING IN ZAMBIA

By SUE HELWIG

"What in the hell are you doing in Africa and what do you think you can do for these Kaffirs?"

Two weeks after his 1964 arrival in Zambia, then Northern Rhodesia, David Beer was confronted by these words. The speaker was an Afrikaner farmer with the smell of gin on his breath.

David had worked with CUSO the year before in Jamaica where he found that there was an absence of overt racial problems. His experience working with the Jamaica Youth Corps as a recreation director introduced him to a multi-racial society where people live harmoniously together.

"In recreation, I was able to get to know the Jamaican chaps in an informal and easy way. This was transmitted into my social life and I was able to hitch-hike all over the island."

But a year later in Northern Rhodesia he found the setting quite different: "The scars of colonialism and racial discrimination were still present. In Jamaica I felt quite comfortable going to a pub with friends. But in Northern Rhodesia at that time it was very difficult to mix socially in public with African friends.

"The main difference between Jamaica and Zambia was that the struggle for independence in Zambia was much more bitter because of the 'political albatross' of the Central African Federation set up by the British government. But things have changed with independence, and nowadays Lusaka, the capital of Zambia, is the scene of numerous multi-racial gatherings."

David attributes this improvement directly to the policy of Kenneth Kaunda who formed the first independent government in October of 1964. Kaunda is seeking to establish a multi-racial humanist state.

David worked as a group-work and leadership training officer at the Zambia Youth Service National Training School, which supplies a network of eight provincial camps with recreation and citizenship training. The camp was situated in flat tortured dry bushland along a railroad line in a still predominantly European farming area. The climate is temperate from March rainy season, and camp's 3,500-foot elevation.

"I'm afraid it really wasn't as good as I had expected," said David. "No jungles around."

In 1966, he moved to Ndola, a belt, to work as a social welfare officer. It is one of the most rapidly industrialized areas of six company-built towns, two of which have populations of over 100,000.

"In effect these towns were built for the population living in the township. The population is changing slightly as government schools are built. Educated Zambians are able to live in the town."

Callahan: "No more easy answers"

CUSO: LA

By KATHY BARCZA

Any tourist guide will tell you that La Paz, Bolivia's seat of government, is a city with a population of about 400,000, lying in a deep valley within the Andes. It has busy vegetable and livestock markets where the Indians of the region sell their crops of maize and potatoes.

But John Callahan (SGS), who has spent the past two years of his life working for CUSO in Bolivia, will tell you that he found working there not much different from working in Toronto. He taught mathematics and science at a private school run by a priest and owned by the upper-class community—consisting of those "who aspire to be white or who have money."

"I feel there was some real value in the work I was doing," says Callahan. "The people I was teaching are going to run Bolivia some day."

Callahan explains that South American society is very structured, and that, in effect, La Paz is really four small towns corresponding to its four classes. Consequently, he found himself moving in a relatively small and select circle of professionals and students, without any contact with the half-breed and Indian elements of La Paz. "All too often," he claims, "CUSO gets involved with just the upper level of society in a foreign country."

CUSO: TEACHING IN NIGERIA

By JIM COWAN

Idealistic notions about the teaching profession don't last long in the Eastern Region of Nigeria. Just ask CUSO volunteer Jean Mayo.

Jean is a 24-year-old Political Science graduate from Queen's who is now studying at the Ontario College of Education. She spent over two years teaching in Nigeria, in West Africa.

She explained that in Nigeria it was an economic investment for a family to send a child to school. Teachers were expected to "teach to the exam" because the students literally could not afford to fail.

Jean and fellow CUSO volunteer Katherine Finley taught at the Amumara Girls' Secondary School in the heart of the Eastern Region, now known as Biafra. Students ranging from 12 to 20 years of age come to this school from all over the country.

That is, they used to come. Jean said that all the progress which had been made in the region was destroyed by the recent civil war. "There had been a lot of thinking and a lot of changes going on in Nigeria," she continued. "Now there is nothing left in the Eastern Region. It's so depressing."

However, she does not dwell upon these aspects; she prefers to remember Amumara as it was.

Jean and Kathy's first report described the school: "Our school compound is quite isolated from both the nearby villages and from any sizeable town. The main school building is a two-story structure with classrooms, dormitories and a hall for prayers and assemblies. Other buildings include the matron's house, a low building housing the staff room, library and office, and a newly-built science lab."

The students were like students everywhere, Jean found. But there were special problems. "The temperament of the Ebo is very democratic," she said. "You had to prove yourself as a teacher before they accepted your discipline."

Generally the "Europeans", as all whites in Nigeria are called, were impressed by how quickly the community accepted them. For instance, the compound got electricity just before Jean arrived, and one of her first tasks was to organize entertainment for a "Turning-On" ceremony. Despite the short time she had been there, Jean found that she was able to talk to the parents as a member of the community rather than as an outsider.

Jean and Katherine found that the people in the surrounding countryside were quick to learn their names. As they rode along the dirt roads on their Hondas the people would greet them by name. "They didn't know which one of us they were greeting, because we wore crash helmets. It was a very different experience, because we wore crash helmets, but this is what I learned from the French phrases they had just learned. It was very time spent on French could have improved the students' English. It is very imprecise and this led to a lot of trouble."

The school day started about 7:30 a.m. and prayers took turns at these tasks. Class started at 8:30 a.m., and Jean taught for about an hour. The students were French and English.

French was the "prestige" language. It was very gratifying for her to hear the French phrases they had just learned. It was very time spent on French could have improved the students' English. It is very imprecise and this led to a lot of trouble."

This was just one of the problems. "They use expressions that seem wrong. But this is what I learned from the French phrases they had just learned. It was very time spent on French could have improved the students' English. It is very imprecise and this led to a lot of trouble."

After a 2 p.m. lunch (student work) started at 3:30. Recreation started at 4:30. The girls played net ball or practical work. Supper was at 6:30 and evening work started at 7:30.

"The stereotype picture of a volunteer, is a good all-round Canadian living in a mud hut in the midst of central Africa, speaking fluent Swahili and integrated as a member of the tribe. To be realistic there are no such Canadian volunteers."

This is an excerpt from an article in the August, 1967 bulletin of the Canadian University Service Overseas. The words were originally delivered at Christmas, 1966 to a reunion of volunteers held in Kingston, Jamaica. The speaker was Prof. Ben Schlesinger of the U of T School of Social Work, then a visiting professor on the island.

Such reunions are common among volunteers because CUSO has always used group discussion as a means of criticizing itself. But now that the organization is six years old and 900 strong, the challenge of self-examination has become more critical as CUSO focuses on an attempt to preserve its original flexible philosophy in the face of tremendous was dry, except for the November never too hot because of the really very exciting in one respect. No wild animals running a mining town in the copper belt. He describes this area as a part of Africa. Ndola is one of three of which have popula-segregated, with the African townships on the outskirts. This is now changing as involvement increases. The new housing in the centre is better housing in the centre for a social welfare officer,

David says, was in helping people caught in the transition between the traditional tribal rural community and a modern urban community. "What happens is that the well-educated Zambian civil servant will have to provide support for his extended family which could be fifteen people or so. I've had a man earning a good wage come and ask me to help him send his relatives back to the townships.

"But there is no delinquency in the American sense of anti-social feelings. Young people are out of school because the schools aren't built, and if they steal it is because they have to."

When you ask David whether he plans to stay, now that he is back in Canada, he shrugs his shoulders and says, "After three years in Zambia and only three months in Canada, I don't yet know."

But right now he is working on the university degree that he hasn't had time for yet, and is doing his best to speak for CUSO on the U of T campus.

very important in South America) were two ways in which John attempted to establish a more open surface communication with Bolivians. But he found the undertaking rather difficult. Ultimately you're always a tourist, a "gringo". And then, you can't really have a Bolivian friend just because he's Bolivian, if you know what I mean—you have to have something in common besides."

John was in La Paz when guerrilla activities first came to light about last May.

"Everybody was hopped-up over Guevara. And maybe his kind of revolution is what Latin America needs. But his way couldn't be my way. I could work only on an Anglo-Saxon basis—pragmatic, technological. In my position I couldn't pretend to be the saviour of South America." John points out, however, that in general, CUSO philosophy does seem to be "think as you like."

About the time John left for Bolivia, there was a lot of writing being done about the "coming" revolution in South America with a lot of preconceptions. But these rapidly dissolved.

"It's surprising how little you can know about a country after living in it for two years. What I do know now, is that "the revolution" won't be here for a while yet, and that you can't generalize about South American countries as North American journalists tend to do.

"I don't have any easy answers about South America anymore."

rested. Afternoon prep (homework) time was from 4:45 to 5:30. Physical education for track and field. Evening prep started at 7:00. The girls were expected to be in bed by 10:00.

Their social life was confined to visiting the boys' school 4 miles down the road and to paying visits to various important people in the village.

The volunteers became totally engrossed in their work, even to the extent of adopting one of the girls. Christiana was being sponsored by her guardian, but he died in an accident. The young student would have had to quit but Jean and Kathy "adopted" her. They paid her fees and incidental expenses, allowing her to finish the school year.

Jean's two-year contract ended in September 1966, but because the school year ran until December she stayed on to see her students through their English exam. Even now that she is back in Toronto she continues to work for CUSO as the student representative for OCE. She is also on the Toronto CUSO Committee and the staff of the orientation committee for west Africa.

Some people feel that Jean has done enough by going to Nigeria for two years — years when her classmates were continuing their "formal" education. But as Jean puts it, "CUSO sent me out, and now I feel a certain obligation to help send others."

Jean Mayo: "You had to prove yourself as a teacher" growth. In response to this need, the 1967-68 budget set aside $10,000 for research.

Why the need for research? Frank Bogdasavich, director of CUSO's east and central African program, explains in another article in the August bulletin: "Perhaps the short answer is that institutions, like the societies in which they are submerged, generally resist change, and thus people who are fully committed to institutions are not free to anticipate change."

What kind of institution is CUSO, and what kind of commitment does it demand?

The answer can perhaps be found in the early history of the organization. In February, 1962, twelve members of a volunteer organization named the Canadian Overseas Volunteers met for a week at a cottage by the sea near Bombay, India. They were the available members of a group of fifteen U of T graduates who had raised $2,000 each to finance a year's service in India the year before.

In comparing their first six months' experience away from Canada, they decided that they could not pretend to achieve great things as individuals in their respective jobs. But they agreed that by making friends and learning to appreciate another culture they could make a significant contribution in the area of international understanding.

These ideas discussed at the Bombay conference can be seen as a simple basis for CUSO's early philosophy.

The next year COV united with the Canadian Voluntary Commonwealth Service, a similar program formed in Toronto at the same time. The combined operation became the Canadian University Service Overseas.

In the last five years, the organization has experienced phenomenal growth: It now has a $2,000,000 budget and 900 volunteers serving in Africa, India, South America, and Southeast Asia. The Canadian government supplies three-quarters of its budget, yet respects CUSO's independent organization. Volunteers are not paid by CUSO; most of them are hired by government agencies in host countries.

David Beer, CUSO's representative on the U of T campus, says that this arrangement allows for a partnership between CUSO and foreign governments. "We have found that CUSO is being asked back even though the host country has to pay," he said.

As far as individual commitment is concerned, Hugh Christie, CUSO's executive secretary, has said, "It requires exceptional people who can survive physically and emotionally to push forward with patience, imagination and faith to complete their jobs — jobs which always look so very small in terms of world need."

Can-Can plans French-Canadian festival

Is there a future for a bicultural Canada? The Canadian-Canadian Committee thinks there is, and it will attempt to prove so with a French-Canadian Cultural Festival Jan. 19-21.

At an open meeting of the festival organizing committee yesterday, Donald Smith (IV Trin) presented a declaration of the principles underlying the project.

"Our position is unequivocal: We are for equality, for the minimum measures of the Laurentian-Dunton Report (the Bi-Bi Commission).

"We believe that enactment of the report's recommendations would not only show the humanity of the majority, but it would also serve to help convince the minority, four-fifths of whom live in Quebec, to remain within Canada."

Smith explained the purpose of the festival is to clear away the misunderstandings of English Canadians who have had little or no contact with French-Canadian culture.

"English-Canadians must be given an opportunity to see and to read about French-Canadian culture."

Bonnie Campbell (III New) the president of the Can-Can committee, outlined the content of the upcoming festival.

Thursday, Jan. 18 at 8:30 p.m., Michel Brunet of the department of history, University of Montreal will speak in Seely Hall on: Why Does the French-Canadian Man Have No Future and On What Conditions Does the Quebecois Have One?

Friday at 8:30 p.m., Quebec chansonniers Pierre Letourneau and Lise Masse will hold a concert in New College Dining Room.

Saturday at 2 p.m., the Debates Room in Hart House will be the scene of a debate between University of Toronto and Laval University on Student Syndicalism and Student Power.

Saturday at 8:30 p.m. the Ottawa theatre group, La Comedie des Deux Rives, will present Jean Herbiot's Terre des Hommes and Guy Goyssy's En Regardant Tambant des Murs in the Central Library Theatre.

Sunday at 7:30 p.m., M. Jacques Godbout, a novelist film-maker, poet and French-Canadian activist will hold an informal dialogue with students on The Artist's Role in Society in the Debates Room of Hart House.

During the week of Jan. 15-21, there will be a display of Quebec art in the Trinity Buttery. French-Canadian films will be shown throughout the week.

Tickets are on sale in the Students Administrative Council office at $1 for the theatre, and $1 for the folk-singers.

Ford Foundation grants $150,000

"Increasingly difficult" relations between universities and governments have prompted the Ford Foundation to grant $150,000 for a study into this problem.

A student-faculty steering committee will be appointed by the Canadian Association of University Teachers to carry out the study.

The project will consider the role of the university in a changing Canadian society and university autonomy opposed to government control.

U of M plans petition

WINNIPEG (Special) University of Manitoba students are planning to petition Premier Walter Wier to implement the recommendations of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

In proposing the motion last month, Bernie Vigod, university affairs director, suggested the student union provide students with the means to express their individual support for the report.

"Many provincial governments are using public apathy as an excuse not to take action on measures they admit are just. I think this university should have the opportunity of not showing apathy," he said.

The motion received the unanimous support of council.

LaPierre blasts Canadian complicity

By BRIAN JOHNSON and DAVID ISAAC

Laurier LaPierre wants to be prime minister of Canada when he grows up.

At the Student Assembly to End the War in Vietnam here two weeks ago, where Professor LaPierre was a featured speaker, he was asked what he would do about Vietnam if he were prime minister.

"That's a hypothetical question," he said, "but I should answer it since I will be prime minister one day: I would condemn the American presence in Vietnam."

LaPierre co-host of the now-defunct This Hours Has Seven Days television program now is a national vice-president of the NDP and is still a history professor at McGill University.

LaPierre harshly criticized the Canadian government's "complicity" in the war in Vietnam.

"Canadians fail to question, to assess and to condemn the very presence of the U.S. forces in South Vietnam."

The speech was arrogant and vindictive not just against the war, but against the Canadian attitude in general.

"We cannot afford to condemn the war because if the United States cuts off the bread line, most of us would suffer drastically," he declared.

LaPierre suggested a new Canadian nationalism as he condemned the old. He defined Canada's autonomy as "a mirage of independence."

As he criticized the "essential sickness" of the Canadian people, he occasionally lapsed into French—this a man who speaks English better than the average English-Canadian.

When speaking English he uses a French accent that adds a charming flair to his already polished speech. His campaign manager watched the performance from three rows away.

Laurier LaPierre is his own image-maker. He combines intellectualism with popularity, an Anglo-Saxon deportment with a French-Canadian heritage.

It is difficult to distinguish between LaPierre the politician and LaPierre the nationalist.

In a conversation after his speech, he spoke out on the Liberal party leadership race.

"If they do not rally about Mr. (Registrar-General John) Turner or Mr. (Justice Minister Pierre) Trudeau," he prophesied, "and Mr. (Transport Minister Paul) Hellyer does not win at the first or second ballot, I think that the younger group will rally about Paul Martin."

LaPierre provided a comprehensive commentary on some of the probable contenders.

Judy LaMarsh: "I like her, but I won't say 'All the way with Judy.'"

Jean Marchand: "I don't think he'll run, but if he does they should elect him. He's the only man in Quebec who can stand up to (Rene) Levesque."

Eric Kierans: "But why?"

Pierre Trudeau: "The Liberal party will not take that kind of a risk. He's legalized lotteries, uncriminalized homosexuality and he's a ba-

American campuses end military training

BOSTON, (VNS) — White students at Boston University and black ones at Howard University in Washington have put an end to campus military training.

The Boston faculty voted last week to abolish the campus military group's academic status as a part of the university curriculum, culminating a drive begun over a year ago by the BU News, which has since spread to some 35 other schools.

Northeastern University, also in Boston, eliminated the Reserve Officers Training Corps from the curriculum last spring.

At Howard, the university trustees abolished the school's compulsory ROTC program Nov. 23 after a four-and-a-half hour sit-in in the office of university President James Nabrit.

As in Boston, the vote culminated a long drive, begun over two years ago, which has since included a campus referendum calling for an end to compulsory ROTC by a four-to-one margin; a faculty vote for abolition in the college of liberal arts; several campus petitions; protest rallies; and walk-outs.

ROTC was founded in 1916 to provide military training on campus. It still exists at 246 colleges, but is compulsory at only a handful. At most schools, it receives official academic credit while being entirely run by the military and beyond the control of both faculty and administration standards.

chelor. God knows what he might do!"

He added, without modesty, that two Hamilton opinion polls had voted him third choice for the Liberal leadership.

Changing the subject to campus politics, LaPierre said he was glad that his "friend" Tom Faulkner won the Students Council presidential election at his old alma mater.

"The U of T is the largest and best university in Canada—it had the honour of educating me," he said.

He expressed a general sympathy with the student power movement, and disagreed with the administration standpoint in the McGill Daily obscenity controversy.

The next day, LaPierre switched his attention to the convention of the American Historical Association at the Royal York.

Taking issue with a description of "the slow evolution of ties between France and Quebec," he charged that French President Charles de Gaulle might be exploiting Quebec's ambitions merely to further the goals of his own foreign policy.

"Question whether de Gaulle is willing to pay the price for a truly independent Quebec," LaPierre said.

By "price," LaPierre said he includes the massive doses of foreign aid France would have to provide to an independent Quebec state.

"I rather suspect de Gaulle is taking French Canada for a ride."

Students work seen as vital function

abolition of fees, student salary, cultural and sport centres, fellowships, and libraries.

As an Apprentice: The student must be presented with an adequate education. His intellectual work must be considered as the exercise of a social, useful and indispensable function. For this the student has a right to a university free of constant financial problems and to a well-paid faculty doing research with all the necessary facilities in a milieu respectful of academic liberty. The student must have a voice in the education received, in the selection of instruments. The student faculty, and in the working must not be forced during the academic year to work extra — academically.

During the summer such work must be in his discipline.

As a Member of the University Community: The student has a right to see that this community plays a social role of guidance and innovation. He has a right to see that those who have received a university education live up to it. The university being a community of students and professors many problems that arise in the community would easily find solutions if students could participate in the management of the university. The relations between the alumni and the university are of special concern to students, for they will be judged by society.

As a Citizen: The student must enjoy the rights and privileges of any citizen; he has the right to participate in public life, in the task of defending democracy, in the responsibility of improving society. Not only has the student right to be heard; society must be willing to respect his rights; interests and obligations.

Obligations of the student

As a free citizen: The student must respect and defend liberty in all its forms and in every circumstance. He must be honest, and subordinate his own interests to those of society.

As a Young Adult: The student has a responsibility toward other young people. He must work to assure a constant renewal of his ideas, and to prepare better conditions for those following him. Tomorrow he will assume control of society; today he must prepare himself for this responsibility.

As an intellectual: The student must participate fully, with sincerity and honesty, in the intellectual life of his university community. He has the obligation to search for truth and to make known the results of his findings.

As an Apprentice: The student has the obligation to enlarge his horizons in his own discipline. He must integrate his studies with future needs of society. Study must be his principal activity, but he must not engage in this activity solely for his personal profit; the entire social community must benefit from his work.

As a Member of the University Community: The student must be prepared to respect the autonomy of the university and its academic freedom. He is responsible for the good administration of the university. As an integral part of this community, he has the obligation to participate in its evolution and progress.

As a Citizen: The student must play an active role, individually and collectively, in the social and political life of the nation.

The rights of the student association in brief

The student association is the organization set up by students to represent them, promote their interests and defend their rights. It must be their sole official voice.

The student association has a right to strike when the fundamental rights of the university or of its members are in danger.

Obligations of the student association in brief

The association must be democratic so as to ensure efficient representation of its members. It must assure freedom of expression for everyone. The association must work for the improvement of its members' situations, as long as this is compatible with the good of all society, and it must play an active role in social and political life.

What does a syndicalist student do?

All the activities of the Student Union can be considered under three dimensions, those which perform services: for the student, for the university community, for the society (or nation).

The student services include the traditional cultural activities, sports, conferences, debates, etc. All these services must be free of charge in every case. It would be illogical for the association to demand the abolition of university fees, while itself creating an equivalent discrimination in asking financial contribution to participate in activities.

But there is more than these traditional services: the student union must also work to end discrimination and privileges on the campus. This means the end of all fraternities and sororities, for the existence of these organizations is contrary to the basic principles of student syndicalism.

The student association must have a personnel office, a financial aid office (for students in urgent and desperate need of financial assistance) and a legal advice office.

The two other categories of service are equally important for student syndicalism. They encompass a number of committees and activities, including a liaison committee with other trade unions, and political and education committees responsible for preparing the political and educational demands of the union.

Student syndicalism is a very complex and serious ideology: It is the concretization of a new conception of what the student is. Student syndicalism needs a powerful bureaucracy to achieve its goals.

It has no place for the sentimentalism of pseudo-revolutionaries. We do not have any time to lose in secret meetings, expulsions, or splinter groups. We have more urgent tasks to do.

Thieves in Sir Dan

Crime is running rampant at the Sir Daniel Wilson Residence.

The first time thieves struck was about two months ago. They walked off with two lamps valued at $75 each.

On New Year's Eve the house shield of Wallace House was stolen. The real crime involved, however, was that thieves forced a lock on the door of the room where the shield was kept.

They also walked off with part of the wall. The wall on which the shield was hanging was torn apart in an effort to get the shield off the wall.

But the climax came with the robbery of hi-fi equipment valued at $600. On the evening of Dec. 28, or the following morning, the amplifier and turntable were taken from a basement recreation room. The robbery was discovered on the morning of Dec. 29.

"Somebody has a very well-equipped apartment building as a result of all this," said Oakley Duff (IV UC) one of the Wallace House residents. Four years ago about the same amount of equipment was stolen, he noted.

Security Chief T.D. Lawson said the recent robbery was the only major crime in the last few weeks.

"The problem here is the accessibility of the rooms in the residence. The basement room from which the record equipment was stolen is open to all the residents."

Aquablues in action Friday

By DAVE POWELL

The Varsity swim team opens its regular season schedule on Friday night when they play host to the University of Guelph. Guelph is currently rated as the fourth strongest team in Canadian Intercollegiate circles, behind U of T., Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Led by stars Mike Lackowitz and Larry Hurd, the Aggies should provide the Etues with their toughest competition of the schedule before the OQAA finals in the spring.

Varsity warmed up for this meet last weekend when they swept to a convincing victory in the annual Western Relays in London against the Western squad and several local aquatic clubs. Blues won seven of the eight races, losing only by inches to Western in the 200 yard medley relay.

The meet on Friday begins at 8.00 p.m. and the Hart House gallery will be opened to interested spectators. This will be one of only two meets held at Toronto this year, the other taking place next Saturday night against Western. Anyone wanting to see some exciting action from Varsity's most succesful intercollegiate team, should plan to be there.

John Wrigley wields hot hand

By PHIL BINGLEY

Often the most unenviable position on any hockey team is that of the goaltender. In the case of Varsity Blues this role has been one of little profit for any person who wears the thick pads and carries the big stick.

Yet the times seem to be changing and with the changes the masked marvel in Blue—netminder John Wrigley—has suddenly risen to a position of great importance.

In the past, Blues have seemed content with any sort of puckstopper and their concern for welfare of same has been mighty low. However, during the past two seasons, and especially this year, Varsity has become aware of the fact that their success depends upon how well they protect their goal and not just on how many goals they can score.

So, when Blues travel to the infamous Dundas rink in Hamilton tonight to take on McMaster University Mar- lins, Wrigley could well mean the difference between victory and defeat.

True, Blues are still piling up algebraic scores against some of their opponents, but the solid and often sensation- al goaltending Wrigley has provided has dug them out of several tight jams. And, with Varsity's trip to Aus- tria for the University Olym- piads less than a week away, and playoff time less than eight weeks in the future, the puck-packing activities of Wrigley and colleague Pe- ter Adamson loom large as the key to Blues ultimate success.

In tonight's game against the rugged Mar- lins, Coach Tom Watt and his players will be seeking revenge for the 2-1 setback Blues suffered during their last visit to the "duck pond." That game was the last time Blues have been defeated by a Canadian intercollegiate team since early 1966.

With the flu bug still going strong, Watt will be forced to make several lineup changes. Terry Parsons, still fighting the virus himself, will replace the ailing Doug Jones. If Parsons is unable to play, Watt will go with just three defencemen.

McMaster, still riding high on the crest of their one year phys-ed course have stal- warts Gord Lackenbauer and Vic Conte on defense with veterans John Dediana, Max Hickox and Gary Spoor lead- ing the lamplighter corp. Newcomer Chuck Cippola from Colgate has been a pleasant surprise for coach Bill Mahoney. Cippola is cur- rently the team's leading scorer.

Marlins weak point as usual is their goaltending. However, Mac goalies have been known to become un- consciously lucky in the past and Ian Budge, this year's backstopper is probably no exception.

JOHN WRIGLEY

McManusmen mosey off to McMaster following way-back-when Western win

By JIM MORRISON

Somewhere in the distant past (on or about Friday, December 15) Varsity Blues shaded Western Mustangs 90-89 in overtime to start their season on a noteworthy note. Due to inefficient sportsing (like no-one) Rich Pyne went to the game) this report comes to you now, through the miracle of lousy reporting.

Blues' one-two-three scor- ing punch of Dempster-Nei- dre-White lived up to expec- tation as Varsity came from behind twice where needed —once to tie the match, once to win.

Dempster led Varsity scor- ers with 23 points, follow- ed by Arvo Neidre with 22, White with 18, and Hadden with 15. Former Haiger Bob Larose, replacing the injur- ed Marty Heersink led West- ern marksmen with 23.

Coach McManus was nat- urally satisfied with this crucial away-game victory, but felt that the heroics shouldn't have been necessa- ry. "We threw the ball away too many times," he said. "We had a good lead, and then blew it."

Tonight, Blues journey to Hamilton to take on the much improved McMaster Marauders. Varsity split their tilts with the fourth- place Mac types last season, winning 83-80 at home, and then dropping a 78-68 deci- sion in Hamilton. However, Blues edged into third place in the 1966-67 standings when Mac choked in their fi- nal game against Waterloo.

Things could be different this year. Bill Fowler's Mac squad appears the most li- kely bet to knock off pre- nial champion Windsor Lan- cers, who are not the power- house of the past Marauders lost 90-82 to Lancers at Wind- sor, after leading for most of the game, and a Mac vic- tory is a definite possibility in the return match.

Fowler was the most for- tunate coach in the league this fall, with last year's squad returning virtually in- tact. Center Peter Wheatley, forwards Andy Martinson and Ian Jolliffe, and all-star guard Jim Murray have re- turned, along with veterans Jim Tebbs and Jim Connor. Also back after a two year absence is former all-star guard Paul Allingham, who has moved right into a start- ing role.

JOHN McMANUS
Happy but unhappy

The Mac one-year Phys Ed course, which helped them to a College Bowl berth in football, has also paid divi- dends in basketball. Former Blue Phil Lapides and Bob Tatti from St. Mary's have joined the team. But the most important acquisition seems to be Karl Mearns, from the University of Rich- mond, who potted 22 points for Marauders against Wind- sor.

With good overall depth going for them, plus the home court advantage, Ma- rauders will be tough

Thinking about Austria

GRAHAM FRASER

"Got all the vaccination books back yet?"

"Yeah, all but one."

Varsity Blues hockey coach, Tom Watt, was sitting in the training room, lacing up his skates before the practice last night. It was the last practice before tonight's game with McMaster. Trainer Howie Ringham and Manager Mike "Dobie" Killoran were talking with Watt about the trip to Austria that starts next Monday. There was a map marked "Osterreich" in red Gothic print stretched out on the train- ing table.

"Where is Innsbruck, Tom?"

"It's in the east, right near the Swiss border. But we play our first two games in Feldkirch on the 19th and 20th. So we arrive in Innsbruck, and then we go to Feldkirch — which doesn't give us much time. I'd like a practice on the Feldkirch ice, but we arrive there Thursday, and the game's on Friday."

The players were gradually moving out of the locker- room next door and fooling around on the ice, taking pot- shots at the nets. Watt had gone out to the ice, in that kind of battered wind-breaker with fuzzy patches on it that ex- athletes wear, sweat pants, and a white whistle. He cruised about slowly, chewing gum and grinning, occasionally cut- ting in to steal somebody's puck, grinning and chawing in the horseplay.

I went back to the training room. "Who's the goalie with the glasses?"

"You mean out there now? John Wrigley."

Someone else in the room looked confused. "Does he wear contacts during games?"

"Yeah."

"Stupid bugger", laughing and shaking his head, "Hard shot in the face, and they'd go right through his head."

"He'll probably lose them. We were dressing after the game in Buffalo, and he couldn't find his socks. Ended up wearing somebody else's. This was after he couldn't find his shoes!"

"Yeah, that guy! He had to get married, just to keep tidy. I was at his place one time — he lives in a 1 1/2 room apartment — and he couldn't find last year's team picture. Had to wait till his wife got home and she found it!"

Back on the ice, Watt had blown his whistle on the hacking around, and the skating drills started. Watt doesn't talk much in a practice; for the start of the drills, he just blows his whistle, and shouts. What he says is incompre- hensible in the echoes of the empty rink, but the team starts skating around the rink, counter-clockwise.

After they'd skated clockwise, and eights, Watt blew the whistle from the centre of the ice, and shouted: "O.K.! Reds at that end, whites and yellow at this end. Shots on goal."

I was standing near the white-and-yellow goal, and stared to see a thin, sharp-featured guy jab his stick out at shoulder height to flip away somebody's shot on goal. The puck, zapped on the fly, bounced and slid off to the far corner.

I turned to Dobie Killoran.

"Who was that?"

"Paul Laurent."

I looked again. Laurent (everybody on the team pro- nounces it Laur-awnt) is a medium-sized guy with a fast, nervous style. His eyes are everywhere, jerking from puck to goal to down the ice — and he seems to move as fast as he looks. He seemed to bubble with nervous energy, zipping in to steal a puck in pie-scrimmage shooting, exploding with near-anger when he got tied up a little roughly on a rush.

Once the scrimmage had started, everyone seemed that fast. Blues aren't a big team; as Dobie put it, "Compared to some of the teams we play, they look pretty scrawny." But they're fast. They pass a lot. They skate hard.

This will make the tournamnt in Austria (to be played under international rules) a lot easier. (Blues play the Czechs on the 19th, Austria on the 20th, Finland on the 23rd, Sweden on the 25th, and Russia on the 28th).

But the game with McMaster tonight isn't a sure win. Mac is a big, hitting team. Blues aren't. As Tom Watt said, it's a tough game. "We'll have to extend ourselves to win." McMaster is the only Canadian team in the last two years that has beaten Blues, and veterans from last year will be keen to win.

But in the locker-room after the practice, people weren't talking much about the game with Mac.

"Holy Jesus! Look at the plane we'll be going over on!"

"Tom, what kind of money do they have in Austria?"

"Schillings. They're worth four cents; 25 schillings to the dollar."

I commented "You guys don't seem too worried about the game tomorrow."

Mike Riddell grinned. "Is there a game tomorrow?"

A voice from the shower shouted "That's not a game! It's a practice!"

SAC rejects tokenism, supports student power

By DAVE FRANK

The Students Administrative Council came out swinging hard Wednesday night in favor of student power.

- In the five-hour debate SAC:
- told the Senate it wasn't interested in token representation on that body, but wanted a full-scale Macpherson-like study of the fundamental principles of university government;
- decided to withdraw temporarily from the placement service advisory committee to re-appraise its composition and methods of operation.

"The only way the student body can get anywhere is by realizing that they and the faculty are the university," said Joe Merber, university committee co-chairman. "It's not the administrators up in Simcoe Hall.

The Senate is to meet today to consider the seating of student representatives. SAC has asked to be allowed to address the Senate in open session on this subject.

SAC will call on the Senate to table the proposal and set up a committee on university government to study the structure and principles of university government. The President's Council last spring recommended such a committee, but no action has been taken.

"I don't know of any other student body which has asked that this kind of development be arrested," said SAC president Tom Faulkner, "but we don't want to involve ourselves in a token move."

SAC's reluctance reflects the feeling that seven students in a Senate of more than 200 could have no effect on policy decisions.

"As soon as we're inside we are used for justifying decision," said Merber about student participation in university government. "You don't have legitimate representation if you can't significantly change policy.

"SAC should consider dropping out of committees where there is not legitimate representation. We should establish new criteria on acceptable levels of representation."

Referring to the Placement Service committee on which he served, Steve Langdon (III Trin) set forth what he called "requisite reforms" for student participation in university committees.

"We compromised, but the other side did not do likewise. We're so concerned with being a part of decision that we give up any power we have to affect change."

He labelled this attitude "paddy-cake politics."

"We're not just fooling around," he said. "The sort of power politics which the university may understand is perhaps our only option."

He called for open decision-making and the inclusion of administrative officials on committees in a non-voting ex-officio capacity.

Other members said a clear policy on the accountability of SAC reps to the council should be adopted. Langdon thought specific instructions were a bar to rational discussion.

SAC referred the question to the university committee for recommendations.

"We should admit we made a mistake in accepting our role in the placement service committee," said Jennifer Penny (II UC). "We should withdraw until we decide whether we can accept the rules."

But Prof. G.E. Johnson, a faculty member of SAC, warned against painting a picture of students and faculty going hand in hand against the administration.

"I have not spoken to one staff member who supports SAC's position," he said. "You are not in a position to make demands. You can say you'll take your ball away and not play, but they might lock the stadium and you'll never get in."

"If you lock the stadium you're going to have a very empty stadium," replied Merber. "And nothing dies faster than an empty stadium."

Bookstore competition unless SAC demands met

The Students Administrative Council will go into competition with the University of Toronto Bookstore unless student demands are met by Feb. 15.

SAC passed a statement Wednesday night, to be presented later this month to the Press committee of the U of T Press.

—a 10-per-cent across-the-board discount on all books sold by the store;

—the creation of a committee to determine Bookstore policy made up of students staff and administration;

—separation of the financial operation of the store from those of the U of T Press.

"If they decide they won't change, the students should have an alternative," declared Laurel Sefton (III SMC). "Students can't wait six months for a reasonable price on books."

Miss Sefton also accused the Bookstore management of "a complete turnabout" in attitude. In earlier negotiations they had seemed amenable to student demands.

Interviewed later, Dave Nitkin (III New), SAC services commissioner, described a letter from Maurice Jeanneret, the manager of the U of T Press.

Mr. Jeanneret indicated he was in "complete agreement" about the financial separation, and he tentatively supported an increased student discount "so long as the cost of such measures was being paid for by the university."

But Mr. Jeanneret rejected SAC's call for a joint bookstore committee, in favor of a solely student committee to be consulted "on important policy questions whenever they might affect the interests of the student body. It calls for:

dent body." "We wanted representation, we get consultation," Nitkin commented bitterly.

He said he and other students had met during the Christmas holidays with Mr. Jeanneret, Harold Bohne, the financial manager of the Press, and bookstore Manager Charles Fanning.

"We all believed Mr. Jeanneret accepted the SAC proposals, including the idea of a joint committee," Nitkin said.

In the letter Mr. Jeanneret says the SAC proposal "tends to leave the management function and related lines of responsibility somewhat unclear, a question which becomes particularly important in relation to financial planning and financial responsibility for operating results in relation to approved budgets."

He continues: "Important committee recommendations, such as changes in discount policies, would be reflected in the budgets we would submit, and so long as the cost of such measures was being paid for by the university the students would be freer if they were not responsible for voting the money which they were requesting."

Nitkin said a co-operative bookstore could be ready for business next September if necessary. It would be financed through the SAC general contingency fund which, Nitkin said, totals about $60,000. A site has been considered.

Engineering votes students to faculty council

A motion to seat 16 students on the engineering faculty council was passed Tuesday by the Engineering Society.

The motion followed a debate on a report by President John Morris (IV APSC) on student representation on the council.

Since some members expressed concern that the move might be interpreted as a "power play," a preliminary motion was passed stating that the society's intention is "to further the spirit of co-operation which exists between the council and the students of the faculty."

The 16 representatives would be from third or fourth year and two would be chosen to sit as voting representatives on the Engineering Society.

The motion is to be presented to the engineering student body for approval at a general meeting later this month since it requires constitutional amendment.

Conodair's Dynotrac in familiar territory and on Review pages 8-9, in less familiar surroundings, symbolize the sudden interest in Conodair's wor-materials profits. Predictably the compus had more to say: more on SAC and Dow (above); Hart House supports wor research while Hawker Siddley is picketed (p. 3) and the Review takes a cool, unimpassioned look of the whole situation.

Students ignored, may resign from UBC senate

VANCOUVER (CUP) — Three disgruntled student senators at the University of British Columbia want to resign.

Senators Ray Larsen, Gabor Mate, and Kirsten Emmott said last week that students are being ignored by the senate. They said the senate concerns itself with irrelevant issues.

A fourth student senator, Mark Waldman, will not resign.

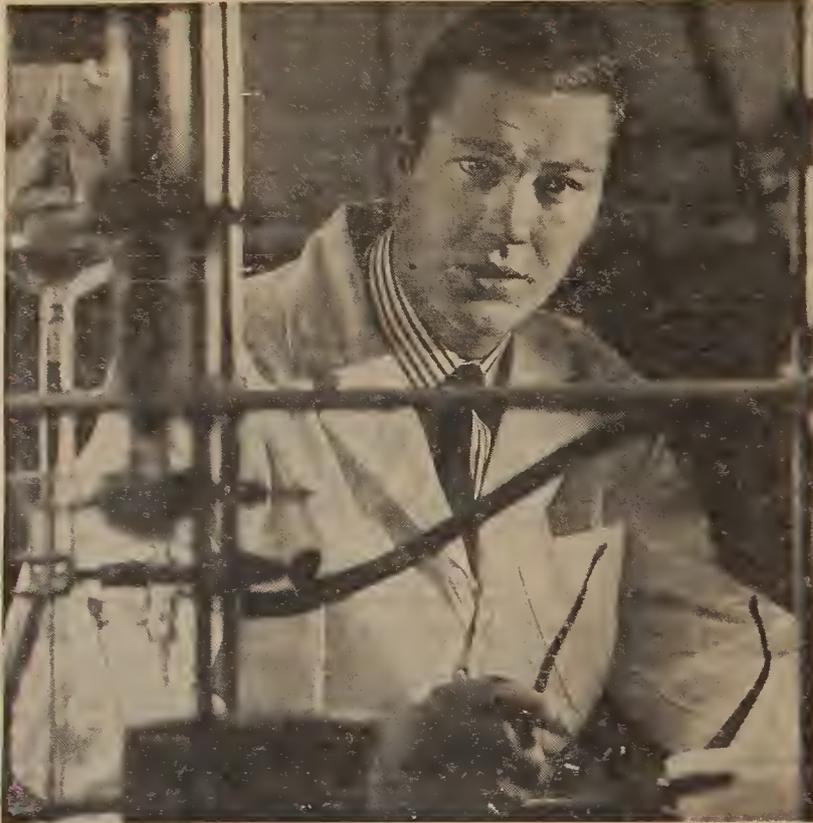

The three attacked the senate because it voted against holding open meetings, it is ineffectual in dealing with the board of governors, and it is inefficient in its work.

The student senators were all elected on a platform of open meetings.

"The motion for an open gallery was defeated," said Larsen. "The students' wishes were completely ignored."

He said they called for the open meeting vote because of a Canadian Union of Students resolution saying students should refuse to serve on any closed university governing body.

"General Foods offers you more than just Jell-O®"

This young GF Researcher symbolizes the challenge General Foods offers all its people — the challenge to develop a needed product (to fill the bowl, or cup, or glass) and sell it at a profit. The Canadian housewife has more time to enjoy today's living thanks in part to a group of dedicated young men at GF who have devoted much time and thought to creating products to fill her needs — nutritious products which are quick and simple to prepare, are reasonably-priced, and taste wonderful.

Here's the story of one recently-developed new product: Market studies show that almost 50% of all Canadians do not take the time to eat a regular breakfast. To improve this situation, food scientists at General Foods developed a dry mix which when added to a glass of milk provides the nutrition of a normal breakfast.

Here was a quality product, created to fill a real need. With the support of GF advertising and GF merchandising know-how, almost everyone is now familiar with Minute Breakfast. No matter how time-pressed, anyone can spare half a minute to prepare it. And it will help keep them going all day long.

An objective which calls for the creation of new products each year obviously offers a stimulating and mind-stretching challenge—one which can be met only by exceptional people with a wide range of talents. If you like challenges, you too can enjoy . . .

Debaters condemn war, but not research

By DAVE FRANK

War is a horrible thing, agreed everyone at the Hart House debate last night, but, by a vote of 77 to 47, they voted down a resolution saying "Scientists should not conduct research they know is intended for war."

"War is the rape of civilization," said Art McIlwain (II APSC), "but it is not the knowledge of ways and means that makes a woman pregnant. No knowledge is of itself dangerous or harmful."

McIlwain argued that those who place the primary responsibility on research scientists were "buck-passers."

Speaking for the Ayes, Prof. Chandler Davis of the mathematics department referred back to the sense of heroism, personal contest, and glory of combat which characterized the Viking sea-raiders.

"But we have to look at the available wars," he added. "It is a sad come-down for heroism. Many scientists are locked up in their think-tanks plotting how a B-52 can outwit a Vietnamese grandmother."

"Disarmament is a highly scientific process," pointed out Prof. Arthur Porter of the department of industrial engineering.

"One day war will disappear from the face of the earth," said Prof. Porter "and scientists will be in the forefront of that struggle."

"Much of the weapons research and methodology developed during war will be used for disarmament."

"Although Albert Einstein sold the idea of the atomic bomb to President Roosevelt, he and his colleagues insisted it not be dropped without due warning."

Inevitably the debate was linked to the Vietnam war. The most telling argument came from Dalton Shipwya, a student from Boston University who recently spent two months in Vietnam.

"I was up in a spotter plane circling over a village," he told the debaters, "We played tapes and dropped leaflets saying 'Your village is about to be bombed. You have five minutes to leave.' Nobody left, and 15 minutes later the village was bombed."

"It is not enough to call Vietnam a festering sore. We just can't continue to let scientists hand over their very efficient toys to blithering idiots who don't understand their implications."

"War research is literally subverting the traditions of science," said Dr. Paul Hoch, "it is seriously subverting the nature of our universities."

Prof. Porter said he felt World War II might have been prevented if more money had been put into war research. He said that in the '30's students had supported the resolution "this house will not fight for King and Country."

"I voted aye. I and thousands of others gave great comfort to Hitler. We committed a crime against society."

"A vote of aye on this resolution is a vote against man's freedom and dignity and will greatly comfort the enemies of society."

Windsor students demand free press

WINDSOR (CUP) — More than 50 students and a handful of professors marched in sub-zero temperatures Wednesday in favor of a free student press for the University of Windsor.

They were protesting a senate committee's action in forcing the resignation of the co-editors of The Lance. Several professors cancelled lectures to allow students to join in the protest.

Students carried placards reading "Our Money, Our Press." "A Free Student Press" and "Reinstate the Editors" as they marched from the administration building to the student union chanting "Hell Yes, Free Press."

The controversy began Dec. 4 when President J. F. Leddy called a meeting of a senate committee on student conduct, to consider what he termed The Lance's "morbid obsession with squalid vulgarity."

The committee objected to several Lance articles during the first term, particularly an article called "The Student as Nigger" an analysis of university education that uses four-letter words throughout.

At 11 a.m. Wednesday a special one-page issue of the Lance appeared on campus giving a complete chronology of the affair.

At 1:30 p.m. the board of publications called for a Canadian University Press investigation commission to look into allegations of censorship, coercion and obscenity. The board agreed to accept the findings of the commission, and asked the senate to do the same.

CUP President Lib Spry said Thursday that the three-man investigation commission will be asked to study "all relevant evidence relating to the resignations of the co-editors of the Windsor aLnce."

She said the commission, chaired by Tony Burman, the editor of the Loyola News, will hear evidence Saturday and will file a report within two weeks.

Krista Maets, the editor of the Queen's Journal, and David Quintner from the Windsor bureau of The Canadian Press have also been named to sit on the commission board.

Hawker-Siddeley picketed by protesters

Protest groups against Canadian "complicity" in the Vietnam war moved off campus Wednesday and yesterday.

Last night, a group of 30 persons, mostly students from the University of Toronto, York University and Ryerson, picketed Transport Minister Paul Hellyer at the Royal York Hotel.

Mr. Hellyer, who announced yesterday his candidacy for the national Liberal leadership, was addressing a party gathering.

Laurel Limpus, a U of T graduate student, criticized the conduct of the half dozen police on the scene. Officers attempting to remove protesters from the hotel doorway used "a lot of unnecessary shoving around," she said.

The students chanted anti-war slogans and carried placards reading "Hellyer Supports Genocide" and "Pearson, Hellyer, LBJ, How Many Kids Did you Kill Today?"

Vernon Singer, the deputy leader of the Ontario Liberal party, said it is "a very good thing" that the protesters were expressing their opinions.

But, he said, "It's a U.S. war, and there's no way we can stop it."

Marlie Ritchie (II Vic), the chairman of the U of T Committee to End the War, said she was invited to the gathering to express her views and to ask any questions she wanted.

Wednesday, a group of 50, including some students and U of T faculty members, picketed in front of the King Street offices of Hawker-Siddeley Co.

They were protesting the servicing and repairing of Caribou aircraft by de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, an affiliate of Hawker-Siddeley.

Employees leaving the building for lunch were handed leaflets reading: "If we want Johnson to stop bombing Vietnam, let's stop sending him bombs, produce for peace."

Most employees ignored the peaceful demonstration. A few joined the march.

A committee representing the marchers was unable to see the president of the company, T. J. Emmert, as he was out of the country. However, they were granted an interview with his assistant, J. N. Kelly.

"We are a reputable company living within the Canadian law," said Kelly in a press interview. "Our policy is to be responsible to the government of Canada, not to the individuals."

Another spokesman for Hawker Siddeley, John Painter, described the company's affiliation with de Havilland as a "very loose" one.

bringing it all back home

Most of the great "milestones of history" of which we learn in public and high school talk about successful freedom struggles of various people and groups.

Our heritage generally makes that history either British-oriented — Magna Charta, the Spanish Armada, the younger Pitt — or Canadian-oriented — the War of 1812, responsible government, Confederation.

We accept these and countless other events as Good Things in which somehow The Oppressed Became Free.

But suddenly, placed in a university community, students who in Grade 13 lauded the freedom that came with the Magna Charta fail to see that they have no more freedom than the "downtrodden" English barons once had.

They accept the fact of an administration which lays down the rules by which they live — and they are rules of living because for a U of T student, life is little more than the exams, essays, lectures and regulations accompanying it all.

The administration is then an illegitimate ruler of 20,000-odd people. It sets standards for them, speaks for them, tells them what their emphases are to be.

And the university proper — its students and faculty — accept it all with regrettably few exceptions. And you wonder what all those "milestones of history" ever showed.

The counter-argument is that the administration is not illegitimate because government involvement in education somehow makes university administrators legal rulers.

And, as far as it goes, that argument is right. Simply, it doesn't go far enough because legalisms don't necessarily make rights.

The law, after all, may be wrong. Because the law implies that Simcoe Hall is God doesn't mean that Simcoe Hall is God, that student and faculty members of the university community do not deserve to have full recognition of their roles.

Ideally a university should function as a place in which people get together and exchange ideas for the mutual enlightenment of everyone. An administration would be around to assist those exchanging the ideas in the process of getting them exchanged.

But this definition does not come near satisfying administrators and politicians who need control of the "exchangers" to make sure that society gets the finished product.

As things stand now the administrators and politicians maintain that control because the university community is doing nothing about it.

Or, almost as bad, when the community does decide it should do something it attempts negotiation.

The student section of the community tries bargaining about bookstores, libraries and course content ad infinitum. The faculty section worries about salaries and tenure — bargains, actually.

And through it all, the administration sends representatives when its hand is seriously forced and makes minor concessions after it ensures that some other method will maintain the control it seems to be surrendering.

This brings the university no closer to achieving for its members the rights and responsibilities to which they are entitled.

The point of it all: The Students Council has to realize this unanimously (at least more apparently than it did Wednesday night), blitz the campus with news of its position and demand unconditionally its share of the rights and responsibilities.

For the faculty, it must turn from its obsession with salaries, realize what is happening to its home base and make its share of demands.

If it is unlikely that this can happen within the existing order — neither the Students Council nor the Association of Teaching Staff appear ready for such action — then the onus must fall on persons outside those groups to marshal themselves.

There is no reason that SAC or the ATS must be the sole representatives of their respective constituents. They do their jobs or they don't; if they don't, they stand by and watch while others do it for them.

Letters

Sir:

I would like to comment on several points raised by David Robertson's letter, and on the Dow issue generally.

I don't think Mr. Robertson understands the concept of "rights", which he discusses at length. He fails to make a distinction between moral rights (which are unconditional, not subject to majority vote), and legal "rights" (which are granted, redefined, or taken away after a society realizes that its individual members do or do not possess certain moral rights). Granting of legal "rights" is simply a recognition of pre-existing moral rights. A meaningful definition of moral rights must imply that they are unconditional, i.e., that they cannot be taken away by majority vote. (For example, can the majority morally decide that individuals do not have the right not to be assaulted or robbed?)

Mr. Robertson's humorous references to God are irrelevant; a few minutes of careful thought should make it clear that moral rights as I have described them can exist whether God exists or not.

I am willing to grant that use of the Placement Service is a privilege and not a right. However, if this privilege is granted, it should be given to all students on a non-discriminatory basis (just as it was decided that the Housing Service should be operated in a non-discriminatory way for all students who want to use it.) You should not deny some students use of the Placement Service to interview Dow simply because they think they can with a good conscience work for Dow, and you do not.

If one could show that by working for Dow, these engineers would be interfering with the rights of others then there could be justification for interfering with their activities; otherwise there is no justification. But I have seen no good argument to that effect. Dow Chemical of Canada manufactures, among other things, veterinary products, disinfectants, medicines, synthetic textiles, and plastic coffee cups; the moral decision whether to work for Dow is thus borderline at worst, not clear-cut, and it should be left to the individual engineer, without any interference by others.

Mr. Robertson defends interference in that decision by saying that denial of use of the Placement Service is only a slight inconvenience. It is slight; but the objection to it is just as valid, whether the inconvenience is small or great. If I steal a dime from you, can I justify myself by saying "It's only a dime, so my action is morally right"? And how much inconvenience can one properly cause someone else without a reason?

In Mr. Robertson's seventh and eighth paragraphs I think detect a suggestion (found in many previous letters as well) that all those who oppose SAC's action on the Dow issue are supporters of the Vietnam War and the use of napalm. I would like to make my position clear to prevent any of the misunderstandings at which the other side is so expert: I strongly dislike the Vietnam war and the use of napalm; I have no criticisms to make of draft-dodgers, and do not regard any criticisms I have heard as intelligent; I have not worked for Dow and have no ambition to do so; and, finally, I am a genuine arts student, not a disguised engineer.

I simply see no necessary contradiction in a person working for Dow and at the same time being an opponent of the Vietnam War; and I do not believe that denying engineers the use of the Placement Service to interview Dow would be in any way an action against either the Vietnam War or accomplices in it.

One of my reasons for writing this letter is that, if engineers may be arbitrarily inconvenienced now, in the future I may be similarly inconvenienced arbitrarily because of some political or other views I have, unless I can convince other students that this is wrong. This motive has been described as "a very base form of self-interest". I consider it an obvious principle that, as long as I do not inconvenience others, or violate their rights, my own rights and convenience (self-interest, if you prefer) should not be sacrificed by others.

Shaw has said that the idea of self-sacrifice is very popular because it enables us to sacrifice others without blushing. I think this describes the psychology of many of the supporters of the sit-in.

Paul Kernighan, III New

P.S. It is becoming fashionable to request that the Varsity print letters in their entirety. I hope you can comply with my similar request (1) because I think all my points are relevant, and (2) to compensate for your failure to print an earlier letter of mine.

Thank you.

a note from the editor

By GRAHAM FRASER

So here we are. Kreighoff to the contrary, it doesn't seem to be a season where all us "habitants Canadiens" rejoice and frolic in the snow, racing our sleighs through the tollgates, laughing and giggling with the joy and delight of life and winter.

As the letter in Monday's Varsity said, in Vietnam it is as bright and warm as ever. The truly terrible thing about the despair and horror that many of us feel about what is happening to the United States, and, as we hope we are showing in this issue, what is happening to us is that we (and I suppose what pains me most about this is that I mean I) are becoming irrational in our revulsion. Some of us have been driven to make statements, and to take actions during the last term which, under closer analysis, meant that "extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice."

This is a frightening position to find oneself in. And it's frightening regardless of whether or not one is honest, sincere, or even right.

Now, just as the horror and despair isn't particularly useful in itself, the feeling of being frightened by the force of one's own irrational anger and extremisms isn't too useful either, unless one acts upon it. As someone just said to me, what are you going to do about the growing sense of violence? Get sucked into it? Fight it?

One of the things that I hope that The Review can do this term is to take a clearer look at what's happening to the way we are reacting to the world, and try to pose the alternatives that face all of us.

Last term, we tried to look at some of the people and ideas that we feel are currently important, and worth trying to understand. We had articles on The Press, Frantz Fanon, and his politics of national liberation and anti-colonialism, the new developments in pop-rock, or "head"-music, the various forces that are driving Quebec to separation, prisons and how they reflect a repressive society, and more.

All things considered, we did quite a bit of what we wanted to. Not as well, usually and not with the sense of passion we often felt, as we would have liked; but, if nothing else, we learned a lot. I hope you enjoyed watching us learn things.

This term, we are in a fortunate position in terms of focusing on things that are happening. The third annual University College Festival, Babel ("Society as Madness and Myth") looks as if it will be the most explosive examination of what's happening to our minds and our world that has ever happened on this campus. The ideas that will be brought together in the five days of the Festival could be enough to send our minds reverberating through the eight remaining issues of this thing. Edgar Friedenberg, Gad Horowitz, Harley Parker and, God! The Mothers of Invention! have alone enough ideas and questions and jarring concepts to stretch ourselves into unnerving re-examinations of our environment; they may even be overshadowed by the onslaught of mixed-media collages and parring image-displays.

If any of you remain indifferent to the War Scare, and feel that nervousness about The Bomb is a rather dated hangover from the '50's and the Cuban Missile Crisis (in fact, even if you don't) do not miss The War Game which will be part of Babel's Film Festival.

The War Game, by Peter Watkins, is a film that can only be described as stunning.

To the great discredit of the BBC, it was forbidden to be shown on television, though the BBC had commissioned the film. It is a film that should be shown on television, in the schools, in the churches; above all, in Parliament and in the U.S. Congress. You must see it.

In the eight issues that are left to us before we succumb completely to the reasons we're all supposed to be here, we want to take a close look at "madness" — and at mental hospitals. (No, there is no necessary connection here.) Erving Goffman, in a brilliant collection of essays on mental hospitals entitled Asylums, wrote that entry into a mental hospital involves a profound "experience of abandonment, disloyalty and embitterment"; the patient "starts out with relationships and rights at the beginning of his hospital stay, and ends up with hardly any of either." The hospital, an institution, operates according to institutional needs and requirements rather than therapeutic demands.

It takes no great insight or radical commitment to see how institutions around us have become divorced from their supposed purpose and dedicated instead to the bureaucratic workings of their institutional structure.

The workings of the high school and the university has become more and more divorced from the "therapeutic" purpose of learning, and has tended to become an industry.

The press has tended to become a product, packaged and designed for sale and profit and has moved away from its origins, when it was an instrument for the free speech of independent men.

This is all fairly obvious stuff, I suppose. It is easy to say that all these things are inevitable, even natural, and, if nothing else, "the way things are," and if we are to be mature people, we should get over our naivety, and face the facts that that's the way it is and that's the way it's going to be.

This would be less maturity on our parts than a gutless denial of what we think we're here for: a denial of what we think a university publication, or a university, in fact, at the risk of sounding trite, what "life" is all about.

To be more positive, what I think we should be doing is questioning what Galbraith memorably termed "the conventional wisdom" — and I hope we can realize that we have our own "conventional wisdom" to question. The truism about conforming non-conformism is no less true for being a cliché. The really gutsy writers — like George Orwell, Albert Camus and James Agee — realized this, and faced the bitter, angry attacks that resulted from their refusal to be pat and superficial.

Hopefully with this in mind, we are going to try and take a hard look at, among other things, the various myths and practices running loose in education, the supposed "solutions" to mental hospitals and mental health, the varieties of Canadian nationalism, and the dilemmas and contradictions in current "political activism."

These, of course, are not our sole preoccupations. Theatre Toronto will soon begin an exciting experiment in theatre. A lot of very good music and exciting film is coming.

Along this line, next week The Review will present a large feature on the newest, and perhaps the most exciting musical group to emerge from the ferment of the Toronto rock scene, The City Muffin Boys. We hope it will interest you.

1968 and all that...

From time to time some people ask me—more often they ask my friends—what I'm doing in Canada seeing as I've travelled fairly extensively and seem to find abundant virtue in other countries.

Usually such questions are best ignored or answered with my belief in the Queen and the Canadian climate; but of late, having survived the senile masturbation of CA-NA-DA and the whole Centennial faffle, when people who didn't appreciate my country told me to appreciate my country — I was moved to consider the matter again.

Why Canada? Why this grey anomaly north of the 49th parallel?

Cuba was a much more exciting, warm and humanistic place where they haven't yet fallen prey to the institutional rigours of socialist bureaucracy; where humor and love are still viable forms of communication.

Mexico despite rampant poverty and a pompous inflated government and civil service, is wild enough and Spanish enough to appeal to incurable romantics; they also grow interesting plants.

France, despite its fading vitality and pale cultural eminence, still makes good food; Holland had the Provos, Germany the North Sea Coast, and Polish women don't need brassieres.

Russia despite its official lack of humor and its pretentious image of itself was still Russia. East Germany was a terrible drag; Finland had the Sauna, the reindeer, and a psychological attraction due to my ancestry.

The United States, despite almost everything, is an immensely varied and exciting country. Warm, friendly people are still to be found there and for my money it is the cultural capital of the world, if you can sift through the insanity. Besides, it is interesting to watch, if not live in, the guts of a mad monster about to embark on its last bowel movement before it vanishes to that great outhouse in the sky.

Vietnam is, as my friend Murray points out, the event of the century and not to be missed.

China, India and Albania are unknown as is Israel, Ethiopia, Tibet and the rest of the world, but I'm sure they have something to recommend them as worthwhile places to live.

Why Canada? We have had no Napoleon, Chaucer, Burke, Jefferson, Lenin, Mao, Beatles, Kurosawa, Che, Bolivar Newton Buddha or Christ; not even Paul Krassner or Country Joe and the Fish; not even Barry Goldwater or worse yet, Lyndon Johnson. The re-emergence of the Devil could never take place in CA-NA-DA.

Louis Riel? John A. Macdonald? Norman Bethune? Banting? Diefenbaker? Papineau? Levesque? Billy Bishop? Steven Truscott? Leonard Cohen? Lefebvre? Judy LaMarsh? The CBC? The Varsity???

Who are the great Canadians, the seminal thinkers of the political and intellectual world? Of the cultural world? I understand that a Centennial edition of the Bible will shortly appear depicting Adam and Eve covering their nakedness behind a maple leaf.

The search for names is a frustrating and fruitless one and should be discontinued. The Centennial makers have tried to thrust an unreal greatness upon us, to make us 'appreciate' our country; if they weren't so hung up on the need to be great they might be happy themselves; their concept of greatness has little to do with the reality and potential of this country. The names and figures will come in time, for the land is still variable enough and untamed enough that it has not been molded according to their timid, mawkish vision.

Why Canada? First of all I like the sound of the name; second, we make pretty dark blue passports which everybody likes; third, we play good hockey and invented Foster Hewett; fourth, the extra down in Canadian football makes it a better game than the American version; fifth, the CBC gives top notch weather reports.

Why Canada? I have come to love this country despite what others have tried to make me think it is and what they have tried to make it.

I remember the Winter Carnival in Quebec City four years ago; after a week of festivities, parades, dances, chalets and enormous ice statues, we drove to the top of the cliffs after the final night was over to watch the sun rise, coloring the icebergs on the St. Lawrence a deep and fiery red.

Three years ago I drove through the mountains of British Columbia to the land of the crazy people and Doukhobors; I worked on a CPR gang repairing railway bridges on Vancouver Island with men who had never in their lives been on the mainland; there was a crazy old cook on the crew who liked the Beatles.

When I was a boy I went on canoe trips with my parents in Northern Ontario and lived with Finnish settlers who had migrated to that area because it most resembled their homeland.

The Canadian north stretches for thousands of miles and has its own laws, rhythms and ethic; we have not begun to touch that yet. A meagre railroad and one highway traverses the breadth of the country.

Go to the Yukon, the Okanagan Valley, Newfoundland or Hudson Bay and build your home there and wait and think. Forget the politicians, the business men and the cities. You might discover that most of our modern neuroses and hangups are urban neuroses. If you're French, Quebec will do.

Just find a place away from the chess game of urban life, where it's so cold in winter that you can barely stand it; where you can see an unpolluted lake. Lose yourself in the bush for a few days and see if you walk out again. Bicycle across the country, or better yet, walk — all the way — and then take a plane home.

You don't have to go to India, Tibet, or California, you can do it all here. Canada hasn't even been discovered yet, and whatever the world says about the people who live here, huddling close to the border towns, is probably accurate.

Just give yourself time to feel the land and the raw winds and then do something with it. Build bigger and better snowballs.

Then come back to the cities. It works. Driving across Northern Ontario with Jim Laxer who is an ardent Canadian Nationalist, student politician and journalist, we were talking about the Canadian identity and the concept of continentalism with regards to the Americanization of Canada. He pointed to the beautiful firs and pines and the birches turning an autumn red. He pointed at it and growled:

"Look at it; if the American had it, they would landscape it! They've got to be stopped."

Come back to the cities and point your guns and pea-shooters at the border and wait. Throw your snowball at the tanks. Thank God (or is it Gitche Manitou) Centennial is over. Here's to you.

"Tobacco? Certainly it's tobacco."

In The Tradition of the "Faerie Queen"

By TOM WOOD

Inveterate browsers in the U of T Bookroom may have noticed a small apologetic display nestled among the Beaver Dimes and Personality Postcards lying in wait at the cashiers desk. It consists of a box full of small black books bound in the same species of glossy cardboard as used to grace the nauseous series of Golden Books inflicted upon us every Christmas. If the aspect of Smith of Wootton Major has not already frightened one off the price certainly will for the price of 61 small pages of big print and illustrations is set at $1.75. The whole thing adds up to a most unappetising spectacle yet the Bookroom has sold out one shipment and is well on the way to finishing off a second: The reason being the magic name of J.R.R. Tolkien.

Most people are vaguely aware of Tolkien as the author of a mammoth, three volume fairy tale The Lord of the Ring which things that are in it: tree and bird, water and stone, wine and bread, and ourselves, mortal men when we are enchanted.

Stories that are actually concerned primarily with "fairies" that is with creatures that might also in modern English be called "elves" are relatively rare and as a rule not very interesting. Most good "fairy stories" are about the adventures of men in the perilous realm or upon its shadowy marches.

A fairy story for Tolkien is in reality a form of allegory although he would not admit it. Faerie is the realm of the mind or the sub-conscious in Tolkien's words "indescribable though not imperceptible", and his stories are medieval allegories in the best Romance of the Rose tradition.

Smith the hero of the book under discussion is given a fay star which allows him to enter the realm of Faerie, closed to all other mortals and protects him from the dangers inherent in wandering through that land.

enjoyed a tremendous vogue throughout the U.S. college circuit two years ago. To a few English scholars he is known as a good if over-imaginative Anglo Saxon specialist. But to the hundred or so who have coughed up $1.75, his is truly a magic name; The bard who composed the saga on the One Ring, the explorer and cartographer of Middle Earth, and the man who more than any other seems able to find the hidden road into the fascinating realm of Faerie.

Smith of Wootton Major is a fairy story. It is what Tolkien would call a true Fairy story in the tradition of some old Norse sagas, some Middle French Romans, and Spencers Faerie Queen. The story is not about fairies but rather about Faerie the land or world where Fairies have their being. In his essay "On Fairy Stories" Tolkien sums it up in this manner. Fairy stories used in the sense of:

stories about fairies is too narrow ... For Fairy stories are not in normal English usage stories about fairies or elves, but stories about Fairy, that is Faerie the realm or state in which Faerie have their being. Faerie contains many things elves and fays, and besides dwarves, witches, trolls, giants, or dragons: it holds the seas, the sun, the moon, the sky, and the earth, and all the

Smith, if you will, is an acid head who is able to turn into his own mind and wander through its tortuous corridors without becoming bogged down and losing his sanity. The analogy with hippydom can be taken even farther for Smith's possession of the Fay Star makes him a "beautiful person". Some of the star's light "passed into his eyes; and his voice which had begun to grow beautiful as soon as the star came to him, became ever more beautiful as he grew up. People liked to hear him speak, even if it was no more than a 'Good Morning'."

Tolkien's stories of Faerie have all the beauty and simplicity — all the delight in the common things all the heightened sensibility of a "high". "It was in Fairy Stories" he says "that I first divined the potency of the words and the wonder of the things such as stone and wood, and iron; bread and wine." Tolkien has discovered it and through the quiet charm of his stories which preach no morals other than that of the beauty of natural things he has allowed a few others to share in his discovery.

Warfare State: War Inevitable

By LAUREL LIMPUS

The Warfare State, Fred J. Cook, The MacMillan Company, New York, 1962.

Called by Bertrand Russell "one of the most terrifying documents that I have ever read," Fred Cook's The Warfare State is an examination of the sources of power in the present-day United States. The warfare state is the American state; and Mr. Cook has marshalled impressive documentation to prove that the military-industrial complex that has grown up in the US since the Second World War has dominated American foreign and domestic policy more effectively than the people's elected representatives.

The core of the military-industrial coalition is a perpetually-primed armaments industry, which at the present moment dominates the whole economic life of the United States. More than 1/6 of the American economy is tied to production for war. The military, which awards the billion-dollar arms contracts, and Big Business, which receives them, are wedded in their desire to perpetuate this war economy, which promises such rewards in power and profit for both of them.

In order to arm, there must be a demonstrated need for armament. This is the most insidious, most sinister aspect of the warfare state. An elite which is tied to war production is not likely to be interested in peace. An economy which is dominated by armaments industry cannot easily support disarmament. So a vicious cycle is begun: the warfare state, geared for war, must find wars to fight, and will create wars if it cannot find them. The enemy must be formidable indeed to justify such billion-dollar preparation and a nuclear arms race so deadly that it jeopardizes the future of the human race, and if he cannot be found, he too can be created. Mr. Cook has presented very powerful evidence that the military-industrial elite contributed heavily to the commencement and continuation of the Cold War, and did its best to create in the American people the kind of war hysteria necessary to justify ever higher and higher military spending.

Mr. Cook's hook suffers from one major defect: a lack of analysis. While he describes the situation very well, documenting it exhaustively and in a manner difficult to refute, he never explains how the American system could spawn such a power coalition. He seems to assume that it just happened, and that if President Roosevelt had lived in 1945 he would have been able to control the sinister trend. He never asks if it is in the nature of the American system, based on the profit motive, to create such a military-industrial power bloc. Even with these shortcomings, however, the hook is a clear and detailed examination of the facts, and these facts will certainly be valuable in the formulation of further studies of the real nature of power in North America.

The military-industrial complex has a peculiar and sinister history. Brought into existence by the armament production for the Second World War, it produced an enormous economic boom. The military and big business clearly saw at the war's end that it was to their advantage to prolong this bonanza. The military wanted to retain the prestige and power over policy-making which it had acquired during wartime, and for this it needed a permanent war apparatus, an unprecedented step in American history. As for big business, a permanent military machine presented the fattest markets imaginable. The coalition represented a kind of power structure uniquely equipped to dominate American society. As Cook puts it: "The military was the vital half of this new partnership, for without it, its prestige and its solemn warnings of ever-present danger, the combine would be robbed of its excuse for existing. "But... the billions (of big business), its control over all the large media of information, either through outright investment or life-and-death advertising, made it a worthy bride of the admirals and the generals. Individually, both halves of the partnership were vulnerable to attack... In tandem, wrapped in the folds of the flag, they had an open track before them."

Propaganda was the key tactic needed to turn the US into a garrison state. America had never had a permanent military machine before, and its traditions militated against this kind of change. The task before the military and big business was clear: to convince the American people that there was really no peace, that communism was an implacable foe, that the ideals of disarmament of peaceful coexistence, were mere Soviet machinations to try and persuade America to give up her vital defense equipment. This campaign began at the end of the war when the military began pushing for the passage of a Universal Military Training Act. The American people had to be convinced that the communist system in general and Russia in particular were so dangerous that only constant military preparedness could meet the threat. This was the first note of a barrage of anti-communist propaganda which has stifled reasonable thought about this issue in

Grand Music-Hall of Israel

BY ALAN GORDON

About half-way through the second act of this slipshod extravaganza, a lady dressed in shocking pink finds her way to a microphone, hunches herself over her guitar and starts to sing a Hebrew song. Her name is Nehama Hendel and she sings with the guts and strength of a Lenya and with a voice as true and beautiful as a Callas. I think she sang about five songs, and those songs, and her moving way with them, transformed an embarrassing evening of amateur prancing and self-conscious mugging into an occasion of rare excitement. I hope that I don't feel this way because she was good only in contrast to the other inanities that we had to sit through. I don't think so. Miss Hendel is a consummate artist, and in the ten minutes that she was on, we saw a truth, and experienced a rapport with a performer that is rare anywhere.

But the rest of the show! What a poor excuse for an entertainment! There was a twenty-five piece orchestra that with the help of a rotten sound system had all the drive and enthusiasm of a scratchy Mantovani record of Bill Haley's greatest hits. The performers were generally of the Town Casino variety. (Buffalo, remember? . . . when we drove to Buffalo to get clothes at A.M. and A. and Three Musketeers bars because they didn't have them in Canada . . . and for very good reason, too, we found out.)

As ordinary as were the performers, even more so, if that's semantically possible, were the dances they were required to do. Using only three different steps, and two different patterns of staging, the circle and the straight line, Jonathon Karmon weaved a spell of monotony and boredom that was broken only twice by an unusual expression of inventiveness. The concluding numbers of each act woke us from our trance. The first one evoked the traditional Hasidic dances. The second one was a lively affair with leaping and jumping and general grunts of enthusiasm climaxing in what were apparently joyous attempts to climb some suspended rope ladders. Where these people were going is anybody's guess, but the hysterical way that the climbers greeted the ladders made it clear that they were climbing far away from the Royal Alexandra Stage.

The other specialty acts included a man who played Shalom Aleichem on bottles, another chap who could play, and did, The Saints on the hall, and several anonymous singing groups that insisted on offering Tzena, Tzena to the whelmed, audience, each version a little more martial, if you can imagine it, than the one before.

The basic problem of Jonathon Karmon's presentation was that it was too self-conscious of the one ingredient that would have ensured its success — its foreignness. Karmon attempted to bring a western entertainment from the east to the west. A twenty-five piece mediocre brassy orchestra served when a halil, violin and drum would have been more suitable and compelling. The groups sang translated 1950's-style rock and roll to us rather than the true Israeli melodies that have proceeded the troupe on record. In short, rather than being themselves, the Karmon troupe preferred to play what they thought a western audience would like to hear. It's a shame, because the basic ingredients of the show had a great deal of potential.

But there was Nehama Hendel, and any troupe that is responsible for presenting her to us can't be all bad.

HOW WE'RE FIGHTING THE WAR

U of T Complicity

BY A RESEARCH COMMITTEE CO-CHAired BY FRANK CUNNINGHAM (LECTURER IN PHILOSOPHY)
AND PAUL HOCH (POST-DOCTORAL IN PHYSICS)

During the continuing debate on campus over the use of the Placement Service by Vietnam War suppliers, the U of T administration has consistently maintained that recruitment facilities should be open to all companies regardless of their relationship to the American war effort. In order to more fully understand the reasons for this position, the Ad Hoc Committee on Campus Complicity formed a Research Sub-Committee to look into the commercial affiliations of members of the U of T Board of Governors and to investigate the extent of military-related research on this campus. While our study is far from complete, certain preliminary observations can now be made:

(1) Several members of the U of T Board of Governors are now, or have recently been, members of the boards of directors of companies directly involved in supplying war materials used in Vietnam. For example, two Governors W. M. Ash and Major General A. Bruce Mattbew, are associated with the Canadian subsidiary of AVCO, a company which the New York Labor Research Association publication Economic Notes (January 1967) described as follows: "It's stuffed with government orders and over 40% of its profits come from war work"; among other things AVCO produces missiles and munitions, as well as a substantial segment of the armed helicopters used in Vietnam (New York Times 10-15-65; New York Herald Tribune 10-17-65; United Business 11-1-66 and 11-28-66.) It is also worth noting that rather substantial group of Governors, not directly associated with war supplying companies, are however associated with financial companies with heavy investments in the actual war suppliers.

(2) The U of T has approximately one million dollars worth of U.S. government research contracts, and these show a heavy concentration (to the tune of several hundred thousand dollars) of U.S. Defense Department Contracts.

(3) The U of T also has a substantial number of military-related contracts with the Defense Research board, a government agency which is known to engage in research sharing (especially in biological and chemical warfare research) with its counterparts in the U.S. Defense Department.

(4) In addition to direct military-related research on the campus, several U of T professors have been working on outside consultancies for Vietnam War suppliers.

While these facts may not entirely explain the administration's intransigent stand on the use of the Placement Service, they do provide some idea of the less-than-disinterested pressures under which Simcoe Hall must reach its position. After all, one can't get very sanctimonious about the presence of recruiters from companies like AVCO and Honeywell if directors of these companies are sitting on your own Board of Governors. One can't protest too strongly about engineers getting recruited into war research if members of your own professorial staff are engaged in the same sort of research and consulting. And what can you do about recruiting by, for example, Litton Systems of Canada (producers of, among many other things, equipment for the F-4 Phantom used extensively over both North and South Vietnam according to Toronto Telegram, Nov. 6, 1967) if Litton just happens to be providing financial support, consultancies, and sub-contracting to some of your own departments?

In the debate over the "Dow issue" on campus, little clear, factual material emerged in the passion of rhetoric and debate. In this issue, the Review presents some of the details of our involvement in the Vietnam War: the involvement of companies recruiting on the University of Toronto campus, the involvement of the university itself, and that of the Canadian government.

With the recruiting drive taking place on campus next week, we felt that this was an important time to publish some of the findings concerning this commitment to the war in Vietnam.

Last night, we found that this issue had taken on greater importance than just that concerning us here on campus. It was announced last night that Canada's sale of weapons to the U.S. increased by $53,000,000 to a record high of $370,000,000. Since 1959, we have sold $1,684,200,000 worth of military equipment to the U.S.

Campus War Recruitment: The Facts

BY JAMES L. MCINTOSH

Later this month companies from Canada and the United States will be interviewing students in their final year for permanent employment. The fact that some of these companies produce chemicals which are used in the manufacture of napalm and chemical defoliants for use in Vietnam has brought forth the promise of demonstrations and resistance from the student anti-war movement. While some of the other companies' products are not as odious there is a great variety of military equipment and ordnance that actually ends up in Vietnam, part or all of which originated in Canada. Here are a few examples.

The chemical companies seem to be the worst offenders. Cyanimid of Canada manufactures artillery propellants and C.I.L. produces nitro-guanadine in its Valleyfield Quebec plant, of which one shipment was traced to Vietnam via an armaments depot in Indiana. Both Dow and Uniroyal list themselves in a Department of Defense Production publication as military suppliers of chemical herbicides (defoliants), and Dow makes polystyrene for the Dow (U.S.) napalm plant in California. Uniroyal has actually shipped two defoliants, 2,4D and 2,4,5T to the United States, and both of these have been used in Vietnam. Several sources have reported that some of these defoliants are highly toxic; but then it is not hard to understand how even a common insecticide could be dangerous if dumped indiscriminately over densely populated areas.

The Canadian aircraft industry has some lucrative defense contracts arising from the Vietnam war. DeHavilland and its affiliate Orenda Engines have had substantial war contracts. Financial Post reports (Oct. 14, 1967) that at least 160 Caribou aircraft are in Vietnam and the company currently maintains repair facilities in Saigon. Orenda has a subcontract for military jet engine parts. Canadair manufactures parts for Lockheed Aircraft, C.F. 5 tactical support aircraft, and Dynatrac amphibious vehicles. There is at least one squadron of C.F. 5's in Vietnam (Montreal Gazette, Dec. 6, 1966).

"On Nov. 3, 1967 Litton Systems of Canada was awarded a $6 million contract by the U.S. Navy to produce weapons equipment for the F-4 Phantom, a fighter bomber flown from aircraft carriers and used extensively over both North and South Vietnam" (Toronto Telegram, Nov. 6, 1967). General Dynamics, fourth largest defense contractor in 1966 with $1.14 billion in new military orders, and Boeing Aircraft, almost as prominent, intend to recruit, along with several lesser organizations: E. I. Dupont, Texas Instruments and I.B.M.

The real issue that the Dow sit-in raised was whether these companies should be allowed to recruit on the campus. If one believes that the question of recruitment and the operations of the placement service should be decided by the student body then the events since the sit-in — the election and the SAC resolution — would be sufficient to prevent corporation like C.I.L. and Uniroyal from using the University Placement Service. However, the administration, rightly or wrongly depending on one's point of view, has defined this area as its responsibility. The result, and that is what is really important, is that the companies which participate in and profit from the war are allowed to interview University of Toronto students right in their classrooms.

Whether or not the University should offer its facilities to make the Pentagon's war machine a little more efficient, in a conflict which brutal and unjust is, indeed, a moral question. But there can be no doubt that it does that; the Navy does not place contracts in Canada unless there is an advantage to be gained, and large American corporations do not come to this university unless it pays them to do so.

Regardless of the morality of the situation, there are no net gains economically from the War in Vietnam. Consider the relative size of total war materials exports ($317 million in 1966). It is less than 1% of G.N.P. and employment in the Canadian defense industries is less than 2% of the labour force. Whatever benefit this provides does little to compensate for the inflation that will occur if the conflict continues at its present rate. This aspect of the war is rather alarming when one recalls the pattern of prices over the Korean War.

There is also a tendency for certain raw materials and scientific and highly skilled personnel to be bid away from Canadian opportunities. If the trend of American escalation and a harder line by Moscow and Peking continues, our arms sales to the United States may become a detriment to future trade with the Communist block, particularly in wheat sales. Whereas a ban on arms shipments to the United States is unlikely to provoke any retaliation since the two countries are so economically interdependent.

The Administration decision is tantamount to supporting a bad government policy, one which is immoral and not in our national interest. Campus complicity perpetuates a policy in which the short-run material benefits do not begin to cover the long-run political and social costs. Rather it preserves something which is morally untenable.

HOW WE'RE FIGHTING THE WAR

As the Vietnam War has escalated, opposition in Canada to America's involvement has grown proportionately, along with demands for cessation of Canadian support for the American war effort. The special focus of Canadian opposition has come to rest on the sale of Canadian arms and war material to the US, sales pursuant to the Canada-US Defence Sharing Agreement of 1959.

For while the Canadian Government has recently been prepared to at least verbally dissociate itself from US policy (as in the call for a halt to the bombing at the General Assembly session this autumn), it has categorically refused to re-examine the nexus of defence ties which link us to the US, let alone to drastically cut down the level of Canadian arms sales to the US.

This refusal casts great doubt on the good faith of government policy, and raises real questions about the desire or ability of the Canadian Government to pursue a foreign policy, independent of and unobedient to the US. It also makes necessary a careful examination of the nature of Canada's defence commitments to the US, and their economic and political implications for Canadian Vietnam policy.

Canada-US Defence Production Sharing Program

The umbrella agreement under which the arms flow between Canada and the US is institutionalized dates from 1959, the year of the scrapping of the Avro Arrow. Throughout the 1950's, a defence policy founded on continentalism (i.e. common North American Defence) had been pursued, culminating in the NORAD Agreement of 1958, establishing a unified North American Air Command Headquarters in Colorado. The Dew Lines had been strung up across the northern part of Canada, and the equipment of the Canadian armed forces had been standardized along American, rather than British, lines. During this decade of relative high Canadian defence expenditures, Canadian defence purchases in the US consistently exceeded those of the US here. Hence, the understandable Canadian pressure for production sharing, to eliminate the balance of payment burden of continued defence procurement deficits.

Yet one can challenge the assumptions on which the continentalist defence policy of the 1950's rested, and see in the 1959 Production Sharing Agreement an instrument for subordinating all future Canadian defence policy to the foreign policy and defence interests of the American Empire. In effect, for the political decision-makers of ten years ago, the nature of United States actions on the global scene appeared as essentially benevolent, and the problem of Canadian independence secondary. Conditioned by ten years and more of Cold War rhetoric, Canadian politicians were unable and unwilling to challenge the premises of defence alliance with the US, nor could they view the Soviet Union or China, save through the distorting lenses of American perception. That the world of Stalinism was dissolving, that decolonization in Afro-Asia was posing totally different priorities for the developed world, that the United States would be forced by its own imperial interests into more frequent and heavy-handed intervention in the underdeveloped world, were trends quite foreign to the official Canadian political mind.

Instead, the policies of the late forties and early fifties, which had seen the massive flow into Canada of American investment funds, the establishment of a de facto continental resource policy, the alienation of large sectors of the Canadian economy would be continued and intensified. And in the field of defence, far from developing Canadian alternatives to American policy, integration of Canadian industry with the American war economy would be fostered. America's international interests would become Canada's. As American war technology developed, so too would Canada's. The Canadian economy would become in defence, as in manufacturing, a carbon copy on a micro-scale of the Imperial Power's. Satellite status was a small price to pay for economic growth.

Development of Canadian Arms Sales in the 1960's

The Agreement of 1959 allowed Canada exemption from the Buy American clause of US Defence Contracts. Canadian firms would be enabled to compete directly for Pentagon contracts, the only determining factor regarding success or failure, being their ability to meet American specifications and cost factors.

On the Canadian side, the Department of Defence Production swung into full gear, bringing to the attention of Canadian manufacturers the advantages they stood to gain by the agreement. To begin with, no export permits were required for Canadian war material destined for the US.

Furthermore, the Department undertook through the Canadian Commercial Corporation, a crown corporation dating from 1946, to facilitate contacts between Canadian firms and the Pentagon, by undertaking and arranging contracts on their behalf. From a level of $118 million in 1960-1, first full year of operation of the agreement, contracts arranged by this Corporation have risen to a value of $222 million in 1966-7, totalling some 3000 in number, for that year alone.

The Department of Defence Production, at the same time, began to organize a series of conferences with Canadian businessmen, elucidating the mechanism of defence contracting, and to publish a series of manuals illustrating the products and suppliers of Canadian defence material.

Thus, the question of defence contracting can be said to have been of the highest priority to the Canadian Government from the very start of the agreement, eliciting a spurt of government initiative and activity, quite out of character with the usual slow pace of Ottawa programs.

There has been a very sharp rise in US procurement in Canada beginning in 1965, year of the take-off of the Vietnamese War. In effect, from the moderate 1964 figure of $166 million, US procurement in Canada leapt dramatically to $259 million in 1965, and $317 million in 1966, close to a 100% rise in two years.

The escalation of the Vietnam War brought with it, as well, however, increasing disenchantment in Canada with the continentalist orientation of Canadian defence and foreign policy. Already at the time of the Bomarc dispute, passions had run high over the subject of a nuclear role for Canada and continuation of the NORAD Agreement. The intervention of the US in the Far East in support of a clearly unpopular regime, the readiness to resort to the use of armed might where a short-sighted diplomacy had failed, led Canadians to question the benevolent character of American power, and to turn to alternatives to alliance politics. The myths of the Cold War were dying, and a new, brash, unabashedly assertive American policy had made itself manifest.

It was in this context that pressure was placed upon the Canadian Government to dissociate itself from American intervention, and that the issue of arms procurements came to take on the sinister guise of "merchants of death."

The reaction of the Pearson Government was revealing, and its actions even more eloquent than its words. On the one hand, Martin and Pearson affirmed time and time again, the strict Canadian ban on arms shipments to war zones, a policy consistently followed with respect to the Middle East, Angola and Mozambique, or Rhodesia. On the other, it was held shipments to the US fell under a different category, that in the light of the 1959 Agreement and the strong economic stake Canada had come to acquire in defence sales, arbitrary curtailment of sales could prove catastrophic to the economy. Still, it was argued, there were no direct Canadian arms shipments to Vietnam, and little evidence of Canadian material in use in the war.

This position has been put forward repeatedly even though the evidence of direct Canadian involvement in the war is too eloquent to be denied. Let me illustrate with a series of examples.

The Scale of Canadian Involvement

1) The Caribou Transport manufactured by de Havilland Aircraft of Canada has for some years played an important carrier role in Vietnam, along with other Canadian aircraft such as the Otter. This has been denied neither by the company in question nor the Pentagon, although sales of this plane to the US have now ended.

Some two years ago, de Havilland had hopes of landing a $100 million order with the US, for its turbo-prop Buffalo transports, and had sent two of these on for testing in Vietnam. A sudden requirement for spare parts arose, and the long waiting line in the US military airlift pipeline, forced de Havilland to seek to expedite these parts commercially. It applied for an export permit, for shipment via Vancouver and Hong Kong to Saigon, but was turned down, on the grounds Canada did not allow the export of material to war zones.

Yet almost at once, Defence Production proceeded to arrange for shipment of these parts to the US (no export per-

"Canada Limited has designed and developed this new military vehicle — the Dynotrac. The U.S. Army, note it as the XM-571." (Canadian Defence Production, Ottawa, 1967)

"Canada sold a record $370,000,000 worth of arms and equipment to the United States during 1968, up from $53,000,000 in 1967, according to the U.S. Information Office on the Vietnam war. The figure — $53,000,000 — is the highest since the U.S. under a defence sharing agreement with Canada in 1968."

What Do U of T Students Really Think?

BY JUDITH C. CLAVIR
(SGS-Sociology)

There has been a great deal of speculation about what U. of T. students really think about the Vietnam war and campus complicity. Opinions have been offered on both sides: the validity of a recent SAC vote of 24-14 to ban companies complicit in the war is countered with the argument that the opinions of the SAC reps. are not really representative of student political opinion. Conversely, the image of a technocratic multiversity well integrated with the American political and economic machine is contrasted with the ideal of a liberal university emphasizing humanitarian principles.

Last year a study was conducted in the Department of Sociology by Professor Kenneth N. Walker and myself, of a representative sample of the political attitudes of 750 students (.05%) at this university. The sample included proportional representation from the faculties of Arts, Science, Engineering, Medicine and C. and F.

The results of the study showed that students of this university are in fact against the Vietnam war. Only five percent of the total sample agreed strongly with the proposition that "Canada should make a greater effort to help the U.S. fight the Vietnam War," while 49% disagreed strongly. Overall disagreement with this statement was 80%. In other words, 80% of the students here feel that Canada should not become more complicit in the war.

This type of disagreement with the war can be seen as consistent with student attitudes toward American economic and political imperialism. 19% of our students strongly agreed with the statement that "American investment makes Canadapolitically dependent on the United States." A total of 60% of the student body agreed with this statement. Similarly, 71% of the sample felt that U.S. business in Canada has too much power, while only two percent feel that it has less power than it should.

The question of "who controls" the placement service has been crucial in the Dow sit-in issue. While we are being fobbed off with an administration-staked "advisory" committee on what companies ought to be allowed on campus; while no one, students, staff or administration, is addressing themselves to the critical questions of who ought to control campus facilities and whether any campus facilities ought to be allocated to business interests in the community for the purposes of recruiting — at the same time as these questions are being ignored, 97% of the students at this university feel that students ought to set regulations concerning campus facilities.

The study does not in any sense give an impression of a radical or left-wing campus. Students are moderately or slightly interested in politics and public affairs, and tend to vote Liberal (36%) or NDP (24%). There are a large number of undecided voters (20%).

On the important issues, however, student opinion in all faculties comes through strong — students on this campus want to control university facilities, and, more significantly, campus opinion is in fact against the Vietnam war.

On January 18-19-20 representatives of Domtar Limited, one of Canada's largest and most diversified manufacturing companies, will be here on campus to interview 1968 graduates in the following courses: B.Sc. Honours in Mathematics Appointments to see the men from Domtar can be made now at the Placement Office. While you're there, ask for the brochure giving detailed information on Domtar's world-wide activities.

Prepare yourself. Domtar is coming.

Those Rolling Kansas Plains...

By JACK MCCAFFREY

An antidote — that's what we needed.

For you see, the toxic content of the JAZZ AT THE SYMPHONY series is very high. Whoever organized it is making war on not only jazz, but music in general. After running down a few pieces of the universal stature of Anderson's SLEIGH-RIDE (the one we had already heard 4000 times throughout the festive season) the Toronto Symphony retired from the field, leaving only musical corpses behind.

Then fresh from the wings Phil Nimmons led on his trible fattened in the studios of the land. Between asides to his mother-in-law, Nimmons, brimming with self-deprecation and false modesty, squeaked through some of his own compositions. Although all the musicians are eminently capable, they managed to get through the evening without betraying any emotion or giving a sign to the earthly hosts that they knew what jazz is about.

Fortunately, around the corner from Massey Hall, Buck Clayton and Ruddy Tate and their cohorts were filling the Colonial Tavern with the real thing. Recalling the glorious days of the Count Basie band of the late '30's, (rather than the new, fully automated Basie organization of the '60's) these five men brought back the loose-limbed, rolling, surging music of the Kansas plains.

Both Clayton and Tate played in the old Basie band when it was filled with men like Lester Young, Dickie Wells, and, of course, the All American Rhythm Section of Jo Jones, Freddie Green, Walter Page, and Basie. Floating easily along over the beat, this rhythm section (those were the days when that term meant exactly what it says) towed the band behind it like a balloon without any strain at all. The band almost always played tunes based on the blues or one of three or four standard popular songs. Instead of reading through carefully contrived written arrangements, the various sections engaged in a sort of loose tug-of-war, using riffs (short repeated rhythmic phrases) as ropes. This casual approach to ensemble playing gave the band a unique relaxed, open feeling, which became powerfully surging when the band reached a peak of excitement.

This, the Kansas City feeling, is the tradition which Buck Clayton and the Count Basie All-Stars keep alive and vital. After an improvised ensemble statement of the melody, the two horns play solos, riding along on a supple rhythmic cloud supplied by the superb rhythm section.

Clayton, a trim but solid-looking individual of medium height, mustached, serious-looking, stands almost completely still, his back slightly arched, and holds his trumpet straight out in front of him when he plays. He plays uncomplicated melodic phrases with a tone which is full and brassy, sometimes taking on a rough cutting edge, and which tends to dissolve into a very wide vibrato at the ends of phrases.

A bigger man than his leader, Tate appears to lunge into his tenor saxophone. Playing riff-based, blues-tinted lines, Tate displays a hearty, virile tone with vibrato, and swoops up and down his horn, sometimes pouncing on his notes, sometimes grabbing a high note out of the air with a startling effect. Tate rarely fails to come up with a full-blooded improvisation which is a definition of jazz and swing.

The rhythm section is just great. Sir Charles Thompson's piano playing reminds one of Earl Hines and John Lewis. Providing vigorous, solid, and varied support is Franklin Skeete on bass. A relatively unknown musician, Skeete is a worthy disciple of the late Oscar Pettiford. Jackie Williams is a very unusual drummer. Although he has a modern technique and style, Williams has a loose-jointed relaxation (without sloppiness) that most modern drummers lack. He is a superlative accompanist, playing his various cymbals very quietly and unobtrusively, yet without blandness. As a soloist, Williams shows great variety and imagination, worthy of the memory of Big Sid Catlett.

The group is finishing up a three week job at the Colonial this week-end. I would not insult you, gentle reader, by implying that you have a JAZZ AT THE SYMPHONY ticket that you could tear up; but at least you could sacrifice a cardboard replica and then hasten down to the Colonial to hear the real Kansas City jazz.

You Can Listen Over and Over

BY VOLKMAR RICHTER

When Otis Redding died in that plane crash before the turn of the year, his fame drew all the news to his own person, leaving a mere line or two to mention that also dead are the Mar-Keys his band.

The Mar-Keys: seven back up musicians who flocked around Stax record company a small outfit in Memphis. Membership includes Duck Dunn, one of the most nimble bass guitarists anywhere, and Steve Cropper, whose guitar playing could always be counted on to be interesting and fresh. Cropper and Dunn—ah yes members of Booker T and the MGs, a quartet that somewhere overlapped with the Mar-Keys. I'm not sure of the overlap besides Dunn and Cropper.

But that's the loss. When that plane went down it took with it Redding, his own band, the MGs, and probably Stax records' enormous influence in the rhythm and blues field.

With the MGs and others playing in the studio, Stax consistently recorded the most creative R & B in the world. The MGs played for Sam and Dave, Carla Thomas, Wilson Pickett and others besides Redding and their own LPs.

A record with them in the back was always stunning in its lightness and almost delicate texture, its variation in technique and sound and its un-gimmicked, honest instrumentation.

You can hear a good survey of some of the product of the just released History of Otis Redding (Stax-Volt 418), a sort of greatest hits LP. It doesn't do justice to Otis but does manage to go through some of the more interesting items—just enough to attract you to more. There's Redding's first single "These Arms of Mine," recorded in the old group style while he was still with Johnny Jenkins and the Pinetoppers, down through "Respect", "Mr. Pitiful", "Shake", "Pain in My Heart," "Security," to my favorite "Try a Little Tenderness." (And, oh yes, there's also "Sad Song" and "Satisfaction"). His biggest hit "I've Been Loving You Too Long" still moves with all the emotion of its first hearing. "Tenderness" still grabs with all the power and soaking punch

With Otis you can listen over and over and still never memorize it all as you can with say The Supremes Greatest Hits, luxury-two-disc package released successfully for the Christmas giving-trade. (Tamla-Motown 2-663).

Part of the problem on this LP is the band, the other is the songs. The band does what it's paid to do and rarely more. It starts sounding the same right through four sides what with its recurring stomping echoes and similar accented beat. The songs are all by Holland, Dozier and Holland resident tunesmiths at the Detroit record factory's studios.

They are not bad, mind you, and upon occasion approach the subject of love from a fairly sophisticated level, as for example in "Hangin' On". For the most part though, I sense they keep their tough and better songs for other Motown singers and write with a formula for the Supremes.

Diana Ross has to sound sexy and little-girlish and yet proper. The elemental things are for private. For the mass market a series of plaintive, teenage poignant dissertations upon various situations of the mating game—he's gone away, he's back again, he's likely to go away, he is never coming back, he is here and whispering but can he be true. Diana throws herself into these things body and soul and cannot control her destiny. So, there, you can have her at your mercy for 20 songs right in a row.

Only once, in the not-very-subtle eroticism of "The Happenin'," does the Supremes' propriety break apart. For the rest of the LP, there is that slick and luxurious sound of the finest girl trio rock 'n' roll has ever produced. Diana, of course, is the catalyst to all this fine stuff and despite the songs, despite the accompaniment, you can listen to her voice, 20 cuts in a row and not get tired. I do prefer the Supremes earlier material, before they got on to that frantic activity of "You Can't Hurry Love."

From Memphis, to Detroit to Chicago where the Chess Producing Corp. is situated and just cannot resist issuing gimmicks for the buyers like Super Blues (Checks 3008). Altogether for the first time, it says, Bo Diddley, Muddy Waters and Little Walter, performing eight standard Chicago blues and extended and improvised sessions.

THE SUPREMES

They're so improvised they come across like a party; and like most party performances there are moments of inspired group playing, but many more moments of chaos.

Bo puts down his tough rhythm; never mind if it's always the same, it's Bo isn't it? Bo hams his way through his own songs like "You Can't Judge a Book" and Bo Bidley, singing unemotionally, talking, shouting, laughing, joking. Muddy, sounding more tired and older in his singing than when he did songs like "I'm a Man" originally, occasionally gets to play some nice things on his guitar and less occasionally Little Walter finds a hole in the sound to let us hear a harp solo.

In other words, the record is a party and occasionally fun, but not to be compared with anything these men may have done on their own. As Bo finds it necessary to say at one point: "You folks out there don't know what we're doin'!"

the US for a generation and which is still wreaking havoc in America.

By 1948, the year of the passage of the military conscription bill, countless Americans were convinced that war was virtually upon them. The situation became so tense that US News and World Report noted: "President Truman is somewhat disturbed by the way the idea of imminent war with Russia hangs on in the country even after the official line has changed from war scares to more emphasis upon the prospect of peace. It is proving more difficult to turn off than to turn on a war psychology."

It was indeed, and once the USSR had tested an atomic bomb, this war psychology knew no limits. Generals and right wing groups, both supported by the military and big business, began insisting that only preventive nuclear war was the answer to the Russian threat. The American people were told again and again that only larger and more deadly nuclear weapons would suffice, and billions more were poured into the nuclear arms race. Cook has presented impressive evidence that when in 1959 disarmament did for a moment seem possible at Geneva, it was the Americans, and not the Russians, who deliberately sabotaged the talks. Clearly, disarmament was not desirable for a nation "whose entire economic welfare is tied to warfare."

After the failure of the summit in 1959 the Los Angeles Mirror News carried the following advertisement: the summit has failed — what does this mean to you?

tremendous upsurge in electronics, billion dollar payroll, 110,000 employee industry in South California booming!" As David Lawrence, editor of US News and World Report, vividly puts it: "Government planners figure they have found the magic formula for almost endless good times. Cold war is the catalyst. Cold war is an automatic pump primer. Turn a spigot, and the public clamorous for more arms spending . . . Cold war demands, if fully exploited, are almost limitless."

The case could not have been stated more baldly. American foreign and domestic policy are firmly tied to the profits of the Cold War, and the checks and balances which reign over the military-industrial elite are few.

At present this massive armaments industry is finding one of its juiciest outlets in Vietnam. The propaganda barrage which has been so carefully and laboriously aimed at the American public for 20 years has made such a war domestically possible, and the Vietnamese are the current pump primers of the American war economy. While this is not by any means the sole or even the major cause of the war, it is vital to understand the stake that the military industrial complex has in the prolongation of this conflict. Although this book was published in 1962, when Vietnam was not the vital factor it is today, the implication of Cook's thesis for Vietnam are clear. As he himself puts it: "The warfare state cannot stop at home; it has to conquer the foreign menace whose mere existence makes it a domestic menace. The road of the Warfare State is the road to war."

Why two years with Cuso may put you five years ahead in your field

For one thing, there's the kind of experience you gain, working in your own field overseas in a developing country for two years. The salary is low, but almost invariably you get broader, more varied experience, and get it earlier than you would in Canada. You learn to handle responsibility—and prove it—in a job that lets you test your knowledge, prove your theories, experience the challenge of a different culture. And it is a challenge, working through Canadian University Service Overseas to help close the knowledge gap that exists between developed and developing nations. Right now, about 900 Canadians are working for CUSO—a non-profit, independent organization—in 40 developing countries around the world, spreading their technical and professional knowledge wherever their particular skills have been requested. But for every request that's filled, so many go unanswered—for lack of people like you. How about it? Would you like to play a small but important part in the nation-building that's going on in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean? If you have a degree, a diploma or a certified skill, you can contribute to their progress—and your own—with CUSO.

Want to know more? Tell us what you can do. We'll tell you where you are needed.

It's Not The CIA - It's The CFB

BY KEN DANCYGER

The University of Toronto has a centennial project. No we didn't renovate Convocation Hall. Several students decided that one of the prime shortcomings of this university was the lack of facilities for film-making on campus. They formed the Centennial Film Board.

So as to avoid comparison with the Founding Fathers some of their number are Mary Omatsu and Carl Bruckman. Their aims are simple; there will be a series of twelve lectures (Tuesday evenings) on the techniques of film-making: Allan King (Warrendale) Julius Kohanyi and other experts will talk about camerawork, directing, editing etc. Workshops will be set up and anyone interested in making a film will be partially subsidized. 8mm. equipment will be provided by the Board.

The CFB, our answer to Canada's own NFB (and hopefully a challenge to it in the future) has the endorsement of the colleges and Simcoe Hall.

Kramer's Evening

Its first official project was to co-sponsor "An Evening with Stanley Kramer" this past Sunday in Convocation Hall. Unfortunately late publicity and cold weather limited the audience to 300. A pity. Mr. Kramer (director of Defiant Ones, Judgement at Nuremberg and the new Guess Who's Coming to Dinner) was most entertaining.

A very honest, forthright individual, he is, at 54, the "James Dean" of Hollywood directors except, if I may force a cliché, he always has a cause. Tanned, self-assured, he stood up courageously to two hours of tame questioning. The most provocative question challenged the economy of his use of old romantic music in his latest film. Nevertheless he answered the old standards "who do you admire?" "who are your favourite actors?" "what's wrong with Hollywood?" etc, with verve and respect for his audience.

Several worthwhile comments he made concerned the "new wave" of filmmakers. He feels that too often a filmmaker is afraid to show pure feeling and honesty on the screen and will turn instead to understatement or technique to sell his point. Kramer himself puts as much feeling and conviction as his sensitivity to his backers and audience will allow. Predictably the most common criticism against his films is sentimentality. He predicts that the next wave of filmmakers will return to simplicity in their films and concentrate on the story rather than technique.

I felt as if he was whispering in my ear when he talked about the actors with whom he has worked. Robert Mitchum drinks, Oscar Werner is creative and intelligent, Ava Gardner has a complex, Marlon Brando wanted to be somebody, Frank Sinatra is a fink . . . It was great fun.

King's Advice

Allan King opened the Board's lecture series on Tuesday. He was, in his unassuming manner, as interesting as Kramer. He talked about his humble university beginnings and assured the 100 present in UC 104, that a university education could be useful, at least politically, if film-making is your game.

King spent some time explaining that Warrendale was representative of his cinema verite approach to filming. His notion in making the film was to explore the freedom of a child and the need for expression with the hope that, in his words, he could find out "where we adults got screwed up". He shot the film virtually from day to day. Out of spontaneity, he hoped for some communication of honesty and feeling.

King was frank in a very novel way. He looks upon making a film as a personal experience, cathartic as much as self-searching. He usually works with the same people; establishes a rapport with them. They know what they want out of the film and work towards a somewhat common goal. Constant verbal communication is unnecessary. A similar trust is developed or at least attempted with the subjects of the film. He seldom uses actors, seldom stages scenes. This is a dangerous, but nevertheless exciting, way to make films. It's no wonder he needs a long vacation afterwards.

He urged everyone present to get out and make films. It was the only way to learn. So if you see a camera peering at you through the handle of your teacup, don't be alarmed. Contrary to rumour its not the CIA, or the Mounties; its the CFB.

'67 and Film: In Retrospect

By MEL BRADSHAW

As far as cinema is concerned, 1967 was a disappointing year. Although clearly an improvement over '66 as far as Canada is concerned, the centennial year produced no miracles. Full of good intentions, the CBC televised two poor films designed in co-operation with the National Film Board for the theatres (The Ernie Game and Waiting for Caroline) and exiled to the picture houses one excellent film intended for television (Alan King's Warrendale). Any comparison between the insipid dramas of the CBC-NFB and King's sensitive documentary can only tend to confirm the depressing notion that reportage is all these national organizations are capable of producing, and that for imaginative fiction we must look to Quebec and—though this may be more the expression of a hope than a reality—to the underground film-makers.

On the international scene, '67 brought no masterpiece of the caliber of A Man for All Seasons of the year before. Of those films which were shown last year in Toronto, the one I liked best was Alain Resnais' La Guerre est finie. Shown at the opening of Cinecity last spring, it concerns a group of Spanish patriots who thirty years after the Civil War continue to plan a counter-revolution from the safety of Paris. One of them, Diego, who repeatedly returns across the Pyrenees, sees the hopeless discrepancy between the stubborn idealism of his comrades and the reality of Franco's Spain. When he tries to explain to them, they blindly object that in Spain he is too close to the situation as it really is. He is fed up with the theorizing and the sentimentality; fed up with those who have never seen anything more in the struggle than a cause for heroic youths, a cause now generally forgotten and replaced in the popular imagination by Vietnam. Yves Montand as Diego embodies all the weariness, the impatience, and the sincere love of country the role demands. He conveys masterfully the impression of a great man at bay in the best tragic hero tradition. The film also marked the sudden rise to international stardom of Quebecoise Geneviève Bujold, an actress of great charm and composure who has since appeared in De Broca's King of Hearts and Louis Malle's Thief of Paris.

I also admired the freshness and originality of Arthur Penn's Bonnie and Clyde. I cannot help feeling, however, that the film has by some viewers been taken too seriously; its pathos is exaggerated at the expense of its humour. Despite the brutal realism of their deaths, Bonnie Parker and Clyde Barrow are presented as glamorized folk-heroes of the depression perhaps as they were be affectionately remembered or improved upon by the farmers of that era. It is the light-hearted mood, typified by the gay banjo music, which dominates. Warren Beatty says he was attracted to the story in the first place because he found Bonnie and Clyde funny characters.

My third choice would likely fall on Far from the Madding Crowd (although being a rabid Thomas Hardy fan may make me less than impartial) and The Thief of Paris was my fourth favorite. If these films have any common merit, it may lie in their sense of a particular time and place, be it Paris in the Gay Nineties, 19th century Dorset, depression-days in the American South-West, or even the Franco-Spanish border in the 1960's. (In Resnais' film, however, it is the situation rather than the particular places that count). Watching each of these films you feel—or at least I feel—a genuine and exhilarating sensation of displacement which lasts after you have left the theatre. Although this feeling is insufficient as the key to success, any film which can create it is not valueless. Peter Glenville's Comedians, for example, despite its often clumsy plot mechanisms and usually banal dialogue, captures the minutiae of Papa Doc's Haiti with paradoxical and fascinating beauty.

The two films which I enjoyed least last year were The Day the Fish Came Out and the Boulting brothers' Family Way. That Michael Cacoyannis could have achieved the former constitutes the year's greatest disappointment. The weaknesses of Family Way are best seen when it is compared with an Italian film on the same subject shown last fall at the Electra, Bolognini's Bel'Antonio with Marcello Mastroianni. Here the theme of impotency is deeply entwined with Sicilian honour, greed, and the power of the church. The inevitably pathetic denouement makes the problems raised by Boultings' film look like the trivial devices of a TV situation comedy.

The Electra Repertory Cinema richly deserves a year-end salute for the many fine pictures it has made available to the Toronto public in 1967. In addition to reviving good films of established reputation such as Last Year at Marienbad, L'Avventura, The Red Desert, and 8½, it has presented little known or recent works which do not get regular screenings, such as Hiroshi Teshigahara's striking Face of Another made after his better known Woman in the Dunes in 1966.

Best New Year wishes also to the various film societies on and around campus, to Cinecity, and to Take One, a fine Canadian film magazine.

A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Studio

BY STEPHEN KATZ

There is a theory in Hollywood that a successful Broadway music will be equally successful when transferred to the screen. This is the theory which lies behind the filming of Camelot, and this is why Camelot is such a poor movie.

In fact, it is not a movie at all; it is nothing more than a film of the play. Alan J. Lerner, who is responsible for the screenplay, has not bothered to write one, but has stuck to his original script. If his original script had been all that good, there might have been some hope for the picture, but it was not.

One can appreciate Lerner's problem in adapting T.H. White's The Once and Future King for the stage. He was faced with a sprawling work, covering forty years and seven hundred pages, which traced the life of Arthur from his boyhood and education at the hands of Merlin, to the final disintegration of his kingdom. In reducing the work to a manageable size, Lerner was forced to discard over half of it.

Some changes which Lerner introduced were completely unjustified. In The Once and Future King, Lancelot is presented as the ugliest man alive. White specifies over and over again that he is not the stock romantic hero, but a very human being, with weaknesses so great, that he is forced to develop his strength and prowess far beyond that of all other men in order to counterbalance them. Yet in Camelot Lancelot re-appeared as the handsome knight in shining armour. Lerner showed that he totally missed the point of White's book which is, a de-romanticization: a debunking of the heroic epic, and a realistic treatment of a legendary subject.

As in My Fair Lady, displays his knack of ignoring what the author said ... (Damn it all, Eliza marries Freddy).

But then how could The Once and Future King be successfully adapted for the stage, without losing its scope and depth? Impossible. On the other hand, it would seem to lead itself naturally to a screen adaptation. The flexibility of the movie form makes it possible to show the very large and the very small: the panorama and the close-up. One of the problems with the stage adaptation was that White's sense of perspective was destroyed. The contrast between the tiny intimate details and events of the lives of the three protagonists, and their widespread ramifications could not be shown. In the screen, this would be no problem. A movie of The Once and Future King could be tremendous.

Unfortunately, the movie Camelot botches the book even more badly than the play. Rather than return to White's book, Joshua Logan, the director, has stuck by Lerner's mediocre stage play. And the faults of the play are magnified one hundredfold on the vast panavision screen. Even if Lerner's script had been the greatest thing since Hamlet, the fact still remains that writing for the stage, and writing for the screen are two entirely different things.

Neither Lerner nor Logan have grasped the fact that the screen is not the medium for dialogue: a picture is worth a thousand words.

On the screen, a glance or involuntary movement of the hand can convey what required several lines of dialogue on the stage. Yet the characters are always talking, or (what is worse) singing. The songs have all been dubbed, and the lip synchronization is messy. The tunes are first rate, but Lerner's lyrics are cute and self-consciously clever, and his integration of the songs so bad that they are constantly breaking in as distractions.

This is not to say that it is impossible to make a musical film. Richard Lester's A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum, is a notable exception. But Joshua Logan has none of Lester's zany inventiveness, and his direction vacillates between cuteness and mawkish sentimentality.

It is difficult to criticize the actors, since they are clearly defeated by their writer and director from the start. From Richard Harris, in the role of King Arthur, one would expect better. Mostly he furrows his brow and twitches. His entire performance is stoney and runs to excess. He seems to relish the fact that his lines are bombastic and maudlin.

Vanessa Redgrave as Guenevere is a joy to behold from beginning to end, but she is miscast. She gets through largely on charm, and comes across as the only living person in the kingdom. She does this despite her lines rather than because of them.

It would be possible to continue listing the fault of this picture: its countless anachronisms; its silly costumes; its clumsy handling of singing; its dreadful montage and inept plot development, but this would be pointless.

Even if all these faults were corrected, Camelot would still remain nothing more than an overblown soppy Harlequin Romance, on a par with Vadim's The Game is Over. Chalk up another victory for Hollywood. It can now add to Doctor Zhivago, Mutiny on the Bounty and The Bible, another successful money-making desecration of a good book.

BLOC-NOTES

A POEM

Artists, especially the tender ones who are exposing their works for mass consumption for the first time, generally display contempt and envy for the media man.

In presenting a new work of art to the public, the media men can aid and speed up pleasant and easy digestion of the product, but at the same time remove much of the delicate flavor.

Pedro Xisto, a visiting professor from Brazil and a so timeless The Globe and Mail called him "silver-haired," has written a poem, or an exercise in graphics, depending on your point of view, and this poem is the central idea of the environmental section of the University College arts festival.

What the poem amounts to on computer paper (it had to be programmed; it would take too long to write it manually) is 10,000 permutations of the word "babel" and 18 other words that can be derived from it.

What this means to artsmen is that many of the words of the poem are things like "aaaaa, aaaab, aaaa, aaaa, . . ." etc. On paper it doesn't look like much, but the idea is to let yourself proverbially "get into it."

On Wednesday night artist-chief engineers of the environment, Paul Sterback and Bob Wise were recording the sounds that various assistants were making in reading different parts of the poem. The climax definitely can be interpreted as alluding to the confusion of the Tower of Babel.

But the artists reminded me that it's not so much the physical description of the poem that is significant as the total concept of producing such an idea.

Other than adding that the environment is in a steel structure and it's probably very freaky, there is little more to say about it, not because the information is not available or because the environment defies description.

But if this article continues it will begin to distort the artists' conception of their environment, unless the content herein is restricted to vague, spectacular, mystical illusions.

Hopefully after the festival weekend Jan. 27-28, we will be able to say we digested the Babel environment without the aid of Bromo Seltzer.

A NEW JOURNAL

A strictly academic and yet very refreshing addition to campus publications appeared this week. Inside the tasteful cover of SYMPOSIA, A Students' Journal of Philosophy, is an attractive collection of essays written by graduates and undergraduates at the University of Toronto. The editors encourage both staff and students to recognize the best of classwork and independent investigations. SYMPOSIA is an admirable attempt at both relevancy and professionalism by students in or connected with the Philosophy Department.

The topics treated in the first issue cover a wide range of interests. In a concise but perceptive paper Mel Bradshaw argues that the Final Argument for Immortality in Plato's Phaedo is not conclusive. The modern reader, he says, "is apt to find inadequate substantiation for the steps by which immortality is reached." David Panciera presents a thorough and critical analysis of the political realism of Reinhold Niebuhr and Saint Augustin in an essay on Christian Faith and Liberal History. The variety of topics should encourage students of all departments to read this journal.

STAFF NEWS

We heartily recommend that you re-read Joan Murray's art reviews from last term. All were excellent. Unfortunately for us Joan has had to wander more deeply into the groves of academe and will no longer be writing for us. We have acquired a new book editor, though — the exuberant and prolific Stephen Bornstein. And Rod Mickleburgh will soon be joining us in an editorial capacity. He and Graham have rediscovered musical chairs.

theatre

Theatre is starting the New Year in Toronto with a frenzied burst of activity. Theatre Toronto, the much-publicized answer to the problems of the Crest (remember them?) companies and the Canadian Players, opens this Wednesday at the Royal Alex with The Drummer Boy, a new French-Canadian play. Noel Coward's play Hay Fever comes to the O'Keefe Centre next Monday before it starts its run in London's West End. Sweet Charity ends its run here Saturday. If you haven't seen it, you've missed the prime example of the Broadway Musical at its best. Also on Monday, the Italian Club will present Addio Giovenezza at Hart House Theatre. The torch of noon hour drama has been taken by up by the Trinity College Drama Society as they announce an ambitious season of one-acters. Posters will be pinned to walls with more details, I'm sure, but it's nice to see this kind of thing start up again.

Two more things: The Poor Alex will show a new Canadian play by an old Canadian. Land On My Property is the name of the play, Harvey Markowitz is the name of the Canadian. The other thing is George Luscomb's new production, Gentlemen be Seated, at his new headquarters on 12 Alexander Street. Luscomb's shows are usually inventive, at the expense of clarity. He has lately been identifying himself with Toronto theatre, to the embarrassment of many involved in the theatre scene . . . oh well, this show may be different; I hope so.

film

The Christmas crop of new films was rather dismal. Many were frankly unpleasant. I wonder how advertisers hope to get people to see their movies by saying it "leaves you feeling kicked in the teeth" (How I Won the War). Some tried to be pleasant and failed: Doctor Doolittle had many good moments (regrettably few of them musical) though wastefully overblown. Between categories was The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly, enjoyable despite its length, pretention, and vulgarity.

On the brighter side, a psychedelic-type film, Chap-paqua, is on at the Towne; Bonnie and Clyde is back at The Cinema. The most promising looking recent arrivals are The Power Game at Cinecity and Guess Who's Coming to Dinner at the Carlton.

The Electra will be showing some American films of the fifties this month featuring Marilyn Monroe and Montgomery Clift. Later what the French call "comédie desopilant" will appear on the same screen, Louis Malle's wildly inventive not-to-be-missed Zazie dans le Metro.

music

U of T has managed to share some of the spotlight with the rest of Toronto this week. This Saturday at 8:30 in the Concert Hall of the Edward Johnson Building the Pro Musica will give a concert of Renaissance chamber music; and on Monday at the same hall there will be presented a young composers' concert by students from McGill (also 8:30 p.m.). Elsewhere, on Saturday at Massey Hall, Verdi's Rigoletto will be given in a concert performance. Without sets, dramatic action, lighting, etc., it will be an excellent opportunity to hear Verdi's score for itself. It will also present an opportunity to see how conductor Ozawa handles the opera idiom — an area that he has yet to explore. Next Thursday, the Soviet 'cellist Rostropovich, will appear with the TS — also at Massey Hall, 8:25 p.m. — in performances of Haydn's Cello Concerto No. 2, and Prokofieff's first Cello Concerto. Busy week for Massey Hall. On Monday pianist Wilhelm Kempff will be giving a recital at 8:30 p.m. and if you are of that inclination, the Grand Music-Hall of Israel will be at the Royal Alex for two shows today and tomorrow. And at Eaton Auditorium, next Thursday, the Zagret String Quartet will be performing starting at 2:00 p.m.

misc.

If you're driving west in the snow you might consider dropping in at Erindale College. You'll be able to warm your noses and also have a chance to see an exhibit of paintings by Adrian Dingle. Don Smith (IV Trin) and Bonnie Campbell (III Pol Sci.) have put together a very exciting program for Can-Can's French Canadian Cultural Festival. The Festival includes the production of Foisy's En Regardant Tomber Des Murs and Herbiets Terre Des Hommes at the Central Library. Herbiets will speak before the performance January 21.

New morality creates sexual complexes

The "sexual revolution" is causing as many complexes as the taboo-laden morality it has replaced, a University of Toronto psychiatrist said Wednesday.

Speaking at a free-wheeling discussion on Sex—a Private Appetite, Dr. Peter Moore of the University Health Service said, "every person has to work out some sexual code for himself."

But sex is becoming a very artificial appetite," the doctor continued "It is very much culturally induced.

"When there were many sexual taboos, we had guilt feelings about things like masturbating in back alleys. Now people feel inadequate for not living up to the new standards."

Dr. Moore outlined two complexes "tied up with there not being enough taboos."

Boys suffer from a Casanova complex and feel constantly pressed to prove themselves "robust athletes in bed."

"There is less and less guilt from too much sex, and more and more from too little."

Many girls have an "orgasm complex," the doctor said. "If a girl has some scrape with sex, and there are no bells ringing or stars flashing like in the movies, she thinks she's abnormal.

"Sex has stopped being an individual thing," Dr. Moore said. "People are allowed too little freedom to be themselves. You are not free if you are forced to be emancipated."

Dr. Moore disapproved of the Swedish practise of encouraging complete sexual freedom for 15 year-olds. "People at 15 are not emotionally prepared for intimate sexual relationships and they may be harmed if sex is pushed upon them."

We all start out less able sexually than the people we read and hear about, said Dr. Moore. "The bad thing is worrying about being sexually inadequate.

"You should allow yourself the luxury of feeling inadequate."

Controversial word found in student paper's pages

CALGARY (CUP) — A threat to shut down the Mount Royal Junior College student newspaper, The Reflector, has been temporarily dropped.

The board of trustees last week called for disciplinary action and a possible shut-down of the paper due to alleged obscenities.

A Wednesday night meeting of the board tabled possible action on a statement presented by the paper's editorial board pending further developments.

The statement said that the paper is bound by the Canadian University Press code of ethics.

The controversy arose on campus over the use of a word in a Reflector editorial cartoon.

An initial motion by E.B. Lyle of the board of trustees asked that "immediate action be taken to restore to respectability our college newspaper, The Reflector, and that acting President K. F. McCreedy be instructed to take the necessary steps, or failing this, that publication be curtailed immediately."

Reflector editor, Allan Wilson said he feels the majority of students and student council member support the paper's editorial policy.

Wrestlers lose to Redmen

Varsity wrestling Blues lost a close 22-16 match to Guelph Redmen last Tuesday at the aggie acropolis. Against last year's OAAA champions, Blues showed surprisingly well as they were in contention until the final bout.

Steve Casselman (123 lb.) wrestled well only to be overpowered in the last round. Veteran Jim Doner (130 lb.) also lost his match in the third round by a tough 1-0 count.

The next three duels brought a smile to Varsity coach Whipper as Blues swept them all. Victors were Bob Kellerman (137 lb.), Rick Kesten (145 lb.), and Ron Wilson (152 lb.). The latter two bouts ended in pins.

Then a 160 lb. rookie Rod Vinter dropped a tight decision, while smooth Bill Allison (167 lb.) and Vic Helfand (177 lb.) also ended up in the losers' circle with narrow 6-5 defeats. Both Allison to pinning their opponents.

Mike Wright (191 lb.), competent as always, out-muscled his adversary, but heavyweight Ylo Korgemagi came up against one of Canada's top wrestlers and went down valiantly in the third round.

In the most spectacular epic action in the basketball courts of the land this week, SMC A took VIC I by fire and sword (an old etruscan expression which translates the tally 39-29). Bearing most of the booty away from the scene of the rapine were M. Longpré (a representative of the ethnic race) and Sean Casey Patrick O'Neill. Each was awarded eight (8) points by the SPQ.

MED A, scalpels firmly clutched in formaldehyde-stained hands, inflicted thirty (30) incisions around the cojones (a good old Spanish term) of PHE A. The vanquished, however, did not take all this lying down; they hooped 28 points. Most deserving of the praises of the epic balladeer Mute Orange Madison (who generally hangs around for just that purpose was Wally "Ramparts" Router of the exercise and health men.

In second-platoon hoop encounters, VIC II spleened ARCH 38-32. Otto (to find out his real name, just reverse the spelling) of ARCH and Commander Franklin of the VICTors each netted 6 sharp ends. Unfortunately, Justice Blacklock, whose Commentaries have regrettably been displaced by those of Mason and Burger, chalked up an egg.

Trin A, paced by Baines and Boiven with 12 and 11 respectively, locked up UC II in the argives to the tune of 44-26 (an old pop standard made famous by Sammy Kaye, lamented jazz great.) Having recovered his soul from the fallen angel, U.S. Faust redcemed himself by hooping 16 points for UC.

There were other b-ball games this week, but unfortunately their scripts were inscribed by nondescript scribes.

HOCKEY

Maggie's Pharm (A), descending with all the force of a concrete zeppelin, flattened the Knox seminarians 1-ought (0). Halliday gave the prescription for the drug men.

In the bush leagues, Erin (mending their ways) sneaked by UC II by dicing 11, thus establishing a subtle 9-point lead over UC. Rolling 7 for the new school was Mirthful Delivity.

MINOR SPORTS

In vegetable marrow watering, New doused Innis 37-28, H. Rap O'Flannery led the New hose-handlers.

In spittle-slinging, Vic dropped the decision to APSC.

Hockey and basketball Blues shutout McMaster

By PHIL BINGLEY

Guelph Redmen, traditional doormats of the SIHL pay their annual visit to Varsity Arena tonight to match faceoffs with league leading Varsity Blues.

While Redmen have had their problems escaping the dingy depths of the league's cellar, they have shown signs of vacating said premises in their last few games. Most impressive of these was a 3-0 win over Queen's Golden Gaels one week ago. It was the first shutout win ever for a Guelph entry.

Defense and goaltending have been mostly responsible for Redmen's recent display of solid hockey. Netminder Jim Horton, a former Junior 'A' star with St. Catharines or the OHA league, provides a solid core around which the rest of the team revolves.

Barry Poag and Mike Dersam are the best in an adequate defensive corps while Mike Cummings, Walter Kincaid, Jim Forbes Doug Weaver and Jay Blackwood are the top shooters in the inconsistent Guelph offense.

In Hamilton on Wednesday night Marlins looked to be heading for a big upset win reminiscent of their 2-1 victory over Blues last season. However, Varsity's gap of ability proved just to much and Marlins finally faltered in the third period.

The key goal of the game came late in the first period with Marlins holding both a 2-1 lead and a good margin in the play. Brian Jones' shot from a near impossible angle slipped through Ian Budge (Mac's Rock of Jello) into the net. The score seemed to set Marlins back on their heels and from then on they never threatened to take over the game.

Jones added two more goals to give him his second hat trick in as many league games. Paul Laurent and Gord Cunningham scored Blues' other markers while Max Hickox, Graeme Taylor and Gary Spoor kept Mac in the game.

The most exciting action of the night came in the second period when Bob Hamilton and John Gordon of Varsity were both given minor penalties on the same play. Marlins swarmed all over John Wrigley before they finally scored with just two seconds left on the penalty clock. During the two minute period the puck was never outside the Varsity Blue line and the play was blown dead but once.

Only flagrant display of violence took place in the dying minutes of the game when Charlie Cippola, Marlins' hot-shot centre from Colgate charged Jim Miles and then picked a fight with him. It was the last and biggest mistake of the night for Cippola as Miles scored a quick first-round TKO.

The line of Murray Stroud, Brian Jones and Bob McClellan was the best on the ice. Stroud had three assists to bring his league leading total to eighteen while McClellan set up two goals to maintain the SIHL scoring leadership.

Guelph netminder Jim Horton (shown here) can look forward to lots of this sort of action tonight as Redmen invade Varsity Arena to take on our high-scoring Blues. For Blues it will be their lost tune-up before the World tournament of Innsbruck.

By JIM MORRISON

Varsity Blues, resting in the unfamiliar plateau of first place, will be after their third straight win tomorrow night, as Western Mustangs appear at Hart House for a return bout. Action starts at 8:30, and the amazing Blues can be rated solid favourites for the first time this season.

Varsity coach John McManus can be excused for being jubilant, as his underdog Blues have shot into a first-place tie with Windsor Lancers after throttling McMaster Marauders 60-56 Wednesday night right in Hamilton. But coronary victims, McManus included, will litter the floor if Blues keep winning games the hard way. Following their Western form, Blues squandered an early first period lead, and then fought neck-and-neck in the second period before going ahead to stay with a minute left.

The opening minutes of the match were beyond belief. John Hadden was doing his Bill Russel imitation at both ends of the court, and Mark White, Bruce Dempster, Arvo Neidre and Ron Voake were scoring on almost every shot. With nine minutes left in the first period, Blues were ahead 22-5.

But something had to give, and fatigue started to catch up with Varsity. Mac's staged a rally under the direction of Peter Wheatley and Karl Mearns which left them on the short end of a 34-27 count at halftime.

In the second half, Marauders kept on the pressure, finally tying the score at 45 apiece with just over ten minutes left. At this point, Blues went into a prolonged scoring drought, missing shot after shot, and losing rebounds to the fired up Mac squad. Luckily for Varsity, Marauders were also having shooting difficulties, and were unable to build more than a three point lead.

With three minutes left, the McManus charges started to regain control. Voake and Neidre scored key baskets to shoot Blues in front 57-56, and the defense tightened. In the last minute of the game, Varsity not only prevented Marauders from scoring, but drew the grey team into costly fouls. Mark White and Bruce Dempster hit from the line to make the final score a thrill-packed 60-56.

"We always do well in the box", said McManus, "but to win two in a row on the road is just tremendous. And next to beating Windsor, I like to take a game from Mac."

The key to Blues' success this year is balance, as the scoring in the Mac game proves. Bruce Dempster was high man again with 14 points, but right behind came White, Neidre and John Hadden with 12 apiece, and Voake with 10. Last year Varsity went with Holowachuk — this season everyone helps out, and Blues are clicking as a team.

John Hadden had his best defensive game in some time, leading all players with 16 rebounds. Mark White and Bruce Dempster continued to merit consideration as all-star guards. And the return of Ron Voake to the lineup compliments Arvo Neidre's presence, giving Blues a great one-two punch at forward. Although they failed to score, Mark Slater and Mike Kirby were both efficient in relief, and their defensive work helped keep Toronto in contention in the closing minutes.

Below the Boards

University of Waterloo Warriors opened their season with an 81-46 conquest of Guelph Redmen, the latter's third straight loss... Western Mustangs dropped an exhibition game to Waterloo Lutheran 78-63... Windsor Lancers defeated Wayne State University 88-75, also in exhibition play.

SCORING

For Varsity:
Dempster 14, Hadden 12, White 12, Neidre 12, Voake 10.
For Mac:
Jallife 13, Wheatley 10, Mearns 10, Murray 6, Martinson 5, Allingham 7, Tatti 3, Connor 2.

How 'bout this, sports fans?

Is your necrophilia wearing thin? Do you find yourself dreaming of Hubert Humphrey and William Denison? Has your kief lost its flavor from the bedbugs overnight? Then, hey man, you need a new turn on. And, presto, I offer you incredible endeavours on the Varsity athletic front. Up tight out of sight.

There's so much action going on even Johnny Esaw would be hard-pressed not to eventually say something intelligent about the action.

On Friday night at 7:30 in the Hart House pool, Guelph and Toronto match strokes. At Varsity Arena at eight o'clock is a shiny shenanigan with the same two schools on hand.

Saturday afternoon finds Hart House filled with RMC and Toronto fencers (1.00), Toronto and Waterloo wrestlers (1.00), and an OFSAA gymnastic meet (1.30).

In the evening comes high school basketball (Don Mills vs. Alderwood) at 6.30, inter-collegiate squash (Western at Toronto) at 7.40, the Estonian Rhythmic Gymnastic Group (them broads are something else-even Latvian boys like them) at 7.45, inter-collegiate boxing and water polo and high school wrestling at the stroke of eight, and finally the night's big basketball game at 8.30 with Western and Toronto as combatants. Films.

Seems a groove, as it were.

Varsity Blues off to Austria for world hockey tournament

By ROD MICKLEBURGH

The dream comes true for a certain, well-known hockey club at 6.45 this evening when Air Canada flight #452 takes off from Malton airport for Montreal. Aboard the huge jetliner, in addition to the usual motley array of passengers, will be 18 players and six club officials whose ultimate destination lies a bit farther than the pea-soup port. The club of course is our illustrious Varsity Blues, and their far-off destination: AUSTRIA.

Canadian champs for the past two years, Blues are Europe-bound in an exciting attempt to snare world intercollegiate supremacy. The global tourney is being held at Innsbruck, Austria as part of the 1968 Winter Universiade which runs from Jan. 21-28. These games, student versions of the Winter Olympics, are held every two years. Blues will be the only Canadians competing although skiing and ice-skating are also on the agenda.

Following their arrival in Montreal this evening, weather permitting (touch mahogany), the teams boards a Swissair plane which will deposit them among the snowy alps of Zurich tomorrow morning. From there its only a short jaunt to the home of leather shorts and Tyrolian hats, Innsbruck.

Innsbruck is superbly equipped for the Universiade, having show-cased for the world with its handling of the Winter Olympics in 1964.

Blues' first two games will take place at Feldkirch, but their final three are slated for Innsbruck's magnificent Olympic Ice Stadium.

Varsity is faced with a tough tournament opener as they take on Czechoslovakia Jan. 19. The next day, still at Feldkirch, Blues tackle the host Austrian club.

Then at Innsbruck, on Jan. 23 Blues play Finland. On the 25th come the Swedes, and finally, on Jan. 28 the big Russian bear gets its chance to maul Toronto.

Players making the trip for Varsity are goalies John Wrigley and Peter Adamson, defencemen, Peter Speyer, Doug Jones, Jim Miles, Terry Parsons and Bob Hamilton, and forwards Gord Cunningham, John Gordon, Brian Jones, Paul Laurent, Paul McCann, Bob McClelland, Ward Passi, Mike Ridell, Brian St. John, Murray Stroud and Don Fuller, a member of last year's Blues now with the Senior Maties.

Team officials going along are Dalt White, ace team manager, Mike Killoran, trainer Howie Ringham, Dr. "Red" Stephen Watt, and our very own sportsie, Phil Bingley. Bingley will be giving exclusive coverage of the tournament to the Varsity with game reports telephoned immediately after each contest.

Competition overseas will be extremely tough, and it is impossible to predict any sort of outcome. As coach Watt said, "I'm going with a completely open mind. I expect anything to happen."

He was head of the philosophy department from 1945 to 1962.

Prof. Anderson has given special lectures here since his retirement. For the last year he had been the acting head of the department of philosophy at Laurentian University in Sudbury.

Legal red tape stymies senate seats

A proposal to seat seven students on the University of Toronto Senate has been referred back to the Senate's executive committee because of legal problems.

In a statement released after Friday's Senate meeting, Dr. Moffat Woodside, the Senate's acting chairman, said the university's solicitors "had raised certain questions about the legality of the proposals under the University of Toronto Act."

Last night he said these technicalities involved such requirements as the election of members every four years and that members reside in Ontario.

Dr. Woodside also noted the Senate had been "made aware" of the resolution passed last week by the Students Administrative Council. SAC proposed student representation be shelved in favor of a comprehensive examination of the principles of university government.

Dr. Woodside said the legal aspects should be straightened out before considering other factors.

It was messy last night. If you went out you met 50 rowdy college males throwing snowballs, breaking windows and filling the orchard of Sir Don's, as in the picture left. And if you missed the snow-drunk crowd you chanced getting hit by falling trees and branches cracking under ice-weight, like this one which broke a power line and brought down a hydro pole on St. George St. And if you were really lucky and missed both these disasters, you probably slipped and fell into a slushy snowbank.

AFTERMATH OF DISMISSALS

WLU may witness student-faculty clash

By BOB PARKINS

WATERLOO — Waterloo Lutheran University is priming for a student-administration showdown that could lead to a student strike.

The confrontation has been provoked by the university's dismissal of two faculty members on grounds that have led a group of WLU students to set up a special court of inquiry and to call for a student boycott of classes.

The impending clash — set for Wednesday morning when the investigation will convene — has been looming for several months but came to a head in mid-December when the university did not renew the contract of a political science professor, Dr.

George Haggar, 32.

Dr. Henry Endress, WLU's acting president, has maintained that Dr. Haggar is "unhappy" here and "would be happier working in some other institution that is more sympathetic to his aims."

Dr. Haggar, a Lebanese-born specialist in Marxian analysis, who is also prominent in the Canadian Arab community, has written several anti-administration articles for The Cord Weekly, the campus newspaper at WLU.

At the same time the campus learned that Dr. Haggar's contract was being dropped after three years, psychology lecturer Gray Taylor, 22, was fired for unprofessional conduct.

Acting President Endress said Taylor "wasn't living up to the accepted standards of the profession."

"He was not behaving in a professional way," Dr. Endress said. "This is both in class and generally."

Taylor is a graduate psychology student with consistent first-class standing as an undergraduate who says he accepted a teaching position as part of his MA program.

Both he and Dr. Haggar have been associated with movements calling for academic and social change.

Reaction against the dismissal of the two men has been led by The Cord Weekly

VCUC in favour of students on senate

The Victoria College Union Council Thursday night sharply criticized the Students Administrative Council for opposing immediate student representation on the University of Toronto Senate.

SAC rep John Kirkpatrick (III Vic) urged the council not to support the SAC move. Kirkpatrick voted last Wednesday against the SAC proposal which demanded a full-scale study of University government.

President Glenn Brownlee (IV Vic) said he believed SAC was wrong. "They should have accepted the offer (of seven student senators) while continuing to work for further change," he stated.

The VCUC agreed that rejection of the Senate plan might make that body less responsive to future proposals. Councillors did not accept SAC's argument that the Senate was offering only "token" recognition.

Co-sponsored by the Electrical club, the rally will feature classes and trophies for novice and advanced drivers.

"Anybody can enter and experience is definitely a disadvantage," says Dal Carioni (IV APSC), club chairman. "Last year we had 86 entrants."

Tony Patt (IV APSC), one of the organizers, said the rally will be 160 miles long. "It will probably be limited to 100 cars, so it's first come, first served," he warned.

Dominion Square,

"Vietnam aux Vietnamiens et Quebec aux Quebecois" on bold-faced placards. And right behind, a group from Toronto chanting, "Hey, hey, LBJ, how many kids did you kill today?"

For some it was a day of celebration and for some it was a day of protest.

But in the yellow heat of the square, as I heard the organizers — always in French and in English—urge the protesters to file two by two across a crowded intersection, I was struck by the irony of the situation.

French and English, side by side, feeling the same need to express revulsion by protest, nearly all of their students. Their co-operation was a testimony to a dream of bilingualism.

But the illusion shattered when one read these words, "Vietnam aux Vietnamiens et Quebec aux Quebecois."

It seems that we are still trying to live within the dream. And until the bubble bursts there may still be ways of creating what can be at best only a fragmentary kind of co-operation.

Recognizing this, a group of students who call themselves the Canadian-Canadian Committee have pieced together a festival.

This week they hope to create on campus the kinds of situations that will lead naturally to the accord of feeling and the spirit of co-operation that marked the Dominion Day protest in Montreal.

Festival highlights are a concert, two one-act plays and a speech by a controversial figure.

Of these, the evening with two chansonniers offers the best chance for audience participation.

"Yaur turn to call Montreal, Michel" — Bonnie Campbell (III New) and Michel Demers (I New) making final arrangements for the French Canadian Arts Festival. Tickets are now on sale at the SAC office for Festival events next Friday and Saturday nights.

One of them, Pierre Letourneau is well known in Montreal through his TV show, La Boite a Chanson, which Torontonians were able to view on Sunday mornings last summer.

This program is one evening of a daily hour of popular music and other special programs known as Jeunesse Oblige.

Creating the 'environment' for UC's Babel

By SUE HODGSON

Bob Wise and Paul Sterback, the creators of the 'environment' for University College's Babel festival, work behind two forbidding steel doors off a Dundas St. alleyway.

Wednesday night, the two lanky, bearded artists were seated hard at work at a table in their barn-like studio.

Sterback explained that the environment was the expression of a poem by Pedro Xisto called Babel.

Here, Wise interrupted to explain that the environment had taken shape before the poem, and that the poem just happened to fit the environment. They hope to present the poem in a non-linear way involving the union of several media.

Sterback pointed out that the two had done extensive research before starting the project. Instead of the traditional art which, they say, is an expression of the artist's own reactions, they will attempt to predict and to help bring about the reaction of the viewer.

They hope to appeal to the viewer's intellect rather than primarily to his senses as many recent pop artists have done.

To do this, Sterback and Wise spent two weeks interviewing psychologists and psychiatrists at the Ciarke Institute.

The two began to describe in more detail what they are doing to the UC Refectory. People will go through a maze about 30 seconds apart so they will be alone most of the trip. At one point they will be bombarded by a three-dimensional images from a hologram, a machine made by Sinclair Laboratories.

But Sterback and Wise didn't want to give too much away and switched to the light show with the Mothers of Invention at Convocation Hall. Three-dimensional screens Wise calls them "big fat weather balloons") and 25 projectors will help create a "multi-media" situation and produce an element of audience participation.

Meanwhile, ticket sales for Babel have passed the half-way mark. By Friday night 60 per cent of the tickets had been sold.

The $4 tickets cover the week's programs including the Mothers of Invention concert. They are on sale in the UC refectory, Junior Common Room and Sidney Smith foyer.

Council will question Haggar and Taylor

ly, which called for the inquiry and boycott, and a group of Dr. Haggar's students.

The students claim Dr. Haggar is being railroaded out of the university despite his competence, acknowledged by both students and administration. They are circulating a petition to have the case reconsidered.

The committee on academic freedom and tenure of the Canadian Association of University Teachers will also investigate the firings.

The WLU student council threw its support behind the proposed boycott last Wednesday, but is meeting again today amid reports that it may reverse its stand.

Wednesday's inquiry is to question WLU administrators as well as Dr. Haggar and Taylor. However, there were reports yesterday that administration and faculty personnel will meet the inquiry by staging a counter-demonstration.

Supporters of Dr. Haggar and Taylor say that basic principles of academic freedom have been violated and that a strike may be the next step if the inquiry and boycott prove ineffective.

Dr. Endress has said that the cases of the two men will not be reconsidered and that he cannot guarantee that he will attend the inquiry.

The crisis at WLU began several months ago with the resignation of President Dr. William Villeneuve. Four other administrators have left since.

Dr. Villeneuve's departure followed closely the preliminary report of a Chicago management consultant's firm that was asked to investigate the working of WLU and make recommendations on how to improve them.

whither student journalism?

While the editors of the McGill Daily are still in the midst of disciplinary actions brought against them by their university's administration, the editors of the Windsor Lance are challenging their administration on an issue of alleged obscenity. And all the Lance did was print an article called The Student as Nigger, a good analysis of the university student-administration situation based on a Negro-power structure model.

At Fort William, a local politician found it necessary to criticise the use of "abscenities" in The Argus and in Calgary, The Reflector was nearly shut down by the administration of Mount Royal Junior College because the word 'shit,' had been used in an editorial cartoon.

These and other similar instances have prompted worries within the commercial press — the huge dailies that some people have called the 'cancensus press' because of their attempts to write for suburban housewives, truck drivers and intellectuals on a common denominator level.

Student irresponsibility, these papers called it as if the printing of a word is in the same league as swallowing goldfish or roiding residences for feminine apparel.

Nonsense. That sort of talk merely avoids the issue of what's happening among the student newsmen these days and what's happening is fundamental. Specifically, they are going through the agonies of a medium whose methods have been made obsolete. They have been emulating the efficiency and style of the professional papers and have lost their ability to be young, bright and lively. And they have been surpassed by the underground papers which are much younger, livelier and which (the best of them) have developed new styles of reporting and writing.

Not that the underground papers are all that good — there are some abysmal ones among them — but in some way they have influenced most campus papers. Foremost among their influences, has been to point out to student writers the gross inadequacies of the professional press. The big papers still print mostly official news (anything that a politician or a man in office says) without questioning. They report lies without challenging them, hiding behind the rationalization that objectivity is important (and possible) and that comments are for the editorial page.

During a time when the hippies have shown us all the inadequacies of the police department's authoritarianism in a changing society, the professional papers don't write articles criticising the police, for fear they won't get the facts when the next big murder is committed.

There are many other things that can be mentioned, but the point is there: the student journalists have finally seen that when they go to work for the professional press they will no longer have opinions, or if they do, they will have the opinions of the suburban housewives.

So, while at university, they take their one last fling, and currently that means emulating the underground press (foremost) and publications like Romparts (secondly). They write brighter and more descriptive articles; they write interpretative stories; they throw out the outmoded canons of good taste and they become more audacious.

That's what they try to do. All they've successfully done so far (some, that is) is scrap the old good-taste rules. Despite the boostings of some editors, the campus press has not become brighter, more audacious or interpretative. When it comes to news stories with real, in-depth analysis, they have done a lot of talking but little producing.

They do a lot of talking about the student press as an agent promoting social change; a concept developed at a conference of Canadian University Press, a co-operative of all student papers across the country). Yet most papers are still afraid to print whatever they feel is necessary for fear their university's elders might disapprove.

The McGill daily feels that by turning the campus right-wing in reaction to their strong editorial line, they are politicizing the students.

The Varsity started fighting the Canadian Press style to write a more visual and descriptive style and was immediately accused of subtly injecting propaganda into its descriptions.

On the other hand, the only people harder to change over than the readers are the writers. They've been writing about meetings and regular news sources and stories for too long, and it takes a long time to explain the potential of a story in communicating ideas and issues.

So, the student press is out somewhere in a no-man's land, between the professional press, which is more efficient and "responsible" and the underground press which is saying things on the young side of the generational gap.

It will be a few years yet before the student press finds relevance in what it is doing — if it finds it at all.

Unpleasant incidents have followed Canadian hockey teams overseas like a contagious epidemic. Rare is the red-blooded bunch of Canuck shinnyists who have managed to cut a swath through Europe without leaving behind sensational newspaper stories, enraged hockey fans, and a bodily-tarnished reputation.

Most of the time the Canadians have been unjustly maligned, but at the root of these "incidents" is always some quick, unthinking action by one of our guys which is leaped upon by the European press and ultimately blown way out of proportion.

And on the rare occasions when we're not getting smeared in the papers, we're getting smeared from the referees. Competent officiating is as rare in Europe as a de Goulle fan in Victoria. Andy Hemphill, last year's Interfoc referee-in-chief, has been in Europe this winter and reports "there are many young and relatively inexperienced officials within the Intromuroi programme who would far surpass the best of the European officials."

So our own Varsity Blues have these traditional burdens to shoulder in addition to the tough teams on their schedule at Innsbruck. There is every reason to believe that lousy officiating could cost them the whole tournament, and this is where the dilemma arises. Do you scream "robbery!" or quietly accept defeat with grinning chagrin. We hope, if catastrophe occurs and Blues get robbed, they accept the latter position. And if they don't, we'll understand their unfortunate tendency to be human.

But to hell with all this philosophy! What we'd really like to say is Godspeed Blues and we love you, win or lose!

Letters

Sir,

Re: Open letter to students by Chandler Davis, Paul Hoch et al.

If Dr. Christian Barnard, a white South African, perfected a technique for heart transplantations, would you prevent the use of his technique because he is a white citizen in a nation which practises apartheid? If a fellow human being were suffering from malignant cardiac failure, would you deny him this life-saving operation because you are against apartheid? Would you deny Dr. Barnard the opportunity to recruit medical students on this campus to work with him in South Africa?

If Dr. Louis Fieser, inventor of napalm, also produced vitamin K synthetically and some of the anti-malarial drugs, would you prevent the use of these drugs? If a fellow human being were suffering from a certain clotting defect, would you deny him treatment with synthetic vitamin K because you are against the use of napalm in Viet Nam? If a fellow human being were suffering from malaria, would you deny him therapy with these anti-malarial drugs because they were discovered by the inventor of napalm? Would you prevent Dr. Fieser from coming on campus and recruiting chemistry students to help him in his research?

If Dow Chemical Company, producer of napalm, also manufactured materials for artificial aortic grafts, for the ball in artificial heart valves etc., would you prevent their use? If a fellow human being had an aortic aneurysm which was ready to burst, would you deny him the use of an aortic prosthesis because Dow manufactures napalm? It is evident that some of you would prevent Dow from coming on campus to recruit chemical engineers (Remember: Dow is not forcing anyone to work for them).

Perhaps Davis, Hoch and their band of righteous, little angels could easily say yes to these questions. Of course none of them have serious heart diseases; none of them have an aneurysm; none of them have malaria or clotting defects. Similarly none of them are U.S. marines who were forced to go over to Viet Nam by a decision made by a Government (Paul Hoch believes that it is important that governments make decisions. Conscriptio is a government decision, Mr. Hoch.) to fight in surroundings not very conducive to self-preservation, to say the least. Confront one of these men and tell them face-to-face not to use something which can save their lives (viz. napalm) as they return to the dirty, filthy job of risking their lives in a war that should not be and you return to the peaceful, pleasant dust of unreality covering your virginal-white ivory towers.

If Davis, Hoch and their young cherubs can rest unperturbed and certain in the validity of their decisions, fine. But let them realize that their decisions can not be applied so simply to many others on this campus. I believe that I am the best judge of what decision I make. If they can convince me to change my decision, fine. If they cannot, then live and let live. The purpose of this university is not to elect persons to make decisions for the students; the purpose should rather be the education of students to stand on one's own two feet and make up one's own mind. The university placement service, therefore, should allow either everyone onto campus to recruit or no one at all. Let students as individuals make decisions about which company they want to go to. No one prevented Davis and Hoch from accepting the positions they now hold; at least they could have the decency to let other persons on this campus decide for themselves as to what positions they would like to apply for.

I am against the United States fighting in Viet Nam too. But at least I realize that if Dow were prevented from coming on to this campus, the situation in Viet Nam would not change one iota. If Dow were under enough pressure and did stop producing napalm, either the Americans would have it made elsewhere or else more American soldiers would be killed. And in all reality, do you honestly think the U.S.A. would pass legislation to handicap its own soldiers? Whether it is mortar shells shot by a soldier from a small, underdeveloped country or napalm sprayed by a soldier from the richest, most powerful country in this world—both kill innocent persons. The only plan which would prevent murder in Viet Nam is a plan for peace acceptable to both Washington and Hanoi and the Viet Cong—not warring with Dow. How ludicrous of Chandler, Hoch and their seraphim to waste their time on petty student politics. Making peace in Viet Nam will not come about by causing hostilities among U of T students. How can you expect to starve all the world's anti-enters to death by stepping on one ant—all you accomplish is injury to the ant!

Squirrel talk

Faulkner and I gave a lecture at Vic last week when the snow was very fresh, so while he talked I looked out the window at the squirrels. Squirrels are always fun to watch, no matter who is lecturing, but they were especially fun that day because they weren't just leaping and skittering about in the trees in their usual acrobatic fashion, they were sliding down the branches. That was the morning the campus got about three inches of super-fluffy snow. It coated the limbs of all the trees, so there were the squirrels skiing down six inch wood trails on a! fours, one after the other. Idiots! Aren't they supposed to be hibernating?

I've always liked squirrels, especially the bent front paws. When I was little there was a "tame" squirrel named Roger who used to let us pat him. We fed him nuts, cheese and apple-cores. One day I gave him one of my dried apricots, which I was hooked on at the time. He never forgave us and the next day he bit a kid on the finger, which broke off relations.

Last year I made friends with an old-looking squirrel who was kind of mottled, especially around the tail; he looked like he had caught wheat rust. Still he used to sit outside my window and we'd look at each other looking at each other. I couldn't feed him anything because we had re-painted the house and the window stuck. I'm a bit worried because I haven't seen him this year.

Not everybody likes squirrels. The Phantom — who plays in the Lady Godiva Memorial Band — doesn't. He plays a game with them. He sees squirrels every day on Philosopher's Walk, and crouches down on his haunches and makes those clicking noises people make when they call animals and don't know what sound to use. He holds our his hand as if he has a piece of sandwich in it, and when the squirrel gets right up close, the Phantom jumps up in the air and screams, which scares the poor squirrel all to hell. Still it is kind of funny to see the Phantom do it. He says he does it because one day a squirrel scampered up his leg and grabbed his lunch-bag. It is probably not true.

I don't know if black squirrels, which are my favorite (along with grey squirrels) are dying off like Dutch elms, but I'm afraid that they are. During the summer when I took tourists around the University, a lot of people, who couldn't care less about St. Michael's College or its history got very excited about the squirrels. Evidently, in the States they only have brown ones; some people from very far away have never seen a squirrel at all. It is very hard to explain one to someone like that — "well they are sort of like rabbits but they climb trees." One little girl said they looked like little wild dogs, which is as close, I suppose, as you can get.

The only other thing I can think of about squirrels is not very happy. I saw one get killed dashing across St. George St. just north of the Varsity office. A Pontiac got him. It looked like it nicked his tail (I saw a little piece of fur fly), but when I got there he was quite dead. There was no blood or anything, but when I nudged him with my foot, he didn't move.

In a way it's just as well, because I don't know what I would have done with a half-dead squirrel. I stood there in the middle of the road so the next few cars wouldn't hit him or to see if maybe he would revive from shock, and scamper off minus a few inches of tail. He just lay there with his paws curled up. A couple of cars honked at me so I left cursing all the Pontiacs that drive at reasonable speeds over all the idiot squirrels who don't know enough to hibernate in the winter when the roads are slippery and they can't get much traction.

I really felt bad for the rest of the night.

Letters

Dear Sir:

I wonder how many others are being robbed by this University? I have given a year's fees and half a year of my life to get an efficient education with an arrogant disdain for students' time and 7-year General Science a slipshod thing administered with an arrogant disdain for students' time and intelligence. In the days just before and just after the Christmas holidays, days when the University was officially in session and lecturers had been paid to work, a total of seven hours of lectures and labs were cancelled, usually without notice, probably wasting a thousand hours of student time in days uselessly broken up for a class of 80 or more.

My experience in this my only year in a general course at Toronto would make it my real duty to caution people against expecting an education that could not be easier and more productively got by staying home with a book. The laboratory classes, which one would think an essential part of an education in science, have been so badly prepared by the teachers that on the whole they have hindered and misled more than they have helped. More frustrating hours than I care to dwell on have been wasted in genetics and botany labs as students wait for equipment or suppliers or while demonstrators discuss the experimental method to be followed. Whole days have been lost due to defective reagents or faulty equipment which staff had not bothered to check beforehand.

The third year in General Science is a real deception; the degree is awarded to those who, having committed so much time and money, have the patience to wait it out.

Attached is a list of recent specifics. Don't feel obliged to print it; the caput might find such realism obscene.

Please do not print my name. I need that degree, or think I do, and must suffer the fools sadly.

December 18: A literature lecture period was to be devoted to the term test. The lecturer arrived twenty minutes late with the test. We couldn't stay overtime because we had to go from St. Mike's to Ramsey Wright for a Zoology lecture which after all Dr. Butler did not give. He went to England, no doubt at a moment's notice.

January 3: Biology; This alternates between Genetics and cytology. This day neither professor knew which it was to be and a class of 40 walked from the Botany Building to Ramsey Wright and back to the Botany Building until an hour late, cytology was decided upon, to the evident disappointment of Dr. Sarkar of cytology.

January 4: Botany lab. Cancelled despite the University's officially open because the other half of the class had a similar lab cancelled before Christmas despite the University being open for business that day too.

January 5: Zoology. Dr. Butler still away. No notice.

January 8: Zoology. Dr. Butler still away.

January 12: Zoology. Dr. Butler scheduled to lecture. WILL HE COME?

snow joke

BY SHERRY BRYDSON

The paper is late today because we, like everybody else in Toronto, were snowbound. After being set back an hour and a half by the power failure, we practically had to push the car to the press, at Dufferin and the 401.

While waiting for the power to come on again, Varsity staffers joined other university types lured out into the cold by the beauty of the snow and ice.

Good-natured policemen joined in the snowballing and general horseplay as they waited for hydro crews to fix the power line.

Two groups of laughing men joined forces at the corner of Harbord and St. George to snowball Whitney Hall. When two girls leaned out a side window and yelled "Snow balls are better than no balls," the battle was on.

"This means war!" cried the mob as they pelted the third-floor window with snowballs. From the vicinity of Sir Daniel Wilson came the sound of cheers as a force of engineers broke through a snow wall constructed earlier by enthusiastic Sir Dan residents in their archway.

All over the center campus there was the sound of branches groaning and straining under the load of snow and ice. A bright flash lit up the UC playing field as a falling branch broke an electrical wire.

"Where are you from?" demanded the leader of one group. "The Varsity—we're looking for our photog," came the reply.

"Burn the Varsity!" shouted the leader, and the group raced over to St. George to pelt the Varsity windows with snowballs.

A head poked out of the uppermost window of a women's residence. "Animals!" she shouted. "I'm going to call the police!"

No New money for inundated washroom

The New College Students Council has passed a motion refusing to pay for $300 damage done to a men's washroom during a dance in December.

Pipes were pulled out of the urinals in the washroom and amid the water that covered the floor, a note was found sending "Greetings from the University of Western Ontario."

"The student body as a whole is not to be held collectively responsible for the malicious deeds of a few unknown persons," said council Secretary Don Kendal (III New).

Queen's Park view

The faculty of medicine is presently undergoing a metamorphosis involving major changes to its curriculum, its staff-student relationships and even its physical features.

Stimulated by the catalyst provided by the construction of the new multi-million dollar medical complex, the medical staff and students have been vigorously aroused from their traditional lassitude and are taking active parts in the transformation.

The change involves a major overhaul taking place at both the student and faculty level. While the staff are interested in the medical curriculum, the students' primary concern is for a voice in the faculty administration. But these interests, while independently initiated, have merged and become interrelated.

Meds faculty in curriculum experiment

At the faculty level, the members of the medical staff are presently involved in an unprecedented and unparalleled experiment. In the projected stages of a proposed curriculum they plan to do away with departmental teaching and to take a systems approach in the presentation of course material. The anatomy, physiology, biochemistry and pathology of a particular anatomical system — say the gastro-intestinal tract, or perhaps the reproductive system — are to be studied together. In this way a student will be able to easily correlate all these subjects, see their relative weights, and appreciate their interaction within the given system.

"This approach is much more logical," says Dr. J. W. Steiner, Associate Dean, and Director of Student Affairs in the Faculty of Medicine, "because the human body is made up of systems, not departments."

At present, the medical faculty is teaching its students on a subject and department basis. There are a series of departments which are charged with, among other things, the responsibility of presenting a number of courses, such as anatomy or biochemistry or histology, to the students. This system is particularly difficult for the students because it forces them to assimilate a large amount of information which is not correlated until they reach their clinical years.

The new four-year medical program is to be divided into three periods, the first dealing with the basic sciences and extending over a year and a half. The second period will be clinical in nature and will extend over another 18 months. The final one-year period — to be called the clerkship — will be similar to an internship.

The two-year pre-medical course now in existence will be retained with little change.

The systems method is not entirely untried; Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio, has been using the plan for a number of years on a limited basis. Nowhere, however, has it yet been attempted on as large a scale as here at U.of T. This factor alone makes the experiment unique.

The classic, orthodox method of presenting a medical curriculum has been in use at Toronto for almost 80 years, and with it the medical school has been graduating doctors at the rate of about 150 per annum in recent years.

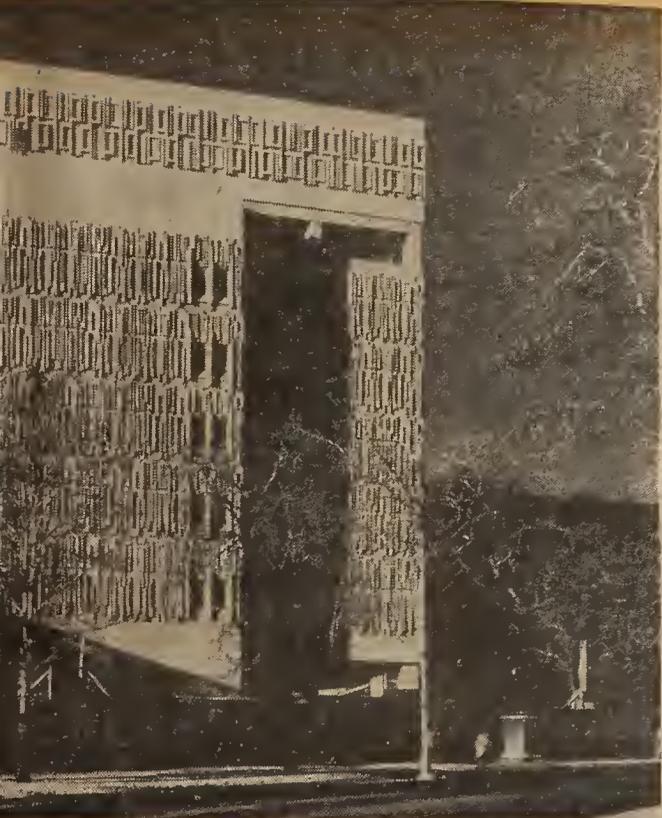

This number, however, has become insufficient. In order to meet the ever-increasing demand for more doctors, the Ontario Government, in 1964, offered the medical school substantial financial aid to raise its output of medical graduates to 250 per year. The new medical complex is a direct result of this step. With the capacity to handle over 1,000 medical undergraduates, as well as the School of Physical and Occupational Therapy, and the many honour science students taking biochemistry, anatomy or physiology, it will be the largest medical instruction building in North America.

Faced with the challenge of this large increase in enrolment, as well as with a spanking new building, the medical faculty began and has almost completed the two-year study which sparked the institution of a systems curriculum.

Students involved in planning

At the very onset of this study, a number of premises and objectives were drawn up as general guide-lines to the project. Included as a specific objective was the faculty's desire to "involve students in the planning, conduct and evaluation of the curriculum." This point, laid out more than two years ago, has reached timely fruition in the light of present developments in general staff-student relationships.

With this objective in mind, the faculty invited six students to sit on three key planning committees, the "period" committees. Each of these committees is concerned with the material content and presentation in each period of the new curriculum. Associated with each period committee are approximately 40 peripheral course committees which deal with the minute details of each proposed course.

The period committees, then, are of prime importance since each is responsible for co-ordinating and analyzing this detailed data and for arriving at a definite course and examination timetable for its particular period. Thus the students viewpoint is finding expression at a comparatively high level in the hierarchy. With only one higher committee, that which co-ordinates the efforts of the period committees, there is little chance that the students' objections and suggestions will become submerged or lost in the shuffle. Hence, the medical students have been given a chance to make a positive contribution to the shaping of their own course.

There will be no net change, though, in the course content of the new curriculum; a graduate of the new system will have taken exactly the same material as one from the old. But the material will have been presented in a drastically new way to enable a student to more easily identify and understand his courses. Dr. Steiner feels that this approach will ease the burden of sheer memory work because the student will be able to see where his work is leading him.

The new activity does not involve just course structure, however; at the student level, the medical undergraduates have become interested in obtaining a greater voice in the administrative affairs of the faculty itself.

This also represents a change. Until recently, the Medical Society was primarily concerned with certain social and athletic activities. The only official line of communication between the faculty and the Medical Society lay in a staff-student committee whose function had degenerated to organizing the annual smoker.

This state of affairs was first brought under sharp criticism during the student elections for the Medical Society last March. The new views at that time were well expressed by Peter Newman (IV Mds). "We feel," he said, "that we can make a worthwhile contribution representing a point of view which the faculty members themselves may have once held as undergraduates and have now forgotten.

"We do not want to impose our views on the faculty, for the representation and vote we seek will hardly be enough to influence any except the most closely contested of issues. We want only to be heard, to have our points considered, and then accepted or rejected in the face of other evidence. We want an active voice in the faculty."

The student activists, however, soon discovered that there was a great gap between demanding recognition and achieving it. Of the many problems which they have had to face, one of the most discouraging has been the apathy they found among their fellow students.

"A lot of this was simply due to inertia," said Peter Newman. "Moreover, the course itself is partly to blame, for it is both difficult and highly competitive — much more so than most of the other courses at the university."

Aronld Schoichet (III Meds) feels that there are signs that many more students are becoming involved. As an example he pointed out that some 200 members of the student body, representing all medical years, attended a staff-student conference held in September at Scarborough College to discuss the question of student power and involvement.

In any case, the activists have made substantial gains towards attaining the role they seek. Under the leadership of Shelly Wagner (IV Meds), president of the Medical Society, they arranged a great many discussions and presentations to the faculty. The September staff-student conference was one manifestation of this activity. As a result, an ad hoc committee including both staff and student members was set up by Dr. A. L. Chute, Dean of the Faculty of Medicine.

This committee studied and eventually accepted almost all of the student demands. Accordingly, a permanent Student-Affairs Committee was established comprising 10 voting members—five each from the staff and student bodies (but not members of the Medical Society)—and with the dean of the Faculty of Medicine and the president of the Medical Society as ex officio members. The chairman of this committee is Dr. Steiner, Director of Student Affairs.

The committee deals with student grievances, admissions, admission policies, and the awarding of prizes and scholarships. It reports directly to the Medical Faculty Council and has the power to make recommendations on which the Faculty Council may vote. The student opinions expressed in this committee are thus assured of being heard.

There is but one final hurdle which the activists must overcome: they must earn the respect of the faculty members. Dr. Steiner points out that while the students have succeeded in gaining an opportunity to express themselves, there is no guarantee that anyone will listen to their suggestions.

Whether or not this last barrier can be surmounted, only time will tell.

OCE 'Milkwood' filled with stereotypes

By DAVID PAPE

If your taste for sonorous abstractions and sentimental stereotypes has not waned, then Under Milkwood by the Ontario College of Education will be enjoyable fare.

Under Milkwood is a play for voices. This means that twelve enthusiastic young persons in a semicircle on a stage speak at different times the lines that might well have been written for one voice, or for a record by Thomas himself, or perhaps best of all for radio. As it is these twelve all take some few parts and develop from them the slim and surface characterizations that the text allows.

Dylan Thomas is always hard to perform. There is little variety or dramatic development, little room for staging interest. To make things more difficult, the theatre in the Teachers' College provides no chance for highlighting performances by isolating speakers or contrasting actions with spotlighting. Often I found myself looking around wondering where a voice was coming from.

Restricted twice over then, there is little hope in performing a play that is really a story for many voices, or then again is less a story than a description of the eccentrics in the town of Llaureggub.

Under the wash of words I watched the first twenty minutes wondering about the young teachers before me. I imagined their poise in front of a class, and speculated about how much they would carry their dramatic interest into their lessons; in a word I couldn't pay much attention.

Then the pieces began to fit together. One could straighten out the different roles and enjoy the various vaudeville one-liners. Mr. Pugh, whose Walter Mitty mania was to poison his wife, was the most entertaining of the eccentrics.

If it pleases you to hear a woman described as being like a "puff bosomed robin" or having "barnacle bosoms"; and if the coyness doesn't bother you when the local prostitute who has dozens of children but loves a dead midget best of all moralizes: "Isn't life terrible —thank God!" then Under Milkwood is worth your seeing.

Director Alan Blevis has encouraged a number of good performances from his cast, and fitted them aptly to their roles. Brian Smith, the narrator, reads quite clearly although at times he is seduced by the text into enjoying his own voice. Jerome Bergent has both good voice and good humour, and an innate sense of mime. His sneer would have been great in silents! Sheila MacDonald has to be the sexiest femme fatale to come from the College of Education. When she purred "Call me Delores, like in the stories" every male in the auditorium was ready to take her to the Casbah.

ITI fate not definite

A Statement that this year's International Teach-In will not be held is pure rumor—at least for the time being.

A story last week in the Strand, the Victoria College student newspaper reported Lee Axon (III Vic), coordinator of the proposed Vic - St. Mike's Arts Festival, as saying that there will be no Teach-In this fall.

But Jeff Rose (IV UC), co-chairman of last year's Teach-In, Religion and International Affairs, says the matter hasn't even been discussed yet.

The future of the 1968 Teach-In will not even be considered until the next meeting of the International Forum Foundation later this year' he said.

Rose added that he has no idea of student feeling on the Teach-In although student ticket sales for last fall's symposium were very good.

Miss Axon, who made the original statement, says she heard it from a staff member at Vic, who told her "everyone was jaded by the last Teach-In."

Festival features Letourneau, Brunet

of Letourneau who is one of the many regular singers.

(Le Patriot is an east-end cafe where young Montrealers swap separatist and anti-English jokes while swilling down bubbly cider or anything else they desire.)

Unlike Letourneau, who writes and sings his own songs, Lise Masse is known for her interpretations of well-known songs. She is a native of Hull and has a radio program.

The evening of plays offers the chance of a unique experience to the theatre-goer.

Jean Herbiet, author of one of the plays, Terre des Hommes, and director of the troupe, will give a commentary on modern French-Canadian theatre before the performance. He will use the plays to be performed to illustrate what he has to say.

Festival organizers are trying to arrange an informal discussion after the performance between players and audience.

The group, who call themselves La Comedie des Deux Rives are an amateur group from the University of Ottawa. Most of the actors are students and they are used to playing for audiences with limited knowledge of the French language (a point much in their favor on this campus).

Last April they made a trip to Nancy, France to give a performance of Terre des Hommes in competition.

A French critic praised its originality, comparing it to the work of such modern authors as Samuel Beckett.

The other play, En Regardent Tomber les Murs, has been described by a reviewer in a French magazine in these terms: Two characters contemplate a future world where men will be de-humanized and will have lost the ability to understand the meaning of human life.

Michel Brunet, Thursday night speaker who will lead the festival, will need no introduction to the student of Canadian history.

Until recently, Prof. Brunet was the chairman of the department of history at the University of Montreal and can be described as the most eminent nationalist historian in Quebec today.

One of his foremost beliefs is that Ottawa must be recognized as the national capital of English Canada, Quebec of French Canada.

He has also written that the cause of the French-Canadians outside Quebec is lost because outside of the Quebec homeland they are doomed to assimilation.

The final evening of the festival, Jacques Godbout, producer for the National Film board poet, and novelist will lead a discussion on "The Role of the Artist in Society."

One of his three novels, Knife on the Table in its English title, will be the focus of a CBL interview Tuesday night at 9:40. The interviewer will be B. Shek of the UC Dept. of French.

Tickets for the plays and chansonniers will be on sale for the rest of the week at all times and at other campus locations in lunch hours.

Pierre Letourneau, and who was it that said Canadian men are sexless?

Marauding bands attack residences

A snowball attack on Sir Daniel Wilson residence by 50 raiders from the professional faculties was marred by blood on the snow and broken windows last night.

Someone, probably from inside Wallace House, a part of the residence, fired an air-rifle pellet through an engineer's check. The victim later removed the pellet from his mouth.

Windows were broken at Hutton House and other places in the residence. At Whitney Hall the remainder of the forces from engineering, dentistry, pharmacy, forestry and a few renegade artsmen combined to break three more windows.

The marauding band kept the UC residences, Varsity office and the St. George fraternities under a state of siege much of the night, but the total breakage was minor compared to a similar adventure last year. That cost several hundred dollars in windows.

Is there a place for idealists in business?

IBM thinks so.

If you're concerned about doing something to advance the cause of humanity, you have something in common with IBM.

Don't misunderstand us. IBM isn't an international charitable foundation. It just so happens that the nature of our business allows us to make meaningful contributions to mankind. Example: IBM and the Canadian Government recently undertook a project named "Canada Land Inventory".

The results of this joint project, designed to determine the maximum utilization of land area, may go a long way towards solving the problem of world starvation. That's the kind of work the idealists at IBM undertake.

Does your definition of an idealist coincide with that of IBM? If so, talk to your Placement Officer—make it a point to see the IBM representative on campus. Ask a lot of questions. Or, write to:

UWO to discuss Macpherson

LONDON, Ont. (Special) — The Macpherson report on undergraduate instruction will be reviewed by the students council at the University of Western Ontario this week.

Council President Tom Dean has selected 26 recommendations of the 98 made in the Macpherson report for adoption at the council meeting.

If adopted, they will become part of council policy on undergraduate instruction and copies of the recommendations will be sent to each member of the senate.

Dean said he considers the recommendations he selected to be the ones most applicable to the situation at Western.

"I think its going to be the report of the year," he said. "Its pretty good as a whole. It makes students think."

The students who would not stand to benefit from the changes recommended are those who are just at university for a degree, he added.

Dean said that some recommendations made in the report were also made by council members in senate subcommittees last year. Two of these called for reorganization of the faculty of arts and science calendar and for a new type of science course.

Both recommendations were turned down at the time.

Varsity dunks Guelph 81-23

By DAVE POWELL

The Varsity swimming team opened its regular season with a convincing victory over highly rated University of Guelph Friday night. Blues won all but one event as they amassed 81 points to the Redmen's 23.

Toronto was led by its veteran contingent, as expected. Captain Robin Campbell won the 500 and 200 yard freestyle events, versatile Gaye Stratton took the 200 yard backstroke and individual medley, Alan Pyle nipped Chris Fisher in the 50 free, and placed second to Theo van Ryn in the 100 free, and Steve Gerring finished second in the 500 and 1000 yard freestyle events.

However, the outstanding features of the meet were the excellent times posted by all of the Blues swimmers this early in the season, and most important the performances of some of the newcomers to the squad who must fill the gap left by the loss of several of Varsity's stars through graduation.

Terry Bryon was most impressive in winning the grueling 1000 yard freestyle, and then coming within inches of upsetting Guelph star, Mike Lackowitz, in the 200 yard butterfly. Bryon's time in the butterfly was a personal best, and also close to the winning time in this event at the OAAA championships last spring.

Maurice Vaillancourt came up with his best time in winning the 200 breaststroke, and George Goldsmith placed a close second.

Dick Lake showed fine style with a victory in diving, and Don Carr came second in the 200 yard backstroke.

In exhibition races, Paul

Fisher won the 100 yard breaststroke, and Doug MacIntosh posted good times in the 200 and 500 yard freestyle.

Blues won both relays as Stratton, Goldsmith, Bob Heatley, and van Ryn combined in the 400 yard medley and a team of Chris Fisher, Byron, Heatley, and van Ryn came from behind to beat an exhibition squad of MacIntosh, Pyle, Campbell, and Stratton, by a fraction of a second in the 400 freestyle.

Stubborn Gryphons nearly pull upset

By PHIL BINGLEY

A new name, new sweaters, a new coach, a new look. Anyone who witnessed Varsity Blues Friday night at Varsity Arena will probably agree with this description of this year's University of Guelph Gryphons. Redmen were painted black after last season). Although sporting an unimpressive one win and four losses record going into the game, Gryphons played inspired hockey and provided Varsity fans with the most exciting action of the year before succumbing 7-3 to the first-place Blues.

The match, originally billed as a tune-up for Varsity's trip to Austria turned out as what may have been a tune-up for Gryphons' rise from the league cellar.

Quoth Blues' coach Tom Watt, "They're better than several of the teams we have played this season." Queen's, McGill and Laval would certainly fit into this category.

The game itself was a close one for two periods. Guelph was not content to sit back and play strictly defensive hockey. They pressed Blues when they had the opportunity, and if they lost the puck in Varsity's offensive zone, they hustled back to defend their own goal. The result was exciting, wide-open hockey, even though the third period when Blues' stamina enabled them to outscore the dead-tired Guelph team 4-1.

Ward Passi, John Gordon, Paul Laurent, Gord Cunningham and Brian St. John were strong in Blues' attack. Passi and St. John each had two goals while Laurent, Cunningham and Gordon set the pace when they were on the ice.

Peter Speyer, his soupyshuffler in top form, provided "oohs" and "aahs" among the crowd of about 4500 with his scintillating end to end rushes. On one occasion he took the puck behind his own net, dashed past three Gryphons, and beat netminder Jim Horton with a screened backhand shot that never left the ice.

Murray Stroud moved into a tie for 1st place in the league scoring race with linemate Boh McClelland. Stroud had a goal and one assist, McClelland has an assist, while the third member of the line, Brian Jones, continued his hot shooting with a single goal. "Joner" now has seven goals in Blues' last three league games.

For Gryphons, goaltender Jim Horton was Johnny on-the-spot throughout the contest. He held the visitors in contention for most of the 60 minutes and had little chance on the goals that beat him.

Doug Weaver, Barry Poag and Mike Cummins had Guelph goals. Mike Doersam turned in a fine effort in his dual role as a defenceman and centre.

Around The Net Blues outshot Gryphons 53-20 ... Three stars were Ward Passi, Jim Horton and Gordon ... The crowd for the last home game in three weeks was the largest of the season.

HELP, DAMMIT, HELP!!

The Varsity Sports Editor is in severe danger of committing serious injury if present conditions in the sports office continue. This is the eighth successive issue which has failed to include an original picture. Photographers wishing to take sports pictures are few and far between, and even those that do promise regularly fail to show up. We need photos even more than the Arabs need an army.

And that ain't all. We are also extremely hard-pressed for sports writers. Our staff is now down to two which is hardly sufficient. People have resigned, people have emigrated to California and people have been lazy, leaving us in a logical cleftstick from which there is but one way out. NEW PEOPLE!

For God's sake (ours), if you have the slightest interest in Varsity sports, whether as a scribe or photog, please come to help big meeting Monday afternoon at 1:15 in our humble office on the second floor at 91 St. George. Those who signed up in the first term: we still love you but have misplaced your phone numbers, names, etc (oh to have a secretary now that chaos is here!), so come again, please.

MONDAY AFTERNOON, 1:15 P.M., VARSITY SPORT OFFICE. We're in a bad way.

Fired-up Mustangs catch Blues dozing

BY JIM MORRISON

Desire mixed with a liberal dose of muscle proved the key to Western success Saturday night, as Mustangs took a 91-87 thriller from Varsity Blues before a capacity Hart House Throng Smarting from their home court loss to Blues late in December, Mustangs played inspired ball, especially in the second half of the game, and fully deserved the win.

Muscle gave Western the edge at the crucial pivot spot as Bob Larose, consistently outplayed Blues' center John Hadden. Lanky John had, by any definition, a poor game, and was not only outbounded, but outscored 21-8 by his aggressive opponent.

The first half of the game featured superlative performances by Western's Doug Morton and Larose, and by Blues' Bruce Dempster and Mark White. Morton, who always shows well in Hart House, poured in 18 points from the side, and Larose tossed in 12. However, White was simply incredible against the tight Mustang defense, driving in to score and hitting from outside for 16 points. And Dempster was almost as impressive with his long outside shooting, which netted him 12 points. The count at the half was 43-42 for Western.

The first few minutes of the second half saw the teams exchange the lead continually. As Doug Morton's point production slackened, Mustang guards Greg Poole and Mac Bury took over to spark the attack. For Varsity, Arvo Neidre and Ron Voake improved on first half performances, and scored enough points to keep Blues in contention. With twelve minutes left, the teams were deadlocked 62-62.

But the story, as the cliché runs, was Western's ability to make the big play.

Their press started giving Varsity trouble, and with eight minutes remaining, Mustangs were up 78-68. Every time Blues made a move to narrow the gap, Mustangs capitalised on a Varsity error and scored.

And yet for three minutes in the closing stages of the joust, Blues held their opponents off the scoreboard as they whittled at Western's lead. Great defensive work by Voake, Dempster, Neidre Mike Kirby & Mark Slater and key baskets by Neidre and Dempster shortened Mustangs' lead to 83-80.

The turning point came with just 1:35 left in the game. Blues were behind only 85-83 as they kept play in Western's end. But shot after shot missed the hoop. Finally, Western regained control of the ball, and again made the crucial play surging ahead to stay on baskets by Bury and Larose.

Doug Morton led all scorers with 26 points, followed by Blues' Bruce Dempster with 24 and Mark White with 22. Bob Larose ended the game with 21 points.

It was a game for the second guessers. Many fans were upset that Mark White sat out much of the second half, in favour of Albie Garbe, only reappearing in the last two minutes of the game. But, said Coach McManus, "I had to take him out. He was completely exhausted, and couldn't have played any longer."

After playing so magnificently on the road, it was ironic that Varsity had to lose on home ground.

SCORING

for Western:
Bury 15, Poole 15, Adams 8, Larose 21, Morton 26, Zonin 6.

for Varsity:
White 22, Dempster 24, Voake 14, Neidre 11, Hodden 8, Gorbe 2, Kirby 4, Slater 2.

Second stringers out-wrestle Waterloo

A line-up packed with second-stringers was still more than enough for Waterloo wrestlers on Saturday as they dropped a 24-14 decision to Varsity at Hart House. It was the second straight win for Toronto over the groggy grapplers from Waterloo.

Steve Casselman (123 lb.) won his match by forfeit, but wrestled in an exhibition and won. Blues' Norm Wheeler (130 lb.) whopped his opponent 8-1 for an impressive intercollegiate debut. Bob Kellerman (137 lb.) continued his fine comeback for Toronto as he won with a pin at 3:26. Riek Kester (145 lb.) took his opponent a bit too much for granted and couldn't quite manage a comeback as he dropped a 5-4 decision. Rod Vinter (152 lb.) blanked his adversary 6-0 for a solid win while Larry Bobbett (150 lb.) took a tight 8-7 match for his first intercollegiate victory. Bill Allison (167 lb.) won with a pin at 6:08. Riek Riley (177 lb.) lost 13-7 and Clive Doucet (191 lb.) was pinned by a clever opponent. Both were tasting intercollegiate competition for the first time. Footballer Alex Squires lost 6-4 as a heavyweight hut redeemed himself with a brilliant victory in an exhibition bout.

The business interests of the Board of Governors

By MYRNA WOOD

The Board of Governors is a group responsible for investing and managing the tax and endowment money which finances this university. Consequently, it is composed of persons concerned, not with education, but with finance and corporate power.

Besides keeping the University of Toronto solvent, members of the Board are interested in seeing to it that the university produces research useful to business and that it produces trained technician graduates who will then benefit business with their progressive knowledge and techniques. To this end, many departments and graduate students receive grants from corporations for specific research jobs.

The 27 board members represent 67 major international corporations: one is Dutch-controlled, 15 British, 31 American and 20 Canadian (It is often difficult to tell whether the foreign directors on some of these Canadian companies represent a controlling amount of capital.)

Among the companies coming to recruit here this week, many are, of course, American or American-controlled, and many make war products. But it is their actions and influence in Canada that we should look at.

One example is the Honeywell corporation. Governor Neil J. McKinnon is a director of Honeywell Controls Ltd. (Canada). The head plant in Minnesota receives defence contracts from the U.S. government. In 1959 it set up a Canadian branch as a military division to make ordinance products and inertial navigation and missile equipment. In 1962, Canadian Honeywell appointed a "production sharing coordinator" whose job is to assess what components the head Minnesota plant will need that the Canadian plant is not equipped to make, and then sell sub-contracts to other Canadian companies.

Through this Honeywell service, Canadian Car (owned by Hawker-Siddeley and manufacturer of TTC subway cars) received a contract for trailers to carry ground-testing equipment. Northern Electric (Bell Telephone subsidiary) received a sub-contract for silicon transistors to be included in products made for the U.S. war contract to Honeywell.

Mr. McKinnon is a director of three other American companies that are part of the war production chain — Allied Chemical, Ford and Crown Zellerbach International. As a director of these four companies, we can assume that his interest is in seeing them prosper through contracts and through recruiting fresh, imaginative technicians at U of T.

British-owned Hawker - Siddeley is also recruiting here. Its jet engine plant, Orinda (40 per cent owned by United Aircraft) moved to Chicago after the loss of the Avro Arrow contract, to take advantage of sub-contracts for components of jet engines for the war. Its other subsidiary, de Havilland, has made Caribous, Otters and other planes for Vietnam.

From 1963 to 1967, U of T Chancellor O. M. Solandt was vice-president for research and planning at de Havilland. Mr. Solandt was director-general and chairman of the Defense Research Board for 10 years, 1946 to 1956.

Another director of Hawker is Sir Thomas Sopwith, who goes back a long way, right back to the "Camel" that fought the Red Baron.

One of the largest consortiums represented on the Board of Governors is the Argus Corp., a vast accumulation of capital, finance institutions and major industries. Eleven of the governors are either directors of companies within the Argus conglomerate, or of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, its major bank. They are Henry Borden (chairman of a British company which owns Rio Algom Mines, part of Argus), J. C. Brent, Robert F. Chisholm, George A. Drew, Leslie Frost, Harding, Sydney Hermant, Mara, A. B. Matthews (vice-president of Argus), Wallace McCutcheon (vice-president of Argus until 1962), N. J. McKinnon (chairman of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce).

One of its companies is Massey Ferguson, whose U.S. branch is rumored to have war contracts and is a top world producer of farm implements. In fact, Massey Ferguson South Africa Ltd. controls the farm implement business there, and is the largest manufacturer of animal-drawn farm implements in the world.

Brinco won a large contract to build the hydro-electric plant at Bay d'Espoir, Nfld. The chairman of Brinco, and also chairman of the U of T Board of Governors, Henry Borden, was in a good position to gain that contract, having assessed Canada's energy requirements as chairman of the 1957-9 royal commission on energy.

An offer by the Bay d'Espoir energy plant of a fixed-price, 25-year contract, induced Electric Reduction Co. to place their new phosphorous plant there. A director and research expert of ERCO is none other than Chancellor Solandt. ERCO brings phosphate rock from Florida (they control Gulf Design Corp., Fla.) to Newfoundland to process, and also advertises itself in the U.S. as a supplier of phosphorus for defense purposes.

However, ERCO has also had its difficulties. It was investigated under the Combines Investigation Act in 1966 for having bought out its only Canadian competitor, and has recently paid out $170,720 to farmers in the Dunnville, Ont., area for destroying cattle and crops with fluoride poisoning. It is now feared that the people of the area are contracting the incurable fluorosis disease.

Campus recruiting protest moves into Skule territory

By DAVE FRANK

A "peaceful and non-obstructive" demonstration on the sidewalk in front of the faculty of engineering's Galbraith Building is planned for tomorrow at one o'clock.

The demonstration will be followed by a Convocation Hall debate on the morality of campus recruitment by armament manufacturers.

The demonstration is sponsored by a group of six campus activists called the January 18 Co-ordinating Committee.

In a statement released last night the committee said the purpose of the demonstration is to protest "Canadian involvement in the war in Vietnam, the complicity of Canadian companies in that war, and to confront U of T students with the implications of working for these companies."

The January 18th Committee consists of Tom Faulkner (SGS), Marlie Ritchie (II Vic), Irv Weisdorf (III UC), Bill Johnston (SGS), and faculty members Chandler Davis and David Gauthier.

Faulkner said he hoped his support of the demonstration would result in a wider base of campus support for the protest.

"But I've had my worries about the nature of the demonstration," Faulkner added.

The plan of action was released only after a six hour closed debate between extremist and moderate anti-war demonstrators.

The moderates shied away from sponsoring a demonstration which could provoke violence. Originally it was planned to follow up the demonstration with a debate in the foyer of the Galbraith Building. This, it was feared, could be interpreted as a "massive invasion."

After taking a look at the proposed location Faulkner concluded it wouldn't be suitable for the "searching of consciences."

The debate is now set for Convocation Hall, Bill Charlton (II Law) and Prof. Kenneth McNaught have already consented to participate. It is expected that Dean J. M. Ham of the faculty of engineering will chair the debate. It is being co-sponsored by the Students Administrative Council and the Engineering Society.

Earlier last night Ernest Pearson (IV APSC), vice-president of the Engineering Society told The Varsity that a counter-demonstration was being planned.

"Many engineers will not tolerate any interference," he said, referring to the employment interviews that will take place Thursday.

"If an attempt is made to bar them, they'll fight."

There was no one else around, so she cuddled up to the warmest-looking thing near Sid Smith. He heaved a great sigh and puffs of smoke began to issue from his home-made pipe.

The winter happening...

By INGRID VABALIS

Torontonian winters may happen every year around here but nobody ever really believes them.

Nothing unusual happened Sunday and Monday when winter à la Toronto happened again. It's just that all the usual things came at once — rain, wind, ice, snow, flickering ice and falling trees.

CHUM carried reports from harried principals and deans announcing school closings. Thousands were calling, they said, about our university, but no one knew. Then, the word came:

"The president of the University of Toronto has officially announced that no decision has been taken on whether to close classes today."

Later, when Mr. Sword took his stand, the word spread rapidly. Madame Main Switchboard answered calls with, "Good Morning University of Toronto classes are cancelled."

Mass desertion at the multiversity. Simcoe Hall folded by noon. SAC followed suit. And the Bookstore locked its doors with a yellow "Closed due to inclement weather" sign by way of explanation.

The last Varsity was put out by candlelight, copy brought to press by dog sled.

It didn't show on Monday? Well... nobody else did either.

Centre campus at noon had a snowman but nobody else.

Sid Smith was snowbound, St. George didn't even have cars!

The only people outside were snapping pictures. No less than 10 camera addicts were sighted on the trail between Sid Smith and the library.

The others, ignoring invectives to stay away, were in the library. It was business as usual there. Sniffing and shivering and over half the 9:30 a.m. books were returned to the Wallace Room. No fines were levied that day, courtesy of snow power.

No mob scenes in Sid Smith during class changes... nobody anywhere... empty... the sun came out.

Walking around with icy snow-bent branches overhead, you keep wondering whether you'll be that nth person to get a creaking branch on the head.

And here's the news flash of the day... there's a drippy leak in Sidney Smith's roof — it's been happening for SIX years.

No more senate action on alleged Lance obscenity

WINDSOR (CUP) — The University of Windsor senate committee on student conduct decided Monday to take no further action against the co-editors of the campus newspaper, The Lance,

Co-editors John Lalor and Marian Johnstone resigned last week in anticipation of senate action against them for printing an allegedly obscene article called the Student as Nigger.

The decision followed receipt of a statement from a special committee of the students council saying it:

— reaffirmed its commitment to the code of ethics of Canadian University Press;

— remained committed "to publish the best paper possible in the best interests of the student body and the university community;

— recognized the freedom of the press;

— recognized the right of the board of publications to hire or dismiss editors and to formulate policy.

The senate committee said it agreed with the principles expressed in the statement and "although fully aware of its responsibilities" would take no further action "under the present circumstances."

the galbraith demonstration

Signs that appeared throughout the Engineering Buildings in recent days are almost a caricature of Engineers, so immature is their message. "U of T Engineers are MEN," they read. "Come to the Galbraith Building on Thurs., Jan. 18 Show your manliness by asserting your right to work for the employer of your choice!"

Some have said that not even an Engineer would write such signs — this must be an attempt by some radicals to precipitate violence when Thursday's demonstration invades the Engineers' turf. Violence is the one way to dramatize the whole war-complicity issue again, since the campus is tired of the issue and would disregard anything less.

Analyses such as these are nonsense, of course, but there has been such a split and so much bickering among the left groups on campus this past week over the recruiting issue that it's hard to see what anyone thinks any more.

Because of the differences between the radicals and the moderates who, in a tedious series of meetings that started last Friday, have come into alliance with the Ad Hoc Committee on Canadian Complicity, the campus is seeing two — not one, count 'em — two — demonstrations this week.

Thursday's is at the Galbraith Building, with a teach-in to follow in Convocation Hall, sponsored by the Ad Hoc Committee in alliance with student council people and faculty members. Tom Faulkner and Joe Merber, the philosophical ex-Engineer, pressed upon the organizational meetings the necessity to keep this demonstration moderate.

Their thinking is based upon the premise that there are many people on this campus who are sufficiently incensed by the progress of the war in Vietnam to come out to a moderate demonstration even if they had never touched the streets in protest before. Thus, SAC and the faculty anti-war committee's support is supposed to give this protest that legitimacy of responsible moderation.

They say that any very radical action against the university itself would alienate these potential converts.

Therefore, no one is going to make any mention of the U of T administration in Thursday's demonstration. That will be left to Friday's run by the more committed and radical people who say that the radicalness of the Dow sit-in is the only thing that caused the widespread campus interest.

Were the premises used by the moderates correct, the solution would be fine. However, Faulkner et al just may be overestimating the interest of the people they hope to attract and radicalise. That's all beside the heavy problems involved in radicalising people who have never made a thorough analysis of their society and their participation within it. Thinking the war is bad is one thing; carrying a sign on the street, quite another.

However, Faulkner and the others have successfully convinced many members of the Ad Hoc Committee that they are correct; that just by talking to these people — talking to the Engineers and attracting the others to the protest — they can arouse their conscience. The radical members of the Ad Hoc Committee say the Thursday demonstration will be a sell-out of principles.

They say that the whole issue of war material supplies must involve an analysis of all society and the university to see why Canada continues to supply materials to be used in Vietnam. Specifically on campus, the issue, they say, involves the administration and why it does nothing about on-campus

"The use of force, in any circumstances, results in either revolt or submission. Besides, for the majority to hold back from acts within its power or to allow events it would be able to prevent, but of respect for the minority, is not a product of weakness but a step forward in civilization."
—Report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, Book 1, p. xlvi.

push recruitment by companies that do supply war materials.

The issue then is really: how closely involved is the supposedly neutral university with the political demands of society and what is the role of the student within that university? Will the university be merely a factory to supply trained personnel to any and all companies that happen to come here and ask for them?

Obviously the issue does call for a deep analysis of that type but the solution the radical Ad Hoc members have come up with — a Mill-in, or some kind of demonstration right at Simcoe Hall — isn't the answer either.

It's a matter of tactics now. Public sympathy is not with them and without that sympathy what really can they achieve? Just look at one part of it: Acting-President John Sword, if he bothers to answer, will allude to the Placement Service Advisory Committee's meetings and say sour grapes. And he'll do so from a very strong, logical position. The anti-complicity people have put their faith in a committee and it has failed them. It couldn't agree on whether or not to ban complicit companies.

Now, the anti-complicity people are asking that the composition of the committee be changed. What will the uncommitted and already hostile say to that?

the goldfish

Campus fish lovers breathed a little easier yesterday with the news that the goldfish in the Massey College quadrangle pool are alive and well.

Some had expressed fears that the fish might have been frozen during the recent cold snap. However, the fish are happy, fed regularly through holes drilled in the ice that covers their cozy, heated pool.

It is indeed comforting to know that the same careful attention is paid to the goldfish as to the men of the college.

Women are still excluded, of course, and perhaps there is a lesson to be drawn from all this.

Letters

absurd criticism

Sir:

In response to a letter recently published in your letter column by a fellow resident of Michigan, I would like to say that it is the most cynical and grotesque of attitudes to accuse Canadian (and American) anti-war involvement of being "immature" — it is incredible to say that such involvement is actually a means of "ignoring life and its responsibilities." This commonplace means of discrediting social criticism by saying that such critics are neurotic trouble-makers should be recognized as absurd; to say that they are youthful is certainly irrelevant.

Your letter-writer states that if you are truly concerned with the loss of human life, you should go after the automobile and liquor; since "napalm contributes to the world's daily carnage . . . only a minuscule" it is foolish to have any moral scruples about using it. Since Oswald contributed less than a minuscule to the world's daily carnage, why so much emotion over his act? Apart from the outrageous sophistry of this position one should recognize in it precisely the same haughty indifference to human suffering that is behind the current war-fought to preserve "democracy," of course. The war is tragic also in that it contaminates ordinarily decent people. A fundamentally decent, though rather stupid, acquaintance of mine said to me recently, "If you had to clear a cave of soldiers you'd be very grateful for napalm!" Fantastic!

Your several editorials on this subject have seemed to me not only excellent, but admirable for their restraint. A tragic fact of human nature is that the most horrible of realities must be "created" by the mass media as horrible, before anyone will care much about it. People may be fundamentally decent but they are also fundamentally apathetic. I speak with no pride in myself, for it was some years before I was made to realize (by persistent American critics) that no end whatsoever, even if it were the Right One, can justify such means. Therefore there is no point in anger or in shouting at the deaf. In time they will come around . . . one hopes. Though we may, of course, run out of time.

sac irregularities

Sir:

This is the first time in my four years on this campus that I have been sufficiently enraged to write to The Varsity. Last week I witnessed one of the most flagrant displays of student irresponsibility ever associated with the University of Toronto. At approximately midnight at the general meeting of the Students Administrative Council, I asked for a quorum count of council members. The speaker ruled that 23 members would be considered a quorum. On counting, I found 21 members present — which several other council members, as well as onlookers, verified. However, the speaker, in a desperate attempt to complete the agenda, ruled that in fact 23 members were present, and hearing several affirming voices, ruled that he was indeed correct and that the meeting would proceed. On questioning the speaker's ruling I was told bluntly to have my head examined.

This question would not have concerned me so much, except that several very important motions were passed with this makeshift "quorum." Approximately six commission reports (supposedly the lifeblood of SAC) were passed, involving several thousand dollars worth of expenditures. Even more important, a new head for the Blue and White was appointed. As if the Blue and White doesn't have enough troubles, only 21 SAC members were worried about sticking around to see what is in store for the Blue and White for second term, and among these hardy 21, only two were interested enough to ask for concrete details.

Several diehard SAC members tell me that "raillroading" procedures are necessary if SAC is ever to get its work done. "If people aren't interested enough to stay, then why should they get the vote?" I am told.

It is in fact ironic that just previous to my unsuccessful quorum call and the speaker's "double vision" affiliation, the council refused the Edmund Burke Society $370 for a debate because it is "poor precedent to give money to cover honoraria." Maybe SAC should have looked at itself at the same time and reduced its own "honoraria" — i.e., the president's salary and the fantastic cost of the SAC bureaucracy. If a quorum cannot be fulfilled fortnightly for SAC meetings and if SAC members are not responsible enough to follow basic democratic principles such as respect for constitution and the rights of an individual, perhaps SAC should pack it in and go the way of SUPA and the whooping crane.

Should the B of G run U of T?

Based on her investigation of the corporation interests of the University of Toronto Board of Governors, Myrna Wood offers her comments on the role of the Board as supreme policy-making body of this university.

By MYRNA WOOD

The generation of students in the 60's has begun to question the value of the dehumanized society that produces a situation like Dunnville. We are beginning to look at the other side, the side of the people — the farmers in Dunnville, the subsistence wage earners of the Maritimes (or the unemployed where Hawker-Siddeley's DOSCO has pulled out), the Vietnamese who have fought for 25 years to have a country, the Latin Americans who produced, Che, and the millions of exploited Africans. Our generation does not agree with the acts of the generation of U of T Board Chairman Borden and Chancellor Solandt who personally helped develop the Western armed might, and then went on to bank-roll it into fantastic profits for themselves, and are now using it to consolidate their hold on those profits coming from the underdeveloped world. If we have this differing opinion on our role in the world society, if we believe that our society, the university, and the businesses we will work in, must be based on moral decisions for people rights of self-determination, then who should be running our university — they or us?

Can our university be a place where we can try to find answers to these vital questions of the world, when it is controlled by, for example, 3 directors-Borden, Bev. Matthews, and McKinnon of Brazilian Traction,

Henry Borden

Light and Power, the largest North American exploiter of Brazil; and one director (Davidson) of Anglo-American Corp., the British-American consortium which owns countless gold, diamond, coal and copper mines in Africa in which millions of black people have lived and died in sub-human degradation?

Governor Ian D. Davidson and Mr. Allan Graydon, law partner of Governor Flemming, are directors of Debold and Anglo-American Corp., subsidiaries of DeBeers Consolidated Mines. DeBeers is controlled by the Oppenheimer, DeRothschild, Engelhard group, that owns the Zambian and Rhodesian copper and coal industries.

Wallace McCutcheon

It is also linked with "The Argus Group which has practically the monopoly of the Rhodesian daily press" (O. Guitand, Les Rhodésies et le Nyassland. Paris, 1964; J. Ziegler, La Contre-Révolution en Afrique, Paris, 1963). It is also one of the major controllers of the Republic of South Africa's economy with its gold, diamond, and coal mines, and its investment finance institutions.

When Gov. Flemming was Chairman of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development in 1961 and 1962, did he use his influence for the development of African peasants and mine-slaves, or did he use his influence for his partner's imperialist company? Does Governor Davidson work for or against our desire for a future free Black Africa?

In conclusion it is clear that the content of our courses (indirectly controlled by the allocation of funds by the Board of Governors) and therefore the quality of our education, is being directed by men whose values are centred on corporate profit and power; whose values do not necessary include the liberating of mankind from poverty, ignorance, and war.

It is time for students and faculty by exercising their power, to loosen the hold of the Board of Governors on the University of Toronto.

Chancellor Solandt

Summer scholarships for the study of INTENSIVE CHINESE, JAPANESE, AND KOREAN

De Marbois scholarships of at least $500 will be awarded again for the study of intensive Chinese, Japanese, and Korean this summer at universities or colleges offering strong programs in these languages. Preference will be given to students planning graduate work in East Asian studies.

Prior work in an East Asian language is highly desirable but awards may be made to outstanding students who wish to begin intensive study of one of these languages this summer.

Letters describing the student's preparation for further work and proposing a program of study under a de Marbois award should reach the Secretary of the Faculty of Arts and Science by March 1st, 1968. Further information may be had from Mr. R. H. Macdonald, 15 Maple Avenue, Toronto 5 (923-4825) or Victoria College (928-3801).

Fewer awards will be made this year and in subsequent years, as emphasis is now concentrated on encouraging the development of Korean studies at universities with strong East Asian programs. Library collections, including rare works, have been acquired, and financial assistance is being given to support various projects, including the translation of important works and the like.

SUMMER SCHOLARSHIPS IN RUSSIAN

The Second Annual Russian Workshop will be held at the University of Toronto this summer, under the auspices of the Centre for Russian and East European Studies. Some grants will be available. For further information, write Professor H. G. Skilling, Director of the Centre, Room 5022, Smith Hall.

Will war suppliers recruit at Sir George?

MONTREAL (VNS) — The students of Sir George Williams University will vote in an open meeting tomorrow on whether war materials manufacturers should be allowed on campus.

The faculty of the 7,000-student, English-speaking university will meet Friday to discuss the same issue.

At that time the acting principal of the university, D. B. Clark, is expected to make a decision on the matter.

The recruiting issue came to a head Monday night when the students council voted to bar war materials advertising from its newspaper, The Georgian.

Council also voted to urge the university's administration to forbid companies with Vietnam supply contracts from conducting interviews on campus.

Student President Jeffrey Chipman, 22, a commerce student, resigned in protest against these resolutions. While he is opposed to the war in Vietnam, Chipman believes students should be able to choose employers freely.

The resolutions were prompted by the Committee to End the War in Vietnam and the Young Socialist Club.

Among the 25 companies that will no longer be permitted to advertise in The Georgian are Dow Chemical Ltd., Canadian Industries Ltd., Uniroyal Ltd., Canadair and Litton Industries Ltd.

Frank Brayton, 20, editor of The Georgian said last night that council's resolutions were "not a very good course of action."

He said the student advertising representatives of The Georgian who receive commission for their work are not bound to refuse advertising from war material manufacturers. While the ad reps solicit war material manufacturers' advertisements, The Georgian can't print them because of the student council motion, Brayton said.

Five Engineers receive Athlone fellowships

Five University of Toronto engineering students have been granted Athlone Fellowships by the British government.

John D. Beattie (IV APSC), Ronald Brenneman (IV APSC), Paul M. Johnston, a graduate engineer, D. W. L. Lang (IV APSC) and William W. Reid (IV APSC) received the awards.

The fellowships cover the cost of two years' post-graduate work in a firm or university in Britain as well as return fare to Britain and a living allowance of $2,000.

No council support for WLU inquiry

WATERLOO (Staff) — Plans for a show of student strength at Waterloo Lutheran University were set back yesterday when the students council announced it will not support today's court of inquiry into the dismissal of two WLU lecturers.

The inquiry was called by The Cord Weekly, campus newspaper at WLU, and earned council's support last Wednesday.

However council met Monday to reconsider its decision and decided that both the inquiry and a proposed boycott of classes were "not a responsible manifestation of student concern."

The inquiry was called after the university did not renew the three-year-old contract of political science professor Dr. George Haggart on grounds that articles he had written in The Cord showed he was "unhappy."

About the same time part-time psychology lecturer Gray Taylor was dismissed for "unprofessional" conduct.

The move to have the cases reconsidered is being led by a group of Haggart's students who claim that academic freedom has been violated.

The academic freedom and tenure committee of the Canadian Association of University Teachers is also to investigate.

Students council President Jim Griffiths told a general assembly at WLU yesterday that council reversed its stand on the inquiry and boycott because they might prejudice the CAUT investigation.

U of T gals meet UWO

By JOAN STEVENSON
 The Varsity women won half their weekend battles against the talented teams from Western.

The Intermediate Basketbells showed great spirit to topple Western 41-32. In the last quarter, Virginia Hurst (PHE III) potted 10 points to cool the 'Stangs spirit.

However, Western's superior senior team outlasted Varsity with a 57-21 pounding, Jan Speechy (PHE IV) was the only brilliant spark in a slack Varsity offense.

Weary ice Blues finally underway

The winter-wonderland whirlpool launched the past few days played havoc with more than Controllor Marg Campbell's electric blanket. It also put a serious crimp in Varsity Blues' chances in the Universiad hockey tournament at Innsbruck.

Scheduled to leave Monday night at 6:45 for Montreal and then to Zurich, Blues ran into more snags than Larry Kent trying to show High. What happened was this:

(1) With all flights from Toronto to Montreal cancelled, Blues left Varsity Arena at 3:00 p.m. Monday to catch a flight to Chicago where they could also board a Zurich-bound jet.

(2) They hung around the airport for a while as their flight kept being temporarily postponed. Finally at 7:00 they shut down the place and cancelled everything, leaving Blues holding the bags (as it were).

(3) Now the team could either Rapido to Montreal and hope the airport would not be snowed in, or catch an overnight train to New York for a Zurich flight. Democratically, they chose the latter.

(4) Rolling into Buffalo at 12:30 am, Blues were informed there were no sleepers available for their New York jaunt. Faced with sleeping in hard coach seats, the players were not amused, and a 2-hour lay-over did not noticeably increase merriment. However, at the stroke of departure an old, creaking conductor magically produced sufficient sleepers and Blues started to live happily ever after.

(5) Arriving in New York at 1:00 yesterday afternoon (six hours behind schedule), Blues got a dandy two-hour stay in a neat hotel before they were off to Kennedy International Airport for a 5:45 flight to Zurich.

(6) At last report Zurich was having trouble keeping its airport open and Austria was deluged with floods and avalanches (seriously), so further developments are anybody's guess.

(7) Word has been received, however, that the team's equipment, sent Saturday, has finally arrived at Innsbruck after incredible manoeuvring around the world.

This unfortunate one-day delay presents a serious problem to Blues who have been off skates since last Friday. Right now it looks like they'll have time for only a light workout on Thursday before Friday's big game with the Czechs. Blues could be awfully rusty and short-winded.

One consolation: team manager, Mike Killoran, reported that it was a "beautiful day in New York."

Before this horrible travel mess, hockey writer Phil Bingley, who is journeying with the team, compiled an introduction to the tournament. To read what Phil has to say, adjust your eyes four inches to the right.

By PHIL BINGLEY

In any team sport, the climax to a season invariably comes at the end of the schedule with first place and playoff championships at stake. However, in the case of this year's Varsity Blues, the situation is somewhat different, as their competitive high point is just about to begin with the SIHL schedule at the half-way mark.

For Blues, the World Student Games starting this Friday in Austria, are the raison d'etre as far as this 1967-68 season is concerned. Ever since winning the CIAU championship in Edmonton last March, the players, coach Tom Watt, manager Mike Killoran, trainer Howie Ringham and all the others associated with the team have been preparing for this world-wide intercollegiate tournament.

The big question in everybody's mind, of course, is how Varsity will stand up against the university hockey powers of the globe. One answer has been given by Blues' coach, Tom Watt when he offered, "We are going to be in for a lot of surprises — a lot of surprises."

If this is the best prediction the coach can make, far be it for a lowly member of the fourth estate to venture anything more than a calculated guess as to what will happen in Innsbruck and Feldkirch where Blues play their games.

Blues ultimate success will almost certainly depend on three factors — goaltending, their power play and their penalty killing. The best indication of this is the fact that the winningest team in international ice hockey, the Russian Nationals, have built their power on these three categories.

Goaltenders John Wrigley and Peter Adamson will have to be good to give Blues a fighting chance. But if the forwards cannot take advantage of opposition penalties, and the defencemen don't keep enemy shooters from scoring when Varsity is shorthanded, Blues will still be in trouble.

And rest assured Blues will get their fair share of penalties. The incompetence and inconsistency of European referees have been a constant source of frustration for all Canadian teams that have travelled overseas in recent years.

In all, no one person will be able to carry the rest of the team in this five-game series. It will have to be a total team output. Blues will not be able to hope for the Russians, Czechs, et al to make mistakes or to tire late in the game (often the case with SIHL opponents). Rather they will have to force the play constantly, minimize their own mistakes, and overcome the discouragement which will certainly come from the sloppy officiating.

COME

Come gather round sportswriters, please heed the call, and come to my meeting just down the hall. Well enough of Dylan, the Varsity sportsie meeting for new blood (esp. photographers and sportswriters) has been rescheduled to this afternoon at 1:15. If you're at all interested, please show at the sports office, second floor, 91 St. George. Ignore uncouth newsie, Paul Maerae, and stroll right in. Uncle Rod needs you!

Did you know that: both Arthur "Big Boy" Crudup, and Tampa Red are alive, although neither appears to have been affected to any great degree by the "folk boo."

Varsity cagers play host to lowly Guelph Gryphons

By JIM MORRISON

Two things in the Senior Intercollegiate Basketball League have always been taken for granted, despite seasonal changes: Windsor Lancers will win the League and Guelph Gryphons will finish last. If the first statement is in danger this year, the second is not.

As Garney Henley's Gryphons (Gryphons?) take to the Hart House floor tonight at 8:00, there appears little likelihood that the Guelph types will stage an upset or, in the process, improve on last year's 0-10 record.

Last year, Redmen were terrible — this year, they are better all-around, and have upped their point production considerably. But they have still lost by at least 20 points in all four games they have played.

Ty Burch, an all-star forward, and Guelph's only claim to respectability last year is no longer with the team. But Henley has come up with a more than adequate replacement in guard Leigh Hammond, who played ball last season at Idaho State University. Hammond has averaged close to 25 points a game thusfar, including a 34 point performance against Windsor Lancers.

Hammond's team-mates, however, are merely adequate. These include center Tom Drummelsmith, guard Dave Horton, and forward Dave Leslie, all with at least one year's experience, plus rookie Terry Valeriotte, the most prominent among a crop of high school graduates.

Varsity coach John McManus plans only one lineup change for tonight's game. Burly Brian Shaw, out for two weeks with a bad ankle, will replace Alan McNaughton. McManus hopes the rookie center will lend a little extra muscle to the Varsity attack.

Last year Blues annihilated Guelph 124-58 and 105-54. Although a Varsity win seems imminent tonight, the score should not be nearly as one-sided. And Redmen, are always entertaining while losing.

Judo team triumphs in U.S.

Varsity Blues' Judo Team, under the guidance of coach Mits Tanino, dominated an invitational tournament held in Buffalo over the week-end. They won the team competition, and showed quite well in individual duelling.

The five-man team representing U of T consisted of Chuck Kleuber (Captain), David Mackidd, Allan Sattin, Gaetan Godin, and Garry Modell. All members of the team, except Modell, were part of last year's OQAA championship squad.

In "A" division lightweight, Mackidd captured second place and Godin took third. Sattin won a bronze in "A" division heavyweight while a loss in his final match left Modell with a silver in "B" division.

As a team, Blues faced Buffalo in the first round and casually eliminated them 47-0. A second-round bye left Blues facing Rochester in the third and final round. The close match went into overtime until Mackidd locked up the title with a win over his opponent in the fourth overtime contest.

Trinity, led by Llewellyn and Dennison, tied Vic, 2-2. Sharpe and Jones scored for Vic.

Phil Lint picked up his second shut-out as Engineering shaded SMC, 1-0. Watts scored for Skule.

Led by goals by Stark and Perkins (I swear, Miss Morpetti, if we don't get that contract I'll go stark, raving Perkins) UC was able to tie Meds, 2-2. Baer and the rangy Moffatt (heroic epithet) scored for Meds.

New and Forestry fought to a 2-2 saw-off. Barbowski and the ever-shifty Swindle scored for Forestry. Storms and Ireland led the Gnus (a gnus is a small South African antelope related to the Iphigenia).

UC trundled Scarborough 4-1 on goals by Skelton, Perkins, G. Ross and Clelland; Hunt led the losers (if you think I'm going to type that out again, you're crazy).

Scar, edged Jr. Engineering 4-3. Hamlin, Howson, Corriveau (= "veal of a crow", a French-Canadian delicacy) and Black (= Corriveau) scored for the Stickmen. Deluce, Zabalotony (a frontal zabalotony makes you forget you're a Polack) and McCallum replied for Jr. Skule.

Vic blanked Innis, 2-0 on goals by Dennison and McClelland.

BASKETBALL

Now it can be told. Sr. Engineering, led by Swanton's 12 points, beat (yes I said beat) UC, 35-33. (stunned silence, voice: "What a noble mind is here 0'errhrown") Kaner had 13 for UC. Bristone's fine 21 point night carried Meds B past PHE B, 34-26. Sereda had 10 for PHE B.

Shoving, shouting Skulemen snowball sidewalk pickets

By ANNE BOODY and DAVE FRANK

The biggest anti-war protest the University of Toronto has ever seen erupted yesterday in front of the engineering faculty's Galbraith Building.

More than 1,000 engineers jeered, shoved and threw snowballs as 300 demonstrators filed up and down the sidewalk protesting the recruitment on campus by companies supplying the U.S. war effort in Vietnam. The demonstrators started gathering across the street at about 1 p.m. Meanwhile the engineers filled up the plaza on the other side of St. George, waiting for the protest to start.

"One! Two! Three!" they chanted, as they loosed a barrage of snowballs. "Kill Faulkner, kill them all!"

"Take your glasses off," warned one of the organizers. The demonstrators turned their backs and hid behind the red and white signs. Observers mingled with the engineers because it was safer.

At first Students Council President Tom Faulkner, one of the leaders of the protest, suggested they disperse unless police arrived. But most wanted to go ahead according to plan.

Faulkner and Dave Nitkin (III New), went over first. "We are in favor of the same thing as you — free discussion," said Nitkin. "Will you stand back and let us come across?"

As Nitkin and Faulkner pleaded with the engineers, the rest of the demonstrators raised their signs and started across the street.

The driver of a green Mustang suddenly found himself stopped in the middle of the slush, surrounded by marchers, signs, and icy snowballs.

The engineers let the long file of protesters onto the sidewalk, where they marched along trying to shield themselves from the crossfire of snowballs.

One co-ed, Judy Pocock (III Trin), was hit in the face with an icy snowball. One lens of her glasses was shattered.

She tore into the throng of engineers. "Why did you do it," she yelled. "I'm lucky I've got an eye left."

The initial flare of violence died down after ten minutes when several pickets were hurt. A self-appointed group of marshals from the engineers helped to hold back their shoving fellows from the sidewalk.

"Sidewalk, sidewalk, we want our sidewalk," they chanted, "Push them back across the street!"

Dean J. M. Ham of the faculty of engineering stood on a snowbank facing his students.

"Skulemen and gentlemen," he spoke through a megaphone, "I want to ask you to demonstrate your universal magnanimity. Step back and let them have their fun."

The demonstrators handed out leaflets challenging the engineers to "think carefully" before applying for a job.

In the foyer of the Galbraith Building schedules for interviews with more than 100 companies had been posted. The demonstrators' leaflet says 11 of these companies contribute to the American war effort.

"You can take a job to make bombs or planes or poisons to be used in Vietnam and the courts will not stop you," says the leaflet.

"But what about your conscience? What about the (see Demonstration page 3)

Recruitment protest moves on Simcoe Hall

By BRIAN JOHNSON

The Ad Hoc Committee to End the War in Vietnam has decided to promote a "non-obstructive, legal" demonstration at Simcoe Hall at 1 p.m. today.

And, the committee decided in a two-hour closed meeting yesterday, the protest may last all weekend if their demands are not met by the administration.

The demands, to be presented by demonstrators to Acting President J. H. Sword, are:

- that until the advisory committee on the Placement Service gives its report, no firms supplying the U.S. war effort be allowed to recruit on campus.

(The committee was formed two months ago at the insistence of the Students Administrative Council after the demonstrations against recruiters from Dow Chemical of Canada. It comprises student, faculty and administration representatives and one alumnus).

- that there be a general policy that companies "complicit" in the war not be allowed to use university facilities.

- that the Placement Service committee have sole jurisdiction on the issue of campus recruitment and the use of the Service facilities.

- that the administration have no voting privileges or "cabinet status" on the committee.

- that the chairman of the advisory committee be a student member.

- that the meetings of the committee be open and its minutes published.

At yesterday's meeting, following the Convocation Hall open forum, Irv Weisdorf (III UC) said the demonstrators should ask President Sword why he "deliberately" didn't send campus police to yesterday's demonstration.

"If he doesn't speak to us," said Weisdorf, "individuals will enter Simcoe Hall to speak to him."

It is still indefinite whether the rally will develop into a two-hour mill-in or an all-weekend vigil. It depends upon the attitude of the administration.

Sir George students re-instate pres

MONTREAL (CUP)—Jeff Chipman has been re-instated as president of the Sir George Williams University student council.

Chipman, who resigned Monday night after council voted against permitting on-campus recruiting by companies involved in Vietnam war production, was unanimously re-instated by council yesterday.

Earlier yesterday an open meeting of Sir George students voted to rescind Monday's motion.

A university spokesman said that the issue is a student matter and that the administration will not intercede.

Chipman said that despite the public difference of opinion between council and himself he hoped they could "work together to realize our common goals in the area of student affairs and education."

QUAKERISM TODAY

Quakers are known to be active in today's world, yet they are often thought, by those who do not know them well, to be old-fashioned in their beliefs. Yet there is no Quaker creed to become out-dated; only a demanding conviction of the need to search continually and to act on what the search reveals of purpose for the present.

For further information, call 921-0368 or, better still, come to 60 Lowther Avenue (north of Bloor, east of St. George) any Sunday at 11 a.m. Coffee is served after the Meeting and there is time for informed discussion. There is also an active young people's group.

Jeanneret approves co-op bookstore

Marsh Jeanneret, manager of the University of Toronto Press, says he isn't worried about a Students Administrative Council threat to start a co-op bookstore.

In fact, Mr. Jeanneret said, "if we could be relieved of the responsibility (of running a bookstore) it would be the end of a problem for us."

At present the U of T Press absorbs any profits or losses run up by the U of T Bookstore, and the bookstore's financial situation affects the amount of scholarly work published by the Press.

David Nitkin (111 New), SAC services commissioner, said last Wednesday that SAC would start a co-operative bookstore if students were not included in the making of bookstore policy.

The committee would consist of students, faculty and administration, and would report directly to the Board of Governor's press committee, which validates policy.

Mr. Jeanneret indicated in a letter to Nitkin, and in the interview, that such a committee would be impractical.

"The lines of responsibility are not clear in this situation," Mr. Jeanneret said. "The committee could vote a 20-per-cent discount, or a 40-per-cent discount. But who would pay for it?"

"If there's something wrong with 40 per cent, there's something wrong with 10."

SAC has asked for a 10 per cent discount on all book prices).

"As long as students both vote the discount and receive it, it is logical that the decision should depend on another body."

Mr. Jeanneret said there was not enough money at present to implement a 10-per-cent discount, but he did support the idea in principle. He also supports the financial separation of Press and Bookstore, another SAC demand.

And the co-op?

"That might be desirable, but would it be efficient?" Mr. Jeanneret asked. "Twice as many books as necessary would be ordered, and two, three or four bookstores on campus would be impractical."

SMC votes $100 to support EBS debate

The St. Michaels College Student Council Tuesday voted approval of a $100 donation to an Edmund Burke-Society-sponsored debate in mid-March.

The proposed debate will be between William Rush, publisher of the right-wing National Review of New York, and David Lewis, an NDP member of parliament.

EBS Chairman Paul Fromm (II SMC) said the topic of the debate would be either the United Nations or "What it means to be a conservative."

Opposition for the donation came from Doug Moggach (II SMC) who said, "I personally cannot condone sponsoring a political propaganda exercise."

Jim Gardella (III SMC) was also in opposition. He agreed with Kathy Fowlie (III SMC) that if the council supported the EBS for the debate, in a weeks time every "right-wing fascist group" on campus would be at SMC asking for assistance.

But Toni McNamara (III SMC) noted, "I'm not a conservative, nor an Edmund Burke, but it would be a good thing to have the debate here at (St. Mike's)."

Council President Don Healy (IV SMC) said, "I don't think we should worry about who sponsors it. If it is a worthwhile event, let's sponsor it. That's why we're here."

The vote for the donation tied 7-7 with the tie-breaking vote cast by Healy.

Blue and White Society rises anew

Abraham Mudrik, new president of the Blue and White, outlined an ambitious program to 20 members Tuesday.

Mudrik (IV New) plans to have a winter carnival, a concert at O'Keefe Centre with the Cream from England and the Sam and Dave revue. A ski outing, a sleighride and a film night are also in the offing.

He drew up this program on his own in order to give the Students Administrative Council the means to judge his request for a $3,000 budget. The program depends on SAC's ratification of the budget next Wednesday.

Mudrik has been handling all the paperwork, trying to get companies to donate equipment (skidoos, outdoor cooking equipment) for his winter carnival and other events. He has organized the members of the B and W into committees dealing with each aspect of the program.

The old Blue and White designed to handle cultural and social events for the entire campus, folded by Nov. 2.

Charlton blasts "namby-pamby" protest

By ANNE BOODY

Tempers were relatively cool at the Convocation Hall debate following yesterday's fiery war demonstration.

Engineering Dean J. M. Ham chaired the debate, on the morality of engineers taking jobs with companies supplying the U.S. war effort in Vietnam.

Bill Charlton (II Law), who last month lost his bid to unseat Students Council President Tom Faulkner, stole the show with his scathing attack on the demonstrators.

"I know there are a lot of engineers hoping I would defend the US position in Vietnam. But I'm not stumping for an election. I'll give my own views.

"You're all filthy. Don't think you are clean because you spend a couple of hours in the basement of the SAC building printing big red signs."

The engineers roared in delight.

"The trouble with the self-conscious Left is that they haven't got guts. They are not radical enough.

"Your demonstrations are namby-pamby signs of action. You march on university property where police batons can't get you. Why? Are you afraid to go to jail?"

"No we're not," shouted the demonstrators.

"I have a lot of respect for Chandler Davis," Charlton continued. "He does a lot of good. He organizes little girls and boys into gangs to march along St. George.

"I don't defend Canadian complicity but at the same time I'll say that these protesters are just a little more stupid than the rest of us," said Charlton.

"The challenge of an engineer taking a job with one of these companies is to question his own degree of involvement in the war," said Random editor Mike Ignatieff (III Trin).

"But this takes courage. Think of the vicious products you are making when you work for Dow."

History Professor Kenneth McNaught spoke in favor of the demonstrators.

"I felt very silly when I demonstrated in the Dow demonstration in October. But I would have felt a lot sillier if I had sat at home and done nothing."

Engineering Dean James Ham appears to be eating the microphone as he chairs yesterday's debate in Convocation Hall.

No student action on Waterloo firings

WATERLOO (Staff) — The student-inspired public inquiry into the dismissal of two lecturers at Waterloo Lutheran University passed quietly Wednesday with about 400 students on hand.

Senior administrators declined invitations to appear at the inquiry, leaving political science professor Dr. George Haggart and psychology lecturer Gray Taylor alone before a hall jammed with mainly curious students.

The crowd responded to Dr. Haggart's charge that the university violated its own statement on academic freedom when it did not renew his three-year contract for 1968-69.

"I have been told that I was dismissed because I was unhappy here and I do not agree with the philosophy of the university," Haggart said.

"I tell you this university has violated its own professional statement on academic freedom."

Haggart also accused fellow faculty members of "manifest moral cowardice" because they did not rally around him.

Taylor, fired for "unprofessional conduct," found less sympathy although he told the students that no member of the psychology department had visited any of his classes.

The 90-minute session ended in disarray with calls for students council to disclose "confidential information" it said led it to withdraw support of the inquiry and a boycott scheduled at the same time.

Council announced Tuesday it would not make a decision pending an investigation of the dismissals by the Canadian Association of University Teachers. The freshman representative resigned immediately afterward, charging council with sidestepping a moral issue.

watched him for a while and then moved off and started another fire.

"This is where it gets ugly," he said later. "It's insane for them to brutalize each other over this issue."

The shoving got worse as the hour dragged on.

John Morris, Engineering Society president, warned that if the violence didn't stop Metro police would be called.

Among the engineers was a group of about 10 calling themselves Engineers Against War Recruitment.

One of the group, Bruce Edwards, a graduate student, explained that most engineers had never seriously considered the issue.

As the demonstration broke up, Faulkner called on engineers to follow them over to Convocation Hall, where a debate was to be held.

There, he said, the students could recoup "some of the integrity that we've lost today for this university."

Most of the engineers couldn't hear because of their shouting.

About 500 persons turned up for the debate.

Neither Acting President J. H. Sword nor Registrar Robin Ross could be reached for comment on the demonstration.

Students are warned that second instalment fees are due today. Tardy students may be fined up to $20.

the children's hour

It was a mess, the mob in front of the Galbraith Building yesterday. Sordid, you might say, or repulsive or maybe abhorrent.

In recent years students have increasingly sought the power they deserve. Power to run things the way they like to have things run. Power to change things they don't like.

But when their university world can turn up some of the immature and vicious actions we saw yesterday, the quest for power is crippled.

It's hard to conceive of a university—or any community, for that matter—being proud of the engineers who counterdemonstrated yesterday.

Granted some of the 1,000 engineers who materialized felt strongly about a threat to their freedom from the demonstrators.

But there were a great many too who were there simply to have a good time between classes.

Art McLwain, engineering representative to the Students Council, called it: "A bunch of damn idiots gone wild."

Yesterday these "damn idiots" showed us how highly immature they can be. If they think they were maintaining their image as young men superior to all artsmen, they failed miserably. Few watching their reaction to the 300-odd demonstrators who marched along the sidewalk could not have been disgusted at their inhumane, animal nature.

The same engineers who have been making such a racket about their rights came yesterday in rare form, perhaps bolstered by some their more recent escapades. Their invasion of a sociology class earlier this year is a case in point.

The demands of some of their more sincere spokesmen must be considered, of course. There is a strong argument that engineers should after all have access to the Placement Service for which they pay.

But if they feel that strongly about their rights, they can at the very least have the decency to make their stand in less extreme fashion.

For what gives a mob of engineers the right to assault a committed group of protestors? Protestors who come with purpose? What most of the engineers came for is hard to comprehend. Most came for a good time.

What does give an engineer the right to try to bloody a girl's face? Do they even have the right to hurl icy snowballs at their own Engineering Society president?

The whole affair may simply have left the administration chuckling with a new club to beat down upcoming demands for student rights—"Come, Mr. Faulkner, look what happened Jan. 18."

The fuss could also affect engineers' chances of gaining employment with some of the companies they seem to favor so strongly. Recruiters wouldn't be blamed for taking a second look at some of their prospective employees.

It is some consolation that the Engineering Society at least dissociated itself from its constituents' behaviour. There were many who were openly shocked at their brother Skulemen. They did their best to try to control the mob, but that mob was so taken with its own irrational thinking that it couldn't really be handled well.

The engineers may have proved their manhood to themselves, following the precept on the Edmund Burke Society poster, but to do it they made those who care about their university feel only shame for it.

Sordid, all right. Repulsive too. And abhorrent.

mob mentality

Sir:

Responsibility is defined in the Oxford Shorter Dictionary as being the "state of ... being capable of rational action."

It seems clear that the demonstration of mob mentality which took place in front of the Galbraith Building does not fit well with this definition. That a few young and in the main immature members of what is normally a sane and rational faculty should have led so many of us into such a demonstration is incredible.

A ground swell of revulsion is already forming against them. It is based in large measure on disgust by the large number of us who allowed ourselves to be drawn into such a shocking display of emotionalism.

In our defense can be raised what must be regarded as trite or irrational arguments. We were egged on by an unfriendly press. We were deprived of our fundamental rights by a bunch of extremist peacenicks who sat in at the Placement Service. We were deserted by an unrepresentative Students' Administrative Council.

We could legitimately argue that our infringement on the rights of the demonstrators was no more than their infringement on our rights at the Placement Service.

But there can be no excuse for our animal like behaviour on Thursday afternoon. We can no longer claim that we are more mature or deserving of sympathy than the Peacenicks. We can no longer make any claim to innocence.

We yielded to the ever present temptation of emotionalism in the face of what we regard as a ludicrous group making ludicrous demands.

Most of us now realize that such emotionalism is not an effective tool with which to combat Hoch's Army. This realization will in the future lead to a more pragmatic approach to the situation.

If the "Army" was to stage another demonstration tomorrow, we would probably greet them with exactly what they deserve.

We would probably ignore them.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE ENGINEERING STUDENTS AT THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

THE DOW AFFAIR

The first sit-in forced the Administration to sit up and take notice that war companies were not wanted on this campus. It responded by establishing an Advisory Committee to decide the University policy on recruiting practices. The whole University was told that the Advisory Committee was a democratic decision-making body empowered to deal with this vital question. Let's examine the facts of how the Advisory Committee was supposed to be an effective and representative body.

It consists of fourteen members. SAC was given five representatives. Of the nine remaining positions the Administration gave itself three representatives. The representatives of the Alumni Association was knowingly chosen as a supporter of the Administration's viewpoint. In addition to having four "sure" votes, the Administration instructed the Association of Teaching Staff that its five appointments balance. This meant that the Administration picked up two more votes guaranteeing that on any decisive vote it would have at least six members of the Advisory Committee voting its way. The results of Simcoe Hall's handiwork can be seen in what happened.

The University hierarchy never intended that the Committee be an effective body. At best it might have rubberstamped the Administration's policy of enforcing the status quo, thereby keeping the war-makers on campus. This is indeed what occurred. At worst, the Committee would vote by a narrow margin against the Administration's policy. The closeness of the vote would nullify the Committee's decision. True to form, this was the very rationale Vice-President and Acting Committee Chairman Robin Ross invoked to declare the seven-vote in support of the principle of selectivity be set aside. The Committee did not have any hope of success when it was designed for deadlock.

The university community has been denied the right to decide the question of campus recruitment democratically. A viable strategy addresses itself to this grave situation.

The Administration has told us what its position is. It insists that by following a policy of non-discrimination it is steering a neutral course. Claiming to stand in the centre while in reality leaning to one side supports on campus recruiting by war firms. It has staked its policy on the belief that this university is a market-university. Repeatedly it has told us what's good for the market place is good for the University. We do not need Simcoe Hall to spell out the rest of its message. We can interpret it for ourselves. It says that the Faculty and the Students have no right to interfere with the market mechanism and decide how this, our University is to be used. That is why Simcoe Hall established an Advisory Committee that could neither advise nor decide on a policy.

By its very actions the Administration has put its fingers on the nerve of the issue — are we going to be a market university tied to the demands of business corporations or are we going to be an unfettered university free to choose a policy of our own making?

The centre of attention shifts to Simcoe Hall. So long as the Advisory Committee can be manipulated by the Administration war firms will not be barred from this campus. We must open our eyes and see where matters stand. In its present form the Advisory Committee is of no value to SAC or to the University at large. SAC must continue to boycott the Advisory Committee and demand that it be reconstituted on democratic principles.

These are:

The Students and Faculty form the majority of a fifteen member committee with SAC being entitled to nine representatives and the ATS five. We believe that the Faculty is not entitled to equal representation on a predominantly student issue until SAC is received as an equal constituent on Faculty committees. The Alumni Association is entitled to one representative. Finally, the Administration's status must be in line with its place in the University as civil servants of this University. In that capacity neither are they entitled to cabinet status nor cabinet representation on University decision-making bodies. One representative of the Administration is to be present in an ex officio capacity without voting privileges.

In support of the demands for a democratic university and an end to campus complicity, the co-ordinating Committee urges all students and faculty to act now, by facing present realities and take the next step. Mill-in at Simcoe Hall.

Danny Drache for the Co-ordinating Committee

thanks, engineers

Sir:

The middle of November, 1967 saw the U of T Committee to End the WAR in VIETNAM stage a protest against Dow Chemical of Canada because of their American parent which manufactures napalm for use in the war. The demonstration by this radical minority not only prevented employment interviews by those engineering students seeking jobs with one of Canada's major chemical producers but caused cancellation of ensuing interview dates.

Despite efforts by the Engineering Society and Dow representatives, Dow was unable to find sufficient students to recruit. Similar protests on other Eastern campuses and a feeble effort at UBC allowed Dow to look to Western universities as a source of qualified graduates.

It is unfortunate that the actions of a few students and a couple of belligerent faculty members should deprive a supposedly strong organization such as yours of their opportunity and freedom to do what they have a right to do; That is, interview for jobs regardless of what a bunch of "artsy" types think about a company not involved directly in the war in Vietnam. In fact this vocal minority just wanted an excuse to demonstrate about something.

In any case, we, the students at UBC, University of Alberta, and University of Saskatchewan thank you for opening the doors for jobs in the East for us.

FESTIVAL PREVIEW

Gad Horowitz Versus Americrap

BY STEPHEN BORNSTEIN

The first session of Babel, the U. C. Lit's third annual arts festival, will feature a symposium on "Americrap" — that is, the myths and madneses of contemporary American society. One of the featured performers at this "bull session" will be Professor Gad Horowitz, probably the most promising political thinker in Canada today and a member of this university's Political Economy Department.

Not being content to rely on what I had learned about Prof. Horowitz from listening to his fourth year political theory lectures, I arranged to talk to him over lunch.

Tempered Bitterness

The Gad Horowitz I saw during the hour or so that we sat crammed into one of those little two-seat booths at Mac's was a much more appealing, sympathetic, and intriguing personality than the Horowitz I had seen lecturing to me twice every week since September. Horowitz the classroom lecturer comes over as brilliant, caustic, cynical, disillusioned, impatient; Horowitz at Mac's was still brilliant, still disillusioned, but with the cynical bitterness tempered and subdued by a gentle patience, the maturity of a man who knows the intricacies and power of his own mind and who is mildly and ironically annoyed rather than viciously disgusted with a stubbornly rigid reality unwilling to shape itself to the demands of his will. Horowitz's caustic bitterness in the lecture hall is, I discovered, more a tone of voice than a state of mind.

After leaving Israel at the age of two, Horowitz came to Western Canada whose major cities, along with New York, Baltimore, and Israel again, shared his presence until he entered the University of Manitoba. From that oasis in the Canadian intellectual wilderness, Horowitz went to McGill to do his M. A. and then to Harvard for doctoral work where he studied with Louis Hartz and Samuel Beer among others. Horowitz taught for several years at McGill where he wrote regularly for Canadian Dimension of which he is now associate editor, and also produced a brilliant refreshingly theoretical analysis (this is my appraisal and not his) of Canadian political history in CJEPS, May 1966. At the beginning of this academic year, he accepted a position at the University of Toronto in the Department of Political Economy, where he is presently at work on a book on Canadian left-wing politics scheduled to appear this spring.

A Political Schizophrenic

When I asked him where he located himself politically, Horowitz was surprisingly frank. "I am a political schizophrenic," he admitted. On the level of intellectual discourse, he explained, he is "a screaming radical", something of a Marxist, heavily influenced by the Freudo-Marxism of Herbert Marcuse, and sympathetic to the political innovations of the New Left and the Hippies. He takes the Hippies very seriously indeed, rejects as misdirected, criticism of them for escapism and immaturity, and regards their concrete rejection of the norms and laws of conventional society, as a heartening manifestation of true revolutionary fervour. Horowitz has, however, no real faith in the capacity of the New Left or of the Hippies or of any other conceivable practical scheme to bring about the desired social revolution in North America, and thus he is forced to conceive of politics as two unfortunately distinct realms: the realm of theory — where he must remain a "frustrated radical" aware of the paradox that there can be "no new society without the new society" — and the realm of practical politics where the best one can do is support the NDP's demands for moderate social reform.

Horowitz the radical is by far more fascinating intellectually than Horowitz the social democrat; and it will indeed be Horowitz the radical who will expose America as a mad society next Wednesday night at Babel.

Sick Before LBJ

According to Horowitz, the United States is a chronically sick, frightfully insane society tottering on the brink of total madness. Horowitz reveals his intellectual sophistication when he explains that it is not the war in Vietnam or the appalling grossness of Lyndon Johnson which lead him to this critical judgment. Rather, he insists that it is a shame that it has taken such blatant symptoms as Vietnam and Johnson to convince most American leftists that their society is sick. The sickness of American society was as apparent in JFK as it is in LBJ according to Horowitz.

Nor does the fundamental insanity and perversity of American society stop miraculously at the 49th parallel. Canada, too, is a sick society. Though fundamentally different from the United States in many respects, Canada shares with its southern neighbour most of the symptoms of its madness and even adds a few of its own. Had Canada rather than the United States been saddled with a population of two hundred million and the role of protector of the West against the onslaught of world communism, Canada too would be as palpably mad a society as is the United States today although its approach to international and domestic affairs might be slightly less paranoid, militaristic and intolerant.

"What about the future?" I inquired ingenuously, and I received two answers: one from Professor Horowitz the theoretician, the radical, and one from Professor Horowitz, the pragmatic realist. Horowitz foresees two different potential developments issuing out of the madness of contemporary Western society. The first possibility, and the one which his radical theoretician's mind would like to see realized, is the fulfilment of the vision, shared by Herbert Marcuse, the New Left, the Hippies, and Paul Goodman, of a radically decentralized and loosely interconnected group of small communities dedicated to the establishment of a non-repressive and therefore truly free democratic existence.

Huge Insane Asylum

The second possibility, and the one which Horowitz, the practical realist, foresees as the ultimate extension of contemporary trends is the development of Western society into a huge insane asylum, an immense therapeutic clinic benevolently administered by a group of skilled psychotherapists who will diagnose all creative and radical thought as neurosis and will treat it accordingly. As Horowitz remarked to me ironically, "you know who would be the majority, who the minority, then, don't you?"

Professor Horowitz's antiutopia is not a particularly reassuring prospect; nor is his utopia, many people unsympathetic to the New Left might assert. But what is reassuring about him is the breadth of his vision, the acuteness of his analysis of contemporary America and the absence from his thought of any blatant signs of the self-righteous moral indignation, the conspiracy theories of history, and the unreasoned faith in utopian panaceas so typical of the mindless radicalism often seen in the American and Canadian Left.

"It's Mr. Rae Calling From University College..."

BY SUE CARTER

Tuesday noon in the U.C. Lit Office. Bob Rae, director of the upcoming University College Festival, signalling again for quiet returned to his long-distance telephone call. It was one of the guest speakers from New York: he would be arriving within two hours of another speaker, "which means getting another car" someone groaned. Cameramen arrived: they needed certification that shafts for projectors were to be used for educational purposes. And the results of another call: We may not be able to get that film after all — it seems the guy has left town.

The greenboards? "They have to come from St Catharines, Bob" answered Hersh Ezrin (Chairman of the U.C. Lit).

"But we want to get started on that".

"Well you know the guy

it is a psychological analysis of the sociological phenomena around us.

Bob first met Sterbach and Wise, creators of the Babel environment accidentally. They all recognized the theme's potential and decided to join forces. "They are creating an aesthetic form with technical apparatus. If an artist today is to be truly contemporary, he must use all possible tools, which means, in effect, that he must be a technician". Their choice of media has often taxed Bob's imagination. He has had to procure, for example, 2000 feet of fluffy pink pile and rubber walls.

The form of the festival reflects some pretty vital questions about our technological environment, its justifying myths, inspiring heroes and underlying values. Just what has the technological society suppressed?

myths and madness of society.

The telephone rang again: an enquiry about press passes. And again, this time about projector rentals. "No, I can't give you any prices yet. He has a secretary who keeps saying he's out."

Society will be presented as propaganda in Americrap, the media shows and panel discussions on Wednesday and Thursday nights in Convocation Hall. Americrap will employ a multi-screen, multi-speaker technique which is ideal for the theme. The captive, enclosed audience will be presented with the material and left to arrange it in their own patterns, to come up with their own answers. Coordination of the eleven screens and five speakers will be handled by a computer built for the show by technical producer, Georgi Nacboff.

Wednesday's show, directed by Len Gilday, will concentrate on mass phenomena, on the impact of propaganda on society.

"We want to explore some of the underlying themes: the violence, in which so much, from religion to politics, is rooted; the adulation of idols or folk heroes, such as John F. Kennedy; the craving for security and the institutions such as marriage which claim to provide it" Len explained. To do this, he has drawn on magazines, films, television, records and tapes. The presentation will be not so much the overworked "happening" collage form as an associative sequenced description.

Wednesday's show will be followed by a panel discussion. Speakers are Dr. Edgar Friedenberg, Prof. Gad Horowitz (U of T) and Prof. O'Neill (York). "We hope they will consider some of the forces behind the propagation of the myths we will have suggested" he added.

Does it have any integral values or just myths to justify its mode of functioning? And are these myths so vital to our society as to be inseparable? If so, is there any point to our concern, or should we accept the fact while maintaining our awareness of it? Or does examination suggest change? It is questions such as these that the creators of the festival have been working over for some months. By visual and aural techniques, they hope to present these problems, not didactically but explosively, in an encompassing way which demands audience participation. Sunday's Light Show with the Mothers of Invention suits this style in its explosive quality.

Bob paused to refill his pipe.

"Hey Bob, have you any idea how long that tobacco's been lying around this office?"

He went on to point out that an environmental analysis could have used a number of phenomena, from games to machines as its springboard. They selected propaganda as it shapes the Taking the phone over from Bob, Len made final arrangements to screen some CBC film of Watts Riots and Vietnam. Then he would be hurrying to pick up more of the 1000 slides made from material he had collected over the past month. Shaky from lack of sleep, he left in search of coffee.

Tony Pargeter came in primarily to dry his shoes. He had spent most of the morning on the snowy campus photographing engineering jackets. Tony is directing Thursday's show which centers in on the forms of propaganda. By juxtaposition of sound, screen and dramatic incidents, he feels the show will explore "techniques, types and extent" of society's propaganda. At the most obvious level is advertising, with its great discrepancy between presentation and reality. "I mean look at toilet paper ads. They're absolutely beautiful, but after all, toilet paper is toilet paper".

Moving through politics with its carefully created images and nationalism, with its less precise self-image, to religion, one notices the increasing fuzziness of the origin and purpose of the propaganda, accompanied by its increasing effectiveness. At the other extreme are the most subtle and effective social pressures exercised through the family, through youth groups such as the Wolf Clubs, promoting the virtues of cleanliness and perseverance.

Tony too has scavenged material from places like the CBC, the NFB and advertising agencies to the Oddfellows Hall (where they unearthed obscure World War I campaign posters) Thursday's speakers are author Vance Packard, Harley Parker, an assistant to McLuhan at Fordham and John Straiten, president of a large advertising agency.

His shoes were dry now, and Tony left to shoot some sequences in residence washrooms before going for a radio interview.

From across the room; "Hey Hersh, you owe me $2 — I returned Sterbach and Wise's overdue library books!"

And Bob Rae was on the phone again. "It's Mr. Rae calling from University College. I was talking to you yesterday about renting a large number of projectors..."

— why don't you yell at him?"

Bob was on the phone again; "But I can't call the Dean and ask him for something like that!"

More people at the door; "Hey Bob, do you have that tax exemption number?"

"No, that will be a different one. I'll phone and get you one tomorrow".

The unruffled director leaned back in the chair which has been his almost constantly for the past two months.

"I don't think I'm a very good administrator" he smiled. "But all this has to be done if you want to see your idea through. It's been harrowing but really fascinating to watch a theme grow and evolve into something. I've really learned a lot". As he discussed the ideas behind the festival, his total involvement and familiarity with the central issues was obvious. It was a reflection of the enthusiasms of the original idea, the endless hours of discussion and the evolution of an approach. The central theme of the festival is society as propaganda. In other terms,

THEATRE

Questionable But Enjoyable

By ARNOLD RUBENSTEIN

"I think you'll enjoy it." So I was told by Harry J. Pollock in reference to his adaptation, dramatization, and direction of Night Boat From Dublin from the Life and Letters of James Joyce.

The show, which was performed at the Central Library Theatre Monday night, moves to Hart House Theatre tonight for a one-night stand.

In the tradition of Brecht on Brecht, Night Boat From Dublin is a series of readings mainly from Joyce's letters, but which also includes selections from his literary works.

Judging from the audience, comprised largely of members of the James Joyce Society, the reading went over very well. Whether or not it succeeds as theatre is open to question.

Regardless, Mr. Pollock, an avid Joycean of many years, emerges as the star of the show. In his selection of material he presents Joyce as a man both cynical and frank in conduct; a man who dislikes the "ignobility and slavishness of people"; a man who held a deep hatred for the Irish.

But it is in his correspondence with Nora Joyce that a different light is thrown on the author's character. These letters reveal Joyce's preoccupation with the erotic and the scatological.

What a field day Jung and Freud would have had with him! In fact Jung did write an essay on "Ulysses" and wrote Joyce of his admiration for the work.

Joyce, however, dismisses Jung and Freud as the "Swiss Tweedle Dum" and the "Viennese Tweedle Dee".

Nonetheless, one can't help but feel that Joyce had an unhealthy attitude not only towards sex but also towards normal bodily functions.

In his letters to Nora he expresses the desire to be whipped and flogged by her. He describes intimately and in every detail the type of underwear she should sport.

Despite a predominance of the erotic element, Joyce the artist, his feelings and motivations for his work is, to some extent, revealed.

Balanced against this are the opinions on his work from the great literary figures of his time, ranging from Ezra Pound, who couldn't make anything of "Ulysses" to G. B. Shaw, who found it "hideously real."

This, then, is the material Mr. Pollock gives his actors to work with.

In her role as Nora Joyce, and whomever else she was supposed to be playing, Trcaea O'Driscoll, though relaxed and comfortable, was totally devoid of life.

As Joyce, Allan Stebbings gave an adequate reading. At times, as in his story of the Cat and the Devil in the second act, he gave life to Joyce which was charming and delightful.

But the high points of the evening belong to David Rowe and Mel Samuels who brought a welcome versatility to their various roles as Ezra Pound, G. B. Shaw, Stanislaus Joyce and Sherwood Anderson, which eliminated any potential for the tedious, the show might well have had.

Despite any shortcomings on the part of the players, it was never less than an enjoyable evening.

For those already acquainted with Joyce's work, Night Boat From Dublin provides another aspect of the author. For those who are not it serves as an interesting introduction to his work.

Two Anti-climactic Openings

By ALAN GORDON

There really ARE plays in which the main figures say things like "bestly" and "rawther" and "ripping". I'd never really considered the possibility that the phony plays the people in the movies attended when they went to the Thee-aw-tre really existed. But sure enough they do . . . and if you don't believe me, get into your Bentley and have your chauffeur wait outside the O'Keefe Centre while you take in Hay Fever while you sip brandy, and nibble on your water-cress sandwiches.

In the world that Noel Coward chooses to depict, the greatest sin is being guilty of Bad Taste or, perhaps worse, Rudeness. People treat other people as little better than animals, glory in the slime of superficiality, and dress for dinner. Any breach of manners, any possible display of humanity would never do. If you prick a Noel Coward character, it does not bleed. It might leak, or dribble, but nothing as thick as blood could ever be imagined in the theatre of Coward.

If this Mr. Coward choses to absent people from his plays, what exactly is left? His situations, perhaps? What fun to have a madcap family invite guests up to their country house for the weekend! Wouldn't it be mahvellous to have the outrageous Blisses (that is their name . . . really!) for ced to welcome some unexpected company! What a lark! Lark, indeed. It's a drag. Four funny lines and two faintly humorous bits of business do not a play make. A play should, I think, have at least one sympathetic character, one interesting predicament (a conflict is apparently asking for too much) and a connection, however remote, to something that exists, and means something . . . to somebody.

Hay Fever, or at least the production of it here at the O'Keefe Centre, has none of these things. The Bliss children must have come from the stork. The marriage between the parents must have been made in heaven, because it has no semblance of anything going on around here.

In the hapless cast, only two performers free themselves from the shackles that the urbane wit of Mr. Coward has foisted on his characters. Prunella Scales gives the flapper, Jackie Coryton, a feeling of existing in at least two dimensions, and Roland Culver who unobtrusively builds a semblance of humanity for Mr. Bliss, the writer. Michael Graham Fox, as Sandy Tyrell comes across as having only one dimension — thickness. Celia Johnson as Mrs. Bliss does not have a fighting chance in getting her role off the ground and into the ditch where it belongs.

Hay Fever, at least at the O'Keefe Centre, is a perfect example of an ineffectual play getting an appropriate production.

As for the new play at the Royal Alexandra, The Drummer Boy, I just can't tell whether it's any good or not. There are so many things in the Theatre Toronto production working against it, that its difficult to judge where Clifford William's staging begins and where Jeremy Brooks' adaption leaves off. And where, come to think of it, does Jean Basile's play come in at all?

The play purports to tell the history of the youngest executioner in New France. The officials of Quebec, both lay and church, trump up some charges against a 19 year old kid that put this youthful drummer boy in the position of having to choose between being hanged, or hanging the criminals that have been judged guilty by the same people who have made a farce of the law in the drummer's case. The boy decides that he would rather hang than be hanged. His obnoxious innocence and charm bother some of the other officials, and eventually the kid is rubbed out anyway.

I don't know who is responsible for seeing the kid as a Christ-figure, but it is a tedious conceit at best. The idea of the play is a good one. There are several parallels between the New France of 200 years ago, and the hypocritical official Canada of today, and the events, in the play are potentially dramatic. But the thing has been so tastefully done!

I don't think I've ever seen a more polite castration scene, a coyer prison scene, in which all the ingredients for the excitement of, say Fortune and Men's Eyes, were there, but none of the effect. I'm not saying that the play should have to stoop to the melodrama and fireworks of Fortune, but the production does have to resort to something to bring it out of its doldrums.

The whole thing was so DULL. The set was dull, the costumes ran the gamut from gray to brown. The most interesting color on stage was a baby black wall. There was no acting of any subtlety. Richard Monette declaimed and declared the words of the Billy Buddish Drummer when he could have spoken with feeling. E.M. Margolese crashed through his dialogue like a bull dozer, leaving any hope emotion and subtlety wrecked in his path. John Colicos it seems, sent his lines in by mail. It was as if he wasn't there at all.

The pacing of the show had the excitement of a tiresome exercise at the Y. First comes this, then this, now comes the hanging (yes, a real hanging, ladies and gentlemen on stage, which has the disturbing effect on the audience, not of how horrible it is for the drummer — executioner, but 'won't Bunny Behrens get hurt? Isn't it dangerous? The effect here should have been sacrificed for the meaning; and then comes the intermission, then comes that damned singer whose wailing semi-tenor destroyed any sense of momentum gained from one scene to another.

The Drummer Boy had all the earmarks and cliché-ridden emotion of the Drawmas of the last century. It is a drama in which the artificial Judith Bliss over at the O'Keefe in Hay Fever would have been very much at home.

is boastfully prosperous. Why?

"It's love!" Milt coos. "Why, Harry, do you know I'm more in love now than I was when I was married."

"But my wife won't give me a divorce."

Milt prescribes a healthy dose of the universal panacea and even suggests a suitable subject, his wife. Problems solved.

The search for love is there is clearest when Milt's wife Ellen (Jean Dover) scolds Harry for impotence and suggests he is really in love with Milt, not her. Harry's eyes light up. "Am I really?"

Milt is a stereotyped Ralpia Kramdenish role, and Saavido could be accused of not squeezing everything possible out of the part. But who wants to? As the ageing Casanova who hates his wife and wants only to marry his ravishing mistress he's balding, pot-bellied and lovable.

Miss Dover is a funny broad. Body of a teenager, eyes of an experienced woman, an accent which slips alternately into Canadianese and Bronx Jewish. She has a few comic moments and brings them off well, if somewhat self-consciously.

Luv itself has some interesting things to say about the universal panacea but you've heard them before in Pinter and Albee. However, Luv isn't quite as cutting and has a happy ending of sorts.

Luv is a brightly acted, well thought out play as put on by Altair. Its worth your attention.

DIANA FAIRFAX AND SIMON WILLIAMS IN "HAY FEVER"

luv, luv, luv

By PAUL MACRAE

Vera Delworth believes live theatre is dying in Toronto, and she decided to do something about it. The result was Altair Productions and a two-week performance of Luv, the long-running Broadway hit, at the Colonnade theatre until Jan. 31.

Not that Miss Delworth is a novice at the theatre game. She's won awards as producer of "The Adventures of Mendel Fish" and produced several other plays in Toronto. She has also worked with the semi-professional Stage '61 since it began.

With Altair she hopes to revive live theatre (seriously weakened by the collapse of among others, the Crest) using relatively unknown local talent. Luv is a success in both spheres and comes across especially well in the warm, intimate atmosphere of the Colonnade, even with a sparse audience.

If nothing else Miss Delworth is to be thanked for bringing us Marvin Goldfarb, an actor of considerable comic talent and depth. He's got a Carney-esque face, sparse straggly hair and a hang-dog body matching almost perfectly the Harry Berlin of Luv — neurotic, stroke — and suicide-prone, dragged protesting into the endless merry-go-round of the search for perfect luv.

"Love me!" he cries and what can you respond but, "How?"

Luv isn't so much about love as the search for love (which is, I suppose, the same thing to most people). Harry's friend Milt Manville (Guy Saavido) discovers him about to commit suicide in despair at the meaninglessness of life and saves him.

Some friend. He and Harry started out the same but now Harry's a bum and Milt

The City Muffin Boys!

The what?

The City Muffin Boys!

The City Muffin Boys failed to appear at last year's York University Festival. The City Muffin Boys made a videotape for CBC, but it was never screened. Robert Fulford says the City Muffin Boys are a figment of Ralph Thomas's imagination. Ralph Thomas announces that the Muffin Boys are about to disband. Sitting in the Refectory behind three months' foliage of facial hair, a young man claims to know someone who's heard them, "and they're great."

Playing in private for two years, the City Muffin Boys have created by their at times dubious existence the most persistent myth of the Toronto Underground (except for the Underground itself). The downtown warehouse where they rehearse has seen a succession of distinguished visitors: Peter Yarrow, of Peter, Paul and Mary; Richard Goldstein, pop-critic for the now defunct New York Herald-Tribune and leading American authority on Youth Cult; Dylan, Himself, who reportedly asked them to go on tour with him.

And now, at eight o'clock Wednesday evening, they're playing for the owners of the Electric Circus, New York's Discotheque of the Moment with offshoots springing up from Los Angeles to Paris and a new recording label in the works. And who do you think will headline the Electric Circus record label?

You wait to meet the City Muffin Boys at a Harvey's hamburger emporium near their warehouse. One of them comes to lead you across a parking lot and down an alley surrounded on three sides by dark office buildings. At the end of the alley you climb up a ladder, then a fire escape with the eighth step missing, and finally you step through a window with iron bars above it. The interior appears to be an abandoned office.

You imagine the now-vanished steno-pool tapping away at their typewriters; the end wall with cherrywood veneer panelling contains three doorways leading to smaller rooms, department managers' offices perhaps, which serve as temporary living quarters for members of the group. Against the wall are some ramshackle chairs, a table, and a full book-shelf.

The visitors occupy themselves examining some of the paraphernalia on the walls (a collage composed of an old sock, a teacup, crumpled kleenex and candle-wax; color pictures of the Boboli Gardens in Florence; a natural history photograph labelled, "Tremble At The Australian Tiger Snake"; another photograph of Napoleon's death mask; ballpoint drawings with titles like, "egg shell paranoia" and "crowd pleasin'"; a Tourguide Map of Delaware, Maryland, and surrounding states), while the City Muffin Boys, six of them, fiddle with amps, and mikes and guitar strings. Their instruments and controls are set up in the middle of the floor with a battery of six speakers ranged out behind them and two additional speakers in front.

Then they start to play. The first number is Eretwo or The Muffin Song. Andy Krumyns, sort of slow and Slavic-looking, stares straight ahead from under a black felt hat and picks at his guitar, his feet planted firmly on the ground. Art Charpentier is playing Hammond organ, and his finely-sculptured face is sullen and immobile. Richard Whyte sits behind the sympani and bongos and cowbells and cymbals with a serious expression and heavy black moustache. Peter Walmsly, tall and thin with ascetic face and wispy brown beard, beats on a second set of drums. The visual action is dominated by Cal Greenwood, on bass guitar, and Peter McBirnie. Cal has a long, death-like lace and Biblical hair, and seems to be carrying on a conversation with his instrument; he wanders around with it, muttering and grimacing, and occasionally he breaks into this great beatific smile. Peter wears green and white awning-striped, bell-bottoms and a peacock-blue military shirt. He struts nervously around the floor, and when he sings threatens to devour the microphone.

But the sounds! In the confines of the warehouse, the sounds go bouncing back and forth between the walls, and the ensuing effect is chaotic. Underneath the cacophony, an exciting kind of music is taking place. The Muffin sound is solid, tight, complex. Although the improvisatory method relates to jazz, the sound is not jazzy, or rhythm-and-bluesy, or even pop, in the sense of prepackaged formula music.

The familiarly insistent beat changes in frequent and unexpected time shifts; sometimes the drums seem to be playing in conflict with each other. The organ produces a fantastic range of colours and textures. There are no solo or back-up instruments in the group. Each member is doing his own thing in conjunction with the others. A guitar or organ motif emerges briefly and is absorbed into the solid block of sound. The music offers no superficial approach; if you try to resist it or remain detached from it, it will strike you as ear-splitting, cluttered, and ultimately maddening. But if you become involved in any part of it, the unity unfolds as a revelation.

The sound is eclectic and at the same time unique. It resists comparison with any other group. My first and lasting impression is of a street market in Istanbul or Baghdad, with the varied sounds and textures and rhythms separating, drawing together, diverging again and the street vendors' chanting electronically amplified over the babble. But that was just my trip.

Talking to Peter McBirnie (this time wearing an oversized football jersey). Peter has somewhere acquired a pair of roller skates and is reeling elliptically about one of the back rooms. After about three-quarters of an hour, he asks, "Am I making you nervous?" He has broken off in the middle of a monologue about Art, Life, Paradox, Unity . . . Peter talks more than the other Muffin Boys; he is more energetic, more public-relations minded, more obviously determined to make it. The others, also anxious for money and recognition are very cool. Very cool.

"We use our music," Peter is saying, "to communicate truth and wisdom. Truth is paradox. For every word there is an antonym . . . This is good but it's also bad; this is bad but it's also good." On the function of the artist: "Salvador Dali understood that the past, present, and the

A belly can digest as a fellow can try . . .

Then, or after the next two lines, or a line after that, the unity breaks down. Someone says, "There's not enough happening in that break." Cal and Andy confer with Art on a section involving guitars and organ; Richard works out a wandering bongo rhythm with Peter Walmsy's steadier drum-beat.

"O.K. Vehicle of original sin. One-two-three-four . . ." and they go into the same lyric for the sixth or eighth or tenth time.

*"The vehicle of original sin
One sees a man dragged back . . ."*

A cymbal crash, and the organ line transfers to the bass guitar. A few more lines, and another conference.

RICHARD: I wasn't sure if after Sunday best we went into the three stops or back to the rhythm at the beginning . . . Back to the beginning. Okay, that's groovier. It's tight.

ANDY: There should be a sharp change between "best" and "Vehicle of Original Sin".

PETER: Shouldn't something come in on "best"?
CAL: Do you want me to come in on "Best" with this bit . . .?"

So the conferencing and tightening and unifying goes on until the sections seem to be shifting smoothly with the organ throwing a melody to lead guitar and the lead guitar to the bass, and the tymps and snares pounding out different rhythms and then exchanging them and the strange esoteric words straining to be heard in the midst of it.

What do the words mean? Richard is explaining how a song comes to existence. "I start with an incident that happened to someone I know and replace the specific situation with symbols of a more universal . . . 'Pig's head' refers to a symbol of judgement in the I Ching. When a person makes a decision, he may consider either desire or natural law but not both; and as a result he is dragged back to his original position. Each verse deals with a different form of judgement."

There is chronological development in Richard's lyrics from the earliest to the most recent; he expects that a listener hearing the songs in sequence could discern the evolution of symbols and—yes, of Truth and Wisdom.

Richard is concerned with bringing together definite environments" and this collision of cultures is responsible for the tremendously varied influences present in the music. The percussion shifts from a "corporal" beat (such as 3/4 or 4/4 time) to a "spiritual" beat (such as a raga rhythm of ten beats).

A song called "Grandsounds" introduces a circusy sound with calliope-like organ and thumping drum beat and a vocal part resembling something between a barber and a vaudeville entertainer.

In "Namascus," the winding organ creates a middle eastern flavor. "General Speaks" starts with a strict military rhythm that dissolves into a wild, free-spirited jam session. "Grandsounds" and "General Speaks" have an immediate appeal deriving from the identifiable melody lines and will probably be the first Muffin Boys single.

What has happened to the City Muffin Boys musically during the last two years? Richard says, "We've become more definitive as far as expressing ourselves as individuals is concerned." Calvin says they're now playing pagan dinner music. The point is that they're doing what they set out to do two years ago.

What the City Muffin Boys need now is exposure. Their insularity has allowed them to develop a sound expressing their own thing. Now, a live audience will force them to involve other people, with their ideals and reality, in this thing; records will refine and balance the sound, to get across its complexity. The Electric Circus, a new record label. Managers. Agents. Recording engineers. The whole business. And it's all about to happen. Richard Whyte's book of stories will provide suitable material for literary dissection in the New York Review of Books, and critics of eighteenth-century music will once again discover that pop has something to say, and people in Vogue will be talking about Calvin Greenwood's extraordinary length of nose, and if Peter's voice doesn't crack a thousand ways at once, they'll maybe even be talking about Peter McBernie.

It's all happening. With the Beatles reverting to the folkloric and the electronic beeps and scratchings of the multiple track tape recorded, the City Muffin Boys are ready to take pop music beyond the point where it last stopped communicating.

future were the same when he stood in a New York sewer and announced that he was going to cross the Alps on an elephant. It meant the same thing in Hannibal's time as it does today . . . I stopped respecting Dali when he made a picture of God, because God represents the limit of the unknown. After that, I knew what he was going to do. Since I was a kid, I've been able to predict, I've known exactly what people are going to do and say. It's like I'm reading their minds. I can implement people, to lead them into the unknown."

For two evenings, the Muffin Boys are working out a new number, called "Pig's Head." The rhythm and melodic line are arranged in sections determined by the structure of Peter's lyrics. Within this framework, each musician improvises his own part with an understanding of what the others will be doing at the same time.

"Pig's Head" begins with a bass guitar motif played against percussive organ and drums. Peter sings the opening words to a three-note melody closely following the beat, blending with the instrumental line.

"Mirth Control

A felony I bless a melody by . . ."

The organ moves into a short running motif accompanied by a breakaway on the cymbals and drums. Then, shouted against a harsh pounding rhythm on organ and both guitars:

"Some sau-sealed super-nature lerdin . . ."

Together For The Last Time

By MEL BRADSHAW

Some German general of World War I vintage once said, "Lazy, intelligent people make the best generals; hard-working, intelligent people make the best staff officers; lazy, stupid people make the best privates; but stupid, hard-working people should be shot".

When you see The Power Game at Cinecity, don't let the narrator fool you. The real hero is neither the old-testament style public prosecutor striving valiantly to re-establish the law of Moses, nor the Marxist revolutionary fighting for world communism, nor the Christian physician hoping to save humanity through love. No, the truly admirable character is none of these energetic but less than brilliant reformers but rather the politician Sir Thomas Jones, the epitome of indolent cleverness. His favorite place is bed, "a great place in which to sleep, alone or with a woman, to eat, and to carry on one's business". But general laziness does not keep Jones from doing the right thing at the right time, so disposing of his rivals for power and winning the devastating Anastasia.

Wife of the disciple of Moses and lover to the two other crusaders, Anastasia (Johana von Koczian) is the focal point of this fanciful yet precise comedy by Friedrich Durrenmatt. More a pawn than a player in the game, she is the spectator through whose eyes the audience is introduced into a world of well-bred cynicism.

Renowned for his plays, among them The Physicists and The Visit, Durrenmatt makes his debut as a screenwriter with The Power Game which he adapted from his The Marriage of Mr. Mississippi. Deeply interested in the concept of justice, he is reminiscent of the Italian dramatist Ugo Betti. (Like Betti, Durrenmatt prefers to divorce himself from the particularities of time and place: The Power Game is set in Europa City; some of the characters' names are German, some French, some English. The film itself is Swiss, recorded in German, dubbed in French, and subtitled in English).

The direct expression of humanitarian concern for fair-play, however, seems out of tune with the detached virtuosity of the film. Anastasia's expression of startled naïveté occasionally jars with her general suavity. More serious is the near-sentimental handling of the Christian missionary's return to Europa City as an "alcoholic lunatic".

This is only a minor objection to a film found extremely enjoyable. Kurt Hoffman is to be credited for a very cinematic treatment of Durrenmatt's play. The elegant and witty treatment of power politics leaves us feeling the game is not unfair so long as one knows the rules, and there are so few rules that any one who doesn't know them must be too dense to merit much sympathy.

Together For The Last Time

By JOHN LOWNSBROUGH

Guess Who's Coming To Dinner (at the Carlton) is the first commercially-orientated movie that I know of which deals with an interracial love story. (I am excluding now those East-Meets-West-With-Complications heart-tuggers where William Holden is always bedding down with Nancy Kwan or some other typical Oriental like Jennifer Jones or Capucine.) Seconds after the credits have unfolded to the gooey strains of "The Glory of Love", Sidney Poitier is glimpsed necking with Katharine Houghton in the back of a cab. She is a fresh-faced San Francisco debutante type; he is a Ph.D. en route to Geneva to work for the World Health Organization. They met ten days before in Hawaii, fell in love and want to get married. But first a stop-over in San Francisco to visit her parents (Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn) and obtain their seal of approval.

The action of the movie takes place within the space of one day and concentrates on the reactions to this proposed marriage of those close close to the young couple: Tracy and Hepburn (you KNOW they're of the liberal school the minute you spot the faded F.D.R. you spot the faded F.D.R. photograph on his desk!), their Negro maid, the Mon-signor, an old family friend, and, finally, Poitier's own screen parents, the "Guess Who's" of the title.

A number of critics have complained that the Poitier character is just too good to be true and that this tends to vitiate the substance of the film. Granted, his credentials are so impressive that one wonders why he hasn't a Nobel Prize secreted away somewhere. Or perhaps he has. Admittedly, too, a corollary point raised by one reviewer as to what such an intellectual giant could see in the singularly bland Katharine Houghton occurred to me at more than one point in the film as Miss Houghton bounced merrily along on her way to self-effacement. Moreover, there is something curiously sexless about the whole arrangement, as if the Poitier-Houghton relationship were more father-daughter than man-woman.

Nevertheless, these seem minor quibbles. Guess Who's Coming To Dinner treats a sensitive and pertinent theme in an intelligent, compassionate manner. Stanley Kramer directed it and William (The Russians Are Coming, Ditto) Rose wrote the masterful screenplay.

What interested me most in seeing this movie, however, was not the subject matter so much as its two great stars, Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn. "Dinner" reunited them for their ninth and, sadly, their final — Tracy died soon after filming — screen appearance together. Having only seen two of their previous teamings (State of the Union and Pat and Mike) it's a little awkward for me to say: "Lord, but it's good to see them again." But Lord, it is. For his representatives of liberal-minded America Kramer could have done no better than with this pair who are the celluloid personifications of integrity and rugged individualism.

Lester's War: Funny Moments in a Film that Misses

By BARBARA UTECK

The ski condition report 'poor to excellent' best describes Richard Lester's new film How I Won The War in which Michael Crawford as Lieutenant Goodbody and John Lennon as Gripweed swim (walk, run, talk, talk, talk...) in a tedious mire of anti-war sentiment. The film opens in what mockingly resembles a Vietnamese jungle. Actually its Germany, the Rhine, 1945. Goodbody is about to be captured by the Germans and will then relate the memoirs' written in pencil in my own handwriting' of how he won the war.

The film revolves cynically around Goodbody's bungling pea-brained effort to lead his platoon across the deserts of North Africa in an attempt to build a cricket pitch behind the enemy lines. Lester is clearly laughing at the British but the effect of his ridicule is diminished when we remember that Lester is an American. The 'people in glass houses' cliché might easily apply. But then Lester has put himself on a pedestal: not only is he anti-war, he's anti-anti-war. This becomes increasingly evident through a series of real and replica war-time newsreels which Lester interchanges with simulated scenes of the same events. In one of these sequences a soldier bleeding with living catchup is suddenly seen in an old newsreel wounded and writhing in pain. Lester returns to "living colour"; the actor/soldier turns to the audience and says, "Did you see that?... Good!" In other words, Lester seems to be saying that war may be ugly, and you know it, but it will go on.

The simulated newsreels are only one of several new techniques explored by Lester in How I Won The War. Another technique which he employs brilliantly involves his use of colour. All the mortally wounded members of Goodbody's platoon return to life in monochromes of pink, blue, green. The pink and blue-skinned marching corpses remind us again that war will go on and on and on.

One of the more disappointing aspects of the film is the infrequency with which John Lennon appears on the screen. As Gripweed, a private in Goodbody's platoon he is overshadowed by a madcap fool who in spite of the sympathy he arouses and the medals he collects, ends up in a straight-jacket. The exploits of Gripweed and the other platoon members are humorous in the British tradition of the Goon Show and the Carry On . . . films. It's a more sophisticated humour than slapstick, although there's some of that, and one that's full of biting satire. One of the most incisively satirical scenes in the film occurs when the German officer guarding Goodbody accuses Goodbody of being a Fascist. Goodbody agrees but says, "The only trouble is I don't really dislike Jews." "Neither do I" says the German, "You can find some good in everyone".

How I Won The War is on the whole a boring series of mock war exploits. But at a few rare moments Richard Lester's sardonic insight emerges to nauseate us with its bitter cynicism. For these rare moments How I Won The War is worth seeing.

Good Jazz For T.O. Coming Up

By JACK McCaffrey

Bobby Hutcherson will appear in concert on Jan. 31, at 8:30 p.m. at Hart House. Working with the young vibraphonist in the great hall will be his new quintet from New York, including drummer Joe Chambers.

And it's FREE — thanks to the Hart House music committee. After a brief lapse last year, the committee has mercifully returned to its senses. The committee presents one major jazz concert each year, and last winter, in a stroke of well-nigh incomparable stupidity, they gave us Oscar Peterson only two nights after River-son had presented him. After a few mind-numbing pieces which all sounded the same, Peterson drove me from the hall and home to my Bud Powell records.

Fortunately for us, the committee has rediscovered its true function — to give us the opportunity to hear fresh, interesting music which we do not normally hear in this city.

Within the narrow confines of the jazz world, Bobby Hutcherson is already famous. Although he is only 27 years old, Hutcherson had three records as a leader, and has appeared on many records as a sideman with all kinds of groups. He is a musician capable of contributing to almost any kind of musical expression — from conventional mainstream-modern to the exploratory avant-garde.

Born in Los Angeles, and raised in Pasadena, Hutcherson started taking piano lessons when he was 8 years old, but did not become seriously interested in music until he was about 15. Then, when he heard Milt Jackson (vibraphonist with the Modern Jazz Quartet), he became enthusiastic about jazz, and started to work towards buying his own set of vibes.

Almost immediately, Hutcherson was playing in groups. Although he had the occasional lesson from professional musicians such as vibist Dave Pike, Hutcherson, a basically self-taught musician, learned as he went along.

Before long, he was working with musicians around Los Angeles. He gained experience with saxophonist Curtis Amy (whose group also included Carmell Jones, a disciple of trumpeter Clifford Brown) and the now-famous Charles Lloyd.

With the quintet led by the ex-Basie horn-blowers Billie Mitchell and Al Grey, the young vibist made the journey to New York in 1961. He was the first really fresh vibist since Milt Jackson, and so he was in demand. Hutcherson worked and recorded with Jackie McLean, who at the time was starting to get out of the Charlie Parker bag and explore new areas of jazz. Realizing that Hutcherson was willing and able to try new approaches to jazz, musicians like Andrew Hill, Eric Dolphy, and Tony Williams used him on their records. Hutcherson also recorded with good straight-ahead musicians like Dexter Gordon. Listen to Gettin' Around on Blue Note to hear Hutcherson's easily flowing melodic lines and relaxed rhythms.

After taking a sabbatical to think and practise, Hutcherson was back on the scene last year with the new John Handy group. Now he is out on his own, and you can hear his new group at Hart House on the last day of this month.

It appears that the benefit concert may be coming into fashion in Toronto. New York has had them for years, and much of the best jazz is heard only when some musician gets sick or injured, and all his friends (who normally can't get a gig for themselves) come out to help the cause.

When Don Ewell was hospitalized in Toronto last month, Jim Mcharg organized a benefit performance for him.

This Sunday night at the Town Tavern, another benefit will be held for Archie Alleyne, one of Toronto's best drummers, who was injured in an auto accident. Willie the Lion Smith will be flying up from New York for this concert. Also on hand will be the Rob McConnell big band, Salome Bey, Brian Brown, and many others (a jazz harpist who used to play with Miles Davis.)

There will be two shows Sunday evening — one at 6, and then at 9. The admission price of three dollars goes to Mr. Alleyne.

At the Colonial for 3 weeks is the great Earl Hines with Budd Johnson on tenor sax. If the singer that Hines has hired doesn't get in the way, it should be very exciting.

Pro Musica • Rigoletto • Dylan

By PETER GODDARD

In Toronto, critics, not just music critics, have been torch bearers and pall-bearers. Too often they have underestimated the public's intelligence, and have overestimated its information. And everything from the avant-garde to the everyday has been reduced to deadpan certainties; jazz is dead, rock is ever so in, and classical music is receiving plasma at Massey Hall. The critic seldom kisses, but always tells.

But what happened last week, then? The Toronto Symphony played three old war horses — Wagner's Der Fleigende Holländer Overture, Berg's Violin Concerto and Beethoven's Sixth Symphony — and the results seemed fresh and alive. Verdi's Rigoletto was given in a concert performance and a lot of the pasta was dropped from the score. And New York's Pro Musica dusted off some old variorum editions of Renaissance music and last Saturday at the EJB's MacMillan Theatre produced in a concert all those things Herb Alpert's fans say a classical group can't; warmth, a natural excitement, unity, taste, art.

If style is for some musicians a very complicated way of saying simple things, for the Pro Musica, directed by John W. White, it is a simple way of saying complicated things. Their program, of Rondeaux, Motets, Hymns and Laments (as well as an almost-complete Josquin Des Prez Mass) to secular music from the courts of Spain and the Low Countries, was structured to contain the most popular works at the end.

True there were errors. Elizabeth Humes' singing tended to flatness, the instrumental intonation in the first half tended to be everywhere it shouldn't be, and some of the interpretations seemed rather capricious (as in the Sumer canon sung as an encore), but only librarians worry much about the mistakes. Noticeably absent was the sterility of pedantry. That in itself was a relief. Stylistic accuracy was only a prop, not a guide: the Pro Musica brought the music to the audience and didn't require any sudden shifts of awareness on our part.

The result was entertainment. And somehow to me, this is what music is all about.

Surprisingly enough, the same was true of last Thursday's concert performance of Verdi's Rigoletto. Surprising because this was conductor Sieji Ozawa's first attempt in public of opera conducting; surprising because the work has been done and misdone by every sort of possible and impossible group of singers; and surprising because even without the psychological padding of sets, lighting and acting the results were satisfying.

As Rigoletto, Louis Quilico, doing a job that he has done from the Met in New York to Moscow, was emotionally and musically secure. Possibly, this type of production is the best one for a performer such as Quilico; he is and was a much better singer than actor.

Reri Grist's Gilda was a lighter version of the part than has been done previously in Toronto. Yet her voice and intelligence carried the part well. Unfortunately, George Shirly as the Duke, did not fare as well. After the first act his voice seemed to become arid and strained.

The star of Tuesday night's Toronto Symphony concert wasn't the orchestra, nor solo violinist Christian Ferras, but the late Alban Berg. For during the Ferras's performance of Berg's gloomy masterpiece, the Violin Concerto, it seemed as if the composer's ghost was haunting the hall. Again there were technical and interpretative slips. But what did it matter in the face of such a beautiful work so rarely performed here.

So powerful is the work, so lucid in its introspection, that it would have taken an earth tremor to overshadow its delightful gloom.

Contradictory? I think not, for the work is one of the most accessible of twelve-tone compositions written. It is a work of art, not the depressed wanderings of a madman's dream, and Ferras responded to its mood impressively.

Friends tell me that the orchestra also played the Beethoven and Wagner well. I really wouldn't know. The work and the performance of it were so consistent that one was forced to take it as a whole. I preferred at that time to take it, to experience rather than explain, to kiss, and not to tell.

Word from Columbia records says that Bob Dylan's current album won't be released in Canada for another two weeks. But Don't Look Back, the semi-documentary on his 1965 British tour has opened in Toronto. Musically, the movie is a disappointment, little of the old Dylan, none of the new. But it is worth going to just to see Dylan put down a Time reporter in one of the later scenes.

UWSAP

Now that The City Muffin Boys have emerged from hibernation, word is beginning to spread about another group that is into the long trip to build a sound. Working out in a deserted dance-hall outside Toronto is a collection (one hesitates to call them a group yet) called Uncle Wisdom and the Synthetic A Priori. UWSAP is developing a synthesis of electronic music, and a rock beat, within the structures and forms of Tibetan religious music. Sounds intriguing—and we will be looking into what they're doing later.

LOOKING BACK

Don Pennebaker's film about Bob Dylan, Don't Look Back (which opened at the New Yorker yesterday) is a misnomer. For us it is a "look back"—to the Dylan of 1965, the Bob Dylan that sang to a packed house at Massey Hall in March 1965—only a few months before this film of his tour of England was shot—the un-electrified Bob Dylan. The film is now a document. A nostalgic must for Dylan fans. Which, I guess, means most of the people reading this.

That fact makes it difficult to come to any real conclusions as to the quality of the film itself. Pennebaker has produced a piece of Cinema Veritissimus—and anyone who would enjoy watching two hours of loosely connected free-form footage on Bob Dylan, as I did, should see the film.

However, it is not a documentary. It does not "explain" Bob Dylan. It does not "tell" you anything. You watch him. For about two hours. In cars, dressing rooms, hotel room, on trains, on stage, backstage and onstage again, the camera follows him, and listens.

It's a more honest kind of cinema vérité than many of the films which use the technique; the vacuous emptiness of hotel-rooms on a road-tour, and late-night bull-sessions is there. Tedium is tedious — but it's real.

And yet, all through this "reality", I had the feeling that there was something illegitimate about it. I kept thinking of what Frank Zappa of The Mothers said about the film he is now doing the music for: "Another piece of hand-held Pennebaker horse-shit!" I felt as if we were all sitting peering through this 16 mm key-hole—and we liked it, because we all wanted to get as close to Dylan as we could.

However, Pennebaker himself has few illusions about the "reality" he is filming, or the "inconspicuousness" of his camera. "What I do is, set up the basis for a performance," he says, "and the guy agrees to perform for you. You work out the rules as you go along. Each time, the guy has to trust you."

Does Pennebaker intrude? "I couldn't. You can't make love to a girl with dry thighs."

Are there limits to this kind of technique? "No. The only limitation is the subject. The film is as interesting as what's happening."

And Bob Dylan was pretty interesting. (There will be more about Dylan in The Review in 2 weeks).

This issue should have been dedicated to Len Quiday—who took the coverphoto, all the pictures on the centre-page, the pictures on page three, and was one of the main subjects of the article on The Festival. Len has quickly made himself irreplaceable at the Varsity, The Review, and The Festival. Today is his birthday. Happy Birthday, Len, and thanks!

Catalyst, the new literary magazine campus that appeared momentarily last term, will be on sale around the campus next week for anyone who didn't get a copy last term. It is well worth buying.

and we recommend...

THEATRE

Well, Theatre Toronto opened its season with a dreary French Canadian Drama that despite the lascivious promises of homosexuality, hangings and castration never managed to punch its way out of its own paper bag. Clifford Williams has developed whether rightly or wrongly, an image of being an inventive craftsman of theatre, and that he was the Messiah for the theatre scene in Toronto. He doesn't seem to be and though its unfair to judge a company on its first work, I can't help feeling that the self-congratulations and mutual back-patting have been, let us say, premature. The Drummer Boy isn't that great, but if you feel that it is your duty, (and that is what the general tone of the publicity has been... why should people have to attend bad plays?) Student Matinees are every Sunday at 3:00, and the play continues at the Royal Alec until Feb the fourth.

Hay Fever is at the O'Keefe and has all the strength of weak, luke warm tea. It's amusing in parts, though, and will be at the O'Keefe for two weeks, student prices for almost all performances. Elsewhere, Charlie Brown is at the Playhouse, Fortune and Men's Eyes is at the Central Library Theatre, and the U.C. Players Guild starts their noon hour series next week with a short play as part of their festival... Next Tuesday, Leon Major becomes the official director of the Drama Centre production thing.

FILM

... and we recommend to the Ontario censors that they not try to keep up with our neighbours to the east. Allowing Larry Kent's film High to be shown (scheduled for Cinecity's New Cinema Club last Monday) would have been our great opportunity to show ourselves more artistically progressive than Quebec, if not in creativity at least in tolerance.

The CFB is co-sponsoring two evenings of underground films tonight and tomorrow including The Brig and Circus Notebook by Jonas "Jesus" Mekas, guiding spirit of the New York City Cinematheque. Showings begin at 7 and 9 in the Mechanical Building. Admission $1 for students and $1.50 for others. Next Monday to Thursday at the Electra is Malle's Zazie plus six Road-runner cartoons.

The most promising new film this week-end is The Stranger, a screen adaptation of Camus' Book starring Marcello Mastroianni. Among the left-overs, The Power Game, Bonnie and Clyde, and Madding Crowd are all worth seeing.

MUSIC

Monteverdi's I Combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda, and Salvatore Allegra's The Unwilling Physician will be produced at the MacMillan Theatre of the EJB Jan 19, 20, 22 and 23. The performances will be given by U of T's Opera School, the latter work conducted by the composer. The fact that the opera school is giving a premier is noteworthy in itself. But that Allegra has been brought in to conduct the work is remarkable when you consider that the Ts didn't fly in Luigi Nono to be present a few months ago at the first performance of a work commissioned by the symphony.

Claude Ryan of Le Devoir, after muttering that "his roots in Quebec aren't deep," allows as how it would be pretty exciting, Trudeau feeling as he does about Liberty and Freedom and all that. ### UBC students plan senate sit-in VANCOUVER (Special)—More than 600 University of British Columbia students decided at an open meeting last week to break senate secrecy by staging a sit-in at the next senate meeting, Feb. 14.

The motion to sit in was endorsed almost unanimously at the meeting called by two student senators, Ray Larsen and Gabor Mate.

The student senators, who had intended to resign over the secrecy issue, decided to stay on when it was evident that student opinion supported their continued tenure.

Larsen and Mate explained that they were unhappy about serving on a body that is "illegitimate, undemocratic and not responsible."

"Minutes of the meeting are a fraud," said Larsen. "They just give the air of communicating."

Student senator Mark Waldman did not intend to resign but said he was dissatisfied with the in camera policy.

"The present situation is unacceptable," Waldman said. "But quitting would do nothing but hinder the progress of student power at UBC."

Shaun Sullivan, Alma Mater Society president, said the senators should work from within to get a public gallery.

He was against the proposed sit-in on grounds that it would polarize the feeling of the senate.

"It's a ludicrous idea," he said. "I think the decision made at the meeting was based on emotions and not reasoning."

Acting UBC President Walter Gage called the sit-in motion irresponsible.

Gage, who is chairman of the senate, said he hoped the students would reconsider their decision, which he thought was made in the heat of the moment.

He said he would be amazed if the student council condones the sit-in proposal.

Dr. V.J. Okulitch, dean of science, said the students' decision to stage a sit-in is an example of mob rule.

"It's essentially a childish move," he said. "Senators must speak for themselves. They are not responsible to their electorate."

Drug concern sparks investigation

WINNIPEG, (Special)—An investigation into on-campus use of drugs has been undertaken by the University of Manitoba administration.

University President H. H. Saunderson said the investigation is a result of concern among students and staff about the use of marijuana and LSD at the university.

"The university hopes to formulate some type of policy as a result of the investigation," he said.

"Our policy could range from doing nothing to expelling people."

Student council President Chris Westdal said that the university administration should not attempt to control the moral behavior of the students.

He feels that the university should leave control of drug-use to the legal authorities since university students are citizens and should not be subjected to any more control than the general public.

Former Lance editor wants job back

WINDSOR (CUP)—John Lalor, co-editor of the University of Windsor Lance who resigned under pressure last week, wants his job back.

Lalor submitted his resignation when it appeared the senate committee on student conduct might expel him.

When the committee decided against action Lalor asked the board of publications to rescind its motion that accepted his resignation.

He cannot simply re-apply for the post because of a new senate ruling introduced since he was appointed editor in September which stipulates that student leaders in responsible positions must have a C average.

Lalor, an English major, has a D average.

Co-editor Marian Johnstone returned to her post last Friday. She also has a D average.

The student board of publications meets today to study Lalor's request.

UWO report urges: Reclassify marijuana

LONDON, Ont. (Special)—A student council committee report at the University of Western Ontario has advocated a "reasonable total approach leading to the legalization of marijuana."

Since marijuana is not addictive, the report says, the council should lobby for reclassification of the drug from the narcotic control act to the federal food and drug act.

Marijuana is presently controlled under the narcotic control act which lists it in the same category of drugs as heroin and cocaine. Under this classification, it is a federal crime to possess, traffic, import or cultivate the drug.

The report also recommends that the council urge the national department of health and welfare to "consider the legalization of the use of marijuana" to determine if the drug is able to meet the requirements of the federal food and drug administration.

Brownlee wants restructuring of VCUC

"An overworked executive and an underworked council" have prompted Glenn Brownlee (IV Vic), president of the Victoria College Union Council, to propose changes in the structure of the VCUC.

Brownlee hopes the changes will allow the council to return to what he believes is its primary concern—education.

"The fact we are being offered representation of various governing bodies is an incentive for us to become involved in academics," he says.

To equalize the work load and make council more effective, the executive will be reduced by one member. There will be one more member-at-large.

Two new positions will be created, a university government commissioner and an education research commissioner.

The remaining duties will be distributed among the members-at-large on a portfolio basis.

If the president's report is accepted, the constitutional changes required could be made in time for the March 7 VCU elections.

Opera School welcomes Maestro Allegra

By RON GRANER

A small wizened old man was led last week into a busy rehearsal hall at the Edward Johnson Building. All the performers stopped singing and began to applaud.

Maestro Salvatore Allegra had arrived in Canada.

President of the Association of Composers in Rome, Mr. Allegra is a renowned composer who has written six operas and numerous orchestral pieces performed in the world's leading concert halls, including La Scala at Milan.

Tonight Maestro Allegra conducts the Canadian premiere of his own work, The Unwilling Physician, a comedy based on Le Medecin Malgre Lui by Moliere. Tancredi a Chlorinda by Monteverdi will also be performed. Performances continue Saturday, Monday & Tuesday. The opening is nothing new to the University of Toronto Royal Conservatory Opera School.

Within the last five years it has given Canadian premieres to five works including: Benjamin Britten's Albert Herring, Carl Orff's Die Kluge, Gustaf Holst's The Wandering Scholar and the World stage premiere of Healy Willian's Dierdre of the Sorrows.

The school, Canada's only opera school, has students from as far away as Holland and New Zealand.

Some of the students are professionals who have returned to school to improve their acting technique.

Admission to the school is by audition only. There are no academic requirements.

Students are subjected to a grueling 11-hour day six days a week. They have classes in mime, pantomime, eurythmics, stage movement, acting, fencing, make up, French, Italian, German, history, vocal coaching, staging labs, theory, piano and rehearsals for major productions.

SMC swept down on PHE like the wolf on the fold and beat them 3-2 for an encore. Merlocco scored twice for SMC; Donovan had the other. Embury and Hanna led PHE.

Murray and Akiyama scored to give Trinity a 2-1 victory over Sr. Engineering. Toike that, Skule, Green scored for the losers.

SMC B operated on Scarborough's prostrate-and won, 5-3. Read about it in today's Varsity-like, infra. McCarthy (2), Murphy, Morrison and Tedris scored for SMC B. Procunier (=Latin, "instead of a cunier") had two for Scar and Hambly one (not necessarily in that order).

Business defeated Law 11, 3-1. Longpre scored twice, assisted by Hemp (I've heard of giving athletes oxygen, but this is going to far). White added the other SOB goal. Hess scored for Law.

BASKETBALL

Vic got 15 points from Ochterlony and Smith (famous Vaudeville comedy team) and took PHE, 53-49. McKenzie hooped 19 for PHE.

SMC's Raglia scored 15 points to lead the Irish over Sr. Eng., 37-36. Raglia was selected by the Italo-Hibernian Friendship Society as player of the week and was presented with a black shamrock after the game. O'Connor hit for 14 for Skule.

Scarborough, paced by Gordon's 14 points, scalloped Erindale, 50-35. Miles had 11 for Erindale. The cry goes up on the St. George cam-

Top wrestling at Varsity

The best wrestling meet at Varsity in years takes place Saturday night (7:00 p.m.) at Hart House. Invading the ancient athletic sanctuary is one of Canada's top inter-collegiate mat squads: Western Mustangs. Just a week ago, Mustangs faced last year's NCAA champs, Michigan State, in a match indicative of the calibre of competition Western can provide.

For Varsity Blues, it shapes up as their sternest opposition of the year. However, the underdog squad from U of T is really up for the big confrontation, and coach Wipper is fielding his strongest lineup of the year.

Wrestling at 123 lb. is veteran Jim Doner, at 130 lb. is proficient matman Bob Kellerman making a strong comeback after nagging injury problems, while Rick Kesten, scourge of Innis, takes the floor at 137 lb.

Ron Wilson at 145 and newcomers Rod Vinter (152), a real surprise this year, and Larry Bobbett (160), after his second straight win, will also see action, along with ever-competent Bill Allison (167), rookie Vic Helfand (177), Mike Wright (191), one of the smoothest wrestlers around, and either Alex Squires, bothered by a sore back, or Ylo Korgemagi at heavyweight.

The Varsity Boxing team is holding an exhibition on Saturday afternoon in the Hart House boxing room. Coach Tony Canzano plans it to be a scientific show of the manly art by pitting fighting style against fighting style, instead of the usual weight division against weight division (i.e. a slow methodical fighter against a fast and shifty one).

This exhibition is in preparation for the Blues' annual home and home series with R.M.C. on February 3 (at Hart House) and February 24 (in Kingston).

Squashers triumph

Varsity Blues happy Wanderers the "B" squash team recorded an unprecedented 5-0 victory over Kitchener Racquet Club in Kitchener. Join the hockey team and see Austria; join the squash and see scenic Kitchener.

Blues were led by Terry Swinton playing in the number one position who won his match 3-0. Other 3-0 winners were Mike Zimmerman and Steve MacIntyre. Howie Fluxgold and Harvey Derington both posted 3-2 victories.

Blues in little sweat to drub hapless Gryphons

By JIM MORRISON

The magnanimous Guelph Gryphons (Gryphons??) dribbled out of town Wednesday night after absorbing their twenty-fifth straight setback in league competition, a 107-71 clubbing at the hands of Varsity Blues. (The Gryphon by the way is a South African water buffalo related to the armadillo).

Next gig for the McManusmen is an away one-night stand (exhibition style) against Waterloo Lutheran Golden Hawks in the new George Hagar Memorial Gymnasium. The inconsistent Hawks are usually one of the best College teams in the country, having beaten Mac 97-79, Waterloo 94-77, Guelph 107-58, and Western 78-63. However, Western took a rematch 84-77, and Windsor thumped them 104-76.

Guelph coach Garney Henley's winning ways on the gridiron have not, unfortunately, rubbed off on his b-ball team. Well-conditioned and well-drilled, Gryphons are nonetheless bothered by a lack of overall talent, and show no signs of releasing their jealous grip on last place. And Guelph had the misfortune of meeting Varsity on the heels of the latter's loss to Western.

Guelph threatened to make a game of it as they jumped off to an early 1-0 lead. But hungry hordes of white-shirted warriors came storming back, leaving the half-time score 58-37. Bruce Dempster put on an amazing shooting display in the early action, potting 20 points in the first half, despite playing only ten minutes.

McManus gave all ten players plenty of court time and all performed well. Dempster led Varsity scorers with 26 points, followed by reliable Ron Voake with 16, John Hadden with 15, and Arvo Neidre and Mark White with 12 apiece. Guelph guards Dave Horton and Leigh Hammond were by far the best Gryphon (Gryphon?) performers, with 22 and 17 points respectively. Hammond, who flies through the air with the greatest of ease, amazed the T.V. cameras with his gymnastic dribbling and passing.

At Waterloo Lutheran, Blues are facing one of the strongest starting fives anywhere. Center Norm Cuttiford leads the team in scoring, followed by guard Pete Misikowetz — Hawks answer to Bruce Dempster. Dave Baird, Bob Bain, and Sandy Nixon constitute the remainder. Success against Howard Lockhart's Hawks depends on drawing their forwards into costly fouls. Windsor Lancers were down 56-46 at half-time against Lutheran, but early in the second half Lutheran's entire first string fouled.

Foul-line Facts:

Larry Trafford started the game for Blues at guard and showed fine form . . . for the benefit of inquisitive fans, Varsity's Ron Voake hails from San Diego and played last year at Pomona College . . . Bruce Dempster is averaging 22 points-per-game . . . Wednesday's game will be telecast over the famdamily station, Channel 11, on Saturday night at 6.30.

for Varsity:

Dempster 26, Voake 16, Hadden 15, White 12, Neidre 12, Garbe 6, Slater 6, Kirby 5, Shaw 5, Trafford 4.

for Guelph:

ACTIVITY

With both the hockey and basketball Varsity squads away from home this weekend, attention shifts to some of the sports which traditionally receive less ink but which deserve just as much support from the sporting populace.

At eight o'clock Saturday evening in the Hart House pool, U of T's body beautiful team of swimmers make their last home appearance against traditionally-strong Western CIAU champions for the past two years. Varsity's swim team has piled up honour after honour almost unnoticed. They deserve a look.

The wrestling mats are being moved into the main gymnasium for the big grappling duel between Western and Toronto. It starts at 7:00 and will be the best wrestling action available all year.

Letter from Austria

Andy Hemphill, last year's kingpin official in Interfac hockey, has been roaming and reefing (not reefing) in Europe this winter and sends this report as a prelude to Blues' partaking in the Universiade.

Greetings to all from Austria:

I assume you are now well into the hockey season and all is running well. How did football go . . . did Vic again win the Mulock Cup? Please pass on my congratulations to Messrs. Murphy and Watt for what I heard was a most pleasing football season.

I received word just yesterday that all has been arranged for me to officiate in the upcoming "Universiade" in January . . . I do not know whether I will be permitted to officiate any of the Toronto games in the tournament but that doesn't matter since all European officials are equally incapable. There are many young and relatively inexperienced officials within the Intra-mural programme who would far surpass the best of the European officials. Most people I have spoken with fully support the claims of Canadian Olympic officials regarding the officials and are more than happy to have a N. American referee their games.

Presently I am en route to Klagenfurt where I ref a game tonight in which Stu Grasham of last year's Vic hockey team is playing. The hockey is unique in Austria — the players are well schooled in fundamentals, are basically strong skaters but lack the sixth sense required for "good heads up" positional play. The fans are unbelievably wild. I have encountered nothing like it — neither in Quebec City nor in a Law-Sr. Engineering game. Referees are hated enemies who all but defy the law to call a penalty on the home team. When one combines this with timid officials it is easy to see how the home team usually wins. I have had lighted matches, cigarettes and shoes thrown at me, have been spat upon once, sworn at as I've never heard at home and grabbed as I skate near the boards. It seems to be a cast off reaction common to the European temperament which has ruined soccer in Europe.

It would be in Toronto's interest to be well liked by the crowd as they have such an influence on most officials. I might suggest they bring many souvenirs to distribute such as centennial pins etc. — not only to the opposition but liberally to the people whom the players encounter.

Blues open against Czechs: how about a telegram?

Varsity Blues' hockey team play their first game tonight in the world tournament at Innsbruck. Their opponents are the redoubtable Czechs. Tomorrow night they face the local yokel Austrian squad. Exclusive coverage of both these games will appear in Monday's Varsity.

By then we should have a good indication of Varsity's chances at bringing home all the bacon. The point is: if Blues are still in the running by the time they play their final game against Russia on Jan. 29, it might be a nice thing if they received some sort of epistle from U of T students showing that we are alive and not hiding in the Wallace Room.

The best bet for this and to show also of course, our undying support for the Blue and White cause (choke) is one of those multi-name telegram deals. These can be very effective and appreciated at dressing room time just before the big game.

The Athletic Office has offered to help share cost, so the price per name would be as low as 20 cents. Anyone interested in helping to organize this fledgling operation please show in the Varsity sports office at 91 St. George for a short meeting this afternoon at 1:15.

Gymnasts away

U of T gymnasts hit the road this weekend for a five-university meet at Queen's. Taking part for Varsity will be John Kortright (all events), Carl Sloane (free cal. and vaulting), Mauro Dipasquale (rings), Arthur Stein (pommels, high bar and parallels), and Jamie (all events).

Blues drop opener to Czechs, then roar back

By PHIL BINGLEY
INNSBRUCK, Austria — Varsity Blues ran into the good and the bad over the weekend as they tasted initial action at the Universiade hockey tournament in Innsbruck.

In Friday night's opener against Czechoslovakia, Blues found themselves trailing 3-0 after only two minutes and 13 seconds, and 6-1 after the second period. They rallied somewhat in the final 20 minutes but the final score stood Czechoslovakia 8 Varsity 4.

However it was a completely different story the following night against Austria as Blues thrashed the weak hosts 10-1.

In other tournament games an awesomely strong Russian squad ran roughshod over Austria 22-0 and Finland 3-0.

At this stage there appears little chance of a Varsity upset over the favored Russians.

Against the Czechs, Blues were completely disorganized in those first few, disastrous minutes — so tight they couldn't do a thing with the puck. Their play improved considerably thereafter and they carried the game through much of its latter stages. But by then it was too late.

The Czechs performed like machines, always onside, seldom giving the puck away. (Although Blues said after the game that the Czech body-checking wasn't too tough.)

Toronto goals came from Paul McCann, Paul Laurent and Bob McClelland who clicked twice. All were scored along the ice from right in front of the net.

Blues' netminder, John Wrigley, was hurt at the end of the first period and had to be replaced by Pete Adamson for the rest of the game. Adamson also played against Austria.

The Czech team has three players on its roster from Sparta Prague, the second-place team in Czechoslovakia's top league. Eight members of last year's national squad played for Sparta.

Shots on goal were 32-25 for the winners.

Saturday's Austria game was simply no contest. The Austrians fielded a mediocre unit, and a top interfaculty team could have beaten them easily. For Varsity, McClelland had two goals again as did Ward Passi. Other goals were scored by Gord Cunningham, Murray Stroud, Jim Miles, Laurent, and Don Fuller.

A member of last year's

Blues, Fuller was picked up for this tournament from the senior Marlies. He's taken Brian Jones position on right wing with McClelland and Stroud while Jones moves back to defense. This shuffle was necessitated by defenseman Doug Jones' weakness after losing 13 pounds in a two-week virus bout.

McClelland's first goal, which opened the scoring, was a picture play, as he skated through the whole Austrian team and scored on a rising backhand. Blues' fourth goal was scored by Passi on a beautiful

Demonstrators want committee overhaul

By ANNE BOODY
and
DAVE FRANK

The campaign against campus "complicity" in the Vietnam war was carried to the steps of Simcoe Hall Friday afternoon by 75 demonstrators who demanded to speak to Acting President J. H. Sword.

They pushed, chanted and hammered on the doors until a delegation of three was admitted to present an open letter.

They charged that university police had not provided adequate protection for the protestors at Thursday's demonstration outside the Galbraith Building. They also said that T. G. L. Lawson, assistant safety and security officer, "took part with the engineers in burning signs and leaflets" and "openly encouraged" engineers as they scuffled with the pickets.

The group demanded that the present Placement Service advisory committee be dissolved and that a new one be set up with a majority of students and with final authority.

They charged that the present committee has a "built-in deadlock." (The Students Administrative Council has already announced it is dissatisfied with the composition and procedures of the committee and has withdrawn from it temporarily.)

About 150 students, many of them from the engineering faculty, gathered across the road from the demonstration. They restricted themselves to catcalls and a few snowballs.

"Why waste the good clean snow?" advised Ernie Pearson (IV APSC), engineering society vice-president.

A demonstrator came by handing out copies of their open letter. Engineers took them and promptly crumpled them up.

"We're going in," shouted one of the leaders through his loud hailer. Then the marchers moved in on the doors, reaching over the shoulders of the three police to pull at the large brass knockers.

"If we don't get in, nobody else does," decided one (see Demonstration, Page 3)

"We want Sword, we want Sword!" chanted pickets outside Simcoe Hall Friday. They didn't get in, but delivered a Wednesday ultimatum to the administration.

Rochdale's book—an anti-Macpherson report

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

Know-Place a radical high-school project in Vancouver has received a good deal of publicity lately but no one has pointed out that all its students are studying art. They can choose their own courses and after going through mathematics and Latin and others all settled on art.

Meanwhile, William Hofer, a teaching assistant at Simon Fraser University decided to teach his class how to handle ideas before he really got into the course. He told his students they should read one chapter of any book for the next class and be prepared for a discussion. They all read the first chapter of the textbook—so determined were they to please their instructor.

Both of these examples are central in the problems of student-centered teaching, as opposed to teaching that merely prepares students in ways that the society around dictates and both are implicit problems in a new book, The University Game, published last Saturday.

TUG, the first publication by people connected with Rochdale College, is a look at the modern university and how it has changed to conform to the wishes of the technological society. In this deeper analysis, it's a sort of anti-Macpherson Commission report. Macpherson was concerned with patching up with a few reforms; TUG is concerned with asking what the university and what education really is.

It doesn't really confront these high aims adequately but as the first extended critique of the Canadian university scene it fills an important gap.

TUG's 12 essays, edited by two Rochdale men, Dennis Lee, a former English lecturer at Victoria College and H. Adelman, a philosophy lecturer at York University, all start from the assumption so common in New Left circles that the modern university is rarely more than a servant to the technological society. It supplies the trained men and the research for business and industry. What the essayists do to build on to that theme, is what distinguishes them.

George Grant, McMaster's head of religion, offers an historical analysis of where universities are going, in the most intriguing essay in the book, and the most frustrating.

Grant sees that all disciplines, even the humanities and philosophy are becoming less and less concerned with the search for the better nature of man and more concerned with cataloguing, outlining the history of thought, labelling. Thus students can study the concept of sexuality as seen by Tolstoy and De Sade and never have to decide which concept is a better prescription for one's conduct. That, after all would be a value judgement.

Technology, Grant says, is the new religion, to which all North American society has put its faith and to which universities, therefore, had to gear themselves.

The result is that the university is the new church, sermonizing to its congregation how to be ready for society—preparing them for it. Other disciplines than the hard sciences have less concrete things to show for their labors and therefore turn to those catalogues and commentaries and endless new editions.

Grant's picture is horrifying, pointing to the logical next step—rather like the (see GAME page 8)

Around Campus

New SAC reps questioned on issues

Three Students Administrative Council representatives acclaimed to seats left vacant by resignations are against restricted use of the campus Placement Service.

A fourth, Dale Wilson (II Mus) could not be reached for comment.

John Palo (IV APSC) was not sure whether his Placement Service stand was taken on moral or pragmatic grounds.

"The restriction harms only the engineers. It doesn't affect the Vietnamese war."

Both Paloc and Paul Mayne (II APSC) favor student co-operation with the faculty, but are against "student takeover."

Paloc accused SAC of trying for student power in a hostile manner, and said engineers favored co-operation.

Nursing rep Judy Carson (II Nurs) has recently returned from a Christmas trip to Mexico.

"In Mexico the students seem to riot just for fun," she said. "I hope the same situation doesn't develop at the University of Toronto."

She was unsure about giving financial aid to draft-dodgers, but thought "SAC should provide information to any newcomers to Canada — from the U.S. or elsewhere."

She said she hopes to form an opinion on many campus issues by listening to both sides of the argument in the SAC debates.

U. C. Festival tickets selling well

About 150 concert tickets and 450 lecture tickets are left for the University College Babel festival.

Publicity Director Hersh Ezrin (IV UC) says more than 80 per cent of the total numbers of tickets, worth more than $8,000 have been sold.

A film produced at the University of Toronto will be shown as part of the festival.

S.O.B., an eight-minute black-and-white short, was produced by Mary Omatsu (II UC), president of the Centennial Film Board.

The film employs the split-screen technique to explore the myth of the American woman. It opposes "the American dream, propaganda and violence" which are the festival's themes.

Edmund Burke fails to move students

Fifteen members of the right-wing Edmund Burke Society Friday picketed a model United Nations General Assembly at the university's Convocation Hall.

Brandishing placards, the demonstrators handed out pamphlets proclaiming the UN a tool of communism and a grave menace to freedom.

Their hand-out urged the Canadian government to withdraw from the "corrupt and anti-Western UN" and to use tax savings so Canadians "will have more money to invest in Canadian industry."

Chairman Paul Fromm (II SMC) said his group wanted "to ignite a spark of dissent" among the students at the forum.

But the spark didn't seem to catch with the 250 high school students at the assembly. Unmoved by the performance, a pretty student usher remarked, "Oh, they're just dumb."

Student rights major cause of unrest

Dissatisfaction with the structure of university government was a major factor in last week's protest demonstrations, says Tom Faulkner, Students Administrative Council president.

However, he said last night that neither he nor SAC favored Friday's demonstration outside Simcoe Hall and that it was, in fact, detrimental to the university.

In a statement Friday Faulkner noted: "At the present time the 25,000 staff and students who make up the university community have no legal responsibility for the running of their institution."

"The realization of this fact is behind the dissatisfaction felt by faculty and students over the existing structure of our university, and it is a major factor behind the decision of a small group to demonstrate here today (Friday)."

The statement also asked that "a special commission be established immediately to make changes in the governing structure of the university consistent with the democratic rights of its members."

"Students have no rights at all now," Faulkner said. "Everybody taking an active part in the university should have a say in its workings, even the men who clean off the blackboards."

Peter Szekely announces SAC candidacy

By BRIAN CRUCHLEY

The first student in the running for next month's election for Students Administrative Council president, Peter Szekely, says SAC is wasting time on sensational issues.

Szekely (III UC) says his campaign for the Feb. 15 contest will centre on concrete issues such as the lack of eating facilities on campus.

SAC is involving itself in "hollow posturing" when it spends an excessive amount of time on the Placement Service issue, Szekely says. Meanwhile it is disgraceful that many students eat like "a bunch of cattle" in overcrowded cafeterias.

Szekely, a political science and economics student, suggested that SAC undertake a program to provide eating facilities in the old textbook store and Sidney Smith Hall.

Eleven years ago, Szekely fled the Communists in his native Hungary and seven months later came to Toronto with his family.

Currently he is president of the University of Toronto Debating Union. This year he has reorganized the union, cutting down on the number of out-of-town debates and increasing on-campus UTDU activities to include 24 debates.

He is against SAC's recent decision on the Placement Service because "such legislation takes away the rights of the engineers."

However, he added, it is unrealistic to expect SAC not to make moral decisions.

"SAC should make the right moral decisions," Szekely said. "I am against coercion. Keeping the engineers out of the Placement Service was coercion."

Szekely feels there is a serious communication gap between the campus and SAC. He proposes to close this gap by establishing the position of press officer within SAC.

The press officer, through The Varsity, would inform the campus of what the various SAC commissions are doing and where volunteers are needed.

Szekely would like to see the "less sensational, but more important news about SAC" reported in The Varsity.

However Szekely affirms the student's right to be apathetic about SAC and its activities since the student's prime purpose in attending university is "to get an education in an academic environment."

We would like to defeat the prevalent "bad guys" approach to the university administration that pervades SAC.

"It is ridiculous to assume that the administration is here to subvert us and not help us," he said.

While SAC is a political instrument for students' interests in society and the university, it should not be political within itself, he said.

Szekely reports he already has 100 students lobbying and working for him throughout the campus.

He feels SAC was "juvenile" in its recent decision to turn down representation on the Senate. SAC should have the opportunity to present briefs to the university through the proper channels.

SAC doesn't understand the power structure of the university. I don't and no one does; it is very complex. How can we push for power when we don't know where the power lies?"

While Peter Szekely firmly states that he is not against progress, he feels SAC often moves ahead too irresponsibly, unmindful of other considerations.

"When demands are made and not fully met, we all know the saying 'too little' too late." We should look at the other side of the coin and ask ourselves if we are demanding too much, too soon.

Sword answers demonstrator's demands

Acting-President J. H. Sword has urged members of the university community to "make use of the duly constituted and civilized procedures open to them."

He said in an interview last night that he objected to the "anonymity" of the Jan. 19 Co-ordinating Committee which delivered an open letter to Simcoe Hall Friday afternoon.

He said the letter had not been communicated to him by university officials until an hour after the demonstration began and that he had "unbreakable engagements" at the time.

"I don't want to minimize the quality or the seriousness of the issues involved," he said, "but what kind of judgment can you make about an anonymous group like this committee instructing the President to appear?"

Mr. Sword emphasized that the Placement Service advisory committee was established "in accordance with normal university procedures."

"Its composition and terms of reference were acceptable to the Students' Administrative Council."

He told reporters that SAC had not informed him of its dissatisfaction with the Placement Service committee. At its last meeting SAC decided to "temporarily withdraw."

Mr. Sword also said the charges against T. G. L. Lawson, assistant safety and security officer, were false.

Mr. Sword said he felt this statement answered the demonstrators' questions. He does not intend to make any further statement.

went back in to ask Mr. Ross to give assurance that Mr. Sword would reply to their open letter by Wednesday morning.

For half an hour the demonstrators paraded through the slush. The crowd of engineers left for classes at 2 p.m. By then the marchers were growing cold and restless.

Just as the situation was getting ugly at a blocked side door, where a man was demanding entry to the post office, the delegation returned and the protesters gathered around.

"The issue is far from being resolved," reported Drache. "We must face the fact that this university has a policy that excludes students."

He charged Mr. Ross and Dr. Woodside with "arrogance," "mystification" and "wishy-washy replies."

"Unless we get answers," said Weisdorf, "we'll amass here in numbers 10 and 20 times as large on Wednesday and demand he answer our questions."

demonstrator. "It is our right as students to speak to the president of the university."

"We want Sword," they chanted, "We want Sword."

"Beat Sword into Ploughshares," one of the signs read.

Ten minutes later the door was unlocked and a delegation, consisting of Irv Weisdorf (III UC), Bill Johnston (SGS), and Dan Drache, a graduate student, was let into the building. They returned shortly.

"The President has refused to see us," reported Weisdorf. The engineers cheered loudly.

He said they were told that Registrar Robin Ross and Provost Moffat Woodside would speak to them.

"What's a provost anyway," wondered the protesters, "We want Sword."

"Ross has nothing to say to us," said Johnston. "He can't negotiate. We'll settle only for Sword."

Ten minutes later they

de-grading

A group of fourth-year history students were complaining last week about grades they had received on essays just returned by a particular professor. Evidently they found their Bs, B-s and B+s inadequate to the worth of their essays; and they were particularly adamant that third-year students in the class may have been marked with lighter standards than they — how else would they get marks as high as fourth-year students.

Complaints such as these are heard so often around this university that they have

all cards down

When 75 demonstrators gathered on the steps of Simcoe Hall Friday with more demands regarding the advisory committee on the Placement Service, they found themselves merely frustrated. They also participated in a little comedy that contained no humor.

Acting President John Sword could not see delegates from the demonstrators but Registrar Rabin Ross, true to his dictum that he will never lose faith in students no matter what, did see them. Of course, he is the officer in charge of student delegations and petition-wielders.

All this was a formality, though, because Simcoe Hall wasn't about to meet the demonstrators' demands even though the demands are the most sensible yet. Briefly, they are based on the premise that the administrative officers are merely civil servants on campus and therefore should have little to say in decisions, particularly when the matter involved is the Placement Service which is financed entirely out of student fees.

While they may be laughable, though, these and the many other complaints about the grading system point out the absurdity of the system.

We've all had essays or exams in which the grades were far out of line with what we knew was the value of the work done. The mark in those cases didn't mean a thing.

You should have a chance to discuss your work with your professor and defend it if necessary; pick up new ideas and interpreta-ants on campus and therefore should have little to say in decisions, particularly when the matter involved is the Placement Service which is financed entirely out of student fees.

By meeting the demand that no administration delegates be on the committee to advise on the running of the Placement Service, Simcoe Hall would give up part of its present power. Simcoe Hall is not likely to do that voluntarily, and its officers, therefore, cite the work the committee has done so far and say that nothing more can be done.

Clearly an impasse has been reached that small demonstrations will not break through. Fortunately some members of the Ad Hoc Committee have come to see that their tactics should be changed to some other type of action. Demonstrations often arouse animosities; they don't necessarily gain support for the cause or arouse anyone's consciences.

tions if possible. Some professors allow that but very few students take advantage of the chance because the others often have become yes-men who feed the professor what he wants to hear. If they get a low mark they think "Well, it wasn't exactly what he wanted" and leave the problem there. Obviously a student doesn't need to be able to think if he knows what a professor wants.

We know that university departments defend grading on the grounds that some standard is necessary to help them decide who gets into graduate school and who doesn't. But we also know that a good number — maybe the majority — of graduate students are intellectual pygmies who have made graduate education as sterile and as empty of thought as first year.

Either the standards are too low or the grading system does not give preference to the really bright people. When you consider that grading allows a form of submission to the professor's ideas, you see that the latter is true and therefore the former has no meaning. Standards are neither high nor low when they just don't work.

More important though, grading leads to a form of competition. If you get a high mark, you know that someone else gets a low one. After all not everyone can pass and not everyone can get as high a mark as everyone else. Therefore the rush for marks, particularly among those who still haven't unlearned their high-school training, becomes a method of self-realization. In this way, the rush for marks becomes a method for the insecure person to justify his being alive. So grading actually works to shunt a bunch of neurotics into graduate school.

Other people use their grades with a slightly different end in mind: scholarships. These place education and learning on a purely materialistic level.

With this materialistic aspect and with the earlier psychological aspect, grading more and more fits into the survival-of-the-fittest aspect of competition; the same one that allows all the bad by-products of capitalism to occur and extends logically to the level of the absurd in war. This may seem a rather drawn-out piece of logic, but look around, it's there and you're a part of it if you accept and work within the system.

Grading is chiefly responsible for making the university the sterile but efficient place which it has become and is the one way professors and lecturers have of maintaining their superiority over you. They don't have to earn your respect when they know you have to earn their marks.

hollow men, stuffed men

Sir:

I have in the past been let down somewhat by a few of the escapades of my engineering colleagues, but I have never been as abhorred by such a complete disrespect for human dignity as I witnessed Thursday. The very engineers who only yesterday were adamant in their demands for individual freedom, today demonstrated their true attitude by pelting snowballs at people armed only with placards and guts.

One girl, on noticing her friend hiding behind a car, said, "What's the use in coming if you're going to hide?"

And this is the crux. The protesters came because of individual commitment — a commitment to stand for their belief in mankind. The engineers existed only as a mob — and without purpose or feeling. To believe one is right and to express it is the most expedient road to truth; but to believe another is wrong and to deny him expression is an utter anomaly — the anomaly pervading the social regression of the self-satisfied, epitomized by the engineers today.

I have played football and hockey for Skule, have worked in the BFC and Skule Night. Never again. The complete repulsion experienced because of the ugliness of massive intolerance is too high a price.

I am tired of defending engineers, passing it off as spirit. Depriving someone of sight is not a prank. A girl's cut face is not beautiful. One wondering at the snow's beauty turned into the mob's armband is not to be ridiculed. As for the engineers, Eliot's opening:

"We are the hollow men
We are the stuffed men
Leaning together Headpiece filled with straw."

separate issues

Sir:

It was not clear whether Thursday's protesters were demonstrating against Canadian involvement in the Vietnam war or against the on-campus presence of companies supplying the US with war materials. The two issues as they affect this campus are separate. Organized opposition to Dow's recruiting here is felt by many to disregard the right of the individual to determine the nature of his employment. This is the issue as it affects the politics of this campus. Yet those who hold this view may well be opposed to Canadian complicity in the war and feel that employees of companies supplying war materials are more guilty than others. To oppose the war and Canadian involvement in it by opposing Dow recruitment on our campus is thus an ambiguous protest. There is also a danger that those who oppose Dow's presence here delude themselves that their complicity in the war is thereby lessened: it is not. As observed at the post-demonstration debate, we are all guilty by virtue of our government's highly equivocal foreign policy.

It is by protesting our country's economic and political involvement in the war that we may demonstrate our refusal to acquiesce to the war rather than by opposition to Dow-like companies recruiting on our campus. Such opposition is less a registering of anti-war protest than unjustified intrusion into the sphere of individual decision making and a whitewash of the "majority" conscience. Opposition to the presence of Dow on this campus and opposition to Canadian involvement in the war are discrete issues. As a result of their confusion in yesterday's march, the intent of the demonstration was ambivalent.

Derek Allen, (III Trin.)

cynical complacency

Sir:

I cannot let Thursday's demonstration and Bill Charlton's repulsive contribution to the debate in Convocation Hall pass without comment. First, let me establish the context in which I speak. I am an American, professor's wife, mother of four, and a graduate student at the University of Toronto. I am not a political activist (that's a full-time job and I already have two of those) but I have a real concern about the present state of our society and a real investment in its future. Among the tendencies represented in the line of march I place myself among the moderates.

I was a member of the anti-Vietnam demonstration because I believe demonstrations are a legitimate way to press for political action and a way to dramatize a moral position. Ordinary political processes, elections, lobbying elected representatives, and so on, have limited applicability in this case. I was in the street — with a bunch of brutish unruly youths bruising me with hard-thrown snowballs — because I feel that pressure through ordinary channels has failed and because I wanted to declare my stand.

Mr. Charlton, in his arrogant harangue, said that the demonstrators were accomplices with everyone else in Canada in Canada's aid to the U.S. in fighting an unjust war. No one suggests that a demonstration absolves guilt. But I refuse to sit back like Mr. Charlton and say with cynical complacency that everyone is black.

Contrary to his simplistic views, there are legitimate means of expressing dissatisfaction which do not involve revolution. Demonstration is one of them. I demonstrated because I want to change, not overthrow, the system.

Ross sets placement record straight

I refer to the letter in your issue of the 19th January called "An Open Letter to the Engineering Students at the University of Toronto".

Among other things this letter discusses the composition of the Advisory Committee on the Placement Service. In so discussing, the letter takes little or no account of the facts of the situation. The facts are:

- (1) The Committee consisted of 14 members.
- (2) 5 members were students nominated by the SAC. The students initially nominated were all members of the SAC.
- (3) 5 members were nominated by the Association of the Teaching Staff. It is utterly untrue to suggest, as the letter did, that any attempt was made to influence the Association in its choice of members.
- (4) 1 member was nominated by the University of Toronto Alumni Association. Again, it is a complete perversion of the truth to suggest that any attempt was made to influence the membership.
- (5) 3 members of the Committee were nominated by the Acting President of the University — the Dean of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, the Vice-Provost of the University, and myself.

The Committee has now held four lengthy meetings, the minutes of which are all available for public inspection. The essence of these meetings is as follows:

- (1) At its first meeting, the Committee unanimously agreed that I should continue to act as Chairman of the Committee. The Committee also unanimously agreed, that while its actual meetings should not be open to the public and the press, the minutes, as approved by the Committee, should be used in whatever way members of the Committee thought desirable.
- (2) At its second meeting, the Committee defeated by 7 votes to 6 a proposal that it was not at present practical to make a distinction between companies using the facilities of the Placement Service. The text of the defeated motion ran: "that this Committee does not deem it to be possible or desirable for the University at the present time to make the moral judgments necessary to implement the SAC resolution".

On the defeat of this motion, the Committee then approved, with two dissenting votes, the following motion: "that until such time as it is instructed to conduct its affairs in another manner, the Placement Service continue its activities in the traditional manner."

In view of this decision, I advised the Acting President that the Placement Service should now arrange for the resumption of interviews by the Dow Chemical Company, which had been suspended for the time being towards the end of November.

At its third meeting on December 20th, the Committee rejected by 7 votes to 4 a motion to the effect that the Committee "considers the establishment of such moral policy as that suggested by the Students' Administrative Council both desirable and possible". At the same meeting, the Committee was tied 5-5 on the proposal to the effect that "immediately companies scheduled to use the Placement Service be officially requested to reveal the extent of their contributions to the Vietnam war effort."

At its fourth meeting on January 5, the Committee was informed by the representatives of the Students' Administrative Council that the Council executive was proposing to appoint new representatives to the Committee, as soon as this could be arranged by the Council. The Committee also agreed unanimously that, in their view, it was appropriate that the Placement Service should continue to put students of the University into contact with possible employers.

These are the facts concerning the composition and the activities to date of the Advisory Committee on the Placement Service.

student power is in committees

Although most SAC reps will not admit it, real power in this university is shifting from their hands into those of ordinary elected students who are sitting on the curriculum committees of the various faculties. This shift in effective power is occurring gradually and SAC is doing little to counteract it, control it, or at least benefit from it.

Power then is shifting from a centralized body, SAC, to the decentralized committee.

This is "student-power" in the real sense of the word. It follows logically from the past activities of activists on this campus. It might be defined as the belief that students at university have a right to be involved in their own education and to improve on it where necessary because education is most relevant to their being here. It does not require a stand on the war in Viet Nam, discrimination or any other social problem. This role is understandable and desirable, given that a students' role at this university centers about learning.

The student who sits on committees is in an ideal position. He represents a homogeneous, small, well-defined constituency for whom he can speak confidently and whose interests are not too different from his own. Meaningful discussion is achieved between himself and his fellows and between himself and the faculty members. Achievements may be minor and short term or otherwise. But they are easily identifiable and intimate to his studies. Bureaucracy is left to others—as are headlines.

But problems are created in two areas. First, all reps. are not chosen by the department heads rather than by the students in the department. Second, if discussions do break down, there is no real recourse to any higher student body for support.

SAC reps, on the other hand must deal with a college-wide constituency (in most cases) that is too large, too heterogeneous and amorphous for meaningful interaction or identification. The reps. tend to be drawn from one particular discipline and have views and interests that are identifiable only with that discipline. Further, because they are very much delegates at large, they are forced into the role of minor bureaucrats in their involvement with the entire university rather than with one particular faculty. Only those whose ego needs Varsity headlines to survive manage to achieve any real satisfaction. Often satisfaction comes on issues alien to their constituency. The fact that representatives must be elected on a faculty rather than college basis, makes that representation questionable. The colleges and their councils have ceased to become meaningful political bodies. More especially, since the growth of the departmental student-staff committees.

Further, SAC is not, because it cannot, influence the manner in which these committees are formed or how they should function. If a impasse is reached on these committees, SAC cannot provide a council of support. SAC is ineffective.

The solution? SAC representatives must be elected on a faculty rather than college basis. Representation could be proportional to student enrollment and representatives would meet to discuss faculty as well as campus problems. It would put representation on a more meaningful basis and allow the true interests of students on this campus to be represented. It would meaningfully involve SAC in the changes occurring on campus and give that tired body new life.

"Spiritus Sanctus"

Seven thirty Monday morning. Parched dry, and the Embassy doesn't open for four hours. What to do? How can body and soul be kept together? Seek religion, brother. For the only way you can drink on campus is by getting religion.

The beauty of our adulterated Xianity lies in its simplicity. There are no card-carrying Xians, so you may pass yourself off as Catholic, Lutheran, or whatever flavor you like. Unless of course you wear that three pound heirloom cross your grandmother failed to make heaven on. Sure sign of a phony.

If you have decided to follow the religious path, the itinerary of the High Holy Grail is as follows.

Those dedicated beyond reason will start with the early mass at St. Thomas Aquinas chapel. To pass for Catholic it is necessary only to mumble totally incomprehensible responses. The priest will assume that you are a purist, and are replying in fractured Latin. He may be somewhat startled when you grab the Communion chalice and keep it to your lips, but the early morning hour explains everything. Anyhow, your sins are forgiven.

Linger with Aquinas as long as possible, for there is a bleak, unprofitable period ahead. The next stop is Trinity Chapel, and the wine flows like molasses. Zeal is no reason for expense. Drink too much here and you may be asked to worship in the church of your second choice. So stop at Trinity only on those weak, desperate mornings.

If you are a regular on the Trail, you will know that Holy Communion at Hart House can be pure holy hell. On United Church of Canada mornings, at least. I believe it was in the days of the Very Rev. Muchless that an attempt was made to curb sensuality and lasciviousness within the church by substituting Welchade for the real thing.

No doubt the United Church feels very smug about being so modern, and having its faith locked away in 'tiny flavor buds bursting with religion', which come to life with the adding of water. This poses the question of whether portability of the church is a threat to the transistor radio.

By now you are ready to dash on to St. Basil's for mid-morn mass. The service here can't compare with that of Aquinas; no chance at all to grab the chalice. Young moderns have found that the easiest thing to do is to sip and jump to your feet, advancing in the communion line by a few paces so you can do it over again. This can be repeated to religious fulfilment.

All there remains now is to both switch and fight. Switch into your oldest jacket, canvas shoes, and air of rumpled disdain, and fight your way to the Massey College bar. You can make like an insider by calling the goldfish by their first names: Massey is an intimate place.

This is admittedly a lot of effort simply to get an off-hours drink. In the old days it was never so difficult. Stanley Taylor's Tri-M Society used to meet every Thursday in the JCR for wine and cheese parties. The Merry Mirth-makers, or Mirthful Merry-makers, had a wide following which had adopted the Parkdale wine store on Spadina, much in the way that other Societies adopt children.

Eager young drunks of female dimension were initiated into the Society by having their tresses gummed up with the thickest sherry available. There was such reluctance to undergo this ceremony, that by the second secret meeting, membership stood at twenty-five.

Trade reciprocity was achieved by the males bringing the wine, and girls the cheese. Further commerce between members was limited only by personalities and Federal legislation against the transporting of minors across provincial boundaries for immoral purposes.

The moral of the story is that to drink on campus, you must be religiously or socially elect. Otherwise, drink under the nose of the Administration.

THE YANKEES THE YANKEES

by Ian Harrison

This Thursday evening, hopefully at 7:30 p.m., a bus will pull up at the International Student Centre on St. George St. About three dozen stiff, tired Americans will clamber out, stretch their limbs, and begin an exciting weekend bash — much of it at your expense.

Until the following Monday evening, when the show will be over, at least 30 of them, and 30 other U of T students, will be wined and dined in good Canadian fashion. On Friday morning they'll tour downtown Toronto. Early that evening they'll enjoy a reception at Hart House. Still later, they'll dine at Ed's warehouse Restaurant, and watch Theatre Toronto's The Drummer Boy at the Royal Alex.

On Saturday they'll be given a sherry party and lunch at the Park Plaza Hotel. Dinner will be held at Le Provençal, followed by an evening of NHL hockey at Maple Leaf Gardens (Chicago at Toronto). On Sunday they'll take in a sleigh ride; Sunday night they'll stay at Hart House Farm near Caledon. Monday will be crowned with a farewell dinner at the Ports of Call.

Toss in an additional dance, or perhaps one or two frat parties, as well as three afternoon seminars on Anti-Americanism, and you have quite a weekend. It's all in the name of International Understanding, for it's the U of T half of the ninth annual Tarheel Exchange.

Eight years ago the first exchange of students between the University of North Carolina (UNC) at Chapel Hill, N.C., and the University of Toronto blossomed under the personal friendship between the then-Chancellor of UNC and present U of T President Claude Bissell. Every year since, a group of U of T students have been weekend guests at UNC, and have in turn hosted their UNC counterparts for a similar weekend here. This year the 16,000 students on the American campus are sending 30 delegates, four or five alternates, and two chaperones. Last November, 30 U of T students went south.

Bus trip down taught humility

"The bus trip down was really bad," said Stephen Gerring (IV VIC), chairman of the Tarheel Exchange's publicity committee. "It really taught humility; you couldn't shave or bath, and we got there very tired and grubby as all get out." The group chartered a bus ($20.00 per student, round trip) and left Toronto about 8:15 p.m., Wednesday, November 15. By 7:30 the following evening they were in Chapel Hill, 850 miles away. On the way down they had toured Washington, spent a few hours in the city, and had visited President Kennedy's grave in the Arlington National Cemetery.

They spent their first few hours in Chapel Hill socializing over pizza and Cokes with their American hosts, and then everyone split up with his/her co, or buddy, and went home for the night. The students stayed in co-ops, fraternities, sororities and private homes. Some were even put up in a turkey farm.

After the game came a hay-ride, supper, and a square-dance. The dance broke up around 11:00 p.m., and then it was "back to the frat parties." Exclaimed Gerring, "Those five days would physically destroy anybody!"

Sunday morning was again free, and again most of the Canadians slept in. By noon they were assembled at the luxurious Quail Roost, "a sort of country Hart House, without athletic facilities". After an "excellent" lunch of southern-fried chicken, the students sat down for the second seminar, "Students In and Out", on student alienation.

"This hippy guy read a poem in which he swore like you never heard before," said Gerring. "He set the tone for the rest of the day — unfortunately." Although terming the main discussion "a waste", Gerring said that smaller groups broke away from the hippy spokesman, and that everyone got "really involved".

After that came dinner at the homes of faculty members, "one of the best parts of the trip", and an on-compu-talent show. "We're not going to have a talent show here when they come," said Gerring. "We just couldn't compete. Their programme was fantastic, and every performer was a student. All of us were just astounded."

Near midnight, after the talent show, everybody changed again for the trip to Camp New Hope, UNC's counterpart to Hart House Farm. In the main lodge there was more music, more dancing, and more discussion on the afternoon's seminar. The students — the ones who slept — curled up in sleeping bags in bunk houses.

8:00 a.m. Monday breakfast featured grits, "a source of no little humour". By noon everyone had drifted back to Chapel Hill and had reconvened at a German restaurant, where the Canadians were treated by their hosts.

That afternoon saw the third seminar, this time on Black Power. The featured speaker was a Black Power advocate, "articulate, bellicose and forthright", who generated a spontaneous discussion. Gerring thought this best of all the seminars.

The weekend finally wound up with another dinner at another out-of-town eating-place. Then, after a very emotional parting, during which each American host received a $2.00 U of T night-shirt, the Canadians piled back into their bus and headed home. They made the journey in 17 hours, and, said Gerring, "That one was worse than coming down."

Lucky students chosen by board

The whole trip cost each of the 30 lucky U of T students $22.00 (for the bus and the night-shirts), plus food en route. The Americans looked after everything down there; extra incidentals, therefore, were entirely optional.

How were the U of T representatives picked? — Ads were placed in The Varsity calling for applications from all but freshmen, 110 students responded. Then each applicant was interviewed by a board whose membership was subject to the scrutiny of SAC's external affairs commission. The interviewees were questioned on their reasons for wanting to go to the U.S., and on their attitudes to their courses, Black Power, President Johnson, French-Canada, Student Power, etc.

Last year there were many complaints that participation in the Tarheel Exchange (and in the Harvard Exchange) was limited to a select elite of students in one or two colleges. This situation led to the adoption by the external affairs commission of a rule restricting any further exchange to no more than seven members from any one faculty, college, or school. Of the 15 men and 15 women students taking part this year, nearly 43 per cent came from Victoria and Saint Michael's Colleges (which last year together held 4082 full-time undergraduates). Less than four per cent came from New (population last year, 1072).

And of the glittering array of events planned for the visitors (and the 30 U of T participants) this weekend, only the seminars, of course, are open to the rest of the campus.
They will be held at 2:00 p.m. on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, and will all be chaired by Associate Professor R. C.
Brown of the history department.

Financing—a question of priorities

Even if participation in the exchange could be made truly representative of the campus, the question would still remain, "Is the expense justified?" And expensive it is:
SAC is contributing $1,100 to the coffers, and Tarheel organizers have milked another $950 from outside sources—$500 in luncheons from the Ontario education department and Metro, $500 from the Ontario and Metro governments, $100 each from BA and IBM, and a $250 subsidy from the Ports of Call. Most of the hockey tickets are being scrounged from donors (private and corporate) as well.

One person who takes a dim view of the campus bankrolling over half the operation is John Karl (II SMC), a SAC rep on the finance commission. "It's a question of priorities," he said. "They spend $1100.00 of our money, and 30 people take part. I'm not really sure that it does anything for the university. In my opinion, the course clubs and Tartu College are more worthy of our support.
The fees may go up one or two dollars next year, and before they do I'd like to try and eliminate any unnecessary expenditures."

He feels that a majority of the finance commission have spontaneously come to the conclusion that the exchanges, at least in their present form, should be done away with. Full SAC approval, however, is necessary for this change. At present it seems unlikely.

Most of the Tarheel members do not, of course, share Karl's views. Bob Isbister (IV VIC), co-chairman of this year's exchange, has appealed to his co-benefactors to lobby SAC members in support of the expense.

Cathy Williams (III VIC), Miss U of T, and one of this year's exchange members, said, "A lot of my friends are going to meet my co and they'll indirectly benefit. Besides, SAC is spending money on a lot of other things that people don't take advantage of."

Ed Kerwin (III SMC) put it this way: "The views I picked up down there are not remaining static within me;
I feel the urge to try and share them with others. I think SAC would be making a mistake by not granting a meagre $1100."

One exchange participant, though, didn't share this enthusiasm. He refused to be identified but, when asked what benefits he'd received from the trip he replied, "Really nothing. An exchange doesn't do that much for you. I suppose meeting the Americans is a good point . . .
It's a great way to meet 30 new people from up here, but a pretty expensive one."

Tug — Cont.

almost stagnant pre-20th century Chinese society in which education was mere reproduction of the classics from memory.

Bare truth leads man to see that he is merely an "accidental inhabitant of a negligible planet in the endless spaces." Meaning, for him, therefore, lies in the new god, technology.

Grant sees that only a few men can be occupied by that technology and ends his essay with the unsatisfactory conclusion that maybe people will find meaning in that technology, or in art. "Philosophy may be regained by those immersed in the immediacies of the public world; reverence rediscovered in psychiatric researches."

While Grant offers no solutions, other essayists try to. Howard Adelman sees the university as game which must be destroyed. This can be done if all its members learn the rules so well they can overcome them by holding them in contempt.

Most fascinating, though, is an essay by Donald McCulloch, U of T's head of the advisory bureau, who uses the family-child model to inspect the tensions of U of T. Students are caught in a subordinate relationship with their professors. The dominant successfully gets the student to put so much faith in his infallibility that the student questions and suppresses his own creativity and ingenuity. He ends up merely memorizing the professor's techniques.

The students, therefore, become persuaded of their own worthlessness and retreat into activities they can handle—sex, alcohol, drugs, petty pranks, passive entertainments. The tragedy is that as the technological society advances, the student will be able to handle himself less and less in this environment — there's just too much to learn — and will less and less question the educational system he is involved in. He becomes more and more worried about his degree and less about his real education.

McCulloch could have examined the rising radicalism on Canadian campuses, once he made all these points, but he leaves that for the reader to pick out. Clearly, the students have become sophisticated enough to see through the arrangement that McCulloch describes; after all it is the smart student who rebels, not the hope who is only after a degree.

The value of the book is that it articulates some problems that have been written about in essays and articles in radical journals but rarely brought to a mass audience. There is the danger though that some essayists are dogmatic; Cy Gonick, from Manitoba, merely restates the university-is-a-personnel-factory theory and has nothing new to offer that others in the book don't offer, except that elimination of the grading system could create a better climate between professor and student.

What is also missing is a really detailed articulation of what is really hugging any one person; what he sees wrong and what could be done. I thought Dennis Lee was getting into something like that when he described the sterile graduate English seminar, but he veered off that track before he really said much.

What could have been said was written much better in an article in last month's Harper's magazine; which showed how English scholarship was subverted by the graduate students interested only in a career and not in questioning what anyone had done before.

The book doesn't really discuss student power but brings out some thoughts on the powerless student, the first step surely, for it is only the powerless student who will read the textbook when told to read any book he wants to.

Students can't agree on reps for Faculty Council

By JIM COWAN

Student representation on the council of the faculty of arts and science has been delayed by the failure of students to decide who should represent them.

And the university committee of the Students Administrative Council will soon call an open meeting to hammer out a compromise with the various factions.

Groups contending for the right to represent arts and science students include college students councils, course unions and staff-student committees for the various courses.

The faculty council approved last November a plan to seat 15 students on five committees directly concerned with student affairs.

Part of their recommendation stated: "The council is of the opinion that participation of undergraduate students in the discussion of faculty business and the setting of academic policy can be beneficial to the academic health of the faculty.

"(The council) understands that at this time the students are willing to participate and to accept the concomitant responsibility."

The council proposal envisaged the creation of electoral colleges within the departments. The electors would select 16 members and 16 alternates each February.

The plan would be reviewed in the fall of 1969.

Faculty Dean A.D. Allen hopes the proposals will be adopted. "It is of greatest importance that some representation be made as soon as possible," he said in an interview. "The students selected under our plan would be very close to the problems they would be discussing."

But course unions and student councils have registered objections to this plan. SAC also has reservations about the proposal.

SAC President Tom Faulkner said Thursday he was concerned because there is "no way for the elected students to report back to any representative body of arts and science students. This means there is no way to make the representatives responsible."

Referring to Dean Allen, Faulkner said, "We have a liberal dean with a genuine desire to see students given voting seats on the council, but we can't decide on who should represent us."

Glenn Brownlee (IV Vic), president of the Victoria College Union Council, believes the college councils are the logical source of the delegates.

"The councils have the finances, manpower and communication facilities to put the issues before the students," he says.

"The course unions are financed by SAC have no established organs of communications and are too narrow in outlook," he maintains. "My big argument is really against centralization under SAC."

Faulkner opposes Brownlee's suggestion because, he says, "It is unlikely the councils could get together and speak with one voice for the students."

But he rejects the idea that SAC could appoint the committee members. "We include too many groups outside the Faculty to represent it," he noted.

A third-year representative the History Students Union, Jennifer Oille of University College, outlined the course unions' objections to the Council's plan:

"It's ludicrous," she says. "The faculty is trying to calm us down and get rid of any objections we might have had. We are trying to formulate a new plan."

The unions are also irked by the sparse representation and the indirect method of choosing delegates.

She pointed out that a basic problem was that the history course has the only active union at the present time.

"The plan will push through because there is no organized body to oppose it," she lamented.

Steve Langdon (III Trin), chairman of the SAC university committee, says SAC's role at the moment is "mostly that of a mediator."

He said a probable compromise would involve having some committee members appointed by the course unions, and some appointed by the college councils. This revised plan would have to go back to the faculty council for approval.

Convocation Hall hosts modern myths

By KASPARS DZEGUZE

It is Wednesday evening. In Convocation Hall, the lights dim, the audience grows silent. The myths are about to be enacted.

Tonight, the hall does not witness the myth of the student, perpetrated by lecturers or convocations, but the myths of North American society. It is the first of two evenings at Convocation Hall, part of the University College Babel festival.

Slide and movie projectors fling images onto 11 screens. The music of the Doors emanates from a tape system hooked to 33 speakers, and we watch the unfolding of Americrap an investigation of the myth "North America — a reasonable society."

The screens show in rapid succession a couple making love, a wrestling match, the vicarious enjoyment of the onlookers, girls stripping, people fighting and rioting. Len Gilday hopes to assemble photos taken from magazines and excerpts from movies to create a 'multi-medial environment' which will make the audience participate. Through participation may come a discomforting awareness of one's own complicity in making and following myths.

Film obtained from the CBC will reveal familiar scenes to ask, for example, why the "unreasoned adulation" of John Kennedy? The screens flicker with the funeral cortege, Jackie, Christ, the Beatles and the Eternal Flame.

The Hollywood mystique and its personalities, myths of marriage hammer the audience, then fade to the central theme—violence.

Violence is shown as a pervasive force in our society, and the 45-minute production focuses mainly on exponents of the Gospel of Violence, as Bob Dylan sings With God on our Side and fighter pilots strafe the jungle.

Speakers on social topics will follow the show. They include Professor Edgar Friedenberg author of The Vanishing Adolescent on the effects of the "system" on the adolescent, and Prof. Gad Horowitz speaking about Canadian social ethics.

Two professionals, Georgi Nachoff and Karol Rattay, are helping to put the Convocation show together. They are in charge of its technical aspect, including construction of a sophisticated control centre that will activate the projectors as they are needed.

"Everything we are dealing with is old hat, cliché," concedes Nachoff, "so the effectiveness of the material depends almost entirely on the way we present it."

On Thursday, Tony Pargeter will investigate propaganda—the use of advertising to sell soap, toothpaste, politicians, religions and nationalities.

Pargeter and Gilday do not seek to push the message in these two productions. They wish only to make their audience aware of the myths by which they live, and to examine the foundations of these myths. The taped soundtrack will consist only of the sound belonging to each film and of excerpts from recordings selected by the producers.

A large number of television commercials have been obtained for screening on propaganda night. Engineers will appreciate the wide-screen beer ads.

Then come Lyndon Johnson's TV speeches justifying the Vietnam war, Rap Brown's incitements to riot, and John Diefenbaker's campaign orations. The juxtapositions allowed by multiple screens will be able to explore advertising to a degree embarrassing to its creators.

Three speakers will give short prepared talks following the film show, and afterward participate in a panel discussion. The three, Vance Packard, Harley Parker, and John Straiten, will concern themselves with the necessity of these myths in society.

This year's festival is going to be completed more rapidly than in previous years as more than 100 students are working on the project.

Georgi Nachoff, Len Gilday and Karol Rattay mull over film for Babel.

Quebec student aid faces setbacks

MONTREAL (Special) — Quebec students are complaining of inefficiency in the government's student aid program.

At Sir George Williams University here, 474 of the 1,400 students who applied for aid have heard no word from the department of education, reports the dean of students' office. And 363 have received refusals, leaving 563 who have been given loan certificates.

"The Inter-University Committee has been in contact with the Quebec government concerning the delay," says Ashton Lewis of the dean's office.

An official in the student aid section of the Quebec department of education said the delay is due to the processing of a more complicated application than in previous years. He also said the department is checking the forms more closely this year.

Barry Hill, the president of the arts students association and student representative on the loans and bursaries revisions board at Sir George said he was told that the reason for the tie-up in the issuing of the loan certificates is "inefficiency in the department which we can't seem to locate."

Jean Dore, the president of the students association at the university of Montreal said that of the 6,400 students who had applied for aid only 3,200 have been notified so far.

Ryan asks for realism and cooperation to keep Quebec in Canada

By SUE REISLER

Claude Ryan, editor of Montreal's Le Devoir, said Saturday that realism and a willingness to cooperate are necessary for solution of the "Quebec problem."

Mr. Ryan, addressing a banquet audience at the Canadian-Canadian Festival outlined a seven-point program:

- A new agreement must be worked out between Quebec and Ottawa concerning the meaning and objectives of federalism.

- The French Canadians must be made to feel at home outside Quebec.

- Quebecers must not doubt that their government has the power to act when it feels it should.

- English Canadians must have the assurance that Ottawa will have sufficient authority to act on behalf of the nation.

- French Canadians must gain the impression they are really partners in the leading institutions, private and public.

- French Canadians must realize they cannot segregate completely from the rest of Canadians and North Americans.

- French Canadians must accept the fact they must be interested in more than Quebec. It is impossible to speak just French, he said. The economic results would be disastrous.

The current interest in the future of federalism results from three main causes, Mr. Ryan said.

These he said, are: the visit of French President Charles de Gaulle and the subsequent rebuff by the federal government; the decision of Rene Levesque to leave the Liberal party; and the meeting of the Estates-Generales, a body representing different Quebec factions which suggested virtual separation for Quebec.

"The situation in Quebec remains fluid and undecided," he declared. "It has not changed substantially in the past six months, despite the attempt of the radicals.

"Quebeckers have returned to reality. They are not committed to one point of view."

Mr. Ryan said that while the feeling in Quebec today tends toward the fullest possible measure of autonomy, Quebecers wish to remain in Canada.

"If we work extremely seriously to alleviate the situation, French Canadians are still willing to continue their association," he concluded.

Western shows how it's done

By JOHN CLARKE

Varsity wrestlers met what is likely to be their toughest opposition of the season at Hart House Saturday evening. The entire meet was fast-moving and exciting, even though Blues lost 27-13 to Western Mustangs.

Ever-present Jim Doner at 123 lb. gave Toronto its first points. Bob Kellerman at 130 lbs. lost a very fierce and close match to Western's scrappy Bill Tinslay. Rick Kesten, 137 lb., and Ron Wilson, 145 lb., lost good matches to two of last year's OQAA champions — Charlie Nixon and Bill Connelly. Rod Vinter at 152 lb. was just edged out of a victory by his opponent in a very close bout.

Rookie Larry Bobbett at 160 lbs. was overpowered by his more experienced opponent. Bill Allison at 167 lb. gave his usual good performance against Western's Don Panagapka, but could not turn it into a win as he dropped a hard-fought match.

Vic Helfand at 177 lb. was out-muscled by a very strong opponent, Mike Wright and Ylo Korgemai, 191 lb. and heavyweight respectively, easily trounced their opponents with pins to end the grappling on a bright note.

Varsity Coach Kirk Wipper has decided to start more vigorous training to prepare for the championship in February as a result of Blues' showing.

Mat mutterings: The meet was old home week for natives of the north — Blues' Jim Doner and Western's Ralph Doner, Bill Tinslay and Don Panagapka are all natives of Kirkland Lake (home of John Brough).

We hope the Varsity's atrocious reproduction does not completely erode the quality of this superb shot of Blues' Vic Helfand's open-mouthed onslaught as he is rendered helpless by his tough opponent in last Saturday's wrestling meet.

Varsity swimmers keep winning along

By DAVE POWELL

The Varsity swimming team swept to their second straight victory in as many weeks, on Saturday night as they demolished Western by a score of 78 to 26. Blues won eleven of twelve events, and displayed remarkable depth by placing second as well, in five of the ten individual races.

Captain Robin Campbell, swimming in his last home meet for Toronto before graduation this spring, turned in a fine performance by winning the 200 and 500 yard freestyle. Veterans Theo van Ryn, and Gaye Stratten showed their versatility by each swimming the other's customary races. Van Ryn took the 200 yard individual medley and the 200 backstroke, and Stratten won the 50 and 100 yard freestyle. Rookie Terry Bryan continued to give ample evidence that he is quickly becoming Varsity's newest star, as he whipped the opposition in the gruelling 1000 yard freestyle, and then came back to win the 200 yard butterfly by a comfortable margin. Diver Dick Lake rounded out Toronto's string of individual victories with a convincing win in the 1 meter diving.

Blues also received strong showing from Steve Gering, who placed second in the 500 and 1000 yard freestyle, Cliff Gentle, with a second in the 200 yard individual medley and a third in the 200 butterfly, Chris Fisher, second in the 50 free, and Bob Heatley, a close third in the 200 free. Maurice Vailancourt and George Goldsmith equalled their excellent times of last week in the 200 yard breaststroke, but they were not quite enough to overcome a strong finish by Paul Walker of Western.

In the relays, a Toronto squad of Don Carr, George Goldsmith, Bob Heatley, and Chris Fisher won the 400 yard medley on a strong finishing kick by Fisher, and a team of Stratten, Fisher, van Ryn, and Campbell took the 400 freestyle.

Pool Patter . . . Varsity swimmers got a special treat on Saturday when four Potsies arrived to administer massages to each swimmer before and after his event . . . the fetching foursome were Sue Fryday, Lyn McLeod, Jackie Ransome, and Cinnie Powell . . . the envy of the Western squad was obvious, as after the meet they flocked over for their turn . . .

two-way passing combination with Cunningham. He was shot into the clear on a perfect pass from Cunningham, finding the net with a high wrist shot.

The Austrians counted their only goal when Blues were given two minor penalties within ten seconds of each other. Peter Marzell scored on Adamson during a scramble in front of Blue's net.

Four goals in two games

Goaltender Peter Mohr was the most impressive Austrian as Blues outshot their opponents 65-18. Varsity hit the post seven times.

Contrary to pre-tournament forecasts, the officiating was excellent in both games.

The rink at Feldkirch, where the two games took place, was open-air with an extremely wide ice surface in excellent shape. About a thousand people were present for each game.

It's been a tough tournament for Blues so far. They've had trouble getting practice ice, the travel's been too tough, and nobody's had any sleep. They're playing lousy.

Meeting the Czechs right off the bat was a rough break. The Russians, by contrast, have had soft games to get going.

The Czechs and Russians never play around with the puck. They give-and-go consistently, headman the puck, really carry it and stick-handle. Blues must learn to do this if they're going to beat the Finns, the Swedes, and the Russians.

The Czechoslovakian coach says the Russians are their second national team, and the players don't attend school. It doesn't augur well.

Blues' next game is against Finland Tuesday night at 8:15 our time.

Goal against the Czechs

by

If I'd had my choice, Janet and I would have been sipping Port, grooving Country Joe's fabulous Fish, and occasionally tickling one another with amorous fingers and gentle humour. But we were a continent apart and I had to occupy a mild Saturday night in more platonic fashion. I thought of sitting alone in a dark room being rigidly introspective while listening to Dylan's thought-provoking wail, but of course my disc dispatcher had long since failed to function. I'd seen all the cinema, ignored all the theatre, and sickened at another two hours of Bill Hewitt's nasal. So I went to Hart House for the wrestling meet (see page 11).

The gym was quiet as I made my dramatic entrance, slipping unobtrusively into a shallow recess. After recess was over I slinked across the floor and deposited my slim frame among the Western supporters. There were three. I made two. On the mat Varsity's Bob Kellerman was wrestling skilfully but to no avail against a slick opponent. When the bout ended, the two wrestlers shook hands and moved apart, one into the midst of happy, congratulatory teammates, Kellerman to a hard chair where he brushed off soothing consolations.

Shaggy-haired, side-burned Rick Kesten's match was next against one of the top wrestlers in Canada, Charley Nixon. During Kellerman's activity, Kesten had nervously moved around, tense with gloomy anticipation. But he wrestled well and Nixon was unhappy with his slow, laborious 2-0 victory. For Kesten it was far from humiliating defeat.

Lean Ron Wilson followed for Toronto and his bout brought a fast, furious change to the pace of the evening. Sudden, swift manipulations on the part of both wrestlers kept the crowd alive, and a quick reverse by Wilson brought from the partisan populace a roar of encouragement. "He's watching the clock, Ron baby!", "Shoot her, Ron, shoot her!" A split second later Wilson was flat on his back and it was Western's turn to holler. For thirty ugly seconds the plucky Varsity wrestler wriggled and pushed and strained to keep his shoulders off the mat while his opponent mercilessly forced them downwards. The referee squirmed around on his stomach to catch the exact moment of impact; Western teammates screamed for the kill while Toronto supporters sat taut but silent on the edge of their seats. Finally, as Wilson's eyes rolled in agony, the official's hand smacked the mat and it was all over. "Mike" sprang jovially upright; a downcast Wilson lay gasping with defeat.

The showcase event of "Grappling Night in Canada" came at 167 lb. with Blues' Bill Allison and Western's veteran Panagamko squaring off. They'd wrestled each other before and a sharp rivalry had arisen. They both wanted a win in the worst way.

At the whistle they strode right in, locked, then separated. Quietly Allison stalked his opponent, his arms probing forward like tentacles. For a while, only the ticking of the clock was audible. Then they met again for a longer period, reminding one of two stags duelling as they circled the mat head to head. The first round ended scoreless. The second round saw point after point piled up as reverses and takedowns abounded. Allison was within an inch of a pin, so was Panagamko. Even the scorekeeper became confused. However when the round ended, the muscular Mustang led 13-6. Allison could not muster a comeback in the final round and trooped disconsolately for the exits.

Three bouts later I headed home to watch Houston nip UCLA; Janet was far from my mind.

Waterloo Lutheran roll over Varsity as five Blues foul out in 108-81 loss

By JIM MORRISON

At this point of the season, SIBL coaches are all heaving sighs of relief that Waterloo Lutheran Golden Hawks play in another League, meeting their teams in exhibition fashion only. Saturday night at Waterloo, Varsity coach John McManus joined the chorus as Blues succumbed to Hawks in merciless fashion, 108-81.

Playing before a rabidly partisan crowd in the restyled Gray Taylor Arena, the home forces stormed to a 52-39 halftime lead. Dave Baird and Norm Cuttifford kept Blues off the boards, and Sandy Nixon directed the attack.

Blues caught fire in the first few minutes of the second half, and closed the gap to only four points. But foul troubles plagued the Varsity squad, and as player after player fouled out, Hawks raced to a big lead.

The closing minutes of the game were the most frustrating for the McManusmen. With John Hadden, Brian Shaw, Arvo Neidre, Mark Slater and Bruce Dempster out on fouls, and Kirby sitting by with an injured ankle, Blues were forced to play a man short for the final two minutes.

Lutheran's Dave Baird was the game's leading marksman with 26 points, followed by Bob Bain, Norm Cuttifford, and Pete Misikowetz with 18 each. Mark White topped Varsity scorers with 18 points, followed by Bruce Dempster with 17 and Arvo Neidre with 14.

In all fairness to Blues, it can be said that the referees were afflicted with severe myopia when it came to Hawk infractions. And Ron Voake, Blues' excellent forward, did not make the trip. "Wait until we meet them in Hart House," was the consensus among Varsity team members.

Voake's place in the line-up... In other weekend action, Western Mustangs edged McMaster Marauders 90-85 and, in the upset of the season, Waterloo Warriors took Windsor Lancers 69-66...

In a game played last Wednesday, Waterloo defeated Mac 68-64. This creates an unprecedented four-way tie for first place... An indication of the league's balance is the fact that cellar-dwelling Mac have been losing by only five points a game.

Gymmers jammed in fourth

Minus their top two performers, Varsity Blues' gym team still managed a fourth-place finish in the Queen's Invitational meet held Saturday at Kingston. Seven squads competed with the Ottawa Gym Team capturing top honor and University of Montreal, defending OQAA champions, placing second.

With both Brian McVey and Dave Copeland unable to make the trip, Blues' top participant was John Kortright who was fourth on the parallels, seventh on the high bar, and sixth overall. Al Hamilton was right behind at seventh overall while Arthur Stein managed a seventh-place finish on the pommel horse.

Inconsistent and inexperienced judging marred the exhibition meet, although the final team placings were reasonably accurate.

Varsity Blues need you!

Varsity Blues hockey team, as can be imagined, are a bit downcast and dispirited way over there in Austria following their 8-4 loss to the Czechs. They can't seem to buy a break. Their trip over was incredibly arduous, they took the ice with almost no skating time since a week ago Friday, and then were met with three goals in the first two minutes. That they managed to outplay the Czechs in the last half of the game is a tribute to gutsy fortitude in the face of horrible circumstances. But, as Phil Bingley put it, even after their lopsided win over Austria, "They're playing lousy."

What's needed is a real shot in the arm and we, the student body of U of T, who Blues essentially are representing at Innsbruck, can provide just such a shot. For only 20 cents per capita, each student can have his or her name affixed to a giant telegram which we could then send to Blues in Austria informing the players that we're avidly following their progress and that win or lose, we're proud of them. They're a long way away, and I'm sure they'd really love to hear from us. After all, they are wearing our colours.

Booths will be set up at Sidney Smith, the Library, and the Galbraith Building to collect signatures. Hell, what's 20 cents!!

Blues overcome stubborn Finns 4-1

By PHIL BINGLEY

INNSBRUCK, Austria — Superlative goaltending by John Wrigley carried University of Toronto Blues to a hard-fought 4-1 victory over Finland here last night.

The win moves Varsity into a second-place tie with Czechoslovakia in the six-team world University hockey tournament which got underway Friday. Blues have two victories in three starts.

Wrigley, who missed the Austrian game with a groin injury, was the big factor in the contest which saw the Finns outshoot Canada 43-38. He sparked particularly in the first period as Blues were outshot 20-7, but left the ice leading 2-0.

Defenceman Jim Miles opened the scoring on a long screen shot from the point. Blues increased their margin to 2-0 when Don Fuller finished off a sharp two-way passing play with young rookie Brian St. John.

Fuller's goal came after the Finns had applied heavy pressure on the Canadian goal for almost five minutes. Wrigley made at least seven great saves in the period.

The second stanza was scoreless although penalties hurt Blues. Varsity was shorthanded four times, once playing two men short for almost two minutes. Once more Wrigley was Horatius at the bridge with Finland holding a 13-10 edge in shots on goal.

Ward Passi and Gord Cunningham had clear-cut breakaways during the period, but the Finnish goaltender, Matti Teltonen, made fine saves each time.

In the third period, dull, uninspired hockey replaced the fast excitement of the previous 40 minutes. But a goal by the Finns during a Varsity power play with eight minutes left opened up the game tremendously as they began to press desperately for the tying marker.

Finally, with three minutes left, John Gordon iced the game for Blues with a quick scoring shot right off a facoff. Paul Laurent made the final count 4-1 when he scored a minute later.

Atrocious officiating marred the thrilling action with many cheap penalties to both sides. There were 23 miscues called although the game was never rough.

Blues had 14 penalties including a misconduct to Paul McCann for banging his stick on the ice in protest against a minor penalty. Their opponents went to the sin-bin nine times, once for five minutes when a high-sticking infraction drew blood from Peter Speyer.

The team is in relatively good spirits especially after this game. Actually Blues played poorly, but Wrigley's acrobatics sufficed to save the day.

Varsity's next game is tomorrow evening against Sweden. The Swedes have been bombed 14-2 by Russia, and have beaten Austria 9-2. They should be easy pickin'. Their goaltending is weak and their players big but slow.

Commission clears Lance; Lalor not re-hired

WINDSOR (CUP) — John Lalor has failed in his bid to be re-instated as editor of the University of Windsor Lance.

The student board of publications gave no reason Monday when it rejected his application.

Lalor and co-editor Mary Johnstone resigned their posts three weeks ago. They feared expulsion by the university senate's committee on student conduct for publishing The Student as Nigger, an article branded by university President J. S. Heddy as "obscene."

Miss Johnstone was subsequently accepted back as editor by the publications board.

Last weekend a Canadian University Press investigation commission accused the university's administration of intervening to curtail the Lance's freedom to publish.

"There can be no doubt that it did (intervene), with the result that even now the concept of freedom of the press at Windsor is very much in doubt," the CUP report said.

"By refusing to recognize the student council and the student board of publications as sole authority over student publications, the senate committee made a shameful mockery of its alleged concern for freedom of expression in its university community."

The CUP committee, comprising Tony Burnan of Loyola News and Christa Maeo's of Queens Journal, called on CUP President Lib Spry to demand from President Leddy a promise that freedom of the press will be observed in future.

If Dr. Leddy does not submit such a statement within two weeks of the request, says the report, the Canadian Union of students should investigate whether the university is an academically free institution and eligible for Ontario government funds as a public institution.

The administration has "set itself up as a moral arbiter for its academic community," the report charges.

"It must be made clear that the university administration has no more business dealing with the morality of student journalists than the government has interfering with the free operation of the daily press—even less, in reality, as university administrators are not the elected representatives of their academic community, or the public."

The report calls for:

- a restructuring of the board of publications;
- a statement of policy from the paper's editors;
- that the administration take the editors to court, not to the senate to deal with any future grievances with The Lance.

CUP President Spry commented in Ottawa: "The report clearly shows the administration was unwilling to guarantee the students' right to run their own affairs."

"There remains the possibility of future interference of freedom of the press."

"But for the sake of The Lance's membership in CUP let us hope it won't happen again."

Sharp decline in recruiting: Headrick

By PAUL CARSON

There has been a sharp decrease in the number of companies recruiting University of Toronto students for full-time employment.

And, says Placement Service Director A. W. Headrick, the anti-Dow demonstrations "aren't helping the situation one bit."

"I suspect a number of companies have looked at the results of those Dow demonstrations, and then asked themselves, 'Is it really worth it?'"

The number of companies registered with the Placement Service is 10 to 15 per cent lower than last year, Mr. Headrick said.

However, he knew of no specific company that has cancelled campus recruiting because of the demonstrations.

Mr. Headrick predicted that prospects for summer employment "will definitely not be as good as last summer."

"The uncertain economic situation is reflected in the over-all summer employment picture. When companies have to trim their budgets, the first items cut are summer projects involving students."

"Last summer, the seasonal slack was alleviated by the various Centennial projects, Expo and increased tourism requirements.

"That just isn't going to happen this year."

The unexpected decline in on-campus recruiting has led to a sharp decrease in recruitment advertising placed in The Varsity.

Companies overspent their budgets in 1967 promoting large-scale Centennial advertising. To recoup the loss, many have drastically reduced or eliminated their campus advertising.

It has been a general downward trend with no indication of an extra decrease due to the demonstrations.

Due to lack of interest, tomorrow's protest will be cancelled. See page 3.

No protest today; SAC will discuss

By DAVE FRANK

There will be nobody pounding on the doors of Simcoe Hall this afternoon. The controversy over the Placement Service advisory committee has gone back to the Students Administrative Council.

Acting President J. H. Sword's response to the open letter delivered last Friday by demonstrators to Simcoe Hall has been labelled "preposterous," "out-right lies" and "utterly empty."

"Simcoe Hall has shown itself to be incapable of responding to mere petitions," reads a statement released last night by the Ad Hoc Committee to End Campus Complicity.

"We may be forced to speak to the administration in still more emphatic terms."

"The administration will not surrender any of its power until forced to by direct action," added Paul Hoch, a post-graduate physics student.

Tonight the university committee will recommend that SAC rejoin the placement service advisory committee under the following conditions:

- That sessions be open to any member of the university;

- That administration representation be cut to two voting members from three.

There will also be an attempt to establish a policy of the accountability to the council of SAC reps on university committees.

Campus Centre plans to be revealed

Tonight at 7 p.m. in the Hart House Debates Room, architect John Andrews will exhibit 24 drawings proving to the Students Administrative Council that $37,000 of their money has not been wasted.

The money has been spent by council over the last three years to help make the Campus Centre a reality.

The 24 drawings represent final plans for the $4,000,000 building, to be located at the corner of St. George and Russell streets.

Mr. Andrews, chairman of the department of architecture and designer of Scarborough College, was selected by a SAC committee to design a comprehensive student union building.

Gerry McMaster (V Arch) student chairman of the centre for the last two years, describes the centre as "a community facility."

"It's not just for students, but for faculty as well. Within the building you will be able to find anything you want. It should provide a choice for people to opt in or to opt out, as they choose."

Much of the information on the Campus Centre has already been made available to the SAC members. Tonight, however, students will be able to see final furniture plans and color schemes.

McMaster describes the furniture as "multi-purpose."

"There is a basic unit which can be used in various combinations to make chairs, tables, desks — even storage units. They will be in primary colors. The restaurant furniture is constructed so that it can be completely dismantled and become part of the architecture."

Ground should be broken for the 16,000-square-foot building in June — 20 years after SAC first considered building a student union.

Tonight's presentation is for information only, as the Centre has already been approved by SAC.

Quebec students protest loan delays

QUEBEC (Special) — A thousand university students demonstrated yesterday against delays in dispensing grants and loans by the Quebec department of education.

The protest, organized by the Union Generale des Etudiants du Quebec, included placard-bearing students from the University of Montreal, McGill, Sir George Williams, Laval, Loyola and Sherbrooke.

They chanted slogans like, "Johnson to the scaffold."

Earlier this month the education department conceded that 20,000 loans and bursaries out of 68,000 requests were still being processed. The delay was blamed on late submission by the students and a system of closer scrutiny by the department.

Although they planned on 2,500 demonstrators, UGEQ organizers called the protest a successful beginning to their campaign on the education department.

Meanwhile, Arthur Tremblay, deputy education minister, said in an interview yesterday that the hold-ups were "a normal situation, when one considers that the number of loans increased by 15 per cent for each of the last four years."

"It is a gross mistake to equate lecturing with teaching. The good lecture is entertaining but teaches nothing."

—W. V. Baker, letter in Globe and Mail,
Jan. 22, 1968.

the quality of teaching

What's to be done about university teachers who can't teach?

This ever-present problem was supposedly solved by the Macpherson committee, remember. More tutorials and fewer formal lectures, departmental committees of senior professors to advise the rookie lecturers, make audio-visual communications the new staff craze.

And so the theory goes, given a little time, energy, blood, toil, tears, and the rest, the quality of teaching will improve. And one magic day — valhalla — teachers in name will be teachers in fact.

However, despite the optimism of Macpherson and friends, there is no guarantee that the quality of teaching will improve. It can hardly get much worse, but what's to say it will get any better?

In a recent Globe and Mail article C. Wellington Webb, a U of T philosophy professor, suggests student complaints about lousy lectures are entirely justified.

Most professors have no formal training in teaching, Webb states, so they must acquire what skills they have either from their own experiences as a student or by observing and copying the teaching techniques of senior professors.

But what happens if these senior academics are themselves poor teachers who have attained exalted status solely on the basis of research or publications?

Mediocrity will emulate mediocrity; the present intolerable conditions will be perpetuated.

As Professor Webb correctly argues, most PhD programs, especially in the humanities and social sciences, do not encourage the development of adequate teaching techniques. They stress scholarly research and the writing of the all-important thesis.

The solution, as Webb sees it, requires the Canadian Association of University Teachers — that's the professor's union — to place greater and greater stress on the development of "professional standards." Salary and tenure are important considerations, he admits, but CAUT must place more emphasis on the development and training of university teachers who can really teach.

An apposite view was presented in Monday's Globe in the form of a letter from W. V. Baker, a graduate student in zoology.

Caught in semantic hap-scotch worthy of a pensioned administrator, Baker suggests that "a professional organization" (read CAUT) interested in improving the quality of teaching should insist that good teachers be rewarded with extra money and prestige. In other words, back to questions of salary and tenure.

Baker also produces the novel observation that graduate schools neither encourage nor discourage teaching. He's not sure whether they should; he just says they don't. Is this a laudable situation? Don't look to W. V. Baker for the answer.

In a resounding conclusion full of the worst of freshman logic, graduate student Baker admits "university departments are aware of their shortcomings with regard to teaching as a communications art but are unable to do anything about it."

Nonsense. As a start, they could hire outside experts in pedagogy, a solution considered and unfortunately rejected by Macpherson.

"The only way out is change," writes Baker.

OK, we'll bite. But please, change to what?? On whose authority?? Who makes the decision?? Who implements it??

Baker doesn't say.

Perhaps he doesn't know.

Perhaps nobody knows.

Status quo continuu. And university halls will be full of graduate students dishing out facts to uncomprehending freshmen.

Facts which will go from the notes of the lectured without passing through the brains of either.

And perhaps a few years from now there'll be another committee of professors formed to examine why the teachers still aren't teaching.

Letters

sac speaker replies

Sir:

In reply to Mr. Sadinsky:

(1) "However, the speaker, in a desperate attempt to complete the agenda . . ."

The Speaker had no interest in "completing the agenda." He allowed at least three quorum calls in a very short period of time; motions, which because of their frequency and because they were being used as debating tactics, could have been ruled out of order as dilatory (Roberts pp. 174-5). He proceeded to count the quorum as demanded by Mr. Sadinsky even though the latter (a) attempted such obstructionary tactics as calling for a quorum and then leaving the hall, and (b) only called for the quorum after making a speech, which is illegal. It was then as an indulgence to Mr. Sadinsky's outrage that the count was permitted.

(2) "... hearing several affirming voices, ruled he was indeed correct and that the meeting could proceed. On questioning the speaker's ruling I was told bluntly to have my head examined."

In fact, the Speaker twice counted 23 people. Being in doubt, however as to the correctness of the count, since several different numbers were being urged as correct, he ruled that a quorum was present, thus enabling Mr. Sadinsky to challenge the proceedings, and indeed urged Mr. Sadinsky to protest if he was still in doubt. Mr. Sadinsky challenged the Speaker's ruling that there was a quorum. An overwhelming majority of those present voted in agreement with the Speaker. Consequently, it is not the Speaker but a majority of the House that Mr. Sadinsky is now doubting.

Finally, I assure Mr. Sadinsky that I have not as yet suggested that he have his head examined.

Wayne Hankey
Speaker of the SAC

rights, smights

Sir:

Students of the University of Toronto are so busy mistreating each other in the name of various rights that I feel they have lost sight of the one supreme, God-given right which must be granted to every student.

That is the right to be a schmuck. We must defend the right of The Varsity to be negative, irresponsible and to print rubbish; the right of our protestors to humiliate Dow representatives and administrators and to physically blockade engineers who wish to apply for a job. We must defend the right of the engineers to spend their career making napalm to burn babies and their rights to break a girl's glasses, bloody her face and destroy her eyes.

It is time that we learned enough respect for each other to defend the SAC representatives' right to ignore the wishes of the people who elected him and the engineers' right to impeach anyone who doesn't toe the party line.

Above all, we must safeguard our right to abuse our fellow students, the administration and faculty in every possible way.

John Swaigen (Extension).

a push in time...

Sir:

Seeking a place to park my car behind the Benson building last Thursday, I got stuck in the ice and snow. (The fact that there was ice and snow still on the lot is another story, and beside the present point.) A good shove (approximate time — ten seconds) by one or two men in moderate health could have gotten me out of my difficulty.

While vainly trying to forward and reverse myself out of my predicament, a group of three muscular young university types, taking a short cut through the parking lot, looked at me very interestedly, and passed by on the other side. Shortly afterwards, a similar group, this time four, did precisely the same thing. As the time was nine-thirty, I can't imagine that there was any rush to lectures.

How far can non-involvement go?

In remarking on this peculiar episode to my three beautiful and delicate technicians, one reported the fact that on several occasions, while trying to get through the heavy doors into the Zoology building, she has been obliged to hold the doors open by herself to allow husky brutes to avail themselves of entry.

Whither chivalry?

you need women

Sir:

I have been meaning to write to you for several weeks, but your piece "Spiritus Sanctus" (should be "Sanctus" by the way) has finally brought me to the typewriter. Your man writes of going to St. Thomas Aquinas and St. Basil's for a quick snort at Mass. Doesn't he know that the lady do not get the Cup in Catholic churches? Anybody who has done an elementary course in R.K. knows that much. If you are going to be so damn funny about "Xtiansity" why don't you and the beany-boys around Varsity get your facts straight?

Which brings me to my points, which is that you need more women on Varsity. Women are good at detail, did you know? They check their Latin; in fact they check spelling and grammar. You could certainly use that. Come to think of it, when are we going to have a woman editor of Varsity? You squawk a lot about fair play for women on the campus. Why don't you get up like a gentleman and offer a lady your chair?

Have you ever heard of Junius? I don't suppose so. Look him up. Then you will know why I sign myself—

University presidents cool to student power

WATERLOO, Ont. (CUP) "There is at the present time no such thing as a student 'right' to representation in the university government," according to a study paper prepared for the Committee of Presidents of Universities of Ontario.

The 21-page report, presented to a meeting of the committee last Friday, was released Monday.

The report rejects the assumption that the "community of scholars will perform its functions better if it is organized along political lines."

The paper does not purport to be a declaration of policy but rather "seeks to place the matter of student involvement in the context of the university's basic goals."

The report makes two basic assumptions; "that there is room for improvement in university government, and that the approach to improvement must be through civilized discussion and the exercise of rational judgment."

It rejects political pressure tactics based simply on the number of supporters. "The only legitimate power within the community of scholars is the power of the intellect."

Making the whole university a representative democracy would yield nothing more than a sham democracy, according to the report.

The report points out distinctions between consulting and involving students in the decision-making process. It advocates student participation on the departmental and faculty committees, where they have direct interests.

The report questions whether students' involvement on the board of governors would improve the university's primary functions, but concedes that student involvement would lead to a better understanding of the monetary workings of the university.

According to the study, the primary function of the university is "the preservation, transmission, and increase of knowledge."

Other functions include serving the needs of society, facilitating individual students' personal development, increasing industrial productivity, training members of the learned professions, improving physical conditions of mankind and exploring the fundamental values of contemporary human existence.

The study opposes student power on grounds that "it would not advance the primary objectives of the university to have either junior or senior scholars deflected seriously from scholarship by excessive work on administrative bodies."

The report defends secrecy as a policy of administrative bodies, and contends that top-level decisions demand delicacy and confidentiality.

An agreement would have to be made about confidences before students are seated on administrative or executive bodies.

"The increasingly well-organized national and provincial student movements are geared for political action and hungry for power. Local student leaders become indoctrinated with ideas of student solidarity and are instructed in devious methods of attaining group objectives which do not promote the individual university's welfare and may indeed be inimical to it."

But the report reassures

the committee: "Student leaders by and large are intelligent, independent and honorable, and it is difficult to believe that many of them could be easily indoctrinated."

The report concludes: "The important thing is to reach an honest understanding of the differing attitudes, and try, together, with mutual respect, to improve the university and its contribution to the society of which it is a part. Working alone the students might produce a revolution. Working together the university could produce a renaissance."

health service???

Sir:

I would like to protest against that outrageous operation on campus that masquerades as the Men's Health Service. The other day I was forced to wait an hour and a half until a doctor was free to see me. When he did, I was treated to a cursory examination after which I was invited to return the next day at 1 p.m. Upon my arrival, neither he, nor any of the other doctors were in the vicinity. This meant that I was forced to hang around with 6 or 7 other guys until someone turned up. After half an hour, I departed in disgust — although Heaven only knows whether I would ever have gotten in; overnight they had lost my record! In the meantime, a number of other students who wanted attention appeared and were curly told to come back later by some fellow who looked like a doctor but is evidently the desk-man.

Something has to be done. If Tom Faulkner is so interested in preventing disreputable individuals from using the facilities of the University, it seems to me he could investigate the characters over at the Health Service.

Winners must answer a simple skill-testing question, like, "Who knows what evil lurks in the hearts of men?"

Katsuyama and Lennard each had three goals to lead Sr. Eng. past PHE, 7-2. Treen added the other Skule goal. Malloy scored both PHE goals. PHE will not win the Stanley Cup this year. Remember, you read it FIRST in Varsity Sports. Law edged PHE, 2-1. Ware and Clute scored for Law, Cumberford for PHE.

Dents performed matricide on UC ("The Mother of us all" — Hugh Morpeth, 28 July, 1966), 3-1. John Smith, John Jones, and John L. Sullivan led Dents; John Clelland scored for UC.

Meds bounced back (vide supra) to edge Jr. Eng., 3-2. Minaker scored twice for Meds, Burul once.

Jr. Eng., on the other hand, did their well known interpretation of a worm turning and took uc (see under "Dents"), 3-2. McCallum, Story, and Bottomless Pitts scored for the victors.

UC scorers were Armstrong and Brunskill.

BASKETBALL
New College, home of brased ox joints, walloped PHE B, 28-16. Renblas led Gnu with 8. (A Gnu is a small South African antelope related to the Iago).

Trin - Trin slaughtered Arch*Arch (if you can't beat them, join them), 37-25.

Storey (12) and Kolin (11) led their quinquemvirs.

PHE B defeated Pharm, 37-33.

Jr. Eng. took two (count them, two) games, beating Dents 35-34 and Law 36-24.

Tickets already sold out

Thursday's game is the last for Blues until their crucial confrontation with Russia on Sunday. The Olympic Ice Stadium in Innsbruck, capacity 9,500, is already sold out for the game. The whole town is talking about it.

The tournament is decided on a points basis. So far there is no official word on how a tie for first place will be broken. If Blues beat Russia, the likelihood is that there will be a three-way schmozzle for first place between Russia, the Czechs and Canada. Nobody knows whether goal averages will be determined on an over-all basis or just on games among these three teams.

The Russians and Czechs play Thursday following Blues' match against Sweden.

JIM MILES
Crucial first goal

by phil
bingley

The following dispatch was filed by Our Man in Innsbruck, Fiery Phil Bingley. Phil wrote the letter last Thursday before the actual tournament got underway.

Feldkirch, Austria,
Thursday, Jan. 18/67.

Greetings from Austria:

Well we finally got here after being completely bugged up in Toronto. Incidentally, because of travel, I have had boo all sleep.

We couldn't get out of Toronto airport because of poor weather conditions in Toronto, Montreal and Chicago. We were prepared to go to Chicago, but first the reservations were messed up and then the flight was cancelled. Next, we took a bus to Union Station, took the train to Buffalo, sat around for three hours, took the train to New York and arrived there at about 1 p.m. Tuesday. We stayed at the Hotel Commodore until 5 and then took the 5:45 flight to Zurich. Arrived there 6:30 Zurich time, stayed at a hotel and then left at 1 p.m. for Innsbruck.

That was yesterday. We arrived at Innsbruck at 2 p.m., checked into the students' home and the players hit the sack needless to say.

Tom (Watt), Dalt (White) and I went to the rink to get things straightened out there and supper was at 7. From there we went to watch the Russian team play a local Innsbruck team. The Ruskies won 15-0 and looked much like their national team in the process. They pass with precision, shoot low, along the ice and hard, and skate well.

Following the game, our guys had the ice as they skated (and skated hard after very little sleep) for the first time since last Friday's game with Guelph.

We were late to bed and up at 6:30 a.m. to catch the train to Feldkirch. The guys are just getting up now to practice at 5:00 p.m. on the rink here. The rink is an open air one with no roof, and it is pouring rain at the moment.

On the whole, the organization is fantastic. The food has been good and despite the rough travel schedule, the team is still in good spirits. Right now, sleep is worth more than schillings and the combination of travel and weather has made shuteye the favourite pastime.

If you like beer, you would love it here. A litre of bubbly is worth the equivalent of 16c in our money. Even a poor Engineer could survive in these parts of the world.

As far as the tournament itself is concerned, there are eighty countries represented. We flew into Innsbruck with the Korean skiing and skating teams.

The people of Austria have seemingly taken to the Blues quickly. They consider Varsity the hope to overthrow the Russians. As a result, the Blues are sentimental favorites to win, and the Russians are the bookies' choice. Also, the one-eyed Aussie, quotes Austria as 15-1 odds, the Finns at 10-1, Blues at 5-1, Czechs at 3-1 and Ruskies at 5-7. Despite this, if Blues can shock the Russians in their own end and hit them in Blues' end, the world can be prepared for a Canadian championship.

The Russian coach, with whom I chatted briefly in Innsbruck last night, wasn't too willing to accept the fact that all our players are from U of T. The other teams in the tournament are all (and legally so) national teams. Furthermore, with the exception of the Czechs, the other teams are much older than us. Each of Russia, Austria, Finland, and Sweden have several players in the 26-28 age bracket.

Dr. Stephens was unable to make the trip over. He was all set to go when his father became extremely ill and the "Doc" was forced to remain behind.

Other than that, things are going well and the people are wonderful. Also, they all seem to speak at least some English as well as their own German language, and often French too. So I bid you gute schlafen (good sleeping) because that's what I intend to do now. Wish us luck.

Surprising Waterloo Warriors invade Hart House sporting undefeated record

By JIM MORRISON

Ball control is where it's at tonight at 8:30, when the amazing Waterloo Warriors roll into Hart House for their crucial clash with Blues. Dan Pugliese's Warriors, who practise the tightest ball game this side of Southern Cal, will be gunning for their fourth straight win and sole possession of first place.

Waterloo games have always been low scoring. This season has been no exception—the big difference is that Warriors are winning. And the reason is the goody array of talent that Pugliese has managed to assemble.

DOUG LOCKHART

In action against old mates

Heading the backcourt squad for Warriors is former Blue Doug Lockhart, in Waterloo for their one-year Phys Ed course. Lockhart, a former SIBL all-star himself, has taken over as chief playmaker from departed all-star Bob Pando. Joining him at guard is rookie Jaan Laaniste, one of Toronto's top 'high school performers last year with East York Goliaths.

Adding to Waterloo's depth at guard are Stan Talesnicz from York University and Larry Sobol, a rookie from Forest Hill Collegiate.

In keeping with the cliché that it's what's up front that counts, Warriors have a solid set of forwards whose chief strongpoint is rebounding. Sol Giber is having his best year ever as a Warrior, and is presently leading the SIBL in scoring. He is also hauling down 10-15 rebounds a game.

Waterloo also has Neil Rourke, another veteran, who is an excellent rebounder and consistent scorer. Highly-touted Bryan Brown, 6'8" centre from East York Goliaths, was shaky in early season encounters, but appears to be improving. If Brown plays up to expectations, Warriors will be almost unbeatable under the basket.

And riding the Waterloo bench is Ty Burch, an all-star forward last year at the University of Guelph. The chief mystery this year has been Coach Pugliese's minimal use of Burch—a proven performer in SIBL action.

It should be a great game Waterloo tries to control the ball and set up for that one safe shot—Blues prefer the wide-open game. It is interesting that the two teams that Warriors have already defeated—Windsor and Mac —are stronger up front than at guard, thus giving Warriors an overall edge. Blues are not the great rebounders, but they have excellent outside shooters, and their backcourt tandem of Mark White and Bruce Dempster is the best in the league.

TELEGRAM

Thanks to people like Ron Jhu and Ken Severs, the giant telegram to the hockey Blues in Austria is slowly gathering names (about 300 so far). Now that Blues have dealt with the pesky Finns and a win looks a certainty against Sweden, Sunday's game against Russia looms as the decisive one in the whole tournament.

The bulkier the telegram, the more the lift to Blues. So get your name on, luv.

Make a point of finding US, since we ain't enough to find YOU. We can promise this: there will be a hooth open all day in the Sidney Smith building and at the library from 12:00-2:00. (By the way, nice-looking girls are manning?) the Sid Smith location between noon and two o'clock and from 3:00-4:30).

What we'd really like is some initiative from all you engineering, residence and fraternity types (traditionally the backbone of the sporting populace at U of T). It just takes ONE OF YOU to call a few buddies, classmates, brothers or house-mates into giving up 20c (that's right! only 20c) to get his name on the list. Then turn in your cash and list to the Varsity sports office some time on Thursday. Or phone and we'll pick the goods up.

Those submitting lists with 25 or more names will be presented with a free ticket to Blues' next home basketball or hockey game. (wow!)

Varsity fencers foil opposition

Varsity's fencing team had their most successful meet of the season last Saturday as they travelled to Hamilton for duels with McMaster and 21-6 and Brock 24-3.

Members of the team were Ron Rice, Richard Wong and Henry Lee in foil, Helmut Microys, Irv Smitman and Martin Peros in epee, and Mark Pfeiffer, John Archbold and Peros in sabre. Rice, Wong, Microys and Peros (in epee) had perfect 6-0 records for the afternoon.

Last Sunday, Richard Wong entered and emerged victorious in the Ontario Unclassified Foil championships.

Blues' next meet is in Kingston against RMC on Jan. 27. Varsity managed only a 15-12 margin of victory when the caddies were here.

Audiences endure dull speakers to view media madness

By PAUL MACRAE

Dick Ainsworth, a teacher at Upper Canada College, opened the second night of (B)ABEL: Society as Propaganda last night by noting, "Advertising adds art and a good deal of humor to our lives." An audience of 1,500 hooted and hissed.

They laughed at the dry humor of advertising president John Straiton, yawned through propaganda guru Vance Packard and flocked to the exits while McLuhan, aide Harley Parker proved the medium is the message—if you could understand the message.

But they were turned on by the mixed-media showing, a collage of decolletages, boobs and bathroom tissue bounced all over Convocation Hall. They even applauded a Volkswagen commercial.

On screen, young moderns lipped cigarettes and smiled sophistry beside projections of cigarette dangers.

Sex. First, the Playboy woman-as-object kind, then woman-as-salesman for cars, soft drinks (in cans?), Kleenex, perfume. "Does she or doesn't she?" Even the YES in the Polaroid "Swinger" ad took on a new meaning. Nazi propaganda films, hundreds of thousands of heiling arms and marching soldiers, "And now our national anthem," the Canadian flag, and the absurd pseudo-patriotism of the Carling salute.

Finally, a silent, screaming Hitler as an evangelical huckster makes a hysterical pitch on loud-speaker. It was a happening all right—you even cheered when that little kid in the Apple Jacks commercial wipes out "the bullies".

It was funny, in places, but you couldn't miss the seriousness of the creators of this part of (B)ABEL. But if you did, they conveniently provided slides of garbage cans and a hand palming gold coins to remind you.

Packard was the big name, but Straiton was funnier as he carefully avoided praising the merits of advertising too highly.

"Just because the Russians do it doesn't make it right," he said.

His message was that without a good product, advertising is quickly uncovered as sham. "The bigger the advertising campaign for a bad product, the faster the product dies."

Packard was more serious, warning about the dangers of a too-consumption-oriented, too-materialistic, too-narcissistic society whipped up by advertising. At best he would admit that "advertising is healthier than cigarettes."

Harley Parker, associate of Marshall McLuhan at Fordham University, said Western society was moving away from a rational, logical, fragmented and alienated world (which he called madness) toward the artistic integrity and unity of myth.

By INGRID YABALIS

"Americrap," later rechristened "academicrap" by a member of the mad audience, opened Wednesday's first evening session of the Myth and Madness Festival in the biggest myth around—Convocation Hall.

The multi-media environmental program at times delved into a myth or madness or two but generally came off with a mild fizzle.

The ensuing panel discussion flopped with a thud

"We're using all the media," said Bob Rae (III UC), one of the festival organizers in the prologue address "to make the audience participate."

The audience tried. They swivelled necks, strained ears and made comments . . . "huh?" . . . "isn't that?" "I know who that is, that's . . ."

The show began with a flash of North America's mythiest myths, the JFK's. And our folk heroes paraded. The Beatles answered interviews, Paul Anka sang to his adoring hysterical females, the pope flashed by, hand held up in blessing.

As The Doors screamed the climax of The End, a thunder screech of a spaceship taking off came into the collage of noise. Sounds switched from speaker to speaker completely saturating the hall. Gunshots . . .

screams . . . kill for peace . . . violence . . . she loves you yeah, yeah, yeah.

Lucy B. J. flashed on the ceiling. A laugh started in one speaker, spread to the others as her smiling face flicked back and forth to the rhythm of the laugh.

It went on and on, louder and louder. The face became distorted and the laugh grotesque by combination.

Suddenly you really felt the madness. You were a part of it, you made it.

No one knew quite how to take it. The collage ended with sudden blackness. A splattered applause trickled through the hall. Some one yelled "Are you sure?" The lights came on and only then the audience knew for sure what to do. General applause came.

"And now if you think about it what you'd really like is a hot dog and a coke," said John O'Neill, sociology professor at York University and one of the three panelists. These are stable things.

So it went through the discussion as Graham Fraser (IV UC) acted the moderator. The audience ceased to participate entirely and left.

A few die-hards, maybe the few who really wanted to delve into the madness of our society stayed to question the speakers.

McGill Daily editors only reprimanded

MONTREAL (VNS) — The two editors of the McGill Daily who were charged with printing obscenities got off with their noses wiped by the disciplinary senate committee.

Peter Alnutt and Pierre Fournier were found guilty of contravening the university's "standards of decency" by reprinting the controversial piece from the American satirical review, The Realist. The article, which purported to be censored extracts the original manuscript of William Manchester's book, The Death of a President, was also reprinted by the University of Montreal student paper, Le Quartier Latin, and was quoted by The Varsity. No disciplinary action was taken on either campus.

The McGill senate committee said the two editors "committed a serious error of judgement and displayed irresponsible behaviour" in publishing the article.

The official reprimand is the lightest possible sentence, Alnutt said the light penalty showed the whole case was ridiculous.

He said it would be a "serious error" if the administration imposed a harsher sentence on John Fekete, who incorporated the Realist article in his column.

Fekete is currently taking court action challenging the university's right to take disciplinary action.

Stan Gray, McGill political science lecturer and activist against the administration during the Daily obscenity crisis, will be speaking on campus today.

Gray, chairman of the Students for Democratic University, a student power group on the McGill campus, was invited here by the newly-formed Independent Socialist Club.

He will speak on student activism and power at Sidney Smith Hall today at 1 p.m.

Bills piling up as POSAP loans late

University of Toronto students awaiting overdue student awards instalments have been forced to overdraw bank accounts and receive loans from their colleges to tide them over.

"Only 35 students from Victoria College, for instance, seem to have gotten their money," says John Treleaven vice-president of the Students Administrative Council.

"I know several students who have been forced to take out one-week loans."

At Wednesday's SAC meeting, President Tom Faulkner called for reports of students who were expecting POSAP money but hadn't received it yet.

Technically, second instalments are now overdue.

Some students, reported Treleaven, connect delay with an accusation by a university affairs officer earlier in the week that students have been cheating on their applications.

"But I think the delay is part of an attempt to convince the public that a stiffer means test to be introduced next year is necessary."

Y'all guessed it! J-J is throwing another party. Come and watch the Brute Hulk bathe Sandy sometime after 9 o'clock Saturday night. Drop into the office for the details.

WOLFEVILLE, N. S. (CUP) — The Athenaeum, student paper at Acadia University, had to change printers after the company refused to reprint a cartoon from The Realist, a U.S. satirical revue.

The cartoon depicts two characters representing Russia and the U.S., and a woman, representing the world. The U.S. is pointing to Russia and saying to the girl:

"It's his turn now, and then me again . . ."

George Baker, owner publisher of the Kentville Publishing Company, contended the cartoon was "suggestive" and could hurt the image of Acadia University. He also expressed fear of possible lawsuits against him.

POSAP IS A FARCE

How many students who voted for Tom Faulkner because they felt S.A.C. should take decisions on moral issues are presently utilizing POSAP benefits to buy savings bonds, real estate, common stock, a car, etc. How many of those who felt morality was an individual matter are using POSAP because they are either too lazy or too "dignified" to work or because they never learned to or, in fact, saw any reason to save. Yet Mr. Faulkner tells students that none of the POSAP parasites would be on campus were it not for their grants and loans.

Doubtless C.U.S. will put up their perennial clamour to increase the quantity, not the discretion of POSAP. Liberal and NDP politicians will continue to be applauded as they promise free tuition, conveniently neglecting the source of funds. Conservative candidates who point out that experience shows that a public taxed to meet free tuition, invariably demands a greater say in the salaries of graduates, will be booted out by the leftist swarms, out for the latest government handout.

When any welfare scheme loses sight of its ultimate purpose of abolishing itself and becomes a political football or a substitute for toil and thrift, all should be concerned. Why hasn't S.A.C. demanded a meaningful, fool-proof means test for applicants to POSAP. Anyone who is not too proud to ask for welfare should not be too proud to submit to a proper means test. What possible incentive remains for anyone to work his way through college when one can merely turn to POSAP. Why should my tax-dollar be used to subsidize the commercial exploits of those who spoil it for the relatively few who legitimately need POSAP and the many in the community-at-large who do require and are deprived of government relief of all forms especially during a tight-money period.

When one cheats his government he invariably is cheating himself. By ossulating the bonds of trust which must intertwine a democratic society, we all lose in the long run. However most distressing is the fact that in today's affluence, perfidious relations with POSAP are no longer kept hidden. A penchant for such execrable self-service has become a virtue to boast about amongst too many of the leaders of tomorrow.

Yes, Mr. Faulkner, S.A.C. does have the right "to foster the moral growth of the community".

New students vote SAC rep today

Candidates consider the Placement Service debate the central issue in today's Students' Administrative Council by-election at New College.

The by-election is being held to fill the New College seat vacated by D'Arcy Martin last month.

Harriet Kideckel (I new) says all companies should be allowed to recruit on campus.

"The protesters should protest," she said, "but the final decision should be left up to applicants as to whether they want to work for a given company or not."

She promised to vote according to "the wishes of New College."

"Because they elect me as a representative of New College, I am duty bound to represent their opinions, even if they conflict with my own."

Don Short (II New) says he is a "Faulkner man."

"I feel SAC has the right to determine the use of university facilities. Students should have the decisive say," he said.

"I am opposed to companies supporting the American war effort."

Short also said he supports a more active role for SAC. He expressed his backing for the reforms of the SAC education commission advocated by Bob Bosin (III Inn).

Chris Szalwinski (I APSC) wants SAC to "strive for a student-controlled placement service."

While he does not believe that keeping companies off campus will have a great effect on the American war effort, Szalwinski said SAC has the right to make such decisions.

"If any faculties do not agree with the SAC decision, they can set up their own placement service," he said.

Szalwinski advocates a newsletter to be produced after each SAC meeting by the New College representatives. This, he feels, will generate interest in SAC at New College.

He also suggests that SAC take a greater role in providing student parking.

Summer Varsity will publish this year

The Students Administrative Council decided Wednesday night to continue to publish the Summer Varsity.

"It's a straw they can grasp at in the midst of this pressure cooker," argued SAC President Tom Faulkner.

The Summer Varsity publishes six issues for students on campus in July and August.

German students to vote Council reps

All students studying German in any of the federated colleges are eligible to vote in the election of German department representatives to the Arts and Science Faculty Council.

Students interested in discussing election procedures and other related matters are asked to meet tonight at 8 p.m. in the Upper Library of Massey College.

Report suggests SAC 'enter housing field'

The Students Administrative Council housing committee has called on SAC to "consider seriously entering the housing field."

"There are limits to the amount of action which SAC can and should undertake in this field," said the report, presented to SAC members Wednesday night.

"These limits have, however, not been reached."

The 51-page brief, written by Ed Clark (III UC) and now available to students on loan from the SAC office, makes five other major recommendations:

- That the university and colleges work to reduce residence costs and to eliminate "in at least half the residences now on the campus, luxury services" such as maids, dons and catered food.

- that the university concentrate on building residences without these "luxury costs" before it builds "luxury units for the student willing to pay the higher cost."

- that an investigation be made into "the feasibility of the university using homes in areas where it has plans to build residences."

"There seems to be little reason why old houses in one area could not be bought, and run by the university as a "house residence."

- that "the possibility of changing the present method of financing the construction of residences" be investigated.

Costs should be spread out, the report said, among all residence students.

"If the total mortgage fees of all residences were to be paid by all students in residence, then the needed fee increase would be $76 per student rather than $188."

- that a re-examination of the role of the provincial government in student housing be made.

"The government must have a financial aid program which will allow any student who has to live away from home to go to university and cannot afford to pay this standard cost to do so.

"In the future it will be necessary for the government to expend its aid program in order to meet the increased cost of student accommodation."

Also in the report are the recommendations of the Campbell Report, produced by the Presidential Advisory Committee in the Planning of Future Residences.

This report recommended that the university provide residences for 25 per cent of male and 39 per cent of female undergraduate students, and for 40 per cent of single and married students.

The Campbell report also recommends the building of an Innis College residence to house 600 students. It will not be ready in the near future. It also proposed that another UC residence be built on St. George St. between Whitney Hall and Sir Daniel Wilson.

There are no specific plans yet but the university is committed to the Campbell recommendations, Registrar Robin Ross has said.

There are several new residences planned for next year, says the student report. Rochdale College is being constructed by the campus co-op. It will have 90 rooms for both married and single students and is expected to be ready this fall.

Tartu College is in the planning stages. Construction is expected to begin this spring. SAC is helping to finance it with a $25,000 loan.

University residences are the dominant type of accommodation, the report says.

Pharmacy may quit SAC

By KATHY ADAMS

The students of the faculty of pharmacy may withdraw from the Students Administrative Council because they think SAC is not doing anything for them.

"It is not official yet," said Jim Watt (IV Phar), president of the Undergraduate Pharmacy Society. "But a number of people are considering bringing it up at the UPS meeting next month."

"We're a professional faculty and we do not agree with the new left," said Mike Hunter (III Phar), a member of UPS and the editor of The Script, the pharmacy newspaper.

"SAC is a bunch of nuts. There is nothing in it for us," he said.

"We're paying $8 each, $3,600 from the faculty to SAC. We can use this money to join the Canadian Association of Pharmacy Students and Interns and for sports equipment and parties."

Editorials in The Script have recently been critical of SAC's accomplishments.

"SAC can't speak for students on moral issues," said Bob Miller (III Pharm), SAC representative for pharmacy. "By taking a stand on campus recruitment, SAC is slapping down the professional students."

Watt, UPS president, is against withdrawing although he thinks that most of the criticisms of SAC are justified.

"SAC programs are geared to artsmen but the professional faculties could ask to help them set up their own programs. We could make more use of SAC than we do now."

The vice-president of UPS, Jane Hart (III Pharm), is also in favor of staying in SAC although she admits she doesn't know what SAC is doing for pharmacy students.

"Some people in pharmacy are unhappy about SAC preventing interviewers on campus. Students can decide for themselves if they want to work for a company."

"I think SAC should talk about the Blue and White Society and things on campus, not draft-dodgers and Vietnam. But perhaps they will get on to these things later."

"But withdrawing from SAC is a big move. I'm against getting out of SAC because we would have to offer pharmacy students as much or more than they would get from SAC," she added.

If pharmacy students decide to withdraw they will run into constitutional difficulties.

"There is no provision in the University of Toronto Act for withdrawal," John Carlisle (III Meds), SAC judicial commissioner, explained in an interview.

"The pharmacy representative can resign and the faculty can disassociate itself from the council's actions but legally their withdrawal won't mean anything to anyone."

Two years ago the faculty of engineering withdrew from SAC because of a dispute over election rules, but ran into a legal block.

SAC President Tom Faulkner is sceptical about the possibility of pharmacy withdrawing.

"Many pharmacy students are getting larger government grants because of work done by SAC. The student centre which SAC is building next to the pharmacy building is the most concrete thing any council has done for professional students."

SAC adopts rules for return to PSAC

The Students Administrative Council Wednesday night set two conditions for rejoining the Placement Service Advisory Committee.

These are that the meetings be open to "any member of the university community" and that there be only two administration representatives on the committee instead of the present three.

"The students and faculty should dominate," declared Steve Langdon (III Trin), who presented the policy.

"But the administration should be involved because of their responsibility for carrying out policy."

Council stipulated that the administration seats be filled by a representative from the Placement Service and one from the Directorate of Student Services.

Last week 75 demonstrators in front of Simcoe Hall demanded that the committee have a two-thirds student majority and that it be granted final authority.

"I will debate on the air with any person who wants to defend the McGill Daily if he first lets me say how his mother contracted syphilis—as a satire."

—Pat Burns, CKMG radio (Montreal) editorial during McGill Daily obscenity fuss.

For two McGill Daily editors the Realist reprint affair ended yesterday with a classic Canadian compromise. Peter Allnutt and Pierre Fournier were found guilty of contravening the university's standards of decency but received the lightest possible sentence—an official reprimand.

In other words, the two were not expelled which they could have been had the senate disciplinary committee so decided—but the administration has reaffirmed its jurisdiction in the matter.

The third student charged, John Fekete, the columnist, who reprinted the Krassner article in the first place, is fighting that issue in the Quebec courts—he says the administration does not have disciplinary powers of the type that principal H. Racke Rabertson tried to use.

University administrations are not judicial bodies and don't even know how to act like them in a crisis situation. Robertson's original charges against the students, that of printing an "obscene libel" was straight out of his angry head and with no basis in law. There is no such charge. Neither is the article in question obscene under Canada's or the U.S.A.'s obscenity laws.

The article was pretty strong stuff but then so is any satire that gets at something in an uncompromising way. And the article was satire and good satire at that, even English professors in McGill's English department testified to that.

Krassner used an admittedly revolting paragraph to satirize a much more revolting situation, and as he has said, the fact that some people in the U.S.A. actually believed that it could have occurred is the crux of the satire.

H. Racke Rabertson, the 55-year-old surgeon who runs McGill, failed to see that strong language should be printed if there is a reason for it, and that at times social and political satire is the most important printing that can be done.

Rabertson's competence to act as a judge in this matter was also invalidated by his unwarranted strong reaction to the printing of the article. The speed and circumstances of his reaction suggest that another and more important motive invalidated his competence—outside pressure.

On the morning the Daily was to appear, most of the copies disappeared. No one yet knows who took them but the Daily's editors are suspicious of the speed with which the downtown news media received the story. Most of the papers were missing and the story was big news before most of the campus had a chance to see the issue.

(One former Daily staffer is no longer invited to come around or to participate in meetings of campus political groups. He is suspected of feeding information to the principal's office).

Once the news stories started, the papers and radio were violent in their attacks. Their violence was only surpassed by their inability to report facts straight. They reported that all the Daily's staff had resigned, when only one did; they reported that the paper's printing presses had been confiscated by the police when the paper doesn't do its own printing.

When members of the Daily editorial board phoned to correct these and other mistakes, the papers and radio stations refused to listen to them. The campaign was so violent that Pat Burns got positively disgusting in the hourly editorials his radio stations broadcasted.

The administration—as usual worried about what all this will do to contributions from the public—acted with speed. That precipitated a week of demonstrations led by Students for a Democratic University.

The most ludicrous thing of all, in the disciplinary hearings, the committee members repeatedly asked questions to see if the affair had been planned to lead to a confrontation and a sit-in. Members even referred back to a September issue of the Daily in which "Peter Allnutt will be charged with obscenity" was printed in a masthead ad. Masthead ads are bits of trivia added under the editorial page list of editors, usually written by some newsroom wit but meant for nothing except staff relations within the paper.

Anyway, the McGill administration should have known that when Berkeley-type situations occur on a campus, they occur spontaneously. Much as the radicals try to precipitate them sometimes, they are just as surprised as anyone else when they occur. And usually—if you take the classic Berkeley model—the demonstrations are in reaction to a stupid action by the administration.

University administrations are civil services with office workers and bureaucrats. They have too much on their minds to act as juries, in anything other than academic issues.

Hi thar sonny. Mind if oh spray a little napalm on that snowball?
apology expected                      half-cooked frosh??

Sir:
 I have never been more than indifferent and tried never to be less than disgusted with the behaviour of the Engineers on this campus. However, they do not cease to amaze nor to reach a low point in their affront against this community. We should only say that the throwing of snow at the demonstrators and the burning of their signs by the Engineers, is regrettable. To degrade the incident further would surely be to the advantage of the "Engineering spirit."

I apologise for being an Engineer myself: at this moment I feel that this is fault enough. You should expect an apology from the Engineering Society who planned the counter-demonstration, because they mistakenly assumed that those Engineers could be capable of showing the slightest hint of mature behaviour or that they placed any value on human dignity.

To the demonstrators protesting Canadian involvement in Vietnam we can only say this: nothing could have emphasized more your sincerity in your beliefs than the complete self-restraint exhibited by each one of you; our only hope is that none of you were hurt.

John Bukovec III AFSC

Sirs:
 How long will those Arts Frosh continue to disgrace the University and even themselves with their anti-Viet Nam protests? Why don't they take the time to learn the full implications of the war and the U.S. involvement before they go off half cocked.

S.A. McCarty,
 Engineering, 3T4.

expensive windows

Sir:
 Of interest to some students on campus, especially those of Devonshire House, is a statement by Dean Stager to the residents of New College at a dinner Sunday Jan. 21. He said that snowball fights were lots of fun, but that as windows at New College cost over $100 to replace instead of about $1 at other residences, there is a rule that no one is allowed to throw snowballs around New College. He went on to suggest that we could throw snowballs on the front campus, back campus or at Devonshire House.

I wonder what our Dean would think if the residents of Devonshire House were told to go to New College to throw snowballs?
 P.S. Please do not publish my name as I might like to get back into residence next year.

Remarkable Earl Hines

By JACK McCaffrey

Earl Hines, the piano player, is a remarkable man. As one of the people who works at the Colonial put it: "You know, the management doesn't like him playing those long sets. But Mr. Hines loves his music, and no one can tell him what to do with it."

What is remarkable about that statement is that, besides being a very apt observation, it demonstrates that Hines can reach anyone, even the people who work where he plays. For an employee of a tavern to dig the music is very rare indeed (at some taverns, they don't even know who is on the bandstand, and couldn't care less).

In a set that lasted for an hour and a half (when was the last time you heard a set in a club that was almost as long as a concert?) Hines once again proved that being a superlative jazz musician and being a great entertainer are not necessarily incompatible. It's just that hardly anyone else can do it.

Hines the jazz musician comes in three parts — piano player, leader, and singer (he doesn't get much attention for his singing, but that's because what little singing he does is overshadowed by his overwhelming work at the keyboard).

Hines the piano player came to prominence with the Hot Seven of Louis Armstrong in 1928. After all these years, he has lost none of the vigour, originality, and command of the instrument that he made famous in his series of recordings with Armstrong. A man of imposing dimensions, Hines at times seems almost to intimidate the piano as he extracts from it an incredible variety of sounds, textures, and rhythms.

At the beginning of a set, Hines generally launches into a medley of old pop standards. In the interludes that connect the tunes he sometimes gives evidence of one his few failings — a tendency towards bombast. Occasionally, when he lets things get out of hand (generally in an overflow of enthusiasm), Hines will play grandiose out-of-tempo passages in which he runs up and down the keyboard, punching out as many notes as possible with the greatest force and volume that he can summon up. When this happens, the sound gets muddy, due to the uncertain articulation of all those notes.

But once he is safely into the piece itself, Hines can define a melody with simplicity, charm, and swing.

Then, moving into his improvisation, the complexity of his ideas increases. In a piece like "Bernie's Tune", Hines plays repeated, decorative phrases at the top of the keyboard while with his left hand he rings out a countermelody. Forceful tremolos and big splashing chords thicken the texture. Then, building up to a high pitch of excitement, Hines slices out a string of octaves in his right hand, shoring them up with chordal jabs in his left. As he reaches the end of his solo, Hines switches briefly into "stride" piano (oom-pah in the left hand, staccato chords and

The Mothers — A nice place to visit

By ALLAN KAMIN

Ladies and gentlemen, the President of the Ignited States:

"My fellow war freaks; I have often been accused of being plastic (aside to Press — that is, full of bullshit). I can only say in my own self-defence that I love my children, and my children's children, and I will not allow their minds to be enslaved and twisted by dopepeddlers the likes of Mao, Leary, Kropotkin, Kosygin, Feuer, Nasser, and, above all, or rather should I say in all honesty below all, by . . . THE MOTHERS OF INVENTION!

(The President extends his hand as the audience erupts in loud applause, and a half-dozen obnoxious-looking, long-haired gentlemen in tuxedos prance onto the platform to continuing waves of applause. The President presents the leader of the group, the most obnoxious-looking of them all, with a bright orange and a daffodil, and strides nobly off the platform, all the while proclaiming: "Yes, I love my children, love them, love them, love them . . .")

The leader, an ex-ad-man named Frank Zappa, adjusts the microphone, eyes the audience with contempt worn thin by repeated play, spits on a swooning old lady in the first row, and begins some gentle ribbing of his host, the President:

"He's been sick, and I think his wife is gonna bring him some chicken soup."

At this point, the entire Mothers' chorus breaks into a round of:

"Plastic people, O baby, now you're such a drag."

And so the Mothers, whose latest album, yet to be released, is entitled "We're Only in it for the Money," begin another command performance.

The groovy thing about the Mothers is that people like them for so many different reasons. Witness:

A. "I dig the Mothers because they tell middle-class straight parents what creeps they really are. Mommy and Daddy are plastic dolls which can be programmed to do whatever you want them to do. The Mothers really sock it to them when they tell them: "If your kids were to find out what you're really all about, they'd kill you in your sleep."

B. "I like the way the Mothers hold musical mirrors to show part-time hippies and hip teeny-boppers their true nature, that of ornate, vigorous versions of middle-class phoniness. Making the drop-out scene? Then "be a bummer every summer." And remember, if you're the type of man who blows the minds of the grooviest chickies, that "brown shoes don't make it".

C. "The Mothers' trip is telling the high school set what a fraud their entire scene is: they specialize, in fact, in parodies of old sappy high-school hop numbers. I enjoy the way they cut up the pbonny sentimentality and pointless emotionalism of puppy love, in fact, of love in general."

From a lecture on enlightenment: You may ask: "How can a person, a person like myself, attain enlightenment?" The answer is simple. The process of attaining enlightenment can be broken down into two parts:

A. Denial:

— of the structures which society has placed in your mind;

Mather Hen
FRANK ZAPPA

— recognition of these structures to be unreal, artificial, divorced from your true nature; in short, bullshit;

B. Affirmation:

— of a reality that exists beyond these structures;
—this reality consists of:
—love
—harmony
—the flow of god through all people
—green things in general

Hines as leader has had a long career of incredible variety. In 1934 he began a long stay at the Grand Terrace in Chicago. At the helm of one of the best big bands of the swing era, Hines broadcast over radio stations all over the continent. In the early '40's, he led one of the best and earliest of the pre-modern bands which included some of the leading figures of the bop era.

For a long time Hines dropped out of sight. During the late '50's, he led a critics and public who had forgotten him. With increasing acclaim came a flood of records, the first good records Hines had made in a long time. And thus occurred the resurgence of Earl Hines, one of the most amazing and heartening occurrences of recent years.

Not only is Earl Hines a master jazz musician, he is also a very successful entertainer. He projects a very forceful, lively, good-natured personality, and manages to involve even the squarest (and also the coolest) mem-

Dixieland band which included such veterans as Darnell Howard (clarinet) and Jimmy Archey (trombone). However it was not until the present decade that Hines cast off the fetters of such a confining musical context and once again received the recognition which is his due.

Beginning with a series of concerts in a small off-Broadway theatre in New York, Hines started to recapture the attention of the members of his audience in the music. Hines plays requests from the audience; he announces the tunes and the musicians, he tells an occasional anecdote; he is obviously interested in "pleasing the people". And yet, in no way does this detract from the integrity of his art. The music which you can still hear at the Colonial for the next week in some of the best jazz you will be able to hear anywhere these days.

BOTTLES UP AT THE BULL AND THE BEAR.

There's just enough room for you and your friends at Toronto's newest pub. A stone's throw from campus on Wellesley, just east of Bay (part of The Sutton Place Hotel). So come as you are!

I wonder how Bob Dylan feels when he reads about Bob Dylan. Does he worry about his ratings? He is, after all, the BOY WHO PUT HIBBING MINNESOTA ON THE MAP!

Bob Dylan's new album, John Wesley Harding makes its appearance in Toronto and President Johnson on the same day puts on his Grim Face # 1 and announces to the nation that he is calling up the reserves, a decision reached after a brief consultation with God.

Bob Dylan, the Sarajevo of tomorrow's Korean War? Everyone knows from the wire service reports from Viet Nam that cannabis - grass-marijuana is in widespread use by the front line troops; what they might not know is that Hanoi Hanna does not only broadcast political propaganda to the foot-sore and mind-sore soldiers. Any Saturday night, near the DMZ, writes one soldier, Mr. Charley looks across the burned out jungle wastes and listens to the giggle of stoned potheads in the foxholes; he picks up Hanoi Hanna on his monitor and for the next two hours there is a cease-fire as the jungle reverberates to the sounds of Highway 61 Revisited, and Blonde on Blonde. Mr. Charley and GI Joe are groovin tonight chillun...

Dylan, like Garbo, has tried to structure a kind of anonymity about his personal life ever since it became evident that he was to be the golden boy of American pop culture. His followers, fans and image makers have, of course, gone after the facts of his private life with a vengeance which is not even equalled by their enthusiasm for his music.

A bit of this, a scrap of that, rumour, adulation and fertile imaginations have created the shimmering, unsubstantial myth of the articulate, compassionate all - American Freak. He is, let us remember, the mezzo-profundo who, from his humble but exciting debut at Gerdes Folk City in New York, came right to the top and proved that commercial success is not necessarily the bane of artistic integrity. Just like the Beatles.

What eluded the critics and the generation just before ours which had been ossified by the Presley era, was that, whatever his faults as a musician-poet-singer - and objectively they were many - he somehow zeroed in a very personal way, into the heads of those young people who were to form the nucleus of the emerging sub-cultures - the new left, the hippies, and, more importantly, wherever the drug scene was taking roots. For the Up Your's generation he was a spokesman.

Unfortunately, for he also became a possession - or to put it more precisely, his image became a possession and was jealously hounded and created and guarded by thousands who had never seen him as His myth grew. Voyeurism and invasion of privacy although not unique to Dylan alone, became a real menace; John Lennon and Paul McCartney explain that they try to tell the adoring fan at the gate-post that she(he) is in every way equal to them; doing your own thing is emerging as a new creed which threatens to undercut the organizational structures of the new left as well as the great old tradition of hero worship in music.

Yet it seems that Bob Dylan has been unable to cope with the culture vultures and the people who want him to do their thing for them. The paradox is, of course, that he seems to invite it while he runs away from it.

This is why, I suppose, the Don Pennebaker film Don't Look Back disturbed me so much, for it was the worst kind of voyeurism; it may be why Frank Zappa talks of Pennebaker films as hand held camera bullshit. Pennebaker himself said that he was interested in exploring mythic figures; yet if he were more honest - or perhaps more realistic - his film actually feeds fuel to the fire, for the film is a Genuine - Pure Documentary Presentation of Bob Dylan behind the floodlights. For many it was a long sought for glimpse of the real Dylan. One fellow I spoke with after seeing the film at the Montreal Film Festival last summer, said he enjoyed the film because it confirmed his suspicion that Dylan was a real bastard. Another liked it because he enjoyed watching Dylan put people down. Etc. Etc. Arggggh.

Yet Dylan allowed the movie to be made - although a former employee of Pennebakers says that Dylan wanted the movie stopped as soon as it was made.

Another story goes that Dylan was suing the poster company that puts out the personality posters for an invasion of privacy for printing his mug.

People take him so personally; remember way back when the radio announcers pronounced his name as Die-lan (rhymes with highland) and devotees sniggered at such ignorance. Shortly after he exploded onto the commercial market, a Time (Newsweek?) article reported that his real name was Robert Zimmerman and a good friend of mine went into depression for a week.

Some three or four years ago Dylan made a CBC programme for Quest, when Daryl Duke was producer of that programme. This was before Mr. Tambourine Man and his first Toronto concert. We heard that he was in town and Murray Reiss, myself and a few others went down to interview him for the Gargoyle Magazine. We really didn't expect him to agree, but after the programme had been taped he walked into the Artists Lounge, shook our hands and started to talk.

We didn't do much interviewing - we just muttered a few words like 'Woody Guthrie', and 'poetry' and 'Joan Baez' and let him do the talking - which he did for a full hour as the tape recorder picked it all up. From time to time some chick in furs would come to the door and say 'Hurry up Bob, the car is waiting' and he would tell her to go away, he was having a good time talking.

He finally trailed off, looking very tired and haggard. As he got up he said "I was talking to some friends of mine before the show; and this cat came up and wanted me to give him my harmonica!"

He got more angry and began to swear. "I told him to get his own fuckin' harmonica, cause the only reason he wanted it was so he could tell his friends that 'Bob Dylan gave me this harmonica'. He wanted to say that I was his friend and I never met him!"

With that he smiled, shook our hands and said that he hoped he would see us again.

He was one of the politest, friendliest and humblest people I ever met. Four years ago... even then he was trying to get away from the parasites.

Then came his first Toronto concert, where he sang Mr. Tambourine Man, Gates of Eden, It's all Right Ma and blew the collective minds of thousands of stoned young people in Massey Hall. After the concert his car was mobbed by adoring girls and a frightened looking Dylan yelled 'Get that girl off the car; she'll get hurt!'

Then, incredible of incredible, rumour had it that Dylan had gone electric; thousands screamed; purists felt betrayed. They booed him. Richter and I went to the Newport Folk Festival of 1965. After a workshop on the grassy field, Dylan finished his set and began to walk away. After thirty seconds he was running, looking very frightened as he was pursued by thirty hungry looking teenyboppers.

In the evening concert he sang half his numbers with the electric guitar; some of the audience began to boo and he turned his back on them. The booing got louder, until he turned around, glaring, and sang It's All Over Now Baby Blue, literally spitting the words out at the audience.

Then his second Toronto concert; as he played his electric numbers, someone shouted BOB DYLAN IS DEAD; others booed. Then he walked to the piano-organ and sang "You know something is happening here, But you don't know what it is ... Do you Mr. Jones."

When the concert was over, some screaming teenyboppers, with hungry looks on their faces went running after him as he, looking very nervous, beat a hasty exit.

Why is everybody so hungry? Don't their mothers give them enough to eat? Bomb Hanoi!

It was cold last January. And word had filtered back from New York: "Dylan has busted his head; Dylan's crazy, you know . . . that Motorcycle Crash & All." Well, word was almost right. Blonde on Blonde had almost killed him; its plastic pyrotechniques had led the singer further from home than he had ever been before. And bringing it all back home was almost impossible.

But somewhere, the singer met John Wesley Harding. And the 19th century Texas gambler & gunslinger baptised the singer, cleaned the fat from his soul, as it were. But for some strange reason the singer took the name (having no fairy godmother to do it for him) Bob Dylan.

To return the favour, Dylan made an album of music, twelve songs to be exact, called John Wesley Harding. Only bassist Charles McCoy, drummer Kenny Buttrey, and steel guitarist Pete Drake are listed as helping. But there are drifters, poor immigrants, wicked messengers, landlords, Frankie Lee, St. Augustine, the erotic hitchhiker wearing a Japanese blanket, and Judas Priest there too. And, of course, Frank.

There were three kings and a jolly three too. The first one had a broken nose, the second, a broken arm and the third was broke. "Faith is the key!" said the first king. "No, froth is the key!" said the second. "You're both wrong," said the third, "the key is Frank!"

"What seems to be the problem?" Frank turned back to the three kings who were astonished. The first king cleared his throat. His shoes were too big and his crown was wet and lopsided but nevertheless, he began to speak in the most meaningful way, "Frank," he began, "Mr. Dylan has come out with a new record. This record of course features none but his own songs and we understand that you're the key." "That's right," said Frank, "I am." "Well then," said the king in a bit of excitement, "could you please open it up for us?" Frank, whom all this time had been reclining with his eyes closed, suddenly opened them both up as wide as a tiger. "And just how far would you like to go in?" he asked and the three kings all looked at each. "Not too far but just far enough so's we can say that we've been there," said the first chief. "All right," said Frank. "I'll see what I can do," and he commenced doing it. First of all, he sat down and crossed his legs, then sprung up, ripped off his shirt and began waving it in the air. A lightbulb fell from one of his pockets and he stamped it out with his foot. Then he took a deep breath, moaned and punched his fist through the plate glass window. Settling back in his chair, he pulled out a knife, "Far enough?" he asked. "Yeah, sure, Frank," said the second king. The third king just shook his head and said he didn't know. The first king remained silent. The door opened and Vera stepped in. "Terry Shute will be leaving us soon and he desires to know if you kings got any gifts you wanna lay on him." Nobody answered.

Nobody. One of Dylan's favourite people. The alienated have always registered with Dylan; and his album probes their loneliness. In the title song, Dylan sings of the rover, a nineteenth century Clyde Barrow, "who was never known to make a foolish move." The next, As I went out one Morning, becomes a supple song of political commitment to which the singer offers his hand and "and she grabs him by his arm." The New York Times' Robert Sheldon calls it a "conversational football for campus activists." But in its small confines it will probably bounce more like a ping-pong ball.

A new mysticism haunts the next cut, I Dreamed I saw Saint Augustine. The thin man has become a monk; and Dylan has found a new Martyr. His poetry flows with a somnambulist surety far past the surreal nightmare of Bob Dylan's 115th Dream.

All Along the Watchtower is a gloomy wail written in a rhythm of unpoetic distortion. The singer's voice sounds cramped, his verse terse and intense. While in its emotional strangulation, Watchtower sounds like the Dylan of old, The Ballad of Frankie Lee and Judas Priest heralds the new. Both music and message are subdued; the former to a hypnotic repeated ostinato of chord changes, the latter to a ballad of Hank Williams simplicity and Woodie Guthrie morality.

The second side, with one exception, offers either Dylan the lyricist or Dylan the melodist, but not both at the same time. The exception is Dear Landlord. And here, the Dylan ambiguity is in full force.

The landlord in question may equal his estranged manager equals one of his ex-friends equals society equals god. "My dreams are beyond control," his bluesy voice goes, "I know you've suffered much but in that you are not unique . . . if you won't underestimate me, I won't underestimate you . . ."

I am a Lonesome Hobo, the following selection, evolves into a miniature morality play; I Pity the Poor Immigrant (set to the melody of 'Peter Amberly'), pits Dylan's against the world once again, matching contradiction with contradiction; (The Wicked Messenger binds Biblical imagery and Mississippi Delta invective into one of the most forceful songs on the album; and the two last songs on the album, Down Along the Cove and I'll Be Your Baby Tonight, weave a sensuous path from a hybrid Elvis Presley-Irma Franklin blue to a Buck Owens type of minstrelly that are as obvious, as coy and as beguiling as the first moon and spoon tune.

The results are cool, compassionate and understanding. It will garner only a few new followers, and lose, probably, many of the old. In the battle of head and heart, the heart seems to have won. You have seen him sprout up from a dumb hill billy into a bunch of backslap and he's wise and he speaks to everyone as if they just answered the door. He don't like people that say he comes from monkeys but nevertheless he is dull and he is destroying boring.

On his way he became a side show. And on his way to meet John Wesley Harding he didn't write Tarantula, where he says:

But I come not to bury the image, but to praise the poet. Now the anarchist — we call him Moan — he takes us and Medusa — she carries the wigs — Moan carries the maps — by noon, we're in the Abyss Hallway — there are shadows of jugglers on the wall and from out of the Chelsea part of the ceiling drops Monk — Moan's boy — Medusa going into a room with two swords above the door.

Some removable mirrors inside — Medusa disappears . . . Lucky, a strange counterpart of the organization — he comes out of the room carrying a mirror — both swords above the door fall down — one sticks into the floor — the other slices him in half . . . Monk, typical flunky and writer of eccentric gag lines to tell yourself if you're ever hung up in the Andes — he leads them into a room with Chinese sayings that all read "a penny saved is a penny is a penny" . . . there is a gigantic looking glass and Mony immediately disintegrates . . . after lunch, you hear a punch of rocks and car accidents over a loudspeaker and Chang Chung — some transient and a professional extra sensual' oom without any pride or shame and he's selling rebel war cries and "how to become a birth control pill" pamphlets — "invent me a signature" says Moan "I must go sign some papers concerning the zippers of truth" "zippers of truth:" says Chang Chung "there is no truth!" "right" says Moan "but there are zippers"

Zippers and Truth. I'll take one. The Truth, as I see it, is the sum of all the jaundiced-eyed character pot-shots of yesterday, today and tomorrow. Which, of course, means nothing. 99.44/100% of all 'Dylanish' noises are made by people who don't know anything about him personally. This article is such a noise. So maybe I should stop here. But it isn't that easy.

All I've said thus far is that Dylan wears a coat of many colors. But who, or more appropriately what wears it? Or maybe he is just the coat. (The wearer being merely a figment of everybody's imagination, even Dylan's. (Hence the start of the 'Dylan's been putting us all on, all this time. Moral indignation.))

There are many colors to the coat. There have been two phases in the public life of the all-seeing, all-knowing, all seeing Dylan. That is, two phases until now. The 'old' phase is the mighty Triumvirate: guitar, harmonica and hillbilly!

The second is the old submerged in a panorama of guitars, imagery, organ, harmonica, drum bass and police sirens.

Now phase three. Looking at Dylan's metamorphosis from an overall standpoint, it appears that he will persist in his controversial nature more as the poet than he is, as someone to read rather than as the more total performer that he is supposed to be as someone to listen to.

There is a greater balance to this record than any of the previous ones. Dylan is no longer the figure of extremes he once was. Allen Ginsberg, replying, to the question about Dylan's having sold out, of having 'put people on' answered bluntly: "Dylan has sold out to God. That is to say, his command was to spread his beauty as wide as possible. It was an artistic challenge to see if great art can be done on a juke box. And he proves it can."

*got too drunk last nite, musta drunk too much, woke up this morning with my mind on freedom & my head feeling like the inside of a prune . . . an planning to lecture today on police brutality, come if you can get away.

when your comming*

your friend, homer the slut.

Perhaps Dylan has sold out once again. Perhaps to God. But more realistically, I think, it sounds like he has sold out to music. The Beatles, on seeing Dylan's movie, Don't Look Back, said "That isn't about Dylan at all. It's about music."

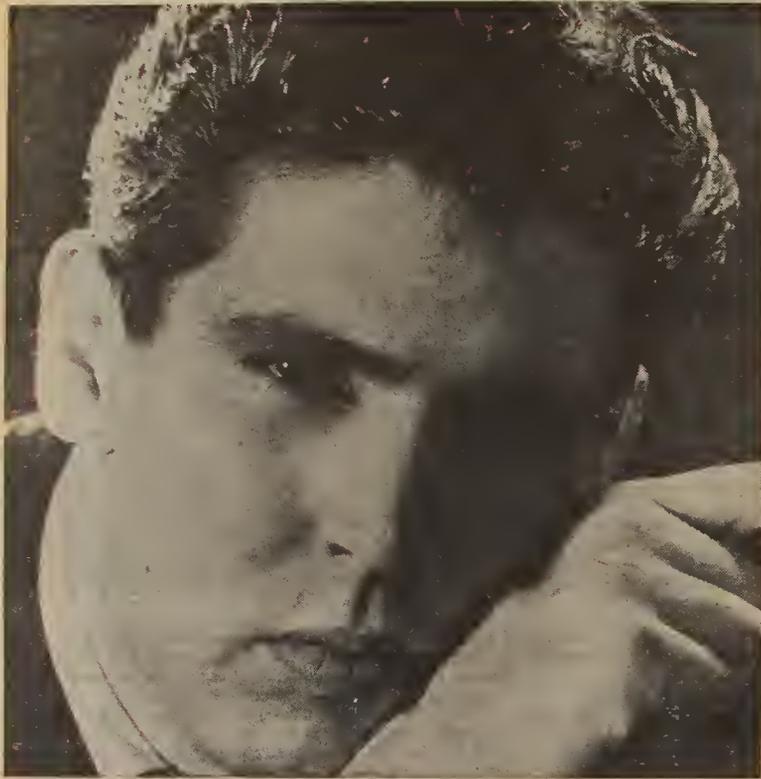

In purely musical terms, the album reflects the more relaxed singing style of . . . well, a star who has gotten away from the enervating demands of egocentric audiences. Dylan came out of nowhere (i.e. Minnesota), got lost in New York, only to turn up alive and well in a Nashville recording studio for this album. Poetically, the album still plays little games of absurdism. But music and words blend better. Dylan is now bringing it all back home.

*Mother say go in That direction & please do the deed of all time & i say mother but it's already been done & she say

LEON MAJOR

Leon Major brings confusion

By ALAN GORDJN

The problem of the Drama Centre has been plaguing this department for months. However, with the recent appointment of Leon Major as production director of the Centre, the potential of the Drama Centre to become a prime mover on the campus scene becomes more clear. Major, as most of us know, has started up a theatre in Halifax, directed opera for the Canadian Opera Company, was the resident director for a year at the Crest, and last year, mounted the impossible production of Edward the Second. He's got experience, then, in all phases of theatre and would seem to be a good choice for inaugurating a coherent policy into the waffling, aimlessly drifting Centre of Drama. The Centre, despite its pleas for tolerance of its naissance, has done little more than inflict two productions of questionable worth on the campus audience, and supply some smaller groups with a stipend to finance further dubious productions.

Instead of solving the problems of misdirection and confusion, however, Mr. Major seems to be adding to them. At a press conference held Tuesday afternoon, in the soft Massey College Library, Mr. Major confessed that he had no idea what his goals were for campus theatre, no idea of what plays should be chosen or produced and, in fact, that he is here at the University in order that he can fail without any financial or reputational loss.

Mr. Major has nothing to lose. If he puts on a poor production he can blame the conditions under which he had to work. He has student actors who, in the space of time allotted for rehearsal and work on their parts, can hardly be expected to turn in more than adequate performances. When a good performance happens, it is an exception, hardly the rule. He has no ultimate control in the plays that he produces, and when the twelve plays that Mr. Major says can be done here properly, what's left for Hart House to put on?

The official position of the Drama Centre, stated by Brian Parker, is that the plays produced must be plays that are unobtainable anywhere else in the city, and they should not be chosen with an eye for their Box-Office appeal. The plays, then, that the University Theatre should be producing are plays that we'd otherwise have no way of seeing produced.

That these plays will not be performed in circumstances conducive to achieving the optimum effect doesn't seem to bother either Major, or Dr. Parker. They both admit freely that we'll be seeing second-rate versions, probably, of play with extremely limited interest.

That is the professed aim of the production end of the Drama Centre, and that aim, it appears to me, stinks.

They have justified the existence of the production side of the Drama Centre by blithely declaring that the graduate student in Drama should have some working knowledge in the practical side of the theatre, whether they are talented in this end or not. All right, why not?

But why should audiences have to sit through future academics wrestling with a play that is, in many cases, unactable and unworkable for the simple reason that Leon Major and/or the committee have decided they have nothing to lose by putting on embarrassing productions.

"But," Mr. Major says, "they know what they're getting. We don't advertise the greatest performances in the greatest plays ever." But the Drama Centre does spend a great deal of money on poor performances of generally indifferent plays. So far this year, Caste and The Devils have received productions that clarified only the faults of the pieces, and brought to light none of their glories.

If Mr. Major is taking this assignment as a chance for him to fail without being hurt personally, rather than as a chance to vitalize what has been generally regarded as an art that is 30 years behind the times, and making it a force in this university setting of great power on every level of human response, then I'm afraid to predict the depths to which the theatre on this campus, and the level of achievement, will fall.

Mr. Major, with the full consciousness of the head of the Drama Centre, seems to be using the university set-up as a good deal for him, where, without having any responsibility to his audience, he is indulging himself at our expense.

There are some of us around who are worried about the state of theatre, whether it still serves a purpose to an entertainment-satiated public, and are concerned with the direction that Theatre should take.

University theatre has the potential to develop vital theatrical forms and should be used to that end. It should not be a museum of mistakes, and a sanctuary for the aimless.

bones, banjos & lincoln as luscombe returns

By K. KLONSKY

Gentlemen Be Seated is George Luscombe's latest contribution to Toronto Workshop Productions. Its setting is the new Alexander Street Theatre, with stage and seating arrangement exactly like the Vivian Beaumont in Lincoln Center without the plush trappings.

The staging of this play, actually a white minstrel show, is its eye-catching strength. The minstrels move with exuberance and precision to the ringing banjo of Francois Klanfer and the guitar of Jack Boschutte. The old favorites of Stephen Foster and some new creations by writer Jan Carew are infectious. The pace rarely slackens as the scenes shift with a flicker of light. Nancy Jowsey, the stage manager, must be complemented for the kaleidoscopic backdrop that slowly moved through an array of abstract designs and colors during the performance.

As the minstrels make intermittent comments about human nature the light flashes and a play begins to evolve. The plot to assassinate Abraham Lincoln is the subject. Geoffrey Read, Mr. Interlocutor, plays President Lincoln with an amusing, comic reserve. Mrs. Lincoln (Diane Grant) henpecks her husband mercilessly, in fact he constantly refers to her as "mother." In the play, there is an abundant flow of empty rhetoric from Mr. Bones (Tom Fisher) or Thad Stevens and Lincoln. Most of the words ring laboriously about the theatre, implying, I hope, the futility of human endeavor.

Although the staging is something to see, the movement of ideas seems at a virtual standstill. Moreover, Luscombe purposely squelches any emotions as they begin to develop. If one's philosophy about playwrighting is broad enough to tolerate such a masque-like production, then Gentlemen Be Seated can be an entertaining evening.

The Confucian adage: I listen to what men say; then, I watch what they do; the two are often not the same.

seems to apply to Gentlemen Be Seated. After listening to all the high purpose and grave philosophy of politicians and scholars through the ages, man himself continues in his old self-seeking frustrating ways. He is basically a selfish animal who enjoys a good time. The title of the play would suggest not only the familiar minstrel call but the proper advice for the orators.

More Mothers

For further instruction on this, read any book by Watts, Alan, but don't believe a word.

If there were a cosmic division of labour (which there isn't, according to my oracle) the Mothers would be the specialists in negation. The fact is, the Mothers act as if there indeed such a division of labour. Why? Because of their own general uptightness, cynicism, lack of any genuine feel for human motions.

But why complain? What comes out of Frank Zappa's head (he writes all their material) is the funniest stream of outrage available today. They are especially good on things like vegetable love ("Call any vegetable, and the chances are good the vegetable will respond to you") and a trapped white-collar minds' fantasies about doing "nasty with a teen-aged queen, of about thirteen (if she were my daughter, Id...").

They are also top-flight musicians, who launch frequently into excellent jazzy improvisations.

All of which makes the Mothers a nice place to visit, but I wouldn't want to live there.

Visconti's tribute to Albert Camus

By MEL BRADSHAW

"In a universe suddenly stripped of illusion and of light, man feels himself to be a stranger.... It is this divorce between man and his life, the actor and his decor which is properly called the sentiment of the absurd". (Albert Camus, The Myth of Sisyphus).

Camus' first great novel has for its subject such a stranger, Arthur Meursault. Although considered one of the first modern novels of alienation, The Stranger has no successors and after more than twenty-five years continues to be strikingly unconventional.

That the author refused to sell the movie rights in his lifetime is easily understandable. After all this is not simply another attack on the bourgeoisie that can be nicely translated into a number of screen caricatures. It is the actor as well as the decor. Furthermore it is the actor's philosophy of life, which is practically ineffable in visual terms.

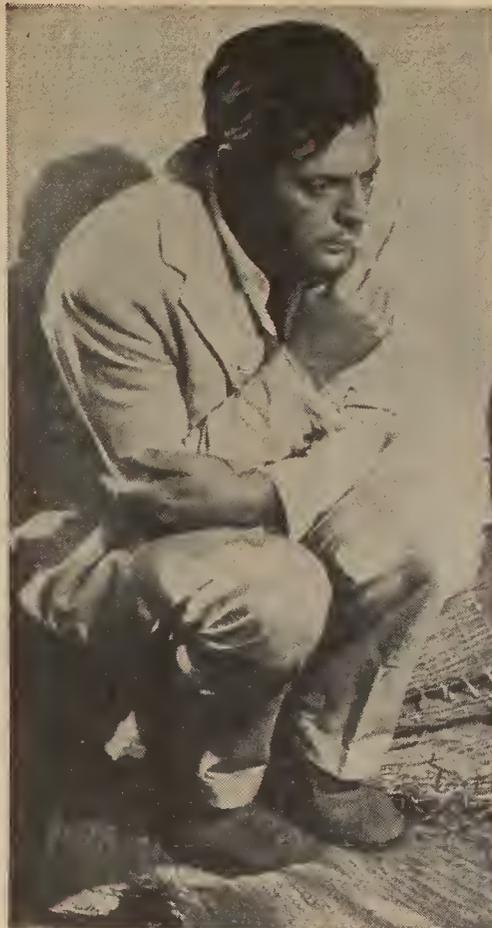

After her husband's death however, Francine Camus agreed to let The Stranger be filmed on condition that Luchino Visconti direct, (Visconti's earlier films include Rocco and his Brothers, The Leopard, and Sandra). On the level of decor, his work is a miracle of fidelity and a loving tribute to Camus. The author's own apartment in the Belcourt quarter of Algiers was used as Meursault's. With the co-operation of the Algerian company, Casbah Film, the city was virtually restored to its condition under French rule for the shooting. Pre-war cigarette packs were reprinted for scrupulous authenticity.

While the exact re-creation of all this detail is, if not easy, at least conceivable, the portrayal of Meursault himself is infinitely more challenging. In the central passage of book and film he shoots an Arab and it is, to my mind, essential that we understand the point of this act. It is manifestly no excuse to say that the act is absurd and therefore inexplicable; first, because it clarifies nothing; secondly, because that is not the sense in which Camus uses "absurd"; and thirdly, because it is equivalent to saying it is permissible for a film to be boring if it is consciously portraying boredom, shallow if it is trying to convey shallowness, or clumsy if clumsiness is its message.

In accounting for this killing, the whole work must be taken into consideration, and the book offers a fuller explanation than the movie. Not that the team of screenwriters, including two of Camus's personal friends, have not done a more than creditable job. In replacing a passing thought in the hero's mind by an expressive gesture, a silent observation by a spoken remark, and retaining parts of the first person monologue intact they have stretched invention to the limit. Nevertheless, the inevitable omissions, though few, are telling. Not having read the novel until after seeing the movie, I found necessary insight in the untranslatable phrases. For instance, "And just then it crossed my mind that one might fire or not fire and it would come to absolutely the same thing".

Marcello Mastroianni, the Fellinian hero, plays once more a human enigma in the title role of The Stranger, and it is a comment on his genius that we never tire of him in such parts (as one is apt to with his brooding counter part Peter O'Toole).

le). Anna Karina plays Meursault's mistress, Marie, with smiling charm and pathetic loveliness as demanded. It is pleasant to see Miss Karina at last out of the clutches of Jean-Luc Godard and behaving more or less normally.

Last fall in connection with Far from the Madding Crowd I spoke of a new fidelity in the filming of novels which manifests itself in choice as well as treatment of a book. This trend seems to assume an ever more exact identity between the reading public and the cinema audiences. While Madding Crowd can stand on its own as a movie, The Stranger only admits of being a supplement to, and not a work truly independent of, Camus' novel. To appreciate the film's chief merit, fidelity of visual detail, and compensate for its chief weakness, absence of psychological detail, one must return to the printed word.

Polluted Valley

By KEN DANCYGER

Valley of the Dolls as a book, has made publishing history. According to the distributors it is on its way to making TV history as well — financial, that is.

Valley of the Dolls has the dramatic impact of a rotten egg. It just goes splat all over the screen. And yes it will make screen history; as the epitome of contrivance and packaged popular culture, that Hollywood manufactures so well.

The story follows the climb of three young maidens in the entertainment business (Barbara Perkins, Patty Duke, and Sharon Tate); the starting point is small town, USA, the finishing line Hollywood. There are men in their lives — they seem to matter to the girls, but not really to us.

In the film you can only measure the level of success they have attained by the number of pills (dolls) they gobble. But for success you have to pay a price or at least learn a lesson. Barbara Perkins sees the shallowness of it all and goes home to Lawrenceville, New England and romps in the snow. Patty Duke having gone through two husbands and a lover, a sanitarium, a nightclub career, a movie career, a theatre career (and still looking 18) ends up symbolically next to a garbage can, behind a theatre, yelling about how lonely she is Sharon Tate (the only affecting character of the lot), develops breast cancer and commits suicide via an overdose of dolls. Poetic justice.

For the record, the director Mark Robson also filmed Peyton Place, a film he handled with much more sensitivity. Curiously twenty years ago Robson also directed Champion a hard-hitting drama about boxing with Kirk Douglas. He pulled no punches then. The times, however, have changed.

What is incredible is that so many people will see the picture and many will enjoy it, as they did the book. Why?

Granted the film has its share of sensationalism. But there is not one ounce of feeling behind the film — no emotion.

Herein lies the weakness as well as the popularity of Valley of the Dolls. Voil! Voyeurism is in; genuine emotion is out. We can glimpse and vicariously enjoy the climb of a star. The movie implies that loneliness and tragedy are the end product of stardom. When the star descends, you can enjoy her fall. Stay in Lawrenceville, USA. Her life was just as miserable as is yours. In its own way the film blesses the status quo and says "Woman, you should be satisfied that you have what you have". No wonder so many secretaries smiled when they left the theatre.

This is a cheap film that cheaply exploits the emotional makeup of women, and the voyeuristic vulnerability of men.

BLOC-NOTES

SMUG MINORITY

We received our copy of The Smug Minority today, complete with the photo of Berton standing beaming in the middle of huge piles of 103,000 copies of the thing that annoyed Robert Fulford so much in last night's Star.

We also popped over to Mac's, as is our wont on gloomy Thursday afternoons, and picked up The Star Weekly, featuring of P.B.'s POWERFUL ATTACK ON THE CONSCIENCE OF CANADA.

Needless to say, anybody reviewing this book is going to approach it with considerable antipathy, after the deluge of press releases that have ben showered about the country. Each one has this special letterhead and special envelopes—with the smug minority in scarlet curlicueing letters—which makes one think that it is an electronic rock group.

The excerpt in the Star Weekly seems a fairly bland, journalistic presentation and attack of the Protestant Ethic, and a fairly standard attack on the rhetoric of free enterprise. The flaws seem obvious: it's a trifle superficial in its re-hash of people like Hall Tbeobald, and Moynihan. This is fine as a magazine article; as a book, it may seem a trifle forced. (More on the book later.) G.F.

REX REED

Rex Reed writes like Andrew Wyeth paints (Magic realism), or maybe like the Beatles in Sergeant Pepper. In some stupendous leap Reed makes a profile present, rather than portray.

This month, in Esquire, it's Peter Fonda: "Holden Caulfield at 27". (Esquire excels itself with Reed pieces; a few months ago, before Bonnie and Clyde, Reed had a profile that was beaded "Will the real Warren Beatty please shut up?").

It's a swinging, boisterous article that moves as fast as Fonda talks — which is what much of the article consists of. After a blurring, fast-talking, hip, bitter, dropped-out collage of background ("Nobody told me the truth about my mother, man. I was ten years old and I didn't understand, I just knew she was dead and I was all alone. I didn't find out how my mother died until I was fifteen. I as sitting in this barber's chair in Rome and I picked up a magazine and read about her doing herself in in an insane asylum. It blew my mind, man. And nobody to this day has ever told me anything.") Reed finishes with a pop. "There seemed only one thing left to ask: 'Are you happy?' But Peter had done a perfect swan dive back into the pool and he never heard the question." C.M.

MISC

Festival flash — the media show for the session on advertising last night was a tremendous success, and a great relief to the festival organizers. Wednesday night's show had been hampered by swift and serious technical breakdown before the show, and the instant quitting of one of the technicians responsible for the collapse. The fact that there was a media show at all Wednesday night was a considerable achievement; last night, however, the triumph was complete.

A few complimentary copies of Logos, Montreal's answer to the Georgia Straight trickled across our desks this afternoon. Apart from a piece on "Theory and Practice of Disobedience" (God! is Dimitrios STILL writing about Civil Disobedience?), it seems a pretty grabby magazine. It expresses much of what we envy Montreal; more film, more theatre, more passion, more politics — generally more for an underground paper to be relevant about.

Our smallest issue yet, and the first of Rod's issues. Bobby Hulk apoplectic about irresponsible Review people who never write to deadlines, and con poor corporal managers into getting records for them, Rod who has done all the work for this issue, retreats to cope with the sports department. ### THEATRE

Drummer Boy stays on at the Royal Alex and Hav Fever finishes up at the O'Keefe to make room for I Can't Hear You When the Water's Running opening Monday. It looks as though your best bet would be to stick around for the U.C. Festival. Next Tuesday, Trinity College Drama Society opens with Sean O'Casey's Shadow of a Gunman, directed by Sean Mulcahy. This will be at Cartwright Hall and tickets are scarce for the second week of its run, so make plans to see it for the first week. This production opens Tuesday, and is the first effort by a new Irish Theatre Group on campus. Later on they intend to present an evening with Michael Yeats, William Butler's son.

At that press conference, we were also introduced to Martin Hunter, who is the Drama Centre's resident playwright. He doesn't seem to know what he's doing there either. I suppose we should be overwhelmed by the honesty of Messrs. Parker, Major and Hunter. I'm disappointed in what appears to be their lethargy. A.G.

FILM

Paul Newman's fans will be able to see him next week both as Cool Hand Luke at the Imperial, Yorkdale, etc. and as The Hustler, Monday and Tuesday at the Electra (College at Brunswick). On the same program with the latter is another film by Robert Rossen, Lilith with Jean Seberg. The Electra's week is completed by the excellent Russian Don Quixote and Billy Liar on Wednesday and Thursday.

New in town this weekend is Jean-Luc Godard's Masculine-Feminine at Cinecity, The Funniest Man in the World with Charles Chaplin at the International, and Bedazzled, an unlikely sounding updated Faust with Beyond the Fringers Peter Cook and Dudley Moore, at the Fairlawn. M.B.

FESTIVAL FILMS

Saw a preview of Mary Omatsu's film S.O.B., which will be shown at the U.C. Festival this weekend. It is a fast-moving collage of the impact of the media-model of Woman and feminine sexuality upon women in general that uses some of the techniques used best by Godard in The Married Woman. The sound (Jimi Hendrix, electronic music by Peter Goddard, and The Blues Project) is extremely effective.

S.O.B. is only one of the films that will be shown this weekend. The highlights will be D. W. Griffith's classic The Birth of a Nation and Peter Watkins' The War Game. Both should definitely be seen by anyone interested in film. (War Game should be seen even if you don't give a damn about film.) The "underground" film collection includes some of the best-known underground films around. (If you haven't seen Norman McLaren's "Neighbours," see it this weekend. It is a classic, and only rarely shown.) G.F.

MUSIC

Secular music replaces the sacred this week. Segovia won't be coming until next Friday to Massey Hall so content yourself with Wilson Pickett, also at Massey Hall, for two shows this Friday, 7:00 and 9:15 p.m. The Mothers (of Invention — the record company wanted to soften the implications of the original, shorter name. If you don't understand what I mean, read James Baldwin) will be at Convocation Hall Sunday evening. Carolyn Hester is still at the Riverboat. And of some local interest: Violinist Steven Staryk recorded a concert at Hart House which will be broadcast on the CBC radio network in two parts. Part one will be heard on Friday, Jan. 26 at 10:30 p.m. EST and Part Two one week later, on Friday, Feb. 2, at 10:30 p.m. EST. z boehm. P.G.

JAZZ

Bobby Hutcherson appears with his new quintet in tow on Wed., Jan. 31 at Hart House. Helping Hutcherson to fill the Great Hall with what will probably be some of the grooviest sounds to assail our auditory senses this year will be: Chick Corea (piano), Reggie Workman (bass), Jimmie Spaulding (alto sax), and Joe Chambers (drums). If you are at all interested in modern music you would have to be a damn fool to miss this concert which is FREE, underlined FREE. Tickets are easily available from the porter at Mr. Massey's Mausoleum (even if you are a woman). Hope to see Y'all there. J.McC.

Fed up? Evaluate your courses

By HARRIET KIDECKEL

Arts and science students will soon have a chance to praise or condemn their professors, tutors, courses and labs.

This will be made possible by the second Students Administrative Council course evaluation, edited by Dave Gobeil (III SMC) and Neils Ortvad (IV Vic).

Aiding them on the $15,000 project and handling publicity is Ron McInnes (II Law), who was co-editor of last year's pioneer effort.

"It is meant to be a free exchange of information—not a pressure on the faculty," Ortvad said in a recent interview.

Many professors last year eagerly assisted the course evaluation staff for their own benefit; and most of them used suggestions given to improve their courses this year, Ortvad reported.

This year's editors have tried to iron out many of the problems that plagued last year's project.

For instance, they are starting work earlier this year, avoiding the haste which hobbled organizational efforts last time.

And, unlike last year, there will be two questionnaires—one for arts students and one for science students.

Distribution of questionnaires will be different as well. One week in early March will be declared Course Evaluation Week.

During this week the questionnaires will be distributed and collected in lectures of all arts and science courses which have an enrolment of more than 70—more than 250 courses in all.

Gobeil and Ortvad said they were hoping for an 80-per-cent return of questionnaires.

Last year only 8,000 out of 45,000 questionnaires were returned and many of those were improperly completed and unuseable.

The contributors of the questionnaire will remain anonymous this year. Only the name of the professor and course will identify the questionnaire.

The questions themselves are multiple-choice opinion questions adapted from last year's questionnaire. They concern course content, schedule and the quality of tutorials, lectures and lecturers.

The Evaluation will emphasize first and second-year courses in particular since there are the courses in which the most choice is involved.

The course evaluation editors have said they will publish information gathered by other faculties.

The publication is still in the organizational stages. Its success will depend upon the co-operation of the students who fill out the questionnaires.

NEILS ORTVAD

But the staff is also in desperate need of volunteers who will help collect and correlate the information gathered in the questionnaires. Anyone interested should leave his name and phone number at the SAC office and he will be contacted.

'Nigger' author calls for student solidarity

OTTAWA (CUP) — The author of the controversial article The Student as Nigger has urged Canadian student newspaper to print it in protest.

Jerry Farber, an English lecturer at Los Angeles State College, said the article should be printed to show student anger at events surrounding the piece's printing last month at the University of Windsor.

The appearance of Farber's article in U of W's student paper, The Lance, prompted the university's senate to threaten to expel the co-editors earlier this month.

Interviewed by telephone, Farber termed the administration's action in Windsor 'unjustified.'

But student solidarity could improve matters, he said.

"Very often the best response students can make to intimidation on the part of the administration is to push together.

"It's easier to push around one student than a solid student movement."

He suggested that the Windsor administration might have panicked or acted in the good old traditional way — to stifle or put down—any attempt on the part of the students to grow up."

The Windsor senate committee agreed to stop its editors only after campus protest and the calling of a Canadian University Press Investigation.

"I think the administration must be more regressive than most," Farber said.

The Ubysey first reprinted the article from an American underground paper, The Indian Head, in November. It has since been reprinted in more than 10 Canadian student papers.

Farber was surprised at the controversy surrounding the article. He did not feel it was obscene.

"There is a kind of a leering, guilty attitude towards sex," Farber said. He felt obscenity was "sex plus guilt" and said "I don't have the guilt."

"The form of the article is part of its content," he said.

"We shouldn't set up a sterile atmosphere in an article of this type similar to that in the schools."

Carleton newspaper will leave CUP

OTTAWA (CUP) — The Carleton, campus newspaper at Carleton University, has withdrawn from the Canadian University Press.

Carleton editor Reg Silvester submitted a letter of withdrawal to CUP president Lib Spry Monday.

"In its present form," the letter said, "CUP is of no value to The Carleton."

"Since we don't choose to fit the CUP mould, since we don't want to print bad copy, and since we're tired of paymore for less, our only alternative is to opt out of the organization."

Silvester said CUP has become an ideological organization rather than a news service.

He said Carleton staff has been dissatisfied with CUP for most of the year because of poor-quality copy. Discontent reached a head, he said, after CUP's "bighly political" national conference at Burnaby, B.C., in December.

"We hope our withdrawal will encourage other papers to re-evaluate their positions with regard to CUP," said news editor Peter Johansen.

Said CUP president Lib Spry: "I think it's a pity that The Carleton staff can't produce the changes they want within CUP."

Co-op residences under construction

Residence fees vary directly with the degree of "luxury" costs.

Room service costs fluctuate wildly. They are $170 a year at St. Hilda's and $38 St. Michael's.

Food service costs have shot upward lately, the report says. Since in many cases the university is no longer willing to administer the provision of food services, costly outside caterers have been hired. A student at New College now pays $400 a year for food, $193 more than a co-op student.

But residences are not the most expensive form of accommodation on campus. The standard fee for a non-denominational college is $805. Co-ops are $645 for room and board and fraternities charge $832.

It was found that students prefer apartment living to any other type of accommodation because of the privacy offered. Fraternities appeal to students wanting a home-like atmosphere.

The questionnaire results also showed that students with A and B average generally live in apartments, residences and co-ops. The proportion of students with C's or lower is highest at fraternities.

College deans and residence council heads have been invited to comment on the report, which will be debated at the next SAC meeting.

What Makes Women Weep—So Often?

Men think when a woman cries she's sad. "Wrong", says a member of the crying sex who explains what all the weeping is about. This article, in February Reader's Digest, tells husbands why it's important to differentiate between tears of vexation, sentiment, tenderness and the ways to handle tears. Does the "tell me about it later" technique work? When is it wrong to shut off the faucet? How do you handle the "Easy Crier" when an attack comes on in public? This examination of women's weeping is in February Reader's Digest, now on sale. This issue also features the authoritative article, "Is the Pill Really Safe?"

HOCKEY

SMC consolidated their enviable position on top of Group 1 by defeating Vic, 3-1. Hurley scored twice for SMC, Cengarle once. Gries replied rather inarticulately for Vic.

Akiyama (two goals) and Denison led Trinity over Law, 3-1. Fitzpatrick led Lords (elegant variation; see Fowler).

Manning and Henderson scored as Knox blanked Arch, 2-0.

School of Business (what is School of Business, anyway. Did you ever see anyone with SOB on his jacket? Rumour has it that School of Business is actually a front for the International Zionist conspiracy. I wouldn't be surprised.) edged Forestry, 2-1. Bengough and Sharpe led the winners; Swindle scored for For.

Scarborough, shrieking their fierce war-cry (Iuno Vesta Minerva Ceres Diana Venus Mars/Mercurius Iovis Neptunus Vulcanus Apollo).

Pharm, led by Halliday, Hausser, Bertrand (Fr., — "Bertrand") and Cote, whumped Brindale, 4-1. Congo crept through the black and cut through the jungle with a golden track for Erin. Ouchterlony scored twice and Clark added the other goal as Vic II took Law 11, 3-0.

New got good goaltending form Caudart as they shut-out Innis, 1-0. Taylor scored for the Gnus. (The gnu is a small South African antelope, related to the Ithyphallic.)

BASKETBALL

UC, perennially cotidian in Interfact basketball, defeated Meds A, 51-43. Rogers had 11 for UC. Barker led Meds scorers with a fine 17 points but it was Lloyd Rossman, who had 14 assists, was credited with 9 UC turn-overs, and performed a heart transplant operation on one of his team-mates at halftime who sparked Meds.

Innis slaughtered Law, 87-45, paced by Hersh with 16 points. Lalonde had 14 for Law.

SMC B topped Dents, 35-34. Our reporter, Qwertyuiopus, was bitten by a rabid Ithyphallic and we are thus unable to supply further details.

Vic II beat Trin, 39-26.

SWIMMING

PHE won the recent Interfaculty swim meet with 91 points (followed by Vic, 71; APSC, 57; Scar, 17; Meds, 37; and New, 5) but Vic set the only record. Gerying, Watt, Heatley, and MacIntosh swam the 400-yds. sprint relay in 3:46.0, lowering the old mark of 3:48.4. Leading performers in the meet were Stratten of PHE (3firsts), Campbell of PHE (2 firsts, one second) and Vic's Steve Low (because he strips so beautifully.)

Waterloo Warriors tie Blues for first

While Varsity Blues are off enjoying Austrian hospitality, it's business as usual for the other eight SIHL teams.

When Blues departed the scene ten days ago, they had racked up eight straight league wins and held first place by two points.

However, the persistent Waterloo Warriors have managed to equal Blues' feat and now claim a share of the top spot.

Sporting a five and zero mark at the Christmas break, the well balanced Waring up on a swing through Quebec two wins over Montreal and one over Laval.

Right now, the Warrior's prospects for upsetting the champion Blues are excellent.

Blues return on Tuesday, and must overcome the trauma of playing the Russians in time to battle Warriors Thursday night—in Waterloo.

Supported by their rabid fans, Waterloo is always tough at home and could manage to pull the upset of the year against the tired Blues. The Warriors will have an added bonus, since Blues must save some of their skating legs for weekend games at Varsity Arena against MacMaster and Montreal.

Mac is solidly entrenched in third place with 11 points from nine games and a game in hand over Western.

If the Marlins can reverse their usual habit of blowing certain victories late in the season, they should have enough scoring punch to hang onto a playoff position.

Mac tied Western at 5-all last week, then were lucky to get by Guelph 3-1.

Although Western Must-

Turkey of the week

Western basketball officials, in keeping with their philosophy of fair play and good sportsmanship, have had Guelph Gryphons' Leigh Hammond declared ineligible for further league play. Hammond, Guelph's only claim to respectability, was sporting a 5-game scoring average of 21.2 points at the time. Other League coaches were aware of Hammond's difficulties, but figured that a protest was like kicking the cripple while he was lying on the floor. However, it should be noted that Western's 88-67 win over Gryphons was the narrowest victory margin yet over winless Guelph. Fear, Western?

angs trail Marlins by only 2 points, this is not one of their better seasons.

Boostered by the acquisition of Brent Imlach, 'Stangs have been getting the goals (51 in 10 games) but their goaltending and defence are, to say the least, questionable. Western has given up 50 goals already, and still must visit Waterloo and Varsity on the road.

Contrary to most early season predictions, Montreal and Laval are still challenging Western and MacMaster for the last playoff spots.

Mac appears safe for the present, but both Quebec teams trail Western by only one point and each has one game in hand.

The fourth spot could remain undecided until Laval and Montreal play each other in Quebec City on Feb. 18.

Queens, the scoreless wonders, will not repeat their amazing second-half spurt of last year, and should settle for seventh place.

Gaels goaltending is more than adequate so long as lanky Norm Douglas stays healthy, but nobody gets very far in the SIHL race scoring but two goals per game.

McGill Redmen, having allowed 58 goals in only 9 games, can't do anything except act as spoilers. After all, somebody has to be the spoilers and right now McGill is as likely a bet as any.

After every game, the cellar-dwelling Guelph Gryphons look more and more like a intercollegiate hockey team.

Varsity held to draw by Sweden

BRIAN ST. JOHN

WARD PASSI

By PHIL BINGLEY

INNSBRUCK, Austria—A late goal by Swedish forward Anders Ajaxsson gave Sweden an unexpected 3-3 tie with Varsity Blues yesterday. Ajaxsson's goal, his second of the game, came with just three minutes left to play and moments after a Varsity insurance goal had been disallowed on a questionable offside.

The result of this game removes Varsity from title contention. Russia clinched the gold yesterday by storming past Czechoslovakia 6-1. Even if Blues defeat Russia on Sunday, the best they can now finish is third. They could place as low as fourth in the six team tourney, although this is unlikely.

Opening minutes of the contest featured lots of cautious manoeuvring around centre ice as the two teams sought to get untracked. Finally at the 11:00 mark, Ajaxsson gave Sweden a 1-0 lead when he scored after being left unattended in front of the Varsity net.

Blues' captain, Peter Speyer, evened the count two minutes later following perfect passes by Paul Laurent and Ward Passi. He scored on a quick wrist shot that banked in off the right post.

Varsity took the lead for the first time later in the period as John Gordon counted from a scramble in front of the Swedish goal. Diligent digging by linemates Brian St. John and Don Fuller helped set up the goal.

As the second period got underway, Blues ran right into a penalty, and 24 seconds later Sweden tied the game 2-2. Anders Brannstrom deflected the puck into the net on a goal-mouth pass.

Play was wide-open for most of the period with Varsity having the best scoring chances. They finally cashed one of them when Brian Jones scored from yet another scramble, boosting Blues into a 3-2 lead. However, they missed countless other opportunities by not shooting enough.

Like the Canadian national team, Blues either went in too close or waited too long, before firing. Sweden appeared tired and hanging on, while Blues' passing was much sharper than in previous games. Unfortunately it didn't show on the scoreboard.

Play in the final session was alternately wide-open and scramble. As in the previous period, Blues had lots of good scoring chances but couldn't make them pay off.

The crucial play of the game and, for Blues, the tournament, came at the 16:00 mark. Just as Varsity put the puck into the Swedish net following a scintillating three-on-one rush, a feeble official ruled the play was offside. It wasn't even close to being offside, but that's how it was called.

A minute later, with Blues still groping in anger, Ajaxsson concerted a goalmouth pass and the game ended in a draw.

Blues outplayed, outhit and outshot (31:18) Sweden, but, as is the custom over here as a Canadian team, they couldn't set a fair shake from the officials.

In the overall standing at the Universiade, Russia is first (surprise) with Japan second.

Basketball Blues stunned at home again; now hit the road for tough Lancer game

By JIM MORRISON

The cramped confines of Hart House, traditional haven of Varsity Blues, proved unreceptive for the second time this season as Blues fell to Waterloo Warriors 87-81—relinquishing first place in the process. After winning two crucial games on the road, Varsity's future looked rosy indeed, but by dropping two in their own stomping grounds, Blues have to win again on the road if they hope to gain at least the third and final playoff position.

And to make matters worse, Varsity plays Windsor Lancers tomorrow night in Windsor—where Lancers are almost invincible.

The expected excitement of a race for the scoring championship between Warriors' Sol Globber and Varsity's Bruce Dempster failed to materialize Wednesday night, and had much to do with Blues' defeat. Globber poured in 31 points for Waterloo to lead game scoring, but Dempster was colder than an igloo in Nome, hitting for only 8 points. With Dempster and backcourt mate Mark White collecting only 20 points between them—half their usual average—Waterloo could concentrate on controlling the Toronto forwards.

And yet the Varsity forwards almost won the game on their own. Arvo Neidre, who played tremendously against Warriors last year, was magnificent in defeat, collecting 26 points in a sharp shooting display from side-court. John Hadden was equally impressive—pulling down over 20 rebounds, blocking shots and hitting for 18 points, many on spectacular tip-ins.

Blues were down 41-36 at halftime, but had a 60-56 lead midway through the second half. They could have won the game handily, had they made half of the easy lay-ups they kept missing. And time and time again, defensive lapses let Sol Globber and Doug Lockhart through for crucial Warrior baskets.

Former Blue Lockhart was next to Globber in Waterloo scoring with 19 points, while rookies Larry Sobol and Bryan Brown had 10 apiece. Ron Voake followed Neidre and Hadden with 13 points for Blues.

The Windsor team Varsity faces tomorrow is considerably weaker than last year's championship squad. Their great forward, Marty Kwiatkowski, is not playing this season, nor is all-star guard Angelo Mazzuchin. Lancers are also missing guard Doug Brown and forward Walt Taranczuk, both starters last year, and forward Gary Polano.

But with Bob Samaras as coach, you can be sure that Lancers have something. And all-star center Bob Navetta is back with the team to provide a talented nucleus for the Windsor attack.

So Blues will have another tough game. The SIBL is so incredibly balanced this year that the winning margin in games between the top five teams has never been more than eight points. Why coaches get grey . . .

TELEGRAM

Phil Bingley reports from Austria that the team feels like drinking themselves under the table in an attempt to remove the stigma of yesterday's unfortunate Sweden game. They're pretty upset over the refereeing and all. Some people have said in the light of what's happened (Blues can't win a gold) that our gigantic telegram (more than 800 names, thanks very much) seems a pretty hollow gesture. I don't agree; and here's what the telegram will say: "No sweat lads stop win or lose against the big bad Ruskiyes we think you've done just fine stop."

26 Points for leapin' ARVO NEIDRE

Wrestlers to Guelph invitational

The wrestling Blues continue to tune up for the OQAA championships in February as they travel to Guelph this weekend for that the annual Guelph invitational.

Coach Karl Wipper expects two or three medals from his grapplers, but is more interested in the experience which the meet will provide. "That's the one thing we lack," said the benign leader.

Wrestling for Varsity are Steve Cassman (123), Jim Doner (130), Bob Kellerman (137), Rick Kesten and Ron Wilson (145), Rod Vinter (160), Bill Allison (167), Vic Helfland (177), and Mike Wright (191). There is no heavyweight entered for Toronto.

BLUES TIE RUSSIANS 5-5

By PHIL BINGLEY

INNSBRUCK, Austria — Varsity Blues laughed in the face of the humiliation predicted for them Sunday as they upset the form charts by battling a powerful Russian team to a 5-5 draw.

A goal by Paul Laurent at 16:24 of the third period gave Blues their well-earned tie in a match which saw them outplay and outshoot their heavily-favoured opponents.

However, despite their tremendous performance, Varsity had to settle for a bronze medal in the six team world Universiade hockey tournament, even though they lost only one game.

Russia won the gold with four victories and a tie in five games; Czechoslovakia came second, losing only to the Russians, while Canada followed with two wins, two ties and a loss (to the Czechs on opening day).

Most observers here at Innsbruck felt Blues would be doing well to hold the Russians under double figures, especially after Varsity's uninspiring 3-3 performance against Sweden (Russia beat the Swedes 14-2). Also, Blues had lost 8-4 to the Czechs, a team whipped by Russia 6-1. So Blues were not exactly brimming with over-confidence as they took the ice against their ferocious red-clad opposition.

But, with nothing to lose and buoyed substantially by an 800-name telegram of support sent by U of T fans, Blues dominated the first period right from the opening face-off. They outshot Russia 10-7 and outscored them 2-1.

Peter Speyer opened the scoring after a brilliant rush by Don Fuller. Fuller rushed down the left wing, circled the goal and relayed a perfect pass to Speyer who drove a high wrist shot into the net.

A few minutes later, Paul Laurent had a wide-open breakaway from centre ice, but was robbed on a good save by the Russian goalie. Then right from the ensuing faceoff, Laurent put Blues ahead 2-0 on a slap shot into the top corner.

Russia narrowed the count just before the end of the period following a penalty to Bob Hamilton for delaying the game. Hamilton was nabbed for moving the puck along the boards with his skates—the first time this infraction had been called in the tournament. Igor Tuskin scored on a screened shot 30 seconds into the Russian power play.

Wailing Mothers climax (B)abel festival

By PAUL MACRAE

Fifteen late-comers pounded on the doors outside Convocation Hall last night — overflow ticket-buyers for the Mothers of Invention concert.

Inside strobes flashed, 10 shaggy Mothers pounded the organ and drums, movies and patterns scanned the walls and ceiling, fingers played up and down the bass.

In an upper balcony two youths writhed high to the insidious, pounding, grinding beat. Hair splayed in the movie-light.

Red, green, yellow, spiral complexions. Four girls work it out on stage — five, ten, fifteen minutes of wailing rhythm. Grease globs glistened, moving on a huge white screen behind The Mothers.

Cymbals, sawdust and confetti rain, low rumbling electronic moans, colorful sounds.

Are The Mothers good? Just ask anybody. Larry liked them; he was stoned. Sherry fell asleep. Jan muttered, Kathy was mad. On stage The Mothers looked like ugly devils in the red light.

The mothers must have the biggest instrument section of any pop group in America, but they rely mostly on drums, organ and bass, fronted sometimes by leader Frank Zappa's guitar. In the noise, voices mingle and disappear, although once Zappa ran through the words of a song first. At any given time they may use saxophones, clarinets, guitars, kettle drums, trumpets, cymbals and tambourines.

There is no pattern to a Mothers' concert. They meander on stage and seem to pick up instruments at random. Zappa insults the audience — "We cater to the lowest taste"—they love it "Cretins wanting to be entertained."

The Mothers are famed for their critical attacks on North American society and customs, but either they've mellowed, or the words were lost.

The same might be said for the whole of (B)ABEL: Society as Madness and Myth. As an all-out exposé of Western society it was less successful than last year's Psychedelic Festival, and created far less hysteria.

The (B)ABEL environment in the University

College refectory was a pale imitation of the psychedelic environment of last year.

Of course the Literary and Athletic Society, which sponsored the whole entertainment, had to overcome countless obstacles to get (B)ABEL on the road at all.

The producer and director of the media shows Wednesday and Thursday walked off the job, taking a computer they built to control lights, sound and projectors. Students worked all night Wednesday to rig up a new system for the lights and projectors.

The computer itself broke down half an hour before Wednesday's show.

Scheduled to open at 11 a.m. Saturday, the (B)ABEL environment wasn't ready until three p.m. To see it Saturday you stood, and stood and stood, climbing three flights of stairs in two hours.

"If you got this far," a pencilled sign on the stairwell noted, "you're not patient, you're mad."

The JCR-Sex in a river bed

The other hand hides on appendix scar

By MIKE KESTERTON

The Junior Common Room of University College looks like a basement committee room of the House of Parliament after the Ottawa River has flooded

Amid the blue-grey muck of the river bed sit portraits of our Victorian forefathers: stuffed shirts, Lady Janes of both sexes and the occasional plump-cheeked servant girls.

In the JCR the mini-skirts are so short that if a girl's slip starts to show you can no longer see her appendix scar.

In the JCR, if its lipstick is smeared, it's probably a girl.

The sallow-cheeked English students bunch in tight little circles, passing Cole's notes and good-naturedly seducing one another.

Bridge players whoop and cackle, spilling their bread crumbs as they slap down trumps.

The Review of The Varsity hog all the best seats under the radio outlets and listen to the pleading of fellow English students who want to review Blow-Up.

The JCR is where you go when you're a teaching fellow, and you've just learned to smoke Balkan Sobranie, because you want to meet that little Leslie in the back row of your tutorial who, you have heard, is a son of a gun.

The best thing about the JCR is the shape of the girls.

You can tell what college a girl comes from by looking at her backside. At Trinity, for instance, a girl's derriere begins above her shoulder-blades, swelling out until it has the girth of a British oak tree, crimping in again about the kness. At Victoria, the girls have sensible, all-purpose patent-leather bottoms in a basic shade that will go with anything they wear. At St. Mike's the girls aren't allowed to have derrieres.

A JCR girl begs a couth description, unless you have swung a half-empty sack of Irish cobbles.

A hair-tree forest of expatriate CYC'ers sits and listens patiently to a bored Indian that they have captured explaining the mysteries of some oriental Norman-Vincent-Pealism.

Hershell Ezrin, president of the UC Lit, swoops around like a barrage balloon in the Blitz.

When you walk into the room, everyone looks up to see if you're someone. It's crushing to see that you're not. Faces resume the intensity of their former conversations.

As the Yorkville town-crier says: "Ten o'clock, and all's real."

Jean Vanier to lecture at SMC

Jean Vanier, son of the late governor-general and a pioneer in treatment for the mentally retarded, will give seven lectures at St. Michaels College on Love and the Conquest of Human Misery, starting tomorrow.

Mr. Vanier, who once taught philosophy at SMC, will speak at 4:15 p.m. tomorrow and Feb. 5, 12 and 14, and at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, and Feb. 7 and 13.

At the top you descended by elevator to the environment.

The designers wanted each person to discover the environment, consisting of a maze and several psychologically-weighted rooms, alone.

In some rooms banks of fluorescent lights blinded you, fuzzy walls tickled you. You stood in a soundless, lightless room with no dimensions in the darkness and experienced vertigo.

The environment, although a disappointment to some, came closest to capturing what (B)ABEL was all about. Walking through its corridors you met other people but you were supposed to do it alone.

You didn't have to wait up for friends or girlfriends, you could range ahead or lag behind, you could go at your own pace. You were free.

And that is what (B) ABEL was, or should have been about. Society as myth and madness: society the prop holding us in an artificial relationship to our fellow man. Knock out the props and you are alone. But you are also free.

Perhaps (B) ABEL showed us we're afraid of both.

The University College Babel festival has saddled the UC Literary and Athletic Society with a $6,500 debt.

Total expenses were $18,000. The UC Alumni Association defrayed $1,000 of this, the Lit $2,000, and ticket sales $8,500—$500 less than expected.

The Babel organizers were unable to procure the $2,000 grant from the Students Administrative Council which last year's festival, Perception 67, got.

Bill Sklar (11 UC), the student in charge of Babel finances, says the financial situation is "terrible," compared to last year.

"What is really exasperating is SAC's refusal to let the newly-formed Blue and White

Bob Wilcox, architect of Babel's Space Structure

Society help us out," said Sklar.

"This would have been the perfect chance for the Blue and White to regain their lost prestige. Both the Lit and the Blue and White were in favor of the collaboration. But the financial commission of SAC was cool to the idea."

Argosy editor under fire for 'Nigger'

SACKVILLE, N.B. (CUP) The editorial advisory board of the Argosy Weekly at Mount Allison University recommended Friday that the university president fire editor Alan Rimoin.

The decision followed Rimoin's unsuccessful search last week for a printer who would print Jerry Farber's article, The Student as Nigger, an analysis of contemporary education.

The paper's regular printer had refused to print the essay, fearing court action for obscenity.

The decision to fire Rimoin was based on charges of breach of editorial agreement, lack of ability, plagiarism and gross irresponsibility.

Rimoin was not invited to the closed meeting, but three senior editors, who quit last Wednesday, were admitted.

Meanwhile President L.H. Cragg has asked the students council to support or reject the board's motion at its meeting tomorrow night.

Rimoin last week teamed up with Stephen Foster, editor of the Prince of Wales College Times in Charlottetown, to approach seven printers in three provinces to print the article.

They returned to Mount Allison, planning to use the university's Gestetner machine, but found that President Cragg's assistant had left orders preventing their use of the machine.

Arrangements were finally made through Canadian University Press in Ottawa to have it printed in Montreal and flown to the two campuses today.

At the University of Calgary, Gauntlet editor Kevin Peterson was told at the last minute his printer, the Calgary Aibertan, would not run the article.

Peterson had the article mimeographed and inserted in Wednesday's Gauntlet.

The Student as Nigger caused great furor at the University of Windsor last month when student editors there were threatened with expulsion after printing it.

The Varsity is printing the article today on pages 6 and 7.

Gray does necrophilia post mortem

By BRIAN JOHNSON

Stan Gray, chairman of Students for a Democratic University, Friday condemned the McGill University administration's stand against what it considered an obscene article printed several months ago in the McGill Daily.

"The whole attitude of the administration showed contempt for the judgment of students," the political science lecturer told 35 students.

The McGill administration, which originally termed the article "obscene libel," last week changed its charge to one of contravening the university's "standards of decency," and issued a "reprimand" to student journalists involved.

Gray, who took part in the 600-student sit-in against the administration's stand, said only several faculty members "had the guts to demonstrate, although the majority of the humanities and social sciences faculties disagreed with the administration."

Gray described a militantly-occupied of the administration building.

"We started at the basement and worked our way up," said Gray, "until we controlled all four stories. Principal H. Locke Robertson told us we were allowed to use the washrooms."

The administration was "arrogant" in its refusal of the demands, said Gray, but did not fire editors Peter Attant and Pierre Fournier because it was "afraid of another Berkeley."

Gray characterized the protest as a manifestation of a larger movement.

"We weren't just looking at this issue itself but towards a long range program of radicalization of the student body."

The meeting petered out in the middle of Gray's speech when a professor demanded the use of the hall for an examination.

MONDAY AFTERNOONS at 5:05 p.m.

Convocation Hall

Dear Students of Victoria College,

Your resigning representative, Mr. MacIntash, voted to use your money to inform prospective U.S. draft-dodgers of all opportunities to enable their complete freedom of choice. He also voted that S.A.C. should help decide Dow's morality and your moral right to see their representatives, thereby denying fellow students their freedom of choice. If this is the type of "representation" you desire, I cannot ask for your vote. However, if you feel (a) that the morality of the Vietnam war, at the student level, is a highly complex and individual consideration on which no one-sided standards should be enforced; (b) that you should have the right to decide by referendum whether the $21,500 of your money spent by C.U.S. to meddle in partisan politics in your name couldn't be better spent; (c) that the "moralists" on S.A.C. should take the initiative in seeking the eradication of POSAP abuses; (d) that the apathetic political vacuum in which the Vietnicks and their political arm on S.A.C. have taken up squatter's rights, should be neutralized; and (e) that S.A.C. should remain your servant, not your moral legislator; I would appreciate your support, Jan. 30.

Dear Students of Victoria College,

SINCERELY YOURS,

J.A. ANUS PROOS I.V.C.
(PAID POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENT)

"Sit you down father; rest awhile."

Listening to The Mothers in Convocation Hall last night brought the current and so-called youth revolution into sharp focus. The Mothers and all the other popular rock 'n' roll groups (plus, of course, The Beatles who help make it all possible) reflect this revolution and more important, act as a catalyst for it.

The music reflects the decline of the old values of sexual morality; hard work; success; respect for the elders.

It is angry at wrongly-used authority, or authority that perpetuates itself by its own authority. Political leaders aren't always right and never have an absolute right to hold their power. The same holds with laws and the men who enforce them.

The music emphasizes the values that are being put into the place of the old. After rejection of authority comes freedom from the old rules and manners and the freedom to do your own thing. All that really means is that the individual is grabbing the right to participate in society on his own terms. The New Left revolution in politics has been absorbed and its doctrines extended to even more radical conclusions.

These new terms aren't bad; they are just different. The decline of the old sexual rules leads to permissiveness, yes, but that is not necessarily bad. It is just different from the ethics North American society has been following. It allows people to live as people rather than cogs in some great social wheel.

Vance Packard told an audience at this weekend's Babel festival that advertising is leading to a new hedonism as a life style. He never explained what was wrong with that. The hedonism is only such in comparison to the strict life that was lived before. Its adherents are political in a way; exerting a demand for the inalienable right to the pursuit of pleasure.

Self-gratification is only a sin if someone tries to tell you it is. Perhaps pursuing pleasure is necessary to cope with the increasing regimentation of society and the increasing dullness of work within it.

The music acts as a catalyst by defining elements of this new life style. The person who listened to The Beatles right from the beginning and argued with his parents about their worth, is bound to feel a new self-consciousness and self-confidence. He has won one argument; there are others he can win also.

The generation gap is, therefore emphasized when the young get the ability to exert their own power. They receive help in doing this by the new art forms that they are enjoying; the fusion of music with technology, as shown by The Mothers, is probably the most spectacular and most effective.

It has carried over in other forms. For instance: the underground films shown this weekend.

Fifty years from now who knows. We'll put on our records of electric guitar players and the kids will turn on an oscilloscope.

The point is that this is change and has to be accepted as such. It is not all good, sure; but don't reject it, you'll just get left behind.

Thousands of kids across the continent are running into clashes with their parents when they exert their own power—clashes so violent that only a complete break will eliminate it. That's how you get teenie-boppers running away and being hippies.

The hippie philosophy — if there really is such a thing — has a great deal that would improve our society. It is not the answer to anything, but its value was in the shock it produced last summer. When Time magazine writes a long essay on the free life of the hippies, you know a lot of people are going to be challenged — not just for their daughter's sake but also for their own sake. For their own quest for security and status and possessions.

Hip has made its point and is now a yardstick by which people can measure their own conduct. Hippies represent an extreme rejection of old values: they didn't exist as a self-conscious entity; but the art forms they have helped promote, give the wider youth revolution its direction.

pros and posap

Sir,

How many people wouldn't be here if it wasn't for POSAP? How many students are getting their education on their own because their parents simply can't afford to help?

How many students (especially unskilled girls) can get a decent paying summer job? And save enough from living expenses to barely pay for tuition and books? POSAP pays the rent.

How can Mr. Proos afford to pay for his advertisement "in the public interest"? Ads in the Varsity are expensive. Is he using his POSAP money? Or his Dad's? Or did he manage to earn and save $2,000.00 this summer?

J. Valeriote
II SMC

P.S: And I can't afford to get my bloody third-hand typewriter fixed either!!

Sir,

Real estate, bonds, a car? You're joking of course. POSAP put the food on my table. If it wasn't for this student aid plan, I would never have had the opportunity of reaching university.

Is Mr. Proos bent on penalizing the people who really need POSAP as well as those who abuse it?

Where the hell did he get the money to pay for that personal advertisement "in the public interest" anyway? From his POSAP loan?

freezing drizzle

University College's Babel festival ended last night with a crowded Convocation Hall applauding The Mothers. A few — maybe 15 — people couldn't get in because the doors to the hall were locked.

The festival organizers had either sold too many tickets or (and this is more likely) were too loose in their organization. There must have been many people who saw that concert without tickets while ticket holders were denied admittance.

That's not polite, UC, and leads to bad trips.

Ho deserves the peace prize

By PETER HAWLEY

RUSSIA AND CHINA

Ho Chi Minh deserves the Nobel Peace Prize. No such prize was given in 1966 though the judges made a glaring error when they overlooked Ho. For no one in recent times has done more to prevent World War Three.

Why?

* * *

President Johnson has frequently pleaded to the American public that the Vietnamese war is not his—that he is merely following the precedents of four previous (American) governments. There is partial truth in this argument. The main precedent to which Johnson clings was established in 1947, when President Truman defined his "hold-the-line" policy. At that time, Stalin refused to pull the Russian army out of Eastern Europe, and President Truman, fearing further Communist expansion, carefully drew a line which defined the "east" and the "west".

THE RULES

The rules of the game are very simple. If a Russian or Chinese army cross into the "west", they will be obliterated with nuclear weapons. (The rules were drawn up before Russia acquired "the bomb.") In 1956, when the Russian army rolled into Hungary, all western nations "reciprocated" the "hold-the-line" "agreement" and didn't cross into Hungary (thus saving the world from nuclear war).

The "hold-the-line" policy has prevented a confrontation between eastern and western armies for twenty years. Korea is the only exception, but it is too embarrassing an example to be used as a historical precedent by anyone. If everyone continues to obey the rules of the game which Truman made up, there will not likely be a nuclear war. If not, it won't matter anyway because there won't be anyone around to second-guess the strategy.

THE FREE WORLD

The "hold-the-line" policy has successfully kept "eastern" armies from entering and interfering with what President Johnson calls the "free" world. However no one has figured out how the American Army can be kept within the boundaries of the United States; or how the United States can be kept from defining the entire "free" world as falling within its boundaries. In a parallel fashion, the "hold-the-line" policy does nothing to protect the territorial integrity of Eastern Europe (Hungary) from a possessive Russian Army.

VIET NAM

This brings us to Viet Nam. Because to play the "hold-the-line" game successfully, everyone has to agree on the rules. But Russia, China and the United States do not agree on the rules in Viet Nam.

The United States defines the line as that which falls between China and North Viet Nam, and look to the 1947 boundary of China. Russia and China look to the 1954 Geneva agreement which recognized Ho's government in North Viet Nam and drew a "temporary" demarcation line creating South Viet Nam.

Both Russia and China have made it clear to the United States that "they are obligated to do for the North Vietnamese whatever they ask us to do" ... including provision of troops. (Sorensen, Saturday Review, October 21, 1967). The United States has warned those two nations that an "eastern" military presence in North Viet Nam would result in an American invasion (including China). This is a nuclear World War III situation.

So the United States have given the initiative for World War III to Ho Chi Minh. Because if one accepts the commitments of China, Russia, and the United States (which I believe you must) then a simple request by Ho Chi Minh for Russian or Chinese troops would result in a chain of events leading to nuclear war. Fortunately Ho is so relieved at having freed his country from a legacy of oppressive foreign armies that he does not want to have to face the problem again.

It is a chilling thought, however, when I think that the only reason I am here writing this article is because of the integrity of Ho Chi Minh. A man against whom President Johnson is daily escalating the war; and on whom President Johnson is daily dropping more bombs.

That is why Ho Chi Minh deserves the Nobel Peace Prize.

An engineer's solution for Viet Nam

Sir,

Due to the recent outburst in front of the Galbraith building between those dedicated, law abiding, educated Engineers and those unwashed, unkempt, dull hypocritical, misguided Artsmen, I as an engineer felt it was my duty to discover a means by which the world can be cured of this political abcess in Indo-China. Last week I discovered the only logical and economic solution so that the Americans would not lose face in front of the Vietnamese. This discovery is simply called scalping.

I believe that if the price of one unused Viet Cong scalp is 100 lbs of rice then within one year the Reds would have been liquidated by their fellow nationals without ever involving the Americans except as traders who trade the rice for scalps. Since there are about 9 million commies in Vietnam the rice supply needed would be around 900 million lbs. Because the price of rice is fairly stable at 20¢ per lb, the total cost of rice would be $180 dollars which is equivalent to $1 paid by every American citizen. This amount of money is peanuts compared to the billions of dollars spent each year in Viet Nam.

Thus we can easily notice that this is the cheapest solution in stopping the war of Communist Imperialism because less Americans would be killed and because the cost of liquidating the Reds would be very cheap. If the Viet Cong decided to retaliate by also paying rice for every American who is scalped, the Yankees would still be the winners because they can easily defoliate all the rice paddies in North Vietnam or territory controlled by the Reds. In other words I am proud in having discovered another Canadian first in peace, honour, integrity democratic solidarity and resourcefulness.

snowslush blues again

Last Friday, my rubber boots waded up St. George, playing hopscotch between mounds of melted slush.

April may be to some the cruellest month, but January and February come on to me as the ugliest. At least 13½ times each winter I squinch my eyes up tight, sprinkle a little Tinkerbell dust on my head, and let my mind wander to days when toes breathed warm sand, instead of cold wet socks . . .

The campus during these months radiates blandness — students drag along, bombarded by a mixed media concert of the elements — hail, melted snow, sleet and other assorted miseries. The weather reflects itself in the atmosphere of the university. Student-trickling in and out of buildings, blend into a collage of grey-on-grey. Everyone withdraws quietly into his own mind games and frustrations. A dead mist floats over us, as we are alienated from one another.

The crash of a tree branch, hitting a hydro pole reverberated . . . bringing echoes of last Sunday's beautifully unreal snowfall . . . Winter . . . it floated down, coating the campus in indelible white frosting. Roads and sidewalks mingled and even the tow-truck men smiled. Time became irrelevant, as students romped, covering their faces and bodies with the funny white fluff. Wide-eyed I saw a sparkling fairyland where hobbits peeked out from behind painted trees. Even at 3:30 a.m., crunchy footsteps could be heard at Harbord and St. George—a sportsie, grooving the fantastic whiteness, cartwheeling for sheer love of life. I have never seen such an aliveness on the U of T campus. A remarkable spirit enveloped us.

The next afternoon, Queen's Park looked like a tourist's convention — Minoltas, Nixons, Brownies, flourished, snapping pics of snowdrifts, footprints, collecting evidence that this mid-January miracle wasn't a dream.

The city reacted to this beauty by retuning its instruments to a different wave-length. The snow was already turning brown on Bay St. Monday afternoon . . . city of Toronto snowplows must show the taxpayers where their money is going (into the efficient manufacture of slush. Funny I hadn't even noticed that it was freezing, until I joined the morose-looking crowds travelling up and down Yonge. In the park, the wind blowing my hair from my face, increased the vigorous awareness I had felt all day. Now, it was smarting my eyes . . .

I began to realize what all this meant. Sunday's snowfall gave us a glimpse of life in harmony. Nature is the pivot, about which the wheel of life revolves in perfect time. When Nature manifests herself in beauty, we become sharply in tune with our existence. There comes a feeling of uniting with trees, lampposts, fences, and, for a change, our fellow human beings. Most of the time we seem to be out of kilter with each other—each on his own trip. These are moments like last Friday, when we exist mechanically acting out the programs from that giant computer in the sky, Toronto in winter always personifies this existential feeling for me, as I wander around, wondering if I'm really a person and not just a robot . . .

Sunday had been a sign to remind us of life's magnificent high moments. Yet Friday was in its own way, an important clue about Nature's balance. Sunworshippers never find their dream, because they live in a plastic world, which their God will melt in time.

They do not experience the cycle of the seasons . . . the caress of swirling red leaves, as Indian summer's pipe gives up a lingering scent of August's aromas . . . the first day of Bermuda shorts and Centre Island picnics . . . and magic days belonging to the snow-angels . . .

Suddenly, I didn't mind my soaking feet, or the depressingly ugly scene around me. I saw that days like Friday — an octave or two off — help me to feel the percussions and syncopation sifting through the universal musical score. I'd take a dull set in Toronto's winter engagement anytime, knowing it is part of an infinitely varied bag, than be subjected to a monotonous beat of constant sunshine.

the student as nigger

by jerry farber

Students are niggers. When you get that straight, our schools begin to make sense. It's more important, though, to understand why they're niggers. If we follow that question seriously, it will lead us past the zone of academic bullshit, where dedicated teachers pass their knowledge on to a new generation, and into the nitty-gritty of human needs and hangups. From there we can go on to consider whether it might ever be possible for students to come up from slavery.

First, look at the role students play in what we like to call education. At Cal State where I teach the students have separate and unequal dining facilities. If I bring a student into the faculty dining room, my colleagues get uncomfortable, as though there were a bad smell. If I eat in the student cafeteria, I become known as the educational equivalent of a "nigger-lover". In at least one building there are even rest rooms which students may not use. Also there is an unwritten law barring student-faculty lovemaking. Fortunately, this anti-miscegenation law, like its Southern counterpart, is not 100 per cent effective.

CHOOSE HOMECOMING QUEEN

Students at Cal State are politically disenfranchised. They are in an academic Lowndes County. Most of them can vote in national elections—their average age is about 26—but they have no voice in the decisions which affect their academic lives. The students are, it is true, allowed to have a toy government of their own. It is a government run, for the most part, by Uncle Toms, concerned principally with trivia. The faculty and administrators decide what courses will be offered; the students get to choose their own Homecoming Queen. Occasionally, when student leaders get uppity and rebellious, they're either ignored, put off with trivial concessions, or manoeuvred expertly out of position.

A student at Cal State is expected to know his place. He calls a faculty member "Sir" or "Doctor" or "Professor" and he smiles and shuffles some as he stands outside the professor's office waiting for permission to enter. The faculty tell him what courses to take (in my department, English, even electives have to be approved by a faculty member); they tell him what to read, what to write, and frequently, where to set the margins on his typewriter. They tell him what's true and what isn't. Some teachers insist they encourage dissent but they're almost always lying and every student knows it. Tell The Man what he wants to hear or he'll fail you.

When a teacher says "jump" students jump. I know of one professor who refused to take up class time for exams and required students to show up for tests at 6:30 in the morning. And they did, by God! Another, at exam time, provides answer cards to be filled out—each one enclosed in a paper bag with a hole cut in the top to see through. Students stick their writing hands in the bags while taking the test. The teachers isn't a provo; I wish he were. He does it to prevent cheating. Another colleague once caught a student reading during one of his lectures and threw her book against the wall. Still another lectures his students into a stupor and then screams at them in rage when they fall asleep.

CLASS IS NOT DISMISSED!

During the first meeting of a class, one girl got up to leave after about ten minutes had gone by. The teacher rushed over, grabbed her by the arm, saying "This class is not dismissed!" and led her back to her seat. On the same day another teacher began by informing his class that he does not like beards, mustaches, long hair on boys, or capri pants on girls, and will not tolerate any of that his class. The class, incidentally, consisted mostly of high school teachers.

Even more discouraging than this Auschwitz approach to education is the fact that the students take it. They haven't gone through twelve years of public school for nothing. They've learned one thing and perhaps only one thing during those twelve years. They've forgotten their algebra. They're hopelessly vague about chemistry and physics. They've grown to fear and resent literature. They write like they're been lobotomized. But Jesus, can they follow orders! Freshmen come up to me with an essay and ask if I want it folded and whether their name should be in the upper right hand corner. And I want to cry and kiss them and caress their poor, tortured heads.

Students don't ask that orders make sense. They give up expecting things to make sense long before they leave elementary school. Things are true because the teacher says they're true. At a very early age we all learn to accept "two truths," as did certain medieval churchmen. Outside of class, things are true to your tongue, your finger, your stomach, your heart. Inside class, things are true by reason of authority. And that's just fine because you don't care anyway. Miss Wiedemeyer tells you a noun is a person, place or thing. So let it be. You don't give a rat's ass; she doesn't give a rat's ass.

SIRENS AND A RATTLE OF BULLETS

The important thing is to please her. Back in kindergarten, you found out that teachers only love children who stand in nice straight lines. And that's where it's been at ever since. Nothing changes except to get worse. School becomes more and more obviously a prison. Last year I spoke to a student assembly at Manual Arts High School and then couldn't get out of the goddamn school. I mean there was no way out. Locked doors. High fences. One of the inmates was trying to make it over a fence when he saw me coming and froze in panic. For a moment, I expected sirens, a rattle of bullets, and him clawing the fence.

Then there's the infamous "code of dress". In some high schools, if your skirt looks too short, you have to kneel before the principal, in a brief allegory of fellatio. If the hem doesn't reach the floor, you go home to change while he, presumably, jacks off. Boys in high school can't be too sloppy and they can't be too sharp. You'd think the school board would be delighted to see all the spades trooping to school in pointy shoes, suits, ties and stingy brinms. Uh-uh. They're too visible.

What school amounts to, then, for white and black kids alike, is a 12 year course in how to be slaves. What else could explain what I see in a freshman class? They've got that slave mentality; obliging and ingratiating on the surface but hostile and resistant underneath. Like black slaves, students vary in their awareness of what's going on. Some recognize their own put-on for what it is and even let their rebellion break through to the surface now and then. Others - including most of the "good students" - have been more deeply brainwashed. They swallow the bullshit with greedy mouths. They honest-to-God believe in grades, in busy work, in general education requirements. They're like those old grey-headed houseniggers you can still find in the South who don't see what all the fuss is about because Mr. Charlie "treats us real good."

THEY CHEAT A LOT

College entrance requirements tend to favor the Toms and screen out the rebels. Not entirely, of course. Some students at Cal State are expert con artists who know perfectly well what's happening. They want to degree and spend their years on the old plantation alternately laughing and cursing as they play the game. If their egos are strong enough, they cheat a lot. And of course, even the Toms are angry down deep somewhere. But it comes out in passive rather than active aggression. They're unexplainably thick-witted and subject to frequent spells of laziness. They misread simple questions. They spend their nights mechanically outlining history chapters while meticulously failing to comprehend a word of what's in front of them.

The saddest cases among both black slaves and student slaves are the ones who have so thoroughly introjected their masters' values that their anger is all turned inward. At Cal State these are the kids for whom every low grade is torture, who stammer and shake when they speak to a professor. They go through an emotional crisis every time they're called upon during class. You can recognize them easily at finals time. Their faces are festooned with fresh pimples; their bowels boil audibly across the room. If there really is a Last Judgement, then the parents and teachers who created these wrecks are going to burn in hell.

So student are niggers. It's time to find out why, and to do this, we have to take a long look at Mr. Charlie.

The teachers I know best are college professors. Outside the classroom and taken as a group their most striking characteristic is timidity. They're short on balls. Just look at their working conditions. At a time when even migrant workers have begun to fight and win, college professors are still afraid to make more than a token effort to improve their pitiful economic status. In California state colleges the faculties are screwed regularly and vigorously by the governor and legislature and yet they still won't offer any solid resistance. They lie flat on their stomachs with their pants down, mumbling catchphrases like "professional dignity" and "meaningful dialogue".

THEY COPPED OUT

Professors were no different when I was an undergraduate at UCLA during the McCarthy era; it was like a cattle stampede as they rushed to cop out. And in more recent years, I found that my being arrested in sit-ins brought from my colleagues not so much approval or condemnation as open-mouthed astonishment: "You could lose your job!"

Now, of course, there's the Vietnamese war. It gets some opposition from a few teachers. Some support it. But a vast number of professors, who know perfectly well what's happening, are copping out again. And in the high schools you can forget it. Stillness reigns.

I'm not sure why teachers are so chickenshit. It could be that academic training itself forces a split between thought and action. It might also be that the tenured security of a teaching job attracts timid persons who are unsure of themselves and need weapons and other external trappings of authority.

At any rate, teachers are short on balls. The classroom offers an artificial and protected environment in which they can exercise their will to power.

Your neighbors may drive a better car; gas station attendants may intimidate you, your wife may dominate you; the state legislature may shit on you; but in the classroom, by God, students do what you say-or-else. The grade is a hell of a weapon. It may not rest on your hip, potent and rigid like a cop's gun, but in the long run it's more powerful. At your personal whim - anytime you choose - you can keep 35 students up for night and have the "pleasure" of seeing them walk into the classroom pasty-faced and red-eyed carrying a sheaf of typewritten pages, with a title page, MLA foot notes and margins set at 15 and 91.

RESPECT FOR AUTHORITY

The general timidity which causes teachers to make niggers of their students usually includes a more specific fear - fear of the students themselves. After all, students are different, just like black people. You stand exposed in front of them, knowing that their interests, their values and their language are different from yours. To make matters worse you may suspect that you yourself are not the most engaging person. What then can protect you from their ridicule and scorn? Respect for authority. The white bwana's pith helmet. So you flaunt that authority. You wither whisperers with a murderous glance. You crush objectors with erudition and heavy irony. And, worst of all, you make your own attainments seem not accessible or awesomely remote. You conceal your massive ignorance and parade a slender learning.

Finally, there's the darkest reason of all for the master-slave approach to education. The less trained and the less socialized a person is, the more he constitutes a sexual threat and the more he will be subjugated by institutions, such as penitentiaries and schools. Many of us are aware by now of the sexual neurosis which makes white man so fearful of integrated schools and neighborhoods, and which makes castration of Negroes a deeply entrenched Southern folkway. We should recognize a similar pattern in education. There is a kind of castration that goes on in schools. It begins, before school years, with parents' first encroachments on their children's free unashamed sexuality and continues right up to the day when they hand you your doctoral diploma with a bleeding, shriveled pair of testicles stapled to the parchment. It's not that sexuality has no place in the classroom. You'll find it there but only in certain perverted and vitiated forms.

PERVERSION IS INTELLECTUAL

How does sex show up in school? First of all, there's the sadomasochistic relationship between teachers and students. That's plenty sexual although the price of enjoying it is to be unaware of what's happening. In walks the student in his Ivy League equivalent of a motorcycle jacket. In walks the teacher - a kind of intellectual rough trade - and flogs his students with grades, tests, sarcasm and snotty superiority until their very brains are bleeding. In Swinburne's England, the whipped school boy frequently grew up to be a flagellant. With us their perversion is intellectual but it's no less perverse.

Sex also shows up in the classroom as academic subject matter - sanitized and abstracted, thoroughly divorced from feeling. You get "sex education" now in both high school and college classes: every one determined not to be embarrassed, to be very up-to-date. These are the classes for which sex, as Feiffer puts it "can be a beautiful thing if properly administered". And then of course, there's still another depressing manifestation of sex in the classroom: the "off-color" teacher, who keeps his class awake with sniggering sexual allusions, obscene titters and academic innuendo. The sexuality he purveys, it must be admitted, is at least better than none at all.

UNDERNEATH THE PETTI-PANTS

What's missing, from kindergarten to graduate school, is honest recognition of what's happening - turned-on awareness of what's underneath the petti-pants, the chinos and the flannels. It's not that sex needs to be pushed in school; sex is pushed enough. But we should let it be, where it is and like it is. I don't insist that ladies in junior high school lovingly caress their students' cocks (someday, maybe); however, it is reasonable to ask that the ladies don't by example and stricture teach their students to pretend that they aren't there. As things stand now, students are psychically castrated or spayed - and for the very same reason that black men are castrated in Georgia: because they're a threat.

So you can add sexual repression to the list of causes, along with vanity, fear and will to power, that turn the teacher into Mr. Charlie. You might also want to keep in mind that he was a nigger once himself and has never really gotten over it. And there are more causes, some of which are better described in sociological than in psychological terms. Work them out, it's not hard. But in the mean time what we've got on our hands is a whole lot of niggers. And what makes this particularly grim is that the student has less chance than the black man of getting out of his bag. Because the student doesn't even know he's in it. That, more or less, is what's happening in higher education. And the results are staggering.

For one thing damn little education takes place in the schools. How could it? You can't educate slaves; you can only train them. Or, to use an uglier and more timely word, you can only program them.

HANDS IN SOME CLAY

I like to folk dance. Like other novices, I've gone to the Intersection or to the Museum and laid out good money in order to learn how to dance. No grades, no prerequisites, no separate dining rooms, they just turn you on to dancing. That's education. Now look at what happens in college. A friend of mine, Milt, recently finished a folk dance class. For his final he had to learn things like this: "The Irish are known for their wit and imagination, qualities reflected in their dances, which include the jig, the reel and the hornpipe". And then the teacher graded him A, B, C, D, or F, while he danced in front of her. That's not education. That's not even training. That's an abomination on the face of the earth. It's especially ironic because Milt took that dance class trying to get out of the academic rut. He took crafts for the same reason. Great right? Get your hands in some clay? Make something? Then the teacher announced that a 20 page term paper would be required - with footnotes.

At my school we even grade people on how they read poetry. That's like grading people on how they fuck. But we do it. In fact, God help me, I do it. I'm the Simon Legree of the poetry plantation. "Tote that iamb Lift that spondee" Even to discuss a good poem in that environment is potentially dangerous because the very classroom is contaminated. As hard as I may try to turn students on to poetry, I know that the desks, the tests, the IBM cards, their own attitudes toward school and my own residue of UCLA method are turning them off.

MAKE THEM WILLING SLAVES

Another result of student slavery is just as dangerous - students don't get emancipated when they graduate. As a matter of fact, we don't let them graduate until they've demonstrated their willingness - over 16 years - to remain slaves. And for important jobs, like teaching, we make them go through more years just to make sure.

What I'm getting at is that we're all more or less niggers and slaves, teachers and students alike. This is the fact you have to start with in trying to understand wider social phenomena, say, politics, in our country and in other countries.

Educational oppression is trickier to fight than racial oppression. If you're a black rebel they can't exile you; they either have to intimidate you or kill you. But in high school or college, they can just bounce you out of the fold. And they do.

Rebel students and renegade faculty members get smothered or shot down with devastating accuracy. In high school, it's usually the student who gets it; it's more often the teacher. Others get tired of fighting and voluntarily leave the system. But dropping out of college for a rebel, is a little like going North, for a Negro. You can't really get away from it so you might as well stay and raise hell.

ORGANIZE FOR FREEDOM NOW

How do you raise hell? That's another article. But for a start, why not stay with the analogy? What have black people done? They have, first of all, faced the fact of their slavery. They've stopped kidding themselves about an eventual reward in the Great Watermelon Patch in the sky. They've organized. They've decided to get freedom now, and they've started taking it.

Students like black people, have immense unused power. They could theoretically, insist on participating in their own education. They could make academic freedom bilateral. They could reach their teachers to thrive on love and admiration rather than on fear and respect, and to lay down their weapons. Students could discover community. And they could learn to dance by dancing on the IBM cards. They could make coloring books out of the catalogs and they could put the grading system in a museum.

They could raze one set of walls and let life come blowing into the classroom. They could turn the classroom into a "field of action" as Peter Marin describes it. And they could study for the best of all possible reasons - their own resources.

They could. They have the power. But only in a very few places, like Berkeley, have they even begun to think about using it. For students as for black people, the hardest battle isn't with Mr. Charlie. It's what Mr. Charlie has done to your mind.

Jerry Forber originally wrote this article for an underground paper in Los Angeles where he teaches English. He wrote protest songs and was involved in the civil rights movement before joining the academic world.

Expulsion threat stops student strike

LONDON, Ont. (CUP) — The 250 students of King's College, an affiliate of the University of Western Ontario, were told they will be expelled if they go on strike.

The statement came in the wake of a discussion by students of a boycott of classes to protest an alleged lack of job security for faculty.

Of a faculty of 20, five with PhD's have left the college in the last two years.

In a letter to the Anglican Bishop of London Jan. 11, student council President Fred Peters said that if the situation continues King's will become an "academic motel, a stopping off place for respectable faculty" until they find secure jobs.

Peters also objected to the continued presence of the present Principal Rev. E. P. LaRoque, who, he said, is "the symbol of the status quo, of carrying on from year to year without any certain commitment to the long term future of this college."

"He seems to be caretaker of a dying institution," said the letter, "the captain of a sinking ship."

The letter made three recommendations:

— that the bishop and the board of governors make it clear to faculty and students that King's is a permanent institution;

— that the board fire the principal and get a new one for next year,

— that faculty be reassured they are needed by the college.

Peters told the principal that if the recommendations were not acted upon there would probably be a strike.

In a letter to Peters, W. M. Tillman, chairman of the King's College board of governors, spelled out clearly the threat of expulsion:

"The board... has instructed the principal to recommend to the board the suspension or expulsion of any student taking part in any action which, in the opinion of the board, is detrimental to the welfare of the college community."

When the letter was received projected plans for a strike were cancelled.

There has been mounting speculation in recent months that King's College would incorporate with the university.

McGill Daily editors show little remorse

MONTREAL (CUP) — McGill Daily editors showed little remorse at the senate discipline committee's "reprimand" last week for printing an allegedly obscene article from The Realist.

Supplement editor Pierre Fournier labelled the decision "an attempt to balance pressure from students and faculty on the one hand and business and the mass media on the other—it was a political decision."

He found it "appalling and dishonest" that the committee did not define the standard of decency which formed the basis of its judgment on the paper's action.

"The committee had no choice in finding us guilty or not guilty," he said. "If they had found us not guilty it would have been a vote of non-confidence in Principal H. Roche Robertson and would have destroyed the solidarity of the university."

Editor Peter Allnut said the senate committee echoed the decision of the student committee.

"It is clear," he said, "that if the administration had let students manage their own affairs there would have been little difference in the outcome."

One point puzzled me, Allnut said. "On one hand the committee says it is not a censorship board and on the other it says the article is indecent and unacceptable. Figure that out."

UBC students protest recruitment

VANCOUVER (Special) — A recruiting official of the Boeing Aircraft Co. was forced to leave his University of British Columbia office last week when 20 anti-war demonstrators jammed into his interviewing cubicle.

Another Boeing official and an interviewee were moved to another building but were followed and besieged again.

The students left after handing the representative notes protesting Boeing's supply of armaments to U.S. forces in Vietnam.

The demonstrators did not prevent the recruiters from holding their 12 scheduled interviews.

The Student Christian Movement sponsors lectures on sex, welcome agnostics and atheists and wants to establish a "kind of community" on campus.

Although it is listed in the students handbook under "campus religious organizations," the SCM prides itself on being somewhat different from the rest.

"The SCM is at one end of a continuum, with the conservative fundamentalist VCF (Varsity Christian Fellowship) at the other," says Bill Dyer, bearded full time student secretary of the movement.

"We support a more open view," he said in a recent interview.

"We still run bible studies and worship services," said Eirert Frerichs, the United Church chaplain who shares office space with the SMC, "but that isn't the approach that students respond to."

"What we're trying to do is establish a kind of community where people can talk and ask questions," Dyer explained.

These questions may be of a religious nature but don't have to be.

The impromptu bull sessions that often take place in the crowded little office on the first floor of Hart House may be on anything from the Placement Service and the Dow debate to the meaning the Bible loses when translated from the original Hebrew.

The bull sessions reflect the informal, loosely-structured nature of the SMC, although more organized events such as lecture series are also sponsored.

Dyer and Irene Carter, the other full-time SCM employee were elated over the promising start of the present series on moral dilemmas.

Noon hour sex

Sixty students had turned out to hear the noon-hour lecture on Sex—a Private Appetite. Irene was hoping to find on Ayn Randist to speak for inequality in a future session in the series on Rich Man, Poor Man: the Morality of Inequality.

But the SMC is not without problems in trying to attract students. The size of the audience at the sex lecture contrasted sharply with the six students who attended the recent SCM open forum on the Placement Service.

"Student interests change so quickly and anyway there is so much for a student to do these days," said Chaplain Frerichs.

"Students aren't willing to commit themselves to taking part in seminars lasting 10 to 12 weeks," he said.

"Students have to feel that what they're doing is worthwhile as well," added Miss Carter.

For this reason the group is optimistic about their upcoming experiments in "depth education."

This approach to problems was used at the recent University Christian Movement International conference in Cleveland. It involves groups which meet to plan strategy for dealing with specific social problems.

"They gave us one day to complain about the system and then we had to actually decide what to do about it," said Miss Carter.

Is Christianity still relevant?

The SMC has three main aims, Chaplain Frerichs said. One is to examine the relevance of traditional Christianity in the light of modern situations.

But theology and religion are more implicit in the movement than one might expect from the name.

The second is to the group itself in the intellectual life of the university.

"Our lecture series used to provide almost a course in humanities and ideas," said Miss Carter.

This was an important aspect of the SCM when it was the main source of these lectures. Now many other groups are engaged in the same thing.

Thirdly, the SCM seeks social involvement.

In the past, SCM members have been involved in such active organizations as World University Service, Canadian Union of Students and the Student Union for Peace Action. Members also worked at Trelann Court, a social project in Toronto.

During the 1965 Selma sit-in at the American Consulate at the headquarters for the Student Non-Violent Co-ordinating Committee, were at the SCM house on St. George.

We're not attracting as many activists as in former years," said Dyer. "There are more outlets available for them now."

It is difficult to say just who the SCM is attracting to its ranks since membership is as loosely defined as the rest of the structure.

"According to the constitution, anyone who attends one SCM function is a member and has a vote," said Jim Duke (IV Vic), student chairman of the movement.

Agnostics and atheists are welcome

Membership is not confined to Christians, the group welcomes agnostic, atheists and members of other faiths.

"We want a dialogue between Christians and non-Christians," Dyer said.

The SCM has lots of projects a lot of which are not very successful in terms of attracting students, according to one member.

"The best thing about the SCM is their summer work camps", he said.

Each of these work camps involves 10 to 12 students from all over Canada who live together for a summer. They work at whatever jobs they can during the day and spend the rest of their time studying some particular problem such as bi-culturalism or poverty.

The SCM is also proud of its bookroom ("the best in Canada for theology books"), which was set up by the national SCM body.

The future of the movement is uncertain. More and more the functions the SCM once served are being taken up by other organizations.

"We're not in competition with groups like WUS and CUS", said Dyer.

"We try to involve people in a dialogue which encourages them to involve themselves in other things."

UBC president calls meeting to discuss senate secrecy

VANCOUVER (VNS) — Acting President Walter Gage of the University of British Columbia agreed last week to call a special meeting between students and senators to discuss senate secrecy.

The announcement followed protests by student senators and other students.

Six hundred UBC students voted at an open meeting Jan. 9 to sit-in at the next senate meeting unless the secrecy rule is lifted.

No date has been set for the meeting.

Students council President

Shaun Sullivan said he will meet Mr. Gage this week to arrange its details for the meeting.

"This is not a special senate meeting as such, nor is it a special student council meeting," Sullivan said.

"The student council will invite senate members to a discussion with student council and interested students and faculty."

Student senator Gabor Mate said President Gage's response to the request for a meeting was a healthy sign. But, he continued:

"The real issue in this whole crisis is not merely open senate meetings, but the question of the senate's responsibility to its academic constituents."

Squash Blues accept lack of trophy philosophically

Varsity squash Blues won the consolation round of the Ontario team championships over the weekend. Blues defeated YMHA 4-3 in the final yesterday at the Toronto Lawn Tennis club to capture the non-existent Consolation Cup.

Blues' captain Gary Miller wiped the drop of sweat from his brow, and when not awarded the cup after his team had won, muttered philosophically, "I guess its better to win the consolation and win nothing than lose the consolation and lose nothing."

Blues, entered in the "B" division of the tournament, were forced into the consolation round when they dropped a 4-3 decision to Toronto Cricket, Skating and Curling Club's second team, Friday, in the First round.

Blues were forced to forfeit one game in each match they played as Mike Gardiner suffered a knee injury in the first match and was unable to continue.

On their way to the final, Blues picked up victories over University of Western, 5-2, and the Skyline Racquet Club, 5-2.

Both Frank Buck and Vic Harding playing one and two were undefeated in all four rounds. Buck's last victory gave Blues the consolation non-trophy.

In a fit of unprecedented magnanimity, the Varsity Sports Department has taken a trophy from its own files and awarded it (the Consolation Cup) to the squash team, as a token of its scintillating (but empty) consolation victory.

A great day for Varsity

The first period was Blues' best exhibition of skating and general hustle all year, and they left the ice full measure for their 2-1 lead.

The second period began dramatically as Gord Cunningham increased Blues' margin to 3-1 after only 39 seconds. Cunningham counted with a slapshot from the top of the circle when linemate Ward Passi won the faceoff and drew the puck right to him.

However the Russians finally started to move the puck after they failed to score while holding a two man advantage for more than a minute. Juri Retf and Juri Tschitsurin evened the game 3-3 with two quick goals in a disastrous 17 second span.

Blues appeared to sag a little and Sergei Serebyjakow put Russia ahead for the first time at 12:47 with each team a man short. Varsity recovered somewhat and controlled play for the remainder of the period but their several good chances came to nought.

The third period was almost too exciting for words. Once again recent acquisition, Don Fuller, played a key role as he knotted the score 4-4 at 4:13 from Brian St. John. Fuller was almost past the net when he whipped in a wrist shot.

Two minutes later Russia took the lead for the second time on a goal by Vladimir Juirsnov.

Then, following sustained action, the pro-Canada crowd of 10,000 went wild with Laurent's clutch goal that tied the score. The clever center took passes from Passi and

DON FULLER

Cunningham, beating the Russian goalie with a low wrist shot. The puck tore right through the net, but fortunately one referee and the goal-judge signalled a score and after a short argument it went up on the scoreboard.

That's the way it ended. 5-5; a result not even their staunchest supporters had expected and a stirring performance by a helluva hockey team.

In overall play, the Canadians had the edge. They out-shot Russia 32-27 and except for the two quick goals in the second period, they had the Russian forwards completely off balance.

In retrospect, Blues had an enormously successful tournament. The tie with the Russians was just too much. Only the opening 8-4 loss to Czechoslovakia marred their record.

The tie puts Blues in very select company, since few teams in recent years have managed to tie, let alone beat, the powerful Russians in a European tournament.

by phil
bingley

Our Man in Innsbruck, Phil Bingley, filed this dispatch a week ago before the games against Finland, Sweden and Russia. It was cleverly sent by means of Bingley's miracle transmitter concealed in the undone bottom button of his vest.

Wie Gehits:

Innsbruck, Austria.

Monday, Jan. 22

Well things have finally settled down a bit. We arrived from Feldkirch yesterday morning about noon. We will be here for the rest of the tournament, thank God! The first week was pretty tough on everybody because of all the travelling and the scarcity of sleep. Morale was low and things were a bit grim.

Opening ceremonies were held yesterday at the Ice Stadium. Our guys were the mottliest-looking crew there. Each of the other countries competing (there are 23 in all) had their representatives dressed in uniforms, marching in step, etc., while our guys just had ordinary street clothes on. All the players (Blues) that marched in the opening parade said they were embarrassed to death. The arena was crowded (about 10,000 in all) and you can just imagine the reception Blues got compared to the other smartly-attired contingents. The crowd cheered each of the other countries loudly, while Blues received only a sprinkling of applause (mostly from the Americans in attendance).

On top of that, the flag they had raised outside as our flag was the Red Ensign. When Dalt (White) and Howie (Ringham) tried to tell the officials that this was no longer the Canadian flag, all hell broke loose. I wasn't there but apparently the two of them wrestled with the gendarmes before they finally pulled down the old and sent up the new. The Russian Chef de Mission told us last night (over a few glasses of wine) that he wished he had a picture of the whole incident. He said he would send it to a Canadian newspaper as an example of student demonstrations (ha! ha!).

As I told you last night, it doesn't look too good as far as beating the Russians. The fact is that they are all professional hockey players. They go to school all right, but they spend so much time at hockey that they couldn't possibly have time for too much else. Apparently, they have one hour of gymnastics, weightlifting, etc. per day plus two, two and a half hour practices. As people they seem like machines although a few of the guys that have talked to them say that individually they're all right; it's just that they can't afford to lose. We are making bets on who will defect and we have one pegged as a pretty sure bet (again ha! ha!).

IS THIS PHIL BINGLEY?

While we may not win this tournament, the fact is that no one who came will ever forget this trip. The camaraderie with the Swedes, Finns and Austrians is great (especially with the Finns). They, like us, don't take things as seriously as the Rusksies and Czechs, and while they still want to win, they are very easy to get along with. All our players are learning to speak at least some German and the other players who don't know much English (although most know at least some) are learning a few of our favourite expressions, most of them unprintable.

At the present moment, we are practicing at nine o'clock each morning, and so the guys have all day to do as they want. Some go skiing, others have been up to the top of the mountains on the cable cars, and a few of the players have rented a VW bus to beetle around in. All in all everyone is having a good time, and schoolwork is six thousand miles away.

That's about all for now except that the crowds, the refereeing and the organization in the Universiade has been terrific up until now. I hope this makes good copy, and if not you can shoot me when I get back. I'm still tired as hell and I got a bit of sunstroke up on the mountain today. As a result, my usually nimble copy brain is still not quite on the ball. See you on Tuesday night.

88-84 LOSS HURTS

Blues fall to Lancers in overtime

By JIM MORRISON

It was almost a repeat of last year's Hart House classic when Varsity Blues battled Windsor Lancers Saturday night in the border city. The ingredients were practically the same—hysterical fans, a great team effort on both sides, and the added frenzy of overtime. But at the end of overtime, Lancers, not Blues, were out in front, winning the game 88-84.

The game started out as a Windsor rout. Blues were cold in the early minutes and fell behind 17-5 with little over ten minutes to play in the half. But Varsity came back, pecking away at the Lancer lead, and at the half the count was Windsor 41, Toronto 35.

The second half saw Varsity edge closer and closer to Lancers. With little over three minutes to play, John Hadden popped one to put Blues ahead for the first time 73-72. From then until the end of regulation time, the teams exchanged baskets. Navetta scored for Windsor to send his team ahead 77-75, but with a minute left, Arvo Neidre sunk a crucial basket for Toronto.

Lancers held the ball for the final 50 seconds, as they attempted to set up for the winning shot. But a last second shot by Guy Delaire was blocked by Arvo Neidre to send the game into extra innings.

It really looked like Varsity was going to win it. Arvo Neidre netted a driving layup to put Toronto ahead 79-77 as overtime began. But back came Lancers and Bob Navetta, who took the starch out of Varsity with the tying basket (on which the referee failed to notice that Navetta was travelling).

With 49 seconds remaining in overtime, Windsor had developed an 85-82 lead, and Blues were pressing for a three point play. Again Windsor responded with a crucial basket, and it was all over.

The game was a great team effort on Blues' part, and it was a pity they lost. But again they missed Ron Voake, who was unable to make the trip.

Arvo Neidre led Varsity scoring with 18 points, 16 of them in the second half. He played an excellent game on defense as well. Ross MacNaughton, who has spent most of the season on the bench, was also impressive. Inspired by a winning train ride, he potted 12 points and collected key rebounds. And Albie Garbe befuddled the Lancer press with his ball control, dribbling circles around Guy Delaire, while hitting for ten points.

Bruce Dempster had 13 points, John Hadden 11, and Mark White 10 as six Blues hit double figures. A great team effort.

Windsor's personnel is considerably weaker than last year. But they still move the ball around well, and play for the percentage shot by Bob Navetta—their best shooter. Blues still had a tendency in the game to waste shots once they near-ed the basket.

Navetta was high for Lancers with 24 points, followed by impressive rookie Chris Wydrzynski with 17. Guy Delaire and Andy Auch had 13 apiece.

Blues now have to win at least three of their next four games if they hope to make the playoffs. This includes games with Windsor, Waterloo, and Mac—the latter meets Toronto next Saturday in Hart House.

FOUL LINE FACTS:

Lancers outrebounded Blues 35-26, but 26 Windsor rebounds came in the first half of the game . . . Shots were 33 of 95 for Lancers and 27 of 78 for Varsity . . . it seems that the SIBL likes to use octogenarian referees for these contests—one grey-haired striped-shirt made at least ten horrible calls Saturday night.

Blues Arrival

Our lubby-dubby Varsity Blues, even as you read this, are winging their way back to the ice and cold of Toronto. They left Innsbruck today for Zurich. From Zurich they fly to New York, arriving in Toronto from New York on Air Canada flight 791 at 6:40 p.m. TUESDAY, Jan. 30. It would be nice if a lot of fans were on hand to greet them, but I do no more than suggest it. The airport's a bit far out.

But the Athletic Office is very eager to have hallowed LGMB in attendance at the airport, and Miss Lea would like to see a band representative in the Athletic Office (102) today to arrange things.

Blues arrival: 6:40 p.m. TUESDAY, domestic arrival section of the International Airport.

Assure your child a fully paid University Education Now.

FILL OUT CARD &

By LOUIS

"Assure your child a fully paid University Education Now," the ad reads.

"Simply by putting aside as little as $9.00 per month (approximately the amount of your family allowance cheque) toward your child's first year of university, we will pay for the next three years of their university education."

Sounds like a pretty good deal, doesn't it? In big, plain gold letters on a purple background, looking for all the world like an advertisement for government annuities.

You may have seen it in the Telegram Weekend Magazine or Canadian Homes. It's generally a full-page ad or an insert.

You read on. "A program that is highly recommended by leading Canadian educators, civic officials and business executives. It can mean the difference between your child becoming a university graduate or being forced to compete with one."

If it is an insert you're looking at, there is a "sample" cheque for $6,000 superimposed on four pictures of convocations, ivy-covered colleges, classrooms and microscopes.

Finally, at the bottom of the page, beside a small but tasteful seal featuring a lion rampant on a mortarboard, you find out that this wonderful offer is being made by something called University Scholarships of Canada, administered by The International Scholarship Foundation—A Non-profit Educational Foundation.

In order to find out how University Scholarships could assure my child a university education, I wrote the "Registrar's Office" of University Scholarships of Canada at 56 Sparks Street in Ottawa, asking for information on the program.

Obviously believing in the value of the personal touch,

University Scholarships responded by calling me and arranging to have a man come around to visit my wife and I the following Tuesday.

Since I don't happen to have a wife, a marriage of convenience was arranged. Varsity reporter Sue Helwig was artfully disguised as Mrs. Louis Erlichman. Our imaginary 18-month-old "child", Mary Jane Erlichman, slept soundly in another room while John MacLean, described on his business card as a "scholarship consultant", explained the program to us.

If he had happened to step into the wrong door of my well-appointed Queen Street East suite, he would have stumbled upon a moribund dance-hall clogged full of rummage. Luckily, he didn't.

"The idea behind the Foundation is to alleviate the high cost of a university education", he said.

I was tempted to suggest he try William Davis (who certainly could use the advice) but restrained myself.

As the plan unfolded, however, it began to look less and less like a scholarship scheme and more and more like a hard sell for a lottery.

They promise to return most of what you contribute to the program for your child's first-year expenses. If you are lucky enough to beat the odds, they give the child up to $2,000 worth of scholarships for each of the succeeding years.

As MacLean explained it, an account would be set up for us at York Trust. We would pay $30 initially and $10 a month for the next 16 years.

"Then," he went on, "if your child has the academic ability and the desire to go to university, the child's complete university education will be paid for."

It sounds nice, but what happens if the kid doesn't get to university?

At this stage, the plot begins to thicken.

"If your child doesn't go to university, or if you drop the plan before completion (60 days of non-payment automatically terminates the agreement), you receive back all the money you have deposited," MacLean said. Later he remembered there was a "minimal administration fee" of $175.

And what of the interest? That, we found out, is where the "scholarships" come from. The interest (at 5 1/2 per cent per annum) is syphoned off all accounts and placed in a special account.

We would receive the money we had deposited (minus the administration fee), a total of $1,765, for the first year of our "child's" university education. If she gets into second year, she gets $2,000 for that year and each following year.

In MacLean's words, "the children who don't go to university donate their interest to the children who do."

A charitable act, indeed.

And about that $2,000 per year: It's not guaranteed, it represents just an approximate estimate. You are assured only of getting a share of the interest pool. But as the personable Mr. MacLean assured us, the money would be available when the plan matured. "Our actuaries are constantly looking into the future and figuring out the future costs of education."

Those "actuaries" seem, however, to be rather confused about the calculations involved. MacLean told us that the Bladen Report on the Financing of Higher Education predicted that one in 15 children 6.7 per cent will enter university in the future.

"But," he continued, "the actuaries base their calculations on one in eight (12.5 per cent) so that there will be a margin of safety."

Oddly enough, the figures actually given in the Bladen Report have only a coincidental agreement with the MacLean figures.

The Bladen Report says 9.2 per cent of Canadians between the ages of 18 and 24 were in universities in 1964-65 and estimates that the percentage will rise to 15.7 per cent in 1975-76. It says absolutely nothing about the situation in 1983 when our plan would mature.

Besides, using the one in eight figure, the scholarship fund would end up with close to $9,000 per student entering university. That's a pretty large and inefficient margin for error, even considering the possible deviation of the entrants in the schemes from the general

Noon-hour chuckling with the boys

By DAVE FRANK

Have you ever heard 25 people chuckling rhythmically to themselves?

If you want to lose a lunch hour painlessly, drop in to the Hart House Debates Room and watch them go at it. The sound is not deafening.

Yesterday four of the regular debaters tackled the resolution University Students are Ignorant.

"Ignorance is bliss," declared John Tomlinson (I Law), "and bliss is worth fighting for."

The presence of three women (Egad!), technically classed as reporters, was an added incentive.

Tomlinson told about how he ran around in circles on his third day of kindergarten. Then he dropped his pants down.

"Girls at that age really enjoy that," he commented. "Our early schooling prepares us for ignorance."

He was promptly rebutted by Peter Picherack (I Trin). The speaker cautioned him to keep his hands out of his pockets.

"Essentially the student is mentally virile," Picherack said. He documented his case with examples of mental fellatio: the anal-crotic implications of running fingers through card files, and "strong handsome words."

The third speaker admitted he was from Trinity, "that hot-bed of celibacy."

While his girl friend sat at the nearby press table, he recounted how he went downtown to buy her a brassiere for Christmas.

It was another off-colour joke.

"We are ill-prepared for the big bad world," he concluded.

Peter Grant (I Trin) chose his words carefully. You could tell from the way he hooked his thumbs in his belt and fingered his tie.

He wound up with "an orgasmic climax of apocalyptic revelation." But he admitted his remarks were "profoundly euphemistic."

"If you come down to it," summed up Tomlinson, "university students don't even know about sex."

The resolution was carried unanimously.

UC Lit stands despite tower of (B)abel

By WILSON NEATLY

The Tower shook and trembled, but (B)abel did not bring University College tumbling down. In fact, the organizers consider the festival a success.

The Environment audience was involved with the myths, sometimes recognizing them, sometimes falling prey to them. They knew where the display started because they were informed; "This is the entrance." Once inside, they did not know if all they saw was myth or not.

Publicity Chairman Hersh Ezrin tells of seeing people confused by the 'beautiful living' display. Some thought they were out of reach of the myths, and looked for price tags on the furniture.

A substantial number could not perceive the myths, and their reactions provided a further exhibit for those whose awareness was greater. There was no consistent level of appreciation or understanding, reflecting the permeation of society by myth.

The Mothers' concert showed that many people understand myth as that which does not involve them. Part of the audience, which appreciated criticism of one part of society, reacted angrily when the indictment was broadened to include them.

(B)ABEL cost more than expected, and about $6,000 has yet to be allotted. Of this, most will come from the UC Literary and Athletic Society, which has a capital fund to cover such contingencies. The UC Alumni promised $1,000 and may give more. The Lit is in no financial difficulties as a result of the festival.

The Students Administrative Council has yet to give the festival any money. Ezrin says the Lit will ask SAC for $500.

Last year, the Lit asked SAC for money but was refused.

It may be that (B)ABEL will be the last festival of its kind. It is almost impossible to imagine the spirit of the last three festivals being sustained for another year.

Madness no myth...

Two enterprising but anonymous students apparently took their own view of madness and myth in society by forging and selling tickets to (B)abel, last week's University College Festival.

An unnamed recipient of one of the tickets said 20 were printed, but only two were sold.

"It's a great reflection on the festival when you can't even sell the tickets on the black market," remarked Len Gilday (I UC), co-writer of the festival.

At first glance, the forgeries appear quite authentic, but a closer examination reveals a slightly scarred type face and the occasional spelling mistake.

ke. 'Hersh Ezrin' becomes 'Hirsh Ezrio'; 'Hardisty' becomes 'Hardesty'.

But these inconsistencies could be overlooked by the prospective buyer since one ticket cost $1.25 as opposed to the $4.00 price of an authentic ticket.

The motive of the counterfeiters was fun not profit, said the unnamed informer.

"We're just regarding it as a prank," said Gilday. "The forgeries had nothing to do with the overflow of ticket-holders at the Mothers of Invention concert at Convocation Hall."

Hersh Ezrin (IV UC), president of the UC Literary and Athletic Society, still suspects there are more fake tickets about.

He plans to put them in the UC archives, if any are recovered.

"... To those people in the huts and villages of half the globe struggling to break the bonds of mass misery, we pledge our best efforts to help them help themselves, for whatever period is required — not because the Communists may be doing it, not because we seek their votes, but because it is right. If a free society cannot help the many who are poor, it cannot save the few who are rich."

— John F. Kennedy, 1961 Inaugural speech

the board and brazil

University students should occasionally analyse the activities of the men who run their school.

A case in point: the U of T Board of Governors, which in the great tradition of such boards is made up of old and rich men who gained their appointments because of their business prowess and their connections with the ruling political party.

Three of U of T's governors, Henry Bardeen, the chairman, Neil McKinnan and Beverley Matthews have among their other distinctions, directorships on the board of Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Co., a Canadian company but substantially owned by American shareholders.

This company has often been accused of exploiting the economy of Brazil for the good of its shareholders as well as lauded for its part in providing power for Latin America's largest nation.

But rare is the company that passes up the chance to make a nice profit and Brazilian Traction's record is one of brilliant business success.

For instance, back in 1965 the company made one of the choicest deals ever made when it sold off some of its Brazilian holdings to the Brazilian government. Company shares were selling for less than $2.00 each at the time of the last military coup. Brazil's labor force was suffering under the most drastic wage cuts ever attempted by any government and poverty in the rural backlands was, as usual, getting worse.

Brazilian Traction raised its rates in 1965, enough so that it made a profit of $1.13 per share.

Then it sold the aforementioned holdings — some of the company's less profitable properties — for a price so high that it amounted to $5.90 per share. The stock rose five times in value. You don't have to believe us; read the Inter-American Economic Affairs, a reputable, learned journal available in the Periodicals Room.

Its Autumn 1966 issue called the deal a "speculator's dream."

More interesting is what the journal has to say about the deal. Evidently the sale was forced upon the Brazilian government by a series of power companies among which Brazilian Traction was not the least.

The I-A Ec Aff relates that this has happened several times in recent Latin American history when companies wanted to sell off property that was no longer making enough money for them. The publication claims the companies used the opportunity to get exorbitant fees, knowing full well that Brazil could get the money through the Alliance for Progress. That money is not a grant, of course, but a loan. Borrowing on Brazilian credit put that country deeper into debt by diverting money that should have been spent on social reforms and improving the lot of its people.

"The conservative Barran's, a financial weekly on Wall Street that might, by Latin Americans, have been expected to applaud this misuse of Alliance money," said the I-A Ec Aff, "pointed out that acquisition of the Traction Company properties had now conferred Brazil with a requirement for capital renovation of some $450,000,000 to add to its already non-existent borrowing capacity in any legitimate sense of the word."

Briefly, Brazil couldn't possibly afford that bad deal and yet, according to the I-A Ec Aff journal, the power companies forced the deal upon her. This is the type of exploitation that is keeping millions of Latin Americans gravelling in poverty while their rulers deposit Alliance for Progress money in Swiss banks or pay it to the rich North American companies.

Why bring it up here? Just because there is no good reason why men running companies such as these should run universities.

When the major problem facing the world is the economic discrepancy between the rich, the fat and the lazy in the developed countries and the poor in the underdeveloped, the universities should be directing some energies into finding solutions. With these men on the Boards the major research done at universities is for war and for business, not for people.

Most of the Board's work is to rubber stamp work done by other committees, but it does have veto power over everything, and that includes finances, student housing, staff appointments, student discipline, fines, building projects, etc. Members also use a great deal of personal influence in affecting the university's direction.

They help set the tone for the university, that of a factory supplying competent little technocrats and bureaucrats for their businesses. They don't seem to worry much about what happens to the individual student and whether he is getting the education he wants. Just like in Brazil.

Sir:

As a result of the ineptitude and/or dishonesty of the U.C. Festival organizers, at least fifteen ticket-holders were left outside Convocation Hall in the freezing drizzle Sunday night. I was one of them and I'm bloody furious. I was earlier attending an important meeting, at which I rushed through several important items and skipped several others in an attempt to make the concert. I arrived at 8:40 to confront locked doors and no one to answer them. Between ten and fifteen people circulated the building, pounding on doors but it was at least 9:00 o'clock before anyone answered. (And that only because the police were expected, having been called by a caretaker following somebody's entry into the building through a window — no doubt some poor sap in the same plight as we.)

Seeing we weren't the cops, the surly bastard manning the door slammed it in our faces — no reason given. More attempts were made by others in the group to at least talk to the man — results — noses and thumbs narrowly missed by a fast-closing door. During this time four people had left the concert. Then the cops came and were let in. Finally one of them came to the door to say that the hall was overcrowded already and we couldn't get in. When I finally left at about 9:25 there were four hopefuls still waiting. Maybe they were lucky and got to see what was left.

So . . . why did the festival organizers over-sell tickets? Surely to God the only reason people would buy $4 tickets is to go to the "Mothers" concert. And even given that sometimes people don't show up for these events, and overselling might be justified (though in the case of a group like the Mothers I can't really see that it would be), the Babel organizers should at least have warned ticket-buyers that there might be an overflow and to get there early.

At any rate the nicest thing I have to say is that the festival promoters were remiss in their duties and should be shot. At any rate I reap some grim pleasure out of the rumor that they are in the hole and the certainty that they will be another $1.50 short when I get through with them.

students ain't niggers

Sir,

When Jerry Farber (in Student as Nigger) talks about the tyrannical rule of the professors over university students, he forgets one significant fact. Not all students are "out of swaddling clothes," as he implies in the article; many of them, especially in the second and succeeding years of university study, are mature adults, often married people, often teachers. Certainly the idea of a professor subjugating an adult of voting age is ridiculous.

Secondly, does the author really believe that a student is afraid of the professor with the "white bwan's pith helmet?" With all the evidence of student participation in the issues of the day, it is a misconception to envisage the student as a cowering, subservient slave. Perhaps Mr. Farber has overlooked a more plausible reason for the fact that students "stammer and shake when they speak to a professor": respect for experience. After all, it is not incredible for a student to admire a professor for establishing himself in a specialty. And this point is flagrantly ignored by Farber. He completely betrays himself by a prejudiced and unproven statement that "taken as a group their most striking characteristic is timidity."

He exaggerates the issue in ignoring the many professors of high calibre and, in doing so, leads the reader to ask whether the whole article is not also a distorted exaggeration.

He makes a mistake in thinking that students are totally capable of administering course adjustments. Since they are still students and not experts, they do not possess the required experience or training in a particular specialty. They cannot see the whole course in panorama and are thus incapable of completely assessing what is important and what is not. That is not to say that students should not have some voice in university affairs; however, that voice cannot help but be limited.

Mr. Farber has the audacity to refer to the "suppression" of students by professors as an "Auschwitz approach to education." How can one have the insensitivity to compare academic grievances with the greatest atrocity known to man? This is certainly irresponsible journalism.

In his comparisons with the American Negro situation, does Farber equate the lack of student omnipotence with the valiant and tragic Negro fight for freedom? And if he is so interested in the plight of the American Negro, why does he have the poor taste to choose for his title the word "nigger" which is synonymous even today with racial hatred?

If he is using that word merely for sensationalism, then he is again demonstrating a type of journalism which is crude, irresponsible and totally valueless. And even if he is using the word and all his comparisons for a "tongue-in-cheek" effect, does he have the moral right to create such an effect at the expense of another nation's pride?

Finally, if Mr. Farber had enough intelligence to become a teacher at Cal State, he should have enough sense to take himself out of the gutter, from which he appears to be addressing university students. If he is indeed speaking to adults, as his words imply, then he should know better than to use words which only fit in the vocabulary of a fourteen-year-old child of low intelligence and low breeding.

Mark Elliott Shapiro (I UC)

(Ed. note: You miss the obvious value of that article: its call on students to exert some self-confidence and power. Dr. Donald McCulloch, head of U of T's advisory bureau has written that students' confidence and creativity is submerged by the existing unilateral relationships between teachers and students. Situations vary but the tendency to accept the experienced man's views as gospel is evident in many of them. Surely competent professors would welcome some challenge from students in their tutorials and essays.)

i tried harder

Sir,

In The Varsity (January 26), you printed a picture of a very intriguing posture for sexual intercourse. I would like to tell you, that after attempting to duplicate the posture, I was cut off, and my partner became very disenchanted with the whole thing.

As a constructive criticism, I would like to suggest that, in the future, The Varsity print only postures that are practicable.

pattern in the whole population.

At this stage, it began to become apparent to our guest that we were not really enthralled with the terms of the program, and he began to bring out the heavy artillery in his arsenal of instruments of persuasion.

First the certificate, affirming that Mary Jane Erlichman was a registrant in the University Scholarships program.

"We suggest you frame this and put it on the child's wall. It's a subtle way of letting them know that they will eventually go on to uni-

I was not yet about to sign the agreement form (in quintuplicate, with no terms and lots of white space), the unflappable Mr. MacLean played his trump card.

"I know the deposit schedule is being increased. Let's say that next week the rate is raised to $13 a week. If you can't manage $11 (up from $10 earlier in the evening) a week now, it will be even more difficult then."

When we didn't respond to this little bit of arm-bending, MacLean was perceptibly disheartened, but he still had enough spirit to give us a parting dose of concerned parent neurosis.

"You hear a lot about kids being able to work their way through school," my spouse suggested.

"Ah, yes," he agreed, "and you also hear a lot about children committing suicide, having nervous breakdowns because they work and go to school at the same time." What parent would refuse to make a few sacrifices to save his child from death and insanity?

But even this admonition could not melt our hard hearts, and we sent Mr. Mac-

And if that's not enough, the wisdom of the ages right from the Toronto Telegram and the Financial Post down through John Kennedy, Socrates and the Bible ("Wisdom excels folly as light excels darkness") is quoted.

They go to enormous lengths to give the impression that they are a government organization, cultivating a "civil service" style in all their publications. They proclaim the fact that all deposits are government-insured (as are all deposits up to $20,000 in Ontario trust companies.) They emphasize that they are "government chartered" as is any limited company doing business in Ontario.

The International Scholarship Foundation is never mentioned without the trailer "A Non-Profit Educational Foundation." This does not prevent the company it "administers" from making as large profits as they wish in their altruistic mission.

The brochure says: "You need never worry about an unexpected tragedy depriving them of their opportunity for a university education." If the sponsoring parent should die, it says, "your child's education is automatically protected."

They don't say that what really happens is that at the end of the program, your child will get back just the amount you put in (minus the administration fee, of course) before the death, and only for later years is your child given a slice of the scholarship pool. Not quite "fully insured."

If he wants to take a year off school, or get money for graduate school, will the student still be eligible for "scholarships"? Why yes, says the beautiful brochure. But wait a second. You read on a little further and it becomes "The Foundation will give any such requests sympathetic consideration." As always, no guarantee.

And they somehow neglect to mention how "your child will be eternally grateful for providing a golden opportunity on which their future happiness and security is built" if he happens to want to go a technical school or (perish the thought) a community college. These institutions are not covered by the plan.

University Scholarships of Canada does not stand alone in its struggle to preserve higher education in this country. It is second-largest among seven "scholarships" companies operating today in Canada with over $20,000,000 deposited and $75,000,000 pledged. Several provincial governments, including Ontario, are considering legislation to regulate these companies as the insurance business is regulated.

Until that time comes, and probably even after, John MacLean will go on spending long winter evenings explaining to concerned mothers and fathers from coast to coast how they can avoid "neglecting their responsibility" and turn their little boys and girls into economically useful production units.

Then came a fine-grained folder listing 117 "patrons and advisory council" swimming in a sea of Ph.D.'s, L.L.D.'s and F.R.S.C.'s, including the Lieutenant-Governor of Saskatchewan and U of T Prof. Northrop Frye.

"These people donate their time and energy to the Foundation," we were told. "If we had had to hire all these brains we could never give out as much money as we do."

According to J. E. Dove, U of T chemistry professor who is one of the patrons and advisors, the time and energy involved is minimal. He has not been consulted since he agreed to help the program a year ago. But apparently Prof. Dove doesn't mind being non-paid decorative wallpaper for the scheme.

"I'm pretty familiar with this type of scheme," he said, "and it seems to be a good idea."

When asked if he approved of the company's method of advertising, Prof. Dove admitted he had not seen the company's brochures. He hastened to add, however, that "if you agree that such a plan is good thing, you should hire professionals to sell it, and they should be able to use the methods they think suitable."

At this stage, seeing that

Lean on his way confirmed in our resolution to let the mythical Mary Jane shift for herself in the cruel world.

The incident would have been funny if it weren't slightly frightening. The scheme itself is not a particularly fine investment.

At 5½ per cent interest compounded annually, we would have $3,038.10 at the end of the 16 year period. If we join the scheme, we end up with $1,765 and a rather indeterminate chance at a rather indeterminate amount of money.

Considering that you really don't always have control of your deposits (If you leave the program you automatically give up $175 and all the interest on your money), the rate of interest is certainly not outstanding.

(The current Canada savings bond yield is 5.48 per cent).

A perusal of the University Scholarships brochure proves an enlightening excursion through the never-never land of visual-impact advertising.

The beautiful and expensive mock-parchment pages contain the following: a chart comparing the average income of university graduates with the earnings of those less fortunate. A photo shows a baby grasping a diploma and wearing an academic pasteboard cap. Another

Letters to Gellius...

Dear sir:

We, the members of III Civil B, sensitive individuals and unsuspecting victims of fate and circumstance, are saddened. Your mockery, offering us to anyone for 25c and two box tops, is an injustice hard to bear; such irrelevant comments deserve only to be hid on the editorial pages. Your failure to realize how actions on the ice, our unselfish attempts to instill confidence in the opposition and to provide for them an occasion to release their anxieties, can be resolved in the "eternal scheme of things," wounds us deeply. We understand your neglect in attaching cosmic significance to our 15-0 loss; in this cold, cruel world, it is only poetic justice.

John Bukovec
for III Civil B

Sir:

The members of class III CIVIL ENGINEERING and specifically the team (III CIVIL B) wish to express their profound disillusionment in the type of reporting done by your sports staff. You have chosen to make a complete mockery of our team's efforts by ridiculing our admittedly disappointing score in the headlines of your sports page of Jan. 24 (III CIVIL B SNOWBAILED 15-0). The score was not a true indication of play. In addition, you have failed to mention the foul style of play used by the opposition (raisses, pushing etc.). Instead of encouragement, you have shown derision and contempt. You have effectively damaged morale in our class and given a shattering blow to our team's confidence at a time when we were showing a marked improvement in play. Your staff has not taken our heroic efforts seriously. What do you think competitive athletics is anyway, a joke?

Ice Blues stagger in

"If you got the fare, time to spare, and don't care, go by air." That's what Varsity Blues were saying as they headed home from New York on the last stage of their utterly exhausting return journey from Innsbruck.

Scheduled to arrive in Toronto at 6.40 p.m. last night, they finally staggered in at 12:15 (18 hours after leaving Zurich).

Waiting for them at the airport was just like waiting for the federal government to institute medicare. Delay, delay, delay. First, their arrival was set back to 10:40, then to 12.00, and ultimately to 12:15. That's when Air Canada flight 589 set down, and off the plane strode smiling team manager Mike Killoran ("I never thought I'd see Canada again."), followed by a haggard but jovial bunch of players.

It seems Blues just can't win when it comes to air travel. Going over they were plagued by multitudinous flight cancellations that resulted in a horribly-drawn out trip. And coming back wasn't much easier.

It all started two days ago in Innsbruck when the team left their schnapps buddies behind and winged it to Zurich where they stayed overnight. However, scheduled to leave there for New York at noon yesterday, they were crossed up by a huge chunk of fog which hovered menacingly over the airport. This necessitated a cunning subterfuge to Geneva, and then, after a scintillating wait of two hours, the long-awaited flight to New York.

The transatlantic flight sapped nine hours from the wearied voyageurs as they arrived in the Gotham port at 7.00 EST (but really 1:00 a.m. by the players' watches). By this time, Blues could almost smell the polluted waters of the Toronto waterfront, but old man Time was still playing his game and kept them at Kennedy Airport for an additional three and a half hours before final departure.

As mentioned, "Dobie" Killoran, was first off the plane, muttering about being in every country in Europe during the past 24 hours. Brian Jones had a big grin, and some words about the Russians' game. "That was the first game this year we played hockey."

Then one of the players got hold of Monday's Varsity, and several members paused momentarily to gaze at the banner headline.

The last man off the plane was a very tired-looking coach, Tom Watt, pale and worn-out from two-weeks of constant travelling and pressure hockey. But a handshake and congratulation still brought forward the famous, good-natured Watt smile. And he even found time to analyze the tournament. "Well, for the first half we didn't play too well at all, but in the final game we just played wonderful. A great team effort. Terrific."

Then it was through the customs while friends, relatives, wives, and parents waited eagerly. One by one the players were gobbled up by groups of smothering affection, and it was home to get one hundred hours of shuteye.

Did someone mention that Blues meet undefeated Waterloo tomorrow night, McMaster and Montreal at home, Friday and Sunday respectively. G'wan, you're kidding, of course.

Amid all the confusion during Blues' arrival, the only thing that managed to stay still for a picture was this pile of baggage. However this rather unexciting pic daes prove that the Varsity sparts staff was on the scene.

HART HOUSE

How long will University of Toronto students stomach Hart House as a place to play intercollegiate basketball? That's the burning question on the lips of countless foreign (from other campi) students who witness a game in the "cave" for the first time. They just can't believe it. A university of this size relegated to the most atrocious, abominable, anachronistic emporium imaginable. Even the high schools (except for Rummynede's ratnest) have nothing as bad. The Hart House gym is a disgrace to our University and a disgrace to intercollegiate basketball.

The hockey team complains about playing in the "barn" at McMaster, and justly so. But really, teams from this university have no cause for complaint about any athletic facilities at another place so long as Hart House is used for Varsity competition. The Varsity Sports Department is about to launch a free-wheeling crusade (crusades are always free-wheeling, I'm told) on the subject, and we begin with the following editorial written for the The Chevron by Archie Bolsen from University of Waterloo. He's mad and so are we. (Ruff ruff!)

FROM THE CHEVRON

It's not the University of Waterloo's business but it's time someone spoke up.

The mousehole that the University of Toronto calls a gymnasium should be outlawed as a site for any intercollegiate varsity sports.

Better known as Hart House this basketball layout is shorter and narrower than any floor in Canada. Any player new to this gym always has trouble adjusting to these restricting dimensions.

Along one side no more than a foot from the out-of-bounds line there is a wall (see picture below) a frightful awakening to any player who takes a wrong step. The spectator seats on the other side are also practically adjacent to the floor and the areas behind both baskets are filled up with chairs to accommodate overflow crowds.

And that's not all. For those paying fans who come a little late there is makeshift seating along a track running above the floor in gallery fashion. However, the view this provides is incomplete unless the fan sticks his neck out over the edge.

Waterloo can feel proud of Seagram gym, itself no palace, compared to Toronto's hole.

Every game played in Hart Hole turns into a revision of the whole intended style of basketball. All action forms up the centre of the court to avoid playing in the cut-down areas on either side of the basket.

Battles for rebounds turn into mob scenes, and the play in general is speeded up so that it looks like one of those old Keystone Cop chases.

It can't be that U. of T. doesn't have the money. Certainly if Waterloo can build a 4,000 seat coliseum, Toronto can do likewise. In fact their women's phys-ed building puts Hart House to shame.

As long as Toronto continues their present facilities they'll never be a basketball power.

It's not coincidental that Windsor and Western have dominated the sport in the 50's and 60's. The Blues last won the league title in 1958, a poor showing for a campus of over 20,000 students.

Of course, this only makes things easier for Dan Pugliese's cage warriors, but it also stunts the development of the league and the calibre of the game its members play.

Allison only Blue to shine

Canadian wrestlers fell like flies at the Guelph invitational meet last Saturday as competitors from the United States dominated proceedings.

The Americans, mostly from Michigan, won every event they entered with several gold medallists at the Pan-Am games among their number. The most impressive figure at the meet was Dave Oble in the 137 lb. division. Oble placed third in the 1964 Olympics and was NCAA champion in the States four times. He met Western's pride and joy, Charley Nixon, in the final, and although unable to pin Nixon, won handily.

Varsity Blues sent a somewhat depleted contingent with Rick Kester, Mike Wright and Jim Doner in absentia. Among those that did go, veteran Bill Allison (160 lb.) was the sole bright light as he came second in his division. Allison lost to Michigan's Dave DeRocher in the final by a 4-0 count.

Canadian universities that competed were Toronto, McMaster, Western, Waterloo, and the host Guelph squad.

Last night, the wrestling Blues travelled to Hamilton for a match against the Mac's Marauders (small joke there—very small).

Cash will be available for POSAP-stricken students

By PAUL CARSON

Relief is on the way for the more than 6,000 University of Toronto students still waiting for their second-term student aid cheques.

The Students Administrative Council executive has agreed to donate up to $5,000 to a special loan fund administered by the university awards office.

The fund will provide interest-free, short-term loans to students experiencing financial difficulties due to delays in processing provincial student awards.

Loans must be repaid immediately once POSAP cheques arrive.

Students expecting some POSAP money and who need emergency funds during the next two or three weeks must obtain a recommendation from their college or faculty registrar. Actual requests for the loans should be made as soon as possible at the Student Awards Office, Rm. 106 in Simcoe Hall.

Lynn Reimer, senior awards officer at Simcoe Hall, said the SAC grant will be added to money provided by the university "from a special fund not normally used for this purpose."

Miss Reimer declined to estimate the total amount of money available in the special loan fund.

SAC President Tom Faulkner said yesterday that the special loan fund is intended solely for students inconvenienced by the unexpected delay in receiving provincial loans and grants.

"POSAP money has been late in arriving all over the province because of problems with the provincial computer, but it's especially late here because of the difficulty in reporting in-course awards and bursaries in time to deduct them from the POSAP grant," Faulkner said.

Faulkner added he expects the already complex POSAP application form to be even more difficult to complete next year.

"As long as student aid is administered by a means test, we'll be faced with lengthy and complex forms," he said.

"The only satisfactory solution is a system of stipends, granting a living and tuition allowance to all students qualified to attend university. At the moment, such a system exists for graduate students only."

David S. Bethune, director of student awards for the department of university affairs and E. E. Stewart, deputy university affairs minister, were not available for comment.

Gloria Pierre, an information officer at the university affairs department, said in an interview yesterday that the delay in issuing POSAP cheques is due to the "necessary mechanics of processing the applications."

"Some 20,000 or 25,000 cheques have already been mailed, and this is more than were sent all of last year," she said.

Provincial officials have been swamped with over 40,000 applications for student aid, Mrs. Pierre added.

"Many arrived late, and of course, we must have confirmation that a student is still registered in his course before we can send the second instalment."

SAC involvement in the loan fund may be unique for an Ontario university. But a student-financed loan program has operated for seven years at Marianopolis, a Roman Catholic women's college in Montreal.

SAC executive assistant Martha Tracey, who was student council president at Marianopolis in 1965-66, said the student fund there provided assistance over and above the Quebec government bursaries.

It began as an experiment in April, 1960, and proved so successful the student council and college administration decided to make it permanent.

Students facing eviction due to inability to pay their rent because of the POSAP delay should advise their landlord to call 928-2379. Someone from Simcoe Hall will then confirm that you're not a freeloader and that pretty soon you'll be able to pay.

New College Council executive resigns

By HARRIET KIDEKEL

The College Students Council executive resigned and was replaced last night in a hot and smoky meeting in the college reading room.

The executive submitted its collective resignation because, "we are of the opinion that we can no longer claim the confidence of New College Students Council necessary for the fulfilment of our duties."

Their first notice of resignation was not accepted by the council Tuesday night after a motion made by the executive was defeated.

That night, the executive asked for ratification of its actions in relieving social chairman Joe Miskin (I Dents) of his duties regarding the New College prom—which took place Saturday.

The executive charged that Miskin was not handling his job responsibly and that unless it took over, the prom would be a failure.

When Elliot Markson (111 New) asked if this motion was a vote of confidence, speaker Roger Oatley (11 Law) punctiliously reminded him that there is no such thing in Robert's Rules of Order, a guidebook to parliamentary procedure.

The motion was then defeated, the council submitted its resignation despite Oatley's ruling.

After the council did not accept it, a second notice of resignation appeared on the council office door Wednesday morning.

As a result, the emergency meeting was held last night.

The council had to decide whether to rescind the motion and return the executive to office or elect an interim council executive until the end of term.

Dr. D. G. Ivey, principal of New College, invited to attend the meeting as an observer, took an active part. He pointed out that council had "to choose between Mr. Miskin and the executive." He obviously favored the latter.

Dr. Ivey mentioned other examples of Miskin's alleged incompetency in running New College dances.

David Nitkin (111 New), new SAC representative, reminded Dr. Ivey that the motion on which the council resigned relieved Mr. Miskin of his duties only for the prom.

In an hour of heated discussion many members of council emphasized that the resignation had been refused at the last meeting and that there was no alternative but to accept it now. The motion was finally passed and the resignations accepted by a vote of 14-3 with one abstention.

It was then necessary to elect an interim executive.

At this point, Dr. David Stager, dean of students at New, joined the meeting, although not invited. He suggested that the old executive still be called back. But this was out of the question for most council members.

Argosy editor fired for 'Nigger' article

SACKVILLE, N.B. (CUP) — Allan Rimoin, editor of the Mount Allison University Argosy Weekly, has been fired by the university president after a furor over The Student as Nigger.

President L. H. Cragg acted Wednesday after Rimoin wrote a page 1 story describing his futile efforts to get a printer to reproduce the article, a controversial analysis of the student's role in North American society.

The controversy erupted last month when Rimoin's local printer refused to print the article. Rimoin scoured the area unsuccessfully, then finally had the article printed in Montreal by the Canadian University Press and distributed Monday.

Three senior editors disagreed with Rimoin's actions and resigned a week ago.

Last Friday the paper's advisory board, comprising two students and two faculty, asked President Cragg to fire Rimoin, under a conslititutional provision enabling him to do so.

The committee accused Rimoin of inability to work with his editorial staff and with the committee, and with having caused a situation that might have been avoided.

After the committee's request to Dr. Cragg, the student council met twice and recommended that an impartial committee be formed to investigate the paper's governing structure and to sort out the situation.

In asking for Rimoin's resignation, Dr. Cragg commented:

"I am convinced after discussion with persons directly concerned that had the editor's recent decisions and actions been made with wise and responsible concern for the well-being of the university community, the necessity for such an action would not have arisen."

SAC by-election at Vic nullified

A Students' Administrative Council by-election held at Victoria College Tuesday has been declared void by the SAC election committee.

The move came when it was discovered that a preferential ballot, which asks voters to list candidates in order of preference, was not used. SAC regulations call for this type of ballot.

The election committee had already looked into charges that one of the candidates, Janus Proos (I VIC) had exceeded the $15 ceiling on campaign expenses, and had decided to let the election stand.

Returning officer Steve Grant (I Vic) said last night another election would not be held to fill the vacant seat.

"We'll just wait for the regular SAC elections in March," he said.

Proos was the successful candidate displaced by the election committee's decision.

In another by-election last Friday, Chris Szalwinski (I APSC) was elected to SAC represent New College.

His election was confirmed this week after a recount. Harriet Kideckel (I New) lost by seven votes.

Headrick tells how to get a job

Many university students are "remarkably naive" about careers that are available to them, says A. W. Headrick, acting director of the Placement Service.

Mr. Headrick was speaking at University College, explaining the role of the Service.

The Placement Service, he explained, counsels the student in "the ethics and procedure of job hunting." It does not advise him as to his exact job.

Mr. Headrick stressed the importance of the interview. He suggested that students apply for a few interviews at the beginning of the year just to get the feel of being interviewed.

Funds used to operate the Placement Service do not come directly out of student fees, said Mr. Headrick. They are obtained from the general supply of money used to run the university as a whole.

He added he would be glad to have students "in an advisory capacity" to the people who run the Service.

Teacher becomes student's enemy: HUS

Discontent, frustration, stifling control—New College Residence? the Board of Governors? a novice in a nunnery?

Actually it's a Toronto high school described on a leaflet put out by the organizers of the High School Union of Students.

In four months of concentrated effort, HUS has attracted a mailing list of more than 200 students and has contacted 40 high schools in the Toronto area.

"Most students criticize authority," Lynn Smith, a high-school field worker for the Ontario Union of Students, explained in an interview.

"They learn to see the teacher as the first step in the administration and he becomes an enemy. You have to learn how to play the game and you don't like it. But you're there and that's it."

This was Lynn's reaction when she was in Grade 9. But when some of her friends began to drop out of school in the next year or two she started to think that something should be done to change the educational system.

"Last year about 10 of us decided to try the idea of a union to see how students would react."

Lynn, who was a student at Scarlett Heights Collegiate in Etobicoke last year, has devoted all of her time to the union since September.

The organizers work by distributing leaflets to students describing the union in these terms:

"HUS hopes to evolve the student's role in the educational process to one in which he may give as well as receive. HUS's efforts will be for the majority but it can have no authority without the effort and participation of the individual."

Lynn feels that the high school program should be freed from restrictions in curriculum and ordering of classes so that the student will be able to pursue his individual interests.

"When the given 45 minutes of a class are over you are supposed to shut off that section of your brain. The bell rings and you have to stop," she explained.

"If he has an interest, the student should be free to follow it."

The classroom should be a place of free discussion between student and teacher without any artificial barriers between them, Lynn says.

"Students need teachers whom they can respect and work with as individuals. Both should feel free to discuss their points of view on an equal basis."

Teachers resent the enforced discipline as much as students do, Lynn has found.

"Last year, I sat down with one of my teachers and we re-designed the whole educational system as we would like to see it," she explained.

"We decided that there should be two-and-a-half hour discussion periods once each day to allow the student time for concentrated work. And we felt that getting rid of bells would help provide a more relaxed atmosphere."

Aside from the occasional student called down to the principal's office to be told of his stupidity in working with HUS, the union has not yet run into severe censure from any source, Lynn says.

Recently, the union sent letters to the Toronto boards of education asking that school supplies be sold at cost price in the schools.

The North York board made plans to meet with union representatives, Lynn said.

"But the Toronto board told us to mind our own business."

→ Ivey and Staeger joined in

As discussion proceeded both Dr. Ivey and Dean Staeger interjected their own opinions despite the protests of the speaker who said they were out of order.

Dr. Ivey attacked the speaker for what he called clouding the issue. He suggested the meeting be adjourned until a later time after everyone had thought out the issues. But council members said they needed an executive immediately.

Pat Armstrong (11 New) the resigned president, was nominated but refused to stand on behalf of the whole executive.

Finally, elections were held with the following results:

Elliot Markson was acclaimed as president, David Hoffman (11 New) won out over Ray Singer (11 New) as vice-president, Sue Reiss (11 new) is secretary and John Martin (11 New) is treasurer. Leslie Gary replaced David Grey (11 New) as elected representative on the New College faculty council.

After the meeting, James Dewell (11 New), the resigned publicity chairman, criticized Dean Staeger and Dr. Ivey for what he said was an unwarranted imposition on the debate.

"The tragedy," he said in a statement "is that by insisting we keep the present executive, they may well have prevented council from accepting a compromise, or even from undoing the whole business, impossible as that may be."

Argosy

Rimoin replies: "They all know the structure is lousy. They're just firing me because it's expedient."

CUP Vice-President John Kelsey, in a letter late Wednesday to advisory committee chairman Professor John Houtsma, said:

"The evidence we've got indicates The Argosy is not student-controlled, that your committee has implied censorship powers and the power to set policy, that the editor has been removed without due process, and the removal was not done by the students who appointed him."

The letter asks Houtsma to accept a CUP investigation.

"The question will be whether The Argosy can stay in CUP."

Both Dr. Cragg and student council President Tom Lowry have indicated they consider the advisory committee an impractical body and the matter closed.

sac in action

It was bound to happen; almost inevitable you might say.

If SAC kept making decisions, eventually they'd make one even the engineers could applaud. And yesterday SAC did it.

Yesterday afternoon, the SAC executive decided to contribute up to $5,000 of your money to a university-sponsored loan fund assisting students in financial distress due to the bureaucratic delays in processing the second installments of the POSAP cheques.

This could well be the most effective — and important — decision made by this year's council.

By this decision SAC has demonstrated to certain elements on campus that it is much more than a group of left-wing moralists making life easy for draft-dodgers and difficult for job-hunting engineers. Improving on the outdated 'service station' concept of student government, SAC has shown that it can act swiftly to provide help — in this case emergency short-term, interest-free loans — to needy students. And even those right wing engineers are eligible.

By this decision SAC also helped Simcoe

Hall stem the torrent of calls from students worried about the absence of their promised grants and loans. If this weren't enough, university officials have also been forced to contend with angry landlords wondering, quite naturally, whether this POSAP business is just a gimmick enabling some clever students to avoid paying their rent.

Now everybody concerned is just a little bit less angry. The students will receive some money, the officials will have fewer calls, and the landlords will get the rent.

Of course, SAC has also managed to administer an artfully delivered rebuke to university affairs minister William Davis.

The adult government failed to produce the Davis dole as promised, so the student government moved in to take up the slack.

Needless to say, Billy's Boys have not lacked excuses for the POSAP delays. Perhaps, they may reason, if they can't solve the problem, maybe they had better explain it away.

There were many more applications this year, they said. And we have to double-check that the students are still in school; can't waste POSAP on a drop-out, you know. Besides we're bureaucrats. You've got to expect us to act bureaucratically.

Perhaps, but in a government that spends money like it's going out of style, surely funds could have been found to hire extra staff for a few weeks to process the additional applications.

Students made silly mistakes on the loan forms, they said.

No doubt. Considering the complexity of those forms, we're surprised everyone outside Commerce and Finance or MPC didn't just give up in frustration. And next year, the forms are going to be even more difficult. POSAP will be a survival bonus, not student aid.

Students tried to defraud the government, they said. The old departmental smoke-screen resurrected. The provincial director of student aid says there are many cases of fraud. The deputy minister says the director doesn't know from nothing. Another deputy minister says the director does so know, but then so does the other deputy minister, so everything is just fine in Glocamora.

Except for those 15,000 students waiting for money.

For some students, the POSAP delay is nothing more than a minor headache. For others, it means complete financial collapse threatening their ability to finish the academic year.

We have heard of one University College student who has eaten nothing but crackers and skim milk since the middle of January. He expected the POSAP cheque to arrive on the promised date and arranged his budget accordingly. And now he's starving. We suspect his case is just one of many.

You may argue, as some undoubtedly do, that such students have no-one to blame but themselves. They should have expected some delays and planned their finances to allow for such a possibility.

Maybe. But to a student who hasn't the money for bread and board, let alone books and supplies, the cause of his misery is unimportant. He doesn't need pity; he needs some cash — and fast.

We congratulate SAC and the university wards officials for providing that cash.

We urge those students who need some immediate interim assistance to take advantage of this unexpected relief.

festival replies

Dear Sir:

I feel that Miss Penney's outburst in Monday's 'Varsity' merits a brief, if spirited reply. Miss Penney complained, in no uncertain terms, that she had been locked out of Convocation Hall 'by some surly bastard' (doubtless a Gestapo agent) and left to freeze in the drizzling rain on Sunday evening, while the 'Mothers of Invention' exploded some 2,000 minds inside the hall.

While we are sorry that Miss Penney was locked out, she did in fact arrive over half an hour after the concert began. It does not strike me as unreasonable that the doors should have been locked: few legitimate theaters or concerts leave their doors open for any length of time after the beginning of performance.

Miss Penney was annoyed at having been locked out, which is not difficult to understand. But in her outrage she cast aspersions on everyone working for the Festival, as well as the staff at Convocation Hall. Mr. Peter Scollock, the caretaker at the Hall, deserves a written apology from Miss Penney: to criticize him and the campus police in The Varsity takes very little courage indeed. Rather than contact any of the Festival organizers, whom Miss Penney knows personally, she chose to sensationalize and distort what was in fact a lapse of judgment on her own part.

As one of the Festival organizers, I can only say that we did everything possible to admit everyone who had a ticket to the concert. It is foolish to come to a concert half an hour late and expect an ushered entrance to a gellery seat. Even the O'Keefe Beer Garden would have politely turned her away. 'Surely bastards' we may be, but then we are the salt, not the honey, of the earth.

useless bookstore

Sir,

I am finally convinced that the special order section of the U. of T. Bookstore (textbooks) is useless. I have had two books on order since well before Christmas. To date no books have arrived. A colleague has had one of these books on order for about six weeks longer than I. Both of these books are standard editions of well known texts. In contrast, I ordered a book directly from the local office of a publisher only a week ago and the order has been filled already. This difficulty with the University Bookstore is nothing new for me. In addition, by ordering directly from the publisher I can get a 20% discount. Aside from inefficient ordering there is much room for improvement in the placing of books in the proper section of the Bookstore. For example, until I made a complaint a few weeks ago "Anatomy of Criticism" by Northrup Frye was located in the Slavic Literature section. A very close friend of mine was without this important book until she purchased a copy at Yale University because the Bookstore was allegedly "out of stock." I found Frye's book by accident while browsing through the Slavic Literature section trying to locate a novel by Gustav Flaubert.

The Bookstore is totally inadequate as far as I am concerned for such a large university. I wish SAC the best of luck if they start a bookstore because the one we have is not doing its job.

not my letter

Sir:

I take absolutely no responsibility for the letter bearing my name that appeared in the January 31st Varsity. I feel more than slightly sorry for an individual who lacks enough guts to sign his name to such a letter. Although I suspect that legal action could be taken against this individual whomever he is, it would only give more publicity to this person's puerile activities.

Ed. note: On checking the student directory we found that there are two "R. Nugents".

pharmacy and sac

Sir:

There has been reference in recent issues of The Varsity to the withdrawal of Pharmacy from the Students' Administrative Council. I do not intend to criticize anyone for inaccurate reporting, but I feel that a clarification of the situation is necessary.

SAC has swung toward the sensational this year, and their views have been those of the "New Left". To a large number of students in Pharmacy, those views are completely incompatible. To attempt to aid those who seek to avoid the draft in the United States, is to ridicule the laws of that country. There is equal lack of reason in attempting to bar a company from the Placement Service, because a tiny facet of it is connected with the Vietnam war. What is even more infuriating is that this attempt is being made not by those students who use the Placement Service, but by those who seldom, if ever, have occasion to use it.

These issues have been the immediate causes of dissent. What underlies it is the seeming inability of the present body to provide anything which will benefit us. SAC is supposed to be a unifying body on this campus. The only real unity comes from interfaculty and intercollegiate athletics. SAC does nothing in this regard. Course evaluations serve no useful purpose in a professional faculty. CUS and OUS serve no useful purpose. Indeed, any purpose which they may serve, SAC has been reluctant to explain. The present program to obtain representation on university governing bodies has been very poorly handled. There are still tremendous irregularities in POSAP. So few of the existing programs affect, much less benefit, Pharmacy that continued participation seems to be a waste of money, especially since our new national organization CAPSI (Canadian Association of Pharmacy Students and Interns) is struggling to get money to get started. Mr. Faulkner has said that the campus centre is the most concrete thing SAC is doing for professional students. It seems to be the only concrete thing.

I would like to point out that, just because I am a member of the Undergraduate Pharmaceutical Society, I am not making an official statement for it. However, there is sufficient unrest in Pharmacy that I have given notice for a motion to hold a referendum in the faculty to get an exact opinion on whether a move to drop out of the SAC is advisable, and the results of this referendum will determine any future action to be taken.

for the record

Bob Rae, one of the officials in charge of UC's (B)abel Festival took time out to set the record straight with regard to the 'Mothers' concert last Sunday.

In his letter, below, he points out that a previous letter-writer shouldn't gripe because she came late to the concert and the doors were locked.

Let's set it straight again: people who came early found the doors locked too. The organizers goofed somewhere and ticket-holders were locked out by a burly cop and an understanding fire marshal, both worried that Convocation Hall was packed beyond regulations.

If tickets are sold, there should be a place for all the people who bought them. Surely it wasn't the ticket holders' fault.

So here we are, baby, up tight, out of sight, writing about drugs. It seems like the kind of thing that you would have expected the Review to do fourteen months ago, the U.C. Festival to do a year ago, and The Star Weekly to con demn four months ago. (You guessed it. That's more or less what happened).

The point is that the fuss has died down. The messianic zeal appears to have subsided ... at least among us hip young trendsetters. This issue set out originally to take a deeper kind of look at what Howard Becker calls "recreational drugs"—and ended up tracing what has happened to "The Scene" in the year since the U.C. Festival. This is perhaps a shame; it would have been exciting to get an article by someone who has gone "beyond" drugs, into what the practitioners earnestly (an acid head would say the tone was contemptuous) call "serious meditation."

Of course, one can be pretty flip about that bag too. There is something faintly amusing about the Beattie-Maharishi-Mia Farrow chorus line.

If anything worthwhile comes out of this issue, it will be a refreshing tone of subjectivity about drugs. Some people tried them and liked them. Some people didn't and don't, or approve of those who do, or figure it's their own business. More important, (unfortunately there are none of them writing for this issue) there are quite a few who tried it and don't like the idea, or just don't see drugs as particularly productive.

Of course, there is a danger in this kind of passive "Ennhhh—everybody do his own thing" game. According to people in the Village, most of the marijuana and LSD in this town is going into the high schools. A friend of ours was mildly surprised when she found out from her younger brother in Grade 12 of a suburban high school that five people in his class were dropping acid—and more were smoking pot at noon-hour. The generation gap is below us, "baby".

In this issue, we present William Cameron, staff writer for The Star Weekly, and author of articles on David Depoe and STP interviewing himself to find out why he has never taken drugs, an anonymous (for obvious reasons) friend describing his changes in attitude towards drugs, Volkmar Richter on the new book on Perception '67, and Brian Cruchley on "the scene" now.

Q. Isn't this rather a pompous sort of thing to do? This self-interview bit? It's a pretty old bit. As bits go.

A. Yes.
Q. As a matter of fact, you can't even be honest with your holmuneulus can you?

A. Now who's pompous?

Q. Why have you never taken head drugs?

A. Because I haven't got the nerve. No. Because I didn't want to. Don't want to. I felt guilty about it for a long time — you're blocking certain possibilities in yourself, you lack the courage to face the possibility that you might be able to comprehend beauty and therefore have the responsibility of becoming a great writer which you don't want because it would demand all those sacrifices from your habits, which is where you prefer to live, and — well, you see? The question of drugs seems to bring up, seems to create, a sort of paranoia.

Q. That's an easy word.

A. That's why I used it. I meant that the idea of taking drugs, the idea that you would sit down and say to yourself, well, now I'm going to drop my acid and experience certain possibilities in myself, that would seem to indicate a certain amount of either paranoia or pomposity. That word again.

Q. You got it in first this time. Because you thought by saying it you would remove a certain strength from it.

A. Listen, even to talk about drugs indicates a certain amount of pomposity. Come to think of it, to attempt a position on anything indicates that you have at least the possibility of self-importance in you. As soon as you say something, you're ready to become a leader of that thought.

Q. Bullshit.

A. Yes.

Q. If you feel so strongly about drugs —

A. I don't feel strongly about drugs. I don't take them, that's all.

Q. Let me go on. If you feel anything about drugs, why do you write about them in mass magazines? Wouldn't you agree that a mass magazine blurs out the, the nuances, the, the how-do-you-say-in-your-language finer edges of an idea?

A. I'm a writer. I work for a mass magazine, a good one, by and large, and I don't feel that I have given up my possibilities of heaven because I do. Would you have me write only about things I do not think about?

Q. Wouldn't you sell more?

A. I might be more of an artist.

Q. There's the point you slid by earlier, and I admire your technique, sir, you steal all the dishonest bases—don't you feel that, by not taking drugs, by eliding the challenge of drugs, by changing the concept of your taking drugs into a magazine article in which you take money for publicly not taking drugs — are you not being in a certain sense a coward towards those possible events in you which might be crystallized when you did take drugs?

A. What??

Q. The real reason you don't take drugs is that they might show you things in yourself which would make you give up your nice cushy job.

A. I haven't killed myself, either.

Q. Come on.

A. If I'm an artist — and I don't concede that being an artist is more honourable than being what I am now — if I'm an artist, I would like to discover it with my own chemicals. I don't want anybody else's chemicals in my head. And that, I maintain, is an artist's point of view.

Q. You drink a lot.

A. I smoke a lot, too. Tobacco. And I have smoked grass — is that what they're calling it now? You're missing the point. I haven't got a consistent position. But I don't want anybody else's consistent position mapped into my head.

Q. Who do you think you are, anyway?

A. Norman Mailer.

G. F.

Acid is an individual thing. Acid trips go different places: terrible, indifferent, happy, it varies. That is the only thing you can say about the "acid scene." The wild mod flower-cult days never really existed. Not every-one grooves on flowers.

I dropped acid for the third time just before Christmas. After about three-quarters of an hour I was high. I saw moving patterns as if through a three-dimensional kaleidoscope. Music was very resonant and alive. I looked at myself in a mirror. I seemed very young except my eyes were old and tired. Then I curled up for a while on the couch and listened to what sounded like the machinery of my brain whirring and buzzing. It was actually the refrigerator.

I got lonely. I had been doing nothing all day except lying around and listening to records — so I called a few friends, but I wasn't very articulate.

Then I walked across campus, read the Bible for a while in the Hart House chapel (I found it difficult to concentrate) and finally visited an ex-girlfriend. I told her I missed her and then went home.

The next day I felt fine. Things seemed a little more in perspective, much as essays are less pressing after a sunny day of skiing, when you realize that university deadlines are only a part of being alive.

This wasn't the sort of trip I expected a year ago, although even at Perception '67 people like Paul Krassner were saying things like "a shmuck who drops acid is still going to be a shmuck."

The decision to take LSD was not very difficult. Let's face it: most of us would like to drop out of the world that makes half of its people walk around feeling frustrated or guilty, that makes it illegal to smoke pot or to drink beer after midnight; the world that is always dropping bombs on somebody, somewhere; the world where people ask you what you want to be and expect you to answer with a profession; where you take courses you don't want to take and write papers on subjects that you don't care about in order to get the BA that gives you a head start in business so you can make more money before you have your first heart-attack at fifty.

Perception brought to Toronto some very happily unrepentant drop-outs; people with beads and metal disks on their foreheads that shone like rainbows, people who walked around smiling and saying that they had found out something about who they were and love, which we sure as Hell badn't.

Up against this was the whole middle class American; Marchand kept Leary out of the country, the senate passed a Bill making articles like this illegal, the dailies gave stern warnings, and Prof. Hanley suggested we play hockey instead.

The sides have never been more clearly drawn. Like Mark Everson said at the festival, "we're all restricted to boo and horrah statements; those who have taken it and think it's great say hoorah, those who don't say boo." The people with more caution than curiosity stayed away; those who had more curiosity than caution turned on.

Most of us expected the Leary trip. We got our own. LSD is no magic carpet to soar above the bullshit into Faerie.

Since then most of us have realized there is no Faerie or if there is we all don't get there up the same gilded staircase. Just as there is a university game, a war game and a lawyer game there is an acid game. Some people fit as lawyers, some as acid heads. Some don't fit. So a lot of last year's heads have stopped playing the acid game; only a few have stopped playing the societal one. P. has: he likes the acid culture better than ours: it's gentler, kinder, and people are nearer to one another. It's less constructive but what use is construction if you have to be unhappy to accomplish it.

I play the student game and occasionally the acid game. Each is a good antidote for the other. Both are happy, frustrating, exciting and sometimes dull. Other people's trips are different. John Stern jumped off a bridge.

The day immediately after University College's quite self-conscious and institutional (B) abel festival. The mailman brings a reminder of the good times of the past. A bit of nostalgia that somehow manages to be in some kind of publishing vanguard.

The Art of Ecstasy is that almost-forgotten Marshall and Taylor Productions paperback on last year's festival, Perception '67, which if you read the newsreports dealt in large part with drugs, particularly the then-popular LSD. Perception was the festival form brought to a brief and very exciting climax. Some one even said relevant. Well, certainly up to date.

Perception's presentation of the most talked-out popular diversion in some years was a news-maker from beginning to the end; there was something absolutely immediate about it and made you feel that you were participating in something that was really happening and important. A sort of underground historical event.

Mssrs. William Marshall and Gilbert Taylor were keen observers at that weekend event because they used it for their researches on this document. Actually "researches" rather dignified what was done here, for the final product is pretty thin in content and fact (although, there are a lot of ideas suggested or mentioned here). Some of the information I'm sure is culled from popular magazines and newspapers—and that's why it's hard to call this research.

It's hard to escape the conclusion that Mssrs. Marshall and Taylor used the festival last year for a fast-selling exploitation piece. They saw the saleable interest in the topic of the festival and in good, true capitalist fashion, collected it and are now selling it for $4.50 for a 206-page paperback. Capitalism, after all, is 90 per cent innovation — getting there at the right time. (Actually, mentioning the price here is somewhat unfair, given Canadian publishing costs, potential market, photo costs, designers costs and the fact that the book is in part, much like an art book).

At any rate, Marshall and Taylor are of the interesting breed of opportunists that Canada is too short of. Around Toronto, these two have built a varied reputation recently. They operate a public relations firm, are involved in films and recently produced the successful play, Fortune in Men's Eyes. I think I also read somewhere they intend to produce a Broadway play.

The energetic twosome collected data at Perception and went off preparing a book. They got Sydney Katz to write the forward: "I commend this volume to laymen who have been left confused by the claims and counter-claims about the psychedelics. It will lessen their confusion and add to their understanding."

Katz in his near-scholarly recommendation, misses the point completely. What real information the book contains about LSD and other drugs is minimal, a sort of Life-magazine condensation of various strands of thought and various ideas. As a presentation of the psychedelic controversy—and remember the book is subtitled An Investigation of the Psychedelic Revolution — it is very thin in content.

This book comes on the scene after the hukster phase of the "revolution" has come to full $$$ flower. At the same time the whole psychedelic scene has changed considerably since this book was conceived.

For instance there's the impact of the genetic scare. It gets only a paragraph's mention in the book. But out there in real life, hippies who you might have been sure were so alienated from normal society that they wouldn't care about having kids — were terrified. LSD might have been a groove, man, but with that kind of danger, well, that's committing yourself to too much.

Then the scene went into the next phase, you know the really-hip-people-don't-need-drugs phase. It's pretty well still in that phase. People are still using it but they don't talk so much anymore. Its sort of like virginity: when they first lost it, they had to tell everyone about it. Now, they're more mature.

The genetic scare is pretty well over now too, now that Science magazine published a report done in San Francisco, which showed no abnormal chromazome breakage. Mice continue to split their genes in Buffalo and elephants suffer such damage if you give them LSD. These are the types of researches that have been done.

Elephants were given LSD in proportion to their body weight and showed frightful damage. But in administering the drug, the researchers should have given amounts in proportion to the brain weight.

To mention all this is to show the drug scene as it has developed since Perception '67. Users have become more knowledgeable about their chemicals. This year

Academic Press in New York published The Hallucinogens, an encyclopaedic study of Drs. Abram Hoffer and Humphrey Osmond, and expect a large sale among hippies. A year ago it was all drop and groove and nothing more.

Some users finally saw that because it's hip is no absolute reason for taking LSD. One friend told me, he got bored on a trip. It's not for everybody's mind you see.

Drs. Hoffer and Osmond take a very clinical approach to the study of drugs in their book. Mssrs. Marshall and Taylor obviously take the more mass-saleable approach to the study of able approach — the pursuit of pleasure approach.

M&T put a strong emphasis on the religious aspects ("pretensions?" they ask) of men such as Timothy Leary, the Neo American Church and others. If the layman is going to take Katz's advice and read this book, this religious aspect is what he should get out of it. Although the tactics used by Leary and his followers — you set yourself up as a minority group, see, and then shout discrimination — are not likely to gain layman's sympathy.

There's a strong initiative to show the Eastern philosophical strains that some drug users have been hearing. M&T carefully point out that over there, man was trying to achieve harmony with nature, while over here man was always battling nature to overcome it. Drugs have taken some of the technological pretensions out of the use very effectively. After all, if you were on acid and started thinking about God and the universe, you wouldn't find any great satisfaction for your answers either. Is it a supreme being that made it? No, that's not in vogue anymore. God is in everyone, because God is life.

The authors have kept a perfectly cool and impartial attitude ("Neither of us has taken the drug and we don't intend to, at least until after the publication of this book. This is deliberate, because, in balance, we defend the potential value of the psychedelic drugs, and the first criticism of the drug users is that they lose their objectivity and their findings are suspect. It is not essential to be hanged to have strong opinions about capital punishment.")

Martin Walsh, the graphic designer has taken a subjective approach, hitching the format of the book to the content. The combination of picturesque layout and effective photography is rather like advertising in its assault on two senses at once. It has about the same impact as a very effective art. The book also has similarity to advertising in that it is like a toy. There is literally something new every few pages.

A chapter on the psychedelic heroes — Leary to McLuhan — is done in a sharp-contrast, photo-text combination and looks like an advertising folder. This is followed by a grocery list (with very inadequate explanations) of some of the more popular turn-on agents. Every right hand page has a sort of mechanical mandala to distract your eye's corner and massage it a bit.

Defying their own dictum that newspapers have spread misconceptions about LSD, M&T have placed their factual articles, including the Alpert speech in a newspaper two-column layout. Leary's street-corner intensity is presented in a nice, large and easy flowing type. And that's the way it is all through the book: more news reports, photo pauses (including a fine spread on Perception), a section on LSD (the League for Spiritual Discovery) as religion ("God isn't dead, he's alive and well on another level of consciousness"), and the supreme achievement in this adman assault on the reader a fragmentary collection of quotations. Each is laid out in a style of type appropriate to the impact of its content. Some pound out at you in white-on-black reverse type; others are flowery, staid, pedantic, academic, poetic. Each page is a surprise as you come to it.

And that's why the book is somewhat of a game. Book has become a toy and in this The Art of Ecstasy has an ancestor in Marshall McLuhan's The Medium is the Massage. The total effect is similar to television documentaries: there is not much information, and usually not much depth, but there's impact.

Ads have done this for years, of course. There are people transposing these techniques to books. Is this one good? I don't know. It's the first one of its type I've read in detail. It was entertaining as I went through it and probably won't be for repeated readings — unless maybe in another consciousness. When the repeated readings fall flat, the book may become like a magazine, or perhaps like a Les Levine disposable. At that point the $4.50 price tag would hurt — if I had bought it, that is.

Bobby Hutcherson Quintet enralls Great Hall audience

By JACK McCAFFREY

Three years ago, when Bobby Hutcherson appeared at Hart House with Andrew Hill, half the audience walked out on him.

But on Wednesday night, the hordes who were packed into the Great Hall remained until the end, and cheered on the Bobby Hutcherson Quintet mightily.

The surprisingly appreciative crowd has Frank Zaid (IV APSC) to thank for the concert. Fighting the squares all the way down the line, Mr. Zaid had enough push to get some good musicians who threatened to play some music which most people would be unlikely to understand or dig.

Although the concert was pretty good, my own reactions were mixed. Both the acoustics of the hall and the nature of the music itself combined to make the concert something less than completely satisfying, to me at least.

All the musicians in the group are extremely proficient; but this does not guarantee great music. For instance, Joe Chambers, a very efficient technician, plays drums in a very busy way, constantly playing cross-rhythms, suggesting different metres and tempi, thereby creating an almost constant feeling of tension. Unfortunately, this unceasing barrage of percussion tends to obtrude into and obscure the music of the rest of the group. Occasionally, Chambers sounded like a clock gone berserk.

Hutcherson plays his instrument with great technical command and assurance. But on the fast pieces, due to the nature of the vibraphone, his melodic lines tended to sound like a hazy stream of undefined notes. Sometimes one could pick out interesting patterns, other times they just got lost in the mist. The leader's vibes were not loud enough, and his playing was too profuse much of the time.

Further adding to the difficulties were the acoustics of the Great Hall. Although they may be adequate for some kinds of music, they were unsuitable for Hutcherson's music, with its ethereal textures and its thick swarms of notes. Most of the time, many of the intricacies of the music had vaporized and were hovering just under the high arched ceilings by the time the sound waves reached even the third row.

One of the spectators remarked that the quintet was "half an avant-garde band and half a bebop band." Collectively and individually, the musicians sounded uncertain about which way they wanted to go. Spaulding (he of the saxophone and flute, not the golf ball) vacillated between a bop Benny Carter and a sort of modified Ornette Coleman-Eric Dolphy type. Alternating between chromatic exercises, complex bop patterns, and desperate shrieking high notes, Spaulding was unable to arrive at a coherent, integrated sound. In spite of these deficiencies, however, Spaulding was always in complete control of his instrument and occasionally reached some exciting high points.

In the selection of the music, the same conflict appeared. At one end of the spectrum was a piece written by the Jazz Crusaders (orthodox hard bop-funk); at the other was an attempt at a "free" piece. In between were several fast, rather abstract pieces which sounded very much the same, and a couple of slow, reflective pieces.

Besides the excellent work of bassist Reggie Workman, the most rewarding contribution came from Stanley Cowell, a superb pianist who plays thoughtfully conceived, well-developed lines with beautifully clear articulation. In spite of his motionless, rigid posture at the keyboard, which caused some people to suspect that he wasn't human, Cowell played with emotions fused with intelligence.

Although the concert was not a complete success, neither was it a failure. It was good, at any rate, to have the opportunity to hear Hutcherson's new group. And from the enthusiastic applause, it appears that Mr. Zaid did not labour in vain.

Artur Schnabel at 82: still a very great artist

By PETER GODDARD

There is something about the man. Or what we see of the man. Perhaps it's that unfeignable quality which some call weight and others majesty, and which only comes with age. His stage manner is straightforward, well bred, businesslike. He is a master of his instrument and finds no reason for attracting undue attention to anything else.

And yet, at 82, pianist Artur Schnabel, remains a geyser of energy, a complex character whose ineffable egoism makes up one outstanding trait, that of a very great artist.

Schnabel may lack some of Vladimir Horowitz' technique, Rudolf Serkin's heated cerebral approach, or the mystical attitude of Sviatoslav Richter. But there is something about the man.

In one sense, he is the last of the romantic pianists. He maintains a constant love affair with people, life and the piano, still, he exhibits a modern kind of romantic pianism. He treats the world like a grand seigneur; his playing reflects a culture, an exuberance, and even today, a healthy masculinity and athleticism that belies his age.

Schnabel was over seventy years old when he gave a marathon of ten Carnegie Hall recitals in one season. He considered these concerts as marking his twenty-fifth American anniversary, having made his re-entry into New York on November 21, 1937. Until then he had never been a headliner in America though he had played there since 1906.

"When I was young," he said a few years ago, "I was lazy. I had talent but there were many things in life more important than practicing. Good food, good cigars, great wines, women... When I played in the Latin countries — Spain, France, Italy — they loved me because of my temperament. When I played in Russia there was no trouble because my namesake Anton Rubinstein, no relation, had conditioned the audiences there to wrong notes.

"But when I played in England or America they felt that because they paid their money they were entitled to hear all the notes. I dropped many notes in those days, maybe thirty percent, and they felt they were being cheated." The audiences then were conditioned by the over-reaction made by many pianists to the excesses of the nineteenth century. Rubinstein remained unperturbed. "To hell with the German pianists and their exact fingers. Temperment! I was spoiled and I admit it. But as I have never played in Germany since 1914, I have at least escaped their criticism."

Nothing exceeds like excess. And in the early thirties, Rubinstein went through his own period of withdrawal, of re-definement of his position. "Musically speaking, I was leading a double life. At home, I was different man. I loved the classics, but I knew I could wow any audience with De Falla's Fire Dance. I was too little involved with the job I had to do, which was to develop my talent."

He married Aniela (Nela) Mlynarski and became a father a year later. "I didn't want people telling my child after I died," he recounted later, "What a pianist your father might have been!" He took a small cottage in southeastern France, practiced as much as nine hours a day and at 47, as he says, "I became a pianist."

This ability to grasp the grand design of any work is now at the core of Rubinstein's artistry. Rubinstein searches for unifying factors.

"I like to look up over the piano, he has been quoted as saying, "so I can listen and follow the lines of the piece... looking at your fingers for accuracy is too confusing. I'd rather

In an article in the New York Times (1960), Rubinstein wrote:

... "I heard quite a bit of Chopin during my childhood in Poland — mazurkas, polonaises, nocturnes, the whole beloved repertoire. All of it was played interminably, and most of it badly. Why badly?

"In those days both musimarily alerted the audience to the fact that they were listening to the music of Chopin.

"What was the result of what I considered conscientious work? My interpretation was adjudged "dry". The audience and critics, it turned out, preferred the "good old Chopin" they knew from before — the mythical Chopin.

"By the time I came to America four years later to make my New York debut, I felt I was a dedicated, deep-minded, well-educated musician. Technically, however, I did not feel well equipped. What happened? The critics said that technically I was "impeccable" — but lacking in depth! And also, as had happened in Europe, I was chastened for my "severe" interpretations of Chopin.

"Stubbornly I continued programming Chopin in my concerts. And stubbornly the critics continued to criticize. Oh, yes, it was admitted subsequently, I could play Spanish music, and I certainly could play Ravel and Debussy. But Chopin? No.

"Only very much later was the validity of my interpretation granted. Only then was I permitted to have my Chopin and to give him to audiences..."

In Chopin's nocturnes two elements are paramount; the long, sinuous bel canto-like melody line, and rubato, either implied or stated in the score. So too, with Rubinstein's. In these works carefully delineates the melodic line, bringing it out sufficiently above the accompanying left-hand figures. But Rubinstein's rubato, requires a different explanation.

miss a few notes than play by phrases instead of as a whole." And of all the pieces in his current repertoire, it is Rubinstein's Chopin that benefits the most from this attitude.

For his latest recordings of Chopin Nocturnes (RCA Victor LM or 7050, $11.58, two discs) the pianist's sturdy, masculine approach is not so much changed as elaborated on. Here, the mood is even more subdued than on previous recordings; tempos are slower if anything, the inflections, a bit more mature. In this collection of nocturnes are none of the artificialities, either excess frigidity or hysteria, that render so much of the contemporary Chopin playing unsettling.

cians and the public believed in the Chopin myth, as do many people today. That myth was a destructive one.

"Chopin, the man, was seen as weak and ineffectual; Chopin, the artist, as an irrepressible romantic — effeminate if appealing, nipping his pen in moonlight to compose nocturnes for sentimental young women.

"Pianists whose heads were filled with such nonsense had to play Chopin badly..."

"At my next recital (about 1902) I included Chopin and presented him nobly, I hoped, without sentimentality (sentiment, yes!), without affectation, without the swan dive into the keyboard with which such pianist custo-

Broadway play flounders in dullness

By K. KLONSKY

A flaccid organ, a couple of goodamns, a slew of hells, a screw, and a complete lack of metaphor combined with a group of uninteresting losers are the ingredients of a new and successful Broadway play. Robert Anderson's You Know I Can't Hear You When the Water's Running opened at O'Keefe Center Monday night to the delighted squeals of titillated Torontonians.

The production is actually a group of four separate but related plays. The first play, "The Shock of Recognition", is the study of a man (Eddie Bracken) who is auditioned for the lead role in a play in which he must walk on to the stage, toothbrush in hand, completely naked, and scream to his wife: "You know I can't hear etc." The writer of the play (Robert Elston), wants a man with a pathetic body and matching genitalia. Richard Pawling (Bracken) is perfect but the "guts" writer becomes squeamish when Pawling begins to undress in the producer's office.

This bit of senselessness is followed by another dullish mork, "The Footsteps of Doves," which continues to reassure the audience that all mature Western males, not only themselves, are thoroughly ineffectual. Harriet (Ruth Manning) wants to buy twin beds but poor George (Bracken) wants "the good old fifty four" for sixty nine. At the department store, Jill (Susan Bracken) a young divorcee, comes down to bounce on beds just when Harriet has temporarily left George alone. George lies down with Jill on the double bed and he feels some of the old zest revive in him. He makes a play for the young temptress and is promptly shot down. Jill leaves; Harriet returns; Spot jumps. George now prefers twin beds with the gulf in between. He will give his old double bed to Jill and hope to sleep with her. Good luck!

The third tale is another flat bag of Black Comedy, "I'll Be Home For Christmas." Chuck (Bracken again) finds that one of his sons masturbates, his daughter is no longer a virgin, his other son rejects his way of life, and his wife has been unfaithful while he went on business trips. The most humiliating aspect of his life is that while he went on these trips he was faithful to Edith and he himself spent his time masturbating in motel rooms. His problems stem from the fact that he has never had the nerve to communicate with his wife and children so he has lost them all in the interim. The third play ends in a lake of self-pity, remorse, and tears.

The final play gives Bracken a chance to sit in the wings and win back his decimated ego. "I'm Herbert" is an empty-headed cycles of chatter between two old codgers, Herbert (Robert Elston) and Muriel (Ruth Manning). Good and bad memories are hopelessly confused, names lost, places forgotten, but, in the end, Herb and Muriel still have each others bands to hold. Sex is merely a memory, and seems more pleasant for being so.

A more apt piece of anti-bourgeois propaganda could not have been written by a Chinese Communist. The middle-aged, middle-class American is again helplessly stripped of all self-respect and vitality. Whether Anderson himself is in on the joke is questionable but the flood-brained individuals who laughed hysterically should have been crying for their lost existence. Rigormortis has set into the American stage and with that stage goes a whole generation.

the acid party's over, baby... it's not the same anymore...

"You know, it just isn't the same anymore," said the die-hard acidhead as he counted his white and green pills.

"Last year, the trips lasted all day and all night and now they only last all night—everybody's taking acid like candy. I even heard that Leaside High School kids are tripping in class."

U of T 1967—Things were really happening around University College. Allan Kamin and Jane Markowitz organized an arts festival called Perception '67 and almost monopolized the Toronto mass media for three weeks.

People were tripping on their first, second or third acid. They were excited, mesmerized, scared and completely stoned. They were reading The Psychedelic Experience and other LS Disneyland propaganda by superheads Metzner, Alpert and Leary.

They were programming poetry on tape and playing it during their trips. They were getting a good night's sleep and then dropping around lunch-time.

They always had the right books, the right records, plenty of groovy things to eat and of course, the mandatory guide. Being alone on acid was uncool; it was sure to put you in The Clarke Institute.

Acid culture U of T Feb. 1967 had a lot of rules but none was more binding than "thou shalt not trip alone."

Perception '67 was happening in Convocation Hall with Krassner, Alpert, Ginsberg, The Fugs. The atmosphere was defiant; it almost had a martyr complex; New York's underground descended on U of T like a bunch of Yorkville hippies staging a sit-in in Allan Lamport's living room.

That was one year ago. That was the era of Psychedelic Bullshit at the University of Toronto.

Drug culture U of T Feb. 1968 is a different scene. Acid is no longer the unchallenged ultimate freak-out.

STP, cocaine, codeine, mescaline, cough syrup, various tranquilizers for manic depressives, and other things are being used and are often putting acid down from its position as number one high.

But LSD use increases, not so much because more people are taking it, but because the die-hard acidheads are taking it more often and in larger quantities.

Grass has been voted all-round most popular practical drug for the 3,458th year in a row.

People are choosing acid over grass like an engineer chooses vodka over beer.

Nobody wonders if his acid is Owsley anymore (it's hard to find some that is reputed to be otherwise) or how many micrograms he is dropping.

"You just drop it and see what happens. If not enough is happening you might try a little grass to rush things along or if that fails a little more acid."

The religious aspects of psychedelic movement are withering. Tim Leary has dropped out of his revered position as Head-Head of the League for Spiritual Discovery. And meditation has gone commercial with Maharishi Yogi Baby conning Mia Farrow.

With the radical activist politicians displacing the dope-smokers in the mass media and the long-awaited rash of campus drug busts still a low priority item for the RCMP narks, many acidheads are becoming disillusioned with their lack of alienation and are dropping back in.

"Man, I had the weirdest high over the holidays—I got smashed on booze—two drinks and wow—a real body high."

SOCIOLOGIST OF DEVIANCE

All this psychedelic shop talk and particularly the references to drug culture are for the purpose of introducing America's outstanding research sociologist in the field of deviance—Howard Saul Becker.

Becker is presently at Northwestern University and plays jazz piano as a hobby.

He is 40 years old, looks five to ten years younger, has a slight light brown beard and he isn't too fussy about haircuts.

He worked his way through college playing the piano. Last week he was at the New Psysics Building lecturing on LSD and marijuana. Sounds subversive, doesn't he?

Howard Becker is also the author of the book that is probably the best prescribed reading on the Sociology 120 course. His book is Outsiders, subtitled Studies in The Sociology of Deviance.

One of Becker's strong points about sociological research is that one has to be an insider in relation to outsiders in order to study the outsiders and their deviance in a more meaningful perspective.

A NEW APPROACH

In the introduction to a book of essays he edited, The Other Side: Perspectives on Deviance, Becker points out that for many years the study of deviance lost its connection with the mainstream of sociological theory and research. It became a practical pursuit devoted to helping society deal with those it found troublesome.

"Why do they do it?" was a typical concern in the study of deviance.

However Becker's work has changed the study of deviance. It is now approached as an interactive process between deviant and non-deviant. And instead of restricting themselves to conventional outsiders like drug addicts and juvenile delinquents, deviance researchers are now studying other sociological entities like physicians and the physically handicapped and their peculiar cultural norms which make them outsiders when compared with the rest of society.

INTERACTION

But what is this business of comparing outsiders with an amorphous entity called "the rest of society," the non-deviants.

U of T political scientist Gad Horowitz provided some insight into this matter in last week's (B)abel session on "Americrap."

In essence Horowitz said "the rest of society" is some sort of conformist stereotype whose norms many of us strive for. But we all differ from the stereotype in some way and in that particular way we can be considered to be "alienated" in Horowitz's terminology, or "outsiders", in a general interpretation of Becker's terminology.

In his lecture at the New Psysics Building, Becker said what is really interesting in studying deviance is the examination of the culture of a group of outsiders and how this culture interacts with larger cultures.

This discussion broadens philosophical questions when the focus is introduced to outsiders from society.

When the government and educational authorities view the psychoses of LSD as easy for them to handle, that the drug is sane and therefore side their own cut they presume to be sane.

Consequently, groups like the fiends are uncomfortable, not when they say

● "That was a lie" (usually talking Fellini or Goddard films).

● "Melvin is in a ring about a fellow whose actions are no more unusual than theirs).

● "You've got your mind to be confused" (Tim Leary about things in often cut with speed and standardization of the drug is a complex, sophisticated procedure which would probably diminish the acid-pushers' profits.)

In addition Becker said it would be difficult to predict an acid culture because the drug is being introduced at the level of middle class college students whereas marijuana was introduced among musicians Mexicans and Negroes, social groups that are often considered outsiders in certain senses. This factor will have an unpredictable effect on the evolution of the culture.

At U of T, the evolving acid culture has clung to the edges of the much larger marijuana culture and there is considerable interaction between the two.

While it is difficult to describe the acid culture, it is not difficult to describe in general terms some of the changes it has undergone within the last year.

While few females indulged in acid trips last year, probably fewer plan on trying it now because of the chromosome damage-freaky-baby syndrome. This syndrome, while it has scared the hell out of the girls, has had little effect on the boys who comprise at least 90 per cent of the users.

LOSS OF FAITH

Probably the most significant change the culture has undergone is its disillusionment with the gospel according to Timothy Leary.

Last year a novice tripper could expect flashing lights, excessive body energy, spiritual insight and super-sensory involvement in the whole world. Now all he can count on is dilated pupils.

Last year acidheads read all the crap in Life magazine and the psychedelic textbooks and believed it and if the prescribed vibrations didn't happen, something was wrong with the individual acidhead, not the acid.

Many trippers found themselves conked out for days after a mild dosage because during their trips they overworked their senses desperately attempting to experience what was supposed to happen.

A booze hangover can be a real drag but an acid hangover can be a frightening ordeal while you wait for your over-extended consciousness to contract. Booze gives you a headache the next day.

Acid can give you visions of your deceased relatives, whispering voices in the night and hyper-paranoia. Like an inverted trip.

But this doesn't happen anymore because acid just isn't such a big deal.

Acid-dropping is impulsive, undisciplined but generally a lot more fun for everyone today. A general attitude is developing that psychedelic drugs, like booze, are recreational, but vastly superior. There is less disdain among acidheads for the hedonistic or escapist booze-user as the acidheads themselves realize that their motives for taking drugs include pleasure and uninhibited relaxation.

Tim Leary and the psychedelic forefathers promised a cure-all and inspirational genius in LSD-25. Everyone got stoned and waited for it to happen. When it didn't they rejected Leary and made a more realistic appraisal of the situation.

NICE TO BE HIGH

But despite these disillusionments LSD use continues to be enjoyed for the simple reason that it's nice to be high.

With due respect for the acid culture, the concept of being high will not be aborted in an attempt to reduce it to the two-dimensional printed page.

The concept of a chemical-induced high is the basis of acid culture. The concept of high must be comprehended in its own culture by any sociologist who is attempting to relate to the rest of society a meaningful study of deviant acidhead outsiders.

In other words a sociologist attempting a study of LSD, must first experience it, if he is to grasp the full implications of the interaction of deviant and non-deviant in producing acid culture.

validity of these concepts diminishes (which was probably highest during Perception '67), so does the acidheads reverence of their own drug culture. This is partially why LSD's power and reputation is being questioned and why the chemical is being accepted more as a drug and less as a sacrament.

THE PSYCHOSIS AS FACTOR

The entire nature of the LSD culture at U of T is also changing as its members, through experience, understand the drug more fully, and as more diverse and foreign elements (like relatively straight people) are introduced into the culture.

Becker pointed out in his lecture that any new deviant culture is likely to have a high incidence of psychoses when its members are still pioneering unknown realms of experience.

For example about three years ago there were many alleged LSD-induced psychoses that often led to suicide.

The police were unsure of the drug and probably magnified alleged abuses of the drug well out of proportion. Also the great majority of potential acidheads had to rely on the mass media for their education in LSD.

Over the past several months the situation has stabilized and there have been few instances of LSD suicides, when, paradoxically, probably more LSD is being consumed than ever before.

THE MARIJUANA PATTERN

The early history of marijuana reveals that this drug was used medically for nervous symptoms before about 1920. Thereafter marijuana became a "recreational drug" (Becker's term for a drug that induces pleasurable sensations and is not used for medical purposes).

During the 1920's and 1930's many marijuana-induced psychoses, similar to the recent LSD-induced psychoses, were reported.

However today the social norms of the marijuana culture are well-established. Within the group setting of the culture the novice pot-head receives reliable knowledge and guidance in the use of the drug so the possibility of freak-outs is minimal.

Becker felt it would be difficult to predict an LSD culture. The drug is still relatively unexplored (compared to marijuana) and even the concept of what is a proper dose has not yet evolved. (This is difficult to ascertain because commercial acid is member of the Party in 1921. He celebrates Canada's one hundredth birthday with this book on the impact of the Bolshevik Revolution of 1917 on Canada. Mr. Buck notes that 1967 is also the fiftieth anniversary of the Russian Revolution. (Let's face it, had Moscow not refused the opportunity, there never would have been an Expo 67 in Montreal.)

The book's main thesis is that there has been a striking correspondence between the state of Canadian-Soviet relations and democratic progress in Canada since 1917, a progress indebted to the Bolshevik Revolution. Through his book, Mr Buck relates the growth of radical, political agrarian and labour groups, and discusses the influence of the Communist regime upon them.

Mr. Buck finds a direct relationship between the successful revolution and the successful political bids of the Farmer-Labour parties after 1919, first rising in Ontario and then sweeping across the West. He describes the various Agrarian and Labour conferences which were held across the country, and the bitter fighting about strategy for the movement which went on within the Unions and within the Canadian Socialist Party which Buck denounces as revisionist.

The increasing labour agitation culminated in the Winnipeg Sympathetic General Strike. The strike was repressed by government troops and the attempt to organize labour in one combined unit broke down. It was in this atmosphere that the Communist Party of Canada began to emerge, beset on every side by the agents of the R.C.M.P. These agents tapped telephones and pilfered mail so well that even the New York Times was moved to observe that, "Our laws here may be different from those in Canada. Certainly the sanctity of the mails would not be interfered with here without civil war."

The party itself was founded in the middle of June 1921 in a barn outside of Guelph and soon became a member of the Comintern. From that time till the present, the party has revealed an aptitude for political failure which Mr. Buck does not even attempt to review or explain. He does not even mention the few notable successes of the Party in Union organization, which were not ultimately turned back until the late 1950's.

It is the interpretation of Canadian history and the overestimation of the Communist influence in Canadian politics which is most intriguing The Liberal defeat of 1917, the sending of Canadian interventionist troops to Russia in 1919, the Canadian rejection of the British proposal to seize the Dardanelles in 1922, the Liberal Party's choice of MacKenzie King (and his policy of national Medicare) in 1919, and his subsequent election as Prime Minister, are all decisively influenced in Buck's view, by the October Revolution in 1917. His lines of connection, however, seem just too strained and tenuous to be believable when set against the background of the many other factors which acted on these events.

Buck sees a continued link of sympathy for Moscow today in the rejection by the Canadian Labour movement of the irresponsible adventurism promulgated by the Communist Party of China. Our historic task of today in conjunction with the ever advancing Russian revolution, is to free Canada from United States domination, and to prevent U.S. imperialism from plunging mankind into nuclear war.

In 1918, as related by Mr. Buck, a group of reactionary gentlemen broke up a meeting which he was addressing in Guelph. These men then conveyed Mr. Buck bodily to a narrow parapet overlooking the river Speed. They then definitely flung him therein. I am afraid that I can only wish our Communist friend Mr. Buck, as no doubt did those gentlemen, a hearty "God Speed", in search of a more objective and ideologically independent interpretation of his subject.

Chopin's prescription for rubato-playing (the 'slowing-down' of the music at artistically desirable places) is almost word-for-word Mozart's prescription for playing an accompanying melody. That is, the pianist's right hand should take liberties with time values, while the left remains rhythmically unaltered. (A comparable effect can be heard in good blues singing.)

Rubinstein's method is in line with the Viennese waltz-style, in which liberties in the melody lines are followed exactly by those in the accompaniment. In these nocturnes we see Rubinstein the romantic. He keeps the music surging, one never senses a possible collapse or lack of momentum; but the result, for all of the pianist's otherwise text-book accuracy, is more Rubinstein than Chopin.

Analyse as you might. The feeling that you are left with, both after listening to the record or talking with him, is that you have met a segment of history that has eluded time. There's just something about the man.

PHIL OCHS

Ochs: Personal Vision

By VOLKMAR RICHTER

So back about two years ago Toronto had a frequent visitor in one Mr. Phil Ochs and delighted in "Here's To the State of Mississippi" and "Cops of the World" and "Santo Domingo." Darling of the committed (the New Left or Progressive Labor or anyone who happened to latch on), Ochs said he got calls every half-day to sing at benefits. He couldn't make them believe that when he didn't answer the phone it wasn't so much a refusal as an escape. Ochs escapes when necessary.

"Changes" signalled it all with its nicer and softer tune; imagination in the not (immediately) political words and evocative feelings in its images. "And that's only the beginning of the songs I've got now," he tried to press upon a fellow guest at a party once.

The new bag contains allusive and much more subtle songs that deal with his real mind and not the superimposed political mind. The first eight are neatly packaged into a fast-selling A&M album, Pleasures of the Harbor (SP 4133). (At his March 22 Massey Hall concert he won't be doing any of the old stuff, I am told second-hand by the promoter.)

"I've been away for a while but I hope to be back again soon," he wrote on the LP back—"away" on a year's thinking and writing sababatical He also wrote: "... a village full of tarts who say you must protest, you must protest it is your diamond duty."

The truth is that the political Ochs wasn't phoney by any means; he's just moved up from a number three to at least a number four—in his writing; as a person he's been past that for a long time. The truth is also that Ochs is a compulsive Dylan-chaser, maybe not in the particular, but in the general. Hence: "...in such an ugly time the true protest is beauty."

So, now we have the more real Ochs on an LP, with some of his own hang-ups, not just the world's. Every dream is bending into a nightmare; every worthwhile thing and woman has been bad; with pleasures in the harbor as brief and unthinking as Miranda, and you know she doesn't claim to understand why. "She's Rudolph Valentino fan" and "bakes brownies for the boys in the band." Miranda is a marvellous escape from (or to) ego and disillusionment. And more and more people are retreating into personal enclosures.

There are times in these fully packed sides when you'll hear poetry. "Floating in her flattery" is typical but better than typical Ochs alliteration; "she promises to talk to you if you promise not to think" is typical Ochs humor; "he's trembling for the taste in passions gone to waste in memories of the past" is newly-revealed Ochs sensitivity and

When Leonard Cohen walked out on to the stage of York University's Burton Theatre last February, he crouched at the front of the stage and lit six sticks of incense. I felt slightly uncomfortable. I had come to listen to a poet, not to be entertained by a self-proclaimed mystic.

I remember him mumbling into the microphone something about pain, and then something to the effect that the City Muffin Boys would not be appearing that night. There were a few cheers from the audience. And then he led the crowd of almost 100 university students in a simple chant that was sung over and over for about ten minutes. The words were simple: "No it wasn't any good, There's no reason why you should, Remember me."

I had a few hang-ups of my own at the time. The next day I was to flee my own city, hitch-hiking to Montreal for a reading week that would see me do no reading. As I sat near the front of the theatre that night, I was a little afraid that Cohen was going to remind me of why I was fleeing. What I really wanted from him was a reading of his beautiful love poems from The Spicebox of Earth, and that was all. I wanted my faith restored, so I could leave for Montreal the next morning feeling better than I did that night.

He sang and read for over three hours. Somewhere in the middle of his concert, he read a sequence of Spicebox poems. But by that time they seemed almost like a distant oasis of green and yellow as seen from a desert of emptiness which I did not enjoy feeling inside me. I went to Montreal quite depressed.

There was nothing phoney about what Cohen was doing that night. The guts that he was spilling all over the wooden floor of the stage were real; there was neither overstatement nor melodrama in his songs. The deep sensitivity that is revealed in his eyes and in his poetry is genuine. If it sometimes seems otherwise to us, that is only because it is natural for us to minimize our own feelings. Depressions are messy.

"Leonard Cohen is an honest man," noted Marilyn Beker in The Review last year. Perhaps he is also a fallen saint. His words assert their own naked sensuality, whether they are gentle, as in Spicebox, or terrifying as in Beautiful Losers. The kids in that audience knew that they were being touched, and Cohen sensed the rapport. I remember feeling that to applaud as he finished each song was somehow irreverent, not so much to Cohen, as to myself. When he ended his concert with "Dress Rehearsal Rag", I could not take any more.

Songs Of Leonard Cohen was released last week by Columbia Records. This is Cohen's pathos; "tell me every detail for I've got to know it all and do you have a picture of his name" is—like the famous Krassner piece—Ochs satire.

Two years ago these songs were ahead of their time. They are allusive and abstract and Ochs talked of the album he would make with strings and changing accompaniments. The arrangements are perfect, complimenting the words and the singer perfectly. Ochs singing has even become better in its expressiveness and its control.

Now that the technical side of the recording industry has caught up, though, the songs are behind the best of today.

There's his technique to blame. His songs still contain those occasionally embarrassing lines such as: "the rewarding of his fame is the following of the man." And there right in the centre of the Crucifixion, the messiah is called the "hero of the game."

Ochs value is that of the new journalistic art, the detached descriptions of "Pleasures in the Harbor," "The Party," "I've Had Her.—" they don't have a point as such, but just like some of Dylan's descriptions and In Cold Blood, this is a contemporary art gaining increasing favor.

They contain social criticism sometimes, and occasionally Ochs still dabbles in the frankly protestive ditty, eg. Outside a Small Circle of Friends, but even these are protest songs on one level only." Nobody's Buying Flower's From the Flower Lady" is the most protesting song on the LP but even it is an escape to more natural things. This is not to suggest that Ochs songs are all that complex or abstract. Most rely on his sharp and witty eye for details and his ability to capture the flavor of an event for their effect.

Of course, then there's the Crucifixion, a song of messianic Kennedies and Christs played out against the almost unbearably tense electronic sounds. This is Ochs' personal vision of it all; far different from John Lennon's vision of similar thoughts in I Am the Walrus.

But in two or three of the songs, the accompanying voices and instruments are allowed to dominate the sensitivity of Cohen's melody and words. The mood of these songs is destroyed and their meaning distorted. "Hey, That's No Way to Say Good-Bye" is backed by a silly irritating chorus of "Bum-da-da-da-da-dum's." "Sisters of Mercy", which is a gentle, lyrical song, is made to sound like the kind of music you might hear in the Bavarian Beer Garden at EXPO, or emanating from a merry-go-round at your local carnival. It's tinny, commercial, and cheap.

The mood created by Cohen's honesty is important to his songs, just as it is important to his verse and to his novels. Leonard Cohen bleeds. Much of what he sings expresses anguish and hurt; yet it is his understanding of this pain which leaves him open to the rare and redeeming moments of love which he sings of so tenderly, as in "Suzanne."

All of the songs on this album are moving. Only "Stranger", — which is perhaps his best song — is free from any accompaniment to cut sharply through the shit that we call our defense mechanisms, and to touch us as Cohen touched his audience at Burton Theater last year. The nakedness of his voice and his words asserts its own feeling and potency. All of the songs in the album should have been recorded in the same way.

Songs of Leonard Cohen, is far from a failure. What Columbia forgot to include was the incense.

Bugging The Establishment

By JOHN LONNSBROUGH

"Paul Newman just bugs the Establishment as Cool Hand Luke", proclaim the ads. Or: "What we've got here is a failure to communicate" (with an accompanying picture showing a guard flogging a prisoner). "The Establishment" and "lack of communication" are two phrases enjoying a great deal of gratuitous usage in this present age of the anti-hero. People apparently forget that "The Establishment" (who after all MAKE the films, right baby?) is more often than not playing them for suckers in the process of cashing in on their fluctuating tastes.

I mention this because I knew a little about the subject matter of Cool Hand Luke (at the Imperial) before I went to see it and I had awful visions of yet another one of those fashionable sagas spilling off the witless and slightly pernicious philosophy that all cops are rotten as hell and the prisoners are just 'bout the nicest guys you'd ever want to meet! Cool Hand Luke disappointed me which is to say it surprised me by not living down to my expectations.

Instead the story, set in the Deep South, offers Newman as Luke Jackson a chance to deliver one of his best characterizations in years. His Luke is one of the most truly existential screen figures to have come around in a long time (see Mel Bradshaw's review of The Stranger which gives us perhaps the definitive existential anti-hero). Luke is arrested for removing the tops of parking meters while out on a bender and is packed off to a prison farm where the routine is road-gang work by day and boredom in the evenings. That is, until Luke arrives. From then on, the boredom of the inmates is alleviated by the vicarious pleasure they receive at watching Luke begin more and more to harass the guards or, in Warner Bros. Seven Arts parlance, "bug the Establishment".

The manner in which he gradually becomes the dominant figure in the lives of the prisoners is effectively drawn by co-writers Donni Pearce and Frank R. Pierson. He becomes a symbol of hope for them through his efforts to escape. When, however, after his second unsuccessful attempt and a thorough going-over by the guards, he decides to play the Establishment game by Establishment rules, to cooperate with the prison authorities, his comrades desert him. He has let them down; he has failed them.

For Luke, it is not simply a matter of being against the authorities. He is against ALL Establishments be they amongst the keepers or the kept. This is dramatized by his stubborn refusal, upon arrival at the camp, to just naturally kow-tow to the accepted leader of the convicts, a dense but burly fellow named Dragline. Possessing no clear definition of self or aims, Luke only knows that he doesn't like anything that confines or limits him. His is a minute by minute existence with any obstacle placed in his way being certain of his resistance. The Newman character is established piece by piece as the film progresses so that the tragic conclusion, when it comes, is seen as almost inevitable.

The supporting cast perform uniformly well under Stuart Rosenberg's astute direction but particularly good are George Kennedy as Dragline and Jo Van Fleet as Luke's dying mother. Kennedy creates a sympathetic character out of material that could have degenerated into mere oafishness; his presence in the final scenes gives them the special poignancy they have. Miss Van Fleet makes her first and only appearance lying in a makeshift bed at the back of a truck. She is on the screen for only about five minutes but she makes those minutes count.

CHANTAL GOYA AND JEAN-PIERRE LEAUD IN MASCULIN-FEMININ

Godard: Gesture and Paradox

BY DAVID PAPE

There is much to be said for and about Masculine Feminine (1965), the latest of Jean-Luc Godard's films to reach Toronto.

Everything about the film is vastly different from Pierrot. There is no colour, no escape to the country, no hacking around in fantasy roles, on redundant symbolism. Cinematically and thematically the film pretends to be simple and direct.

Scenes take place in bath-rooms, kitchens, subways, restaurants. The camera does not explore descriptively, but remains for up to ten minutes in one position. The dialogue is not snappy, but slow, hesitant, and non-conclusive. Violence is seldom shocking, often unemphasized, almost un-noticed. People are urban, uncommunicative, awful, real.

The framework flashes on in the first seconds of the films, 'Fifteen precise facts'. A bullet zings by. Supposedly the facts are as deadly and unavoidable as the slugs that punctuate the movie.

One paradox is that to depict the hard-hitting cruelty of Paris life, 1965, one must also depict its tedium. As well as presenting the aspects of violence and revolution; one must enter the capitalist plea to "give us our car, our t.v., etc., but deliver us from liberty." Thus the violence is sudden, unprepared for, an unexpected intrusion on the "children of Marx and Pepsi Cola."

The acting too is deceptively simple. There is little place for 'the revealing gesture' when the camera picks up every gesture. One take of Miss Nineteen being interviewed lasted about ten minutes. The camera held the same position throughout, just as she tried to hold the same smile throughout. Chantal Goya as the lead actress, Madeleine, is charming beyond words; while Jean Claude Léaud as Paul, her lover, is amazingly honest, and with little effort really does convey a tremendous range of mood.

But always we have the feeling of banality, of a documentary. The information is gathered, we must do the editing. Like the philosopher, the film maker attempts to regard the world with total objectivity. This means that he must not shape, that he must be indifferent. Thus from the story he draws no moral; with the camera he influences no opinion. When he is not detached (ie. in his cutting), he is so to make us detached.

This is the second paradox of the film. I don't think anybody leaving it will feel that what they have seen was dull; because it is a brilliantly paced movie. Least of all will they think it is true to the caption: fifteen precise facts. We feel anything but a precise comprehension of what has happened.

In fact, any attempt to reduce experience to precise units for analysis is the central myth that the film explodes. This isn't to say the film is a mish-mash. It's not. It just tries very hard to appear both precise and formless.

The story is simple. Paul meets and falls in love with Madeleine. Despite mutual inexperience he gets her pregnant. In the meantime she cuts a smash hit record. Robert Paul's socialist friend fails to make it with both Madeleine's room-mates because one is crazy about Paul and the other is crazy about Madeleine.

Yet the title tries to reduce a complex interplay of young people of psychological symbol: Masculine Feminine. Not even masculine and feminine. Even the categorical words, however, are subject to reduction. Masculine contains the words "mask" and "ass". Robert quips that feminine contains "nothing". The introduction prints the first label "ma-scu-line": the conclusion blasts away the better part of feminine to leave "f...in."

While the general divisions, then, are subject to repeated breakdown, the matter of the film remains amorphous. We don't have the story of Paul and Madeleine so much as we have "what happens." Often we don't see what we want, while Paul brushes his hand against a stacked blonde, the camera only shows Robert reading.

The camera adds to the confusion by its indifference. Godard uses well the gimmick of having a neighbouring conversation, or an overheard song, seem to represent the thought of a character. It is clever satire to have Paul propose by picturing a dream world of ads on a cut-it-yourself record machine.

But he uses the technique brilliantly to question our conventional standards of perception. In the subway we see Paul's anxiety reflected in his face rather than his words. Then we see a stranger. His face is completely expressionless. We watch and watch until we realize how impossible it is to know what he thinks. Then we hear his thoughts. His broad calls him a "nigger sometimes." He replies that he has no comment. The banter continues as the camera swings over to two blacks who are having an actual conversation with a whore they are about to shoot. One reality dissolves, we resent losing it. The new reality is a violent impingement on imaginative speculation. But this is a world of precise facts!

The paradoxes of perception are meaningfully explored in a whole series of interviews. When a guy wants to con a broad, he really does interview her. And vice-versa. Paul gets a job interviewing. The standard questions of our life are asked repeatedly: war, politics, sex, morality, racial prejudice, racial prejudice and sex and war and politics etc. Shortly before the film ends, Paul formulates its most meaningful comment: that interviews are false since the feigned objectivity of the questioner is met with an equal insincerity on the part of the person interviewed. Further, the questions asked reflect an ideology of the past; the seemingly detached mind becomes caught in its own categories. A devastatingly ironic comment on the theme and procedure of the movie.

The question asked is "How sympathy? how 'tendresse'?" Significantly the film ends with official interviews at an inquest; but we know that no meaningful answer will be reached. Paul imitates word for word another man's actions; but he can only conclude that putting yourself in another's shoes does not help. It doesn't help either when the boys go through their weekly ritual of protesting the imprisonment of eight intellectuals in Rio. It doesn't help when protest, the sign of sympathy, is pointless: when Paul objects to the size of a movie screen; when a "poor Christ" immolates himself before the American hospital. For the boys, protest is as much a prank and release as the mystery of sex. And like sex it is as futile as immolation, as devoid of 'tendresse' as a discotheque.

The only thing that is real after all is violence. Violence copes with the two queers in the John. Violence emerges from the whispering corners of restaurants and subways and pin ball games and all the stable havens of our world. Violence is a release until it becomes a part of the world, and not merely relegated to some one else's table or someone else's war. Suddenly the prank ends. We reduce experience until it is baffling in its complexity; we simplify life until it is hostile and alien. We seek for unity and tenderness until all that is left is "one man / one woman / and an ocean / of blood spilled."

BLOC-NOTES

A LETTER

Dear Editor:

re. review titled Young Poets:

It seems to me that Mr. Barclay has misused the form of the literary review as a vehicle for his own and arrogant dogmatism.

I question Mr. Barclay's unfounded assertion of what poetry should be. After all, frontiers have been opened, truths discovered, by casting new light onto old shadows.

Mr. Barclay seems to be obsessed by the subject of love throughout his article. In his eagerness to exploit, he has failed to notice that less than half the poems in my volume deal with that subject.

As for rhyme, in the particular poem Mr. Barclay dismissed as a game, it is in fact used to demonstrate the similarity of emotional response that may be experienced in reaction to different situations.

Criticism—yes. Constructive criticism is to be welcomed, indeed sought after. But the adolescent ravings of this reviewer, do they in fact constitute literary criticism?

Not only has Mr. Barclay misinterpreted. He has unfortunately missed the point as well.

Sincerely,

Janis Rapoport,
London, England.

Ed. Note: Mr. Barclay's answering comment was libellous and unprintable. But he liked the book.

SUCCESSFUL SHADOW

An interesting welding of dramatic groups is presenting Sean O'Casey's Shadow of a Gunman at St. Hilda's Cartwright Hall until Feb. 10th.

The Trinity College Dramatic Society and the Irish Theatre Society have combined to produce an entertaining and believable performance of O'Casey's play about men and women caught up in the Irish Rebellion of the early '20's. The production has a maturity and a credibility that is rare in student theatre.

However, this maturity isn't constant, and breaks down with the principle role of Donal Davoren, played by Dirk Milici.

Donal is a would-be poet living in the curiously distorted no-man's land between vision and reality peculiar to poets in war-time. Unfortunately, Milici just doesn't make Donal convincing.

O'Casey's heroes are his women, valiant creatures faced with the impossible task of handling both a harsh reality and the men who hide from this reality behind the illusions of nationalism, alcohol and poetry. As Minnie Powell, the girl that Donal falls in love with, Eleanor Lindo is a knockout, but she's not heroine material.

O'Casey's play comes to life with an excellent supporting cast. John Whittall, as Donal's roommate Seumas is a crock of Irish gold—bright and very funny. Clare Coulter is warm and wise as Mrs. Henderson (a kind of Irish Ann Landers), and Patrick Benson is particularly good as the wistful failure, Tommy Owens.

Shadow of a Gunman is about war, and what happens to the innocents who are caught up in it. They fear it, and are drawn by the chimeral heroism of it.

With a talented cast to whom O'Casey's characters are more than just roles, and under the attention-to-detail direction of Irish ex-patriot Sean Mulcahy, Shadow couldn't miss. It doesn't.

MISC

The best part of the festival was the film series. Films like O Dem Watermelons, The War Game, Birth of a Nation, Neighbours and Dodge City said more about "Society as Madness and Myth" than all the rest of the festival. Its success was due to the great amount of work done by Mark Freiman and Liz Ennis.

It sometimes seems that we are all talking ourselves into a "committed" little world that doesn't seem to reach outside into what's really happening—around us. I particularly felt this a few nights ago, when asked to speak to a group of trade unionists at the Worker's Educational Association. The lack of contact and communication between students and unionists, suddenly struck me as absurd. I was challenged: why don't students take an interest in the trade union movement? Why indeed?

and we recommend THEATRE

Well, theatre buffs, Toronto is active, if not that edifying theatrically this week. Luv, one of the greatest puons of the absurd theatre ever written is at the Colonnade theatre in a relatively undistinguished production, and Drummer Boy which is, I'm sure, the greatest put-on of a Serious Canadian Drama, (unintentionally, I'm sure) is still bellowing forth at the Royal Alex. Brouart, the third Hart House production sponsored by the floundering Drama Centre, the first by Leon Major, this year at Hart House opens tonight. Read about it on Monday. Shadow of a Gunman continues at Cartwright Hall. Fortune and Men's Eyes continues at the Central Library, and The Water will be running at the O'Keefe Centre for the rest of next week. Looks as if it's a good choice available, so forget those essays and tests, spend a couple of bucks and see some live, if not lively, theatre. A.G.

CHAPLIN AND OTHER CLASSICS

If you are a fan of the classic films, and in particular, those of Charlie Chaplin, the next few weeks of viewing in Toronto should be worthwhile. Presently, The Little Queen Victoria Cinema, located a block or two north o Bloor on Yonge Street, is showing Chaplin's Modern Times over this weekend. Throughout next week, his film City Lights will be shown. Modern Times, made in 1936 runs about an hour and a half and is a loosely structured story about the perils of the poor Joe (Chaplin, of course) thwarted by cops, strikes, and the assembly line. While you're at the Queen Vic, have a look at the shop, which is full of artifacts of the period. It is a good setting for the type of programmes there. Also, for more on Chaplin. The Funniest Man in the World is playing at the International Cinema. This is a collection of shorts from the best of his films.

Throughout February, the Artist's Workshop on Markham Street is showing a programme of classic films on Sunday nights only. Feb. 4 — The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari; and Laurel and Hardy's Double Whoopee; the 11th — Intolerance, D. W. Griffith; 18th The Phantom of the Opera — Lon Chaney; 25th — the 1911 and 1920 versions of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Elizabeth Martin.

MUSIC

Little happened this week in town. But next! Segovia will be at Massey Hall tonight at 8:30 and next Thursday, Rubinstein (see page 4) will perform at Massey Hall. Rubinstein's program: Beethoven's 'Appassionata', Sonata, F minor, Op. 57; Schumann's Fantasies, Op. 12; Chopin's allade in G minor, and two Etudes; Ravel's Fortana; Charbrier's Scherzo-Waltz; Grenados' Maiden and the Nightgale; and Liszt Mephisto Waltz. Catherine ("NOT CATHY!") McKinnon is at the Riverboat until Feb. 11. Miss McKinnon has a fine voice, but one which would be more at home at the O'Keefe Center than the Riverboat. Her aim is to get into musicals and hopefully this will happen. As for now, she just isn't folk, not even just plain. And Johnnie Ray will be at the Embassy tonight and tomorrow night. Cry. The Faculty of Music Stage Band returned last week from Michigan State, where they participated in the 3rd Annual Inter-Collegiate Jazz Festival. Four bands altogether participated—two prizes were distributed, U of T winning one. And as anticipated (earlier in this column) Seiji Ozawa is reported to having decided to leave the Toronto Symphony at the end of the 1969 season. The 'official' rumour is that he will be going to take a similar post at the San Francisco Symphony. The unofficial rumour (ie., mine) is that he is preparing a way in bid for the post at the New York Philharmonic. My application for the Toronto job will be in the mail tomorrow z boehm. P. G.

GARBLEDY BOX

Ho Ho, the news from Viet Nam is cheerful for the first time in quite a while. As Mcpherson says, "Tell me that part again about low enemy morale." In the midst of all this martial gaiety and tropical rains, (Baby it's wet out there!) ex-art critic Joan Murray came in, with a letter from the university announcing that her story "Plum Duff and the Walnut Tree" "will be a landmark in the history of Canadian literature." She wonders what kind of a landmark... a hydrant, maybe, she mutters. Rod the Rocking House Hero, and Barbara, layout's Joan of Art, stumbled about as Fras rewrote Macrae. Larry Haivens on Layton didn't fit in. Next week maybe. Next week, too, to make up for this three-week music kick, lots of books.

Students sit on three more senates

(CUP) — Three Canadian universities got a total of 12 student senators this week.

They are the University of Manitoba with seven, Dalhousie with three, and St. Francis Xavier University with two.

Fifteen Canadian campuses have now passed legislation approving students on the academic senate.

Only one university, the University of Western Ontario has seated a student, Patrick Donohue, on the board of governors.

At the University of Manitoba the board of governors' legislation approving student senators is contained in a revised Universities Act which must still pass the provincial legislature.

The new legislation also increased from five to six the number of senators elected to the board. Student president Chris Westdal said he assumes the sixth board member will be a student, but university President H. H. Saunderson disagrees.

"Students should not be separated from any of the other groups represented on the senate. It was left to the judgment of the senate as a whole as to whom it should select to represent it on the board," Saunderson said.

Meanwhile, Brock University seated students Charles Lalley and Daniel Livermore on the senate. Both said they would not disrupt proceedings but "would do as much work as we possibly can for the senate."

Both Dalhousie and St. Francis Xavier will seat the student council president as an automatic senator.

Dalhousie will likely elect its other two members, and the Antigonish student council will appoint the second senator from its own executive.

The St. Francis Xavier student council President John Gorman said the two will not vote, but will become full voting members in a year or two.

"St. Francis Xavier is now further developed in the field of student power than any other Maritime university," Gorman said.

"Our administration is a liberal one, and will listen to students if they act in a responsible manner."

He said he does not foresee any immediate further advances.

Lectures make students docile: report

MONTREAL (CUP) — Some students are so used to listening to lectures and studying by themselves that their ability to have an intellectual discussion with a fellow student on a new subject is severely limited.

This is one of the conclusions reached by McGill lecturer Donald Kingsbury in his 32-page report on a McGill University student project in course design. The report, released last week-end, was begun in May, 1966, by a student council committee with a budget of $960 from the student council.

The first phase of the program was a pilot project on communication. The 18 participating students were divided into groups of two, called diads. They were given printed material designed by Kingsbury to prompt their behavior and discussion.

The organizers found "some students carried over such lecture behavior as: being too shy to ask clarifying questions when they didn't understand because they didn't want to appear stupid.

"It became more and more evident as we brought other groups onto the project that almost every university student shows severe behavior deficiencies in areas of activity suppressed during lectures and during study activities like writing papers and reading," the report reads.

"Some students can write with ease about subjects they cannot discuss. Some students can think along with Mitch perfectly, but are at a loss when their partner asks them a question that requires thought."

The report notes that the communication course was never totally successful, but "we did demonstrate the feasibility of breaking up large classes into active diads and triads.

"Imagine a room of 30 students formed into groups of two, one or two consultants wandering around the room helping with problems, the students working with sheets which structure their discussion—probing, questioning, reading, clarifying, summarizing, too deeply involved in each other to notice the noise. We had that for many weeks, twice a week."

The second phase of the program was course design. Six groups were set up: English philosophy, chemistry, psychology, chemistry, communication and sociology. They concluded that the aims of education in these fields could not be fulfilled in the lecture context.

In an afterward to the report, the authors conclude: "We do believe activity at the university should at once lead to and arise from the conscious considerations of questions of value: what is needed and how it is achieved."

The report says the present university perpetuates society's managerial elite. It does this, the report suggests, by preventing any major questioning of the existing social order.

Quebec begins two-year junior colleges

MONTREAL (CUP) — Quebec students will attend tuition-free junior colleges prior to entering university beginning in 1969.

C. Wynne Dickson, associate deputy minister of education, announced last weekend that the college d'enseignement generale et professionnel will initially be run largely by the universities.

They will offer a two-year course, following which a three-year course at the university will yield a bachelor's degree.

The CEGEP's will provide terminal courses for teacher training and technical training, as well as preparatory work for university.

They are designed to supplant the work being done by a confusing jumble of technical school, normal schools, public secondary schools and Catholic classical colleges.

The need is particularly critical among the French rural sector of the population, Mr. Dickson said.

The creation of the CEGEP's presents problems of staffing and curriculum control, as university faculty associations are reluctant to give up faculty to staff the pre-university colleges.

Also, said Mr. Dickson, the universities must agree to accept any graduate from the CEGEP's into university, while the CEGEP curriculum remains under the auspices of the education department.

Work at 999: different view of life

"After working in project 999 for a while, you walk around looking at people on the outside and wonder who should be in and who should be out," says the co-ordinator of the volunteer student program to help chronic mental patients.

"You tend to put your own problems in perspective, too," Dan Spinner (I Vic) continued.

Project 999 is designed to reinvigorate and give social therapy to a ward of patients at the Ontario Mental Hospital on Queen St. who have been institutionalized an average of 15 years. None of the patients are violent or sex offenders, says Spinner — they are just so withdrawn and apathetic after years of confinement that they have little contact with the world.

Every Tuesday night a group of 10 to 20 volunteers visits the ward and encourages the patients to enter into activities.

"We try to develop rapport, get them interested in doing things, learn to use their muscles again," says Spinner.

After an hour and a half of work with the patients the volunteers meet over coffee with the therapist (who is always present) to discuss the patients and therapeutic techniques in psychology.

This year's therapist is Noel Simpson, who graduated last year in psychology from U of T. He was the first co-ordinator of the project.

"Often you feel frustrated," Spinner says. "You try at first to get patients to remember you from week to week."

"A few weeks ago I asked a patient to join in a game of floor hockey. He looked at me and said 'no'. I learned later that it was the first word he had uttered in four months."

A lot of patients have been virtually forgotten by their families. Few get visitors. Some of the 54 men have been patients since the 1930's and 40's. But last year eight men were removed to treatment wards, with some hope of recovery.

This year it is hoped that enough volunteers will be available that the program can be expanded to Mondays and Wednesdays as well.

A booth has been set up at the Sigmund Samuel library and volunteer members are present to explain the project to anyone interested.

HOCKEY

Sr. Eng., led by Katsuyama and Showball (Snowhall): a racehorse who never drank water but always drank wine-OED), upset Vic, 2-1. Davkins scored for Vic.

Richardson, McDougall and the promiscuous Robert Alan "Dead" Bear scored to give Meds A a 3-1 triumph over Scarborough. Raino replied for Scar.

Forestry got goals from Polk, Phaff (Phaff! Nonsense) and Jim Griffin from Oakville to blank Innis, 3-0. Erindale defeated the school of hard Knox, 4-2 on goals by Delija, Robb, Luckhurst and Mastromatteo. Godling (Anglo-Saxon, "little god") and Cooper led Knox.

Hotsion earned the hat-trick (technical term) as Artichoke slaughtered UC 11, 6-1. Sisam, Oriford, and Van Nostrano (When the swallows come back to Van Nostrano) added the other goals. Howard scored for UC 11.

BASKETBALL

Meds A got 16 points from Kent as they edged Sr. Eng., 37-35 but once again the real star of the game was Lloyd ("Whirling Dervish") Rossman, who whirled and dervished all over the floor, pausing only to score 5 points. Slekys scored 10 for Sr. Skule.

Once again, out of the west rides Lochinvar Sprogis to score 13 points and help Erindale cream Artichoke 41-28. Maniates (plural of "Manias", third declension) had 9 for Architecture.

Molinari scored 22 points for Business, but in a losing cause, as the SOB's fell to Innis, 38-35. Oleszkowics scored 12 for Innis.

Quinlan, Abrams, and Chon each scored 8 points (24 cumulatively) and, in so doing, crowned Meds B with the wreath of laurel that delights and mingles one with the gods on high (so to speak.) Meds B defeated UC 11, 37-21. Fineberg hit for 12 for UC 11.

SPECIAL EVENTS

Varsity Sports has recently learned of the results of the annual University of Toronto "Writing of Plays Contest". There were two entrants this year, Aeschylus (11 APSC) and Euripides (111 Food Sciences); contest judge was Dionysus Bacchus, former Review Theatre editor and son of Zeus and Semele. Feelings ran high during the competition; charge and counter-charge filled the air. Aeschylus accused Euripides of introducing slaves and women to Hart House. Euripides countered by comparing Aeschylus to President Sword, creating tremendous suspense as to whether anything would ever be said. Aeschylus then made a violent speech about Viet Nam (cf Aristophanes "Aves" The Hawks) referring to his satirical lay "Seven Against Thebes" (thebes, like naphtha, is manufactured by the Dow Chemical Co.) Euripides then cunningly brought up his "Bacchae" a play about student power devoted to proving that Pentheus is mightier than Sword. Aeschylus was the winner to the delight of many engineers in the audience, who stood up and delivered their Skule cheer, "Brekekekex coax coa". The winner receives a trip to Athens.

All's quiet on the women's front??

The U of T Intercollegiate Women's Hockey team defeated McMaster 3-1 Wednesday night to record their second successive win.

Last Thursday the "Baby Blues" beat a top-notch Guelph squad 6-3.

Lamplighters for Varsity at Guelph were Jane Huntley (Nur IV) with two goals, Lesley Jones (PHE IV) also with two goals, and Vaughn Adamson (Nur IV) and Gail Wilson (PHE IV) with a goal each.

In the Mac game Hilda Faye (PHE IV), Sue Long-(PHE II) and Huntley notched Varsity markers.

These two games were in preparation for the two Intercollegiate tournaments to be held at McMaster (Feb. 9 and 10) and here in Toronto (Feb. 23 and 24).

"Security is being well informed" is the latest motto of the Women's Athletic Association. Coming up this weekend is an Administration Workshop for representatives of all colleges, faculties and schools at University of Toronto.

At this workshop the representatives will discuss publicity, aims and ideals of the intramural programme, athletic councils, roles and duties of all reps and all aspects of women's athletics.

This is the first step in helping everyone to run as efficient an athletic programme as possible and to exposing all to new ideas for solving existing problems. If this workshop proves to be successful, a similar workshop will be held every September at the beginning of the athletic year.

Gordon sparks Blues to 5-2 win

WATERLOO (VNS)— John Gordon spearheaded a four goal outburst in the second period here last night that carried Varsity Blues to a 5-2 decision over University of Waterloo Warriors.

The important victory left Toronto as the only undefeated team in the senior Intercollegiate league race, and moved them into a first place tie with Waterloo. Before last night's contest, Blues had eight straight wins, Waterloo nine.

In their first league game for nearly three weeks after a rigorous European tournament, Blues appeared tired in the first period, but caught fire later on.

They get no chance to further recuperate as they come right back tonight with a game at Varsity Arena against third-place McMaster Marliners. And then, in a rare Sunday night engagement, Blues take on the red-hot University of Montreal Carabins again at Varsity Arena.

Three victories against first-division clubs in a space of four days is almost an impossible feat, but Blues cleared their first obstacle last night before a roaring, capacity crowd.

In the first period there was plenty for the spectators to cheer about as Waterloo carried play for most of the twenty minutes. Blues' netminder John Wrigley was called on to make several big saves to keep the game close after Don Mervin had given Warriors a 1-0 lead from Hostick and Mel Baird. Mervin got the goal on a rebound from Baird's blueline blast. Blues were outshot 15-8.

Ron Smith for Waterloo increased the margin to 2-0 after only eight seconds of the second period, but Gordon's first of two goals four minutes later took the starch from the Warriors' sails. Paul Laurent tied the game at the six minute mark following a good pass from Gord Cunningham and in just another 69 (cough) seconds Gordon notched the ultimate winner as he burst in on the Waterloo goalie, sliding the puck through his legs. Murray Stroud gave Blues a two goal lead before the period finally ended.

The second period was reminiscent of the Russian game with Blues skating and backchecking superbly. They outshot Waterloo 12-9.

The only goal of the third period was a coup de grace by Murray Stroud after a picture play performance from his linemates Bob McClelland and Brian Jones.

The announcer before the game asked the packed arena to "please sit closer together because there are still another 200 people trying to get in."

Gordon and defenseman Bob Hamilton were tremendous for Blues throughout the exciting game.

John Gordon

Amazing aquamen astound

The Varsity swimming team maintained its winning style by swamping MacMaster 82-31 in Hamilton Tuesday night. Blues had little trouble disposing of their opponents, as they swept all but the two diving events.

Captain Robin Campbell again led the Varsity onslaught. He set a pool record and a personal best time of 5:30.9 in the 500 yard freestyle, and handily won the 200 yard free ahead of teammate Doug MacIntosh. Veteran Gaye Stratten swam away from the field to take the 200 yard backstroke and individual medley, and Theo van Ryn and Chris Fisher won the 100 and 50 yard freestyle events, respectively.

Rookie George Goldsmith turned in his best time to date with a fine victory in the 200 yard breaststroke. Klaus Koch swam well to win the 200 yard butterfly ahead of teammate Bob Heatley.

In the relays, a Toronto foursome of Stratten, Goldsmith, Heatley, and van Ryn won the 400 yard medley, and a Blue Squad composed of Bob Watt, Campbell, Fisher, and van Ryn took the 400 free.

Varsity travels to Kingston on Saturday for their annual tri-meet against Queen's and McGill. Although the team does not expect too much difficulty with Queen's, the McGill squad has some fine swimmers this year, and should give Toronto a real run for the money.

boxing...

Varsity boxers are in action Saturday night at Hart House as they renew their annual competition against Royal Military College.

Coach Tony Canzano, in his 21st seasons as Blues' glove guru, boasts, as always, a well-conditioned, well-instructed squad.

Canzano's lineup includes four veterans of intercollegiate pugilism: Joe Donohue, Biff (pow) Math Matthews, Peter (hard as granite) Junger, and Bill Fisher. Rookies donning the mitts are John Sunit, Mike (History 390) D'Ornelas, and Harry Ewaschuk. Team members Ralph Starr, George Peroff and Rick Smith will also appear on the card, scheduled for 8:00 p.m. in the Upper Gym.

Each bout will consist of three two minute rounds.

'Must' game for Blues vs. Mac

By JIM MORRISON

For the first time this season, Varsity Blues are faced with a 'must' game. The winless McMaster Marauders surface in Hart House tomorrow night, and Varsity needs the win to stay in the hunt for a playoff position.

Blues tuned up for tomorrow's match with a skimpy 68-63 exhibition triumph over York University Windigoes Tuesday night. And it took a late drive by the McManusmen to stave off defeat at the hands of a fired up York five. Playing without leading scorers Bruce Dempster and Arvo Neidre, Blues seemed tired, and kept losing the ball to the determined Windigoes. A windigo, by the way, is a South American Koala bear related to the Pindar.

John Hadden led Varsity scorers with 12 points and Larry Trafford, filling in for Dempster, had 10.

If Blues have been dropping close games of late, they have nothing on Bill Fowler's Mac team. Picked by many to win the league this season, Marauders have yet to win a game and are already out of playoff contention.

Fowler's seasonal troubles started with the poor performance of Jim Murray — an all-star guard last year. Shut-tling between backcourt and the forward position, Murray has played well at neither, scoring 31 points in his 5 games to date — including 17 in one against Western.

Brightest spot for Mac has been the play of guards Ian Jolliffe and Karl Mearns. And Mearns, who is averaging 15 points-per-game, has been their one consistent outside shooter.

If Marauders can get more than three players in on the scoring, they will upset someone before the season is through. Needless to say McManus is hoping it's Blues.

Varsity has been having offensive difficulties lately with its guards. Bruce Dempster has scored only 21 points in the last two games, and Mark White 22. However, team captain Arvo Neidre and John Hadden have come on to take up much of the scoring slack. If Blues ever put all the pieces together, one of the League's other big teams is due to suffer.

Interesting Phenomena Dept. Waterloo's Sol Gieber, now averaging 25 ppg., seems to be taking aim at former Blue Dave West's record average of 2.1, set in 1963-64.

...wrestling

Injuries have swept down on the wrestling Blues like a hoard of VC suicide squadrons. When the team travels to Kingston tomorrow for a tri-meet with Queen's and McGill, three of their top wrestlers will be sidelined.

Rod Vinter (152) has a sore shoulder, Rick Kesten (137) has hernia problems, while Steve Casselman (123) is out with a pulled muscle. In addition, Ron Wilson (145) is ailing, but he will make the trip.

Still healthy and wrestling on Saturday are Jim Doner (123), Bob Kellerman (137), Wilson, Dennis Boadway (152), Bill Allison (160), Larry Bobbitt (167), Vic Heffland (177), Mike Wright (191), and Alex Squires (heavyweight).

McGill should provide the toughest competition.

Candidates kick off election campaign at Hillel

By DAVE FRANK

The back-room politicking emerged into the open last night as three candidates for the Students Administrative Council presidency addressed the Hillel Club.

Nominations do not close until the end of this week, but the declared candidates now include Glen Brownlee (IV Vic), Steve Langdon (III Trin) and Peter Szekely (III UC).

They shied away from particular issues, preferring to concentrate on general philosophy.

"The university is being run as a business," said Brownlee, "a highly subsidized and specialized business.

"But the purpose of a university is the pursuit of truth.

"To be beneficial we must be willing to bite the hand that feeds us. The university should be not the tool of society, but the heart of society."

Szekely called for replacing "adolescent extremism" with "responsible activism." He said SAC should be concerned with "upgrading the quality of education and the services connected with it," rather than "external issues which can only discredit the council and the university."

He charged that issues which were "entirely too political" had been brought on campus.

"The university is not a micro-version of society."

"It accomplished nothing except dividing and polarizing the campus."

"Student government is past the sandbox age," said Langdon, "It is part of the real world now.

"We have to make a basic commitment. SAC goals should be student goals."

He listed a number of issues on which he felt SAC should concentrate its efforts: education, social programs, housing, financial, aid, the cost of books, aid administrative bureaucracy.

"We have to deal with the problems students really have"

Szekely termed this attitude as "being in favour of motherhood and apple pie."

"We need a responsible and mature approach to the biological, educational, and constitutional needs of students."

A lot of the discussion centred on the student's part in improving his education through course unions.

"This is the area we must press for student participation in most energetically," said Langdon.

"SAC should act as a catalyst," urged Brownlee, "bringing the local councils out of the 19th century dance committee situation to take an active part in educational research."

Brownlee is running on a ticket with Dave Nitkin (III New), who is presently SAC's Services Commissioner.

Langdon's running mate is Norm Schachar (II Meds). He hopes this "teamwork"

Men at Sir Daniel Wilson residence woke up yesterday morning to find THIS stuck on their fence.

"I stuck it there because I had it," says Mike Ross (IV UC).

"I had it because I bought it to present to my mother and the kids," he explained.

"My little sister would not come home last night because she thought we having it for supper.

"I bought it at the St. Lawrence market. I hang out around there a lot. You can get bull's balls down there too." For any gruesome gourmets, pigs' heads sell for 15 cents a pound. And, says Ross, "Apparently people eat them."

Two of the SAC presidential candidates

GLEN BROWNLEE

By JIM COWAN

Glenn Brownlee's nervous grey eyes flickered across the room.

"It's not a business," he said. "Its prime purpose is the pursuit of truth."

He was talking about the role of the university in society. Sprawled in a chair in the Varsity Review office, he reflected on the future of the Community of Scholars.

"It's a personal problem; students and staff don't feel it's their university any more. It's like a monstrous business."

As student president of the university's largest arts college, Brownlee has had ample opportunity to ob-

"Sick societies are the problem of sick universities," he said. "We should be free from the strings of outside society. We should make our own decisions."

The presidency of the Victoria College Union Council was Brownlee's first venture into university politics. He took over following extensive constitutional changes in the VCUC.

But after a year characterized by growing pains, he is proposing his own changes in the Vic student government. They are aimed at smoothing out the problems and making the college council more than just a dance committee.

"The college council should be getting involved in the educational needs of their students," he maintains. "The Students' Administrative Council should work with the local student government in matters of education and social functions."

The recurring theme in a discussion with Brownlee is the role of the local student councils. As befits a college president, he promotes the potential strength of the college system.

"But I'm not essentially local," he says. "SAC has to look after the general well-being of all the students on campus. The local councils should give SAC research material and co-operation."

"SAC must involve itself with long-range goals."

Days are too short for Steven Langdon. Especially when he is a father, honor student and rising young politician.

We were to meet at the Students' Administrative Council building at 3 p.m. He was 10 minutes late. Tardy? He had just come from another meeting, he explained.

"Would you like me to talk to you here?" I asked.

"If you don't mind, could we talk on the way over to the Placement Service?"

We walked and he talked. Like any proud father he spoke of his new son Christopher.

"He's like another Mao the way he rules the household," laughed Langdon (III Trin). "I don't know how he will run things in the fall." Langdon's wife is to enroll as a full-time student in September.

Langdon, a 21-year-old political science and economics student, and his clan hope to move into Rochdale College next year. He and his wife, whom he married last spring, plan to take some of the courses offered there, but will also be enrolled as full-time U of T students.

We walked briskly in the cold. "I came to U of T because here I thought I'd find the best faculty in Canada."

"But what a disappointment. No; so much with the calibre of the faculty but with the mammoth, impersonal form of lectures.

"Education should be self-directed. Here it isn't. Everyone is competing for marks. You have to learn to give the professor what he wants, not what you want on the exams."

A brief stop at the Placement Service and then on to the Arbor Room for coffee.

This is Langdon's first year on the Students Administrative Council. Last year he was president of the campus NDP club to which he still belongs.

"We concerned ourselves with problems similar to those that SAC faces," he remarked.

I asked him about his interest in politics. "There is a great chance for social change in Canada and I want to be a part of it," Langdon answered. "Besides," he said, with a smile, "my family has always been politically-minded."

Pink Panther, powder puffs, at Carnival

The newly-reconstituted Blue and White Society is following closely the traditional format for this year's Winter Carnival, to be held this weekend.

The major difference is the elimination of the ice show and concert, which lost money last year.

Abe Mudrik (Comp Sci) thinks this year's carnival will lose about $900 as opposed to the $3,000 deficit last year.

"Next year we will change the Carnival considerably," said Mudrik. "We don't plan to lose any money at all."

"With only a month to prepare, we had to follow basically the same plan as last year," he added.

This Thursday is movie night, featuring A Place to Stand, Never on Sunday, Hiroshima Mon Amour, You're a Big Boy Now and The World of Henry Orient.

There will be 10 Pink Panther cartoons, plus Bugs Bunny, Yosemite Sam and Speedy Gonzales. Each movie will have two showings, at 7 p.m. and 9:20 p.m. The price is 50 cents a film.

Friday night the Engineers will sponsor a dance at the Drill Hall with two bands. Cost: $1 a person.

Saturday will be the carnival's big day. Weather permitting, ice sculptures will be judged in the morning, followed by a chariot race, an inter-faculty tug-of-war, a toilet bowl, a powder puff football game and an egg throw.

An Eat-Out (free lunch of pancakes and hot chocolate) will be held outdoors from noon to 1:30 p.m.

Saturday afternoon there will be a dance at the Drill Hall.

The big dance is in the evening, at Hart House. The cost is $3.50 a couple. It will feature the Trump Davidson Orchestra, the George Frank Orchestra, the Ugly Ducklings and Eddy Spencer and the Mission Revue.

A stag or drag overflow dance will be held at the same time at Howard Ferguson Hall featuring the Mushroom Castle and Bobby Washington and the Soul Society. Cost: $1.50 a person.

Tickets for the Hart House dance are on sale at the SAC office.

The Carnival still needs helpers. Anyone interested should leave his name and phone number at the SAC office.

Debaters talk their way into second

A University of Toronto Debating Union team placed second to Princeton University in the University of New Brunswick Parliamentary Tournament over the weekend.

Derek Allen (III Trin), and Peter Picherack (I Trin) debated the resolution: Students should be considered capable of sharing in the administration of universities."

The UTDU, which won the tournament last year, competed against eight other teams, mainly from Eastern Canada.

idea, a professional student coupled with an artsman, will lead to wide campus support.

Szekely pointed out that a ticket is not mandatory, and that he was not supporting anyone for the vice-presidency.

After an hour of talk, the 75 people who had crowded into the room were growing restless. Most of them had come for a showing of Peter Watkins' film The War Game.

The campaign kick-off wound up with a brief admonition from Szekely:

Saving face no factor in war: Gordon

Privy Council President Walter Gordon Friday reiterated his stand against United States policy in Vietnam.

The war is "unjustifiable," he told 200 students in Sidney Smith Hall.

"This war is wrong—morally, strategically and in every other way."

"There is a way to end the war diplomatically," he declared. "Saving face should not be a consideration."

Mr. Gordon said he was "not happy" about the present defence-sharing agreement with the U.S.

There can be a good case made for Canadians showing their disapproval of U.S. policies by restricting arms flow, he said.

But he asked where do you draw the line? Do you cut off shipments of munitions only? How about metals like nickel and copper which can be used in producing armaments?

To stop sales of such commodities would result in a "grisly depression" in this country, Mr. Gordon declared.

He was sharply critical of American ownership and control of Canadian economy.

"We are not our own masters. We have become an economic colony of the U.S."

Mr. Gordon sidestepped questions about whom he would support in the Liberal leadership campaign. He would support Immigration Minister Jean Marchand if he ran, but beyond that he "wanted to hear what the other candidates have to say."

Mr. Gordon told reporters later that he sympathized with demonstrators against on-campus recruitment by companies supplying the U.S. war effort in Vietnam.

"They (the companies) should not have pushed their way on campus," he said, "but should have conducted interviews elsewhere, like the Sutton Place."

'Little student-staff rapport'

Brownlee has had some experience in dealing with administrators. Victoria is a university in its own right as well as being federated with the University of Toronto. As such, its internal structure is much like its larger sister.

As Vic's student president, Brownlee has served on the presidential advisory committee and the staff-student liaison committee. He also sat in on the residences and service committee of the Victoria board of regents.

"There are sharp divisions in some of these bodies," he said. "Students should learn how to take advantage of these divisions."

Brownlee is bothered by the lack of co-operation between the students and the teaching staff.

"Staff interests should parallel student interests, but they don't. The students should make all the decisions."

Brownlee, in his fourth year of political science and economics, says he has not been inspired by his course.

"The classes were too large and some of them didn't seem to be thought out at all. The end result was no inspiration."

His extra-curricular activities are severely limited by the time he spends on VCUC business. Experience has convinced him that the SAC presidency is a full-time job.

"I like just sitting around and discussing idealistic concepts, especially about politics," he says. "That's the kind of thing the university should be for."

At 23, Brownlee intends to eventually pursue a career in law.

'Lack of communication a problem'

There is also a chance for great change on campus, he said. "But," he sighed, "I'm afraid many students will favor a more conservative man in this month's SAC elections."

Langdon doesn't strike you as a radical with his conservative clothing and quiet voice. But he has some firm ideas on the position students should hold on campus.

He supported SAC's decision not to place students on the University senate. "We shouldn't take a position on the senate unless it's a role of significance. Token representation is no good."

Langdon thinks the main problem on campus is the lack of communication between the students and SAC.

"Most students know little or nothing about the affairs of SAC. That's why I support the idea of referendum. It's a way to encourage students to participate in their government and the affairs that concern them.

"SAC is a body working in the interests of the students. It should be concerned with housing, education and university administration. All these affect students directly."

Langdon had to attend a SAC University Committee meeting. He's co-chairman of the committee.

The discussion was interrupted when she reached the SAC building. A friend of Langdon rushed in. "I bring you tidings of great academic joy," she laughed and handed him an essay and test—both A's.

"It's incredible," he said, shaking his head. "I wrote this essay the week Chris was born."

The professor had commented at the end of the essay, "Very mature thinking. Let me know your plans for the future."

Well, his immediate plan is to win the SAC presidential election.

Sir George Engineers storm the paper

MONTREAL (VNS) — A "vigilante group" of Sir George Williams University engineering students seized and attempted to destroy part of Friday's edition of the student newspaper, The Georgian.

The engineers swept through the university's main building collecting batches of papers and throwing them in an outside courtyard.

They hurled several hundred copies of Friday's paper and a pile of back issues into the rain in retaliation for a Georgian editorial and news story criticizing engineers for allegedly preventing freedom of speech.

The story described an incident which took place during the opening ceremonies of Engineering Week at SGWU. The Georgian criticized the engineers for preventing a student from delivering a short talk on the Vietnam war and technological responsibility.

"The engineers were incensed because it was typical of The Georgian's negative attitude toward Engineering Week," explained an engineering student.

Staffers of the Georgian were able to salvage most of the issues.

Messrs. MacRae and Parkins will be At Home in the office Wednesday at 1 p.m. to debate, discuss and mainly listen on the subject of CUP and Varsity policy for any staffers who are interested. The meeting is in no way compulsory and is only as important as you think it is.

BRING YOUR GIRL TO THE BULL AND THE BEAR.

Relaxed atmosphere. Reasonable prices. And just a stone's throw from campus. Toronto's newest pub is on Wellesley, just east of Bay (part of The Sutton Place Hotel). See you there!

"Have you beauty that leads the heart from things fashioned from wood and stone to the holy mountain.
Tell me have you these in your houses?
Or have you only comfort and the lust for comfort that stealthily thing that enters the house as a guest and then becomes a host and then a master?"

Aye and it becomes a tomer and with hook and scourge makes puppets of your larger desires. Though its hands are silken its heart is of iron.
Verily the lust for comfort murders the fashion of the soul and then walks grinning in the funeral!
—The Prophet, by Kahill Gibran, page 36

The Students Administrative Council's housing report released last week is probably the most comprehensive study of that perennially bothersome subject ever done on this campus.

Its recommendations are to be put to the various deans of men this Thursday in an effort to gain their support.

But much more important than that is the support of the students living in the various residences. If the housing situation is going to improve at U of T, these students must get behind the report and help to implement its suggestions.

For instance, the report points out that residence fees could be lowered drastically in some cases if the residents would forego the luxury of maid service and start making their own beds and sweeping their own floors.

At Trinity College, the report says, men pay $212 a year for this service. Women at Trinity College's St. Hilda's Residence pay $170.

At University College's Sir Daniel Wilson Residence maid service costs each month $122; at New College, $97; at Devonshire, $107; at Burwash, $101; at Mary Addersley, $123.

More money could be saved by eliminating the don system which costs each month at Sir Don $25-$30 a year.

The authors of the report, headed by Ed Clark, a resident of Sir Don, feel students support could help put pressure on the deans.

This support is especially necessary in another main recommendation which would help spread the cost of residences across campus — a recommendation that is likely to meet strong opposition at the colleges.

At present the colleges—Trinity, Victoria and St. Michael's — operate and finance their own residences. Their costs are relatively stable because they are not building new houses, and do not have to meet extra mortgage costs.

But of the University-sponsored residences, costs are sure to rise drastically this year because of the expenses involved in building New College II, the new women's residence.

Construction has depleted the University's private building fund which was used to pay 20 per cent of the costs of residence construction. Another 20 per cent was chipped in by the provincial government with the remaining 60 per cent solicited in loans.

With the fund depleted, residence construction is being financed almost entirely with loans. This results in phenomenally high mortgage costs, which may have to be absorbed by residence fees.

A sharp rise in these fees is a strong possibility but if the costs were spread across campus the rise would be checked and kept at a minimum.

It seems that since neither the university nor the government is taking steps to pay greater subsidies for these residences, elimination of the costly frills and equalizing the increased expenses will soon become a necessity.

The authors of the report — who worked in teams from September to January researching every aspect of residence operation—feel that the present high costs discriminate against the poorer students.

Generally the students who live there now come from the higher income brackets and can afford these expensive frills. Not only is this unjust, but if fees do rise, as the report predicts, this situation will become worse. The mortgage payments could force up fees in the university-sponsored residences by $188 a year.

LETTERS

Sir:

If you messiahs of the New Morality claim that what goes on in the nations' bedrooms is no one else's business; then why is it on the cover of the review section of your rag (Jan. 26th) and in your letters-to-the-editor column; and not between consenting "adults"?

Yours truly,

Janus Proos (unemployed short-term
S.A.C. Rep, Victoria College)

Sir:

Re your quote for last Monday's editorial, I would like to point out that a) The actual quote should be "sit you down father; rest you" (not rest awhile!) b) This is a quotation from King Lear Act IV scene vi l. 260 spoken to the blind Gloucester by his son Edgar, who had just killed Goneril's steward Oswald. I thought you would like to know.

John Michell (IV Trin.)

Sir:

As a member of St. Michael's College, I acknowledge with acute embarrassment the ignorance and illiteracy of Messrs. Valeriot and Rowan, who wrote in to Monday's VARSITY attacking Mr. Proos' advertisement. I would hasten to assure the VARSITY and everyone else across campus that the littleness of spirit and the inability to read evinced by these two in their command performance are by no means universal characteristics of the students at St. Michael's.

It's a shame that Messrs. Valeriot and Rowan didn't read Mr. Proos' ad fully before rushing off, grabbing a piece of paper, and foaming with their pens. Mr. Proos was not suggesting eliminating POSAP. Those who believe that society owes them a living can recede back into their prenatal security. Mr. Proos wasn't threatening them; he merely suggested that the means test should be more stringent, so that only those who really need the money will get it. Why should the taxpayers — and that includes all of us — finance the luxury of undeserving spongers?

Inability to read is sad enough; out casting aspersions on someone they don't know is rather low. I have the honour of being a friend and political associate of Mr. Proos. His family is not at all wealthy. All the money he has he earns himself by working in the summer and on weekends. No, he is not using his POSAP loan to sponsor an ad. He didn't get one, although he could easily have qualified for one. He could have gotten a loan-grant from POSAP had he not been too proud and honourable to live off your parents and mine, when he was able-bodied and healthy to work to pay his own way through school.

High I.Q.s of the world unite

By MEIR BESTER

Which of the following does not belong: iced, steamed, wet, frozen, snowy?

Adversary is to victor as suicide is to: depression, corpse, religion, cowardice, achieve?

If you find the preceding questions a breeze you may be a potential member of Mensa, one of the world's most exclusive societies.

To join Mensa you must pass an I.Q. test with a higher score than 98 per cent of the population. Applications are processed by Mensa Selection Agency in New York City, and the results are strictly confidential.

Founded in England in 1945, Mensa boasts of a current membership of some 17,000, representing almost every occupation—businessmen, doctors, housewives, policemen, scientists, soldiers, and even editors.

The chairman of Mensa Canada is 25 year old Henry David Yee, traffic analyst for the Department of Highways.

In an interview at his Pembroke St. home, Mr. Yee explained the aims of Mensa.

"Many people are looking for some sophisticated and diabolical aims in Mensa," he said, "which in truth are nonexistent."

"Mensa helps intelligent people come in contact with other good minds. And while there may be little surface agreement between members, they share the desire to discuss issues intelligently and critically."

Mensa also provides volunteers for research workers who need a high I.Q. group.

"The advantage here," explains chairman Yee, "is that the I.Q. of members is known and thus any link between the results of a research test and the I.Q. of the subject can be readily determined."

Intelligence, Mensa's monthly newsletter, contains articles, features, and personal ads submitted by members of the society.

The Annual Mensa Register provides a list of members with details of their occupation and interests. It is available to any member at a nominal price.

At this point I interrupted and blurted out the question that had been building gradually in my mind.

"Does Mensa encourage marriage among members in an attempt to breed a new race of supermen who will eventually rule the world?"

Mr. Yee admitted that such a plan had been proposed by some members.

He stressed, however, that while Mensa members are encouraged to express their opinions freely, no opinion is expressed as being that of Mensa itself.

Mensa has no opinion.

Mensa recruits, not by persuading people to think as they do, but by selecting people who are able to think for themselves.

But nobody, it seems, not even Mensa eggheads, can live on cerebral juice alone. Consequently, special interest groups have been formed within many Mensa centers, and members are encouraged to participate in them.

Can Mensa be accused of discrimination? Discrimination against 98 per cent of the population? I think not.

The suggestion that Mensa discriminates against lower IQ groups is as absurd as the suggestion that the Toronto Maple Leafs discriminate against those who can't play hockey.

Are you brave enough to risk the dreadful revelation that you are no brighter than 98 per cent of us?

The preliminary Mensa test is written without supervision, in your own home—and it's free.

Column and a half

"What the hell are you and I hanging around here for, Kath?"

We were walking, a friend and I toward U.C. the other night. (Can you have a love-hate relationship with a building?) And suddenly he shattered my lovely mindless diffusion into the drizzle with "What the hell are you and I hanging around here for anyway, Kath? We should be first-rate dropouts. Why aren't we?" I gave him my worn, weary answer, the only one I have and probably ever will have. "You just have to come back—and besides, I'm a miserable coward." And I hated him a minute for asking that question, a question I'd been ramming mercilessly down my throat since September, until I'd cried 'uncle' and obliterated it by default. But Bob, bless his soul, resurrected what had so neatly been laid down to sleep. And I got to thinking about how frighteningly close to home The Student as Nigger had hit—and about how if I could just finish The Alexandria Quartet despite the ten essays I have to do by March, I'd almost die happy—and about how I walked around high for three months at the beginning of second year because all of a sudden what I was reading had something to do with what I was living—and yet how angry I was that it had been kept from me so long—because you see the discovery had happened not through my "education" but somehow in spite of it—and about how a lot of groovy people couldn't hack it and from a mother's point of view had ruined their chances for life—and God do I envy them—and about how I have this one seminar and the prof really tries, you have to hand it to him, he really tries—leaning forward with that earnest puppy-dog "c'mon-you-can-do-it-it's-on-the-tip-of-your-tongue look of his—he of the baited questions and the booby-prizes—one lollipop for your first Wrong Answer or rather your first Not-Exactly-What-I-Had-In-Mind Answer—and for each one thereafter, two sympathetic throat-cluckings—and about how I'm terrified of getting turned-on by anything because it just might lead to writing—and time is of the essence, dontcha know—and about how the variety in crutches is phenomenal—like for example—"one more year, that's all—just one more year, that's all—just one more year (after this one, that is)" or "I can always do my thing after I've got the old B.A."—or "if someone who writes like Tarvainen is still here, it can't be all bad"—and about how there's Rochdale—and who gives a damn about accreditation anyway—and about how I had Dennis Lee for a Chaucer tutorial first year and we talked about James Baldwin and Growing Up Absurd—and about how the A-students in my course are almost all cut-up already in neat, bite-sized pieces, prepackaged for graduate school—and about how if you know the rules well enough, you can beat them at their own game—but am I really satisfied that easily?—and about how I sort of got to missing the university around the end of last July—

nine a minute as the queen starts to move

By DAVE FRANK

Those of us who like to keep tabs on what's happening on the campus scene ambled over to Queen's Park yesterday afternoon.

The wind was hard, the sun was strong, and there was a deep, dull roar in the air.

We headed straight for the massive marble and bronze monument of Queen Victoria. Even from a distance you could see there was something unusual afoot.

The statue was surrounded by about 25 people, shouting and waving pasteboard signs stolid as ever.

We strained our eyes and we could see some kind of movement in her lap. Now and then a dark shadow would dart over the edge of her rigid thighs.

As we got closer we saw heads, hands, sometimes whole arms, appear above Victoria's lap and drop things on the crowd below.

The people below ignored the bombardment.

"Pigeon power! Pigeon power," they chanted, and stomped their feet to keep warm.

Resourcefully, we searched in the half-frozen pools of water and among the branches brought down by the Great Storm. We found a dormant grapevine and plugged it in.

Our suspicions were confirmed. What we were witnessing was a full scale confrontation between the Pigeon Poisoners and a motley group of Pigeon Persecution Protestors. There is a brief but bitter history of intense rivalry between these two groups. However there is no suggestion either of them is doing anything against the law.

At this point a full body climbed out of Victoria's lap and perched on her thigh. He held a huge bull horn to his lips.

"You are infringing individual rights!" he proclaimed, "If the pigeons are going to come into this park, anyone should have the right to poison them."

That was when the jeering started to get louder. But he still tried to drown out the clamour with cries of "Free speech! Free Speech!"

Finally he was led away, simpering and sobbing, back into Victoria's lap.

A spokesman for the protestors came and stood on Victoria's toe, craned his neck skyward, and cupped his hands:

"We want to seriously question the nature of this university. Is this campus complicit in the poisoning of pigeons? Is it?"

"It sure as hell is," retorted an angry voice from on high. Another paper bag flew out. This one hit us flat in our face. It was hard and wet.

We dabbed at our face with Kleenex, and it didn't come clean. We used handkerchiefs. We wiped with our sleeves. The blood and feathers came off warm and sticky.

The pro-pigeon faction was getting militant.

"If you don't come down and surrender your poison," shouted out a well-dressed student, "We'll drive Queen Victoria into the lake!"

There was no response. The pigeon poisoners were about their work. As each pigeon came fluttering through the hollow monument, they snatched it by the legs and stuffed it into a lunch bag. (These paper bags concealed fatal dosages of pibiophthaline, a painless killer pirated by the pigeon poisoners from a zoology lab.) They were pushing on nine a minute when the catastrophe occurred.

The massive monument began to move, in jerks at first, but then more quickly and more smoothly. It advanced rapidly for several minutes and then slid to a slow halt. A pigeon poisoner peered over Victoria's thigh. There was nothing to see. Just the city lights grey ice all around.

That was all last night. We came back with ice in our hair. Ingrid's sister was in Niagara Falls. Sandy Shecter was in Montreal.

MacRae sat there with his bestial cherubic grin and mused out loud:

"And who says Queen's Park is on campus anyway?"

The evidence is gone. We checked this morning on the way up to Daison's. There's nothing but a broad hole in the ice sheet where the black waters chop at the jagged edges

McLAUGHLIN PLANETARIUM

A $2,000,000 trip through time and space

By JIM COWAN

You are floating somewhere on the edge of space. The galaxies stretch before you in an endless spiral. Two billion stars, one of them our sun. And suddenly you feel very, very small.

Science fiction? Not any more. This fall, visitors to the Royal Ontario Museum will be able to experience the sensation of a trip through space, a journey back in time or a visit to the future.

The vehicle for these expeditions through time and space will be the $2,000,000 McLaughlin Planetarium, currently under construction south of the ROM on Avenue Road.

A planetarium is a building in which the position and movement of celestial bodies are reproduced under controlled conditions. Its main components are a projection dome, which forms the roof of the structure, and a complex projector for casting the images of the stars.

Dr. Henry C. King, curator of the planetarium makes it clear the museum's newest attraction is no plaything.

"Visitors who come to a planetarium merely to see the sun, moon, planets and stars 'perform' usually are disappointed," he says. "But those who turn both eyes and minds upward will have an experience as mentally stimulating as it is visually remarkable."

BEYOND MILKY WAY

Entering the building either from Avenue Road or through the Museum, a visitor passes through several large display areas. He is gradually reoriented from his earthly surroundings to those of the universe.

"We invite him to take a journey in his imagination beyond the Milky Way," Dr. King says.

"The demonstrations we put on should give the visitors some idea of the smallness of the earth in relation to the universe. Planetarium shows can add another dimension to our thinking, and help us to acquire a deeper sense of space and time than the world around us."

Since a primary aim of the planetarium is to educate, it is not surprising that much of the curatorial staff's time will be taken up with teaching duties. Lectures are planned for the public and organized parties of school children, astronomy students and groups interested in navigation and the history of science.

The McLaughlin installation features one of the first of a new series of composite optical projectors produced by Carl Zeiss-Jena. The $150,000 instrument is really 150 projectors in one. It can reproduce the night sky as seen from anywhere on earth at any point in time, or take the viewer on a journey around the earth and beyond our solar system.

When used in conjunction with auxiliary projectors for the sun, moon and planets, it produces an effect described by Dr. King as "tantamount to a moving picture of the universe."

The simulation of orbital space flights is a good example of how the spectacular can be combined with the educational.

"The younger generation, for whom space ships and interplanetary expeditions have become fairly common topics of conversation, take to these shows like ducks to water," says Dr. King. "But eager curiosity and enthusiasm have to be directed toward the goal of understanding and critical evaluation."

The planetarium may also be used for lectures in astronomy or navigation by the stars. But the extent to which these and other facilities are used will depend on the demand. Such a service could be useful to pilots, sailors, yachtsmen and surveyors.

FINANCIAL SUPPORT

The need for a major planetarium in Toronto has been recognized for some time, but until 1964 the necessary financial support was not available. The university of Toronto, through the ROM, expressed a willingness to take part in the project. However, the university's construction priorities made it impossible for U of T to finance such a scheme.

Then, in November 1964, Colonel R. S. McLaughlin telephoned the director of the ROM and offered $1,000,000 for the building of a planetarium. He was later persuaded to double this figure, and construction began in December, 1966.

The only uncompleted part of the main structure at the present time is the outer dome, which is the building's chief characteristic.

The dome consists of a base layer of reinforced concrete, four to eight inches thick. This is coated with an insulation layer, which in turn is covered with a second layer of concrete. Finally, the whole sandwich-like affair is waterproofed with a synthetic rubber.

When completed, the outer dome will be 91 feet in diameter and will rise 83 feet above the roadway.

The inner dome, on which the images of the stars will be projected, is made of aluminum sheets and is suspended from a network of thin ribs. It is 75 feet in diameter, and is spherically accurate to within one-fifth of an inch.

The dome is coated with a special white paint and appears smooth. A closer examination, however, reveals small holes punched in its surface at quarter-inch intervals. These allow speakers to be mounted behind the dome, and aid in air-conditioning the auditorium.

Although the planetarium is not due to open until the fall, Dr. King has been working since 1966 to prepare it for the public. He has been busy assembling his curatorial staff and supervising the construction of the many displays.

Born in London, England, Dr. King first became interested in astronomy when his has arranged to have Professor May discuss a film that was made of a new phenomenon discovered while experimenting with The Laser, Wednesday February 7th, 1:00 p.m. Room 2117, Sid Smith.

Here's what it's all about, Alfie...

by Louis Erlichman

The kid waiting in O'Hare Airport was blond, Maybe 19 or 20. The boyish grin and the rumpled army fatigues somehow didn't seem to match. He was coming back from Vietnam.

"Got out because of this rash on my ankles. They say it's an incurable skin disease. I sold all my old socks to the other guys in my platoon. Anybody want to buy my socks?"

For Canadians, it is little snatches like this which shape our attitudes to the American draft. We look with benign compassion on the plight of our brethren south of the border; we chuckle at the "draft-dodger blues"; sometimes we tremble with emotion. We may have friends or relatives in the American Army, or views on the Vietnam war. For the most part, however, we are detached, here in our draftless country, and find it close to impossible to appreciate the effect of the draft on our American counterparts.

Intense personal effect

Young Americans hang on every word of draft regulation revisions with an avid interest. In 1963, for instance, President Kennedy altered the draft laws to place married, childless males in a less vulnerable position for the draft than single males. The marriage rate of American twenty-one-year-olds immediately rose by ten per cent.

The U.S. draft has an intense personal effect on that country's youth. Within five days of his eighteenth birthday, every male American must register with his local draft board. There are over 4000 of these boards, each composed of five local worthies. These local draft boards classify registrants by placing them in one of seventeen categories, ranging from 1-A (available for military service) to V-A (over the age of liability for military service).

These local boards really control the draft, for by their necessarily arbitrary classifications they decide, subject to appeal, who serves and who doesn't. They receive monthly requests from the Department of Defense for a certain number of conscripts (23,300 are being sought this month), and they supply these by going through the Classifications in a prescribed order. "Delinquents" are taken first, followed by volunteers (those, who, rather than waiting to be called up, want to serve their two years immediately), single males without deferment, married childless males, and so on.

("Delinquents" are men who have criminal records in juvenile or adult courts, and are classified at the discretion of the local draft board. Not included in this group, however, are persons convicted of crimes punishable by more than a year in prison. These ex-convicts are granted exemption as "morally" unfit for service—classification 4-F.)

The arbitrary classification of registrants leaves doubts regarding the unbiased nature of the selection system. The status of conscientious objector is perhaps most under dispute.

The Selective Service Act in the United States exempts those who "by reason of religious training and belief ... (are) conscientiously opposed to combatant training and service in the armed forces". The Act goes on, however, to explain that "Religious training and belief in this connection means an individual's belief in a relation to a Supreme Being involving duties superior to those arising from any human relation, but does not include essentially political, sociological, or philosophical views on a merely personal moral code."

Thus it would seem that atheists, agnostics, humanists, and those who just abhor killing people need not apply. But even this is not certain, since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in 1965 (U.S. vs. Seeger) that the real criterion is "whether a given belief that is sincere and meaningful occupies a place in the life of its possessor parallel to that filled by the orthodox belief in God." While offering an opportunity for more lenient interpretation (which has not been forthcoming) this ruling still does not allow an escape hatch for those who believe merely that war is immoral.

Those who do attain conscientious objector classification are required to perform an equivalent period of non-combatant service, such as stretcher-bearing, or, if they object to any "participation in war", to take menial jobs in hospitals or charitable institutions.

Deferments are allowed for students, agricultural and defense workers, teachers, and others engaged in "civilian work contributing to the maintenance of national health, safety and interest". The American government has acknowledged that this is a useful way to keep young men in occupations which may be lacking in status and remuneration, but which the government feels are essential to national welfare.

Draft deferments also offer students an incentive to stay in school and to produce good grades. In order to retain his deferred student status (classification I-S), the male student must be in the upper half of his first year class the upper two-thirds in second year, and the upper three-quarters in third year. "Satisfactory progress" is all that is required in Graduate School. On completion of his schooling, however, he will be made a prime candidate for induction, ranking behind only delinquents and volunteers.

Subtle discrimination

The Selective Service Act says "there shall be no discrimination for or against him (the potential draftee) because of his race, creed or colour, or because of his membership activity in any labour, political, religious or other organization," and that "each such registrant shall receive equal justice."

But in a set-up involving preferential categories for selection, the way is left clear for subtle discrimination against certain groups. "Delinquents" are placed at the head of the induction list while skilled workers in certain industries are given special treatment. The Act thus has the practical effect of discriminating against the poor man (and, consequently, in the United States, the Negro), since his opportunity to reach one of the deferred categories is distinctly less than that of someone from a higher economic level.

In addition, poorer boys form a disproportionately large part of the 20 per cent of the armed service on combat duty, because their generally lower level of education makes them ineligible for many safer, more sophisticated assignments. Critics decry this as a situation in which "the rich get out, and the poor get shot at". Sixty per cent of high school grads are drafted, but only forty per cent of college grads.

A further impediment to making the draft a "fair and just" system is the wide disparity in regional procedures. In 1965, for example, Massachusetts exempted 8.9 per cent of its registrants as 4-F ("physically, mentally, or morally unfit" for service in the armed forces). In the same year, the comparable figure for Michigan was only 1.7 per cent.

The disparity is even more impressive at more localized levels. One district may not call up any draftees, while at the same time another may be taking married men with children. The draft boards themselves, which are chosen by Draft Director General Lewis Hershey on the advice of state governors, are not always very representative. Usually they are filled by staid, respectable, conservative citizens. On most boards in the Southern States, Negroes are grossly underrepresented.

The draft system can also be used as a club to silence dissent. Hershey recently proposed classifying all anti-Vietnam war protesters as delinquents so that they would be inducted as soon as possible. While the suggestion met with a chilly response, and was not officially adopted, the freedom of the draft boards enables them to provide limited implementation of the policy, if they wish to do so. Seven of the 28 University of Michigan students who sat in at the Ann Arbor Selective Service Board on October 15, 1965 lost their student deferments within 30 days.

In spite of these apparent injustices, supporters of the draft feel that the system as it now stands comes close to being as fair as possible. There has been some support for a universal conscription system. The feeling expressed by Lewis Hershey is that the universal system would not only reduce draft inequalities; it would give American youth an outlet for its energies and a chance to acquire a feeling of self-worth and civic pride.

In 1952, a bill to introduce a universal system to the U.S. was defeated by Congress. And it is unlikely that such a system will be instituted in the near future, since the American Army easily fills all its military needs through the draft, even in wartime. The idea of a lottery, such as the one used in Mexico, has been rejected.

Abolition of the draft, is also unlikely. Studies have shown that about 40 per cent of the people who volunteer for the services do so because of the threat of the draft. The implication is that military strength would fall drastically if compulsory service were abolished.

Opposition to conscription takes a unique form in the United States. American assumptions of limited government lead to basic disagreement with the use of youth as a "national resource". And the questions then arise: Is the draft really necessary to the preservation of the American Way? Could the resources, both human and material, be better used for non military ends? Can a man pick those laws which he feels are unjust, and refuse to obey them?

Facing the decision

The questions are hypothetical. Right now, almost every American 18-year-old male is still faced with a momentous decision. Does he stay in school, or try to get into a "vital" industry, with the possibility that he will lose his deferment at any time? Does he volunteer for service and sign up for three, four or five years rather than the two he must serve if conscripted? And if he is conscripted, he faces the prospect of another two post-term years of regular training in the reserve, during which time he will be unable to leave the country without the permission of his local draft board. Or does he opt for six months' active service and five years in the reserve, with the chance of being called into active duty at any time? Does he volunteer for the draft, or wait for his plans to be disrupted at the whim of the draft board? Does he try for conscientious objector status and two years' labour in a job of the government's choice?

And what about the stigma attached to 4-F ("morally unfit") classification? What happens if he wants to serve but can't?

That's what he has to face at 18. After that, one wonders if he needs an army to turn him into a man.

Lack of money: a major problem at UBC

VANCOUVER (Special) — The financial situation at the University of British Columbia is appalling, UBC President Kenneth Hare said last week.

"I'm very much opposed to blaming the government. The electorate gets the government it deserves."

Erratic harbinger of better things?

By ALAN GORDON

Well, this is better. Friday's opening of Brouart at Hart House Theatre was an erratic harbinger of better things to come. The Drama Centre has finally, with the help of Leon Major and Les Lawrence, the designer, mounted a show that remotely resembled something that should be in a theatre and not in an essay concerned with, say, the decline of theatre.

Brouart is an actable, at times gripping piece that describes what must be the bureaucrat's nightmare: an occasion when all the forms and ceremonies of the institution fail him and he is forced to deal with a "special case." Brouart is a prison warden, and runs a tight ship. Everything is in its place, and he insists that his assistant, and other subordinates, both of them, call him chief. Brouart is a man with a carefully mapped out life. Into his microcosmic order, is thrown a man who has been tried and convicted for murder. He claims he has not caused the deaths, rather he has known about them before they happened. But this is no matter to Brouart. It is Brouart's duty, as it always has been in these cases, to keep the condemned man occupied; to keep his thoughts from wandering to the chopping block. The condemned man insists that he is innocent, and after two more incredibly tedious acts, we are told that innocent though he be, his kind of innocence has no place in our world of the automatic and valueless.

The problem with the play, Brouart, is that the author, Claude Aveline, shouldn't have tried to make the thing into a play. At least not a full-length, three-acter. There is enough stuff in it for about one act, or about twenty pages of short story. What the infantile program notes describe as "clear cut personages" are one dimensional, boring stereotypes. What took Aveline an act and a half of chatter to establish, Pinter could have made clear in about two sentences and three revealing pieces of business. Durenmatt would not have bothered to tell the story at all.

Director Leon Major, following his author's lead, leaped at every chance to overplay the action. The production was thick with obvious flag-waving and frantic signalling when a quiet pointing would have been more effective. Brouart (played by the omnipresent James Bradford) is allowed to indulge himself in such a state of delirium tremens and high-fallutin' theatrics after a few gulps of brandy, that I was sure that we were seeing a propaganda piece for prohibition.

The whole tone of the production was one of inflated self-indulgence. Henry Tarvainen playing the part of the condemned man's lawyer had us convinced, for the first act, that he was the devil himself, and not just the devil's advocate. Everything was so INTENSE!!! And with so little basis for the intensity. These guys were playing this little play as if it were the Crucible... or SOMETHING!!!

Les Lawrence came up with a set that transformed Hart House theatre into a provincial prison. With plastic CBC bricks and careful painting, the visual aspect of the piece was one of almost complete realism. I'm not sure that realism was the key here, though. When a play is about the supernatural invading the petty and mundane, wouldn't surrealism be a more appropriate style for the show?

Anyway, I'm being picky. Leon Major got some of the best student performances seen here all year, and the Drama Centre has finally produced a show that was theatrical. As I said before, the play wasn't great, or even good, but the performances and the production values were. It seems as if the floundering Production end of the Drama Centre is finding its way. We'll just have to be more patient, I guess.

Pat Saul and Henry Tarvainen confront each other in 'Brouart'.

Wrestling Blues trim McGill & Queen's at Kingston

By DAVE POWELL

The University of Toronto wrestling team travelled to Kingston on Saturday to defeat Queens and McGill, in a tri-meet, by a score of 82 to 68, for McGill, and 58, for Queens.

In his first intercollegiate competition, Peter Celli (123 lb. class) had a fine debut with victories in both of his matches. Veterans Jim Doner (130) and Bob Kellerman (137) displayed their usual fine form to each win both of their events. Despite a bad back, Ron Wilson (145) pinned his first opponent, but lost a close decision, in the second. Rookie Dennis Boadway (152), fought well to gain a split in his pair of matches.

Bill Allison (160) pinned his first opponent, and then, in a tremendous display, whipped reigning OQAA and Canadian Intercollegiate champion Ron Stoodley of McGill.

Vic Helfand (177), ignored a bad knee, and showed excellent style in recording two victories. Mike Wright (191) registered a fall in his first match, and then put up a tough battle against McGill's great Intercollegiate champanion, Larry Barron, before finally being pinned. Heavyweight Alex Squires displayed good speed, and a lot of potential for a new man, as he split his matches.

Blues host MacMaster this Tuesday night, in their last official meet of the season before the OQAA finals in Guelph on Feb. 24-25.

Bryon leads swimmers to swamp

By DAVE POWELL

The Varsity swimming team erased any doubts as to their supremacy in OQAA swimming circles Saturday, by shellacking Queens, McGill, and U of Montreal in an intercollegiate meet in Kingston. Blues amassed 98 points to 46 for Queens, 44 for McGill and 9 for Montreal. In the process, Toronto won 10 of 12 events, and set pool records in nine of them.

Rookie Terry Bryon was outstanding, winning three events: the 1,000 and 500 yard freestyle and the 200 yard butterfly, all in record time. Illustrious Gaye Stratten, took the 200 yard backstroke, and the 200 individual medley, the latter in an unofficial Canadian intercollegiate record time. Captain Robin Campbell unofficially tied the OQAA record in the 200 free, and came a close second in the 500 free. Veteran Theo van Ryn won the 100 free, and Chris Fisher and Bob Watt placed 1-2 in the 50 free.

In the most exciting race of the day, rookie George Goldsmith, despite his best time ever, lost the 200 yard breastroke by inches to Tony Templeton of Queens.

In the relays, Stratten, Heatley, Paul Fisher, and van Ryn tied the OQAA record in the 400 yard medley and MacIntosh, Chris Fisher, Campbell, and van Ryn won the 400 free. Van Ryn swam his best time in four years of university competition in his 100 yard segment of the race.

Blues host McMaster on Tuesday night at 8 p.m. and then face two top local aquatic clubs, Etobicoke and the University Settlement, next Saturday afternoon, as a warm-up for the OQAA finals at Western on Feb. 24-25.

ICE BLUES TIE MAC FRIDAY NIGHT

CAGERS LOSE 107-97

Shinny-win over Montreal caps hectic week-end

By MIKE MCGARRY

Playing their third game in four nights, following a tough 2-2 draw with McMaster last Friday, Varsity Blues needed a third period scoring surge last night to overcome the stellar goal-tending of Montreal's Luc St. Jean. His superb net-minding kept Carabins in the game until the final stanza when Blues came alive for a 4-2 victory at Varsity Arena. Time after time seemingly certain goals were blocked by his nimble legs and agile hands.

FIRST PERIOD

Jacques Larin opened the scoring for Montreal, slipping the puck at 2:38, past Varsity's John Wrigley. Blues failed to capitalize on Carabins' lacklustre offence and they missed a tying goal when St. Jean robbed Bob by McClelland on a so'o breakaway. St. Jean frustrated Varsity on at least four other occasions in a very ragged period.

SECOND PERIOD

St. Jean continued to perform miracles in this period. He thwarted McClelland again on a screen drive in the first minute. At the other end, Blues' netminder John Wrigley played as if inspired by his opposite number, flopping in front of three dangerous Montreal shots only a minute later and spearing Robert Lafontaine's pointblank shot at the eight-minute mark. Meanwhile St. Jean was throwing a human barricade before powerplay drives by Blues' Gord Cunningham. Finally Brian St. John flipped a rebound overthe prone Carabin goal-tender at 13:32. When Murray Stroud single-handedly destroyed Montreal's powerplay it looked as if Blues were on their way. But the period ended with Montreal ahead 2-1 on a gift interception that Lafontaine slapped into the Toronto net late in the period.

THIRD PERIOD

The Varsity machine picked up momentum and overwhelmed Carabins' slim lead. At 2:27 Ward Passi swooped in on St. Jean's doorstep and parked Paul Laurent's rebound behind the goal line. Even so, Luc continued to astonish the fans as the play swarmed around him. Peter Speyer and Passi in particular were foiled on magnificent grabs and stabs by St. Jean. Brian Jones scored the winner mid-way through the period but it at most seemed anticlimactic after St. Jean's contortions.

In the barrage of rubber that Varsity launched at the Montreal goal it was amazing that the final score kept below double figures. The constant Toronto pressure was finally rewarded with a neat goal by Laurent on a set-up from Passi. The last six minutes were highlighted by Stroud's nifty rush through the entire Carabin team while Blues were short-handed, John Wrigley plugged the gap to shut off a last-ditch Montreal attack.

Around the Net . . . Shots on net: Toronto: 56, Montreal: 29. Twenty-nine of Toronto's 56 were in the third period. The three stars were St. Jean, Stroud, and Passi.

Mac centre Chuck Cippola, left uncovered in front of the net, blasted home a slapshot from fifteen feet.

Blues evened up the count early in period two when Brian Jones drove the puck into the upper right hand corner after Murray Stroud won the draw to the left of the net.

Toronto then took the lead at the start of the third period, scoring while a man short.

McClelland blocked a shot at his blueline and the puck slid down the ice just inside the Mac blue line. Marlin goalie Ian Budge, came far out of his net to clear the puck and knocked it right onto Stroud's stick. Stroud circled around the outstretched cager and fired the puck into the net.

McMASTER 2
VARSITY 2

By STEVE KATES

Weariness and a stout McMaster defence combined to hold the normally powerful Blues 2-2 on Friday night at Varsity Arena. Marlins, the last team to beat Varsity during intercollegiate play, employed a frustrating albeit effective exhibition of clutch and grab hockey. Four holding penalties were called in the first period alone while many other flagrant infractions of the same variety were overlooked. One of the Macmen was so caught up in this phase of the game that he reached out from the bench to grab a rushing Blue forward.

Blues, looking extremely tired after Thursday's game in Waterloo were continually being beaten to the puck. They played an uncharacteristically sloppy game and a Varsity miscue led to the first goal early in the game.

McMaster closed the scoring on a two-on-one break when Blues failed to get back to cover. John DeDiana carried the puck down the left side passing to Kelly who scored.

The game threatened to break into a brawl a number of times, and probably would have but for the restraint shown by Marlins. Their strategy seemed to be to get Blues angry, but keep their cool themselves, evidenced by the string of third period double penalties, to Mac for interference, to Blues for retaliating. Watt's New. Blues outshot Marlins 32 to 21, but very few of their shots were of the close-in variety — Ward Passi, who played a very steady game, was hit in the mouth with the puck near the end of the second period and required more than 20 stitches. He returned and played the entire third period.—The three stars were Stroud, John Wrigley and Don Lockenbauer.

Blues' playoff hopes flicker

By JIM MORRISON

Bill Fowler has had three unfulfilled ambitions during his tenure as McMaster basketball coach—to win a League championship, to beat Windsor Lancers, and to defeat Varsity Blues in Hart House. Saturday night's game left him with only two fields to conquer, as his Marauders came from behind in the dungeon to take Varsity 104-97.

The win was McMaster's first in seven starts. The loss was Toronto's fourth, virtually eliminating them from playoff contention. It will now take a combination of three Varsity wins and three Western losses to give Blues a shot.

For 30 minutes of Saturday's encounter, it looked like a Varsity win all the way. Marauders came out running, trying to pressure Blues early in the game. But bot shooting, chiefly from Bruce Dempster (14 points) and Ron Voake (13) kept Blues ahead 46-43 at the half.

After falling behind early in the second half, Varsity came storming back and built a 71-60 lead with eleven minutes to play. And with nine minutes left, Blues were still up 79-70.

But from that point on, the game belonged to McMaster. Peter Wheatley and Andy Martinson took over the boards completely, leaving Varsity only the outside shot, and their man-to-man defense cut off Bruce Dempster's shooting.

Paul Allingham and Karl Mearns started sinking incredible shots from way outside, and Wheatley kept dumping in any rebounds. With three minutes to go, Marauders had pulled ahead 93-87.

Varsity gave it one more try, as Ron Voake narrowed the count to 93-91 in the final two minutes. But a combination of unbelievable shooting and defensive hustle rebuilt Mac's lead to the final seven points.

The one player Marauders couldn't control was Mark White, who played his best game of the season. Smallest (5'8") player on the Toronto team, White checked, stole the ball, and drove through and around the Mac team for 26 points, 21 of them in an amazing second half performance.

Peter Wheatley was Marauders' individual star. The 6'6" center made full use of his height, rebounding and hitting for 32 big points. Following him in the scoring were Paul Allingham with 17 points, and Jim Murray and Karl Mearns with 16 apiece. All three did most of their scoring in the frenzied final minutes.

SCORING:
For McMASTER: Wheatley 32, Allingham 17, Mearns 16, Murray 16, Martinson 14, Tebb 9.
For VARSITY: White 26, Dempster 18, Voake 17, Neider 16, Hadden 14, Slater 4, McLaughlin 2.

Committee to study "outmoded" discipline methods

By LOUIS ERLICHMAN

A presidential advisory committee is being formed to study all aspects of discipline at the University of Toronto, Acting President John Sword announced yesterday.

The committee, with student, staff and administration representatives, will "review and if necessary redefine the proper limits of the university's disciplinary jurisdiction, and advise on whether existing machinery is adequate or needs to be changed.

"Within the university there has been a growing feeling that our disciplinary arrangements are cumbersome and outmoded," President Sword said. "Certainly they have not come under close examination for many years. In the meantime changes have been taking place in the university, as they have in society at large, and the traditional procedures must be re-examined in the light of those changes."

The committee will report to the president next year.

"It's about time," was the comment of Students Council President Tom Faulkner.

"The broad terms of reference will allow the committee to discuss both students and faculty," Faulkner said, "and study matters in the federated colleges, right down to residence level.

"The committee should study the difference between academic and non-academic crimes, the question of double jeopardy, and get rid of the treatment of students in the university as children," Faulkner said.

The 10-man committee to be chaired by Professor Ralph Campbell, associate dean of the faculty of arts and science, will likely consist of two staff members, two administration appointees, at least one graduate from outside the university community and three students chosen by SAC.

Faulkner will ask SAC tonight to advertise for the student members.

"It is not proper for SAC to instruct its nominees," Faulkner said, "since the committee will be making a thorough study of the problem."

The Caput first proposed the committee two years ago, says Faulkner. Last year, a similar committee set up by President Claude Bissell never took action.

Faulkner blamed the death of Law Dean C.A. Wright, a committee member, and the inclusion of University governors who had little time to give to the study, for the committee's ineffectiveness.

In addition, he conceded a lack of communication between President Bissell and himself had impeded the committee's operation.

"The present committee should be more effective," Faulkner explained, "since it has a wider frame of reference and does not contain members of the Board of Governors.

"Several issues, like the Varsity reprint, the subway caper and bookstore thefts have come up recently to emphasize the need for the committee," Faulkner said.

While the Sword announcement stressed that the committee would be "free to determine its own procedures in order not to prejudice their action" Faulkner feels that it will hold open hearing like the Macpherson committee on undergraduate instruction.

"It is really important that interested students and student groups present thoughtful briefs and case studies to the committee."

EDUCATION - ELECTION ISSUE

Steve Langdon, Glen Brownlee, and Peter Szekely confront audience at Victoria College.

By JIM COWAN

Education at the University of Toronto is a major issue in the Students Administrative Council presidential campaign, say the three declared candidates.

Glen Brownlee (IV Vic), Steve Langdon (III Trin) and Peter Szekely (III UC) last night addressed an after-dinner audience of about 40 at Burwash Hall, Victoria College.

The hopefuls were greeted with polite attention as they outlined their platforms for the first time.

The theme running through all the speeches was the same.

Brownlee led off with "Education at this institution is not the best — that's an understatement."

Langdon followed, pointing out the "obvious problems" in the field of arts and science. "And these problems are just as real for the professional faculties."

Szekely picked up the thread with the observation that SAC must be concerned with "upgrading the level of education."

But candidates had different solutions for the problem.

Szekely suggested that SAC concentrate on setting short-term priorities and working to improve services, such as housing and food.

"We should have good, cheap food, and adequate housing," he said. "I will not just write reports. If elected, I will act on reports such as the one on housing."

Langdon said a major goal for SAC next year would be to see that the Macpherson report is not shelved.

"It is also very important to implement and develop course unions and evaluations," he stated.

"SAC must encourage course unions," said Brownlee, "and get the local councils into the field of educational research. SAC is the most effective body to bring about a change."

Other planks in the Vic candidate's platform include residences for Scarborough and Erindale Colleges. "If the administration won't build them, then SAC should." — and a referendum for important campus issues.

Langdon spent some time explaining the student-centered idea of teaching. He suggested that SAC set up its own courses with the younger faculty members so students could learn as they wished.

"This is just one way we could provide a more satisfactory learning atmosphere," he said.

Langdon went on to call for an appeal committee to help students involved with fighting the administrations.

"The most frustrating thing a student encounters is the various layers of bureaucracy when he wants to change courses, alter his options, or faces administrative discipline," he commented.

Szekely called for greater political sophistication on the part of SAC. "We haven't been sophisticated up to now," he said.

"We must face the reality of the administration. We must deal with the administration realistically; marches aren't the way."

Questioned on whether they would drop their courses if elected, Langdon and Szekely both said they would give SAC "as much time as necessary," and give SAC business priority.

Brownlee who graduated this spring, would take the year off to be full-time president.

Rochdale calls for applicants

By INGRID VABALIS

Rick Wearn sat cross-legged on a blanket-covered mattress and explained how he is recruiting applicants for Rochdale College. Wearn is Rochdale's registrar.

He was wearing black jeans and a turtle-neck sweater, complete with beaded Indian moccasins and hippyish beads, tawny blood hair with beard to match.

"Interesting people are the ones I feel good about," Wearn said. Interesting people are the ones he's recruiting for the radical education of Rochdale.

Wearn is 25 and completed two years of a physics and chemistry course at our multiplicity before parting company with it. His costume may have been untypical for a registrar but the clothes and his title aren't really incongruous or even important when you talk to him.

RICK WEARN

Rochdale is in many ways as unorthodox as its Registrar.

The college is still operating out of several houses owned by the Campus Co-Operative Residences, but next fall will move into the 18-storey building under construction at Huron and Bloor Streets.

It will offer five types of accommodation for 850 people. There are Ashram rooms, Gnostic chambers, Franz Kafka Memorial suites, Aphrodite suites, Zeus suites and parking in heated garages (the application form gives details and costs).

The 98 Aphrodite suites are the fastest-going ones — not too surprising since the one-bedroom apartments (with kitchen, bath and living room) are only $130 a month.

So far, Wearn has received 200 applications in all.

Selections are made on a monthly quota system. It's still on a first-come, first-served basis with the number of better accommodations decreasing each month.

"The lazy slobs who don't apply until May will be discriminated against," Wearn warned.

There are no dons at Rochdale, no landlords, no prefabricated rules or restrictions.

"Rochdale doesn't really have things for people to do or rules to follow," explained Wearn. "You do what you want to do."

There really isn't much Wearn can say when people ask "what can I DO at Rochdale?" except tell about the things that are going on. Anything can be made to happen there if you want it to.

Around Campus ...

Tartu? you say, come and find out...

Tartu, Rochdale? Macpherson? The Campus Centre? Housing? Student power?

If you're a bit bewildered by the bandying about of words like this, here's a chance for you to get things straight and air your beefs.

This Saturday the Students Administrative Council, together with the Council of Presidents of the University of Toronto, is sponsoring such a conference.

And it's just in time for prospective candidates in the upcoming SAC constituency elections in the first week of March to bone up on what's happening. But it's hoped real people will come too.

Following a keynote address (Student Government - Why Bother?) by Steve Ireland, University of Waterloo students council president, participants will break up into discussion groups.

What We Learn (more harm than good?) will be assessed under the leadership of SAC education commissioner Bob Bossin (III Inn).

Who Should Run the University will be led by outgoing SAC President Tom Faulkner.

At noon there'll be a preview of the Campus (floor plans and models), which goes under construction this summer.

Where the Power Lies is the title of the afternoon panel discussion. After that you'll be free to browse from group to group again.

A splendid time is guaranteed for all.

Canadians are efficient in foreign aid

Canadian foreign aid got a pat on the back yesterday from S. K. Westall, director of information for the external aid office.

He told the University of Toronto Liberal club that Canadian aid is concentrated in countries that can make most efficient use of it.

"But the overall picture isn't good," he said. "Factories are being built without access to electricity or water."

New machinery for dispensing aid effectively has been set up, he said, and the United Nations Development Program examines the practicability of new projects.

"We try to give the best we can within the nation's own plans for economic development. Canada has special expertise in agriculture and hydro-electric power.

"There is a great deal of thought behind our foreign aid. What we are doing we are doing well."

Students have opted out of multiversity

The 40 full-time students at Rochdale are a group of interested people who have opted out of the multiversity structure and are trying to create their own experimental university. The object of the game is to provide a greater freedom of thought and expression.

"For a $25 fee, anybody can be a member of Rochdale," said Wearn. "You don't have to live in the building and you can still work or go to the university full time."

He has been on radio interviews talking about Rochdale; he has spoken to various student groups and travelled for the Canadian Union of Students (CUS) organizing co-operative residences and giving information about the College.

For campus recruiting Wearn said "I'll put up posters."

A Rochdale calendar will be coming out soon giving a physical description of the facilities, the ideas behind the development, the history of the place and the kinds of things happening there now.

It will describe Rochdale — or maybe not. How does one describe freedom so that people hung up on structure and non-structure can understand?

Wearn essentially dislikes the kinds of structures that lead to bureaucracies. He says his registrar title isn't leading to a bureaucracy.

"My job will be finished when I accomplish the things I was hired to do." He will fill the building and quit at the end of September.

Wearn does not want to perpetuate the position of registrar if there is no function to fulfill.

"The people living there can decide what to do about renting next year."

He says he would like to stay around next year because he is curious to see how 850 people, most of whom don't know each other, will react to a non-structure situation.

"The building will be in such a chaos for the first year," he said almost with glee.

But then maybe something other than re-tape and rule-following animals will emerge.

Rick Wearn discusses the aims of Rochdale College with Ingrid Vobolis, in his pod-office.

Hawks have won in Vietnam: Scheer

By SUE CARTER

WINNIPEG — The United States will pass the point of no return before November by launching a full-scale invasion of North Vietnam, predicts Robert Scheer, editor of Ramparts magazine.

He told the University of Manitoba's recent Conference on International Affairs that the hawks have won the debate over further escalation of the war and "dissent can only force society to pay the price for regressing".

Stressing Canadian involvement in the war, he pointed out that "bombs don't just carry the name of the U.S. — they carry the name of the western world of democracy." If fear of economic reprisals inhibits protest, he added, then Canada should stop complaining about being a satellite.

Separatist Rene Levesque, another speaker featured at the conference, also challenged Canada's satellite status.

He said nothing more can be accomplished within the "mutually sterilizing satellite construction called Canada".

As long as the provinces retain equal status, increased concessions to Quebec will lead to a highly decentralized, balkanized country. "Quebec," said Mr. Levesque, "feels like a nation in the full sense of the word."

The Quebecois, aware of their resources, no longer need to "gargle ourselves with democracy," Mr. Levesque predicted that his party committed to the separation of Quebec, will take power within three elections.

In past years, the U of M Conference has dealt with commonwealth affairs. This year's format broke with tradition and focused on more immediately relevant aspects of Canadian foreign policy.

In addition to Levesque and Scheer, seminars were conducted by University of Toronto's James Eayres and Geoffrey Murray, a senior member of the external affairs department.

The delegates, who came from most Canadian universities, conducted all proceedings on an effective (if hesitatingly) bilingual basis. The alignments reflected Canada's traditional cleavages: east and west, French and English, radicals and conservatives.

The heterogenous group did not attempt any policy statement but sought optimistically for the elusive consensus.

"They should all be thrown in the jug."
 TTC Chairman Ralph Day, after the Engineers' Feb. 1966
 subway coper.

Acting President John Sword sat in his office yesterday and issued a directive to his information department to announce formation of a disciplinary committee.

Under the chairmanship of Prof. Ralph Campbell, one of the two associate deans of the Arts and Science Faculty, the committee is to study the entire range of official discipline on this campus. Disciplinary powers are at present vested in CAPUT, a body made up of all the heads of colleges and faculties within the university.

CAPUT meets in secret and once gave the Students Administrative Council the right to send a delegate to participate in its hearings. No delegate participates now because SAC withdrew him some time ago and refuses to work along with CAPUT until its methods are changed.

One of the delegates sent recently, pointed out that he was shocked by the inequities of the sentences CAPUT has handed out. He related the example of two cases that came up one day: one involving a theft from the bookstore, the other involving a small prank — a male student had been caught inside a women's residence. The thief got off easily because he was represented by a lawyer; the prankster got screwed because he wasn't.

This delegate has since deepened his opinions on CAPUT and decided that it should not have disciplinary powers over matters other than academic infractions. Current inequities in discipline don't reach the students because the meetings are secret.

Secret meetings were one point of contention when the current committee was set up originally—last year by President Claude Bissell. SAC had appointed its members but then pulled them off when the other members refused to hold open meetings.

After months of disagreements and misunderstandings, the project was dropped because of the death of Law's Dean C. A. Wright.

The new plans look more promising. Its members are drawn from the faculty and student body—no Board of Governors members—and according to Tom Faulkner, meetings will be held in the open. Briefs will be invited from anyone interested in the matter.

Perhaps this committee will be able to come up with a solution to the present outdated disciplinary methods. More importantly, the committee should come up with a clear definition of which disciplinary powers any official body should have. Should it have the spanking powers of a parent or not? Does the university have the obligation to watch over the morals, social conduct and actions of its students, thereby taking the place of the parent?

The committee has to work out the problem of double jeopardy — best illustrated by an incident that occurred at the University of Western Ontario last term. A student was expelled after he had been convicted in a local court for possession of marijuana. UWO, in effect, added punishment where punishment had already been given.

In that case, it is easy to suspect that the university acted under pressure from local public and official opinion on the matter of drug and marijuana use and rising sexual freedom among university students.

This matter of outside pressure may be the most important part of the committee's deliberations. Hopefully it will work out a method of insulating the university from these pressures.

For example, the last time CAPUT made a major decision, it fined the Engineering Society $1,000 for a caper that disrupted subway operation in Toronto. CAPUT wanted to forget the whole thing because nothing could be proved. No charges had been laid and no one was sure that students had actually caused the disruption; there was reasonable suspicion that a workman had actually pulled a power switch, cutting off electricity in the tracks.

Yet because of the embarrassingly irate shouting by Toronto's newspapers and TTC chairman Ralph Day, CAPUT felt itself obliged to levy the fine. In otherwords, every Engineering student paid for an incident that no one had proven was their fault.

Disciplinary powers are often used in our society by the elders to check the actions of the young. When the university allows outside pressures to move them into disciplinary action, it is participating in just such a misuse of power. The committee should study this aspect of the matter fully.

There is good reason for saying that CAPUT should have powers over academic infractions, but not for other matters. Those should be left to the law or to students themselves. Perhaps a student court is the answer — it has worked well at other universities. Certainly some kind of restriction of official disciplinary powers is called for.

don't browse here

Sir:

Your correspondent John M. Sedlak (The Varsity, February 2) seems not to be aware that the University Textbook Store is not a browsing bookstore, but one which has required and recommended textbooks arranged on the shelves in accordance with the courses in which they are used. Northrop Frye's Anatomy of Criticism is prescribed reading course for Slavic Languages and Literature 1201 and was placed in that section on the request of the Department of Slavic Studies. (Since Mr. Sedlak found it while looking for a novel by Flaubert, one would assume that he was aware of the course arrangement — why would he search for a French novel in the Slavic Studies section unless he knew that Madame Bovary was being used in Slavic Languages and Literature 1001?). After Mr. Sedlak mistakenly persuaded a sales clerk to move the Anatomy of Criticism, Slavic Studies complained, quite properly, about the change.

Unlike the Textbook Store, the University Bookroom is a browsing store. Mr. Sedlak's friend could have saved herself a trip to Yale University, because Anatomy of Criticism has never been out of stock in the Bookroom, except for a brief period last October when it was reprinting. Furthermore, she could probably have found it in several other local bookstores.

We regret, with Mr. Sedlak, the occasional difficulty and delay in obtaining special order books, but blame for this delay cannot be centred on the Textbook Store. Orders are placed with publishers by telephone and mailed within hours after they have been placed by customers. Since March 1, 1967, the Special Order Department has filled 21,383 special orders. One of the books ordered in Mr. Sedlak's case was a John Wiley publication. Wiley's were closed all of November to move their warehouse. Their order fulfillment was considerably in arrears. The book has arrived, seven weeks after having been ordered, and we regret delays such as this just as much as our customers.

But ordering direct from publishers is not the answer. As long as publishers compete with their own customers (the bookstores) by allowing the same discounts to individuals, whether Faculty or not, they are not exactly giving the encouragement needed to build a strong book trade in Canada.

The University Bookstores are not perfect, but as the Report of the SAC Services Commission found, they are much superior to other stores in the country, and one only has to see the browsers in Bookroom at lunchtime to realize that the facilities at Toronto are appreciated.

why we protest

Sir:

As participants in the recent peace demonstrations at the University of Toronto, we feel it would be useful to defend our position as demonstrators, against the apathetic students who charge that anti-war demonstrations are futile.

All across Canada, largely because of the issues raised in the demonstrations, and the educational work of anti-war activists, there has been a growing reaction to the American intervention in Vietnam, and to Canada's military and diplomatic com-licity in the war. In fact, the most recent Gallup poll showed that a majority of Canadians having an opinion on the war, favour immediate American withdrawal. On this campus alone, we have noticed an increasing revulsion to the sale, by Canadian companies, of some $370 million worth of weapons to the Americans in 1967, and there seems to be rapidly growing doubts about whether students should take war-related jobs with such companies.

The first step in taking action to end the carnage is to convince people that the formerly sanctioned myths of American Cold War rhetoric do not excuse the barbarous U.S. Destruction of Vietnam; thus far peace demonstrators have succeeded in building a North American anti-war movement of millions.

On the evening of Friday, February 9, the peace movement in Toronto is sponsoring a massive demonstration outside the Royal York Hotel. This appears to us an excellent time to insist that the Liberal leadership candidates take strong and forthright positions against America's immoral position in the war, and against Canadian arms sales to the States. Inasmuch as Liberal leaders like Eric Kierens and Walter Gordon have already come out with strong stands on these issues, we feel that Friday's demonstrations should encourage the next Prime Minister to take some really positive steps to bring about peace. At the very least, Friday's demonstration will shift the focus of the leadership conference away from irrelevant back-stabbing commentaries of the candidates' personalities to some fundamental discussion of Canadian foreign policy and this country's role in securing peace in Vietnam.

you blundered

Sir:

There was an important factual mistake in Monday, February 5th's Varsity, which we feel should be immediately corrected. Since her election by the SAC last spring, Miss Laurel Sefton has served as the SAC Services Commissioner. At no time during the past or present year did Mr. David Nitkin serve as the Services Commissioner. Instead, both he and Mr. Schachar have been members of the Services Commission.

Sir:

In your report (Friday, February 2) concerning the resignation of the executive of the New College Student Council it stated that I was invited to attend the special Council meeting as an observer, and that I interjected my opinions despite the protests or the speaker.

The letter inviting me to the meeting explicitly asked me to attend in order to advise the Council, because it was in trouble. The letter was written "on behalf of the rump of the Student Council" and was signed by Mr. Elliott Markson, who has since become president.

The dirty air we breathe: what it does...

By DELLA CUMMINGS

Miss Cummings became interested in the serious problem of air pollution through an engineering friend of hers who had worked in the Ontario Department of Health. She is particularly outraged with those "in power" who are doing nothing about the dilemma.

After researching this article the author joined G.A.S.P.—Group Action to Stop Pollution.

"The time to begin air pollution control was yesterday or ten years ago. Let us not neglect it another day" This statement was part of the final Report of the Select Committee on Air Pollution and Smoke Control 1957. No, not 1967, 1957.

This committee was appointed in 1955 to examine existing legislation and practises in relation to smoke control and air pollution in Ontario, with particular reference to the installation and maintenance of equipment to control smoke and air pollution. The recommendations of the Select Committee included the following:

- (1) that an Ontario Air Pollution Control Commission should be established, organized, and brought into active operation immediately;
- (2) that the existing Ontario legislation dealing with air pollution control is antiquated and should be amended;
- (3) that the proposed Commission give immediate and serious attention to the disposal of garbage and industrial wastes;
- (4) that the internal combustion engine is one major source of air pollution which must be controlled as soon as possible;
- (5) that air pollution is a very real problem for the farmer;
- (6) that air pollution is a serious health hazard; and finally
- (7) that air pollution control is an important job worthy of the attention and the abilities of leaders in business, industry, science and government.

What happened to these recommendations?

Now, let us look at some of the recommendations in detail and see how much has been done in the past ten years.

With regard to the first two recommendations which concern air pollution legislation, it was also suggested that all exemptions and all provisions which in practise had the effect of creating exemptions to the existing air pollution control legislation be struck out of the legislation immediately. And as soon as the Air Pollution Control Commission be established the Municipal Act which purported to deal with air pollution and smoke control be repealed.

The above recommendations were finally carried out in part, with the passing of the Air Pollution Control Act of 1967 which gave the province jurisdiction in the field of air pollution.

"The internal combustion engine is one source of pollution which must be controlled as soon as possible."

An estimated 90,000 cars enter and leave the city between seven a.m. and ten p.m. on an average week day. These 90,000 cars burn a total of 90,000 gallons of gasoline a day. Research workers have found that for every gallon of gasoline burned in the modern automobile engine some 75, thousand billion particles are discharged into the atmosphere. Many of these particles are so minute that they can penetrate deep into the alveolar cells of the lungs where they may remain to cause severe damage.

In addition to these particles, automobile exhaust contains the following contaminants which react in the atmosphere in the presence of sunlight to form still additional compounds which are also irritating to the body and damaging to materials: unburned gasoline, nitrogen, ethane, organic acids, benzene and other aromatic compounds. Fuels which contain sulphur, as many brands of gasoline do, also produce oxides of sulphur.

It is interesting to note that it was stated to the Committee that the major automobile companies were pooling their facilities and their brains in a vigorous attack on the problem of auto exhaust discharge. One of their officials, speaking for all the companies told the committee that they confidently expected to have a practical answer to the problem early in the year 1957.

Now, let us look at three of the common contaminants mentioned above and see what their effects are on you and on me. Carbon monoxide is a colorless, odorless, gas. Its source is the incomplete combustion of any fuel containing carbon. Its density is almost the same as that of air, consequently, it does not rise quickly, especially when there is a temperature inversion.

A temperature inversion exists when there is a layer of warm air above the cooler ground level air. This warm layer acts as a lid preventing the rise and the dispersion of the air and pollutants dispersed.

When carbon monoxide is inhaled it passes through the lungs into the blood stream where it combines with haemoglobin with an affinity that is three hundred times greater than that of oxygen. By uniting with the haemoglobin, it renders the latter incapable of carrying oxygen throughout the body.

Giddiness, headaches, mental confusion, fainting

If a person has absorbed carbon monoxide into his blood to the extent of ten percent, he will not be functioning normally, but there are rarely any identifiable symptoms. At a twenty percent concentration, slight exertion will result in shortness of breath, giddiness, and headaches. At thirty percent concentration, the above symptoms occur without exertion and from thirty to fifty percent, severe headaches, mental confusion, dizziness, impairment of vision and hearing and collapse and fainting on exertion.

A study in a large U.S. city showed a concentration of between eight and twenty percent of carbon monoxide in the blood of cab drivers.

Another study, this one in Los Angeles, analysed the carbon monoxide concentrations of air near main arteries. At ten feet from the curb the concentrations ranged from 25 to 45 parts per million. At 25 feet from the road, from 20 to 40 parts per million with a high of 93.2 parts per million. At 50 feet from the curb, 15 to 35 parts per million with a top value of 83.5 parts per million.

Tests in downtown Toronto have indicated similar concentrations. Now the average concentration is 29 parts per million.

The presence of carbon monoxide even in slight amounts on and near heavily travelled roadways will cause most people to become stubborn, perverse or unruly and might explain in part the stubbornness, selfishness, and lack of consideration of pedestrian and driver. These behaviour reactions as well as a general slowing of reflexes, might also explain the increasing number of road accidents. Carbon dioxide also contributes to accidents by causing the type of smog for which Los Angeles is famous.

Formaldehyde and acetaldehyde —both deadly

Aldehydes are another of the major pollutants. One of these, formaldehyde is a colourless gas with a pungent odor and is slightly lighter than air. At low concentrations it causes burning and watering of the eyes and irritation of the mucous membranes of nose, mouth, throat and bronchial tubes. Exposure to heavier concentrations causes coughing, bronchitis, weakness, sleeplessness, loss of appetite, headache and congestion of bronchial tubes.

Acetaldehyde is a colorless volatile liquid with a fruity odor. As a vapor it is seven and one-half times heavier than air, which means that it does not easily rise. It is very irritating to the mucous membranes and for those who are sensitive to it, it causes asthma attacks. It has anaesthetic properties and can kill by respiratory paralysis. For the average person, exposure to severe concentration causes cough, bronchitis, cardiac conjunctival and night sweats.

A chemical process called polymerization occurs with both acetaldehyde and formaldehyde to produce new substances. Polymerization takes place in the atmosphere, in the presence of sunlight and produces new compounds which were never emitted into the atmosphere from the original sources of contamination. This process, therefore, helps to complicate the picture and the seriousness of the air pollution problem.

The third types of contaminants to be mentioned are oxides of nitrogen. These include, nitrous oxide, nitrogen dioxide and nitrogen tetraoxide which are produced by practically every kind of combustion and by many industrial processes. Automobiles, trucks and buses are significant sources: exhausts from internal combustion engines have been found to contain 4,000 parts per million of nitrogen during acceleration and over 1,500 parts per million while cruising. The maximum allowable concentration of nitrogen dioxide is five parts per million. Nitrogen dioxide is similar to carbon monoxide in that it does not give its victim any warning of its presence in the air he is breathing.

In slight concentration, nitrogen dioxide causes coughing and irritation to nose, throat and chest. More severe effects include pneumonia, lung abscess, emphysema and bronchiectases. In the lungs, oxides of nitrogen react to form nitric and nitrous acids which are both corrosive and irritating and which cause congestion of the bronchial tubes and lungs. They also react in the lungs to form nitrites which result in a fall in blood pressure, headache, weakness, and dizziness.

Continued or repeated exposure to low concentrations of nitrous oxide fumes leads to chronic irritation of the respiratory tract, cough, loss of appetite, gradual loss of vitality and loss of teeth. Constant irritation of the lungs will lower a person's resistance to pneumonia. It is known that concentrations of less than two parts per million cause extensive plant damage.

It was found in animal experiments in which animals were exposed to low concentrations of nitrogen dioxide for seven hours a day for from ten to 24 days, that the animals developed patches of emphysema in their lungs. Once established emphysema remains as a permanent disability.

Oxides of nitrogen are also important because they take part in, or have a catalytic effect on a great many of the reactions which go on in the atmosphere involving other contaminants.

Pollution always injurious to our health

In its sixth recommendation—"THAT AIR POLLUTION IS A SERIOUS HEALTH HAZARD," the committee stated: "we are convinced that air pollution is always injurious to health in some way, to a greater or lesser extent depending on the severity of the pollution."

The health damage may be mental or physical or both; the effects may range from mental depression and loss of normal vitality and efficiency through headaches, chronic bronchitis, sinusitis, rhinitis and asthma to cancer and death.

Researchers believe there is a close link between air pollution and cancer, as well as a shorter life span for those who live in polluted areas. The incredible difference in the occurrence of piratory cancers and many other diseases between urban and rural populations is believed to be due to air pollution.

It has also been the cause of ship, aircraft and auto accidents. Carbon monoxide is one pollutant which is contributing to the mounting accident toll by impairing the automobile driver's ability to react quickly.

Air Pollution is a danger to all, but it particularly affects the very young, the aged, and those suffering from heart and respiratory diseases. It fosters disease by spreading carcinogenic chemicals, allergens and bacteria and by filtering a significant percentage (frequently more than 50% of the sun's bacteria-killing, air-purifying, health-giving rays.

Cigarette smoking has a dual purpose in pollution—self pollution as well as atmospheric pollution. It is estimated that the smokers of Ontario throw into the air more than 12 tons of contaminants a day.

The effects of cigarette smoking on air pollution were clearly seen at the 1956 World Soccer game where continual haze created by all the smokers at the game hung over the stadium.

Breathing polluted air equals two packs of cigarettes a day

For the non smoker, breathing polluted air like smoking two packs of cigarettes a day. For the smoker, the effects are multiplied because he smokes and breathes. The smoker thus greatly increases his chance of getting cancer.

Studies in New Zealand and South Africa have shown the occurrence of cancer among the British immigrants to these countries have had startling results. It was found that the incidence of cancer among British immigrants was much higher than among native New Zealanders or South Africans and South Africans are the heaviest smokers in the world. It was also found that the incidence of cancer among British immigrants was much greater for those who had immigrated after their thirtieth birthday.

"I think that we have done important work this time and now we adjourn this meeting."

The results of these studies would be explained by the fact that Britain has a severe air pollution problem and that it had affected these immigrants before they left. Britain has had an air pollution problem for seven hundred years.

In Britain and Wales, chronic bronchitis outranks all other respiratory diseases as a crippler and a killer. It accounts for a loss of 27 million working days a year and is given as the cause of death on 30,000 death certificates each year—more than lung cancer and T.B. combined.

The relationship between air pollution and chronic bronchitis was made very evident during the smog episodes of 1948, '52, '56 and '57 in London when bronchitis took such a heavy toll. Other disasters, including the one at Donora, Pa. in 1947 when a week's smog caused 20 deaths and countless illness, also corroborated the evidence that air pollution is a serious hazard to health.

It is known that cancer producing agents are in the air we breathe. It has been shown that cancer occurs in animals which are put in cages in which the air contains concentrations of urban smog. It is a known fact that cancer rates in large cities are twice as high as those in non-urban areas.

Dust fall samples taken in Ontario's major cities prove that hundreds of tons of dust, soot, fly ash, metallic oxides and organic matter of various kinds fall on each square mile every year. For each ton of matter that falls and is measured, there is at least an equal amount of other contaminants which remain suspended in the atmosphere in particles small enough to be inhaled into the lungs. This intake of filth puts an increased load on a person's circulatory system. Sometimes, when the strain is too great, the circulatory system breaks down and illness, disease and death are the result.

Government and business have ignored the problem

This is where the failure has been evident. Our leaders in government industry and business have neglected their responsibility, those responsibilities which are the obligations of their position. Their failure has not been one of apathy; it has been much worse for they have either ignored or minimized the seriousness of Ontario's air pollution problem.

ing of the Air Pollution Control Committee."

Where can their values be? Certainly not in their neighbors' health or in a green countryside or in a bright blue sky. If this attitude characteristic of so many of our leaders keeps up, what kind of a heritage will they and we have to give to our children. For it is our children, their's and yours and mine who will suffer most. They will grow up not knowing what clean air is. And the people who can and should be doing something about the problem are doing little or nothing.

It is a rather unfortunate aspect of man's nature that he is loath to do anything until it is too late. There have been several disasters in which a large number of people became ill and some died as a result of breathing the poisoned atmosphere. Two such disasters occurred in Pennsylvania and in London. The people in those areas learned the price of air pollution the hard way.

Toronto has a great deal of disaster potential

I suppose we will also have to wait until countless numbers of Torontonians die before we take some steps to effectively control air pollution. And don't think that air pollution disaster won't occur in Toronto, because Toronto has a great deal of disaster potential. Toronto is so situated that there are frequently high pressure conditions which are characterized by little wind and a temperature inversion, both of which hinder the dispersion of pollutants.

In addition, there is the "lake breeze" effect. During the day the land warms up faster and consequently the air over the land warms up faster than the air over the lake. Situated along the lakeshore are numerous industrial stacks, some as high as 500 feet, for the supposed purpose of dispersing pollutants.

The difference in temperature between the air over the land and the air over the water sets up a current in which the wind blows in from the lake to the land, thus scattering the smoke fumes, gusts and other pollutants from the stacks over the city.

The general movement of air and the dispersal of pollutants is also inhibited by the tall downtown buildings. Another unfortunate situation is that the morning and evening rush hours occur during temperature inversions, which means that the pollutants from the many cars coming into the city in the morning are not dispersed until afternoon and the fumes from the night rush hour hangs over the city until late at night.

During a high pressure situation, these pollutants keep accumulating and accumulating until there is sufficient movement to disperse them. So, you see Toronto does have disaster potential and if a high pressure situation existed long enough the great accumulation of pollutants would certainly make breathing hazardous.

Much of the above information was taken from the Final Report of the Select Committee on Air Pollution and Smoke Control, written ten years ago.

You can imagine how much more serious the situation is now.

Since 1957, not a great deal has been done. In 1967, the Air Pollution Control Act was passed which transferred the control of air pollution from the city to the provincial Department of Health. This had been recommended by the committee ten years earlier. Sampling stations have been set up in Toronto, Sarnia and elsewhere to record the type and the amounts of pollutants in the air. The government wants to be sure that the air pollution problem is serious before taking any action.

We know what we want

Ten years have passed and very little has been done. Why? It is hard to understand this lack of action, when so much is at stake. Air Pollution is a sign of waste. Don't these industries realize that they too will benefit from air pollution control. It costs both industry and the individual much more for dirty air than for clean air.

Industry, however considers any expense toward controlling air pollution as an unnecessary expense. Has the almighty dollar won again? Anything to save a "buck" even living with dirty air. Our leaders have been given the challenge and have failed us, so it is now our turn to meet the situation with all the courage of our conviction. You only live once, you might as well live first class and that means clean air. We know what we want and we are determined to get it.

No blacks are full citizens: Boutelle

By PAUL CARSON

Paul Boutelle is a handsome, articulate and intelligent 35-year-old Harlem cab-driver who would very much like to be vice-president of the United States.

However, as he is running on behalf of the Socialist Workers Party, his prospects for election are, to say the least, rather remote.

"Of course we won't win," Boutelle says, "but we can use the campaign to present the truths of revolutionary socialism and black nationalism."

Speaking yesterday afternoon at the International Students Centre, Boutelle said black people should have the power to control their political, social and economic destinies.

"We are at war with the white, capitalist, racist system, and in war you use all possible methods to win."

Boutelle describes himself as a "black nationalist born in America." "There is not a single black person in the United States who is a full citizen; the only full citizens are the white, moneyed protestants."

"Capitalism cannot give true freedom to black people. If you believe in capitalism you are automatically a white racist."

"Look at the Indians here in Canada," Boutelle argued "Either they are inferior or there is something wrong with the system."

"There isn't a Christian country that isn't either racist or has the potential to be racist."

All this from an uneducated Harlem negro who voted "the straight Republican ticket" in 1956.

"I voted for Ike," Boutelle reflects, "then woke up and discovered what the condition of black people really is. Revolutionary socialism is the only answer."

Eventually, he hopes to form an independent black political party, because he sees politics as a means of furthering the goals of the black people "who are the vanguard of the revolutionary struggle for social change."

For the time being, Boutelle is content to operate through the organization of the avowedly marxist Socialist Workers Party.

"The SWP advocates the replacement of capitalism by revolutionary socialism, and this is the only way to achieve the goals of black nationalism."

"Racist capitalism must be destroyed!"

In the 1964 presidential election, the Socialist Workers Party failed to attract much attention.

However, Boutelle confidently predicts a better showing this time.

The Party is already listed on the ballot in 25 states, and Boutelle claims SWP organizers are at work in over 130 cities.

"If we could get good publicity, we could win up to 40 per cent of the vote," he says.

Despite the strong appeal to black nationalism, Boutelle concedes, at present only about five per cent of Party members are negro.

"Things are getting better," he insists, "but we need lots of volunteers to run the campaign."

"After all," he said with a knowing smile, "the capitalist system creates lots of work for us."

A founder of Afro-Americans Against the War in Vietnam, Boutelle sees a direct parallel in the struggle for black power and the campaign of the National Liberation Front against American forces in Vietnam.

"The United States government — and this means the political and economic substructure supporting the government is the enemy of all people trying to better their condition."

Let's face it, he says. "JFK was a racist hypocrite."

Boutelle predicts more racial violence for the United States.

"There has been no organized violence by black people against whites. The whites are the biggest movers in the history of America; we have a long way to go to duplicate their record."

Boutelle does not regard himself as an advocate of violence. However, he warns that black people will defend their interests "by any means necessary."

"If bullets are used against us, then we will naturally use bullets back."

His solution to racial unrest? Abolish capitalism so that whites and nonwhites can "create a really human race, not just a fair race."

"But if you really believe in white power, then volunteer to fight in Vietnam, pressure the Canadian government to draft teenagers to fight," Boutelle sneered.

"Go to Vietnam, whitey. I'm sure the Vietnamese will be only too happy to see you!"

PAUL BOUTELLE

Students cry 'Save Speigel' at Windsor

WINDSOR (Special) — English students at the University of Windsor are fighting to save one of their professors. A committee has been organized to prevent the dismissal of English teacher Morley Speigel, who was recently told his contract will not be renewed for the coming academic year.

The Students for Speigel Committee feels he is being let go because he does not have a PhD and because he has not published anything.

In a letter sent to students, faculty and administrators, the committee protests the move, saying: "He is a hell of a good teacher."

The letter refers to Speigel as "the man who made the study of English literature a meaningful part of our lives."

Robert Smith, head of the English department, would not reveal the reasons for the termination of Speigel's contract. He said it was not university policy to do so.

Vic victimizes victims 5-0

By GELLIUS

Intro speculative

HOCKEY

Vic slaughtered PHE A 5-0 as Dawkins scored three and Emin two.

This was followed, at a reasonable interval, by Trinity's beating PHE A, 2-1. Parish and the rangy Mofatt (formulaic epithet) scored for Trin, Hanna for PHE A.

Brunskill (a mountain range in the Maritimes) and Wise led UC over Scarborough, 2-1. Corriveau (= "one of two triveaus") replied for Scar.

Knox got goals from McDonald and Fraser to put down (notice hip Varsity sports reporting style) PHE B, 2-1. Bendera scored for PHE B.

Led by Samson Delija and Lockhurst, Erindale edged Architrave, 2-1 (note recurring motif.) Moore scored for Arch.

Business fell upon Innis and butchered them ruthlessly, 5-1. Corley had the hat-trick for SOB; Massie (no relation to Jim Morrison, Varsity Sports basketball reporter) and Hayhurst added the other goals. Grace scored for Innis.

New crushed Law 11, 6-1. Storms (2), Ireland, Cozzi, Harris and Cornish scored for Gnu. (A gnu is a small South African antelope, related to the Ichabod.) Glover got Law 11's (that looks funny, doesn't it) goal.

Glazier and Sullivan scored as Dents edged Jr. Eng (Malayan foreign minister), 2-1. Zabotny scored for Skule.

BASKETBALL

PHE A defeated SMC 95-74 in a full length game before the last Blues' game (whenever that was) with the result that there is now a tie for the lead in the first division between PHE A and SMC. Dale Crouter, son of CFRB announcer Wally (sc. "Crouter"), led PHE with 38 points, the highest total this year in interfac competition and his personal best since his outstanding 39 points against Newmarket. Lagla had 16 for SMC.

Scarborough beat Pharm, 33-31. Our reporter, Quertyuopus, had to go interview recently rediscovered blues singer Pregnant Rutabaga Polk, so we are unable to print the leading scorers.

Innis edged SMC B, 36-35. Kelley led SMC B with 12; Martin had 10 for Innis.

(That was a hysteronproteron by the way.) Vic II defeated PHE B, 32-15.

Fencing and skiing news

By LEN GILDAY

The U of T Ski team leaves on the Rapido this evening for Mont. Ste. Anne in the Laurentians to compete in the Ontario-Quebec Athletic Association Ski Championships being hosted this year by Laval.

John Cameron (II Meds), captain of the team, feels that the team is strong, and will do well in both the Alpine and the Nordic events.

The team arrives at Mont. Ste. Anne Thursday morning and will practise all that day. On Friday the slalom and giant slalom events will be run, and Saturday sees the Nordic competition in cross-country and jumping.

Cameron admitted he was slightly worried about the giant slalom course which is reputed to be very long, taking two minutes to run, and expressed fears about the jumping in the Nordic event as a sixty metre jump will be used.

However, Cameron feels that if nobody falls or markers out, the team should finish in the top five, with Laval, Queens, and the University of Montreal as the other powerful teams entered.

FENCING

Unbeknownst to all but the dead and close relatives, the Varsity fencing team has seen a lot of picketing (get it?) recently.

While you frolicked in the froth on January 27, the mighty fencing Blues were sabreing sobriety in the direction of some beleaguered cadets from RMC. The final count was 20-7 for Toronto, even though only the 'B' teams were sent in foil and epee.

Then, while you mingled in the mud on February 3, the fencing Blues sneaked over the border to Rochester for a tri-meet involving Rochester Institute of Technology, University of Buffalo (Leslie Fiedler, anyone?) and U of T.

The meet was an unqualitative success for Blues as they polished off Rochester 18-9 and then waxed triumphant over Buffalo by the same margin. Against the buff men, the Varsity epee squad trimmed a previously undefeated trio 7-2.

Bailey and Hoffman off to Russia

By RICH PYNE

It's been just a week since Varsity hockey Blues returned from a confrontation with the Russian Bear, and already two core U of T representatives are rousing up some rubles for another go at the best the Soviets have to offer.

Miler Dave Bailey (Phar IV) and half-miler Abby Hoffman (UC IV) join former Toronto star Bill Crothers on their first trip into the Russian republics for four meets spread over twelve days. They leave today at 2:30 p.m.

The trio lands in Moscow and immediately departs for Leningrad for their first encounter. The field is reported to include a strong U.S. contingent along with possible representatives from a few Continental countries.

All three have a good crack at winning their events, Bailey to date this indoor season has recorded mile times of 4:06 at the Millrose Games last week in New York and then 4:04 two days later in Boston. With his extensive experience on the boards and times which equal the best on the European circuit, Bailey feels confident enough to "shoot for all four."

Abby's prospects, while probably not as certain as Bailey's, certainly convey optimism. Two weeks ago she breezed through a 2:11 half in the wispy air of Albuquerque, New Mexico, breaking the meet record there by seven seconds. Nevertheless the American women and any number of Europeans could give her a tough time.

Crothers could easily be the class of his field. Last summer the flashy half miler was in Moscow where he earned a rousing ovation as he coasted home ten yards in front of the Soviet champion.

BOXING . . .

Last Saturday night at Hart House, the Varsity boxing team, well-conditioned by coach Tony Canzano, proved more than a match for Royal Military College dropping only one decision, to the cauliflower-caddies.

In the first fight of the evening, Sunil John of Toronto lost a close decision to RMC's captain Mike Blair. In the welterweight division, Peter Junger won a split decision over Paul Gibbs of RMC despite Gibbs' longer reach.

Middleweight Mike D'Ornelas used his speed to great advantage in his victory over Officer Cadet Charlie Grace. Harry Ewashuck of Varsity easily won a unanimous decision over light-heavyweight Roy Charleaux.

The most exciting fight of the evening matched Toronto heavyweight Joe Donahue against RMC's veteran southpaw John Carlson. Both men fought hard throughout the bout but a flurry of punches by Donahue in the closing seconds brought him the decision.

Watt gives tired Blues two-day layoff with Waterloo game coming up Friday

By PHIL BINGLEY

With the hectic schedule of the last three weeks behind them, Varsity Blues are enjoying the two-day vacation given them by coach Tom Watt. With nothing afoot in the Varsity camp, it would seem to be a good time to look at a few of the major happenings—past, present, and future—in this season's SIHL scene.

Blues and Waterloo Warriors have both lived up to their pre-season billings as Varsity is unbeaten in eleven games (one tie) and Waterloo won nine straight before they dropped last Thursday's 5-2 decision to Blues.

And at the other end of the standings, McGill Redmen, Queens' Golden Gaels, and Guelph Gryphons have played their roles as cast although Gryphons have come up with some very steady hockey.

Meanwhile McMaster Marlin's, Monreal Carabins, Laval Rouge et Or and Western Mustangs have provided the surprises among the nine team league.

Marlin's have been the biggest surprise with their strong play to date. They've all but chinned a playoff spot and are currently alone in third place with six wins and two ties in twelve games.

Laval and Montreal have also exceeded expectations with their showings. The two teams have each picked up six victories so far good for a fourth place tie with Mustangs. However, Laval has two games in hand over Western, and Montreal one.

Stangs must certainly be considered the disappointment in this year's competition. They have won but five games in thirteen starts and have had personnel problems especially on defence.

Blues' Tom Watt assesses the playoff situation as follows: "I think McMaster is a better team than Waterloo on the basis of our games with the two teams. As far as fourth place is concerned, Laval looks to have the best chance. Not only do they have more games left, but they have an easier schedule." Watt is probably referring to the fact that Laval is finished their series with Varsity while Stangs and Carabins must each tangle with Blues once.

Potentially the most crucial game in the struggle for fourth place is the Montreal and Laval encounter, Sunday, Feb. 18. Barring an unlikely three game win streak by Western, the victor in this game should be in Toronto for the league playoffs beginning March 1.

AROUND THE NET . . . Blues resume practice tonight in preparation for Waterloo's visit this Friday . . . Warriors travel to McMaster for a big game tonight at 8 p.m. . . . To the person who left a note signed "Varsity supporter", we don't reply to anon-entities like you. Besides, there are plenty of your type hanging in Blues dressing room in case we need some advice.

Gryphons good slump-cure

By JIM MORRISON

When you're lost four games, three of them in a row, and all by close counts, it's pleasant to vent your frustrations somewhere. Enter whipping boy, alias Guelph Gryphons. If Gryphons, who meet Blues tonight in Guelph, have done nothing else this year, they have provided relaxation for harassed League coaches.

Garney Henley's Gryphons are even weaker now than they were in Varsity's 107-71 conquest earlier this season. Leigh Hammond has departed, and with him went any remote chance of marking up that first-ever League win.

Varsity's slim playoff hopes flickered on again after Western Mustangs fell to Windsor, also on Saturday. Mustangs record now stands at 5-2, with three games remaining—two with Waterloo and a return bout with Windsor. Toronto record is 3-4, with games against Guelph, Waterloo and Windsor. Employing a vast reservoir of mathematical knowledge and ten-figure logs, we see (ergo) that Varsity can finish third if Western continues to lose. All Blues have to do is win . . .

For tonight's game Coach McManus plans to dress the same players who worked against Mac. (insert:aren't the players old enough to dress themselves? — mild chuckle).

This includes starters Bruce Dempster, Mark White, Arvo Neidre, John Hadden and Ron Voake. Rounding out are Mark Slater, Mike Kirby, Ross MacNaughton, Albic Garbe and Vic Alboini (the Vic Alboini)

Matmen massacre masked Marauders

By PHIL BINGLEY

Varsity wrestlers rolled easily over McMaster last night at Hart House in their last scheduled tune-up before the OQAA championships on Feb. 24. Blue's can certainly use the break as coach Karl Wipper's chief concern right now is ailment recuperation. His team seems one gigantic walking wound.

Steve Casselman has a sore shoulder although he did wrestle last night. Vic Hefland and Ron Wilson were also in action despite painful injuries. Varsity's only OQAA champ last year, Rick Osten, is through for the year with a hernia. And Jim Doner and Larry Bobbet both sustained worrisome wounds while wrestling against Mac.

McMaster provided weak competition for the Varsity grapplers, as they were trampled 31-11.

Decisions were scored by Basselman and Doner while Bob Kellerman, Bill Allison, Hefland and Mike Wright recorded pins. Ron Wilson and Wright won by default (Wright pinning a huge muscle-bound heavyweight in an exciting exhibition encounter) Bobbet, Rene St. Aubin, and Alex Squires went down to hard-fought defeats.

Troika of candidates in St. Mikes confrontation...

By BRIAN JOHNSON

Peter Szekely (III UC) challenged the integrity of rival Steven Langdon (III Trin) at St. Michael's College Wednesday in a confrontation among Students Administration Council presidential candidates.

"I don't think this candidate has been fair in representing his interests," Szekely told the 30 odd students.

He accused Langdon of a contradiction between his view of a "social purpose" university as expressed in Random (Jan. 12) and in his campaign pamphlet.

In Random, Langdon related the social purpose of a university to outside political issues without mentioning education, but in his pamphlet he defines the social purpose as education.

"It is necessary to retain some kind of integrity and consistent beliefs," said Skelley.

Langdon quietly fumed until his rebuttal:

"This is an outrageous personal attack," he said. "I'm getting sick of this sort of misrepresentation that Peter has been trying ever since the beginning of the campaign."

Langdon emphasized his interest in education:

"I spent my summer holidays helping to start work on Tartu College (the SAC housing project). I spent my Christmas holidays trying to negotiate with the bookstore."

The hot clash between Langdon and Szekely exemplified the campaign to date as a confrontation of personalities rather than of issues.

Glen Brownlee (IV Vic), delivered a speech of multiple criticism and proposed reform of housing, the bookstore, education and SAC.

"I have never been on SAC before," he said, "but I'm sort of glad."

He objected to the treatment of the Placement Service motion during the Dow issue. "The president should say that such motions be tabled, that the constituents go back to their constituencies."

"Scholar Power" not "Student Power" is Brownlee's slogan. "Scholars includes professors as well as students," he said. "In a university the interests of students and faculty should be parallel."

TORONTO

It's the police.

In the last few weeks the number of catering trucks that do .side-walk business outside Sidney Smith Hall and the Galbraith Building has dwindled to two or three.

"Sometimes we get three or four parking tickets a day," explains one jovial caterer. "One truck got $35 worth of tags in a single day."

But there is no danger the cruising cafeterias will disappear completely.

"Until the company tells us not to," says a caterer, "we'll keep on coming."

And the trucks that dare to come are just as busy as ever.

...now becomes a campaign quartet

By DAVE FRANK

Nominations for the students administrative council presidential election closed last night at 5 p.m., and instead of three candidates there were four.

The fourth is Peter Wilkie, a third-year political science and economics student at Trinity College.

Wilkie, 21, is short, stocky, and sandy-haired. His friends call him 'Wilk'.

He was playing squash at Hart House when I found him. One of his campaign managers and I stood and looked down into the white pit while he finished off the league game.

"He represents a different element on campus than the other candidates," he said over the sound of the ball hitting the pattered walls.

"He's running slightly right of centre."

"I figure half the guys on campus don't bother to vote," said Wilkie later as he dried himself after his shower.

"That's the element that doesn't get represented." He gestured around the locker room. "Like the guys who come in here."

Wilkie made his decision Wednesday. But he won't start campaigning until next week.

"This is the first time I've gone into politics," he noted. He confessed he didn't know too much about what SAC was doing and that he'd have to "look into it."

But he sees SAC as basically an administrative organization whose purpose is to administer the students' money.

He doesn't think it would be right for him to take a year off studies and draw a salary as SAC president.

The other candidates look to him like "politicians". He considers himself a "college" type.

"Most people are here to get a B.A. and then get out. So am I."

Incidentally, he lost that squash game. But as they came up the stairs, he said to his companion:

"We had some great games. We should play again."

McMaster makes campus centre scene

By SHERRY BRYDSON

If all goes well, sod for the $4,000,000 Campus Centre will be broken this June. Progress on the centre is due in no small part to Gerry McMaster, a fifth-year architecture student. McMaster, SAC's campus centre chairman for the last three years, will give a sneak preview of the centre at SAC's student affairs forum this Saturday at Victoria College.

The scene is the downtown office of architect John Andrews.

Draughtsmen are at their boards. Secretaries type, a clutch of men in the corner talk intensely, a tall handsome Negro and a short, shaggy-haired Englishman bend heads over a complex problem.

Work doesn't exactly come to a standstill when Gerry McMaster walks in, but one by one they notice him.

"Hi, Gerry!"

"Hey, come see what we've done to the floor plans since you were last here."

"Have you seen the final color schemes?"

They're talking about the Campus Centre, and McMaster is vitally interested. For the last two years, he has been working closely with the architects on the building.

McMaster lights a cigarette, gestures with it, inhales deeply as he pores over drawings on three draught boards in the architect's office. He doesn't say much.

Andrews comes over. "Let me tell you about the Campus Centre before Gerry gets started," jokes the bluff Australian. "Pretty soon he'll be telling you he did it all himself."

Andrews, architect of Scarborough College, designed the building for SAC. "But now it's all up to the students," he says. "It's out of my hands."

Later McMaster relaxes in the living room of a Campus Co-op, which he shares with five other students.

"The Campus Centre isn't going to be a garbage-can union," he says. "You can't include a nook and cranny for every organization or group that forms on campus."

"It's not what you put in a building, it's what you take out that makes the difference."

McMaster once contemplated becoming a doctor, and spent a year at Western in a pre-med course.

"I was 18 and away from home for the first time. I guess it was a traumatic experience. Then I spoke to someone who was in architecture. He said there wasn't much homework."

"Besides, I like drawing."

Gerry McMaster takes his course seriously. "Architecture is a way of life," he says.

"An architect's responsibility is awesome," he says. "He must attempt to control the environment, the economics of the building. He decides what materials are best to use."

"He must constantly ask himself three questions: why, why not, and how? He must not compromise in any way."

His thesis is on student housing, a subject McMaster, with his radio announcer's voice can be very vocal about.

"The university recognizes only one type of housing—residences. But who says people want to room together? Often the Ontario Student Housing Corporation and the university lose sight of what a residence is for. Sometimes students are forced to live in places where they can't live in the best sense.

"It's a complex problem. Housing should create an atmosphere where you can opt in or opt out as you want."

"It is entirely possible for students to live without tutors, dons and authority figures."

McMaster's life in the co-op is not always ordered ("Sometimes I find myself doing dishes at 2, 3 or 4 in the morning.") and occasionally he has to tear himself away from a meeting to go home to cook dinner.

"The essential emphasis here is on man the social animal, not man the private individual."

His room is very small: "Six feet by eight feet," he says disgustedly. "I have 1½ square feet of lounging space."

"Architecture is becoming less and less dependant on one man," he continues. "So many things have to be taken into consideration in order to make best use of a building. You have to use principles of economics, sociology, psychology, history, philosophy and planning."

Szekely admits pamphlet mistake

Peter Szekely (III UC), a candidate for president of the Students Administrative Council, has been accused of using misleading information in his campaign pamphlets. But Szekely says it was just a printing error. The pamphlet claims that Szekely "negotiated the free loan of $5,000 worth of sound equipment for the U.C. Festival" (B) ABEL.

In a letter to The Varsity Szekely said he "sincerely regrets" the printing error, noting that the figure should have read $500, not $5,000. He also apologizes to "Mssrs. Bob Rae, chairman of the festival, and Howie Goldblatt, comptroller."

However, Hersh Ezrin (IV UC), president of the Literary and Athletic Society which sponsored the festival, is "hopping mad."

"Szekely got us a stereo amplifier worth $350 (which didn't work) and three tape recorders worth about $300 each. We got a total of $20,000 in equipment and Szekely's pamphlet belittles those who got most of it."

Bob Rae (III UC) said he phoned Szekely as soon as he saw the pamphlet. He said Szekely soon acknowledged the error and sent the correction.

"Five hundred dollars isn't correct either," said Rae, "but if Szekely wants to underestimate, that's his decision."

"And if he wants to blame the printer for the mistake that's his decision too. Whether the people believe it is theirs."

Blue and White Quebec Carnival

So you want to go to the Quebec Winter Carnival, do you?

The final weekend of reading week just happens to coincide with the climax of the Carnival, and the Blue and White is going to make sure you're there when it happens.

At a price of $36 the society will get you to Quebec (and back) and supply accommodation (four to a room). No meals.

The train leaves at 11:55 p.m. Thursday Feb. 22 and gets to Quebec 11 hours later. The return trip starts Sunday afternoon.

Tickets go on sale Monday morning at the SAC office. There are 120 places and it takes a $5 deposit.

St. Mike's sponsors university debate

Sixteen teams from colleges and universities in Ontario, Quebec and New York will take part in a debate this week at St. Michael's College.

Two teams are coming from Glendon College (York University), University of Waterloo, Ithaca College, Cornell University and Syracuse University. Single entries are from Royal Military College, Trent University, Trinity College (University of Toronto), Osgoode Hall, McGill University and Loyola College.

Debaters will not be given the topic at issue until one hour before starting time. The first debate is at 7 p.m. tonight, and the finals are tomorrow.

Engineers race chariots for P. Pott

The eight engineering courses will compete in the annual chariot races today for the P. Pott Trophy.

The race begins at 1 p.m. on the back campus with the firing of the ceremonial engineering cannon. The Lady Godiva Memorial Band will be there to give moral and musical support.

The chariots will race once around the main campus. Only eight people are allowed to pull each chariot but any number can attempt to block. So come and support your favourite engineer (if you have once).

Bob Bossin — meek and mild?

By LOUIS ERLICHMAN

Bob Bossin has the kind of face that you can imagine sitting at the back of the classroom, mugging at the teacher. The impish grin, the bushy eyebrows, the unruly black hair all suggest anarchy.

It's the sort of face you generally could expect to see in any of a dozen campus rooms, playing cards, or talking about last night's hockey game. Except that this is one face you won't likely see there.

Not that Bossin wouldn't like to be there, but, as he says, "Sometimes you want to go back to sleep, but you can't really be comfortable there."

Instead of "sleeping", Bossin has earned himself a reputation as one of the most forceful and effective student leaders on campus.

As education commissioner of the Students Administrative Council, he has presented several radical proposals for the institution of "student-centred education."

As a SAC representative and a member of the academic affairs committee of the Innis College Council, he has thrown all his efforts into trying to involve students in issues both within and without the University.

He says, "There is no such things as being uninvolved. We are all involved. It's just a matter of whether you choose to recognize it."

Bossin got his first taste of student "activism" at North Toronto Collegiate, where he was student council president for threequarters of a year before resigning.

He found it an enlightening experience. "They give the students no responsibility. They try to fit them all into a mold for the business world. There were so many small restrictions, I can't even remember the issue I resigned over."

Fekete flees closed hearing, suspended

MONTREAL (CUP) — John Fekete, McGill Daily columnist, was suspended Wednesday for walking out of a closed hearing into his part in last fall's Realist affair.

Fekete, in whose column an alleged obscene passage from The Realist appeared, was protesting the refusal of the McGill student discipline committee to allow the hearing to be carried on closed circuit television to campus outlets.

The suspension remains in effect until Fekete assents to the hearing. Suspension is defined in the student discipline code as "the withdrawal of all university privileges including the right to enter upon university property" without written authorization.

Two other student editors, Peter Alnutt and Pierre Feunier, had their hearings televised. They were each given a "reprimand" by the committee.

Fekete's lawyer, Claude Sheppard, said: "The three had been charged together and we see no reason why they are not entitled to the same treatment."

Earlier, the Quebec Superior Court and Court of Appeals confirmed the university's authority to act in the matter.

In a front-page editorial yesterday, The Daily attacked the committee for "violating the most basic civil rights, its own precedents and senate policies."

And the student council yesterday urged the committee to lift the suspension and allow the hearing to be televised.

confrontation

Brownlee also suggested another newspaper be set up in opposition to The Varsity. Langdon thought instead that The Varsity should be published daily.

Both Brownlee and Langdon complained about residences, each with a different angle.

Brownlee recommended residences for Scarborough and Erindale Colleges, which "shut down at night like high schools."

Langdon's attack was directed against the administration's supervision of residences.

"Students are not allowed to take part in what has been euphemistically called a community of scholars."

Langdon said it is SAC's responsibility to set up its own courses if necessary, its own co-op bookstore and co-op housing.

"The Thomson organization has always been free of editorial control from above. For one thing, papers in the group have not been noted for the outspokenness and originality of their editorial views. It has been business considerations on which greatest attention has been focussed." —W. H. Kesterton, A History of Journalism in Canada, p. 81

integrity in the backlands

Out there in the hinterlands, journalism is dreary, Thomson-owned wasteland—the private domain of the former Timmins bay wonder, Lord Thomson of Fleet.

Wherever Ray Thomson has bought out a paper, observers have noticed a decline in standards of journalism. Controversy is avoided, especially controversy which might involve criticism of an advertiser or of the local Establishment.

That Establishment, given the small or medium town situation, often includes the civic administration and the local businessmen lumped together into a co-operating compact.

If you see democracy as a two-level structure—we elect politicians to do things, and we put faith into newspapers to keep an eye on them — then the Thomson papers fail miserably.

The Thomson organization doesn't interfere in editorial policy, but does — as Roy himself has said many times—keep close and eagle eyes on the books. And, as many of these papers have shown, the best way to keep the ads coming in, is to avoid controversy.

Most of Ontario's small-town dailies are owned by the Mississauga-born lord. But up there in Peterborough there was a half-out, the Peterborough Examiner.

The Examiner originated in the 19th century and in 1936 its ownership passed to Rupert Davies, later to become a senator. Ten years later, Davies sold the paper to his three sons, one of whom was Robertson Davies, a young man of literary skills and interests. Robertson gave the paper an unusual literary flair when he served as editor, but he left that position in 1963 to become master of Massey College at this university. Robertson remained the paper's publisher.

Until a few days ago, that is.

Robertson sold out and allowed Thomson to get his hands on the paper, thereby affording himself an opportunity to complete his retreat into the sedate and scholarly confines of Massey College.

Same people get angry every time Thomson gets another one.

We're not angry, Mr. Davies. Just disappointed.

tomorrow?

In about eight or nine hours it will be exactly eighteen years since one Joseph Raymond McCarthy discovered Communism.

Before February 9, 1950 McCarthy was the relatively unknown junior Senator from Wisconsin with the uncomplimentary nickname of "the Pepsi-Cola kid" deriving from his enthusiastic support of the sugar lobby in Congress.

Then he made a speech, THE speech, to the Ohio County Women's Republican Club in Wheeling, West Virginia. There were, McCarthy charged, 205 (later 81, still later 57, even later 'a lot' of) active Communists in policy-making positions in the State Department.

Almost overnight, the obscure junior senator became an expert on communism, a newsmaker, hot copy, a cause, an ism.

McCarthy's speech triggered a frenzied witch-hunt for communists and fellow-travelers in government, industry and education. Everybody started looking for commys.

Before the hysteria ran its course, hundreds of innocent but indiscreet university types and civil servants found themselves exposed to the glare of publicity and, usually shortly thereafter, without a job.

Many others, including an unimportant mathematics lecturer named Chandler Davis, chose the social and professional ostracism of a six-month prison sentence rather than co-operate in the staged theatrics of congressional investigations.

Still others, both within and without the academy, survived McCarthyism by feigning the required super-patriotism and remaining silent while their colleagues were cut down.

McCarthy's investigations found few, if any communists. The real targets were people of any kind of liberal thoughts at all—and that included 'a lot' of intellectuals, university types, authors, Hollywood script-writers and civil liberties fighters.

From the relative peace and tranquility of a Canadian campus, this all seems incredible, irrational, a hazy memory of long, long ago.

But it was not all that long ago. In some ways it is almost yesterday, or today, or perhaps even tomorrow.

LETTERS

tiny-minded attitude

Sir: The opening remark of the otherwise reasonable letter from the manager of the University Bookstores (Feb. 7) well illustrates the tiny-minded attitude at this university towards education. Those of us who are presumptuous enough to have interests outside our set courses, and who wish to buy books other than those which the teacher has told us to read (and on the regurgitation of which will depend our degrees) will read that the "Textbook store is not a browsing bookstore," and know that we are unwelcome there.

David Priese (1 New)

(Ed. note: I think Mr. Fanning was merely pointing out the technical problems of arranging one store neatly compartmentalized to conform with courses. Still, when you have to look under Slavic Studies for Northrop Fry's Anatomy of Criticism ...)

neither dons nor frills are really frills: cliff

Sir:

Replying to your Page 4 editorial on Feb. 5, I want to point out that most of your arguments are either invalid or irrelevant. First: maid service is absolutely essential if we are not to live in pig sties. Many students' rooms stink as it is, with daily cleaning. Can you imagine what they'd be like after eight months? And the students themselves are notoriously indifferent to house-keeping.

Second, you suggest that Dons are unnecessary. Come now. Who would serve as referee, as mediator or as the administration representative who says 'Kool it' when drunk parties and rowdies threaten to tear the place apart? Also, most students like to have someone who has "been through it all" close by, if only as a source of information. Senior students might but rarely do perform such functions.

You also advocate soaking the colleges who are supposed to be rich and who are not—in order to pay for the new U of T-sponsored residences. Even if this were realistic, it is bound to be only a short-term and stop-gap measure.

Now lets face the facts:

1. we need new residences;
2. we don't have the money to build them all;
3. there are no real frills in existing residences we can dispense with;
4. residence fees are climbing steadily and are beginning to discriminate against the poorer students.

The solution is obvious. We must have government support in substantial amounts for student housing. If the colleges are afraid of losing their independence, let them turn their residences to some third body which could be set up to operate all the residences. Why should academic institutions be involved in the apartment/hotel business anyway?

Surely if kids are willing to march for Vietnam, napalm, etc., ad nauseum, they should be willing to turn out for getting a decent roof over their heads at a reasonable cost to themselves.

Finally I would like to state that while Co-op style accommodation is acceptable to some people, that there are many kids like myself who are repelled by the casual and slap-happy sanitation practices I have seen there. One has only to see the cigarette butts protruding from the chunks of margarine on the tables to know that Co-ops won't satisfy most people.

Cliff Curley (IV Vic)

(Ed. note: 1. The laziness of students who won't clean their rooms is hardly a persuasive element in your argument. 2. A don to tell you to 'Kool it' seems like a rather unimportant luxury. 3. Co-ops are as clean as their residents are willing to make them. 4. Yes, government assistance is needed. 5. If you feel so strongly about the need, why don't you organize that demonstration. Don't leave it up to everybody else.)

(Ed. note: Our editorial named a Mary Addersley residence at Vic; this should of course, have been, Margaret Addison. Miss Addersley is girl. Sorry.)

literary prostitution

Sir:

I should like to consider with your readers a recent discussion with a liberal friend concerning the Feb. 9 Liberal Conference Anti-War Demonstration leaflet. The literature in question (currently in wide circulation on campus) contains a short text inset in an allegorical representation of American napalm falling on a group of terrified women and children. My liberal friend was amused and slightly offended by what he felt to be the "ineffective and unattractive" tone of the opening sentence; to wit, "Day by day the United States escalates its immoral and illegal war against the Vietnamese people."

Yet surely it is a measure of some kind of comic decadence that we sit every day at our desks and calmly, rationally confront the obscene message of Canada Life's fingerprint owl-turd on our blue SAC blotters. It reads, "You now have a wide variety of choices as personal as a fingerprint. No longer can you expect to find a crabbed Scrooge or a cruel spot. Instead most modern, progressive business concerns are primarily made up of many young people totally removed from the submissive spirit of Bob Cratchit. They enthusiastically grapple with the problems of computer planning and the interesting humanistic aspects of the modern business world—or live exhilaratingly independent lives in marketing."

One hopes that our university didn't teach Dickens to the literary prostitute who wrote that.

Yours respectfully,

Jim Wark (II UC)

Get up and talk about the real issues

By HERSH EZRIN
and JOEY STEINER

We are writing this letter because we feel that the forthcoming SAC elections are shaping up as a mammoth anti-climax to the Faulkner-Charlton campaign. With less than a week before the ballot, ALL the candidates have dealt in vague generalities and trivia. The major issues facing this campus have not been touched.

We feel that student government, whatever its outlook, will only be effective if elections are meaningful. The elections will be meaningful only if the positions of the candidates on the REAL ISSUES are abundantly clear. If the electorate is unaware of the policies of the presidential candidates, SAC actions will only engender more of the bitterness and hostility which has hindered the growth of a healthy student voice on this campus.

The following are some of the problems we must face, but this list is by no means exhaustive.

As students, we have responsibilities and duties to fulfill within the institutional framework of the university community. We believe that student involvement in university government should begin at the departmental level. By this we do not mean the establishment of important staff-student committees. Rather, students should be adequately represented on curriculum committees (as is the case in some departments already).

While SAC should facilitate the establishment of course unions, it should in no way interfere with their operations and policies. With reference to the Faculty Councils, student representatives should come from the course unions and not from the SAC or college councils.

We favor the creation of a new body to replace the Senate and the Board of Governors because there is no viable distinction between academic and financial considerations. Students should sit on this body and on its working committees.

We recognize the difficulties that would arise because of the transient nature of the student representatives. Nonetheless, we feel that student views must be heard and must carry weight in a decision-making process that will ultimately affect those students. If the only objection to student membership is its transient nature, then the equal dangers of stagnant, unchanging administration should also be taken into consideration.

The student representatives to these higher administrative bodies must obviously be chosen by the SAC. But it should be emphasized that these students are expected to use their own discretion in arriving at decisions, and presumably they will be chosen by the SAC in the light of their opinions.

We reject the notion that SAC is constitutionally dominated by "pinko artsies". The professional faculties together can out-vote the colleges, and in point of fact the colleges have rarely voted together. We find no difficulty in affirming SAC's competence to speak for ALL the students on this campus. In accordance with this view, we feel that the proposals for referenda on controversial issues are ridiculous. SAC members are representatives not delegates of the student body.

On a wider view, this campus should wholeheartedly support the activities of the Canadian Union of Students. CUS acts as a pressure group to further generally accepted student interests. For instance, CUS was instrumental in convincing the government to grant an income tax exemption for student fees. It has completed the only comprehensive review of student housing needs, and its results are being used extensively by the Federal Government. CUS is continually involved in promoting better schemes for student aid. In addition, CUS provides a wide range of student services including travel service and life and health insurance. We feel that these activities warrant our spending 75¢ per student per year.

In the area of student housing, we believe that our goal should be the subsidization of student residences on campus. Further, we believe that the University should foster the growth of co-operative residences along the lines of Rochdale College.

We believe the reconstituted Blue and White Society should get the full support of the candidates because the social presence on this campus is sadly lacking.

We favor action by the SAC to secure more eating places on campus, and we feel they should make a thorough examination of the possibilities of operating these cafeterias on a non-profit basis and providing employment to students.

Mr. Ezrin (left) photographed during his campaign for UC Lit president, and Mr. Steiner, a former Lit president.

We feel that the regular outcry for the allocation of university funds for parking facilities ignores the more pressing need or the allocation of the limited university funds in other areas.

One of the crucial problems facing the student community is the ever-widening gulf between arts students and science and professional students. This question rarely intrudes upon the thoughts of the arts students, though it is of major significance to the professional students. There must be a conscious effort by both groups to involve themselves in fulfilling the student role in the university community.

The student body as a whole must be made to realize that political issues affecting us on campus must be dealt with by the SAC.

Throughout these remarks, we have attempted to highlight some of the problems and questions that the new SAC President must face. Our aim is to improve the university community, not to undermine it. We hope that in some small way this letter will lead to a more substantive consideration of these vital issues.

Joey Steiner (IV UC)
Hershell Ezrin (IV UC)

column and a half

Oh, mama can this really be...

Layout Blues (to the tune of Memphis Blues: Dylan) Christine's not in again, called up on the phone, I asked her what the matter was, she said, "I broke a bone."

And the copy won't be ready 'til almost two o'clock, 'Cause Parkins went home early leaving the office firmly locked.

Oh, Hulk this really could be the end ...

To be caught without my dummy sheets—It's the Layout Blues again.

Isaac's out on Harbord, taking shots of sun and snow. We told him, "These turn out-or baby, just don't show." But Dave, he really blew our minds, when the negatives came through,

They were lovely all-white photos of the vanished White and Blues.

Oh, photogs, you've done it one more time, I haven't got the front page pic and it's nearly half past nine.

Volky's voice came floating by and whispered "How've you been,

I've got 96 more inches, I'm sure you'll fit them in." I answered him quite calmly and said "What can I do." Then took the extra copy and suffed it in my shoe.

O Richter! You've really got high hopes!

Turn off your groovy sweet Lorraine and start to learn the ropes!

Mickleburgh just challenged me to an early morning duel,

He said, "It's a sportsie stapler, how can you be so cruel!"

But I was oh so sneaky and right behind his back I grabbed my wooden ruler and gave him one hard smack.

O no Rod! Stop dreaming of English Bay; Remember you're an editor, tune into Cassius Clay.

Paul M. where's my copy asked—how long's the Here and Now?

Why are you on your hands and knees, mooing like a cow?

He said I've told you 50 times I'm only out for glory, I'll hold my breath for 20 years if you don't use my great milk story.

O MacRae! Will you write a masthead and leave out all those awful puns, They're really very bad!

Tim's home reading English, he's got a test next week, Probably he'll score an A, but wails he's up a creek. But me, I've got a 10-inch hole, it's put me all up tight; So Sherry's checking copy to save me from this plight.

O Brydson! You're smarter than they thought,

You're filling in for Colton While keeping dinner hot.

Phone for Sue, they holler, it's Joe from Daison's Press;

He wants to know whamsattah—Page 2 is such a mess. So Dave and Anne burst in the door, announcing with much noise, They've picketed the swimming pool, and driven out the boys.

Please help me, I'll crack up in the end; I'm stranded in the Varsity with the layout blues again.

LETTERS

Sir: In order to stimulate the fullest possible discussion of issues related to the War in Vietnam and its relevance to Canadian politics and to the upcoming Liberal Leadership Convention, the Faculty Committee on Vietnam is sponsoring an open public forum on "Canadian Politics and the War in Vietnam" today at 2:00 p.m. in Convocation Hall. We hope that this forum will provoke some serious and informed discussion by the campus community about the positions of present and potential Canadian leaders on the War and, more generally, on broader aspects of our foreign policy.

The speakers at today's forum, who will initiate discussion and respond to questions from the floor, are well equipped to present perspectives on the many complexities involved in the formation of Canada's South East Asia policy such as: this country's Defense Sharing Agreement with the United States, the effect of the Vietnam War on the Canadian armaments industry and, more broadly, the significance of Canada's economic and diplomatic interrelations with the U.S.

Already Canadian political leaders have begun to abandon their former Vietnam policy of "quiet diplomacy." Because of the very real possibility that the Vietnam War could escalate into a direct nuclear confrontation between America and China, it seems particularly important that Canada should now take some more open and forceful initiatives toward ending the conflict, and we trust that this forum be able to demonstrate some of the alternatives.

Music is McMaster's work background

"We eat well, though." He pats his stomach ruefully. "Susan has me on a starch and sugar-free diet."

McMaster plans to marry Susan McMullen, a pretty fourth-year architecture student, in early June. We had a cup of coffee in the kitchen while waiting for her to join us.

When McMaster decides to work on his thesis, he likes to listen to music. You can often find him sprawled in a comfortable chair in the co-op's living room, headset at his ears, briefcase and papers strewn about him.

On the record player McMaster generally has a confusion of records: Jacques Lucier, Brubeck, The Beatles, Ravel—even some classical music like Holtz' The Planets.

"I think to music," he says. "I love listening to it when I'm doing something serious. It's a constant predictable noise—better than that g.d. cat."

(The co-op's house pet Nummers had come yowling into the room. Nummers? "Susan named her. It's a word she uses to describe something nice.")

He pushes the cat out of the room. "I like any music that's well done. For example, I think the Sgt. Pepper album is just about the best piece of contemporary music around."

The record player rejects the Beatles album, starts to play a classical number. McMaster grins.

"Sometimes music is visual. You can write music to describe space and color."

Susan appears. McMaster lunges at her. They disappear from view. Scuffles and thuds ensue. They return laughingly to the living room.

"I tried to hide in the closet but there was too much junk in it," laughs Susan.

"This place is hopeless," says McMaster. "You'd have to spend $5,000 on it just to get it condemned."

Conversation with Gerry McMaster ranges over a wide area. And it's never dull. He has opinions, interesting ones, on almost everything.

On Scarborough College: "Of course it's not a fall-out shelter. It's a university. What's a fall-out shelter anyway?"

"If the building serves more than one purpose, it's doing better than most universities."

This leads him to the subject of Canadian architecture. "Canada is socially, economically and governmentally different.

"Our architecture should be an expression of this. Canada can be a very cold, brutal country. It can also be very warm. The architect has to reconcile these things."

What about Expo 67? You could feel the tension in the Russian pavillion. It was almost overwhelming.

"The British pavillion was arrogant as hell. Sort of retrospective . . . the last of the empire."

McMaster doesn't like the implications of the recent Galbraith Building Vietnam demonstration.

"There is a very tangible we-they fractionalism within this university. The issue at the Galbraith Building was territoriality."

"The Artsies were invading Engineering territory, and they were out to protect their ground."

"There is getting to be less and less neutral ground in the university, and that's not good. We have enough problems fighting the town-gown problem without splitting among ourselves."

Town-gown problem? It's more apparent at Western and universities in smaller towns. But it's here too. The outsiders have a very real hatred for students in general.

"I think the Campus Centre will provide a much-needed neutral ground for the whole university."

McMaster has read Ayn Rand's The Fountainhead, and regards architect Howard Roark as a nice piece of fiction.

"There are no 'hero' architects any more. The modern architect is a catalyst for people around him—the economists, the sociologists—people from many different disciplines."

"There are other factors to be taken into consideration: Can you get men to work on the site? What is the state of the labor force? Will the street leading to the site accommodate large trucks? Is the material you want to use available?"

"With all the modern complications, it's a wonder to me how anything ever gets done."

McMaster gets back to his pet theme: student housing. "Look at the 713 units of married housing," he says angrily.

"Here's this building right in the Bay-Bloor area. There are bound to be 200-400 children in the building, yet no one took that into account."

"No one checked to see what schools were available, and if they could accommodate that many new children. And where do the children play in that area?"

"You can't just keep building things that don't have any relationship to the community and the surroundings."

McMaster is skeptical about Rochdale College. "The theory is fine but it has limited applications to the university today."

"If it can run—great. I'd love to see it."

He sighs. "Of course, there is no one solution to the university's housing problems."

"One of the great problems is the lack of variety in the forms of rental housing. Not everyone wants to be a cliff-dweller."

"Man is a territorial animal. He likes to have things that are definitely his own. The great problem is with the land."

"That's why Habitat 67 was so fascinating. It solved the land problem while giving each resident a turf of his own."

"But it was a heck of an expensive experiment."

The cat is getting playful: Susan is getting restless.

He grins. "Yes, and I keep the bottom button of the vest undone, too. I have a whole executive outfit I wear to meetings. I figure the clothes make me look a little older."

"I once wore my cowboy boots to an interview with John Sword, though."

FOUR LOOKS AT THE THREE R'S

The picture on the cover is "Masters Fred Brydges and Charles Brydges, 1863", a plate from the recent McGill University Press collection of photographs by William Notman, Portrait of a Period. (See Barbara Uteck's review, in BOOKS).

As you may have gathered if you read Louis Erlichman's profile on page 3, Bob Bossin has been doing a great deal of thinking about education, and has been exciting a lot of people with his ideas. A little inadvertently, he ended up inspiring and converting a lot of the people working on this issue.

Tarvainen wanted to write about garbage-men, but we told him that we were dealing with education and he said he knew that and it would be OK, so we said OK...

We include in this issue three studies of very different kinds of regimentation in schools. High schools, as we all know and Bossin reminds us, are models of mediocre conformity, and regimentation for its own sake. (For the sake of our "average," "ordinary" society), Brian Cruchley recalls a different kind of regimentation; the regimentation of a small, expensive, exclusive private school of the variety which produces the kind of people, according to John Porter, who are at the top of our Canadian vertical mosaic. And Mike Ignatieff reviews a book about a Harlem class, suffering the most infinite kind of regimentation; the oppression of cultural and economic starvation.

A DAY IN THE LIFE | By BRIAN CRUCHLEY

"Way down in old St. Catharines in that far-off jungle land," — Ridley College football song.

Let's let our minds drift down the scenic Niagara peninsula to Ontario's sixth largest city, St. Catharines.

Here on the west bank of the old Welland canal we find 84 acres of football and soccer fields outlined with stately elms. As you enter the memorial gates at the southeast corner of the school, you can see A Squad, the first team football field, and a magnificent Gothic stone Chapel in the background.

In summer A Squad becomes a cricket pitch for the St. Catharines Cricket Club. When the hot sun beats down on the white shirts and flannels of the cricket player and the wind rushes whispers through the leaves of the trees, one gets the distinct impression that this is not only Ridley, but also India, Jamaica and Nigeria on a hot afternoon.

But in October crunchy brown, red and yellow leaves cover the spongy turf of A Squad, the battlefield; A Squad, the home of Ridley tigers, the toughest, strongest most unified team in the Little Big Four. On A Squad the black and orange machine of Ridley battles the red and white, blue and white, and red and black of the other L.B.F. schools.

The bong of the tower chimes resonates six times as the 300 boys of the Upper School flock to the Great Hall for Friday evening tea.

The conversation is spirited; the meal is typically carbohydrate; the atmosphere is that of Hart House at an Alumni dinner.

Tomorrow after Saturday morning classes, these boys will don their heavy knit sweater coats and gather on A Squad to cheer the first team on against the professionalism and conceit of Upper Canada's blue and white machine.

A Prefect sits at every table. The Prefects, drawn from the Grade 13 class and appointed by the Headmaster, are 15 responsible boys who direct the student-controlled disciplinary system within this boarding school, 24 hours a day, seven days a week — at meals, at football games, in Chapel, in the dormitories and on the train when the boys go home for holidays.

The maids clear the plates from the tables; one Prefect motions to another; the hall is filled with manly singing, a groaning roar like the wooden hull of a man-of-war. The boys are singing Ridley football songs, extolling the joys, the unity, the superiority of Ridley College.

At half past six the master-on-duty rises from his place at the head table. The boys rise.

"Benedictus benedicat," he says.

Amid the furious scraping of chairs as the boys sit down again, younger voices shout "scuse me" at the senior boys sitting at the end of each table.

The Great Hall steadily and orderly empties, each boy buttoning his coat and straightening his tie before he leaves his seat.

The boys march out of the hall, down the School House corridor, through the Chapel classroom, and into the dark monastic tunnel that flows into the centre of the Ridley community, the Chapel.

One or two Prefects drape themselves over the stairways along the route blocking any possible exit except the Chapel tunnel.

"Cheer practice in the gym after Chapel," the head cheerleader casually says to a Prefect.

There's no need to tell the boys about the cheer practice. They will be funnelled into the gym in the same way they are being funnelled into Chapel, but the comment is overheard.

It travels in half-whispers down the corridor, into the Chapel classroom, through the tunnel into the Chapel in about one minute.

As the boys pass into the tunnel their conversation is displaced by the rhythmic hum of neolite heels against stone.

There is no whispering, no smiling and no turning around in Chapel.

Five minutes after the master-on-duty said grace, the Chapel is filled.

The Headmaster enters and crosses the plush red carpet below the ornately-carved white marble backdrop to the altar. The 19-stop Casavant tapers softly into quiet random notes and then lets out the last of its breath.

The boys rise.

"We will now sing hymn 655, six, five, five," the Headmaster announces boldly and correctly.

The organ explodes into the powerful stirring introduction of Jerusalem and the boys let their hymnals fall open at William Blake's spiritual masterpiece.

Many of the senior boys don't need the words. The know them by heart.

It's difficult to slouch with shoulders like a 7-up bottle when Ridley College sings Jerusalem. In this hymn, more than in anything else, the school becomes one humble, penetrating, proud, inspiring spiritual voice. The ego of Hathaway Shirts, the Alberta oil industry, or General Motors is transcended for one beautiful moment as every boy puts heart and lungs to Jerusalem.

"... Till we have built Jerusalem in this our green and pleasant land."

The boys kneel; the Headmaster repeats prayers; then communal silence falls over the school. For two minutes every boy is alone, is himself in thought.

The Diapasons and Trumpets of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D Minor shatter and swallow the silence. The boys march out in twos and are funnelled into the gym.

At the entrance of the gymnasium, beside the squash courts, a Prefect bellows and rips off his jacket and tie.

"Take off your bloody shoes before you go on the gym floor."

The boys hustle up the stairs like lem-mings.

"Let's beat U-C-C," the school chants as it assembles in front of the gym stage.

The bass drummer of the cadet corps is pounding out the chant rhythm — one, two, one-two-three.

"Let's beat U-C-C, hey beat U-C-C."

"We turn out a product to pass exominations, to get jobs in industry, commercial and technical. You cannot beat success and I am rather inclined to think this is a successful school . . . Of course there are the boys with chips on their shoulders. They think they have rights; they tell me what rights I have. Education is a privilege. You must live up to it . . . I would say that our operation would be the wish of every school operation in the province."

'They encourage you to memorize, like a sponge.'

By BOB BOSSIN

"We consider education to be a business-like procedure which demands business-like behaviour, appearance and attitudes."

—R.R.H. Page, principal North Toronto Collegiate,
U of T senator

Admit slip.
Bring back memories? How about oral comp, The Modern Age, or Omnia Gallia in tres partes divisa est? Or locker inspection, Casa Loma formal, "Bossin, where's your gym socks?", Dick Clark and even Clearasil, God bless it.

Or "Hello, Judy? It's—um—Bob, and I was wondering if . . ."
Highschool.

If you are male and weren't a complete brown-noser, you will remember sitting on the bench in the Vice-principal's office, legs uncrossed, sneaking smiles at the kids who peered in the door to see who was there today. If you were on the honour roll, you went back to class; under 65% you sat; under 50% and you got to go home early.

Remember slouching in the row near the windows ("Bossin, do you sit that way at home? Well you don't in this school."), looking at the girl's legs while some poor kid stumbled through "Tiger tiger burning bright in the forest of the night what immortal eye or hand hand or eye, framed thy fearful symmetry," sitting in the row near the side board, looking at the girl's legs, "Hark what light through yonder window breaks it is the moon, no the sun, sir, I was away that day."

Trying to teach Romeo and Juliet to thirteen-year-olds. Jesus.

And we all have our own personal special days: scoring on the wrong basket, breaking the six-minute mile.

I remember when I got hauled down to the principal's office for telling a dirty joke in the athletic assembly. I listened to the teacher who OK'd my speech lie through his teeth and say he had never seen it. I got to go home early.

And I remember when I ran for high school president, and my election speech came back from the censors with a big red X through the first paragraph and in the margin in block letters, "NO LEVITY".

No levity! May I never live so long.

Some sage once wrote in McCall's, "When you want to return to the carefree days of youth, think of algebra". And think of a lot of boredom. Think of being told how to dress, how to walk down the halls. Add guidance teachers that looked at your marks and decided you were an engineer. And throw in sexual frustration, hell, general frustration when everybody told you exactly who you were supposed to be.

At North Toronto Collegiate there was a saying that "Every North Toronto boy is a quarter-back and every North Toronto girl is a cheerleader." And may the Lord have mercy on the uncoordinated and the overweight. If we didn't fit the mould, we weren't "different", we were failures. No one needed to tell us. We knew.

Of course they told us anyway. And they still do, eight years later.

"It is ironic that the highschools, which are supposed to be inculcating the principles of freedom and democracy among the young, should themselves be totalitarian . . . Always there is the repeated emphasis on discipline, control and order, on "good behavior" (i.e. docility) rather than on good character, on an assembly-line education, efficient but dull, designed to fit students for assembly-line jobs but scarcely calculated to turn them into thinking, questioning citizens."

Pierre Berton in the Smug Minority seems shocked at the system, although I cannot see why he should be: William Ross, chairman of the Toronto Board of Education has said "The highschools are the greatest force inducing conformity that society has." He should know.

J. Wilkie Davey, the principal of Bathurst Heights Collegiate said last year "Education must develop followership as well as leadership . . . the very qualities insisted upon by business and industry." He said it as explanation of why Howard Szafer had to sit in the hall for six months for refusing to cut his hair. At the end of six months Szafer turned sixteen, the legal age for leaving school. Davey immediately threw him out.

If all this sounds extreme, talk to some high-school students. It is like seeing The War Game; you suddenly realize that under the words there are real people being run through a wringer. And it hurts.

But don't try to contact them through their schools. One Saturday in the fall SAC sponsored a highschool students conference, with invitations sent to all ninety Toronto collegiate principals. Twelve schools sent delegates. Among the few that replied at all, one sent this note: "If this is a sample of your forethought and organizational ability, you have little right to think that you should have any say in educational matters." The note was unsigned.

So last Sunday I got together over Coke and potato chips with a half-dozen Grade 13ers from my old school. Three began by asking me not to use their names in the article. Even one who defended the school, and said that things were getting better, was afraid. Guilt by association I suppose.

Though they all went to North Toronto Collegiate they thought it was typical of all Toronto schools. Actually they were under-rating it: NTCL has one of the best records in the city for academic achievement, music and sports. The commencement programme proudly boasts "At North Toronto the percentage of papers passed, including appeals, was 92, a figure far above the provincial average." I asked them what this tradition of scholastic excellence meant to them. It did not mean much.

Susan, a very bright little blonde who had learned to write in grade two at her suburban school, but then had to print all through grade three when transferred into the city system, spoke first.

Susan: "Marks have replaced learning as the reason for going to school. Last year the government arranged it so every school could send all the kids to Expo who wanted to go. Here only the grade tens went because the school decided it was too near exams, so the rest of us had to stay here and go to class. It was really sad. They put up a map of Expo in front of the principal's office and nobody even bothered to look at it."

John: "And all the marks mean is that you can memorize. I got honours in Latin, do you want to know how? 'After making these preparations, Caesar set sail westward with five legions and the same number of cavalry as he had left on the mainland . . . It took me three nights to learn the course.'"

Al: "They encourage you to memorize, like a sponge. We have one teacher who does nothing but dictate notes. Everyday he dictates. On the first day of school he was at the blackboard and I yawned. He turned around but he didn't know who it was because he couldn't recognize the yawn yet."

The same teacher dictated the same notes when I was there. That year my friend Patrick put up his hand and asked "why". He talked rather nervously for a couple of minutes about how he didn't think he was learning anything. He sat down and then the teacher threw him out. He went to the guidance office; they sent him to the principal, who suspended him. As part of his punishment he was ordered not to visit the guidance office for the rest of the year. I picked up his University Admissions form for him.

I wondered if any of these kids would commit the same . . . God, I almost called it a mistake.

Al: "You don't think in class, you vegetate. Maybe I do fifteen minutes homework a night. You know anyplace else in North America we would be in university. I've learned all there is to learn: I know how to get good marks, I know the system. I wish they would just let me out."

A lot of people at North Toronto take Grade 13 in two years. It is easier on them. It also helps to keep the school's percentage of papers passed "far above the provincial average." At Christmas in my graduating year, John flunked a trigonometry exam with flying colours.

What's your pleasure miss?

Alan Kamin said once that the best summer job he ever had was being a municipal garbage collector. I can understand this unlikely preference, for years ago when I was in high school I worked one summer for the East York Township's Municipal works programme. Although I was not on the garbage vans, my friends were lucky enough to get that choice job.

There was an art, they said in picking up the cans, heaving them up to the loader, and catching the empty can in one smooth, graceful motion. On hot summer days when the temperature was in the nineties, I was stuck in cool municipal gardens watering the grass, as I watched with envy the proud arrogant band of garbage men march up the sweltering asphalt emptying the maggot infested cans into their vans.

Loudly cursing the people who didn't wrap their garbage properly, they would throw the offending cans on the lawn overturned; whenever a pretty girl passed by, showing lots of skin because of the heat, an obscene word or gesture was in order — and there was no chance that she would miss the implications. "Hey honey . . . up here!" the loader would shout, holding up an old mattress pulled from the sweltering garbage heap, as he made motions of unzipping his fly.

The greatest thrill of all, however, was the actual job of loading; while the others heaved the cans, the loader would stand on his precarious shifting pile of garbage emptying the cans, throwing them back down and distributing the garbage evenly throughout the truck. Nothing, I was told, was more beautiful than watching a master loader arrange this load until it stood ten feet high above the truck, in perfect symmetrical balance. If it wasn't balanced, the load could easily spill on some unfortunate passerby (which it often did) or the loader could get engulfed in twelve feet of garbage (which he often was.)

My friend became a loader almost immediately; late afternoon when the sun cast long shadows on the baking streets the trucks with their full loads would head for the dumps. My friend would stand aloft a huge mountain of perfectly balanced garbage, feet wide apart, and as he passed the high school, where some of the lower grades were still writing exams, he would thumb his nose at the venerable edifice; crow loudly and throw bits of garbage at it from his majestic pile.

A proud, stalwart, sweating breed of men who pick up after us, the garbage men keep the country clean for democracy.

If you have been following the papers this week, you will note that the garbage men of New York City have been on strike for some seven days. Approximately sixty tons of garbage are sitting on the streets of New York with something like an increase of ten tons a day. Mayor Lindsay is VERY worried about the threat of epidemic, plague and fire. The rats have started to move from the ghettos to the business districts and the more posh areas of that city. The National Guard may be called up to relieve what has become an emergency situation of the highest order. The mind boggles.

Consider for a moment, the revolutionary implications of the strike; we can organize the garbage men of every major city and town in America.

Get them to go on strike simultaneously. President Johnson will call up the reserves and the army to collect the garbage to prevent a national plague.

While the army collects the garbage, we take over.

Revolutionary Heroes will be awarded the Order of the Dump and the Badge of Garbage.

Garbage Cans will adorn our currency and the flag will display a white Garbage Truck on a chocolate brown background.

This of course, answers the question so frequently asked of the New Left and the hippies — ie who will be the garbagemen of the enlightened society when it comes, if it comes. Somebody has to do it.

Well, what's wrong with an enlightened Garbage Man? It's like Kamin says, it is the best summer job he's ever had.

To-day's issue of the Varsity Review deals with Education, and should be dedicated to garbagemen everywhere; these human laxatives who remove the droppings and superfluous wastes of our well-fed, prosperous flutulent society, reflect the key to what education is all about if it is to serve any useful end.

Let us draw some vague pretentious analogies. New York City becomes a gigantic garbage dump, and the American tradition reasserts itself even in its own destruction; Viet Nam becomes a gigantic extermination camp, America itself, as it ponders Detroit burning, LSD and the paranoic cowboy in the White House, becomes a gigantic insane asylum.

In the jargon of the underground pundits, America needs to clean up her act — for a clean act is the mark of a winner; the winner operating from a firm base of well honed essentials and eliminating non-essential elements of style and behaviour. Our motto at camp — Clean Mind, Clean Body Clean Act

The human body when it functions without undue restraint has a very clean act; one or two regular bowel movements a day (happiness!) and we remain healthy and functional. If we stuff it, however, it reacts negatively, forming superfluous dejects and often requires a laxative to keep the act clean.

New York City's laxative is the National Guard who will restore nature's balance.

Rubbish? Exactly. Education, too, for our generation must follow the same general line. The other articles in this issue will discuss how our minds have become swamped with academic garbage, waste fact and cardboard realities. If we are to capture the lost excitement of creative learning we need a mental laxative; before we can learn, we must UNLEARN.

And where are these spiritual garbagemen to help us clean up our intellectual act? Is Blowing Your Mind the equivalent of a healthy crap? Do we have any constructive alternatives?

With self-indulgent glee the mass media have noted that the New Youth of the sixties have not produced the viable political, social and cultural alternatives which they had so auspiciously heralded at the turn of the decade.

The Beatles, Dylan, New Left, New Morality, LSD, Student Power etc. have, they (the New Bullshit) pompously declare failed.

Yet they, in their uncertain declamations, have failed to realize that what has happened — is happening — is merely the beginning of a massive unlearning process — one which is necessarily confusing, and often violent and inarticulate.

A Zen master once told his disciple; "Before Zen, the mountains were mountains and the trees were trees. During Zen everything was very confused. After Zen, the mountains were still mountains and the trees were still trees."

"What had changed, master?", the disciple asked.

"My feet were a little higher off the ground" he replied. A clean act.

A production oriented society has asked our youth to PRODUCE alternatives if they are disenchanted. Yet Martin Luther did not produce the Wittenberg Theses when he first contemplated saying Up Yours to the Pope (he also, by the way used excremental images); nor were the Communist Manifesto and Das Kapital the products of a few years of disenchantment.

It takes time; time to unlearn; time to learn; time to clean up your act. The winner plays a waiting game; the loser is in a hurry to lose. The game is afoot, as Sherlock Holmes was wont to tell Watson.

It takes some faith, however, to recognize the validity of the struggle to unlearn. Is it possible? Is there too much garbage to remove? Is the plague imminent? A friend of mine told me that she was having serious trouble in deciding whether or not she was going to have children. She wondered if it was fair to bring a child into a world whose future was at best precarious. Her mother asked her to imagine how she felt when she gave birth in the middle of the war years.

Yet perhaps our children will not have to unlearn the way we did. They are not born with an excessive amount of garbage; it remains for us to give it to them.

Consider what we are dealing with at the beginning — one fertilized cell: one cell whose DNA code and genetic structure knows EXACTLY what will emerge nine months later; and that one cell is the originator of the millions of cells which comprise the human being until death.

Nine months of gestation — no fuss, no bother, no wasted energy; an unbelievable symmetry of growth from grey sperm and a wayward egg.

It is the cleanest act of all. What can we presume to teach such a creature when she enters the world? Delicate, unknowing but aware and innocent . . .

Education? Can we teach them anything they won't have to unlearn? Do we have it in ourselves to let them learn on their own?

The only way to find out is to have them. Lots of babies; everywhere, everywhere. See what happens.

Maybe my daughter will be an enlightened garbageman.

Courage.

Harlem Schools: A Frightening Look

By MICHAEL IGNATIEFF

In the staff room of PS— on 119th St. in Harlem the white teachers sip tea after class and talk about the animals. They fear the chaos and the violence the animals bring and they reassure themselves at the end of the day by corporate expressions of irritation. Herbert Kohl, white, philosophy graduate of Harvard and Oxford and a teacher at PS— leaves the staff room and walks down the corridors scratched and battered by the rush of children, past a janitor who in massive shuffling silence pushes green crystals of disinfectant along the wood floors with his broom. Herbert Kohl cannot bear the talk about the animals ... he knows them as the 36 children.

And he knows what they taught him about teaching, and about the horror of growing up in Harlem. He tells us what the unteachable taught him in an understated and yet passionate book 36 Children. The children wrote two thirds of it and it is their words that shame us whites most deeply:

"Last night on 17 St. Liebowitz collected the rent. They told him not to come himself but he came for many years. The junkies got him last night. He wouldn't give them the money so they shot him and took it. They was cops and people runny all over the roofs and the streets. They were people from the news and an ambulance took Liebowitz."

Ralph, 12 years old. "We went down to the park and watched this dope addict it was like watching a movie or something very interesting like that it kept in surprise and suspense even though you knew what he was going to do next and at my age then I thought it was the greatest thing in the world. That is, what practically everybody my age was doing instead of playing games and all you would go to the park (because of lack of money for the movies) and watch the dope addicts take their dope"

Alvin, 11 years old. Kohl saw in the black children's silence on the first day that they would never learn by being forced to sit still in rows, by having to read 'Social Studies' texts that talked about white people driving their Model T's out to the country for a picnic, or by tests or drills. He saw that the children blossomed with thoughts and passions in the ten-minute talk-break he let them have on the first day. He began to talk to them in the talk break. He saw a hunger for a learning which would be deeper than the idiocy of their textbooks. Cautiously he brought games like chess and checkers to school and watched the children learn games they had never known. Books and records followed. After three months the class was completely unstructured; Maurice, Alvin and Robert worked silently on novels (which Kohl reprints in the book) Tom and Barbara wrote fables; Charisse, Michael and Neoma studied the Greek and Latin derivations of languages with Mr. Kohl's help; Kathleen read Robert Graves; John, Reginald and Marcus were using scientific equipment and papier maché to build an exploding volcano; Juan was dividing all the names under A in the Manhattan phone book into syllables to teach himself how to read. So great was the hunger of the unteachable that they visited Kohl's 89th St. apartment every Friday to talk, to explore his books, to play with his tape recorders, and to listen to records. When Kohl describes the children's reaction to his room, he tells us whites of a luxury we take so much for granted we don't know it's a luxury.

"The first thing that struck the children was that it was mine. No parents, sisters, brothers, cousins. They saw how completely mine it was and loved the idea."

The incredible flowering of slum children in a permissive environment taught Kohl the real reason why educational theory still insists on completely teacher-directed learning. "I watched closely and suspiciously realizing that the tightness with time that exists in the elementary school has nothing to do with the quantity that must be learned or the children's needs. It represents the teacher's fear of loss of control and is nothing but a weapon used to weaken the solidarity and opposition of the children that too many teachers unconsciously dread." Kohl makes a further point about the subtle order that imposes itself on apparently chaotic unstructured teaching: "children fear chaos and animosity. Often they find ways of adjusting to difficult and sensitive situations (when free to) before their teachers are aware they exist." The point here is that children are restive in class chiefly because of the artificial order imposed by the teacher which fragments him from his fellows by placing him in rows and preventing him from talking. Kohl saw that only if the solidarity among the children that existed outside the class was allowed to grow inside the class would the children learn together. Only if children could learn by interacting in their own way with each other about classroom subjects in the same way they interacted outside the classroom could the children learn. So the children wrote about each other, composed songs together, fought and wooed each other inside the classroom.

The other gulf which Kohl had to deal with was between black and white America. He took his children down to Park Avenue and 62nd St. The children stood at the heart of the elegance and power of corporate America, the blue steel spires, the sculpted bodies gliding in and out of Delmonicos, the purring Lincolns. Grace tugged Mr. Kohl's sleeve and asked him "Are we in New York? Where's Harlem?" And Mr. Kohl knew that for white America Harlem was as far away as Park and 62nd was to Grace. That's why the somnolent white conscience won't provide new books, new schools and new teachers like Herbert Kohl.

Kohl's year as the teacher of the 36 was not long enough. Most dropped out, humiliated by an alternately patronising, alternately uncaring school system. But the tragedy of black children in white America is even deeper. Grace, the brightest child in the class, did well at school and went on to a white high school, the only educational opportunity open to a black child. But the separation from her community was total and psychologically devastating. As Kohl puts it, "To live simultaneously in two worlds, a rich white one and a poor black one, is to be fully a part of neither. Grace has become alienated from Harlem, her home, her friends, her very self, in attempting to be part of the prep school world." That is the kind of success that the white conscience permits.

The vice-principal suggested it might be in his own best interest not to continue the subject. Johnny thought he could get it up, but the school would not allow it, for his own good. So he studied trig with a tutor for the rest of the year and wrote the departmental at the university. He passed it. But he flunked his year.

Susan: "Last year at the Honours assembly, half the people on the grade 12 honour roll refused to take part. I stayed home for the morning. Who wants to stand up on stage and boast "I've got high marks?" so what? All it does is make others feel bad."

Pat Burchell, an honours student at Lawrence Park Collegiate knows the importance of her academic excellence. "One day I felt sick so I went to the office to be excused. The first thing they asked me was "what are your marks?" If I had fifty-five, they would have probably made me stay."

Lawrence is one of the schools that threw people out for long hair, until one boy got his picture in the paper. Now the shaggier scholars just get warnings.

Unlike Bathurst and St. Andrew's Junior High in North York, where two teachers held one boy while the principal cut his hair (it was OK because they had parental consent), North Toronto accomplishes more acceptable appearance without the guerilla stuff. The approach is more business-like.

Stephen Katz is extremely intelligent, the son of a newspaper editor, a good poet, and rather hirsute. In his last year at NTCI, it was suggested that Stephen's appearance might be improved with a different hair style. "I took the suggestion for what it was, a suggestion, and declined. They pointed out that since North Toronto boys tended to look different from me, I could hardly represent the school by standing on the platform as the winner of, for instance, the E. J. Pratt Prize for poetry. I couldn't decide if it was a threat or a bribe: either they would take it away because I didn't get my hair cut, or give it to me because I did." I asked him what he decided to do "I got my hair cut. The Pratt prize was worth $25."

And so it goes on. Rob Dales was editor of the school paper for one issue and some proofs. After the first edition he was called down to the principal's office. Among other things, the principal was not altogether happy with an article on the teach-in that had a "leftist bias." Rob said that he had read it over carefully and had felt it was neutral. The principal answered that he had not exactly read the article but that the whole subject had a leftist bias. For the next issue Dales had an article on the man who fights parking tickets to be headlined Zolton Szobosloti Vs. the Queen. He asked the principal for a picture of the queen. "That ended my career in student journalism," says Dales.

And the student council at North Toronto never heard about the SAC Highschool Conference.

It goes on. You can ask some random high-school kids or fill it in yourself. They will tell you what you remember, only for them it seems urgent. As Pat Burchell says "It is both comforting and disconcerting to know that all great men hated school. It's comforting because you know that you are in good company, but it makes you mad that in all these years nothing has been done about it."

And it is not likely that anything will be done about it, at least anything substantial, because the blame does not lie with the principal who runs a business-like school. He is the middle-man. R. R. H. Page says "I strongly believe a majority of our parents desire and support this kind of school". I believe Page. Our business-like society does not tolerate North Torontos. It demands them.

And the hair-cutting, the censorship and the marks-madness are just so many peaks of an iceberg. They are harmless because they are visible. The kids I talked to knew how absurd the incidents were; and to recognize them is to be free of them. Unless you are a Howard Szafer and confront the scissors with more principle than instinct for self-preservation, you simply ignore it all like a tooth-ache that makes life miserable but does not last long.

To recognize where you have been controlled is to realize, if not who you are, then who you are not. But the rest of the iceberg is pretty frightening: how many ideas that we have adopted as our own were really programmed into us while we slept? Like Jerry Farber says in The Student as Nigger, "It is what Mr. Charley has done to your mind."

What the kids at North Toronto don't know is how they have been instilled with the philosophy of pragmatism. I am only beginning to realize it in myself.

The ones that go on to university may discover that knowledge is controversy, and that all the truths they have accepted are based in so many conflicting hypotheses. Only Sandy seemed to recognize the crown of this particular iceberg. He knew of fifty students in the school who had tried pot, and yet why had there never been an assembly on it, even to warn of its evils? Or an assembly on Vietnam, or education, or Che Guevara?

And I am just beginning to ask some of the forbidden questions, like what is the real validity of authority. But what about the questions that they or you or I never do articulate?

Sometime ask yourself "Why am I here?" After your initial stock response, ask it again, and then ask "Why is that?". Only if we do is there any possibility of change.

notes on student-centered teaching

A group of students are sitting around in Innis College shooting the breeze. Somebody starts talking about homosexuality. "It's been proved. It's all in the chromosomes." The boy with the beard who says it so positively looks suddenly sheepish and hides his emphatic finger. A girl in the corner leans forward eagerly. "But I thought it was purely an environmental thing. You know — a domineering mother — doll for little Walter — the whole bit." "Yes," somebody else takes it up, "the conscientious parent is supposed to get all up tight if sonny shows the least signs of effeminacy." The girl in the corner drags thoughtfully on her cigarette. "Okay, but why don't they get excited when girls go through the tomboy stage?" "She'll grow out of it," someone interjects sarcastically.

Everybody is quiet. Then a boy speaks up from the depths of a sofa. "Have you ever thought that maybe those so-called 'effeminate' mannerisms are just signs of sensitivity?—and our society is so frightened of them because our society doesn't like sensitive people?" He grins self-consciously. "I guess what I'm saying is, maybe we're all potential homosexuals." The girl in the corner waves her cigarette disparagingly. "But wait a minute. Then how come there are definite 'fairy' types? — like, I mean — one of the two always plays a female role, doesn't he?" An exasperated "Where did you get that?" from the other corner. "Well, what I mean is — one is naturally more dominant, while the other is more passive." She looks around for reaction. "Well, one gives more, as I understand it, while the other receives more, if you see what I mean — uhh — that is, speaking in purely physical terms—" She makes futile gestures in the air with her hands. Everybody laughs. The girl colours and laughs with the others. Unexpectedly, a boy in a yellow sweater flares out savagely with "What are you all laughing about? Don't you realize it's a perversion — a disease?" "God, you really think the answer is so simple and so absolute?" He is answered angrily by the boy on the sofa. "Sure it's a perversion through the eyes of our heterosexual culture. But what about ancient Greece?" He calms down a little. "Look you've got to understand that our ideas about what a male or female is supposed to be are really only socialized concepts — like, men aren't supposed to cry, but that doesn't mean they don't want to cry — or don't need to."

Yellow Sweater averts his glance, then shoots back, "I don't give a damn what you or anybody says — it's a threat to society and decent human beings." A pause. And several voices at once demand to know how homosexuality is a threat to society. He refuses to answer, gazes around the room in a show of indifference occasionally muttering under his breath. Suddenly he adds, "It hurts the individual" and is silent again. The others prod him gently, "What do you mean, Paul?"—"How does it hurt the individual, Paul?"—Silence. Everybody waits. There is no response. Then somebody says something and the conversation is rolling again among the rest. An almost inaudible whisper, "It just hurts."

Call it free discussion . . . call it group therapy . . . call it communal masturbation . . . call it unstructured dialogue . . . or maybe even call it education. That's the way Bob Bossin, SAC education commissioner prefers to think of Monday evenings at Innis College.

Actually, Monday evenings at Innis College are an experiment in education, a limited attempt to put theory into practice; the theory in this case, and incidentally, Bossin's Bible, being Carl Rogers' essay "Student Centred Teaching."

Bob talked education to me one afternoon in The Varsity office. It was a typically chaotic production night. But he pulled up a chair in the very thick of it all, and oblivious to the confusion around him, began to explain "student-centred teaching" in his own terms.

"Look at the word 'education' . . . (you took Latin, didn't you?) . . . you know, 'educare' . . . to lead out . . . and that's what it's all about . . . not 'instruction' . . . a 'thrusting-in' . . . but 'education' . . . a 'leading-out'."

"You see, learning is not a passive thing — it's an active function of the self — an intensely active function of the self, by its very definition."

"And I believe . . . I have to believe . . . that everyone has the potential somewhere inside him to be a creative thinker . . . a true 'learner' . . . not that everyone's going to end up with a PhD. or even want to . . . you can be a creative learner and a truck driver at the same time, as long as the damn things you're doing mean something to you."

"In general it (student-centred teaching) is relevant only to the type of goal which is loosely described as 'democratic.'" (Rogers, page 387).

"Okay, I said, "that all sounds fine. But how exactly does your 'creative thinker' acquire any real knowledge?"

"That's the whole point!" He waved his pen at me. "It all depends what you mean by 'real' knowledge — because according to the student-centred principle, subject matter is valuable only insofar as it is relevant to the individual — here, I'll give you an example — a personal one, even . . ."

"At some time or other in my 'educational' career I've studied both Shakespeare and the topography of Peru . . . I remember a lot of King Lear . . . it says a lot about me and the people around me . . . I can't remember a thing about the topography of Peru . . . but then, it doesn't have a bell of a lot of bearing on my life—it might if I were Peruvian."

"A person learns significantly only those things which he perceives as being involved in the maintenance of, or enhancement of, the structure of self." (Rogers, p. 389)

"And that's the fallacy of our present subject-centred system," Bob continued. "It's directly opposed to an understanding of learning as a process of self-development."

"Like — I'm supposed to be studying Pope now — but I'm really turned-on by White's Once and Future King—yet all my time goes for Pope — my 'learning' is effectively cut down — because someone, somewhere out there has decided beforehand 'the proper order' for me to study my subject."

item: The SAC passed a motion last fall endorsing a CUS resolution drafted at the September Congress. The resolution is essentially an adoption of the student-centered philosophy as the Union's frame of reference for all future action in the educational field.

"But where does the teacher come in?" I asked.

"Look, Kath . . . if we're talking about a creative process . . . then the learning 'trip' has got to be ultimately a solitary one . . . everyone's path to understanding is a different one . . . and the teacher's has got to be recognized as only one among many."

"The way things are now . . . it's a tyranny of the teacher and the subject — the teacher is a bloody oracle . . . not what he should be . . . a fellow learner with a certain amount of knowledge and insight to share."

"You see, the teacher may know more — but he doesn't necessarily know 'better' . . . education's sort of like sex — what someone else has done can be stimulating — but satisfaction only comes from doing it yourself."

"We cannot teach another person directly, we can only facilitate his learning." (Rogers, p.389)

I had a question. "But should you ignore the thinking of others? Is that what you're saying?"

Then said a teach

"I'm not saying that at all . . . as Dennis Lee points out — there are two parts to education — creativity and exposure to brilliance . . . it would be totally unreasonable not to listen to the voices of intelligent men — but it's equally unreasonable not to listen to your own voice.

"And for every learning situation that encourages you to listen to your own voice, there are fifteen that teach you not to trust it.

"Hell — our whole educational system is founded on the proposition that you can't trust the student . . . and if we accept them as the authority — it means we can't trust ourselves . . . and that's a pretty horrible way to go through life."

That left Bob completely breathless. So I took the opportunity to ask him how the student-centred approach actually works in the classroom situation.

He explained that the basis of Rogers' theory was the success of the client-centred approach in therapy.

"There are degrees to which a class can be structured and still remain student-centred. Our Monday night seminars are one extreme — people show up if they want to show up — we talk about whatever we feel like — some nights four or five topics are tried before one catches on.

"But in some circumstances it's more feasible to . . . say . . . impose a general subject heading like, for example, communications'.

"It doesn't matter all that much . . . what does matter is that the class is focused not on the subject but on the interests, needs and purposes of the students."

"A classroom climate of permissiveness and understanding provides a situation free of threat, in which the student can work without defensiveness. The decks are kept clear for him to consider the material being discussed from his own internal frame of reference. His desire for acceptance is realized, and because of this he feels the demand upon himself to be responsible for his own interpretation and insights. He feels the full strength of another person's belief in his integrity. An interesting and important outgrowth of this self-acceptance is the observable improvement in his inter-personal relations with others. He will tend to show greater understanding and acceptance of them, and develop freer, more real relationships with them. (Arthur J. Shedlin, psychologist)

"The teacher," Bob went on, "can go a long way towards giving the student the self-respect and confidence he needs to be a creative thinker . . . not that he should pander to others' tastes in any way . . . but he should be flexible . . . willing to adapt to, and change with, the intellectual and emotional needs of his students."

"The atmosphere which prevails will depend primarily upon what the teacher does and how he does it." (Rogers, p. 396)

"The essential principle might perhaps be the following: Within the limitation: which are imposed by circumstance and authority or are imposed by the instructor as necessary for his own psychological comfort, an atmosphere of permissiveness, of acceptance, or reliance upon student responsibility, is created." (Rogers p.397)

"A lecture which is given at the request of the class is quite a different experience for all concerned than one which is imposed upon the group." (Rogers, p.398)

"What it means," Bob finished, "is the teacher is primarily a resource person — drawing on his knowledge to point out alternatives the students may not know exist . . . and of course besides . . . he should be a participant learner."

item: The SAC-sponsored educational venture, Tartu College, will be the scene next year of several experimental courses, set-up on the student-centered principle.

item: A plan is being considered by the SAC education commission for a summer programme to be held at the university for underprivileged high school students, and run on the student-centered principle.

I had one more question. "How exactly does the learning process operate in this new education climate of yours?"

"Well, I suppose the only way I can put it is . . . what you study affects you in just about the same way personal experience does.

"Like, that's the whole difference between the way education is now . . . and the way it could be . . . like, subject-centred teaching reaches you in only one role — but student-centred teaching relates to you in all your several roles.

"And when you do finally make the connections (I suppose it's what you'd call the creative moment), well, it's a beautiful moment.

"Here . . . let me read you something from the thing I wrote for the Woodrow Wilson people. (D.d you get the scholarship?) Nah . . . he nodded at the type-written pages he was holding . . . who'd give a Wilson to a guy with subversive ideas like these?)"

He started to read. "Learning is active not passive, and the self is very much involved. When I learn, rather than just study, some microscopic spark goes off in the thing under examination which makes me aware of a fitting-in, in which the thing studied, the student and a thousand other pieces of life are involved.

"Without this fitting-in one can be an expert at trees and a failure at forests . . . an expert in a field and a failure as a human being and scholar. Learning is a creative process."

Bob Bossin smiled, got up, put on his U of T jacket his scarf and his crazy hat, and went off to class whistling.

A Kaleidoscopic Mirror

By BARBARA UTECK

Of all the centennial books to appear last year, one of the most beautiful and certainly most valuable is Portrait of a Period, a magnificent pictorial collection featuring the work of a nineteenth century Canadian photographer, William Notman. The title of this collection does not lie. Portrait of a Period is indeed a kaleidoscopic but exact mirror of life in Victorian Canada.

Montreal was the centre of Notman's world, but he had a wide range of interests which extended beyond the St. Lawrence. Notman was keenly aware of Montreal's expansive, almost imperialist activities in the second half of the nineteenth century. At that time, Montreal was the hub of Canadian finance, the centre of navigation and the source of the immense force that planned and constructed the railway west to the Pacific. Notman possessed a ceaseless curiosity and vitality which led him to record this dynamic environment in all its fascinating diversity. Notman captured the changing Montreal with its contrasting elements. Juxtaposed against the homespun world of the Bonsecours Church and the old market beside it is the characteristically Victorian mansion of George Stephen. The heavy woodwork and lavish decor of this home reflect the Victorian sense of solid achievement and advancing prosperity. Then there is a picture of the Montreal harbour, where graceful sails blow gently in the face of steamships' squat funnels. And Notman went west to photograph Toronto, Calgary, Vancouver, the prairie Indians, Western farmers threshing wheat, and the awesome Rockies.

Notman's brilliant artistry is most evident in his portrait photography, the mainstay of his firm's income. Notman exhibits the same variety of interests and zest in this area as he does in his landscape and feature photography. He was not snobbish about his clientele: The Fathers of Confederation sat for Notman but so did Sitting Bull and Buffalo Bill. Notman's portrait photographs are in the tradition of early nineteenth century portraiture. He compares with the French painter Ingres in his classical linear perspective. Notman seems to have taken considerable time and trouble to pose his subjects and to arrange lighting. In a history of the Notman firm, appended to the photographs, we are told that skilfully concealed posing stands, for supporting the head and other parts of the body guaranteed rigidity during necessarily long exposures, and thus prevented the blurring of features. The variety of poses and props used by Notman exhibit a striking concern for each individual personality, a concern not often found amongst contemporary portrait photographers.

The view of his time which Notman presents is as valuable to art historians as it is to students of Canadian history. Indeed, Notman was an artist in his own right. In his youth he had wanted to be a painter but was dissuaded by his father. Nevertheless, Notman retained his interest in art by studying the great painters and was deeply concerned with the quality and artistic merit of his own work. Notman's photographs reflect an evolving sequence of experimentation and improved techniques. His early portraits were daguerreotypes. This photographic process resulted directly in a positive image with no negative involved. In the ambrotype process which Notman also used in his early career, the negative obtained was itself converted into a positive. Notman was a perfectionist and was constantly experimenting with new and better methods of reproduction. By 1859 he was employing the technique of printing from collodion or "wet plate" negatives.

The outstanding quality of the reproductions in this collection of Notman's work was achieved through the use of a recently developed fine-screen lithographic process. The subtle tones and minute details registered on the original glass negatives are carefully preserved.

Notman's interests were as far-reaching as his perception was precise and insightful. The thoughtful selection of his work in Portrait of a Period provides us with an invaluable historic and artistic mirror of nineteenth century Canada.

Bedazzled: A Very Funny Comedy

BY STEPHEN KATZ

Bedazzled is a terribly clever movie. Peter Cook and Dudley Moore are responsible for almost everything about this modern treatment of the Faust legend, in which a short-order cook sells his soul to the devil for seven wishes. They wrote the story, adapted it for the screen, composed the music, and take the starring roles. Audiences are forced to leave the theatre saying: "What terribly clever young men they are!"

And they are. Bedazzled is overloaded with that insane parody which characterized Beyond the Fringe. Cook and Moore have a way of taking an ordinary situation or casual remark and expanding, twisting, and distorting it beyond the point of recognition. In Bedazzled the quantity of comic material is staggering. One hilarious situation supersedes another with such speed that one can not possibly catch everything the first time through.
