SIG SAM LIBRARY

FRIDAY
SIG SAM LIBRARY
U.C. JUNIOR COMMON ROOM

NOBODY KNOWS EVERY THING

But you'll know much more if and when you "plug into" the library orientation program. Tapes and slides giving a general introduction, card catalogue advice and a few clues about the stacks are available for viewing at both main entrances to the University of Toronto

LIBRARY

Pink Whiskers

BOUTIQUES
2200
Yonge St.
at Eglinton

1 Bedford Rd.
at Bloor
924-1974

ANYONE INTERESTED IN WORKING ON EITHER

1. A SOCIAL SCIENCES AND HUMANITIES NEWSPAPER
OR
2. A NATURAL SCIENCES NEWSPAPER

Should come to a meeting TO - DAY
at 1:00 pm.

THE SAC OFFICE

SAC EDUCATION COMMISSION

COURSE UNIONS AND RADICAL CAUCUSES FROM BOTH AREAS SHOULD TRY TO SEND REPRESENTATIVES.

The Psychology Student Union Nomination Meeting For The Three Students Who Will Sit On The

STAFF-STUDENT COMMITTEE

Will Be Held On Tuesday November 4 at 12 noon in Room 1071, Sidney Smith Hall.

ALL PSYCHOLOGY STUDENTS ARE URGED TO ATTEND THIS IMPORTANT MEETING

THE PSYCHOLOGY STUDENT UNION ELECTION

For 2 Undergraduates
& 1 Graduate

To sit on the STAFF-STUDENT COMMITTEE

When : Wednesday Nov. 5/69
Time : 9:30 a.m.-5 p.m.
Place: Main Foyer, Sidney Smith Hall

ALL STUDENTS TAKING ONE OR MORE PSYCHOLOGY
COURSES CAN VOTE

PLEASE DO SO!

 BRING YOUR ATL CARD TO VOTE ***

Students for Israel Movement

Educational workshop sessions weekly re: the crises in Israel.

Sunday 10 a.m. Hillel House

Monday 1 p.m. Room 201 U.C.

Tuesday 7 p.m. Hillel House

Thursday 7 p.m. Hillel House

All those interested - please attend the session of your choice.

'Elitist' tradition dies at Massey College

On Friday an era quietly came to an end. For the last time, Massey College's leather-chaired cafeteria served exclusively the members of the college and their guests.

Starting today the Massey cafeteria will be open for lunch and dinner to all students and faculty of the university, male and female.

The exclusive nature and image that the College has possessed in the past has no place in the academic community envisioned by the report of the Commission on University Government," stated a press release from Massey College.

"We hope this step will encourage other parts of the university to consider and implement the recommendations of the CUG as quickly as possible," it added.

While opening the cafeteria may not seem to be a major change, it should be noted that only three or four years ago the Master of the College, Robertson Davies, posted a list of acceptable topics for table conversations.

"The Massey privileges have been a thorn in the side of other students living in residence for years", said Michael Schwartz of the SAC residence committee.

"It costs about $2500 to keep a student in Massey College, with the maid service, suede furniture etc. The Massey student pays less than half. It costs about $900 to keep a student in Sir Daniel Wilson residence, of which the student pays 110 per cent."

Schwartz was one of the students involved in last year's attempted residence fees strike. "I'm surprised they are opening the cafeteria. They must be losing money or something." Full-course meals in the cafeteria cost seventy-five cents.

An informal Varsity poll of Massey College students showed that two were in favour of the change, three disapproved and seven did not know or did not care.

"It will do them good" one said.

All agreed the food was excellent and the cafeteria under-used.

Robertson Davies, the Master of Massey College was unavailable for comment.

If you want to eat in royal surroundings at a popular price enter Massey College off Devonshire (at Hoskin), pass the wax-mustachioed gateman, and walk between the goldfish ponds to the southwest corner of the quadrangle. The cafeteria is on the second floor. Please do not feed the fish.

SFU Board will hold hearings despite admitted bias

BURNABY (CUP) — Despite objections that their chairman has pre-judged the case, the Simon Fraser University Board of Governors said Friday it will go ahead with hearings into the firing and demotion of members of the university's Department of Political Science, Sociology and Anthropology.

The hearings into decisions made by an administration committee on tenure and promotions, were scheduled to begin Friday, but were postponed at the request of a lawyer representing Kathleen Aberle, one of the professors.

The administration's tenure decisions, which overthrew recommendations made by a student-faculty tenure committee within the PSA department, were instrumental in sparking the current strike at SFU, now in its sixth week. A delegated committee of the board is the final appeal body for the university's tenure decisions.

Before announcing the postponement of the hearings Friday, members of the board over-ruled objections by Aberle's lawyer that board chairman Richard Lester had already decided against the PSA professors.

BIAS INDICATED

Attorney Richard Bird produced sworn statutory declarations by four SFU students — Malcolm Fast, Bill Wheeler, Leif Pedersen and Denise McIlhargey — declaring that in a private meeting Lester had indicated his bias.

The meeting had been called by 11 students — including the four who signed statements — who began a hunger strike on the campus Oct. 23 in support of the strike by faculty and students in PSA.

In the statutory declaration presented to the board, Malcolm Fast said Lester's comments at the meeting indicated "that Mr. Lester has already judged the . . . suspended professors which were due to come before him and in the main has decided against them.

"Mr. Lester stated the PSA department was politically monolithic," Fast declared, "and further implied the 'radical faction' was responsible for this, and that the situation provides justification for punitive action being taken against particular individuals in the PSA department."

CHARGES IRRELEVANT

The board declared the charges of pre-judgement were "not relevant to the issue before the board" — specifically, the suspension of Aberle — and declared Lester would remain as chairman.

The professors who will appear before the committee are: student and faculty-acclaimed PSA Chairman Mordecai Briemberg, later deposed and placed on probation by the administration; Kathleen Aberle, internationally known anthropologist, fired by the administration because of "unresolvable doubts concerning the quality of her academic procedures"; John Leggett, dismissed for the same reasons as Aberle immediately after receiving a $7,000 Canada Council Grant Prudence

Wheeldon, placed on probation; Gerry Sperling, refused renewal of contract; Nathan Popkin, placed on probation; David Potter, denied tenure; and Saghir Ahmad, a visiting professor who joined the PSA strike and was suspended.

Pick a student (not any student)

WATERLOO (CUP) — When the University of Waterloo administration said it wanted student delegates to attend the annual conference of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, it didn't mean just any old student delegates.

But the administration didn't make that clear to Waterloo Student Federation President Tom Patterson before three student representatives — all members of the Waterloo Radical Student Movement — were appointed to the administrative gathering starting in Ottawa today and running through Thursday.

And now, no students are going to the conference from Waterloo.

University president Howard Petch has rejected the three representatives named by the Waterloo Student Council on the grounds that they were "unrepresentative" of the campus.

Patterson says Petch made no mention of an administrative veto over candidates, and added that the three were chosen after positions were openly advertised in the student newspaper.

The Waterloo Student Council has since passed a motion barring selection of student representative to any function when the administration retains a veto over appointments.

Just Society members attack welfare

The Workmen's Compensation Board, welfare systems and social workers were severely criticized Friday by two members of the Just Society, an organization predominately composed of people from the Toronto slums.

Speaking at a forum organized by the School of Social Work, John Neveu, a father of five, charged the "Compensation Board is a system to protect the company and not the employee." The Board is merely a means of preventing injured persons from suing companies for negligence, he claimed.

Mr. Neveu was injured at his job, and was consequently unable to continue working.

When he asked for funds to receive a university education, the board refused to grant it, he said.

Suzanne Polgar, a mother of three, spoke of the inescapable "poverty trap" and of the frustration of living on welfare.

She criticized the Society's "associate members", mostly social workers, and said that they should "get down to our level" before they can really help.

Mr. Neveu, however, defended social workers saying "they are stuck with the system and can do little about it."

Moreover, he said, decisions about payments are not made by the workers who really know the conditions of the poor, but by administrators who decide from a file.

The welfare system, they charged, encroaches upon the most basic of human freedoms.

Mrs. Polgar said she is not even sure if she is allowed to have sex. Under present regulations, if she sleeps with a man for three nights in a row she may be classified as living common law, and her mother's allowance will be cut off.

Mr. Neveu related that when a social worker saw his wife go to a bingo game, his welfare cheque was not sent until he went and explained that his wife was merely using the money allotted for "recreation."

SALE

BEGINS

TODAY

FOR 1 WEEK,

BOOKS AND

STATIONERY

B
O
O
K
S

UNIVERSITY
BOOKROOM

The Drache Report gathers dust in archives

The Commission on University Government has formally released the Drache Report, but you will have trouble getting a copy.

There is one copy in the U of T archives — no copies have been sent to the daily press, the Students Administrative Council, The Varsity, or anyone else.

CUG delayed for six weeks before releasing Danny Drache's Research Report on the Faculty of Arts and Science, for it insisted that departmental chairmen authorize the use of their quotations in the report.

The Commission had claimed that some of the interviews that Drache held with the chairmen were confidential, and that was the excuse for the delay.

Now that CUG has cleared the quotations with the chairmen and has released the research report, there is another problem: although the report was officially released, realistically it is still a private document, since no one can get a copy.

CUG co-chairman Gary Webster, said the Commission could not afford to publish the report, since it had already far over-spent its budget.

But surely Simcoe Hall can afford a few hundred dollars to produce a few hundred copies of a report that cost it over $20,000 to research in the first place?

Drache's research — an empirical analysis of departmental decision-making in the university — could be a valuable document. But it's useless if it only gathers dust in the U of T archives.

Drache, who has just returned from the NDP Convention in Winnipeg, told The Varsity yesterday that CUG's reluctance to publish his report is another attempt to suppress it.

"It's part of a whole series of delay tactics and bickering," he said. "This is what the university is excellent at. The Commission's actions were totally indefensible."

Drache's report is an attack on the "liberal reform movement" at the U of T. He exposes four basic developments behind that movement:

- the building of a committee structure in the departments allows students to advise senior faculty and leaves them with the power of servile consultants.

- The weakening of the base of the university — the departments — strengthens the central power of the administration.

- The perpetuation of a hierarchical "academic guild" restricts the scope of knowledge in the university and suppresses the class question "Knowledge for whom?"

- the Americanization of the university (41 per cent of Arts and Science Faculty are American) creates branch-plant universities in a branch-plant economy.

Drache points out that CUG did not deal with those four questions. He says CUG is trying to suppress his report because it is the main spearhead of the liberal reform movement which he attacks.

If the Commission on University Government wishes to retain its credibility, even as the voice of the liberal reform movement, it must publish and distribute the Drache Report.

For that report is the best possible critique of the CUG Report itself; and so far the Commission has not shown much integrity in the face of criticism.

CUG Research Assistant Danny Drache says CUG is trying to "emasculate" his report now that they've released it.

photo by Mark Rubin

LETTERS

bell chimes in

Sir,
Mrs. Nevin's article in the Varsity of October 22 alleging political discrimination in appointing her as a teaching assistant needs some clarification. The decision about her not being employed as a tutorial leader in my course was my own. Political consideration were of no relevance. I attempted to clarify this in a conversation with Mrs. Nevin. This conversation took place some time after she had in fact been appointed as an assistant in another course.

Narman W. Bell
Professor of Sociology

no bald old men here

Sir,
I was the chairman of a panel discussion on "Obsolete Youth", held at the International Student Centre on October 29. This is the discussion to which the editorial by Mr. Gard Shelley in your October 31 issue was devoted.

The panelists did not volunteer to talk about "Obsolete Youth". They had been asked to do so. The discussion was organized by a young student from one of the developing countries in Asia. It was one of a series that he hoped would promote closer relations between the foreign students who use the International Student Centre and the rest of the University. He meant no harm by it. It never occurred to him that Mr. Shelley might disapprove of that kind of thing.

There are a couple of small points. Mr. Shelley wrote: "There were even spotlights shining down on the panel, reflecting on the bald heads... beautiful". A beautiful image, indeed! But as it happens, nobody on the platform was bald. Mr. Shelley also described the four panelists as "old men". But they were actually all quite young.

Of course, we understand. We have all heard of poetic licence. Hitler had. So had McCarthy. There are times — anybody can see that — when a journalist has to make everybody think that wrong ideas — clichés (funny how people who are wrong always seem to speak in clichés!) — always come from bald old men. Or Jewish Bolsheviks. Or fellow-travelling pinkos. Or effete snobs. Even when they don't. After all, he has the good of society to think of. And who would want to sacrifice the good of society to lesser things? Like justifying criticisms with rational arguments! Or being fair to the people one is talking about? Or providing readers with accurate information?

Anyway, as I say, these are minor points. And very understandable. Pettifogging to mention them at all, really.

But, oh yes — there is just one question. What do you think somebody should do from now on if he is asked to take part in a panel discussion in the University? Would it be best for him to check with Mr. Shelley first? So that anything he was going to say that Mr. Shelley would not have said can be deleted? Or would you advise him to be brave and go ahead — provided that he has his head shaved beforehand?

D. E. Berlyne
Department of Psychology dangerous subversive?

Sir,
Now that the turn-on premier has become the turn-in premier, and we are instructed by the premier in person to inform the RCMP of any subversive persons we know: May I urgently report that Milton Acorn, 404 Palmerston Blvd., Toronto 4, makes up his own mind about everything, arrives at his own conclusions, and follows the dangerous unCanadian practice of acting upon his conclusions; no matter what the authorities may say. In other words Milton Acorn is a dangerous subversive; and in accordance with the premier's instructions I do so report him.

Milton Acorn

the varsity

TORONTO

Editor
Business Editor
Associate Business Editor
News Editors
City Editor
Features Editor
Sports Editor
Design
CUP Editor
Photo Editor
Executive Assistant
Advertising Manager
Editorial Offices
Editorial Phone
Advertising Office

Brian Johnson
Larry Harven
Jack McCallister
Jim Cowan
Geoff Genge
Loose Erbschman
Neal Strickley
Mary Kate Rowan
Paul Carson 923-4053
Dave Frank
Barbara Behrman
Sue Fleming
Marilyn Rubin
Harriet Kudekai
Carol Cooper 923-8971
91 St. George Street Room
523 8741 523 8742
91 St. George 1st Floor

The Varsity a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset Publications, Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university.

The Varsity is planning a Community Issue, and a key issue is the Spadina Expressway. If you are interested in doing some writing and research on the Expressway, talk to Mary Kate Rowan in the Varsity office p.m. Wednesday.

Will the real open letter please stand up?

Number one.....or number two?

Sometime between the chicken wings and the lime sherbet I was eating for supper Friday night, I decided to write an article on engineers opinion of their newspaper, the Toike Oike, and of Bob Barkwell's open letter to the paper that appeared in the Varsity. (The chicken was a little greasy, but was still good.)

I went around talking to quite a few engineers, most of whom had little to say, since they didn't have any of their friends around. The only thing worth repeating, although at first it seems unrelated, was Bill saying that most of his classes were pretty poor.

The lack of response ended at midnight Saturday, when a rock with a letter attached, came crashing through my window. The letter read:

AN OPEN LETTER TO BOB BARKWELL:

First of all I'd like to say that I am an engineer, and am damn proud not only of my status, but of the newspaper that represents me. In other words I am sick and tired of you pinkos attacking the only clear thinking publication on campus. Next thing you're going to be saying is that our jokes are no good.

And you talk about integrity; well let me just say it's not us engineers, but it's your fag articles that have been going around burning computer centres, and beating up innocent children and dogs.

In your letter in the Varsity

SAC Vice-President Bob Barkwell wrote an open letter in Friday's Varsity, where he condemned the editors of the Toike Oike as yellow journalists and "red-baiters".

you maliciously attacked the Toike Oike on the grounds that they have printed false information. To prove your point you've even gone so far as saying we should check the SAC's records. I wouldn't be a bit swayed by anything I would read in those, because as far as I am concerned you can't believe everything you read.

You've accused the paper of printing half-truths, of yellow journalism, and red-baiting. Well although I'm not sure what the first two mean, it seems to me that since it got you all angered up, you must have swallowed the bait.

Instead of going around rioting and looting, while criticizing legitimate journals at the same time, why not take into mind Charlton Heston's famous line in "The Agony and The Ecstasy"; "The pen is mightier than the sword."

— Michael Kaufman

(Ed. - - When Michael Kaufman wrote the above letter, he had no knowledge of the real "Open letter to Bob Barkwell" that Brian Leatham sent to The Varsity.

AN OPEN LETTER TO BOB BARKWELL

First of all may I thank you for the marvellous public relations job you are doing for our newspaper. Despite our attempts to instill a spirit of friendly rivalry with the Varsity bunch, we have been met with austere silence.

Only twice have we been mentioned in the Varsity this year — both times by you. Keep up the good work.

Speaking of the Varsity quotes by Gus Abols which you objected to. In our wonderful journalistic tradition of plagerism, lovingly called "research", we found that quote nestled away on page 19 of The Varsity.

Admittedly this was somewhat less prominent than your own statements, but I think that you'll have to agree that it was valid for both The Varsity and the Toike to print it since, no matter how you disagree with it, he did, indeed, say it. We must apologize for not knowing when the N.L.C. was formed; it is so difficult to keep track of these far-out splinter groups which bloom briefly, die and are reborn again the next year. I must say it has never occurred to me to look in S.A.C. files for this information since I thought it was only the C.I.A. etc who were accused of keeping files on this type of organization. Is there a secret S.A.C. bureau of investigation which has remained unknown to us? What thrilling drama its files must contain.

As to your comments on our last issue, please allow me to point out that there is a fundamental similarity between someone who sees "reds" behind every bush, and someone who sees "red-baiters" behind every bush. We tried to cast a little scorn on both positions in our last issue and certainly a look at the poor old U of T communist club will show how irrelevant these positions are. Actually we were trying to deal in a light manner with the whole mess since our assessment of campus feeling after the referendum was that most people thought the whole thing was kind of a laugh. Indeed if we were to follow the lead in your letter we should now have to charge you with "yellow-journalism baiting"; a most serious charge indeed.

To return to a serious suggestion, may I extend to you, Bob, and to any others who have become overly uptight about a newspaper which the SAC handbook has described as "frivolous", the invitation to attend any Toike meeting or make-up to discuss our sources of information and our editorial policies. As to your charges of lack of integrity and intellectual impoverishment, these phrases come trippingly from the tongue and drippingly from the pen but their contributions to rational debate are roughly zero I expect that our editor, Peter Jones, will write a serious and dull letter to you to answer your charges but I could not resist the opportunity to prove your "expectations" wrong at least with respect to an answer if not improvement.

Smile.

Brian Leatham
Take Assoc. Editor.

CUPE fights to unionize our student union

In the spring of 1969, the employees of the Students' Administrative Council organized themselves into a bargaining unit under the Canadian Union of Public Employees. At this time the SAC agreed to recognize CUPE as the sole bargaining agent for the Council's employees, signed a voluntary recognition form and prepared to enter negotiations for a first agreement.

It was felt in the spring, and has since been reaffirmed by our Local 1222, that a union was necessary at the SAC office for the purposes of job security. The employees of the SAC are liable to be hired, fired, promoted, or demoted by the Council as a whole and thus our livelihood is dependent upon the Council which is elected yearly by the student body at large. It was felt that since there is such a high yearly turnover on the Council that there had to be a written legal statement to ensure job security and the permanence of office procedures. This is the purpose and statement of intent in the proposed contract between Local 1222 and the Students' Administrative Council. Contained in the contract is a definition of seniority, outline of office procedures (institutionalizing what already exists and initiating office democracy such that any changes in the working conditions must first be agreed upon by both the management and the union), a specific outline of hiring and firing procedures, and a detailed salary schedule standardizing pay increments, so that salaries may be kept in line and will not become dependent upon the whim of the council in power.

The contract which is presently awaiting ratification of the Council was carefully worked out by the union Local over the summer. The negotiations with management began on July 22 with final agreement being reached by July 25. The contract was then to come up for ratification at the first full council meeting. Debate at the Summer meeting was prohibited when a small number of members walked out and a quorum count was called with none present. Again, in September, as ratification was to proceed, the discipline crisis hit the campus, and the union local agreed to withdraw ratification of their contract from the agenda in recognition of SAC priorities. The union therefore waited another two weeks for ratification of their contract. At the next meeting of council two clauses out of the proposed 29 Articles contained in the contract were accepted in principle. At this time it appeared that not all of the management negotiating team had remained in agreement with the contract as negotiated, although they had been given ample time at all negotiating meetings to voice any criticism and resolve problems and questions concerning the contract. Although this was most unusual, the union negotiating team agreed to enter into negotiations once more. At this meeting, held on Oct. 29, an agreement was reached between both union and management and a memorandum of agreement was signed by both parties stating that a satisfactory settlement had been reached at that time concerning all outstanding amendments and the contract as a whole.

The position of the management negotiating team, now that agreement has been reached, is for the SAC team to go to the council to explain their reasons for reaching agreement and to recommend ratification of the contract to the council.

The union negotiating team went into final negotiations with management with specific direction from the local membership, regarding the proposed amendments and the memorandum of settlement and since negotiations, have returned to the local and presented the final form of the contract.

Local 1222 feels that both as a bargaining unit and negotiating team that we have acted in good faith throughout all the bargaining stages and at all times have been willing to take management's point of view into account. Now at the end of the final negotiations we feel that we have conceded as much as we can without endangering our whole existence as a union.

Having been patient since July, the next step is up to the SAC. The Labour Relations Board of Ontario specifically outlines negotiation procedures for management and not working within these guidelines can be interpreted as interfering with the union's right to organize. Negotiations with Local 1222 have lasted since the middle of the summer and have stretched unnecessarily into the late fall. It is up to management to realize their legal responsibility with regards to the contract and to carry out that responsibility.

The lives of the workers have been dallied with too long.

CUPE, Local 1222

What did you learn in school today?

By AL GORDON
(Al Gordon is a second-year University College student.)

Perhaps one of the greatest causes of alienation is the establishment of incentives which make it profitable for one individual to screw his peers in the ear. What could more readily fall into this category than a setting wherein it is the job of certain individuals to pose as peers and report any suspicious behavior to a higher authority? And to add insult to injury, what if this authority has all the external trappings of a "progressive"?

That is my rhetorical interpretation of the goings-on in Psychology 203. The facts are this: An objective, multiple-choice test was administered to the students on Friday Oct. 17. The following week we were informed of alleged cheating. The proof? Evidently a number of pairs of answer cards that followed one another (in the sequence that they were being marked) bore similar alterations to answers. The rebuttal? The sequence in which the cards were marked bore no resemblance to the sequence in which students were seated, since the cards were handed in as each student finished the test. Therefore, proximity in card sequence does not necessarily mean proximity in seating position. The next lecture began with a tirade against the alleged cheating. New proof had emerged, however, to support the previous undeniable evidence. No less than 25 students came to the professor and complained that other people had copied their answers during the test; some of these individuals actually being able to give three or four specific names of cheaters. (They even have a record of you, you lousy cheaters!) The final result emerged at today's lecture. We were told for the second test (next Friday) that students would be observed by a number of monitors as well as (What would George Orwell say) confederates of the professor who would pretend to be writing the exam but who, in fact, would be watching for signs of suspicious behavior.

My first reaction to all this mud-slinging was to assume that we were being used as part of an experiment on "the effects of alienation on the number of murders committed in a typical second-year psychology class." All the causes of alienation are present: 1) fear that your name may be on the "list"; 2) suspicion that your peer may really be on "their" side; and 3) a situation in which removing yourself from the status of suspect can be accomplished, at least in part, by casting aspersions on other invented enemies of the state. Surely no real-life situation could bear such a resemblance to the classical, textbook pre-requisites for alienation without some ingenious contriving. In an attempt to maintain some cognitive consonance (to use the appropriate shop-talk) between my view of the professor as a progressive and basically amiable individual, and his present behavior, and between my concept of my fellow-students and the alleged actions of the "tattlers", I have to tell myself that it's all a gag. Within the next few weeks the immortal questionnaires will appear, graphs will be drawn, new norms established, and somebody will get a cheque from the Journal of Social Psychology. However, an interview in the professor's office left me convinced (at least temporarily) that he is serious — "I don't play games with my class!" But, frankly, I still can't believe it.

Perhaps I have committed an appalling breach of diplomacy by jeopardizing a psychology experiment. I hope so.

P.S. Upon re-reading this, I notice that I never mentioned the name of the Professor. There was nothing strategic intended. His name is Tony Doob.

Centre for the Study of Drama and The St. Lawrence Centre for the Arts presents

Slawomir Mrozek's
TANGO

translated by Nicholas Bethell, adapted by Tom Stoppard, directed by Joseph Shaw, designed by Martha Mann, with: David Brown, Barbara Borland, Nancy Kerr, Jane Mallett, Jack Medley, William Needles, Sean Sullivan

Mondays to Thursdays to November 20 at 8:30
Tickets $3.00 - Students $1.50

and Eugene O'Neill's MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA

directed by Leon Major settings by Murray Laufer, costumes by Marie Day, with: James Bradford, David Brown, Patricia Collins, Neil Dainard, Michael Fletcher, Maureen Fox, Ron Hastings, Don McManus, Jack Medley, William Needles, Norma Oliver, Kate Reid, Anna Reiser, Sean Sullivan, Jonathan White

Fridays and Saturdays only, to November 22 at 5:30
Tickets $4.50 - Students $2.25

HART HOUSE THEATRE

Box Office open 10:00 to 6:00 - 928-8668

Gala Opening Performance, November 7 - $7.50 - Students $3.75

NO EXAMS ON PASSOVER

IF YOU HAVE AN EXAM THE NEXT MORNING, WILL YOU BE ABLE TO SPEND THE SEDER WITH YOUR FAMILY?

when courses are confirmed in November,

INDICATE YOUR DESIRE THAT U OF T NOT SCHEDULE
EXAMS ON PASSOVER

Hillel Foundation 923-7837 for information

PROJECT 999

Hillel Presents

RABBI ABEL RESPES

Black Rabbi from N.J.

on

"BLACK JEWS IN AMERICA"

Sunday, November 9th

8:30 p.m.

YM-YWHA, 750 Spadina Ave.

TODAY

Meet the Faculty Series

DR. THOMAS D. LANGAN

Dept. of Philosophy, U of T

Monday, November 3rd

1:00 p.m. U.C. Rm. 314

"Is Permissiveness In Education a Disaster?"

québec and bill

63

BY ROBERT ISSENMAN and PETER STARR

Robert Isсенman graduated from Harvard University, in the department of government. He is presently at the Université de Montréal, Faculty of Law. He wrote his thesis on the Ligue pour l'Integration Scolaire.

Peter Starr is presently at the Université de Montréal in the Department of Sociology. He is editor of the well-known Montréal underground newspaper, Uncensored Version, and was formerly co-chairman of the Provincial Association of Secondary Students.

They are covering the opposition to Bill 63 for Canadian University Press and the McGill Daily.

Turmoil has rocked the entire Province of Québec for the past two weeks, over the issue of "language of education".

Strikes have paralysed most of the large French universities in the province. Junior colleges throughout Québec have been hit by massive class boycotts while numerous high schools are shut down entirely.

Ten thousand students staged a spectacular non-violent march on the Montréal headquarters of the ruling Union Nationale party on Oct. 28. This followed a frenzied teach-in which jammed the entire Université de Montréal sports arena. Other demonstrations, against targets such as the ontreal City Hall occurred.

This past "week of protest" was parked by the provincial government's attempt to introduce a bill — Bill 63 — enabling both English Canadians and "New Canadians" to choose freely between English and French-language education for their children.

The "language of education" issue has been building up over the last two years in Québec, initially ignited by an educational crisis in the Montréal suburb of St. Leonard.

LANGUAGE CHOICE

The freedom of Italian residents to choose English language schooling lay at the base of that conflict. In May 1968, a newly-elected school commission decided to abolish all English language public schools in the community over a period of six years. Children of "English origin" were to be bussed out of St. Léonard for their education.

The English and Italian residents of the community reacted violently to this sudden liquidation of their "fundamental rights." They refused to submit to the imposition of French language schools and established their own classes in local homes.

Spearheading the drive to abolish English language schooling was Raymond Lemieux. His Ligue pour l'Integration Scolaire "attempted to carry the unilingualist position to other communities in the province.

The unilingualists are particularly concerned that almost all immigrants to Québec are assimilated immediately into the English language milieu. The increased flow of postwar immigration, combined with a drastically lower French birthrate, is predicted to make the French a minority in Montréal within 10 years.

The unilingualists further maintain that the French are an overwhelming majority in Québec and should not finance an English public school system. This rationale has great emotional force because the Québec economy is run in the English language. The unilingualists feel English schools abet this situation and threaten to relegate the French language to hie kitchens and the churches.

Ultimately they fear for the survival of the French language and culture, and for the survival of the French Canadian nation itself.

The issue has fantastic emotional power and has erupted into sprees of violence on more than once occasion. English and French students clashed during Operation McGill — last March's rally of unilingualists at English-speaking McGill University.

MCGILL A SYMBOL

The nationalists chose McGill as a symbol of English domination of Québec society. They vehemently object to Québec government subsidies of the English universities — McGill, Sir George Williams, Bishop's, Loyola — while the French universities — Université de Montréal, Sherbrooke, Laval, Université de Québec — are sorely in need of funds to improve their long-neglected facilities.

Unilingualists turned out in force again in September 1969 in another French-Italian confrontation at St. Léonard. Fights broke out between the French and Italians and stores in the community were ransacked.

The police, caught by surprise, panicked and read the Riot Act. In an attempt to dampen the unilingualist fervor, the government charged unilingualist leaders with sedition.

Lemieux, who led Friday's march is free on bail as a result of charges stemming from the riot.

The atmosphere of unrest in Montréal was intensified by the notorious riot on the night of October 7 when Montreal police went on strike and when Canadian army troops were called in to restore order to the city.

But organization, not violence, has been the most important characteristic emerging this fall. Since September, Lemieux has been directing a highly successful drive to organize the students in universities, high schools and junior colleges.

Last year the mobilization of Québec students was centered around internal school politics. But this year the students are reacting to the "national" question.

The attempt by the government to grant "freedom of choice in education" under Bill 63 has dramatically catalysed the unilingualist movement. It appears to have created a common front between workers and students.

Overnight, the radical dream of students and workers united in a struggle against a common enemy has come closer to realization in Québec than anywhere else in North America.

The Front de Québec Français, formed 2 weekends ago, brought together the leaders of unions, parent-teacher organizations, nationalist societies and student groups.

STUDENT SUPPORT STRONG

The union groups alone represent at least 500,000 workers under such giants as the Confederation of National Trade Unions, the Conseil Syndicale Nationale, and the Corporation des Enseignants de Québec. Support from the students is also extremely strong.

Last Tuesday during a teach-in at the Université de Montréal, prominent labor leader Michel Chartrand said: "Bill 63 is an excellent bill, because it unites the French Canadian nation. The Union Nationale party could never better serve the French Canadian people than by what it is doing with Bill 63."

It will create solidarity in the French Canadian nation," he continued. "It will unite the workers. It will unite the students and the farmers. We could never have dreamed of an occasion like this."

Even if the Québec government miraculously comes up with a solution to the language of education and immigrant issues, the struggle has only begun.

The fundamental basis of the conflict in Québec is economic. "Language of work" and the economic discrepancies between English and French speaking Québécois will inevitably emerge as the gut issue.

The strength of the worker-student bonds forged in the last week will be crucial in the forthcoming contests. Friday's demonstration may have provided the key to the future of Québec.

A group of 70 U of T students demonstrated Friday night at the Federal Building in sympathy with Québec protests against Bill 63.

After a half hour of shouting slogans and several short speeches, the demonstration peacefully broke up.

The police were then sent scurrying when members of the New Left Caucus decided to hold a pumpkin dance in commemoration of Halloween in the back parking lot of the building. This too broke up peacefully after ten minutes of rigorous pumpkin dancing.

Rain is a four letter word to Homecoming crowd

By JIM COWAN

It just wasn't Varsity's weekend for a Homecoming.

Rain Friday night ruined several floats for Saturday's parade — Physical Education gave in and rode around on their truck with cheerleaders holding a sign reading "float cancelled because of this damn r-n."

Queens Golden Gaels upset the favored Blues in the final minute of the afternoon football game, snatching a 16-14 victory before a rain-drenched crowd of 14,000 students and alumni.

And, adding insult to injury, the Homecoming '69 dance at Hart House featured decorative lighting in red, gold and blue — the Queen's colors.

U of T's newest college, Erindale, walked off with first prize in the float competition, one of the few efforts to deal with the Homecoming theme, Spaced Out '69.

GREEN HASH?

The float featured two large foil-covered space capsules on the moon's surface. One of the "high" astronauts informed the crowd that the moon was really made of hashish.

President Claude Bissell,

Hart House Warden E. A. Wilkinson and SAC president Gus Abols were among the judges.

"I'm glad they won," Bissell said later. "I didn't put them first but I'm glad they won."

He added the parade "was not as good as some past years. The theme was difficult to zero in on."

The St. Michael's College float placed second, and the Faculty of Music was third.

Rain began again as the parade ended, and kept up for the rest of the day.

At the game, the crowds huddled under umbrellas, rain coats, plastic sheets and anything else they could find to keep dry. It was Varsity's best crowd of the season, but the wet, cold weather prevented a complete sellout.

BLACKMARKET PLASTIC

At least one usher found a goldmine in the mob's miscomfort. He went around selling green plastic garbage bags as umbrellas and raingear — at 35¢ apiece. It's not clear who benefited from the 4,000 per cent profit he was making.

The rain and football loss failed to dampen the homecoming dance, which jammed 1,700 into Hart House in the evening.

Miss U of T. was chosen this year, because, said Blue and White Society chairman, Michael Lawrie, it is "unofficial SAC policy" not to sponsor such events.

"I thought this was really rotten," he said yesterday. "I think we'll probably go ahead and choose a Miss U of T at the winter carnival."

It was still pouring as the dance broke up at midnight. A few pieces of blue and white crepe from one of the morning's floats drifted down the gutter. It was sort of that kind of day for Varsity fans, too.

Buttery awakens to mass sensory happening

By JOHN BENSON

Fifty or so variously uptight and rained-on U of T students met five psychologists in Trinity College's Buttery Sunday afternoon for a "sensory awakening."

The event was part of this year's Homecoming sponsored by the Blue and White Society.

The purpose of the session was to "celebrate sensuality, aliveness and intimacy" by making the subjects more aware of their bodies.

Exercises such as body-slapping, body-trips and non-verbal intimacy were designed to allow the members to forget their minds and rediscover their bodies.

Although the movements were designed to bring all areas of the body more alive, Merv Dickenson, a member of Explore, said "the group was more reserved than those we usually work with."

"There is no attempt to analyze or interpret an experience" he said. "We are allowing the participants to enjoy their own feelings."

The experience was designed to allow the members "to discover honesty, trust and openness." Several preferred that their names not be mentioned in The Varsity.

The session was an example of the kind of experience being organised by Explore, which runs continuing programs in sensory awakenings.

Weekend marathon sessions cost about $95 per person, including meals and accommodation.

Derek Freeman, Chairman of the Blue and White Homecoming program, said he is "interested in continuing this kind of activity" because "it is more relevant to modern students and U of T's geographical and architectural reality."

Freeman also said he would "appreciate any feedback on this year's programs, especially the sensory awakening". He is interested in involving the colleges on a more individual basis in areas such as ticket-selling.

The sensory awakening was the final event in this year's sensorily wet Homecoming.

Why is this man smiling? Dr. Claude Bissell, who later said this year's Homecoming Parade was "not as good as some past years", nevertheless seemed to enjoy the effort of Knox College. The float was a stylized confrontation between placard-waving students and the university administration. The centre picture shows the students rushing the barricades while the president (left) reaches down

What Really Happened At Sir George Williams...

By DOUG VAREY

This morning Rosie Douglas is in court in Montreal facing twelve charges including conspiracy to commit arson and conspiracy to damage property.

If convicted, he faces the possibility of life in prison.

Friday he was on campus talking about what happened at Sir George Williams University last Feb. 11 at the Computer Centre party.

Douglas, a McGill Political Science graduate, of Caribbean origin, is now a landed immigrant in Canada. He did his undergraduate work at Sir George Williams and he was one of the leaders in the occupation that led to the destruction of the computer.

"For two years prior to the occupation, Black students were discriminated against by Professor Anderson of the physiology department. They had trouble getting fair marks and were humiliated on numerous occasions," Douglas said.

"In May, 1968, six students from his class went to the Dean of Students to complain. They spent three hours with him and when they left he said 'Don't call me, I'll call you.' That's the last they heard.

"These students repeated this process with the Dean of Science and the head of the biology department. The same thing happened, Douglas continued.

The Black students took over the second of the commission's open sessions and from there moved to the area of the computer centre to begin the occupation. That was Jan. 26, 1969.

Douglas said, "On Feb. 10, the Administration presented a plan which would guarantee that a commission would be formed that would be satisfactory to both sides. The occupiers signed and we felt that the occupation was nearly over.

"All that was left was for the Principal to sign and we would clear out. A lot of the occupiers left the building and went home," he said.

FACULTY THREAT

"Certain members of the faculty, house Marxists," he said, "told the Principal that if he signed this agreement the faculty would strike. The agreement was not signed and the students were double-crossed again."

Douglas described the tension that built up among the 100 people still around the computer centre.

"It was decided to escalate the occupation," he said. Rumors were out that the police were one the way. We withdrew into the computer centre itself and barricaded the doors. There was no toilets. The place was very crowded and everyone was very hyper about the administration's sudden rejection of the agreement.

"Then the Montreal riot police arrived and smashed the glass doors. There was a lot of scuffling, blood was being splattered all over the place. The place was wrecked."

Harrington claims that fires were set by the students and the police saved their lives by breaking a hole in the wall to get them out since all other exits were barricaded.

Douglas ended his speech with a plea for financial assistance for their legal defence fund. They need $100,000 and have raised $35,000. At the meeting's end, a steering committee was established to organize support and collect money.

RUN AROUND

"The Black students began to realize that the Deans were protecting the professor against the students and the administration was protecting the Deans and the Board of Governors was covering for the Administration, he said.

All we wanted was a fair hearing. If it was found that Anderson was not a racist, we'd be glad to apologize. We wanted justice and all we got was a run-around."

Roger Harrington (SGS), was president of the Honors Society at Sir George last year. "The original charge against Anderson was not racism but incompetence," Harrington told the Varsity after the speech. "He used to skip classes and was unprepared for lectures.

"It was only when the administration bungled the case through delay and sloppiness (they lost the minutes of one of the meetings in the inter-University mail) that the Black Students changed their tactics," Harrington said.

"They decided that a charge of racial prejudice would carry more weight."

"In December, 1968," continued Douglas, "still no action had been taken on the original complaints. Some of the Black Brothers got pretty impatient and decided to get everybody together for a little chat.

BROTHERS UPSET

"Five or six visited the office of Principal Rae. He said that he hadn't had a chance to do anything about the complaints but would do something about it the following Monday, Douglas said.

The Brothers were a little upset and told him to 'put his fucking coat on' and come with them to look for the head of the biology department.

"They didn't get any action then but shortly after that Rae resigned for health reasons. He must have recuperated quickly because now he's working at York," Douglas stated.

"While all this was going on, Anderson was on leave of absence with pay," Douglas said, vice-principal O'Brien wrote a letter telling him that he could come back and begin lecturing again, but that he better not because the Black students had threatened violence."

"This, said Douglas, "was the first that we had heard of resulted in the establishment of a five man commission to investigate the charges of the Black students. Two of its members were black professors and acquaintances of the complainants.

"In order to avoid charges that they were prejudiced in our favour, the Black students asked them to resign so that impartial replacements could be found," Douglas explained.

photo by Don Andrew

Rosie Douglas

any threat of violence."

COMMISSION ESTABLISHED

"Of course, we felt duty bound to tell the student body that the vice-principal is a liar. Shortly after that two black brothers were charged with extortion and kidnapping in connection with the O'Brien incident."

Rosie Douglas continued, "Our insistence had finally Harrington has a different version. "I think that the resignation of the two members was suspicious. I don't think the Black students had any real evidence of racial prejudice and therefore didn't want the commission to meet."

The commission was reconstituted but not to the satisfaction of the complainants. They refused to take part in the proceedings.

to bestow a degree on a grovelling student. Faculty members try to reason with the protesting students, while a non-academic support worker (janitor to you) cleans up the rubble between two barbed wire barricades. In the second picture, the students rush the presidential dias and overcome the staff, while the non-academic support worker continues shovelling. The flood made it into the finals, but failed to place in the top three.

McDONALD, CURRIE & CO. CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Our representatives will be pleased to discuss your plans for a career in Chartered Accountancy during their annual recruiting visit at the University of Toronto on:

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1969
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1969
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1969

Engineering students will also be interviewed on:

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1969

There will be openings in the various offices of our Firm in the Province of Ontario and throughout the other Canadian provinces for 1970 graduates in Commerce, Science, Arts, Engineering and Law.

Please contact the Student Placement Office of the University of Toronto to arrange a convenient time for a personal interview on campus or to obtain a copy of our recruiting brochure.

If the dates of our visit do not suit your time schedule, you are invited to call Mr. John B. Cole, in our Toronto office, at 366-2551.

FREE U of T

WHAT IS IT?

An attempt to build a good learning environment, (whether apart from the campus courses, or as a critique of campus courses is up to the individuals involved). Courses are set up in response to demands from the campus, and the shape of the course is designed by the group involved—you decide what and how you want to learn in consultation with a resource person (if you want one and we can find one), in all of the courses whether they be "do-your-own-thing", interdisciplinary, on problems, areas not included in campus curriculum, a specific counter-course, the emphasis is on learning not on exams, grades, certificates etc.

COURSES:

These are courses which have survived from last year, or which have been suggested by resource people.

POETRY OF PHYSICS
BIBLE AS REVOLUTIONARY DOCUMENT
CONVERSATIONAL YIDDISH
LIBERTARIAN PSYCHIATRY & SOCIOLOGY
CREATIVE COMMUNICATIONS
COMPUTERS
EDUCATION- WHAT IT IS, WHAT IT SHOULD BE T - GROUPS
OCCULTISM TO-DAY
THIRD WORLD FILMS & DISCUSSION GROUP
MYSTICISM & OCCULTISM
SEMINAR ON THE FAMILY
MARXIST ECONOMICS GROUP
NON - AUTHORITARIAN MEDICINE
WOMEN'S LIBERATION
LABOUR HISTORY
COMMUNISM
EDUCATION RESEARCH GROUP
A HISTORY COUNTER COURSE
ART (MAY BE HISTORY OF MODERN OR PRACTICAL, WHATEVER IS WANTED)

HOW TO REGISTER:

Phone or call Maggie Bizzell, SAC office 923-3490
or

Come to F.U. of T. Communal Meeting Thursday, November 6th 5:00 p.m., BICKERSTETH ROOM, HART HOUSE to discuss F.U. of T. In general, and for groups to work out with resource people the best time, and begin discussion on what and how to learn.

NEW COURSES:

Bring suggestions for new courses and/or resource people to M. Bizzell, or to the November 6th meeting. We need to know if people are interested in Literature, Music, Science, Urban Problems, Art, Languages, etc., etc., and are prepared to help in the building of such courses. Also if a course you are doing on campus is unsatisfactory—contact your course union and discuss possibility of setting up a counter course in F.U. of T. If no course union, come to OSAC office.

Is it technology or is it politics?

Technology main threat to man, says Regier

Man will destroy himself in this generation or the next, says Professor Henry Regier of the U of T Zoology Department.

He was speaking at the Academic Activities Committee's first symposium on "Population and Food," last Thursday evening.

Professor Regier did not see widespread famine as the major threat to our existence.

"Famine has always been present," he said, "and yet death by starvation gives us more abhorrence than any war."

"Our primary danger is the progress of technology," Regier continued.

Tracing Man's historical development, Regier demonstrated how each technological achievement, from fire to DDT, added to the destruction of nature.

MEPHISTOPHELES

He envisioned the agriculturalists, medical missionaries and technologists as Mephistopheles, upsetting the balance of nature with new methods, a polluting the biosphere with new chemicals.

The world is going to be drier if the population continues to increase. "We have got to get into massive programs, and keep a reasonably healthy biosphere if we don't want to destroy ourselves," Regier concluded.

destroy ourselves."

His views were not shared by the other two speakers, Harsh Chadha (SGS) and Rosemary Price. Both felt that a faulty political system was to blame for the starving millions.

Chadha, speaking for the Indian Progressive Study Group, said British imperialism had brought India to its state of poverty. "Only socialism" could make India a productive country again, she said.

Miss Price felt the world was in fact underpopulated.

"The basic problem is the use and control of existing means of production," she said. "Only a change in the economic system will bring any relief."

The AAC was formed last year by a group of students to promote the serious discussion of ideas on campus.

The committee holds that every phenomenon in this world has developed historically and that scientific investigation can show the way to solving any problems.

SAC will follow campaign trail

An SAC sponsored committee will focus attention on the Dec. 1 Toronto election beginning tomorrow.

A 1 p.m. meeting in Sidney Smith Rm. 1021 will determine the major areas for students concern during the campaign.

The group hopes to arrange seminars hitting the key issues affecting students and the university, such as the Spadina Expressway, U of T expansion, the quality of downtown schools, tenants rights and the police.

Then, interested students will follow candidates on the campaign trail, questioning them on these issues and publicizing their findings.

Of special interest will be the mayoralty race and the aldermanic and Board of Education contests in Ward 6, which includes the university, and Ward 7 where SAC is backing two candidates from the Trefann Court area.

Committee Chairman Richard Peachey (III Trin) feels the election work will help increase student understanding of the issues affecting their community and general environment, besides spearheading future work in these areas.

"It's important many students get involved in the committee's work" he said, hoping for a large turnout at tomorrow's meeting.

Unipax plans Biafra moratorium Nov. 27

A national moratorium day to end the war in Biafra has been set for Nov. 27.

Unipax, a university-based student group to end the war in Biafra, is organizing across Canada to hold mass rallies in major Canadian cities.

Unipax will attempt to have universities cancel classes for the day.

Unipax also announced that it will be taking part in marches on Nov. 15, which is Vietnam Moratorium Day.

The group will hold its first organizational meeting on Tuesday at 1 p.m. in UC Rm. 104. A movie produced by Cliff Robertson concerning atrocities committed in Biafra will be shown.

Artsies bleed like anemic chickens

Who says that this year's blood drive will be a disaster? (The Varsity, mainly.)

Well, dentistry students did their damndest to prove us wrong as they turned up by the hordes to bleed last Friday.

About 60 per cent of the students donated as compared with less than 25 per cent for the rest of the campus. Some had to wait for more than an hour for the pleasure of bleeding.

Large turnouts are expected today and tomorrow in the Galbraith Building. Artsies bled like anemic chickens last week, but hopes are that they will overcome their hemophobia and make a better showing this week. The drive ends this Friday.

the HEYLOFT

The next time you want to have a lot of fun and not get fussed up, you must try PORTS OF CALL SOUTH'S new room, THE HEYLOFT. Bob Mills leads the shenanigans from 9:00 P.M. to 1:00 A.M. and any form of garb is welcome... mini, maxi, pants, jeans and yes, even bare feet, while pitchin' fun at Ports of Call's new "barn" from 12:00 noon to 1 A.M.

Ports of Call

1145 YONGE ST.

924-9353

CENTRE FOR THE STUDY OF DRAMA

resents

NEXT TIME I'LL SING TO YOU

by JAMES SAUNDERS

Nov 3-8
at
8:30 p.m.

STUDIO THEATRE
4 Glenmorris
Admission Free

GRADUATING STUDENTS IN:

Computer Science Mathematics
Commerce & Finance

are invited to discuss a career opportunity in Electronic Data Processing

during an On-Campus interview at the University Placement Centre

NOVEMBER 17, 1969

CROWN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

120 Bloor Street East,
Toronto 5

Moratorium-ers launch petition

The Executive Moratorium Committee set up last Thursday established as its priority the Vietnam Moratorium on Nov. 14.

The Committee met Sunday to discuss the type of programs that could be organized. Those interested in setting up counter-courses to support the Moratorium in lieu of their regular courses are asked to contact the Committee at the SCM office or phone 923-9727.

The Committee is also circulating the petition reprinted at the right.

WE THE UNDERSIGNED STUDENTS AND STAFF OF THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO:

(A) on Friday, November 14, in participation with the U.S. Vietnam Moratorium will either forego and suspend our classes or devote them entirely to the discussion of the topic: Canada and the War in Vietnam.

(B) call for the Administration officially to suspend regular classes on that day.

NAME ATL NUMBER or DEPARTMENT

Deposit at the SAC office

HERE AND NOW

TODAY All Day

Your turn today engineers for the Blood Drive, Galbraith Bldg., Common room 3rd floor.

Nominations open until noon today for SAC election at Vic. Nominations forms in VCU office Election for one rep Nov 13

Noon

The Massey College cafeteria is now open to all students and faculty. Full course meal 75¢ 12-2, 5-6:30

Tickets on sale for "The Growth of Metropolitan Toronto: Processes Problems & Planning" — A symposium on urban affairs. Nov 7 & 8, Sid Smith, until 2 p.m.

SUC-In (Students Under Capitalism) for peace and solidarity with the RCMP, in Sid Smith Free Speech Area.

1 p.m.

Students for Israel Movement, educational workshop, re crisis in Israel, room 201 UC

V.C.F. discussion led by Paul Scott "Will the Real Phony Please Stand Up?", Wynwood Music Room

Chemistry Opt Films. Synthesis of an Organic Compound and Mechanism of an Organic Reaction. Room 158 Lash Miller's place

Hillel meet the faculty series — Dr. Thomas D. Langen, Dept. of Philosophy. "Is permissiveness in Education A Disaster?" UC 314

Career Information Lecture, on Banking. Room 2125, Sid Smith

4 p.m.

Women's Liberation Movement, U of T campus group will meet in Sid Smith room 1021

6 p.m.

Meeting of Steering Committee to get aid for students arrested during Sir George Williams events during last spring. All interested in helping are asked to attend GSU lounge, upstairs

6:30 p.m.

There will be a Psychology Student Union Exec meeting to discuss the departmental recommendations in CUG All psychology students are invited to attend in-sine College

8 p.m.

There will be a meeting of the Christian Perspective Club. Dr. J. Oltius will talk about the Role of the Church in the Secular City. All are invited to come to the South Sitting Room in Hart House

8:30 p.m.

The Centre for Drama Studies presents. "Next Time I'll Sing To You" by James Saunders. Nov. 3,4,5,6,7,8. Studio Theatre, 4 Glenmorris Admission Free

Tuesday All Day

The Blood Drives second day visiting the engineers at the Galbraith Bldg the Common room, 3rd floor

Join a broadcast dialogue & speak on "Badder's Bitch" on Radio Varsity. Complaints & controversy welcome, no holds barred. Daily at 10:45 a.m. and 4:45 p.m.

Noon

The psychology student union nomination meeting for the parity committee, which will discuss student representation in the department, will meet in room 1071, Sid Smith

The Royal Conservatory of Music, presents in its Noon Hour Concert Series Helena Bowkun, piano, at the School of Music Concert Hall, 273 Bloor St. West, from 12:25-12:45

1 p.m.

Yavneh is having David Zimmerman give a talk on Parshat "Chaye Sarah" in Sid Smith, Room 2129

The 1st meeting of U of T Unixap Film and discussion of blitz political survey of Sharp's Eglington riding, and Nov. 27 Moretown on Beitra, in rm. 104, U.C.

SAC Toronto Election working group Meeting to discuss areas of student involvement in city election campaign. Sid Smith 1021

If Sales Engineering is your bag then come to the Career Information Lecture on it in room 2125 of Sidney Smith

Auditions for Samuel Beckett's "Embers", at Wetmore Hall, New College, Room 121, until 5 p.m.

4 p.m.

Guy Fawkes Day write and cheese party organized by Prog. Conservative Club, Admission 50¢ at GSU until 8 p.m.

6 p.m.

A meeting in the SAC office to discuss proposed budget for the cultural affairs for the coming year

6 p.m.

Hillel Diner's Club, reservations 923-7837

7 p.m.

U of T Homophile Association meets in Hart House, Room A204. All are welcome. Meeting of History Students Union exec. council. All history students welcome, Sid Smith 2124.

7:30 p.m.

CUSO Fall Lecture Series, "The Kangaroo: The Current Answer to Underdevelopment." Mr. Richard Ingram, Director, CUSA Latin America Programme, International Student Centre, 33 St. George St.

8 p.m.

A panel discussion on "Is Political Science Permeated with Political Ideology?" International Students Centre

ITS WHERE ITS HAPPENING

Meet your friends at

PETIT PALAIS COIFFURE

All the Latest Mod Styles and Cuts by any of our 5 Stylists

We specialize in long hair styling

20% discount Monday through Thursday with proof of A.T.L. Card

415 Bloor St. W. Corner Spadina - Borders, campus
Open Thursday and Friday Evenings
For appointment phone 922-2823

Where are the leaders?

Anyone will tell you that the Leaders are enjoying the advantages of military training and university subsidization through the Regular Officer Training Plan (ROTP).

If you are a full time male undergraduate student with a successful academic record you should know about the opportunities that the Canadian Armed Forces can offer you as an ROTP cadet. You will continue your civilian studies towards a degree at your University.

Enquiries are invited to:

THE CANADIAN FORCES RECRUITING CENTRE
25 ST. CLAIR AVENUE EAST
TORONTO 290, ONTARIO
TELEPHONE, 966-6564

The Regular Officer Training Plan
For University Undergraduates.

WHY NOT?
BUY FROM THE CHAR-BURG
PIZZERIA
CHEAPER - BETTER
FREE DELIVERY
536-0475

CUT YOUR CLEANING COSTS
by 2/3

at the
Church & Wellesley Self Serve
Dry Cleaner

OPEN EVERY DAY
Attendant on Duty

568 Church St.
924-6010

GETTING ENGAGED?

DIAMONDS MAY BE A GIRL'S BEST FRIEND... BUT YOU PAY THE BILL.

Most people find it very difficult to determine good value in the purchase of a Diamond Ring. There are Guidelines in go by to help you make this important investment. Our free booklet "The Day You Buy A Diamond" will help you to establish these values. Phone, write or drop in for your copy without obligation.

WE ARE DIRECT
DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.

DIAMOND DEALERS
131 BLOOR W., STE. E16
921-7702

The Medical Society, with the cooperation of the Cultural Affairs Commission and CBC Radio

PRESENT

MOE KOFFMAN

AND HIS FABULOUS ELECTRIC BAND

AT CONVOCATION HALL

TUES., NOV. 4th 1:00 P.M.

SoccerBlues edge Guelph in the rain

By LYNDON LITTLE

Although the Soccer Blues may be out of the OQAA championship picture this year they managed a very satisfying 2-1 victory over the Guelph Gryphons Saturday afternoon on the back campus.

The Gryphons have become the Blues' chief nemesis, defeating them twice last season and holding them to a 1-1 tie in Guelph earlier this year.

With the chimes from Hart House Tower providing inspirational music and accompanied by a steady rain, Blues started quickly as inside-left Ken Cancellera had an excellent chance in the first minute of play when he snuck a hard shot off the crossbar.

Guelph steadied their play for the rest of the half but the Blues scored the only goal. Cancellera, who gave the Gryphon defense fits all game with his hustling play, caught up with a lead pass from newcomer Al Churchard to beat the Guelph goalie at the 25-minute mark.

Guelph's best opportunity of the first half came on a hard, low shot by the Gryphon's tall center-forward Don Blacklock that Blues' Sam Cesario stopped with a diving save.

Toronto dominated second half play taking the majority of the good chances. Despite being outplayed, however, Guelph tied the score early as outside-right Prasanta Bhowmik went around a Toronto defender, who had slipped on the wet field, to score from a sharp angle.

The Blues kept pressing and notched the winner on an innocent looking play with only ten minutes left to play. Vito Polera whacked a long cross from the right wing that dropped behind a startled Gryphon goalie.

KornerKicks — Blues travel to Waterloo tomorrow to complete their schedule with a previously postponed game with the Warriors. . . John Gero leads the Blues in scoring with six goals. Ken Cancellera is next with four while John Cobby has a pair. . . There is a rumour circulating that this year's OQAA soccer champion (probably McMaster or Queen's) will be sent on a tour of the Maritimes.

VARSITY AT MCGILL

Montreal Week-end — Saturday, Nov. 8
The big game of the year

BIG BLUES BLUE & WHITE BAND YATES CUP

Engineering Society will run buses leaving Convocation Hall Friday at 5:30 p.m. returning Sunday 2:30 p.m. from Sheraton-Mt. Royal Hotel.

Round Trip $17.50

Bus tickets on sale at Engineering Stores & S.A.C. Office

Game tickets $1.50 (reserved) on sale at Athletic Office, Hart House & Engineering Stores

Hockey Blues at Loyola Arena Saturday Night.

Limited number of tickets available at Athletic Office.

Women swimmers a solid second

By MABEL-ANNE BROWN

The women's swim team placed an excellent second behind the powerful gals from Guelph in a ten-team meet Saturday at McMaster.

All Varsity swimmers improved their times, and the surprising results indicate the Toronto girls are in very good form for so early in the competitive season.

Merrily Stratton led the Varsity charge by tying the conference record for the 100-yard free style at 1:00:1, and then combining with Anu Pettai, Judy Kend and Ruth Unger to set a new record for the 200-yard free style relay at 1:54:8.

Judy and Anu placed second and third in the 50-yard free style and Randy Croome tied for second in the 50-yard back stroke.

For Varsity, the meet was most successful, and is a great boost for morale as the team preps for another crack at Guelph on Nov. 15.

This week, interfac swimming takes over the spotlight at the Benson Building. Synchronized swimming plus the diving competition goes Tuesday at 5:15 with the speed stuff Wednesday at the same time.

CLASSIFIEDS

CUS/DUS CHRISTMAS FLIGHT to London Dept Dec. 19 — Ret Jan. 3 Also ski tours Quebec winter carnival and Daytona Beach holiday call 921-2611

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Only way a diamond" H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416, 921-7702

TYPING theses, essays, notes, charts English, French, other languages Mimeographing, electric typewriters, Mary Dale Stott (M. Oviatt) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225, 922-7624

TYPIST WITH ELECTRIC MACHINE, experienced with everything from Term Essays to publishers' manuscripts for books. 45c per page, 3c each additional copy. Phone 489-2367

WANTED — male or female to share three bedroom apt with two males. Phone 531-8903 after six pm.

W. C. FIELDS in "MILLION DOLLAR LEGS" — Wednesday 8:00 p.m. — New College (Westmore) Dining Hall (21 Classic Ave.)

WANTED: French tutor for Grade 13 Bethurst-Finch Area. Phone 635-7528

WATCH GIRLS BLEED — Mon and Tues Galbraith Wed Thurs, Fri, Sig Sam Library Fri U.C. Junior Common Room. Do your own thing, give a pint

LOST: An opal ring in the vicinity of the U.C. Reading Room on Tues Oct 28. Please call 782-9437

M.G.B. OWNERS — new fiberglass hard tops, with tinted sun-roof and side windows. Custom made for M.G.B. All colours. Call 923-1704, after 5

PART TIME manufacturers agent required to call on furniture, lamp and gift stores. Phone 226-2447 for appointment. Car essential

FOR SALE: Bass guitar — Kent — one pick-up, hollow body excellent condition. Reasonable offer. Phone 881 after 7 p.m. 487-1204

VIC S.A.C. ELECTION. Nominations open until today at noon for S.A.C. election. One S.A.C. member from Vic will be elected Nov. 13

TUTOR, girl wanted, biology, 3rd or 2nd year, or psychology 3rd year. Churchgoing, worldly. 421-6893

BOOK SALE — All new and used books half price — Nov 1-7, 10:00 a.m. — 7 p.m. Volume One — 427 Spadina Ave (just south of College) 924-3844

LARGE CO-OP ROOM and board cheap and close 569 Huron, Call John 924-0456

CAMPUS CO-OP has a small basement room for rent. Phone 920-0880

UNIVERSITY AREA Town House, $2900 down Six rooms, completely renovated, 71 Ulster Ave. Only $23,900 Good conditions and easy terms. Gertler and Winer RI 927-4492

ESSAY AND THESIS TYPING. Experienced typist will type essays and theses in your home. Electric typewriter, reasonable rates. Will endeavour to meet deadlines. Mrs. Harford 267-5174

WANTED: female to share two bedroom apartment in Bathurst-St. Clair area. Rent $75 each monthly. Phone 787-2558 after 7 p.m.

WIRE WHEELS 13" Price unreasonable but subject to haggling. LE 4 8229 after 6 p.m.

the Villager

shoe shoppes

THE BOOTED LEG

Warm and soft garment leathers

A Black - Brown - Beige only 22.99 C Brown only 22.99
B Black - Brown - Tan only 21.99 D Brown - Black only 22.99

Open Thursday and Friday nights. C.O.D. orders accepted. Credit and Charge cards honored.

126 BLOOR STREET

Tel: 921-1779

S.A.C. NEEDS
 UNDERGRADUATE REPRESENTATIVES FOR
COMMITTEE TO IMPLEMENT CAMPBELL REPORT
 (3 TO BE APPOINTED)
 SEND APPLICATIONS TO: SAC JUDICIAL COMMITTEE
 SAC OFFICE
 DEADLINE FRI. NOV. 7-5 P.M.

The Varsity rowing crew stroked to a solid second-place finish Saturday as Western retained its OQAA rowing title over the Henley course in St. Catharines. Highlights of the meet for Varsity were the first place standing of the Light-weight crew and the excellent showing of the Seniors.

Blues still in SIFL race

from page 16

Blues started well Saturday but eventually stupid mistakes and costly injuries took their toll.

Varsity contained Gaels running and successfully blitzed quarterback McNeill.

At 9:11, from second and 20 on the Queens 50 yard line, Alboini combined perfectly with talented sophomore halfback Walt Sehr for a classic touchdown.

Sehr came out of the backfield and shot down the short-side sideline to outrun linebacker Gord Squires and safety Mike Lambros.

Blues ground attack dominated most of the first half, but a critical fumble cost Varsity a possible touchdown after Lambros tripped Eric Walter as the Blues flanker was about to catch a TD pass.

The interference call put Blues on the Gaels six, but Sehr fumbled on the next play.

Queens came alive in the last four minutes as nifty back Brian Warrender scampered 45 yards before Hartley Stern caught him on the Toronto 51.

Gaels powerful ground game carried the ball as close as the Blues 10, but the Varsity defence stiffened and Doug Cozak kicked a 24-yard field goal just before the half ended.

Blues led at the interval 7-3, but serious weaknesses had become apparent.

Center Rein Enno was knocked out early with a severe cut over the eyes, so Rich Agro had to move over to offence. Spelling Agro on defence was Don Fraser, who played well, but at only 180 pounds was simply not big enough to cope with Gaels devastating power blocking.

The pass attack was most conspicuous by its absence. Apart from the bomb to Sehr and Lambros' rather timely trip, Alboini gained only 20 yards through the air. Queens had only 19 passing yards at the half but Gaels don't rely on the pass to any significant extent. Going into the game, Queens had passed only 70 times and gained 428 yards. By comparison Blues were 78 of 143 for a whopping 1,268 net yards.

Saturday, Alboini was eight of 14 for 169 yards; McNeill went five of 11 for 45.

Blues punt coverage and punt return blocking was simply atrocious. The McGill scouts were smacking their lips with anticipation.

Blues opened the second half with a 50-yard strike from Alboini to John Chapman — and this one play accounted for exactly 50 per cent of their total second half offence.

Meanwhile, Warrender, Keith Eaman and Carl Leesti rambled through gaping holes in Blues' defensive line for 138 net yards.

Eaman put Gaels ahead 10-7 on a two yard plunge near the end of the third quarter. It was one of five successful third down gambles Frank Tindall employed during the game.

In the fourth quarter, Blues aggressive tackling forced Eaman to cough up the ball on his own 10. Bloxham recovered and on the next play Walt Sehr swept right end for the go-ahead score. Walter made the key block, wiping out Lambros.

Then the last three minutes.

From mid-field Gaels were offside on a third-and-two gamble. Third and seven, you say? Nope.

Blues were penalized for grabbing ball-carrier Lessti's face mask (more like trying to decapitate him), and Queens were first down on the Varsity 45.

Seven plays later McNeill went to VanBuskirk, last year's all-star tight end. The pass had to be perfect, and it was. It was also the only pass he caught all day. Damn.

So much for Queens. Bring on McGill!

BLUESNOTES . . . Gaels finished with 270 yards rushing on 46 carries . . . Warrender netted 161, Eaman 75, and Leesti 42 . . . Blues gained 108 in the first half but only 33 after the intermission . . . Walt Sehr led Varsity with 82 yards; Bill Stankovic had 52 . . . first downs were very close, 14-13 favor Toronto . . . Blues had a slight advantage in the first half, running 37 plays to Gaels 31; second half was exact reverse, 42-34 for Queens . . . Lambros had the last laugh, intercepting Alboini's desperation pass and almost running out the clock before the drunken hordes took over.

Centre for the Study of Drama

OPEN AUDITIONS

for all students, undergrad or grad
 Martin Hunter will hold auditions at the Studio Theatre, 4 Glen Morris St. for Brecht's A MAN'S A MAN

Tuesday, November 4) 4:00 to 6:00 p.m.
 Thursday, November 6)

This will be a January Production in Hart House Theatre
 928-8568

CULTURAL AFFAIRS COMMISSION MEETING

TO DISCUSS PROPOSED BUDGET FOR THE CULTURAL AFFAIRS FOR THE COMING YEAR. ALL INTERESTED PEOPLE URGED TO ATTEND.

TUES. NOV. 4 — 5 P.M.
S.A.C. OFFICE

STUDENT HOCKEY TICKETS

The best buy on the campus - 11 home games $3.00

(27.3¢ per game)

VARSITY ARENA - 1969-70 SCHEDULE

Nov. 14	Laurentian	Jan. 16	Guelph
Nov. 19	York	Jan. 21	Windsor
Nov. 28	Western	Jan. 30	Loyola
Dec. 3	Guelph	Feb. 4	Waterloo
Dec. 12	McMaster	Feb. 6	Western
		Feb. 13	Windsor

Tickets will be sold at VARSITY STADIUM, Devonshire Place

WED. NOV. 5 — ALLOTMENT SALE AT GATES 3, 5 & 8 FROM 10:00 A.M. — 6:00 P.M.

Tickets have been allotted to all colleges and faculties according to registration. One guest book may be purchased per A.T.L. card and not more than three cards may be presented by one student. Students must ascertain at which of the three wickets the tickets for their own faculty are being sold. Signs are posted at each wicket.

THURS. NOV. 6 — GATE 8, 10:00 A.M.

Any tickets left over from the allotment sale will be sold on a first come first served basis.

WOULD YOU LIKE TO LEARN TO SAIL? INSTRUCTION FOR BEGINNERS AND NON-SAILORS

SAILING INSTRUCTION

WILL BE GIVEN BY THE U.T.S.C. NO ENROLLMENT FEE! NO TEXTS! LECTURES BY VICE-COMMODORE RON FACTOR. FIRST MEETING FRIDAY, 7 NOV. IN BECKERSTETH ROOM OF HART HOUSE AT 1 P.M. CO-EDUCATIONAL

RuggerBlues subdue Guelph, Queens

By DAN McALISTER

On Saturday the Blues Rugger Team downed the Guelph Gryphons 15-3 in their bid for the Western Championship. The victory leaves only the Waterloo Warriors in the path to the OQAA championship game against Queen's next Saturday.

Again it was the "Golden Toe" of Andy Cairns that dominated the Blues' scoring. Twelve of the Blues' fifteen points were scored by Cairns on penalty kicks caused by Guelph carelessness.

The Blues had the edge for most of the game as the Guelph team lacked their determination of the previous match, which the Gryphons won 21-8. The Blue pack grew in cohesiveness during the game and by the end were winning a great majority of the tight and loose scrums. When the pack won the ball, however, the backs were continually frustrated by the referee who was very quick to observe even the slightest infraction.

The only Guelph score was a try scored through the back line when the pack was relaxing and not covering the ball quickly enough. It was not converted and the Guelph team was not heard from again.

The only other scoring in the match was one of Ian Owens' drop goal: from a tight scrum.

Toronto fullback John Holmes was the victim of another bad injury. On top of a bad shiner he received last Wednesday, he sustained a heavy blow in the mouth. As a result he will probably lose at least one of his front teeth. Despite the pain he refused to go for immediate medical attention and finished the match in his usual fine form.

The Second Team played excellent rugger and defeated the Queen's seconds 29-11 on Saturday morning.

Led by the fine tackling and open field play of veteran Dave Ledson, the Toronto pack gave their backs lots of opportunity for scoring. The back row players Van Banning, Henry and Burke supported solidly, scoring and setting up many of the tries.

The only serious injury in the Second's game was a broken nose suffered by prop Tom Brown. He will probably miss the rest of the season and will be a great loss to the pack.

The big test for the Blues comes tomorrow when they travel to Waterloo. A victory will mean the Western championship and a loss will end the season.

It is the most important game so far this season so practice tonight should show the biggest turnout ever. After the weekend games, the coach and captain should have a lot of player shifting to do.

photo by don andrew

Varsity ruggerite (who alas is nameless) gathers in the ball and heads goalward as two Guelph Gryphons move in for the tackle.

Grant McLaren's first place finish led the Guelph Gryphon barrier squad to an upset victory in the OQAA cross-country championships held Saturday in Kingston.

Defending champs, Waterloo University, fell to third behind Guelph and Toronto.

Varsity's premier distance runner, Dave Bailey, was second overall. Other Varsity runners were Rich Pyne (sixth), Brian Armstrong (ninth), Bob Knuckey (eleventh) and Ross Kidd (nineteenth).

R&B DANCE

"MT. MISERY MUSIC CO."
FRIDAY AT NEW COLLEGE
GIRLS/$1.00 GUYS/$1.50
COUPLES/$3.00

EMBASSY BILLIARDS

82 BLOOR STREET WEST

PLEASE BE OUR GUESTS

Varsity
Guys
and Gals

Bring this coupon and play 1 free game (30 minutes) of billiards in Canada's most beautiful billiard lounge at any of the following times:

Mon., Tues., Wed., Thurs. - 3-12 p.m.
Saturdays & Sundays - 12 noon - 8 p.m.

Good only for 1 game per person per day.
This introductory offer open until Nov. 23.

Address:

Telephone:

Faculty

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

Indoor Archery Team Practices Begin November 4th.
Practice hours will be Tuesday and Wednesday 1-2 and Thursday and Friday 12-2 p.m.

INTERESTED IN - - - ?

- Working in Toronto next summer
- Rowing for Argos (Winner of 6 Canadian and 3 United States Championships in 1969)

Send your name & address to:

ARGONAUT CREW

1225 Lake Shore Blvd. W., Toronto 3

McGILL with the BLUES

FOR A GOOD OLD-FASHIONED

"mcgill weekend"

washroom equipped air conditioned reversible chairs card tables

LEAVE

TICKETS RETURN $17.50 FRIDAY NOV. 7
5:30 PM

Returns Sunday afternoon

S.A.C.
ENGINEERING STORES

"you meet the nicest people on the mcgill weekend"

Blues must defeat McGill to win title

By PAUL CARSON
Sports Editor

Varsity Blues lost a battle in the rain and mud Saturday, but the war is far from over.

The game was undeniably important, both psychologically and statistically, and the last minute loss to the Gaels probably shattered coach Ron Murphy's attempts to bring the team to its peak in the last two weeks of the campaign.

Now Murph and the players have just six days to prepare themselves physically and emotionally for the deciding struggle this Saturday in the McGill MudBowl.

Little need to recap those final three minutes. A drenched but enthusiastic Homecoming crowd of about 14,000 shivered as one third down from the Varsity 18, Gaels quarterback Bill McNeill fired a perfect pass to veteran tight end Rick VanBuskirk in the end zone.

Screaming "We're Number ONE!", the Queens animals went on their usual rampage, tearing down the wooden goalposts and beating up a couple of Toronto cheerleaders.

Give the idiots their pleasure, but the cold fact is that Queens are actually number three, and have only a very outside chance of retaining the Yates Cup.

It was a great come-from-behind victory, granted, but the predominant adjective is not glorious, not crucial, not overwhelming, but phyrrie.

To keep their title, Queens had to win big, and they didn't. Exit Queens. Blues and McGill fight it out Saturday.

Howcum? Well, if Blues beat McGill there will be a three-way tie for first place as Varsity, McGill and Queens (who will beat Mac) will have five wins and two losses apiece.

According to the OQAA publicity office, a three-way tie will be settled in the following manner:

- a) the team with the lowest point differential in all league games will be eliminated;
- b) of the remaining two teams, the one with the "greatest point difference in mutual competition shall be declared the winner."

As things stand right now, Queens would be the team dropped under procedure (a), and if Blues win Saturday, they would be champs.

Queens has a point differential of only seven (94-87) while Blues have a plus-46 (155-109) and McGill are almost out of sight with plus-121 (173-52).

THE 'POINT DIFFERENTIAL' BUSINESS

For the uninitiated, by "point differential" the OQAA means the difference between the total points scored by a team and the total points scored by its opponents.

Since McGill defeated Queens twice this season (28-6 and 21-3), Gaels can win ONLY if they can displace the Redmen under procedure (a). To accomplish this, Gaels must beat hapless Mac by about 60 points and hope Varsity does the same to McGill. Fat chance.

McGill can win if they beat or tie Blues, or should Varsity win, (and here things get rather complicated) if Queens beats Mac by 39 (46-7) plus the point spread in Toronto/McGill plus one. Still with me?

Blues can win if they defeat McGill and Queens' slaughter of Mac is held to less than about 50 points.

All the league rules in God's sweet creation cannot erase the trauma of that last minute in the rain Saturday, but in their depression, Blues should remember they're still in this race and won't be knocked out unless they succumb to McGill on Saturday. Blues edged McGill 17-16 three weeks ago.

In the last two games, Blues have jelled as a cohesive team, not just two units or thirty talented people doing their own thing.

Individuals have been blamed for the loss Saturday, but this is a simplistic analysis. It would have been a total team victory; it is a total team defeat. There were too many fumbles, sloppy tackling (especially in the second half), shitty blocking, injuries, and some debatable coaching strategy.

McGill owes its success to a quick, well-drilled offensive line, a most stingy defence, a quasi-ethical film exchange and Dave Fleiszer. As individuals, they are probably superior; Blues only sure all-star is flanker Eric Walter and he didn't catch so much as one pass against Queens.

Blues greatest weakness this year has been a tendency to play as individuals or isolated units; their strength lies in performing as a cohesive team.

They also tend to play down to the level of the opposition, but against McGill that should be an advantage.

If Blues win it all this weekend, it will be because a number of players win their individual battles, and chiefly because Blues are a damn good TEAM, period.

See BLUES STILL IN on page 14

photo by spencer higgins

Talented Varsity sophomore halfback Walt Sehr (30) breaks through Queens line during Saturday's agonizing 16-14 loss to the Gaels. Providing the blocking are Blues linemen Rich Agro (40) and Jim Kellam (66), while Queens defender Dan McCarthy (14) and Jim McKeen (37) move in for the tackle. More sports pics on pages 8 and 9.

McGill alone in first after 29-0 win

McGill Redmen took over sole possession of first place in the SIFL for the first time in seven years as they white-washed Waterloo Warriors 29-0 Saturday in Waterloo.

The McGill victory means the Redmen need only a win or a tie next Saturday against Blues to capture their first Yates Cup since 1962.

Warriors made six major miscues and the alert Redmen cashed in on all of them to break a scoreless tie in the third quarter.

Rushing king Dave Fleiszer scored two TD's following McGill interceptions, and rushed for 144 yards on 17 carries. Punt return specialist Chris Rumball scampered 45 yards down the sidelines behind excellent blocking for the other major score.

Veteran Sal Lovecchio completed the scoring with three coverts, two field goals, and a safety touch.

The McGill offence, geared to a six-yards-of-dirt-and-a-cloud-of-muck style of attack, produced 257 yards rushing, 15 yards passing on two completions of nine attempts, and a total of 16 first downs.

The McGill defence once again proved why they're thought to be the best in Canada by allowing Warriors only seven first downs and two puny penetrations across the center stripe. Warriors were so elated they fumbled both times.

Warriors ground game went nowhere but they managed 149 yards on 10 completed passes.

In the Central Canada Conference, Windsor took the prize in only its second year of serious competition. Coached by former pro star Gino Fracas, the borderboys upset Waterloo Lutheran 16-10 to edge heavily favored Carleton and Guelph.

Windsor meets Bishop's on Saturday to determine who travels West to play powerful Manitoba in one College Bowl semi-final.

Bishop's defeated RMC 21-6 to capture their divisional title.

Out West, Manitoba rambled to an easy undefeated season, averaging 32 points per game while allowing slightly more than 12. They are strong favorites to reach the national final.

The SIFL winner plays the Maritime winner, and that will probably be decided in the committee room.

The Bluenose Conference has a rule requiring overtime to break any tie games, but league leaders New Brunswick and St. Francis Xavier fought to a 10-10 stalemate a few weeks ago and refused to play any extra periods.

League officials are not pleased, and the champion won't be officially declared until after the St. F.X. — St. Mary's game this weekend. The Atlantic Bowl remains set for Nov. 15 in the mud of Halifax stadium.

photo by sneaky jim cowan

'Become political', they told the sports dept., so the Varsity's sports statistician Lynn Wolff (III Vic) integrated the Varsity Stadium press box, last outpost of male chauvinism in the SIFL. Taking the cue, so did Mrs. Claude Bissell, some other administration wives, and two female invaders from Queens. The head belongs to Paul Carson, notoriously non-political, camera-shy sports editor.

RCMP

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

FOR UNIVERSITY GRADUATES

WITH THE

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

DEGREES IN: BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION, ARTS, SCIENCE, COMMERCE AND LAW.

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

ON CAMPUS MONDAY NOVEMBER 3, 1969

~~THURSDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1969~~

MONDAY, JANUARY 19, 1970
(SCARBOROUGH COLLEGE)

INTERVIEWERS: INSPECTOR G. L. CLARK
STAFF SERGEANT C. R. HINE

Students for Israel Movement

Educational workshop sessions weekly re: the crises in Israel.

Sunday 10 a.m. Hillel House

Monday 1 p.m. Room 11 U.C.

Tuesday 7 p.m. Hillel House

Thursday 7 p.m. Hillel House

All those interested - please attend the session of your choice.

DEBATE WETMORE HALL NEW COLLEGE

SPEAKERS:

MAYOR WILLIAM DENNISON CONTROLLER MARGARET CAMPBELL
PROF. STEVEN CLARKSON

THURS. NOV. 6 7:15 P.M.

ALL INVITED

FREE ADMISSION

QUESTION PERIOD FOLLOWING

THE

varsity

VOLUME 90 — NO. 19
November 5, 1969

TORONTO

Yes, this is The Varsity

NLC is RCMP front

"Kops are groovy! Kops are groovy!"

By TOM WALKOM

Glaucou: "What is hairy, radical carries a Canadian flag and rides a rocking horse?"

Socrates: "The New Left Caucus demonstrating for the RCMP."

For the RCMP?

Imagine you are in the foyer of Sidney Smith Hall. It is Monday noon; you have heard that the RCMP are recruiting on campus and that the Committee to End the War in Vietnam will hold a demonstration against this.

The New Left Caucus is there too. They also are planning a demonstration — a SUC-in (Students Under Capitalism).

Most of your favorite radicals are there, bearded and buttoned, along with two rocking horses. Implanted in the anal region of one horse is a tattered Canadian flag.

SUPPORT MOUNTIES

The NLC'ers swear their purpose is to "support solidarity with the RCMP."

A cry goes up: "The Trots (Trotskyites) are coming," and around the corner appear the anti-war demonstrators, a bullhorn-led mass of serious young faces, their placards pulsating rhythmically to the chant, "Cops must go. RCMP off the campus."

The protestors stop at the corner and wait for the light to turn green.

Following the flag, the SUC's charge out to meet them, shouting "Protect our police; cops must stay."

And so the procession winds its way to the Placement Centre, SUC's out in front, "Trots" bringing up the rear. Each group chants appropriate slogans.

"Cops must go."

"Cops must stay."

The "Trots", as you can tell by their placards, include a mixed conglomeration of Communist Club Members, Young Socialists and Moratorium supporters.

O, CANADA

They are visibly taken aback by the "lack of radical solidarity" shown by the SUC's.

The SUC's are impervious to criticism and gaily march to the Placement Centre, singing O, Canada.

"Three cheers for the RCMP. Solidarity for our American police brothers. Pinkoes off the campus."

Outside, the anti-war demonstrators form a picket line and shuffle around a fire hydrant.

"This move by the NLC is ineffectual and meaningless to most students," complains Young Socialist leader, Harry Kopyto.

"SUC-in for peace."

The NLC have posters now — slogans like "Cops are groovy", "Keep Kops Klean" or "SUC-in for Law and Order."

PICKETS FLAKE

The serious demonstrators are beginning to break up — individuals flake off the picket line.

"I've got a class now," one girl explains, as she hands in her placard.

Kopyto, clutching his briefcase and bullhorn harangues the crowd from the steps of 45 Wilcocks St.

"Let's get into 45 Wilcocks," he cries. "The doors are locked."

Ellie Kirzner, (a candidate for last year's SAC presidency) suggests they go to the Placement Centre instead.

(Cries of, "Where's the Placement Centre.")

They find it, surge up the stairs and return empty-handed. The RCMP have left hours before.

Disgustedly, the earnest young men and women fold their placards and steal softly into the daylight. The SUC's remain a while longer.

"Cops are groovy; cops are groovy."

"The NLC are off their fucking heads," mutters one dispirited demonstrator.

The NLC pay no heed, but gaily march off to Massey College for lunch.

From a distance, they look like the Lady Godiva Memorial Band.

photos by Francine Stein

SYNOPSIS

REVELATION

"a book of experiments in being alive..."
(available now at the University Bookroom)

Books

I can't help it if reality is Marxist.
— Brian Johnson at 4 a.m. this morning.

Feiffer

SKEPTICS DO NOT BUILD SOCIETIES. THE IDEALISTS ARE THE BUILDERS.

A NATION NEEDS MANY QUALITIES BUT IT NEEDS FAITH AND CONFIDENCE ABOVE ALL.

LET US NOT, THEN, POSE A FALSE CHOICE BETWEEN MEETING OUR RESPONSIBILITIES ABROAD—

AND MEETING THE NEEDS OF OUR PEOPLE AT HOME.

WE SHALL MEET BOTH OR WE SHALL MEET—

NEITHER.

©1977 JIM FEIFFER

Dir., Publishers Hall Syndicate 1969

Quebec Libre—not just a cultural question

English-speaking Canada is gradually waking up to the fact that something is happening in Quebec.

Until recently the government and the mass-media saw the French struggle as the misguided efforts of a few bomb-throwing criminals, a lunatic fringe, a sub-generation of Lee Harvey Oswalds.

The press kept the public ignorant not only of the nature of the separatist-socialist movements in Quebec, but also of the problems in the society from which these movements emerged.

The question of French survival was usually seen purely as a "language" issue, or a "cultural" issue, while the economic and class barriers that divided French and English in Quebec were ignored.

There is a striking example of the suppression of those realities.

The Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism contained a survey tracing the relationship between ethnic origin and socio-economic position in Canada.

The English press ignored it.

The survey revealed some important statistics, quoted here from Le Magazine Maclean:

"The salaries of French Canadians in Quebec are 65 per cent of those of English Canadians in Quebec.

"Also, in the matter of occupation, French Canadians are found on the bottom of the list, immediately above Italians, both in Quebec and in the rest of the country.

"... Above and beyond regional factors, ethnic characteristics remain very, very important. Canadians of British origin have incomes 10 per cent higher than the average in every province except Quebec, where they earn 40 per cent more than the average."

"Education is one of the most important factors in the determination of salary. The various ethnic groups have quite different levels of education. The French Canadians, with an average of 7.08 years of study, come just ahead of the Italians, with 6.05 years. . .

It is not surprising that much of the unilingual movement in Quebec is emerging from students — from the high schools, the CEGEP'S (community colleges), and the universities. For the Quebec educational system serves an English culture, and an English economy which is based nominally in Bay St. and realistically in New York.

The survey concludes:

"English Canadians have very little reason to become bilingual, even in Quebec, while for French Canadians, bilingualism is a prerequisite to income. And even if bilingual, French Canadians cannot hope to equal the salaries of unilingual English.

The unilingual movement should not shock English Canadians in the face of these economic facts.

While sitting in the calm seminar rooms of the U of T, it's easy to ser-

AVERAGE INCOMES OF SALARIED MALES IN 14 ETHNIC GROUPS, QUEBEC, 1961

	In Dollars	Index
General average	$ 3469	100.
British	4940	142.4
Scandinavians	4939	142.4
Dutch	4891	140.9
Jewish	4851	139.8
Russians	4828	139.1
Germans	4254	122.6
Poles	3984	114.8
Asians	3734	107.6
Ukrainians	3733	107.6
Other Europeans	3547	102.4
Hungarians	3537	101.9
French Canadians	3185	91.8
Italians	2938	84.6
Native Indians	2112	60.8

From census calculations, Dominion Bureau of Statistics

varsity

TORONTO

Editor
Brian Johnson
Business Editor
Larry Moran
Associate Review Editor
Jack McCallister
News Editors
Jim Cowan
Crest Magazine
Louise Erlichman
Noel Stackley
Mary Kate Rowan
Paul Carson 923-4053
Dave Frank
Barbara Betcherman
Sue Reister
Mark Rubin
Hannel Klockner
Carol Gordon 922-8171
91 St. George 2nd floor
923-8741, 923-8742
91 St. George 1st floor

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in the newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

LETTERS

Sir,

Your article on the Sir George Williams Affair was very disturbing to me personally; on Thanksgiving Day I spent most of the evening talking to Mrs. Perry Anderson's aunt, who is well acquainted with Prof. Anderson's family; it is difficult to reconcile some of the facts she related about Prof. Anderson with Mr. Douglas' charges.

Before coming to Sir George, Prof. Anderson held appointments at several prairie universities; for years he shared his home with black foreign students in spite of repeated criticism by his colleagues. This fact alone casts doubt upon the charges of "racism".

Last February Anderson and his family were repeatedly threatened with violence; his wife and children had to be moved from their home to stay with friends; nevertheless Mrs. Anderson's sister was traced, her apartment broken into and all her clothes torn to shreds.

This fall, as Prof. Anderson returned to finish some experiments he received a letter from one of his accusers: the letter charged that justice had not been done, and it will be carried out even if it means Anderson's death.

Admittedly this relative of the family is sympathetic to Anderson; still this conversation emphasized the many discrepancies in the case. In my case it certainly modified the impressions that Rosie Douglas and his Black Brothers are trying to convey.

monize about the glory of the French culture and the future of bilingualism. For the U of T is an integral part of Ontario's branch-plant economy, a metropolitan force that dominates and oppresses the Quebecois.

From that context, it's difficult for an Ontarion to understand poverty and cultural annihilation.

It is virtually impossible for the government to accept the demands of the Quebecois. To accept unilingualism ultimately means declaring Quebec a French state.

That's the goal of the unilingualists. Now that the government, the press, etc. have realized the strength and intent of the movement, they have realized the need to destroy it.

See the front page and centre spread.

WILL OPEN-LETTER FAD SHUT DOWN ENVELOPE-GLUE-MAKERS?

the sac barn-door

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE SAC EXECUTIVE:

It became clear at the last Scarborough Council Meeting that the SAC Executive does not wish Scarborough College to remain in SAC. At the council meeting the student council decided to initiate procedures for withdrawal from SAC. This letter is intended to point out why this is detrimental to SAC, particularly to U of T as a whole. It has come to our attention that other faculties wish to withdraw. The reasons for this at Scarborough is a feeling that SAC does little if nothing for us. They provide us with Varsity, Radio Varsity, Random and other incidental services. They are making no attempts to serve the students as individuals.

The SAC Executive at the last meeting became concerned enough to set up a committee to inquire into the relationship between Scarborough, Erindale and SAC. Obviously they feel concern; however, it smacks of closing the barn door too late. If Scarborough leaves SAC now the situation may arise in the future when SAC may not only want but need Scarborough College's membership. The problem at hand is then one of determining what SAC can and should do for us.

Scarborough College and Erindale College in future will become the main areas of undergraduate studies in the Faculty of Arts and Science. It is SAC's duty to look after these students to ensure that their university life becomes as fruitful as SAC policy maintains it should be. Because of this SAC should initiate action now!!

If Scarborough leaves, it could start a mass drop-out from SAC. This would prevent SAC not only from expanding their services but from keeping up the little they do for the university as a whole. The spirit of the university would suffer (should it start). This is SAC's fault. More attempts should be made to make student involvement in SAC's non-political activities an asset. Scarborough did not want to leave SAC, we were forced into a position of wanting to leave it. For this reason Scarborough Council felt that procedures should start now. It is up to SAC to improve its services to Scarborough to a point where remaining within SAC becomes the asset it should be and not the liability it is.

We wish to see that a liaison between SAC and Scarborough remains. We would like to pay for SAC services as they are used and not as a total package since many of these services are inaccessible to Scarborough students. As this in part represents the general consensus at Scarborough it would be in SAC's interest to improve its position here.

Carmen Palumbo
Scarborough College Student Society

friends throw rocks

AN OPEN LETTER FROM MICHAEL KAUFMAN:

As there have been numerous threats on my life from everything from impersonating an engineer, to criticizing engineers, to being an engineer, I would like to make some comments on the nature of the letter I wrote under the title: AN OPEN LETTER TO BOB BARKWELL.

First of all, many of the people who phoned in bomb threats overlooked the fact that I also wrote the three paragraphs preceding the letter, which explained the origin of the letter.

Secondly, speaking to the group from the university's maintenance department who were picketing my room to protest my callous disregard for university property, the window was open when the rock came through with the letter attached.

And finally, even though I am not an engineer, I don't hate engineers; in fact, some of my best friends are engineers.

dolts—a dying breed?

The following letter is a reply to Michael Kaufman's first open-letter-to-Bob-Barkwell parody which appeared in the last Varsity. Cervinka and Kaufman were not aware of each other's letters:

REPLY TO MICHAEL KAUFMAN'S OPEN LETTER:

I, too am an engineer. But I can honestly say that the Toike Oike in no way expresses my way of thinking. In fact, I am ashamed of it.

Were it not for the fact that so many stereotyped engineers can think no farther than the last page of the Toike, the situation would not be so sad.

Too often, while sitting in the ISC, have I heard a throng of morons talking about "you pinko reds" and "fag artists". I am beginning to believe that these dolts either are afraid to think about social problems or find the non-mathematical nature of the problem too difficult for them.

If only people wouldn't be afraid of sincerity and truth, trash like the Toike Oike would vanish. The Varsity at times is inaccurate and poor, but to disregard it because the Toike says so is foolishness born of the lack of an independent mind.

There is still hope, people. Each day I see more and more reason to believe that the engineering stereotype may be a dying breed. (M.K. atavism??)

Peace,
George Cervinka (Eng. Sci III)

tirade of epithets

ANOTHER OPEN LETTER TO BOB BARKWELL — THE OFFICIAL ONE:

Dear Bob Barkwell:
My only reservation in bothering to reply is that I may lend some credibility to your outrageous accusations. By employing a tirade of epithets you have personally demonstrated the intellectual poverty of which you have falsely accused us. It is extremely sad that you have found your position so indefensible that you must avoid the issues and resort to a personal condemnation of the staff of the Toike Oike.

It is unnecessary to attempt to refute your claims since they consist of nothing more than vague innuendos, sweeping generalizations, and unsupported accusations. Unlike our centre-spread to which you refer, none of your denunciations were accompanied by an iota of evidence.

It is relevant to note that you have waited three weeks before attacking us about the issue of October 9, and have not been able to deny any of the facts presented therein. It was, instead, the issue of October 30, a non-political paper with a cover of harmless political satire, which prompted the onslaught. I am confident that it was obvious to everyone that we were merely poking a little fun in the Toike Oike tradition, but I apologize for not anticipating your particular sensitivity.

Speaking personally, I am in favour of some of the policies you propose, but I am vehemently opposed to many of the methods you and the NLC endorse. It is the appreciation of this distinction, by the students of this University, which led to the end of CUS. Don't make the same mistake.

Peter Jones
Editor — Toike Oike

'Hey, mister, your rubber band is twisted'

"I finally trace the source of the strange shadows that dart through my room to the birds that fly past the window: Nixon blows it by smirking as he was trying to act serious and restrained talking about the war and: I suddenly remember that they haven't been showing any war news on T.V. for months as I watch my brother being murdered in a newsfilm of the war," should be the title of this article.

Whether the reasons were intentional (to gain sympathy?) or accidental, Nixon was really hot. Whether it was an unavoidable effect of the lights, or an oversight in preparation of air conditioning or makeup, it was really distracting to watch this man sweating and blinking and licking his lips and wiping his face, while straining to read calmly his pathetic policies about a numbingly absurd war.

He seemed helplessly incapable of controlling a number of expressions, gestures and Freudian slips, that showed far more of his attitude and thoughts, than his presumptuous and mindless speech.

"... that I wan't reveal at this time for a number of reasons!

I'm sure you all understand... Hey mister! Your rubber bands twisted!!!"

Another of Nixon's Freudian slips saw his official self-the-used-car-war facade slide to his ankles:

"... if the plan doesn't work, then what the critics are saying wan't matter..." was smirkingly corrected to "if the plan does work..."

In that smirk was expressed the attitude that conceived all the double talk of the whole speech; the pretense and sham begin to show through the veneer of restraint and concern. That veneer was completely ripped away a few minutes later during the news.

Nothing could better frame a more meaningful perspective on the disease and implicit deceit of a man as deeply locked as Nixon is in illusion by a mindless and numbing military system, than witnessing a bound prisoner, obviously near senseless with pain and fear — clearly evident from bruises and lacerations, not to mention the defeated and submissive posture and bearing — being further brutally, and in defiance of all war codes, not to mention the most elementary forms of human consideration... beaten, kicked and finally murdered...

Mr. Nixon and Universal soldier, may the baby Jesus shut your mouth and open your mind.

Peace,
—(mostly) jan karsemeyr

NEW COLLEGE MOTION PICTURE SOCIETY
presents

TONIGHT & EVERY WEDNESDAY 8:00 P.M.
NEW COLLEGE (WETMORE) DINING HALL
(21 Classic Ave.)

Next Week
"MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE"
NOTE: See MIA FARROW in
"ROSEMARY'S BABY"
Sunday Night of the Movies ADMISSION $1

Boy, are our faces red!

More than 200 students and faculty Monday and Tuesday discovered that Massey College is still closed to all but members and guests of the college.

The crowds of undesirables turned out in response to a story in Monday's Varsity. The story reported the Massey cafeteria would be opened Monday for the first time to those who were not members of the college or guests.

"Starting today the Massey cafeteria will be open for lunch and dinner to all students and faculty of the university, male and female," the story read.

The story went on to quote a Massey press release: "The exclusive nature and image that the College has possessed in the past has no place in the academic community envisioned by the report of the Commission on University Government," it added.

Massey College officials said the press release and the story were part of a Varsity hoax.

YELLOW JOURNALISTS

In a telephone interview last night, Varsity Editor Briar

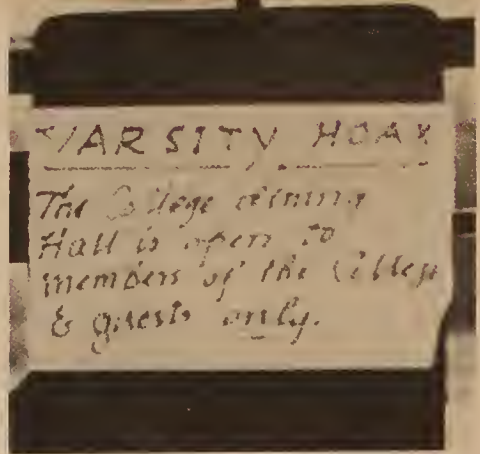

photo by Francine Stein

Sign posted on iron gate in front of Mossey College warning off the hordes of undesirables.

Johnson apologized for the story.

"It was totally incorrect," he said. "In fact, it was a deliberate distortion of the truth — a tactic used only by yellow journalists who wish to further their own political ends."

The story misled many now-irate students and faculty who followed the directions given in the last paragraph:

"If you want to eat in royal surroundings at a popular price enter Massey College off Devonshire (at Hoskin) pass the wax-mustachioed gateman, and walk between the goldfish ponds to the southwest corner of the quadrangle. The cafeteria is on the second floor. Please do not feed the fish."

But the horde of undesirables did not get past the wax-mustachioed gateman.

They were greeted by a closed iron gate.

VARSITY HOAX?

One angry student asked the wax-mustachioed hall-porter why he couldn't eat lunch there, when The Varsity story told him he could.

"It was a Varsity Hoax, sir," the porter said.

"Oh, c'mon.

"Yessir. 'Twas a Varsity hoax, it was."

"You mean, I can't sit in the leather chairs and have a really good meal for 75c," he asked.

"No sir, not unless you're a member or guest of Massey College."

"I've been turning them away right and left," the hall porter told The Varsity.

When a group of four University College students tried unsuccessfully to get in, they retired disillusioned to the Buttery of Trinity College.

SECOND BEST

"It's second best, but I guess it will have to do," muttered one of them.

A few minutes later that day the New Left Caucus tried their luck after working up an appetite by demonstrating for the RCMP in front of the Placement Service.

About 25 NLC members jumped up and down in front of the porter, and a few climbed the gate.

But soon, tired and defeated, they too retired to the Buttery.

Certain parts of the story in Monday's Varsity were accurate. The cafeteria does have leather chairs, and the seven Massey students The Varsity polled did say the food was excellent and that the cafeteria was under-used.

But the basis of the story — that the cafeteria would be open to the whole university community — is incorrect.

"Nothing could be farther from the truth," said Johnson.

HART HOUSE ORCHESTRA Boyd Neel, Conductor HART HOUSE GLEE CLUB Walter H. Barnes, Conductor PRESENT A Joint Concert to Celebrate the 50th Anniversary of Hart House

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 9th 7:45 P.M. GREAT HALL

Ticket - Hall Porter Assisted by Varsity Fund

Centre for the Study of Drama and The St. Lawrence Centre for the Arts presents Slawomir Mrozek's TANGO

translated by Nicholas Bethell, adapted by Tom Stoppard, directed by Joseph Shaw, designed by Martha Mann, with: David Brown, Barbara Borland, Nancy Kerr, Jane Mallett, Jack Medley, William Needles, Sean Sullivan

Mondays to Thursdays to November 20 at 8:30

Tickets $3.00 Students $1.50

and

Eugene O'Neill's

MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA

directed by Leon Major settings by Murray Lauffer, costumes by Marie Day, with: James Bradford, David Brown, Patricia Collins, Neil Dainard, Michael Fletcher, Maureen Fox, Ron Hastings, Don McManus, Jack Medley, William Needles, Norma Oliver, Kate Reid, Anna Reiser, Sean Sullivan, Jonathan White

Fridays and Saturdays only, to November 22 at 5:30

Tickets $4.50 Students $2.25

HART HOUSE THEATRE

Box Office open 10:00 to 6:00 - 928-8668

Gala Opening Performance November 7 - $7.50 Students $3.75

Bull and The Bear in The Sutton Place Hotel - On Wallesey east of B

DRACHE: 1

"the reform movement is controlled by the faculty and administration"

The Commission on University Government formally released Danny Drache's Research Report on the Faculty of Arts and Science last week, but made no copies available to the university community, the general public, or the student and professional press.

A Globe and Mail reporter spent yesterday afternoon in The Varsity office reading the only available copy of the report.

Since the Commission has not published the report, The Varsity will reprint a series of edited excerpts from the document over the next few issues. The following is part one of the series — a description of the internal structure of the departments.

There has been the implicit assumption that the problem of democratizing the University is in large measure an administrative problem depending on the creation of more committees and an extensive network of consultation at all levels and between some levels rather than a change in what is taught, who teaches and how learning occurs. The absence of debate on the substantive question of consciousness and the learning experience relates to the conservative nature of reform and the fact that the student constituency which might normally be expected to raise these issues remains a disorganized, weak force in the reform movement.

It is of no small consequence that the reform movement is controlled by faculty and administration. The choice of issues, the orientation, the very content of reforms reflects the powerful presence of a faculty-administration coalition. A significant measure of their power is that chairmen have taken the initiative to invite students to sit on all departmental committees, and have defined the terms of student participation. Rather than focusing on the ideological forces transforming the University into a modern industrial corporation, the reform movement has limited itself to a few well chosen administrative, structural problems.

Democracy cannot exist in the University so long as the departmental power structure is based on a hierarchy of authority and a closed system of academic privilege.

If the reform movement has failed students, it is necessary to demonstrate from a larger perspective what the departmental reforms have and have not accomplished.

The role, authority, and power of the chairmen of departments illustrates the practical realities of the structure of power.

The reorganization of the departments has not seriously affected the amount of power a chairman possesses. Rather the changes have assisted the chairman in making better use of his authority. If previously the chairman had a mandate to act autonomously, within the present structures he has semi-autonomous powers. Although committees and even the departmental meetings are now an integral part of the decision-making structure their existence has not meant that the chairman's authority has been levelled. He consults them and uses their advice accordingly. However as far as redistributing the traditional power of the chairman in the belief that the final authority of the department is the department meeting as a whole, this has not occurred.

The chairman has two courses of power, residual and discretionary. By virtue of his office he is responsible to the Dean and the President for the affairs of the department. In many departments it is his privilege to choose the undergraduate and graduate secretaries who then frequently receive a second appointment as associate chairmen. This is the case in the department of philosophy and the practice is widespread. Together these two or three individuals constitute an elite in administration and policy-making. The chairman consults with them to decide the budget, hiring, promotion etc. In some departments these decisions, particularly staffing and promotion, are the collective decision of a senior committee. Even in that case the chairman usually appoints faculty to that body. Almost without exception, the chairman is his own man on the question of salaries and budget. But he is also his own man in deciding whether he will accept the recommendations of a committee and the departmental meeting.

The chairman's veto dramatizes his discretionary powers. In practice it is used infrequently. Professor Duff of Mathematics said it was a matter of common sense. "I don't think I would pick a fight with a committee if I could avoid it." Even if it is used infrequently, the issue is not settled. For what counts is the formal and informal relationship the chairman has in the governing structure of the department.

Pressed to clarify this further, Professor Duff was asked "Do you regard yourself bound by the majority?"

His reply reflects similar opinions held by other chairmen: "No, I wouldn't put it quite like that. The kinds of issues on which votes are taken in departmental meetings are issues that belong to the department as a whole rather than specifically to the chairman. In that sense I would feel myself bound to carry out the wishes of the department, if there was an issue which shall we say properly belonged to the spirit of the department as a whole. I think the department library was such an issue . . ." Even without his qualifying clause, the issue remains in doubt. The uncertainty surrounding the extent of the chairman's power is not atypical. However the ambiguity on this matter does not work to curtail or to redefine the chairman's power. If any part of the structure of government stands to lose from the haziness of who has ultimate power it is not the chairman. Again Professor Duff's comment on who governs is very much to the point and very representative of the chairmen's replies:

Q. Do you regard yourself bound by the majority? (In the Senior Policy Committee).

A. No, I don't think I have to be. I shall seek the advice of the department, expressed through a representative committee of senior members or a meeting of the whole department. I think if it really comes down to it, I wouldn't have to take that advice."

The accumulation of power in the hand of the chairman is a fact of departmental organization.

The factors which create the elitism of the system are:

a) The chairman is responsible for appointing faculty to many committee positions. Faculty who serve on committees do so at his discretion.

b) Only a few departments use either voluntary system or have instituted democratic elections to fill committee positions.

c) Full professors are over-represented while instructors and assistant professors are under-represented on committees.

d) Tenure creates a class structure between academic ranks.

e) The most important committee, usually the senior policy committee, is neither duly elected nor composed of all ranks of faculty.

f) In many departments the committees function inefficiently with lack of clear purpose which discourages many faculty from taking an interest and participating.

Structural democratic reforms must address themselves to those six issues.

The type of reforms which have taken place in departments are ones which fall under the general heading of improving administrative efficiency and strengthening the departmental committee system. These are not unimportant in themselves but by themselves they have not altered the exercise of power in departments. The litmus test of reform or for that matter of any social investigation is who governs and where does power reside?

The answer in most departments is unequivocally with the chairman and his small group of advisors. The idea of democratizing the ruling structure of a department has by and large not been the focus of attention. This explains why the reform movement within departments have emphasized administrative and structural questions of procedure etc. etc. over and above programmatic and conceptual proposals that would deal directly with the power and authority of the chairman in decision-making.

The strategic question of who governs has been obscured by tactical questions of procedure.

Re-organization of a department at its best provides everyone the right to be heard and the right to be part of the administrative and decision-making process in an advisory capacity. It has not resulted in a fundamental redistribution of power.

The chairman remains the authority in the department because structurally and ideologically the power of decision-making is centralized in his person.

Indeed the evidence shows that reforms have strengthened the structure of privilege within departments.

In these circumstances, it is not surprising to discover that by and large students have absented themselves from participation in a reform movement which is hostile to their interests.

photo by Henry J

Unread copies of the CUG Report are lying all over the U of T campus. Danny Drache, a research associate for the Commission on University Government, thinks the CUG Report is irrelevant to the needs of students. He will present a critique of the report at 1 p.m. today in room 2102, Sidney Smith.

TO ALL CAMPUS CLUBS

PLEASE SUBMIT BUDGET
IF YOU WISH GRANTS FROM SAC

Deadline Friday, Nov. 7th, 1969

External Affairs Commission,
SAC Office

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

WINE-MAKING GUILD

WINE MAKING DEMONSTRATION

discussion and equipment
by Mr. Buzz Arthurs

THURSDAY 7:30 p.m. Nov. 6

GRADUATE STUDENTS' UNION

16 Bancroft Ave.

928-2391

THE PSYCHOLOGY STUDENT UNION ELECTION

For 2 Undergraduates & 1 Graduate
To sit on the STAFF-STUDENT COMMITTEE

When: Wednesday Nov. 5/69

Time: 9:30 a.m.-5 p.m.

Place: Main Foyer, Sidney Smith Hall

ALL STUDENTS TAKING ONE OR MORE PSYCHOLOGY

COURSES CAN VOTE

PLEASE DO SO! * BRING YOUR ATL CARD TO VOTE *

DANCE

to R. & B. with

MOUNTAIN
MUSIC COMPANY

8:30 P.M. FRIDAY NOV. 7th

NEW COLLEGE (WETMORE) DINING HALL

CHICKS - $1.00

DRAGS - $3.00

HAWKS - $1.50

On being stopped by a Stalinist on the path between the Library and Hart House

By LOUIS ERUCHMAN

He was short and a bit hefty. His hair was short and thinning and his smile was friendly.

He walked straight at me, an old panhandling technique. You either have to stop, or else travel a full 180 degrees to get around him.

His beard seemed a bit more neatly trimmed than mine, his coat slightly newer.

There was something of the air of an overgrown newsboy about him, a stack of papers with the red banner head "Mass Line" under his arm, though his pitch contained no reference to the jim-dandy bike he'd win if he sold enough subscriptions.

He was selling more than newspapers.

He greeted me warmly and asked about my interest in politics, whether I knew about campus groups, whether I had taken part in them.

I said that I hadn't and that, in fact, I knew considerably more about campus politics than I really cared to.

Unperturbed, he reinforced his grin, set the coffee cup he was carrying on a car fender, charitably admitted there were a lot of irrelevant political groups on campus, and began to tell me why I should understand the worker-student alliance.

Somehow, I am told, you should be open, accept people, talk to them. You should be secure enough to accept new ideas, not put someone down just for the hell of it. ("Put yourself in their position," etc.)

So I end up feeling guilty for ignoring people, for brushing off panhandlers. Even if I don't try to be nasty, like asking the lady on the phone to name all 137 magazines I'm lucky enough to be able to subscribe to.

New students consider council "trivial, distant"

The New College Student Council is worried about itself, and has good reason to be.

A questionnaire circulated by the College Government Committee, established by the NCSC last year, revealed that 75 per cent of the New students don't know who the NCSC president is or where the student council offices are.

Most of the 85 respondents to the questionnaire considered the NCSC trivial and elitist. "It's a distant body that I can't relate to," said one respondent.

"We found from the questionnaire that there is a serious publicity gap in the NCSC and a general mistrust of the student council," said Errol Platt, the council member who conducted the survey.

"No one ever comes to the meetings," said NCSC president Jon Fidler. "But the less people that know about them the better, since NCSC meetings are farcical anyway."

"We have $14,000 to play around with and all day we sit in this office making a mess, drinking pop and eating candy," said Fidler. "The council should be a body of elected members who give a damn about what goes on around this university. But each one cares only about his own personal committee not about the students he should represent."

The report on the survey recommended that the NCSC publish a weekly news sheet, and make better use of bulletin boards to communicate with students.

One council member suggested that the NCSC disband itself and re-organize as a social committee.

While NCSC ponders its existence an Inter-Student Relations Committee is putting out another questionnaire, and Errol Platt has resigned from the council.

Colum and a half

But when the shabby old man comes to the door with an electric alarm clock. "Only three dollars, it's almost new, look at the plug."

But I don't need a clock.

"All right, two dollars, I'm cold, and I want to buy a bottle of wine."

But I don't need a clock.

If you put up with it, you feel bad, because you know you're being used, because you're not strong enough not to be. If you don't put up with it, you feel just as bad.

With this Stalinist, it's not so much a matter of hurting his feelings, which I doubt I could do, but rather a test of my strength, my ability to extricate myself from an absurd and painfully frustrating discussion.

The fellow is explaining to me that his little paper is an "important document" and I tell him that, while I'm very interested in important documents, I have several other important documents to read first.

I begin to edge around him. He shifts his attack, probing for a weakness. (If he isn't insecure about his hair, mention his deodorant.)

I express interest in the Watkins Manifesto, a near-fatal move.

"I can discuss our position on it with you. Are you in a hurry? Let's sit down on the grass." I tell him I have several things to do, which is true, but I still don't break away.

Rapidly digging myself deeper and deeper, I suggest that there has yet to be a successfully consummated socialist revolution anywhere in the world.

"What about the Soviet Union?" he asks. "Some bad things have been happening since Stalin died, but before..."

I mention Trotsky and compound it.

As he talks, I take to frequent longing glances at the Hart House tower clock. His confident grin begins to bother me. Can't he possibly understand that I don't give a damn what his organization believes?

"If you think we're wrong," he says, "Prove it, and we'll change our stand."

He finally offers me a paper.

"Most of the issues are aimed at workers", he says, "but this is a special one for students."

"I won't read it."

"Take it anyway."

I reluctantly accept it.

"That's a quarter." Red banner headlines are expensive.

I explain that I wouldn't spend a quarter for any paper, let alone one I won't read — even an important document.

I am finally all the way around him. It has taken about twenty minutes.

He doesn't have a free hand for me to give the newspaper back to, so I put it on the car hood. His coffee is still there, unopened... it must be awfully cold. The paper falls to the ground two or three times and I pick it up.

I make definite physical motions to go, but he is tenacious.

"So you're not interested in anything outside of the university, eh?" The old tactic of guilt.

I am sucked in, slightly angry. I ask him if he has been in Cabbagetown. He says yes. I say that I have too and... I stop myself. Why the hell should I have to protest my virtue to some guy that stops me on the street.

It's still hard to break off, but I say I have to go, and leave him in front of Innis College, still smiling, with his pile of papers, his cold cup of coffee, looking for all the world like a forsaken Fuller Brush Man.

10-foot Amazons?

What did you learn in school today?

By ANDY SOS

A 10-foot Amazon with her left breast cut off so that she could shoot her machine gun better. That's what I expected to see when I heard that a New Feminist would be speaking to our Sociology 101 class about the changing role of women.

But this proves that there is no justice left in the world. I had gathered all my forensic forces to face this fierce feminine foe (that alliteration will get 'em every time) because I knew that we males were going to have a fight on our hands (and various other parts of the body). But what we had was Mrs. Joan Johnson.

What a beautiful lady!

Yes, my evil enemy was none other than a beautiful lady who was, as people are wont to say, "very" pregnant.

On top of this she had a radiant smile on her face for the entire lecture.

NO FAIR!

Hell, that's not fair.

How can we male chauvinists challenge a woman like that?

How can we heckle, shout out vicious epithets, ask probing questions and make brilliant justifications of our positions starting with such phrases as "Oh Yeah? If women are so good then how come...?"

Yes, how can we carry on like this when we know that she'll just smile indulgently at us like an understanding mother who has just discovered that her baby has wet his pants?

Like I said, it's just not fair.

Now that she had captivated everyone with her smile, she started to make her points:

- Sex roles are socially imposed and not God-given.
- Sex is one of the most important things in life but in most sexual matters men always come out on top. (Get your mind out of the gutter.)

WOMANKIND

To back these things up, she mentioned that men get all the glory for the achievements of civilization. For example, when we refer to all human beings we don't say "man-and-womankind" and Expo '67 wasn't called "Man and Woman And His and Her World".

Mrs. Johnson also said that right from birth boys and girls are placed in their separate blue and pink pigeonholes. Little boys' clothes are functional and designed for mobility while little girls are dressed ornamentally.

As soon as kids reach the age of puberty they are trapped by a double standard which insists that boys be sexually experienced while girls must remain chaste and pure.

She doesn't like articles in girls' magazines with titles such as "Why Virgins make Better Wives". But on the other hand, neither do I.

LAY OR LAID

Another thing that bothered Mrs. Johnson was the passive role assigned to women by sexual slang (i.e. women don't "lay" they "get laid")

Nor did she love the fact that women's bodies are used to sell everything from cars to cigarettes, because these ads imply women are just sex objects.

She suggested the following solutions:

- Boys should learn to cook and sew.
- Girls should, if they wish, be able to initiate dates and accordingly pay for them.
- The double standard must be done away with.
- Marriage should be harder to get into and easier to get out of.
- Chivalry leads to oppression of women and should be eliminated.
- Abortion laws should be changed so that a woman has control of what goes on within her body.

MEN'S AUXILIARY

Then she told us that her group, the New Feminists (not to be confused with the Women's Liberation Movement), was working with its 25-100 members to implement these ideas.

There were no male members yet, she said, but they were willing to start a Men's Auxiliary.

She left us with irrefutable evidence that, throughout history, women have really been screwed, both literally and figuratively and that they were tired of it (just figuratively, I hope).

No one could effectively argue against her. She had won the battle of the sexes with a smile.

Bring back those Amazons or else we men don't stand a chance.

ARTS and SCIENCE Final Year Students

Today, the Chartered Accountant plays one of the most exciting roles in business management. He tackles complex and fascinating problems. For the professionally-trained man the scope is limitless.

Discuss career opportunities with Clarkson, Gordon representatives, on campus

Nov. 10, 11 & 14

Appointments should be made through the Student Placement Office. If this time is not convenient, please contact us directly: 368-2751

Clarkson, Gordon & Co. CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Hallifax • Saint John • Quebec • Montreal • Ottawa • Toronto
Hamilton • Kitchener • London • Windsor • Thunder Bay • Winnipeg
Regina • Calgary • Edmonton • Vancouver • Victoria

DEBATES ROOM

HART HOUSE

DEBATE

"THE REVOLUTION OF ONE GENERATION IS PERPETRATED IN THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE NEXT"

TODAY - 1:00 P.M.

NOON HOUR DEBATE

LADIES WELCOME

FALL FAIR

NOON

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8th

To celebrate the 50th Anniversary of Hart House the Hart House Farm Committee invites you to a FALL FAIR. Come one! Come all!

- SQUARE DANCING • HAY RIDE • BEARD CONTEST •
- CIDER PRESSING • OUTDOOR COMPETITIONS •
- VARIOUS CONTESTS OF STRENGTH & SKILL •

FREE

Dinner will be served. Meal tickets $1.25 are available in advance from the Hall Porter and the Graduate Office. Maps & information re: transportation available from Graduate Office.

ASSISTED BY VARSITY FUND

Pollution and Meekness

Meekness is hard to come by these days. By meekness we don't mean the usual caricature of Christians being spineless masochists. The deeper meaning of this beatitude from the Sermon on the Mount sees the meek person filled with strength and unusual power. To find this meaning, we have to look at the word in other languages.

In Hebrew the word connotes being "molded." In Greek there is the feeling of being "tamed." In French the word has the sense of being "debonair." The word suggests "sweet-tempered" in German. In the total religious sense then, the meek person is one who has had his wild nature tamed, and his personality and gifts honed by struggle in the market place. Recognition that his destiny and purpose is joined to divine purposes, he yields his pride and arrogance in favor of that strength and power and wisdom flowing from the transformation into meekness. He can be gracious and gentle even while in pursuit of great goals, even in the face of insult and injury.

The meek shall inherit the earth, but will the earth becoming polluted, no one may want the earth. If the campus population, therefore, really wishes to bring a revolution let them mobilize to control pollution. See your pastor, priest, or rabbi for details about blessedness. See Lutheran chaplain Larry Martin for details about details to control pollution. Campus politics is tiddlywinks in comparison to the need to control pollution that the earth may be worth inheriting.

UNIVERSITY LUTHERAN CHAPEL

610 SPADINA AVE. TORONTO 4, ONTARIO

DISCUSSION GROUP 7:45 A.M.
DIVINE WORSHIP 11:00 A.M.

SERVING THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO AND DOWNTOWN SCHOOLS

"Choice requires knowledge"

By DENISE MOSSEY

Too much permissiveness too early is a disaster in education, says Dr. Thomas Langan, of the U of T Department of Philosophy.

Prof. Langan said public and high school students are not able to learn as well or as much in a completely unstructured educational system as in a more rigid one.

He said he firmly believes a young student should study under a defined program, but he refused to condone the strict, disciplinarian "Shut up and do as you're told" teaching method.

Asking his listeners not to take his views as "a warrant for rotten teaching and ill-conceived authoritarianism", Dr. Langan proposed a system whereby the student would receive guidance until the university level.

"Choice requires knowledge of the situation", he said. "How can a child of twelve make a valid choice of whether or not to study Latin, if he has never studied Latin?"

"Authority is the natural result of people having had a certain experience before other people", Dr. Langan said.

He said he believes in flexible guidance on the teacher's part for public and high school students, and little or no structure set for university students. But he sympathizes with those who attack our educational system on all levels.

"These people really want a natural and spontaneous interaction of equals", Langan said. But education must go beyond the spontaneous to "reach a higher vision" which requires a programmed pattern of study.

Stanford stunned by secrets

PALO ALTO, Calif (CUPI) — A fog of embarrassment fell over Stanford University last Wednesday as an unidentified group of student radicals finally breached the ultimate boundary of propriety — they published the hitherto secret salaries of university administrators and professors.

Their 31-page document, interspersed with quotations from Mao Tse-Tung, showed salaries were highest for scientists and that research professors tended to receive much more money than teaching professors.

The document disclosed that Stanford administration president Kenneth Pitzer makes $60,000 per year, with an additional expense account of $26,500. Average pay for a full professor is $18,195 per year.

TUGS holds mini-teach-in on Toronto

By the year 2,001 Toronto could have a population of 6,000,000, almost three times the city's present size.

And a lot of people means a lot of problems, most of which have already begun to bother those worried about what it will be like to live in cities.

Things like pollution (in Toronto you breathe the equivalent of two packs of cigarettes a day, whether you like it or not), things like expressways which destroy established neighborhoods and bring more cars and parking lots into the centre of the city, things like bulldozing family houses and banishing people who can't afford to live in new high-rises to the suburbs.

But mostly things like how a city can become a junkyard monument to efficiency and sterility.

How have these kinds of things come about? Why? and what can be done?

You have three more days to buy a 50¢ ticket to a mini-teach-in on Metro Toronto, sponsored by the Toronto University Geographical Society

(which is the Geography Course Union.)

You won't get all the answers, but the organizers say the affair will be "fairly intellectual" and they have an impressive line-up of participants.

The Friday night session will focus on Toronto's 170-year historical development, with slides, film and discussion presented by U of T urban geographer Prof. Jacob Spelt. This will set the stage for two panel discussions the following day.

Saturday morning four urban specialists, including U of T's internationally known town planner Prof. Hans Blumenfeld, will present results of their research into the processes which have shaped Metro Toronto.

The final session is likely to provide the most controversy as it considers what can be done to solve Toronto's growing pains.

Participating in this session are Metro Planning Board Commissioner Wojciech Wronski, social work professor Albert Rose, an expert on housing problems now doing research on urban renewal processes; Prof. Henry Regier, concerned with the ecology of the city; and Prof. Alex Murray, associate professor of environmental studies at York University.

The mini-teach-in will be held in the Edward Johnson Building Concert Hall. TUGS activities committee chairman Simon Chamberlain says there are about 100 tickets left (of a total of 500) and you can buy them in the main lobby of Sidney Smith between noon and 2 p.m.

CLASSIFIEDS

GETTING ENOAGEO? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Day you buy a diamond" H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416, 921-7702.

ESSAY AND THESIS TYPING. Experienced typist will type essays and theses in my home. Electric typewriter, reasonable rates. Will endeavour to meet deadlines. Mrs Harford 287-5174

THE TYPING AND COPIING SERVICES needs qualified typists. Wouldn't you like to earn 40¢ per typed page? Contact O Potter 920-4207.

TYPING theses, essays, notes, charts English, French, other languages. Mimeographing, electric typewriters. Mary Dale Sloss (M. Dawes) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225 922-7824

WANTED: female to share two-bedroom apartment in Bathurst St. Clear area. Rent $75 each monthly. Phone 787-2558 after 7 p.m.

UNIVERSITY AREA TOWN HOUSE. $2900 down Six rooms completely renovated. Good condition and easy terms. 71 Ulster Ave. Only $23,300. Gertler and Wenzel RI 927-4492

New College Motion Picture Society presents W. C. FIELDS in "MILLION DOLLAR LEGS" — Tonight 8 P.M. — New College (Wetmore) Oving Hall (21 Classic Ave.)

New College Motion Picture Society presents MIA Farrow in "ROSEMARY'S BABY." Two Showings Sunday 8:30 & 9:00 P.M. New College (Wetmore) Oving Hall (21 Classic Ave.) Admission $1.00

LOST: too many lives. Give blood now. Wed Thurs Fri. Sig Sam Library. Fr. UC Junior Common Room. It doesn't hurt a bit

THE ILLUSTRATED MAN — Ray Bradbury novel now on screen tonight. Movie in room 218 Sidney Smith Bldg. at 8:15 p.m. & 10:15 p.m. All welcome 75¢ at door

JAZZ CONCERT Northern Secondary School Jazz Ensemble in Concert. Fri. Nov. 7th 8:15 P.M. Admission $1.00 N55 — 851 Mt Pleasant Rd

TYPING in English, French, fast accurate service on IBM Selectric by experienced typist two blocks from University Campus, 177 St. George Street, 929-5370 reasonable rates

2 STUDENTS want ride to Ottawa Nov 7 and to South St. Want any weekend, leaving Fri. after 5:00 Share gas, call 929-9458 anytime

STUDENT JOBS & tours in Europe. For a complete description and application form in a 42 page booklet send $2.00 to Gord Allen 25 Taylorwood Dr., Islington 575 Every student guaranteed a paying job in Europe

ATTENTION ESTONIAN MALE STUDENTS. Korpi Reveala Oile ohtu tuleval reedel kell 20.30, Club Edelweiss, 207 Beverley St. Koik organisemine ulkolipselised terehulind Phone 789-8968

WANTED — accurate typist for typing and clerical work. Minimum of two hours per day, two days a week. Call Professor Dool — 926-3219

BOOK SALE — All new — used books half price — Nov 1-7, 10:00 a.m.-7 p.m. Volume One 427 Spadina Ave. (just south of College) 924-3844

Dance to the SOLID SOUL SOUNDS of the "Mount Misery Music Company" Friday 8:30 p.m. New College (21 Classic Ave.) — $1.00
Stretions — $1.50
Terms — $3.00

More racist charges at SGWU

MONTREAL (CUP) — The issue of racism at Sir George Williams University, buried in the uproar surrounding the notorious computer-burning here last February, erupted again Monday — the same day defendants in last year's affair appeared in provincial courts.

A group of Sir George students and faculty have laid libel and racism charges against Wayne Gray, editor and publisher of "The Paper," a joint weekly publication of the Sir George and Loyola Evening Students' Associations, for a cartoon published in Monday's edition.

The charges created a furor which ended with the paper's removal from news-stands, and the burning of the edition. The paper was later re-issued without the cartoon.

The SGWU Students' Association has denounced the drawing as "the most offensive example of racism ever published at Sir George... a shocking example of bad taste."

The cartoon shows a black pondering the page of a newspaper, as his companion polishes a machine gun in a setting strewn with "visit beautiful Biafra" posters, shrunken heads, skulls and pennants labelled "Mau Mau Tech" and "Nigeria U."

The caption reads: "Pack your kit bag, Alfred, they are about to start a black studies program in Sir George."

Gray has refused to identify the artist who drew the cartoon.

The source idea for the drawing is believed to be a notice from the SGWU Caribbean Students Association seeking black students' reaction to the possibility of establishing a credit course in black studies.

No such course has been approved by university authorities.

The charges were made by a group of 38 students and faculty members, among them members of the Caribbean Students Association.

Under a new student discipline code at Sir George, created after last year's incident, the charges will be heard before a board of three students, two from the evening school and one day student.

The board has the power to suspend, remove student privileges, or recommend expulsion.

Appeal can be made to a review board of three students, one faculty member and one senior administrator, with further appeal possible to the university board of governors.

Ross Miles, President of the Evening Students' Association which sponsors "The Paper," conceded the cartoon "might be in poor taste," but defended Gray's decision to re-issue the paper minus the cartoon but without any apology.

"Why escalate?" he said. "Tomorrow there'd be 6,000 people looking for dirt. It's better to say nothing."

Miles said the cartoon is probably "going to alienate a lot of black moderates, but it's by no means as critical as February 11 (the date of the computer centre incident).

Compromise offered to Loyola prof

MONTREAL (CUP) — After a 250-person sit-in Tuesday, the administration at Loyola College yesterday re-opened the case of dismissed physics Professor S.A. Santhanam and offered him a compromise deal to leave the campus and end the furor caused by his arbitrary dismissal last summer.

The administration's proposal may not be enough to soothe Loyola students who have demanded binding arbitration by the Canadian Association of University Teachers in Santhanam's case. The question will come to a vote next Monday in a referendum which will also decide the political fate of student council president Marcel Nouvet.

Nouvet told a turbulent mass meeting yesterday that the administration would offer Santhanam $10,000 and the remainder of his $16,000 National Research Council grant if he would leave the campus. President Patrick Malone previously announced he considered the Santhanam case closed.

Santhanam was not re-hired by the Loyola administration for the 1969-70 academic year — no reason was given for his dismissal. Both students and faculty have denounced the administration's action as unfair and authoritarian.

On Oct. 8, three student and seven faculty members of the Loyola walked out of a meeting, stating they no longer had any confidence in Malone.

Half of Loyola's 4,600 stu-

see COMPROMISE p. 14

Students still awaiting trials

MONTREAL (CUP) — The long wait by defendants charged in connection with the computer burning at Sir George Williams University last February will continue for at least another 66 days.

The names of the 70 defendants appeared on the rolls before Mr. Justice Ignace J. Deslauriers in Montreal court Monday, only to be put over to the next term of the court of Queen's Bench which will start January 7, 1970, and run through January and February.

The 70 defendants form the major bloc of the 89 students arrested February 11 and are charged with 363 crimes ranging from conspiracy to commit arson to property damage.

Their history since then has been one of waits: Preliminary hearings into the incident did not begin for 76 of the accused until April 14, eight others did not face preliminary hearings until March 5.

And in the interim, the majority of the defendants were re-fused bail twice before it was finally granted February 18. Seven others were not granted bail until March 5.

the HEYLOFT

The next time you want to have a lot of fun and not get fussed up, you must try PORTS OF CALL SOUTH'S new room, THE HEYLOFT. Bob Mills leads the shenanigans from 9:00 P.M. to 1:00 A.M. and any form of gorb is welcome... mini, maxi, pants, jeans and yes, even bare feet, while pitchin' fun at Ports of Call's new "barn" from 12:00 noon to 1 A.M.

Ports of Call

1145 YONGE ST.

924-9353

FREE U of T

WHAT IS IT?

An attempt to build a good learning environment, (whether apart from the campus courses, or as a critique of campus courses is up to the individuals involved). Courses are set up in response to demands from the campus, and the shape of the course is designed by the group involved — you decide what and how you want to learn in consultation with a resource person (if you want one end we can find one). In all of the courses whether they be "do-your-own-thing", interdisciplinary, on problems, areas not included in campus curriculum, a specific counter-course, the emphasis is on learning not on exams, grades, certificates etc.

COURSES:

These are courses which have survived from last year, or which have been suggested by resource people.

- POETRY OF PHYSICS
- BIBLE AS REVOLUTIONARY DOCUMENT
- CONVERSATIONAL YIDDISH
- LIBERTARIAN PSYCHIATRY & SOCIOLOGY
- CREATIVE COMMUNICATIONS
- COMPUTERS
- EDUCATION- WHAT IT IS, WHAT IT SHOULD BE
- T - GROUPS
- OCCULTISM TO-OAY
- THIRD WORLD FILMS & DISCUSSION GROUP
- MYSTICISM & OCCULTISM
- SEMINAR ON THE FAMILY
- MARXIST ECONOMICS GROUP
- NON - AUTHORITARIAN MEDICINE
- WOMEN'S LIBERATION
- LABOUR HISTORY
- COMMUNISM
- EDUCATION RESEARCH GROUP
- A HISTORY COUNTER COURSE
- ART (MAY BE HISTORY OF MODERN OR PRACTICAL WHATEVER IS WANTED)

HOW TO REGISTER:

Phone or call Maggie Blizzell, SAC office 923-3490 or

Come to F.U. of T. Communal Meeting Thursday, November 6th 5:00 p.m. BICKERSTETH ROOM, HART HOUSE to discuss F.U. of T. in general, and for groups to work out with resource people the best time, and begin discussion on what and how to learn.

NEW COURSES:

Bring suggestions for new courses and/or resource people to M. Blizzell, or to the November 6th meeting. We need to know if people are interested in Literature, Music, Science, Urban Problems, Art, Languages, etc. etc., and are prepared to help in the building of such courses. Also if a course you are doing on campus is unsatisfactory — contact your course union and discuss possibility of setting up a counter course in F.U. of T. If no course union, come in to SAC office.

HILLEL LECTURE SERIES

Rabbi Abel Respes
of The Coloured Hebrew Congregation Hamonton, New Jersey
on

"Black Jews in America"

Sunday, Nov. 9

8:30 P.M.

YM-YWHA - 750 Spadina Ave.

No Admission Charge

YORK HILLEL DANCE

Sat. Nov. 8, 1969

8:30 P.M.

"The Chosen Few"

Founders' Dining Hall

Hillel Members Free

Review of the press: Foreign-financed journalism?

By STAN GRAY

(Gray was a political science lecturer at McGill until he was fired by the administration last spring. We are reprinting excerpts from his speech at last month's Year of the Barricade at Glendon College).

What I want to speak about mostly is the current situation in Quebec, specifically the recent events. I think it's necessary, because I gather from the kind of press coverage that comes out of Toronto that you tend to get a slightly untrue picture of things.

When I was in Ottawa the other day, which I hear, according to Lucien Saulnier and Pierre Trudeau, has become a red base for the Quebec independence movement, I picked up a copy of this little hate sheet called the Toronto Globe and Mail. The first page says, "Quebec lawyer lists 27 subversives; foreign financing charged." The Toronto Globe and Mail charges foreign financing! The thing here is a speech by a character called Anthony Malcolm, chairman of the "blue-ribbon" Canada Committee. What's the Canada Committee? Well, it's described here very accurately:

"The Canada Committee was launched in March '68 as a publicity organization to combat the separatist movement. The group has about 500 members, including leading members of the Montreal business community. Companies represented by some of their executives include Bell Canada, Alcan, Northern Electric, Damta, chartered banks, insurance firms." Now I'd say that in terms of the composition of the Canada Committee, it's a fairly accurate representation of what Canada means to most people in Quebec at the present time.

This character Malcolm was speaking before a Women's Club in the Town of Mount Royal, a very rich English suburb of Montreal. The Globe report says: "In an address blimming with names, dates, and figures," — it's supposed to be a real expose of what's happening in Quebec, what with all these separatist movements, they're all training in Cuba or Ottawa or wherever it happens to be. He gives an expose of these subversives who are financed from Cuba and the Al Fatah and from all these subversive organizations.

The first thing to note about this is that no newspaper in Montreal printed his charges. They absolutely refused to. They refused to print any of the allegations presented here because Malcolm refused to supply any kind of proof. So the newspapers in Montreal, not because they're objective but simply a bit more informed on what is happening, refused to print any of this crap because absolutely no substantiation was given to any of these charges. There was a very sarcastic and humorous article in La Presse (the largest French-language daily in Montreal), which treated it as a big joke, and even the Montreal Gazette had it on page 35 with a small story. But in Toronto, it's on the front page and everyone's hysterical.

We should also note by the way that all the information had appeared a month and a half ago in a Quebec paper called Le Petit Journal — everything here, all the so-called facts and allegations, except for the addition of Al Fatah, which is supposed to have done a lot of finance Operation McGill.

Now, one thing that should be mentioned is that I wish we had all this foreign financing and support. Unfortunately we don't have. We have bills and we have some of our people being threatened with being taken to court for bills of $200 that didn't get paid during Operation McGill last March. So if Malcolm knows any contacts — he mentions this guy who owns a store in Algeria who was giving us money — I wish he'd give us the names so we could get hold of them to get funds to pay our bills.

On page seven of this copy of the Globe, Malcolm's speech is quoted as saying "Enough Violence? The Subversive Side of Separatism." One of the facts quoted is very interesting: "On the one hand we have the FLQ (Front de Liberation du Quebec), which is a very strong rightist group, and which acts as the terrorist arm of the separatist movement."

Very interesting that a rightist group bombs corporation headquarters. And the guys they arrested had pictures of Che Guevara on the wall.

Wait, it gets very interesting now: "With and closely allied to the FLQ is the leftist FLP (Front de Liberation Populaire), which is the subversive arm of the separatist movement. This latter group is at present involved in setting up cells throughout the province for the FLQ."

We have the leftist FLP setting up cells all over Quebec for the right wing FLQ! It goes on: "These cells are at present dormant and are only waiting for the signal to come to life and strike a blow for the achievement of their aims."

It gets absolutely ludicrous at this point. "One particular branch of the FLP is the MSP (Mouvement Syndical Politique) which is a student group. This movement controls the publication and distribution of all political literature in the schools and CEGEPS (junior colleges)."

I want to give you a fact. At the current time in Quebec, all political meetings and movements are banned from 80% of the CEGEPS, and it's only illegally that they can distribute any kind of political literature. In fact it's the opposite of what is claimed. It's the administration of the colleges that control all the distribution of literature in the CEGEPS.

The point I want to make is simply that the kind of press terrorism that's going on, the systematic lies and distortion and slander against the movement in Quebec, is using the lack of information by the English-speaking people to make these kinds of fantastically ridiculous charges. Anybody who seriously reads this thing can see the contradictions that are in it.

As I mentioned before, this stuff came originally from a paper called Le Petit Journal of Montreal, which gave this big "expose". Now, to test the veracity of the information in Le Petit Journal, let me give you one example. Two weeks ago, it came out with a front page that said: "Exclusive! Secret Document of the FLP!" Terrorism, armed struggle, blah, blah, blah. You turned the page, and it said: "We are here reprinting the secret document of the FLP. We couldn't print it before in order to protect our informers. However, now it's safe, and we're able to print it. It's also hard because there are only 20 copies in circulation, all of which are different."

All these codes you know, different versions to fool people. The document was supposed to have been approved at a secret meeting of the executive committee of the FLP. So secret is this document that it has been on sale in Montreal bookstores for the last six months. It appeared in a public journal called Mobilisations, and was a letter signed by Pierre Vallieres, written in February, '68. Vallieres is not even a member of the FLP. He wrote this letter to the movement as a whole, and it was signed as such and was on sale at all Montreal bookstores.

That's the kind of accuracy of information that's being filtered through about all the disorders, separatism, terrorism and anarchy that's breaking out in Montreal at the present time.

québec

By SUSAN REISLER
Varsity CUP Editor

Thousands of people are mobilizing in Quebec. But at the same time repressive measures taken by the Provincial Government, the police, and the Federal Government are being accelerated.

Quebec, now exists virtually as a police state.

Let's take a look at some of the events of the past year and consider how the Provincial Government has handled them.

In October 1968 students across the province joined together to take a militant stand against the government's relations with the College d'Enseignement General et Professionnel.

Over 45,000 CEGEP students went on strike that month backing demands which included creation of a second French language university, an increase in student bursary funds, shuffling of CEGEP administrations, and government planned employment for CEGEP graduates.

UNIVERSITY SUPPORT

They were supported by 8-

000 students at l'Université de Montreal, as well as students from McGill, Sir George Williams, and Loyola who abandoned their classes for at least one day in support of the striking CEGEP students.

On October 21, 9,000 students marched on downtown Montreal in support of the CEGEPS who were still on strike despite a government warning that if the students didn't return to school that day they would lose their first semester.

Typical of the spirit of these students was this chant, a parody of the Lord's Prayer:

"Our Father Cardinal, who art in the ministry, degraded by thy name, thy reign be ended, our will be done. Give us this day our daily bursary. Forgive us our trespasses as you have forgiven those who trespass against us. May all evil end. Amen."

This demonstration was the largest of its kind ever to be held in Quebec. But how did it all end?

STRIKERS EXPELLED

Most of the students who helped to organize the strikes were expelled from school. The administrative reason for some of the expulsions was that the students had missed more than 10 per cent of their classes.

- strikes, marches, raids when will it all end?

The expulsions led to a second CEGEP strike. The response of the government was harsher this time.

Eighty policemen were sent into CEGEP Jonquiere to clear out 200 students. Five were arrested.

At this same college students were forced to sign a pledge on readmission promising they would "exclude themselves from the college if they returned to their illegal activities."

The colleges' administrations banned all unapproved public meetings, and the distribution of uncensored literature. Students could be expelled for missing 10 per cent of their classes.

The new rules were used in January 1969 when Montreal police, called by the college administration, hauled 100 students from a meeting room in CEGEP Mont St. Louis.

REPRISALS

The students were meeting to discuss some of the repression their colleagues were suffering — 17 students at another CEGEP had been expelled for writing an article attacking religion. When the 17 who had the support of the teachers union and the student body showed up to write their exams they were bodily dragged away by police.

A typical example of the punishment that was meted out occurred at CEGEP Maisonneuve. There, 118 students were suspended. Twelve were outright expulsions. Eighteen of their professors were fired.

The students organized a teach-in to discuss the firing of their professors and voted to occupy the college. About 130 students stayed around the school to prepare for the occupation. At 5:30 p.m. police from the Montreal anti-riot squad invaded the building and herded the students into a large room where they were told by one of the Fathers that they were considered as intruders and had two minutes to leave the building.

But Maurice Saulnier, director of student services, had a better answer for the rebels. He had them march up to him one by one, took their names, confiscated their student cards, and had them searched by the police.

Girls were not excluded from this thorough searching although there were no police-women present.

LETTERS SENT

The students were released but told they could not set foot in the college until they were advised by the administration that they could return.

A few days later 116 students in the college received the following letter:

"We are informing you by this letter that you are suspended from the college until a new order.

"This suspension is due to the fact that your presence was identified in the College de Maisonneuve on the night of the 15 to the 16 of April 1969.

"This letter is not to be interpreted as a letter of expulsion and if you are interested in explaining yourself with respect to the above-mentioned presence we invite you to arrange a meeting with the signator before Wednesday 23 April 1969. (The letter was sent on the 17 April) Not to arrange a meeting will be interpreted as a decision on your part to abandon your studies at the College de Maisonneuve."

The letter was signed by Maurice Saulnier.

The students had no due process, no hearings, no disciplinary codes. If they came back to the school they were bodily thrown out by the police.

What took place during and after the CEGEP strikes was only the beginning.

BANS STILL EFFECTIVE

Today CEGEP students still face these bans.

Six thousand high school students are now out on strike in support of unilingualism. There are police in the schools and many of those on strike probably will not be readmitted to school.

It is also illegal in all the high schools to hold large public meetings or distribute any kind of literature.

There is little information available about this strike because the Ontario papers are ignoring most of what is taking place in Quebec. The strike is in its second week and the only story so far has been one short Canadian Press release buried on page 10 of yesterday's Toronto Star.

The measures taken by the Quebec government these past few months have become extremely violent.

POLICE PANIC

In September police panicked during a demonstration in support of keeping French as the teaching language in St. Leonard, and read the Riot Act. Few people heard the Act read but it seems the idea was to catch the leaders of the demonstration and get them out of circulation.

Raymond Lemieux and several other leaders are now charged with sedition and face a maximum sentence of life

Drapeau-Saulnier administration.

The FLP called a press conference announcing the march. Five minutes later the police began a mass number of raids and arrests, using their new search warrants.

These warrants give the police the power, the right, to seize anything unwritten or written, printing machines that are used for printing — anyone dared to show up. The police director of Montreal went on the radio and asked parents to please keep their kids at home.

On the day of the march approximately 600 soldiers left over from the police strike surrounded the city hall with machine guns and tear gas.

Who were they protecting? The people on the outside, or the rulers on the inside?

REIGN OF TERROR

imprisonment. Lemieux's treasonous act was not hearing the police who read the Act and continuing his march.

Last April, at a meeting held the day before Operation-McGill which led thousands of workers and students to McGill University demanding it be turned into a French-language institution, five police spies were found at the back of the meeting room. The chairman of the meeting prevented angry people from smashing the police but he asked that the police leave their cameras. Only too thankful to get away, the police did as asked, then left.

The next night the combined forces of the QPP, RCMP, and the Montreal police came and arrested the chairman, took him to jail, beat him up and charged him with armed theft.

The chairman, coincidentally, was one of the organizers of Operation McGill.

MONTREAL MARCH

Two days after the Montreal police strike (October 7) the Front de Liberation Populaire, a coalition of most of the separatist organizations in Quebec, tried to organize a march on City Hall for October 10 to demand the resignation of the anything, in effect, that could give someone the idea, or could lead him to conclude that he should engage in activities that could disturb the peace.

All these hypothetical "could's" give the police a great deal of power and they have not been slow to use it.

With these new warrants the police began a series of raids and arrests involving the principal organizers and organizations who were planning the October 10 demonstration.

POLICE RAIDS

Virtually every committee, group and organization which opposes the Drapeau-Saulnier administration received a visit from the local police and the QPP. This included tenants' associations, citizen's committees, union groups, and so on.

During these raids the police seized all the documents that were in the offices. They raided the files and took printing presses, using their new power to the limit. They also made several arrests.

While these raids were going on the government began a campaign of terrorism in the mass media. They called the demonstration illegal before it happened. They threatened to read the Riot Act once more if

The systematic raids on the offices of organizations continue. It seems obvious that the goal of the police and the government is to stop all these groups from functioning and destroy any kind of political opposition.

Quebec Justice Minister, Remi Paul, a right-winger known to have the support of Gabriel Arcand, a self-declared fascist, is in part responsible for the current repression.

Under this "reign of terror" imposed by the government, every form of challenge, every form of opposition activity (contestation en francais) is being labelled as seditious and illegal. It's all being equated with terrorism.

But people are still mobilizing.

Last Friday 40,000 people marched on the Quebec Legislature demanding the repeal of Bill 63 and supporting unilingualism.

This Friday an even larger number of people is expected to march on Montreal's City Hall demanding the release of all political prisoners, Remi Paul's resignation, and the repeal of Bill 63.

LET'S TALK ABOUT SAVING YOU MONEY ON YOUR DIAMOND RING

GETTING ENGAGED?

You don't need a masters degree in marketing to know that the more hands a product passes through the more it costs the final consumer. The reverse is also true. We are "Direct" Diamond Dealers. We import our own goods and sell on a "Direct" basis. Because of this we can and do sell well below the established market structure.

If you're in the market for a diamond ring drop in and compare for yourself. Ask for me personally.

(Alternately, we would be pleased to send you our free booklet "The Doy You Buy a Diamond")

WE ARE DIRECT DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.
DIAMOND DEALERS

131 BLOOR W.
STE. 416

921-7702

SAVE A LIFE
GIVE BLOOD
WEDNESDAY & THURSDAY
SIG SAM LIBRARY
FRIDAY
SIG SAM LIBRARY
U.C. JUNIOR COMMON ROOM

U.C. FILM SOCIETY

"presents"

Every THURSDAY at 8:30 p.m. in the MECHANICAL BUILDING Rm. 102, the following films:

- Nov. 6 "Roshomon" by Kurosowo
- Nov. 13 "Black Orpheus"
- Nov. 20 "Alphaville" by Godard
- Nov. 27 "Made in U.S.A. by Godard
- Dec. 4 "Hiroshima Mon Amour" by Resnais

ADMISSION TO EACH FILM: $1.00

TICKETS NOW ON SALE
IN THE LIT OFFICE IN THE J.C.R.

Barkwell diagnoses James

By JANE HOLLINGWORTH

The SAC Executive meeting scheduled for 6:30 p.m. last night got under way before 7:30.

After half an hour of "correspondence" (cards and letters) Executive Assistant Liz Willick spotted the Varsity reporter (Art Moses can "spot them a mile off").

SAC Vice-President Bob Barkwell cautioned, "Bear in mind this isn't very serious" which may or may not have had something to do with Gus Abols' (SAC President) absence.

CUS leftovers, including a Soviet exchange due to arrive next Spring and planes already chartered for next summer, gave Mike Simon, External Affairs Commissioner, and Barkwell a chance to show off their Russian vocabularies.

Before the meeting's main attraction entered the bullring, the group sanctioned a support telegram to a St. Francis Xavier residence sit-in. The wording "we support your anti-imperialist movement" got laughs.

A plea for money for the Law Society Journal led to a comparison (by Barkwell) to the Meds Journal until Bob James, Finance Commissioner asked for a mandate to handle the plea himself.

Lawrence Bedder, Ward 6 school board candidate and the evening's feature attraction finally took the floor — and the meeting.

Barkwell, who had previously diagnosed Bob James' moustache pullers' thumb syndrome, turned his attention to Bedder's highly unlikely philosophy of education.

Thirty-five minutes later, his non-platform evident, Bedder slumped back in his chair — a position already taken by the rest of us.

SAC meeting, scheduled tonight at Scarborough College will discuss a Spadina Expressway report calling for the closing of St. George from College to St. George from College to St. George. The report must be important because the exec. members took from 8:55 to 9 p.m. to discuss it.

Blood continues to flow on campus (chiefly for the Red Cross) as more and more students overcome their hemophobia. So far 2,171 pints have been donated. 125 less than at the same time last year.

There will be clinics in the Sigmund Samuel Library for the next three days, so help reach the goal (at the moment rather far in the distance) and BLEED!

campus items

councils support moratorium

Monday night the New College Student Council passed two important motions.

The council recommended to the administration that there be no exams during Passover.

The council also passed a motion supporting the Vietnam moratorium and recommended the suspension of classes on Nov. 14.

The executive of the U of T Engineering Society last night voted to support in principle the Nov. 14 Vietnam Moratorium.

The motion was proposed by Mike Sefton (III ApSci), treasurer of EngSoc.

A second motion calling on Dean of Applied Science James Ham to cancel all classes on Moratorium Day was rejected.

nlc on the march again

A march will be held this Friday evening to demonstrate support of the United Front demonstration in Quebec.

Each demonstration will raise the same three demands:

- free Gagnon and Vallieres, now imprisoned for three years without conviction, and all political prisoners.
- removal of Remi Paul as Justice Minister
- repeal of Bill 63

The march is presently being planned and co-ordinated by the New Left Caucus. For specific information about time and place, call 920-5806.

Compromise

cont'd from page 11

dents, supported by nearly 100 of the college's 270 faculty, boycotted classes from Oct. 27 to 29 to back up their demands for increased student representation on the Senate and CAUT arbitration in Santhanam's case.

The compromise proposal was hammered out by Malone and a student delegation Monday night, after 250 students blocked the corridors of the Loyola administration building to demand the re-opening of the case.

Santhanam was not consulted in the negotiations: he will not comment on the proposal until he has consulted with CAUT.

At yesterday's meeting, Nouvet suggested students adopt the proposal, then later asked students to reject it: announced his resignation, and then retracted it to await the results of Monday's referendum.

Nouvet had been one of the most militant supporters of Santhanam, and led Loyola students in the three-day boycott.

At the meeting, he urged students to support the administration's offer, saying "it is a defeat for the students, but nothing more can be done."

"We will not achieve a clear-cut victory using peaceful tactics," he said, "and will not achieve our ends using violent tactics either."

He said he would withhold his resignation pending the results of Monday's referendum: If students voted to support the administration's offer, nominations would be opened for the president's post.

CUSO co-ordinator condemns volunteer-sponsored revolution

By SUE STEINBURGH

Canadians cannot go into a host country under the auspices of the Canadian University Services Overseas and engage in subversive activities, Richard Ingram, CUSO co-ordinator in the Latin American division said last night in the second lecture of the fall CUSO series.

"Canadians do not assume the risks of revolution, and therefore we should not encourage others to do so. We have no right to assume a revolutionary role in another country and then return home to the safe confines of Canada and watch the violence on television," he stated.

Mr. Ingram explained the characteristic problems of the third world in Marxist terms, citing nine areas where improvement is vital, but he condemned apathy or CUSO-sponsored revolution as answers to the critical situation.

The main problems, according to Mr. Ingram, are widespread subsistence farming, a lack of markets, instability in the credit structure, land tenure, military domination of the political structure, disease, transportation and communications, and overpopulation.

The 80 Canadians presently working in Latin America are facing these problems, and must aim for a consistent self-commitment toward helping the host country to help itself.

This is complicated by evidence, according to Mr. Ingram, that CUSO workers are not committed to development if it conflicts with their own self-interest.

He claimed that the volunteers do not sustain their interest in learning the new language and culture of their Spanish Latin American host countries, and that they know that their short (two-year) contract allows them to leave the responsibility of a failure in the host country.

The term spent in the developing country, Mr. Ingram felt, was comparable to an internship in a hospital with the volunteers essentially there to learn for themselves.

He further stated that to some extent Canadians in a foreign country feel an impunity under the laws of the country and can depend on the Canadian embassy or British consulate to extricate them from any difficulty.

But CUSO's role in the third world is justified for the stimulus to development that is passed on. Technological and educational advances are being made, and a beginning has been made in capital projects.

SAC supports homosexuals

Oct. 29 marked the birth of the University of Toronto Homophile Association when SAC recognized it as an official organization. The association, based on that of Cornell University, was designed to inform the U of T community of the aspects of male and female homosexuality, and to combat prevalent myths with accurate facts.

Jerry Moldenhauer, a graduate of Cornell, said that most students at Cornell were, at first, turned off toward the association because it didn't use the back door method of gradually infiltrating the university's society as a group to inform students and help homosexuals.

Charlie Hill (SGS), chairman of the U of T Homophile Association said, "It's important to keep up the momentum of the organization. If interest dropped it would be a pity because an association of this kind is certainly vital to a large community such as the University of Toronto."

The association plans to work toward the acceptance of homosexuality on social and personal levels and to set up an informal counselling service. This will be done partly by maintaining a table in the foyer of Sidney Smith Hall to distribute literature and answer questions. Discussion groups, open to all U of T students, will be held every second week and prominent guest speakers will be invited to give their views on homosexuality in today's society.

Unipax organizes Biafra Moratorium

Unipax gives you a chance to get off your ass by inviting you to get back on it.

On Nov. 27, Mitchell Sharp will have people sitting-in at his office because there are people who oppose the slaughter of Biafrans and who support African unity.

These people are Unipax people.

Unipax is organizing a national Biafra Moratorium for Nov. 27. According to Larry Jeffery, the Toronto co-ordinator for the Moratorium, it must come at this time.

"We have reason to believe that Messrs. Sharp and Trudeau have changed their minds on the Canadian position on Biafra," he said.

Across Canada towns and groups are arranging seminars and services and are petitioning their mayors to commemorate the death of murdered Biafrans and to pressure the government to reverse its stand on the Nigerian civil war.

McMaster University has cancelled its classes for the day of the Moratorium. The city of Toronto will have a mass rally at City Hall. So far, classes have not been cancelled at U of T.

If the campus claims ignorance of the issue it will not be the fault of Unipax. For a week prior to the Moratorium booths will be set up across campus to give out literature on what could well be called the tragedy of the century.

Dial-a-Commie for your latest up to the minute information on all radical activity and a cheery revolutionary slogan. Supported by the Women's Liberation Movement and the New Left Caucus, the number is 920-5806.

NOON HOUR DEBATE

Today - Debates Rooms - 1 p.m.

Topic

"THE REVOLUTION OF ONE GENERATION IS PERPETRATED IN THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE NEXT"

Ladies Welcome

EXPERIMENTAL MUSIC CONCERT

21st Century Music with

MIKE CRAOEN

New Dimensions Quartet

JOHN WYRE

Toronto Symphony

12-2 p.m. - East Common Room - Today

Ladies Welcome

CLASSICAL CONCERT

MUSIC ROOM - 1 p.m. - TODAY

with

LESLIE KINTON

Piano Recital - Ladies Welcome

CAMERA CLUB

Today

1:10 p.m. Portrait Lighting Demonstration

by Mr. M. Milne

8:00 p.m. Studio Night - Art Gallery

NOON HOUR FILMS

Thursday, November 6th

East Common Room at 1:10 p.m.

(N.F.B.: Experimental Group)

SYRINX, OPUS 3, OP HOP, MARCHING

THE COLOURS & FOUR LINE CONICS

Ladies Welcome

The Music Committee of Hart House invites applications for the positions of Record Room Curators. Application forms are available from Warden's Office and will be accepted until 5 p.m. today. These positions carry an honorarium and are for the academic year.

HART HOUSE 50 PHOTO CONTEST

$100 - Cash Prizes

Closing Date: TODAY

HART HOUSE ORCHESTRA

HART HOUSE GLEE CLUB

Present

A joint concert to celebrate the 50th Anniversary of Hart House

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 9th

7:45 p.m. GREAT HALL

Tickets: Hall Porter

HART HOUSE FARM

FALL FAIR

Saturday, November 8th

SQUARE DANCING, HAY RIDE,

BEAR CONTEST & CIDER PRESSING

Meal Tickets: $1.25 - Hall Porter and Graduate Office

IN PERSON ARLO GUTHRIE

Massey Hall
8:30 p.m.

Thurs. November 13

TIX: 3, $4, $5

On Sale: All SAM the RECORD MAN outlets and MASSEY HALL box office.

ANNOUNCING STUDENTS' ADMINISTRATIVE COUNCIL THIRD GENERAL MEETING

TO BE HELD AT SCARBOROUGH COLLEGE
7:30 P.M. TONIGHT

bus will be leaving at 6:45 p.m.
from Convocation Hall

ALL WELCOME!!!!

SoccerBlues end dismal season clobbering hapless Waterloo Warriors

By LYNDON LITTLE

In the cold rain at Waterloo yesterday afternoon the Soccer Blues closed out their 1969-70 season with a 5-1 victory over the Warriors.

For the first time in six years Varsity will not be the OQAA soccer champions. The honour of representing the Western Division will go to either McMaster or Western.

The Blues lost only one game this season (3-1 to Mac) but it was three ties in games they should have won that made the difference.

It is unlikely that Toronto will ever dominate OQAA soccer the way it has in the past.

All the teams in the Western circuit have improved rapidly. The fan who enjoys good soccer will be the one who will benefit from the better competition.

Yesterday was a game where the Blues could take out all the frustrations of not being in the championship as they dominated a disorganized Waterloo team from start to finish.

Forward John Gero closed out his Varsity career in fine form with a four goal effort. All his goals came in the first half with three of them coming within a span of 4 minutes — which must be some kind of a record!

Jim Astaphan scored Toronto's fifth goal while Ed Murphy notched the lone Waterloo score late in the game.

Veteran fullback Jim Kalman, also playing his last game, moved to the forward line for this match and played aggressive soccer missing two great chances in the first half. Coach Bob Nicol took mercy on the Warriors and switched him back to the defense for the second half.

The soccer team will vote tomorrow on the Charles Oster Trophy, emblematic of the team's most valuable player.

Help Re-elect

TONY O'DONOHUE

Alderman Ward 4

T As a dynamic member of City Council, Tony O'Donohue seeks solutions to Toronto's major problems—pollution, housing, and redevelopment.

O Tony is seeking re-election on December 1st.

N He needs your help.

D As a student at the University of Toronto, you live in this city. Toronto's problems are your problems.

O Help solve them.

N Support Tony. Assist him in Ward 4.

O Tony needs all kinds of people.

N He needs YOU.

H If you can help, please phone or visit: — The O'Donohue Committee Rooms 214 Ossington Ave (at Dundas) PHONE 533-2394

E Tony would like to personally meet with you. Join him at an informal coffee party in the Rhodes Room, Trinity College, TONIGHT 7:30 P.M.

HERE AND NOW

TODAY

All those interested in supporting Israel's struggle for survival, call Students for Israel Movement, 923-7837

Tickets are being sold in Galbraith 147 for the EIC Annual Engineers Ball at the Science Centre, Don Mills. Make it there on Sat. Nov. 8 at 9 p.m., dress is optional. Tickets are $5 per couple, with two free drinks supplied.

NOON

Last two days of ticket sales for "The Growth Of Matropoliten Toronto" symposium. Sid Smith main foyer, until 2 p.m.

1 p.m.

Yavneh is having Ronald Klompus give a talk about the biography of Chofatz Chaimzitz. Sid Smith, Rm. 2129

If you would like to know what is available for someone with a general arts degree, come to the Career Information Lecture in Rm. 1035 of the Wellbarg Bldg., and Miss R.D. Goymer will tell you the answer.

Meeting of all those interested in finding out about the latest of the world's great religions The Bahai' Faith. In the South Sitting Room of Hart House

EIC presents two films: "Devil Beneath the Sea" and "1939 A.O. — World of Tomorrow." These two Science Fiction thrillers are in MC-102

U of T Liberal Club. Special guest Jack Heath will describe party organization and structure. Sid Smith Rm. 1087

Regular groovy meeting of Stand staff — to plan the next issue — special epped attraction, a rap session on interviewing Stand Office.

Open meeting to plan program and publicity of Nov. 14 Vietnam Moratorium. Sid Smith Rm. 1088

Portrait Lighting with guest speaker. Hart House Camera Club

Oenial Dreche — What's Wrong With The CUG Report? Sid Smith Rm. 2102

4:10 p.m.

"Astronomical Measurements At Very Short Wavelengths", Dr. B. G. Wilson, Univ. of Calgary. McLennan Physical Lab., Rm. 202, coffee at 3:40 in Rm. 14D4.

8:15 p.m.

"The Illustrated Man" with Rod Steiger — Admission 75c at door. Sid Smith, Rm. 2118. Repeated at 8:15 p.m.

7 p.m.

Lifa drawing, model and equipment supplied. 50c ISC, 33 St. George.

7:30 p.m.

Fourth general SAC meeting. Busses leave from Convocation Hall at 6:30, for Scarborough College

7:45 p.m.

Studio night with models. Hart House.

8 p.m.

W.C. Fields in "Million Dollar Legs". $1 New College (Classic & Huron St.)

THURSDAY

9 a.m.

Auditions for Samuel Beckett's "Embers" Rm. 121, Watmore Hall, New College.

1 p.m.

Meeting in support of PSA strike at Simon Fraser, sponsored by course unions. Convocation Hall.

To discuss setting up an interdisciplinary studies course union and representation in the faculty council. Sid Smith Rm. 1085.

5 p.m.

Meeting of Hellenic University Society, ISC.

F.U of T communal Meeting, Bickersteth Room, Hart House.

"Interactions" A public affairs program on Radio Varsity, dealing with any and every issue. Guests this week: Reid Scott — Metro NDP, Jack Grant — Canairrail, Vivian Rakoff — Clarke Institute Psychia-

6:15 p.m.

Join the Varsity Christian Fellowship for supper in the cafeteria, followed by a discussion on "The Student and Social Action", in Rm. 2173 New Medical Building

7 p.m.

Students for Israel Movement-Educational workshop session, in cnsis in Israel, 186 St. George St.

"Stars" — A film by David Cronenberg Toronto premiere Admission — $1. Scarborough College, Rm. H216.

7:15 p.m.

Panel discussion on Metro election. Speakers: Mayor Bill Danison, Controller Margaret Campbell, Prof. Steven, Clarkson, Watmore Hall, New College.

7:30 p.m.

Wine-making demonstration with discussion and equipment. Mr. Buzz Arthurs, GSU, 18 Bancroft Ave.

8 p.m.

The UC film society presents "Rehomon" by Kurosawa. $1 Tickets at JCR, end at the door. Mechanical Bldg.

ALL STUDENTS WHO ARE INTERESTED OR ARE IN COURSES WHICH ARE

- * INTERDISCIPLINARY
- * EXPERIMENTAL
- * AUTONOMOUS
- * DEMOCRATIC
- * UNSTRUCTURED

SID SMITH RM. 1085
THURSDAY NOVEMBER 6th, 1969 1 P.M.

To discuss setting up an Interdisciplinary Studies course union.

The Americanization of the University ...

DAN DRACHE
(CUG Research Associate)

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE CUG REPORT

Today 1 p.m.
Rm. 2102, Sidney Smith

THE CANADIAN LIBERATION MOVEMENT

Open Window
HANDICRAFTS

Reasonably priced:

- IMPORTED TOYS
- THEATRE POSTERS
- ESIKMO ART
- "IN" JEWELRY & ACCESSORIES

585 MARKHAM STREET
(Village)

Swim winner confusion

By PETULIA POTTS

Officials at the annual inter-fac swimming and diving meet last night at the Benson Building have this problem — the meet went off smoothly alright, but they can't decide who won.

Liz Daniel (III PHE) and Marnie Churchill (Scar) came so close in the synchronized events that the normal scoring system was unable to determine a clear-cut winner. But ties are supposed to be impossible!

In the synchronized strokes, Marnie took first place with 42.5 points but Liz won the figures with 38.5 to Marnie's 37.0. And then the confusion began.

One thing is certain, Denise Taylor (III PHE) definitely came third in the figures with 34.5 points and as expected PhysEd easily won the team laurels.

Apart from the tense race between Misses Daniel and Churchill, the figures competition produced by far the best swimming of the evening.

Uni-Sex Fencing in Hart House???

Wednesday night saw the meeting of the Women's and Men's Fencing Teams for the first time this year in the Fencing Gym of Hart House.

Imre Hennyey of the Olympic Team instructed among the fourteen men and seven women who worked out to the tempo of sweat and the heat of the electric foil.

This active and demanding practice was enjoyed by both sides and the Women's Fencing Team see it as a definite aid to victory in their first tournament coming up in January.

—leslie johnston

photo by don andrew

Talented gals from Trinity, SMC, Scarborough, UC, Vic, PHE and Nursing showed their stuff in the three manoeuvres chosen for the judging — back tuck somersault, dolphin and porpoise.

Nursing dropped out of the stroke competition, but representatives of the other six colleges (well, five actually plus the ever-present PhysEdders) displayed excellent form in the side stroke, front crawl and scull.

In the overall results, Anu Pettai (II PHE) and Mary Jean Nicholson (SMC) threatened to break the Daniel-Churchill monopoly on first place.

PhysEd completed a winning evening in the diving events as Linda Brain (III PHE) took the honors with 66 points and a comfortable lead over Mary Jean Nicholson (53.5).

Jan Monteith of Innis came third with 50 and Nancy Underhill (II PHE) was fourth with 44.6.

During the intervals between events, Canadian Olympic diver Beverley Boys demonstrated her specialty from the one meter board.

Thanks are due swimming curator Mabel-Anne Brown and announcer Dave Moore for a most capably-run meet.

The speed swimming stuff goes tonight at 5 in the Benson Building pool.

LOST: a Stigma Chi-dance Saturday night, a black purse. Owner says you can keep what you want but please return the purse to the receptionist in the Varsity front office.

COMMERCE Final Year Students

Today, the Chartered Accountant plays one of the most exciting roles in business management. He tackles complex and fascinating problems. For the professionally-trained man the scope is limitless.

Discuss career opportunities with Clarkson, Gordon representatives, on campus

Nov. 10, 11 & 14

Appointments should be made through the Student Placement Office. If this time is not convenient, please contact us directly: 368-2751

Clarkson, Gordon & Co. CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Halifax • Saint John • Quebec • Montreal • Ottawa • Toronto
Hamilton • Kitchener • London • Windsor • Thunder Bay • Winnipeg
Regina • Calgary • Edmonton • Vancouver • Victoria

CENTRE FOR THE STUDY OF DRAMA

presents

NEXT TIME I'LL SING TO YOU

by JAMES SAUNDERS

Nov. 3-8
at 8:30 p.m.

STUDIO THEATRE
4 Glen Morris
Admission Free

FRENCH COURSE UNION ELECTION OF EXECUTIVE

HART HOUSE MUSIC ROOM
TODAY 4 P.M.

IF YOU TAKE ONE OR MORE FRENCH COURSES, COME AND HELP US CHOOSE A RESPONSIBLE CHAIRMAN, VICE CHAIRMAN AND SECRETARY. YOU WILL ALSO HAVE A CHANCE TO DISCUSS ANY PROBLEMS YOU MAY BE HAVING WITH FRENCH COURSES AT U. OF T.

HAVE YOU TASTED
THE ZUMBURGER EXPERIENCE?
ZUMBURGER

Two groovy little restaurants
at Bloor and Yonge, and Bloor and Bay
3 new locations opening soon

S.A.C. NEEDS
UNDERGRADUATE REPRESENTATIVES FOR
COMMITTEE TO IMPLEMENT CAMPBELL REPORT
(3 TO BE APPOINTED)
SEND APPLICATIONS TO: SAC JUDICIAL COMMITTEE
SAC OFFICE
DEADLINE FRI, NOV. 7 - 5 P.M.

Hydro defuses criticism of 700-foot smokestack

Ontario Hydro yesterday successfully defended plans to build a 700-foot smokestack at its Richard L. Hearn thermal generating station on Toronto's lakefront.

The plans, announced in August, had been attacked by Pollution Probe of the University of Toronto.

But after a 90-minute meeting yesterday with Government and Hydro officials, Pollution Probe representative Paul Tomlinson conceded that Hydro had made a case for the high stack as at least a temporary solution to pollution problems in the city's east end caused by the plant.

Asked whether this attitude toward the stack had been changed, Mr. Tomlinson said: "I think it has. We were told that the levels of sulphur dioxide in the city are too high and that this will help reduce them. But it is only a temporary solution."

The meeting took place the same day Pollution Probe launched an advertising program condemning the stack under the heading: "Ontario Hydro is getting ready to give it to you from great heights." The ads called on the public to write Mr. Kerr declaring opposition to the smokestack.

Last August Ontario Hydro, which had already spent $40 million to improve air quality around its coal-fired plants, proposed construction of a 700-foot stack at its Hearn power station on the Toronto waterfront at a cost of $9 million. Hydro had posed a question to an internationally-known firm of engineering consultants: How could gas emissions of the Hearn station be reduced? The study, which examined many alternatives, recommended a high stack as the best solution available.

The stack was not offered as a 100 per cent answer. "We do not pretend it is a perfect solution—or a solution for all time," Hydro Chairman George Gathercole told a committee of Toronto City Council when explaining the plan on September 22.

After criticism by individuals and anti-pollution groups, a meeting was held October 22 in the offices of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, the Hon. George Kerr, with Government and Hydro officials, a representative of Pollution Probe, and members of other interested groups including GASP present.

Here are some of the vital FACTS of which Pollution Probe and others were apparently unaware:

- The stack will cut ground level concentrations of sulphur dioxide attributed to the Hearn station by more than 90 per cent (from 1.7 parts per million to .07). Greater dispersal is at present the only effective and practical solution.
- The stack should be built even if technological progress allows newer controls to be added later.
- Sulphur removal processes for large power plants are still in the experimental stage.

Following this week's meeting, the Pollution Probe representative, according to the Globe and Mail: "conceded that Hydro had made a case for the high stack..." Most critics concurred.

Even after the stack is built, the practice of burning very low-sulphur content coal during adverse weather conditions will be maintained. Hydro's meteorological staff forecasts pollution conditions 24 hours in advance.

But Hydro is continuing to work toward better solutions. Its own research staff leads all Canadian utilities in investigating causes, controls, and effects of emissions from coal-fired power stations. It is also cooperating with 20 American utilities in the search for an effective and practical sulphur removal process.

Engineering and technical specialists are convinced the high stack is a positive step towards better air.

As Blues prep for McGill Howie and Ed - key to a winning team

By JIM COWAN

Quick now — who's the most important person on a football team?

The coach? Quarterback? Defensive lineman? Well, maybe. But chances are the players will tell you the most important person on the team is — the trainer.

And if that's true, then the Varsity Blues are especially lucky. For they have two of the best in Howie Ringham and Fast Ed Armstrong.

Howie joined the Varsity sports organization in 1932 and, except for six years during World War II, has been tending Blues football and hockey teams since then.

Last week he sat in the small trainers' room under Varsity Stadium and, while one of the team doctors, Al Gross, injected medication into a sore elbow, talked about the changes he's seen.

"The biggest difference in the last 20 years is the equipment," Howie was saying. "And the tape. Twenty years ago we wouldn't use three rolls of tape in a season. Now we use three cases of it a week."

When a Blues player takes the field for a game this year, says Howie, he's wearing close to $200 worth of equipment.

Two major changes were made in the equipment this year. A new type of helmet was introduced for some of the players, featuring a suspension webbing instead of the older-style padded lining. But Ed Armstrong says the new helmets are finding only limited acceptance among the players.

"When they get hit on the helmet it's like an echo chamber inside," he explained. About half the Blues are using the suspension gear.

The team has also adopted a new kind of cleat, designed to cut down on ankle and knee injuries. Instead of the normal two spikes, the heel piece is a solid disc which will pull loose from the turf if the player is hit from the side.

It's been prescribed for all players who have ever had any trouble with knee injuries, and Blues this year have been remarkably free of this kind of trouble.

Other minor equipment modifications included a new reinforced chin strap and a redesigned combination elbow and forearm blocking pad.

Blues players generally can pick their own equipment; "They're the ones who have to wear it," says Fast Ed. Eric Walter, Blues classy flanker, has tried on every pair of shoulder pads in the locker room, and still hasn't found a pair he likes.

The trainers, of course, have overall responsibility for the equipment, including seeing that it gets to the out-of-town stadiums by game time. For the McGill trip, the armor will be sent down on a Friday morning train so if anything goes astray there will be time to replace the equipment before Saturday afternoon.

It should be added that the team has never arrived in another city without its gear.

The trainers arrive at the stadium about 8 a.m. on game day, and the morning is spent taping ankles and preparing the rest of the equipment. After the team lunch the taping is finished and the trainers start gathering the things needed for the game; first aid material, a special drink mix for quenching thirst, oranges, towels and so on.

In addition, an agreement among the leagues trainers requires that the home team supply the visitors with towels, oranges and water. Explains Ed, "It sure helps when you don't have to pack all that stuff down and back."

How do the players feel about the trainers? Dan McDougall, a Varsity grad of from 1949, said at Homecoming, "Howie makes me feel more at home here than anything else."

And Art Bell, who played with McDougall on the Varsity hockey squads in the late 'forties, added, "He's had a terrific influence on a lot of guys. He's much more than just a trainer."

Both trainers will have a busy time of it this weekend, with the football game in the afternoon and the hockey game against Loyola Saturday night. And then there's always the Atlantic Bowl the following weekend.

HOWIE RINGHAM
Varsity tape-man deluxe since 1932

ED ARMSTRONG
Equipment checks start at eight a.m.

GymBlues have veteran squad

When only one member from a high ranking intercollegiate team is lost at graduation, there is considerable room for optimism. And this is exactly the picture Gymnastics Team coach Julio Roncon surveys with pleasure each Tuesday and Friday these days in the Upper Gym at Hart House.

Al Forest, who turned in an excellent all-round performance in his rookie season, appears to have improved greatly over the summer. Free exercise gold-medallist of 1967-68, Carl Sloane is back after sitting out a year.

Also returning are John Kor-tricht, Phil Michaelis, Arthur Stein and Brian McVey. Add to these several promising newcomers, and the competition for spots in the OQAA championships should be the fiercest in years.

In contrast to previous seasons, there will be ample opportunity for such competition. Coach Roncon has arranged a bigger schedule of exhibition meets than ever before to help prepare the team.

Any male student interested in gymnastics is invited to participate in the workouts. They run from 5:30 to 7:30 Tuesdays and Fridays.

Two important (and costly) equipment innovations used this season by the Blues. At left, special cleats with a round nylon disc as the heel; the disc gives way on impact and has proven to reduce knee and ankle injuries by 75 per cent. At right, new suspension helmet especially designed to prevent concussions;

CUT YOUR CLEANING COSTS
by 2/3
at the
Church & Wellesley Self Serve
Dry Cleaner
OPEN EVERY DAY
Attendant on Duty
56B Church St.
924-6010

PROJECT 999

THE VARSITY, Wednesday, November 5, 1969 — Page 19

McDONALD, CURRIE & CO. CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Our representatives will be pleased to discuss your plans for a career in Chartered Accountancy during their annual recruiting visit at the University of Toronto on:

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1969
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1969
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1969

Engineering students will also be interviewed on:

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1969

There will be openings in the various offices of our Firm in the Province of Ontario and throughout the other Canadian provinces for 1970 graduates in Commerce, Science, Arts, Engineering and Law.

Please contact the Student Placement Office of the University of Toronto to arrange a convenient time for a personal interview on campus or to obtain a copy of our recruiting brochure.

If the dates of our visit do not suit your time schedule, you are invited to call Mr. John B. Cole, in our Toronto office, at 366-2551.

INTERESTED IN - - - ?

- Working in Toronto next summer
- Rowing for Argos (Winner of 6 Canadian and 3 United States Championships in 1969)

Send your name & address to:

ARGONAUT CREW
1225 Lake Shore Blvd. W., Toronto 3

HART HOUSE
UNDERWATER CLUB
PRESENTS

PHILIPPE COUSTEAU

NOV 10 HART HOUSE 8:00 PM

TICKETS $3.00 AVAILABLE AT THE FOLLOWING

SAC GRAD. OFFICES ENG STORES 928-2446

What's happening at SFU?

What's it to you?

Come to Convocation Hall
Thurs. Nov. 6 1:00 p.m.
and Find Out

Speakers:
Mordecai Briemberg
Steve Langdon

Sponsored by your friendly neighbourhood course unions

A phantasmagoria of SIFL stats

	WON	LOST	FOR	AGAINST	POINTS
McGill	5	1	173	50	10
Toronto	4	2	155	109	8
Queens	4	2	94	86	8
Western	3	3	139	110	6
Waterloo	2	4	83	137	4
McMaster	0	6	53	205	0

LEADING SCORERS		TD	FG	CON	SING.	POINTS
Dave Fleiszer	McGill	10				60
Eric Walter	Toronto	6				36
Jeff Hilton	Western	6				36
Walt Sehr	Toronto	5				30
Sal Lovecchio	McGill		3	18		2 29
Bill Stankovic	Toronto	1	2	14		26

LEADING RUSHERS		CARRIES	YARDS	TD'S	FBL'S	LONGEST
Dave Fleiszer	McGill	103	679	10	2	46
Keith Eaman	Queens	88	467	3	0	50
Jeff Hilton	Western	96	459	6	1	44
Walt Sehr	Toronto	71	416	3	3	75
Ken Aiken	McGill	90	336	3	0	25
Ron Clark	Queens	56	333	2	0	90
Bill Stankovic	Toronto	68	333	0	0	16

LEADING PASSERS		ATTEMPTS	CDMP.	YARDS	TD'S	INT.	LONGEST
Vic Alboini	Toronto	136		75	1254	9	6 85
Dave Groves	Waterloo	163		82	894	7	15 56
Steve Stefanko	Western	92		48	497	7	7 77
Bill McNeill	Queens	74		37	469	5	4 55
Al Tanner	McMaster	44		22	312	1	6 82
George Wall	McGill	54		21	228	2	5 26

LEADING RECEIVERS		COMP.	YARDS	TD'S	LONGEST
Eric Walter	Toronto	25	557	6	85
Oon Manahan	Waterloo	22	203	1	33
Walt Sehr	Toronto	19	233	2	61
Wayne Fox	Waterloo	18	227	1	33
Rick Wiedenhoft	Waterloo	16	242	3	41
Cor Doret	Toronto	15	144	2	31
Bob Baytor	McMaster	14	248	1	82
Pete Bender	McGill	13	236	2	62
John Chapman	Toronto	10	219	2	51

PUNT RETURNS		NUMBER	YARDS	AVE.	LONGEST
Chris Rumball	McGill	20	348	17.4	104
Jim Turnbull	Queens	18	285	15.8	56
Jay Graydon	McMaster	21	296	14.9	61
Gord McLellan	Waterloo	19	280	14.7	45
Keith Eaman	Queens	24	325	13.5	33
Cor Doret	Toronto	15	156	10.4	33
Pete Bender	McGill	28	279	9.9	44

KICKOFFS		KICKOFFS	YARDS	AVE.	LONGEST	KICKOFF RETURNS		NUMBER	YARDS	AVE.	LONGEST
Alec Lockington	McMaster	12	846	53.8	70	Pete Bender	McGill	2	74	37.0	49
Paul Knill	Waterloo	19	950	50.0	60	Chris Rumball	McGill	3	83	27.6	75
Chris Rumball	McGill	27	1284	47.5	55	Walt Sehr	Toronto	5	135	27.0	35
Ottavio Collisnu	Western	22	1037	47.1	68	Gord McLellan	Waterloo	6	132	22.0	35
Bill Stankovic	Toronto	20	905	45.4	55	Al Lockhart	Western	9	186	20.6	29
Jim Turnbull	Queens	18	834	35.2	59	Rick Wiedenhoft	Waterloo	5	94	18.8	27
						Jay Graydon	McMaster	11	193	17.5	28
						Cor Doret	Toronto	7	118	16.8	32

TEAM RUSHING	CARRIES	YARDS	LOSS	NET	LONG	1ST OWN	TO'S
McGill	270	1466	102	1364	102	55	16
Toronto	221	1052	117	945	75	86	7
Western	235	963	143	820	44	59	9
Queens	236	1355	173	1182	90	50	6
McMaster	208	733	183	550	32	30	2
Waterloo	200	638	94	544	40	33	2

TEAM PASSING	ATT.	COMP.	YOS	LOSS	NET	LONG	1ST DNS.	TD'S	INT.	AGST.
Toronto	154	85	1411	14	1397	85	60	13	6
Waterloo	178	85	952	7	945	56	54	7	19
Western	127	61	759	97	662	77	22	8	8
McMaster	107	47	649	1	648	82	26	2	19
McGill	88	38	484	0	484	59	20	4	5
Queens	81	38	497	17	480	55	22	5	6

WHY NOT?
BUY FROM THE CHAR-BURG
PIZZERIA
CHEAPER - BETTER
FREE DELIVERY
536-0475

WOULD YOU LIKE TO LEARN TO SAIL? INSTRUCTION FOR BEGINNERS AND NON-SAILORS WILL BE GIVEN BY THE U.T.S.C. NO ENROLLMENT FEE! NO TEXTS! LECTURES BY VICE-COMMODORE RON FACTOR. FIRST MEETING FRIDAY, 7 NOV., IN BECKERSTETH ROOM OF HART HOUSE AT 1 P.M. CO-EDUCATIONAL

VolleyBlues off to good start

The U of T volleyball team has been practicing for several weeks now and all indications point to a profitable season.

The lack of hordes of returnees is more than adequately overcome by an excellent crop of rookies. Two players from last year, Myron Krywonis and Glen MacDonald, and two from the previous year, Dave Rogers and John Patterson, make up the veteran contingent.

Among the rookies, Luby Wojtiw, George Ajax and Peter Szlapak have played Senior B ball for Plast. Alex Kovaloff, McMaster's captain last year, adds intercollegiate experience to the lineup.

Other promising newcomers include setter Garry Lee, and spikers Herb Otto, Colin Baker and Rein Saar, all of whom played in high school.

In exhibition matches so far Blues have defeated Toronto Central Y's Senior A team 6 games to 2, and downed the University Settlement team 4 games to 2. They play York University in an exhibition match today in the Hart House lower gym at 7 p.m.

Eight members of the team travelled to McMaster last Sunday for the Senior B elimination tournament. The 20 teams present were split into four divisions with the divisional winners becoming eligible for the Ontario Senior B league.

Under the influence of their hustling captain, Blues tied for first place on "matches won" in their division with Toronto Odum and London. But Blues walked off with the divisional title on the basis of the point differential, having beaten Odum 15-5 and lost 11-15. Against London they won 15-11 and lost 13-15. Other Blues victories were over Hamilton Slovaks (15-9, 15-9) and Sudbury Voyageurs, (15-7, 15-2).

Next Saturday Blues open their intercollegiate season against the University of Western Ontario, last year's eastern Canadian Intercollegiate champs, in London.

Women's hockey team starts workouts

Sixteen perspiring hopefuls were on hand Tuesday morning as the women's intercollegiate hockey team began workouts for the '69-70 season.

Most players are in excellent condition for this early in the campaign, but as available ice time is very limited, strenuous practices will be the order of the day.

At present, qualified players in the interfaculty league may practice with the intercollegiate team until the final declaration of eligibility is made in late January. W.A.A. officials also indicate that girls may play in the intercollegiate exhibition games without forfeiting their interfac status.

Most pressing needs for the hockeyfemmes are experienced goals (even of the field hockey variety) and a manager.

Any girls interested in playing (especially goal) or managing can obtain further information at the WAB or from Carol Cooper in The Varsity advertising office, 91 St. George, phone 923-8171.

Next practice is 8 am Tuesday; be at Varsity Arena by 7:45.

Rowers place 2nd in OQAA regatta

photo by Al Hegern

Varsity's victorious lightweight crew — Brian McFarlane (bow), John Clark, Craig Appleyard, Jim Dobbin, Terje Skrien, Bill Allison, Paul Raney, Garry Groham (stroke) and Pat Goodwin (cox).

By PAUL RANEY
Rowing Captain

Although rain and high winds made conditions miserable, the rowing Blues wound up their season on Saturday with a fine showing in St. Catharines as Toronto came second in total points for the Ontario Quebec Athletic Assn. trophy, behind a strong contingent from Western.

The Varsity Lightweights retained possession of the Silver Challenge Trophy for another year by easily defeating crews from Western and McMaster. The whole crew suffered from starvation for a week to get down to the required 155 lb. weight limit, but this didn't affect their ability to walk all over the opposition.

Rowing down the 2000 metre course at a steady thirty-two strokes per minute, Toronto outdistanced London, its closest rival, by three lengths.

In the featured Sr. Varsity event, Toronto came within inches of defeating a much bigger crew from Western. After an exhausting 1800 metres of racing, and less than a quarter-length separating the two, Toronto sprinted and began to close the gap.

Right at this critical moment, one of the U of T oarsmen decided that he would rather swim across the finish line than row. With just twenty strokes left in the race, he caught a bad crab (failed to clear the water with his oar on the recovery stroke) and was thrown right out of the boat.

Western moved out in front again, and went over the finish line first. Toronto, now with only seven men, limped across in second place, still ahead of Brock (by three lengths) and McMaster (on the horizon!!).

Equipment difficulties began to plague the Freshman crew even before they began their race. When they were carrying their boat down to the dock, they accidentally punched a small hole in its hull when they bumped a fence.

This was temporarily patched up and the Freshmen rowed up and started their race. Only 500 metres from the finish line, they had control of third place and were threatening to move up into second when one of the crew broke his slide. Consequently, they finished the race a lot farther back than they would have if they had had better luck with their equipment.

Our Jr. Varsity oarsmen rowed a great race but they were held to a third place finish by two excellent crews from Western.

We went through the 1969 rowing season with only twenty-eight oarsmen, although twice that number would have been preferable. I think everybody did his best this year, and I hope that next fall U of T will be able to come up with a lot more men of as high a calibre.

STUDENT HOCKEY TICKETS

The best buy on the campus - 11 home games $3.00

(27.3¢ per game)

VARSITY ARENA - 1969-70 SCHEDULE

Nov. 14	Laurentian	Jan. 16	Guelph
Nov. 19	York	Jan. 21	Windsor
Nov. 28	Western	Jan. 30	Loyola
Dec. 3	Guelph	Feb. 4	Waterloo
Dec. 12	McMaster	Feb. 6	Western
		Feb. 13	Windsor

Tickets will be sold at VARSITY STADIUM, Devonshire Place

TODAY - ALLOTMENT SALE AT GATES 3, 5 & 8 FROM 10:00 A.M. - 6:00 P.M.

Tickets have been allotted to all colleges and faculties according to registration. One guest book may be purchased per A. T. L. card and not more than three cards may be presented by one student. Students must ascertain at which of the three wickets the tickets for their own faculty are being sold. Signs are posted at each wicket.

TOMORROW (Thursday) - GATE 8, 10:00 A.M.

Any tickets left over from the allotment sale will be sold on a first come first served basis.

McGILL with the BLUES

FOR A GOOD OLD-FASHIONED
"mcgill weekend"

BUSES: LEAVE CONVOCAATION HALL
FRIDAY NOV. 7 5:30 PM
LEAVE MOUNT ROYAL HOTEL MONTREAL
SUNDAY NOV. 9 2:30 PM

washroom equipped air conditioned
reversible chairs
card tables

TICKETS RETURN $17.50 S.A.C. OFFICE ENGINEERING STORES

P.S.
FOOTBALL GAME TORONTO VRS. MCGILL
SATURDAY NOV. 8 AT 2:00 PM

"you meet the nicest people on the mcgill weekend"

GSU

FRIDAY NIGHT DANCE

NOVEMBER 7th
9:00 p.m.

Music by The Undergrads

Admission: $1 ladies Bar &
$1.25 gents Band

16 Bancroft Ave. (928-2391)

Waterpolo squad beats Queens

The Varsity Waterpolo squad avenged the football loss by defeating Queens 11-4 at Hart House on Saturday.

The Blues broke into the lead with two quick goals in the first minute of the game and never looked back. They built up a 5-1 half time lead using strong swimming and good backchecking.

Coach Kirk Thompson was happier with the team performance; "the team is starting to jell and play like a team both offensively and defensively but still has to concentrate on better ball control". The Blues play patterns were still breaking down and somewhat erratic. It could have spelled trouble against a stronger squad.

The Blues tried a zone defence in the third quarter but it wasn't too successful as Queens broke through it for 2 goals. Toronto quickly slipped back into a man on man coverage and shut off the Queens attack.

The Blues better endurance and condition was evident here as the players were consistently able to break away from their checks and move in on net.

Alex LeRoy played a strong game for Toronto and was their top scorer with 4 goals. Lyle Maroski scored 2 goals. Other Blue scorers were Terry Bryant, Hunter Milbourne, Mike Guinness, Peter Petzold and Derek Duvall. Tap Aavasmalmi played a strong game in the Varsity nets. He was cutting down the angles very well and made some fine stops.

Last Sunday the Blues split 2 games in Hamilton. They defeated a Hamilton team in a 3-2 squeaker and lost to McMaster 9-7. Although the Blues complete team was not there they will have to work harder if they hope to knock off Mac in the upcoming game Nov. 19 in Waterloo.

The Blues next 5 games are away and the next home game will be Fri. Nov. 28, 7:00 p.m. at Hart House when they host McGill.

Interfac hockey starts today

By UNCLE CHARLIE

The 5,278th annual season of interfaculty hockey begins this afternoon at 12:30 with an exhibition of skill, strength, science, and shinny tween Trinity A and Vic I (boo, hiss!).

The interfac computer tells us there will be 26 teams in the interfaculty league plus another 56 (give or take a dozen) in the Intermediate League. Then there's III Civil B, but that's another story.

In other games today, there's a double double-header beginning at seven chimes, viz. . . Architecture and Innis I, defending champs Dents A vs Erindale, dirty old St. Mikes A vs Law I, and the grand finale, Devonshire House and Forestry A.

There's also a dead guppy in the freezing system, but that's another story.

Chartered Accountancy The Look of Leadership!

The qualities of leadership show up in men who have chosen Chartered Accountancy as their profession, since those who are resourceful, have a keen analytical sense, enjoy meeting and working with people and can stand strong on their convictions, are the business leaders of to-day. As a Chartered Accountant you may apply your talents in a public accounting practice, in industry, education, or government. Each avenue provides rich rewards for the diligent, for the Chartered Accountant is a key-man in to-day's business and financial world.

Among the many firms of Chartered Accountants who employ CA students are those participating in this advertisement. These firms and others are interviewing on your campus. The names of most local CA firms are listed in your yellow pages under the heading, Accountants — Public.

Clarkson, Gordon & Co.
Offices across Canada

Deloitte, Plender, Haskins & Sells
Offices throughout Canada and associated firms throughout the world

Gray, Butcher Frost & Company
Member Mann Judd International Group

McDonald, Currie & Co.
Offices in Toronto and other principal cities throughout Canada

Price Waterhouse & Co.
All Canadian offices

Snyder, Craig & Co.
330 Bay Street, Toronto 105, Ontario
Telephone 366-9444

Thorne, Gunn, Helliwell & Christenson
Recruiting students for our offices in all major Canadian cities

Cossar, Hector, Payne & Co.
Toronto and Newmarket

Ernst & Ernst
Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver

Laventhol Krekstein Horwath & Horwath
Located in Toronto and Montreal

Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.
Openings in 20 offices from coast to coast in Canada

Riddell, Stead & Co., Chartered Accountants,
15 offices in Canada

Starkman, Kraft, Rothman, Berger & Grill
Suite 601-3101 Bathurst Street, Toronto 19,
Telephone 782-1155

G. H. Ward & Partners
Twenty offices in Ontario

Winspear, Higgins, Stevenson & Doane
Placements available in 1970 at over 40 offices across Canada. 36 Toronto Street, Toronto

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
Nov. 10 - Dec. 5

Check with placement office for specific requirements of each firm.

Whether you have decided on your future or not, this is an excellent opportunity to find out more about Chartered Accountancy as a career. Visit the on-campus recruiters, a local firm of CA's, ask your placement officer, or write directly to:

The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario,
69 Bloor Street East, Toronto, Ont.

NOBODY KNOWS EVERYTHING

But you'll know much more if and when you "plug into" the library orientation program. Tapes and slides giving a general introduction, card catalogue advice and a few clues about the stocks are available for viewing at both main entrances to the University of Toronto

LIBRARY

Blues must win individual battles

photo by spencer higgins

Here's why punt returns turn old and grey so quickly. McGill's Ed Clemond (25) is battered by three Blues, Jim Bennett (41), Bob Bloxham (54) and Cor Doret (34) while Peter Raham (22) moves in to add his shot for good measure. Redman flanker Pete Bender (24) can only watch and pray.

By PAUL CARSON

Football, says the rule book, is a team game and games are usually won or lost depending on how well the players interact as a team.

Football is also an individual game, as two opposing players match their particular abilities in a series of head-on battles. In fact, each play is nothing more than a co-ordinated pattern of twelve player-against-player struggles. The team that wins the majority of these individual combats wins the game.

Saturday's showdown in Montreal should feature several important one-on-one matchups, and if Blues win them, the Yates Cup returns to Hart House.

Varsity's defensive line of Alex Squires, Jim Bennett, Bill McNamara and Bart D-Onofrio has been outweighed by the opposition offensive line in every game this season.

However, against McGill they will have a slight edge, averaging 222 pounds against an expected 213 lbs. depending on last minute changes by either Murph or McGill coach Tom Mooney.

However, McGill's interior line — Jay Harris at center, Gerry Goulet and Mike Evans at Guards, Bob Taylor and Bob Bell at tackles — is exceptionally fast moving off the snap and will be trying to repeat the successful double-teaming of Blues ends that Queens accomplished last Saturday.

Blues secondary, especially Paul McKay, Ian Kirkpatrick, and Pete Lamantia, will have to provide effective coverage of McGill's trio of capable receivers, Pete Bender, Pat Rahming and Sal Lovecchio.

McGill can be expected to double-team Varsity's chief pass threat, flanker Eric Walter, but this should provide more operating room for Blues ends John Chapman and Mark Slater.

FUMBLERS	NUMBER	YARDS LOST	BALL LOST	PENALTIES AGAINST	NUMBER	YARDS LOST
Queens	5	0	4	Queens	43	492
Western	13	44	10	Western	44	426
McGill	15	118	7	McGill	36	418
McMaster	17	116	9	Toronto	37	403
Waterloo	20	60	7	McMaster	34	381
Toronto	22	35	15	Waterloo	32	298

Don't forget the EngSoc Buses to McGill; Leave Friday, return Sunday; cost only $17.50 details SAC Office or Engineering Stores.

Can't you see what's happening?

If you can't, you need glasses. Ask. Why peer out at a dim world? Go get your eyes tested, then come and see us at Braddock Optical. We've got the greatest selection of fashion frames you'll ever look through. And as a student you get 20% off. We've got 11 branches, the nearest is just round the corner at 158 St. George. Come and see.

SPORTS SCHEDULES - WEEK OF NOV. 10th

FOOTBALL (Balance of League Schedule)

Mon Nov 10	3 00	East	Oent	vs	Mod.
	3 00	West	PHE	vs	St M
Tues Nov 11	3 00	East	For	vs	New
	3 00	West	Eng	vs	Vic
Wed Nov 12	3 00	at Scar	U.C.	vs	Scar
	3 00	East	Pharm	vs	Tnn

RUGGER (Balance of League Schedule)

Mon. Nov 10	1 15	East	St M	vs	Eng II	Ledson
	1 15	West	Trn B	vs	Wyc	Salt
Tues Nov 12	1 15	East	Vic.	vs	Eng I	Cairns
	1 15	West	Innis	vs	Emman	Kivlichan
Wed Nov 13	1 15	East	PHE	vs	Tnn A	Tnmer

SOCCER (Balance of League Schedule)

Mon. Nov 10	12 15	North	Grad A	vs	U C	Bogucki
	3 15	North	Innis	vs	Knox	Astaphen
Tues Nov 11	12 15	North	Tnn A	vs	Sr Eng	Zakaluzny
	3 15	North	St.M 8	vs	Med B	Verhulst
Wed Nov 12	12 15	North	Dent	vs	New	Bogucki
	3 15	North	Emman	vs	Grad B	Homatidis
Thur Nov 13	12 15	North	For	vs	Jr Eng	Kalman
	12 15	Trn	Arch	vs	Tnn B	Punter
	3 15	North	PHE	vs	Med A	Zakaluzny
Fri Nov 14	12 15	North	Vic.	vs	St M A	Kalman
	3 15	North	Scar	vs	Law	Astaphan

LACROSSE

Mon. Nov 10	1 00	For B	vs	Tnn	Okhiro, Stephen
Tues Nov 11	1 00	Eng II	vs	Knox	Crocker, Feaver
	6 30	PHE, A	vs	Vic	Okhiro, MacKay
	7 30	Dev Hse	vs	Innis	Murphy, Hanna
	8 30	PHE, C	vs	Dent	Murphy, Hanna
Wed Nov 12	1 00	For A	vs	Eng I	Feaver, Clert
Thur Nov 13	6 30	St M	vs	Ern	MacKay, Karr

HOCKEY

Mon. Nov 10	12 30	Eng I	vs	Trn B
	1 30	St.M C	vs	Vic.III
	7 00	Arch	vs	Pharm A
	8 15	Oent. A	vs	Scar
	9 30	Oent. B	vs	Med B
	10 30	Eng 3	vs	Vic. IV
Tues No. 11	1 30	Law II	vs	PHE B
	7 00	Innis I	vs	U. C. II
	8 15	New I	vs	Knox
	9 30	Bus II	vs	Emman
	10 30	Eng 5	vs	Vic V
Wed Nov 12	12 30	St Eng	vs	Trn A
	1 30	Innis II	vs	Vic VI
	7 00	Jr. Eng	vs	For A
	8 15	Med A	vs	Ern
	9 30	Oent O	vs	Pharm B
	10 30	For B	vs	St.M O
Thur Nov 13	12 30	St M 8	vs	Bus I
	7 00	Law I	vs	PHE A
	8 15	Vic.II	vs	Oev Hse
	9 30	Law.III	vs	Eng 4
	10 30	Wyc	vs	Eng 6
Fri Nov 14	12 30	St M A	vs	Vic I
	1 30	Tnn. C	vs	Vic. VIII
	5 00	Music	vs	Eng 8

VOLLEYBALL

Tues. Nov 11	7 30	Med	vs	For A	Senkw
	8 30	Pharm	vs	U C	Senkw
Wed Nov 12	5 00	Vic	vs	Trn	Bodnaruk
	6 00	Eng I	vs	Inns.	Bodnaruk
	7 00	St M	vs	Erin	Gesing
	8 00	Knox	vs	For B	Gesing
	9 00	Dent B	vs	Arch	Gesing
Thur Nov 13	1 00	PHE	vs	Eng II	Senkw
	7 00	Emmen	vs	Dent C	Orav
	8 00	Dent A	vs	Scar	Orav
	9 00	Bus	vs	New	Orav

VARSITY AT MCGILL

Montreal Week-end — Saturday, Nov. 8
The big game of the year

BIG BLUES BLUE & WHITE BAND YATES CUP

Engineering Society will run buses leaving Convocation Hall Friday at 5:30 p.m. returning Sunday 2:30 p.m. from Sheraton-Mt. Royal Hotel.

Round Trip $17.50

Bus tickets on sale at Engineering Stores & S.A.C. Office

Game tickets $1.50 (reserved) on sale at Athletic Office, Hart House & Engineering Stores

Hockey Blues at Loyola Arena Saturday Night.
Limited number of tickets available at Athletic Office.

varsity

VOLUME 90 — NO. 20
November 7, 1969 TORONTO

SAC passes CUPE contract: Engineers may quit

By PAUL CARSON

The Students Administrative Council has finally passed the controversial union contract involving its 15 permanent non-student employees, bringing on an immediate threat of secession by the Engineering Faculty.

In a long general meeting at Scarborough College Wednesday evening SAC approved the contract establishing office democracy for the SAC staff by a vote of 27-2, with two abstentions.

As soon as the vote was announced, Engineering rep. Eric Miglan (II APSC) presented council with a 2,300 name petition requesting SAC to call a campus-wide referendum on any union contract the council might approve.

The petition was assembled during September and early October.

REFUSE PETITION

After a fierce debate a majority of council voted not to accept the petition, and instructed the SAC signing officers to sign the contract as soon as possible.

SAC president Gus Abols who was not present has indicated he may refuse to sign the contract, but council authorized external affairs commissioner Mike Simon (III Scar) to sign as Abols' replacement.

Miglan's motion to hold a referendum immediately was defeated 22-8.

He at once issued a thinly-veiled threat that the Faculty of Engineering might withdraw from SAC "due to our serious lack of confidence in this body."

"You have negated the wishes of 2,300 students," Miglan told the members. "I can assure you my fellow engineers will be very unhappy when they hear what you have done."

During the heated debate on the petition/referendum, Tony Usher (III UC) argued that the contract petition is against the spirit of the referendum section of the SAC constitution.

OPINION HEARD

"The circumstances were totally different when these signatures were collected," Usher said. "Student opinion has been heard, the union local was willing to compromise, and students participated in the negotiations."

"They wouldn't get the signatures now, except from die-hard anti-union students."

The petition was first presented to SAC on Oct. 8 by Law rep Bob Vernon. At that time, it was tabled and the contract was sent back for re-negotiation.

Vernon presented five pages of suggested amendments, and some — but not all — are included in the 41 amendments agreed to by the SAC and union negotiating teams.

Vernon missed Wednesday's contract discussion. He was away — playing goal for Law in an interfac hockey game at Varsity Arena.

When he returned to the meeting, Vernon termed the SAC decision "stupid" and "foolish."

"SAC simply can't vote to ignore a legally, properly prepared petition no matter what they think personally about the particular issue in dispute," Vernon said.

SEVERAL MAY LEAVE

Vernon indicated pleasure at possible withdrawal of Engineering, and suggested several other professional faculties would follow suit.

"Let's face it," he said, "in its present structure, SAC is almost farcical. My conception of the role of student government and that of SAC vice-president Bob Barkwell (III Meds) are totally irreconcilable."

Vernon wants a complete and comprehensive campus debate on the aims and philosophy of SAC.

Wednesday night, he indicated destroying the present SAC organization by the withdrawal of several large faculties might be a means of forcing this debate to a head.

Several other SAC members saw the petition as purely a political tactic designed to force left-wing members of SAC to resign or face impeachment.

RED HERRING

"The referendum is a red-herring; the opponents of the contract had their chance to get the changes they want... if my constituents don't like what I'm saying, they can impeach me," said Vic rep Ken McEvoy (III Vic).

The debate was a clear struggle between a legalistic interpretation of the SAC constitution and a more fluid analysis of SAC's right to base a decision on its understanding of the "spirit of the laws."

In a moving and persuasive speech, SAC vice-president Bob Barkwell (III Meds) argued the petition was totally against the spirit of SAC's constitution and traditions.

"This decision doesn't affect all 2,300 students on this campus — just the 15 people who work for SAC."

"This is a 44-page contract with five pages of amendments; the CUS referendum shows that there is no way the real issues would be intelligently discussed in any referendum campaign."

OFFICE DEMOCRACY

Barkwell had previously stated he would not "continue to serve on a council that refuses to recognize office democracy."

Miglan, Jon Levin (III UC) and SMC rep Anne Maurer (III SMC) argued that SAC must accept the petition and arrange for a referendum even if most SAC members were opposed.

"We must uphold the constitution, as breaking it now could screw us in a different situation in the future," Miss Maurer said.

In a tense, emotional speech Garret Van Geijn (II APSC) broke with his fellow Skule reps and opposed the referendum.

Choosing his words carefully, Van Geijn said, "this issue of the rights of our workers is more important than the referendum provisions."

FATE OF SAC

He abstained on the vote. The agonizing possibility of the Engineering withdrawal, plus other anticipated withdrawals at Scarborough, Erindale and the School of Business, dominated the later discussion on the fate of the Committee to Examine the Structure of SAC (CESSAC).

After a confused, frantic debate, council defeated a motion

continued on p. 3

Students lose as strike ends at SFU

The five-week-old strike in the Political Science, Sociology and Anthropology Department at Simon Fraser University ended quietly two days ago after students voted to return to their classes.

There's just one small complication. Students don't have any classes to return to.

Those students who didn't support the strike were forced to change courses so the original courses no longer exist. The striking students will get no credits for the courses they originally registered in.

Despite the end of the strike, Mordecai Briemberg, deposed departmental head of the PSA, spoke at Convocation Hall yesterday.

Briemberg said Simon Fraser was not a progressive University. "The only reason to come would be to join in the struggle," he said.

Briemberg said the SFU strike demonstrates the ineffectiveness of using "normal channels". Many students have lost their courses to no avail and a number of faculty members are suspended or being phased out, he said.

Photo by Henry J
Mordecai Briemberg, elected head of SFU's PSA department later fired by the administration, spoke of Convocation Hall.

YAVNEH PUBLIC LECTURE

Rabbi I. Witty
director of the Board of Jewish Education will speak on

'INTERMARRIAGE and YOU'

Sat. Eve. Nov. 8, 1969, 8:15 P.M. at the

SHAAREI SHOMAYIM SYNAGOGUE
470 Glencairn Ave.

Hillel Presents RABBI ABEL RESPES

on
"BLACK JEWS IN AMERICA"

Sunday, November 9th
8:30 p.m. YM-YWHA,
750 Spadina Ave.

NEW COLLEGE MOTION PICTURE SOCIETY
presents:

SUNDAY NITE at the MOVIES

Paramount Pictures Presents
Mia Farrow
In a William Castle Production
Rosemary's Baby

also starring
John Cassavetes

TWO SHOWINGS ONLY!

6:30 & 9:00 P.M.

SUNDAY

NEW COLLEGE (WETMORE) DINING HALL
(NEXT WEEK . . . "TOM JONES")

ADMISSION $1

The City's Oldest Surviving Church

LITTLE TRINITY

424 King St. E. near Parliament

NOBODY KNOWS EVERY THING

But you'll know much more if and when you "plug in-to" the library orientation program. Tapes and slides giving a general introduction, card catalogue advice and a few clues about the stocks are available for viewing at both main entrances to the University of Toronto

LIBRARY

TRINITY UNITED

427 Bloor St. West at Walmes Rd.

Minister:
Rev. J. Robert West,
B.A., B.D.

Organist John W. Linn

11 A.M.

"COUNTER-OFFENSIVE"

TRINITY YOUNG ADULTS
Miss Doris Thompson, of North York BOARD OF EDUCATION, Will Speak of Her Work With CHILDREN Having LEARNING DISABILITIES.

Students Welcome
at all Services

WHY NOT? BUY FROM THE CHAR-BURG PIZZERIA

CHEAPER - BETTER
FREE DELIVERY
536-0475

Bloor Street BLOOR AT HURON

MINISTERS:
THE VERY REV. DR. E. HOWSE
REV. DAVID R. ALLAN
THE REV. DONALD GILLIES
MINISTER OF MUSIC
10 A.M.
SUNDAY SEMINAR
11 A.M.
DIVIDENDS OF PEACE
DR. E. M. HOWSE
7 P.M.
HAYDN'S GREAT ORGAN
MASS WITH CHOIR, SOLISTS AND ORCHESTRA
NURSERY CARE DURING MORNINGS SERVICE

CHEVRON STANDARD LIMITED

Calgary, Alberta

offering careers in

PETROLEUM EXPLORATION

will conduct campus interviews on November 10 for

POST GRADUATES - GRADUATES

- UNDERGRADUATES

IN

Honours Geological

- Summer employment only.

Geological Engineering

- Summer employment only.

Physics and Geology

- Summer employment in geology and geophysics.

Geophysics (All Options)

- Summer employment in geophysics.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR PERSONAL
INTERVIEWS MAY BE MADE
THROUGH THE UNIVERSITY'S PLACEMENT OFFICE

581 Spadina Avenue, (Corner Willcocks)

U.C. Player's Guild presents

THANATOS

AN EVENING OF READINGS ON THE SUBJECT OF DEATH

NOV. 12 & 13 - 8:30

WEST MALL

ADMISSION FREE

PUBLIC LECTURE AT BETH TZEDEC

"CHRISTIANS AND MOSLEMS IN ISRAEL-HOLY PLACES, RELIGIOUS RIGHTS"

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10th

9:00 P.M.

DR. MERON MEDZINI of Jerusalem

Director, Israel Government Press Office

Hear the Whole Truth about the Al Akso Mosque as Revealed at the Trial

ADMISSION FREE • PUBLIC CORDIALLY INVITED

1700 BATHURST ST. AT WARWICK

GSU

FRIDAY NIGHT DANCE

NOVEMBER 7th

9:00 p.m.

Music by The Undergrads

Admission: $1 ladies

Bar &

$1.25 gents

Band

16 Bancroft Ave. (928-2391)

Scarborough council plans to hold referendum on SAC

By TREVOR SPURR

With a ripple of nervous laughter SAC Wednesday night accepted "with regret" the resignation of Alan Broad, a SAC representative for Scarborough College. The rest of Scarborough College may not be far behind.

In his letter of resignation Broad attacked SAC for being "unrepresentative and unheeded of the majority of students at the University of Toronto".

"The elitist executive has been less than sympathetic to the plight of students at Scarborough College," he said.

In a later interview, Broad, wearing a Scarborough Liberation Front button, said his feelings about SAC were the same as the majority of his fellow students.

"To say you are a Scarborough SAC rep here (at Scarborough) means nothing. It is irrelevant. Students here don't know the difference between SAC and the college students council," he said.

Broad said the Scarborough College Students Council, must provide services to its students that SAC provides for students on the downtown campus.

NO RETURN

"We pay $12 to SAC and get almost nothing for it. For example, the commissioners of SAC never come out here unless we ask them," he said.

"We would appreciate getting back this money and running our own services," he added.

"As things now stand the SCSC anticipates a deficit of at least $7500 and it could be as much as $20,000," Broad said. He is treasurer of the SCSC.

Broad said the college council last Thursday night voted to initiate withdrawal procedures from SAC. It would require a referendum for the break to be accomplished.

He said the council would campaign to withdraw from SAC, and predicted near unanimous support for the decision.

"The overwhelming feeling is the college should withdraw from SAC but retain some link with the downtown campus," he said.

SOME SERVICES

"Even if we do pull out of SAC however, we don't want to break the ties completely. It still provides some services of use to us," Broad added.

"It's just that we consider ourselves as a separate campus and we want to be thought of that way by SAC," he said.

Two weeks ago SAC set up a committee to study the relationship between the St. George campus and Scarborough and Erindale. It has not yet held a meeting.

Alan Broad, Scarborough SAC rep, resigned from SAC at the meeting Wednesday evening. photo by John C. Benson

The other active Scarborough member of SAC, External Affairs Commissioner Mike Simon, has indicated he is also considering resigning from SAC.

History dept. may abolish third year seminars

By DAVID FRANK

The history department is in a small uproar over a proposal to abolish all third year history seminar courses.

The recommendation, prepared last week by the department's curriculum committee, comes as a surprise to most students and faculty.

It is likely to prompt a mass turnout at a department meeting this afternoon where the proposal will be considered.

Members of the curriculum committee say their suggestion advocates a "re-allocation of teaching resources" in the department.

The committee wants to replace the mandatory two-hour weekly seminar courses, in which enrolment is limited to 12 students, by lecture-group courses with a limit of 24 students.

These proposed small lecture-group courses would offer one lecture and one tutorial, each of an hour, each week.

Academic secretary Prof. R. J. Helmstadter says the committee is "very unhappy" about making the proposal, but that it is the only solution to increasing pressure on the department's manpower.

He says ending the distinction between general and honor students, which the department implemented this year, has meant operating "over-capacity" in many courses.

The New Program next year will require students in third year to take five courses instead of the four the History Department now requires. This is also likely to increase enrolment pressure, Prof. Helmstadter says.

ENROLMENT SQUEEZE

Student members of the curriculum committee (composed of six students and six faculty) also find themselves convinced by the "enrolment squeeze" argument.

"If we keep the seminars," says Craig Heron, "there will have to be huge lecture courses alongside them. The medium-size courses with 30 to 40 students will swell to great sizes."

"At the same time we're really worried that some third year students will end up with an all-lecture timetable," he said. At present many third year lecture courses have no tutorials at all.

When the seminars met this week, he says, almost everyone in them opposed the proposed change.

The student representatives on the curriculum committee say the reasoning behind the change is that "third year seminars both consume large chunks of staff teaching hours and, according to several members of the Department, have not been too successful as teaching and learning formats."

Two professors are reported to have urged ending the seminars because "third year students are not ready" for them.

RESOURCE PROBLEM

This, says Heron, is "not representative" of the committee's opinion. Prof. Helmstadter says the proposal is concerned solely with the "problem of resources."

He says it is doubtful any alternate proposal can be brought forward. Only an increased budget to hire more staff would be the answer, he says.

"It is almost unpredictable what will happen at today's meeting," says Heron. "It may happen that the matter is thrown back to the committee."

Students have 14 votes on the department meeting, of which all faculty all full members.

Meetings were made open to all students only two weeks ago and Heron hopes to see students pack the "super-sedate Senate chamber" at Simcoe Hall for today's 4 p.m. meeting.

Council then decided to "forget" about the defeated motion and agreed to do some more thinking about philosophy and structural changes.

But everybody was thinking about the Eric Miglan and his constituency of "unhappy engineers".

Three students are still needed to fill positions on a SAC committee to consider implementation of the Campell Report.

The committee will consist of one graduate student, one part-time student, five appointed teaching staff and three undergraduate students.

So far there has been no response to an ad run in the last two Varsitys.

Applications go to the SAC Judicial Committee at SAC office. The deadline is 5 p.m. today.

We feel that aimless, exploratory browsing might be a good thing sometimes, so the next time you feel like getting unwired from the "accumulation of scholarly facts" circuit come on in to the University Bookroom and make a different voyage in the same direction. Trip out in our quaint & curious volumes of forgotten lore.

BOOKS

UNIVERSITY BOOKROOM

SAC

cont'd from page 1

tion to expand the composition and mandate of CESSAC into a comprehensive examination of the basic philosophy, representative structure and operating policies of student government at U of T.

"I really don't think you people fully understand the importance of what's going on here," the exasperated CESSAC chairman, Mike Marino (H SMC) told the meeting.

"Just sitting at this goddamn meeting is enough to turn somebody off SAC for the rest of their lives," blurted Mike Simon.

"Let's not just talk about democracy; let's actually institute it, for Christ's sake. — Chris Szolwinski at the SAC debate on the union contract."

SAC observed democracy

"You have negated the wishes of 2,300 students."

Engineering representative Eric Miglan was telling the Students Administrative Council that it had committed political suicide.

He might be right. But SAC made a moral, democratic, and politically-principled decision Wednesday night when it passed the contract to unionize the SAC bureaucracy and refused to hold a referendum on the question despite a petition signed by 2,300 students.

Over 2,000 students demand a referendum on any motion passed or failed by SAC, the council's constitution states it must hold that referendum.

Wednesday night the council did injustice to a clause in a constitution, and risked future withdrawals from the professional faculties, but it maintained the political principle of democracy.

Democracy is the right of people to control decisions which affect their lives.

The contract with the Canadian Union of Public Employees gives the SAC office workers of office democracy, job security, and bargaining rights. That contract affects their lives.

It does not affect the lives of the 2,300 students who signed the petition to hold a referendum on the issue.

It would have been patently absurd to allow the thousands of students at the U of T to decide whether 15-17 office workers may organize themselves. The referendum would have obeyed the letter but defied the spirit of the constitution.

Such a referendum would make the CUS referendum look like the election for the U.S. Presidency.

Few students would be interested in the matter, and fewer would take the trouble to read and comprehend the 44-page contract with its five pages of amendments.

Another referendum would make the council look like nothing more than an institutionalized ballot box.

SAC Law rep Bob Vernon, who organized the petition in September, was acting as the vocal front-man for Communications Commissioner Jon Levin (III UC) and SAC President Gus Abols.

And to them the contract petition was a tactic to embarrass the SAC "left" or force the SAC "left" to veto the petition and charge them with being unrepresentative of student interests.

Very clever.

The second tack worked. And now they made the charge and are waiting for the withdrawals and impeachments.

But what will they do then, once the left is gone.

the varsity
TORONTO

Editor: Brian Johnson
Review Editor: Larry Marvin
Associate Review Editor: Jack McCarthy
News Editors: Jim Cowan, Geoff Meege, Louis Etichman, Noel Stachley, Mary Kate Rowan, Paul Gannon 923-4053
City Editors: Dave Frank, Barbara Bacherman
Features Editor: Sue Reader
Sports Editor: Mark Rubin
Design: Helmut Edelbal, Carol Cooper 923-9121
CMP Editor: 91 St. George 2nd Floor
Photo Editor: 923-9142
Executive Assistant: 91 St. George 1st Floor
Advertising Manager: 91 St. George 1st Floor
Editorial Offices: 91 St. George 1st Floor
Advertising Office: 91 St. George 1st Floor

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1860 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

Thursday is never as good as Tuesday since hall as many do... Jim soon ellen sleep leaning back to yell at Brian but dove and barb kept it by the window spencer don and gurd put a curson paul hoh... eventually though the entire moon turned up at Louis and Larry and Laura saved the scene as meggs and others weren't... it seems as if the night is done and now is time for sun

LETTERS

lawrence bedder and the moustache-puller's thumb

Sir,
In response to the derprecating report of the SAC Exec meeting by your Jane Hollingworth, I insist that Barkwell's Dissertation on a moustache-puller's thumb and forefinger syndrome is typical of the serious attitude with which SAC exec takes its job. Since I am not politically left enough, or indecent enough, SAC can't find a way to support me, or any candidate in U of T's home ward, ward 6, although they do find themselves behooven to support John Sewell, by virtue of his having worked on Trefann Court, (running in ward 7) and to also spend money on Noreen Gaudette, also running in ward 7, by virtue of her being a mother of several, and also being a welfare recipient.

If SAC supports any candidates, anywhere, it should support some in wards 6 and 5, where U of T and its students live and study.

I do have a platform. It was interpreted as a nonplatform by SAC, and by Miss Hollingworth, perhaps because it made sense, and also, because perhaps it was worthwhile. SAC, and The Varsity can't see fit to support such worthwhile and beneficial projects as Pollution Probe, although SAC can pay a bunch of commy-racists in Montreal who support those who burn, loot, and pillage. I have no faith in SAC. I do have faith in the students of U of T, because I know that SAC was elected by that vocal minority on campus, and the majority don't hold the views (however bigoted) of those who are on SAC.

Up the People!
Peace and Love,

Lawrence M. Bedder
(Ed. — Pollution Probe was started as a result of Varsity features on pollution last spring. Also see the comment article below by Pollution Probe member Martin Daly.)

admissions hoax

Sir:
Re: Massey College Cafeteria
Who was the asshole...?
Yours truly,
Miss J. Taylor
Office of Admissions, Simcoe Hall

fiddler and the kandy council

Sir,
I am writing this letter to clarify some items that were attributed to me in the article "New students consider council trivial, distant". In regards to the quotation "We have $14,000 to play around with and all day we sit in this office making a mess," I was misquoted.

What happened was that I was asked what the students think of the Student Council and I replied that some students consider the NCSC as a group that plays around with $14,000 and does nothing but sit in an office making a mess drinking pop and eating candy. I would like to make it clear that at no time did I say that this was my opinion of the New College Student Council.

Jon Fidler,
President, NCSC.

The Varsity is producing a community issue for the Kensington area. We will be concentrating on issues such as the Spadina Expressway. If you are interested in participating — whether you're a Varsity staffer, a Review staffer, or just anyone — come to the Varsity office today at 1 p.m.

Ontario Hydro pumps sulphur dioxide into Toronto's air

By MARTIN DALY

Martin Daly is a U of T graduate student and a member of Pollution Probe.

Mr. George Gathercole, Chairman of Ontario Hydro, has defended the proposed construction of a 700 foot smokestack at the Hearn power station with a collection of half-truths and false implications that demand rebuttal.

The quotations from Mr. Gathercole below are taken from his published statement to the Toronto Buildings and Development Committee, Sept. 22, 1969. Copies are available from the public relations division of Ontario Hydro.

The data used in rebuttal come from two sources: the Report of the Committee Appointed to Inquire into and Report upon the Pollution of Air, Soil and Water in the Township of Dunn, Moulton and Sherbrooke, Holdmand County, Toronto, Queen's Printer, 1968, and Schroeter, L.C., Sulphur Dioxide: Applications in foods, beverages and pharmaceuticals. Oxford, Pergamon Press, 1966.

Mr. Gathercole explains that the function of the high stack is to dilute pollutants by spreading them more widely. He feels obliged to acknowledge the objection that cumulative effects comprise the real threat: "There appears to be a growing fear by some people that immense concentrations of sulphur dioxide are accumulating in the atmosphere. This frightening claim is not supported by scientific evidence."

FACT: True enough, as long as you stick to the atmosphere. Sulphur dioxide is having cumulative effects on soil, leading to progressively greater acidity. Farmers counteract this effect by the application of lime. What about the pH changes in non-agricultural soil?

Mr. Gathercole says, "...

the average half life of sulphur dioxide is one hour..."

FACT: "The average life of a sulphur dioxide molecule in the atmosphere has been estimated variously at 3-10 hr." (Schroeter, p.39.)

Mr. Gathercole says, "It is demonstrably true that sulphur dioxide neither remains in the atmosphere nor eventually comes down to the ground in the same form or quantity in which it was originally emitted from a chimney. It is measurably weakened and changed by the combined influences of weather and dilution." Not exactly a lie, but if you're left with the impression that the stuff breaks down and everything's all right, you've been had.

FACT: "It has been suggested that the atmospheric oxidation product of sulphur dioxide (sulphuric acid mist) is at least on order of magnitude more toxic to humans than is sulphur dioxide." (Schroeter, p.39.)

Mr. Gathercole says the high stack will "... meet the air standards of the Air Management Branch of the Provincial government, which are most stringent."

FACT: Ontario standards call sulphur dioxide concentrations below 40 ppm (parts per million) "acceptable".

"... sulphur dioxide is detectable by human subjects at a level of 3-5 ppm and... a tolerable limit is about 10 ppm. The British Department of Scientific and Industrial Research established a maximum allowable concentration of sulphur dioxide in the air as 10 ppm." Schroeter, p. 275.

And plants are more sensitive to SO₂ than people. A few hours exposure to concentrations in the upper range of the "acceptable" level would seriously damage the hardiest crops. One hour's exposure to 1.25 ppm. will damage alfalfa.

The Ontario Hydro is getting ready to give it to you from great heights.

One man's "stringent" safety standard is another man's poison.

Mr. Gathercole says, "Since the heating of homes, apartments and small buildings, along with automobiles, are among the major sources of pollution, we would not find such a radical conclusion (closing the Hearn plant) to be realistic or sensible."

Ignore, if you can, the everyone's-doing-it-why-shouldn't-we illogic. Are you left with the impression that Hydro makes just a piddling little contribution to pollution?

FACT: Though presenting no Canadian figures, the Committee Appointed to etc etc, reports that in the U.S.A., the burning of coal by electric power companies is easily the leading source of sulphur dioxide pollution, providing a whopping 41% of the total.

The reader can decide whether Mr. Gathercole is being deliberately misleading or is just misinformed. Neither is excusable.

Mr. Gathercole says, "... one would seem at this point in time to have three options.

"1. Await technological developments which will remove sulphur dioxide.

"2. Close the station down..."

"3. Proceed with the most efficient means at hand to ameliorate conditions, namely a high stack."

Are the possibilities thus logically exhausted? Mr. Gathercole is hereby invited to think harder.

Mr. Gathercole is invited to think about how Hydro can convert its energy production to the relatively "clean" energy sources of water and solar power. We're all aware that the world's supply of fossil fuels is finite, and it has been a very popular game to guess the year in which the supply will run out.

But recently scientists have begun to suggest that other regulating factors will intrude before we come up against the supply limit. One such factor that Mr. Gathercole might start thinking about is carbon dioxide, which has increased by about 10% in the terrestrial atmosphere in this century due to the burning of fossil fuels.

That's right: throughout the entire atmosphere. An excellent example of the saving grace of "dilution".

When someone says "be realistic", he often turns out to mean "be narrow-minded" — think only of one small aspect of the problem — and "be short-sighted" — let immediate consequences rule over long term considerations. Mr. Gathercole's appeal to "realism" is of this sort.

Real "realism" says that temporary local concentrations of pollutants are the most visible, but may not be the most serious menace in the operation of plants like the one at Hearn.

Real "realism" also says that the sooner Hydro begins a serious program to phase out fossil fuel burning, the less the public will pay.

and U of T turns Volume One into a heap of rubble

The following is a letter written by a homeowner on Wilcocks St. to Varsity Reporter Susan Perly, in regard to her article on the moving of Volume One, a second-hand bookstore on Spadina Avenue.

Dear Miss Perly,

Last Friday morning, I had my monthly haircut at the barber shop on Spadina Avenue, right across the street from the house where Len Kelly had his Volume One Bookshop. Since the house had a unique front, I remarked to the barber what a shame it was to make a heap of rubble out of it. Such well built houses, in the days when carpenters and stonemasons were getting only about 50 cents an hour, maybe less, will never be built again.

In the evening of that same Friday, I came across your article "Volume One strips down, moves out, makes way for parking lot," in The Varsity of Oct. 27. I enjoyed reading this nostalgic piece of prose about Volume One, as I shopped there quite often. I am very pleased that you wrote it up, as now there is some record of this short-lived bookstore.

Your article also brought to mind the efforts of some students, in 1968, to try and save the shop and other buildings in the vicinity from the onslaught of the bulldozers. The effort was all in vain, yet it was a noble deed.

I am of the opinion that the policy of the city planner should be first to conserve the old, and next to build the new. But the city planner for Toronto just does things in the opposite way — first build the new, and destroy the old. That is why, where there was once a well-planned city, there is now only chaos and a mess. And the men who created this chaos receive big fat salaries from the taxes of all the people.

When I first came to live near Spadina Avenue in the early 50's, I was struck by the orderly appearance of the houses along both sides of the street, i.e. between College and Bloor Street. This section looked more like a European street in a residential section — the houses were closely packed (there were no vacant lots), they were about 98 per cent of the same height (3 three stories) almost identical in style, very solidly built, neat and tidy fronts with shrubs, flowers, trees, etc. It gave the viewer the impression that here was some real planning — either by the city planner or the homeowners themselves (very likely it was the latter).

But look at this part of Spadina today, since the U of T expropriated the east side. It's enough to curl your hair and to kneel down and weep. It's a genuine example of chaos and not progress — a discredit to the U of T and the city planner. Even the once proud Pride of Israel Synagogue is now a boozers den for a military club.

A lot of discredit should go to the Campus Co-op Residences, Incorporated. Once it got a foothold on the west side, it spelled the death-knell of the entire section between College and Bloor St. One might say that thanks to the U of T, the Campus Co-op, and the Toronto city planner, a unique residential section of Toronto was ruined forever.

Once again, please accept my thanks for taking the trouble to write about the demise of Volume One at 635 Spadina Avenue.

M. L. Pallington

DRACHE: 2

departmental autonomy means isolation and secrecy

The Commission on University Government formally released Danny Drache's Research Report on the Faculty of Arts and Science last week, but made no copies available to the university community, the general public, or the student and professional press.

The Varsity is reprinting edited excerpts from the Drache Report. In Wednesday's Varsity, Part One of the series was Drache's critique of the lack of internal democracy in the departments. In Part Two below, Drache shows how the departments are losing power to the central administration of the university.

Theoretically departmental autonomy is designed to give departments maximum control over their internal affairs. Like any system of social organization divided into neatly defined jurisdictions its main selling point can only be realized in its negative form as isolation. The fact that departments are responsible for academic policy (hiring, promotion, curriculum) makes the situation appear better than it really is. For it is the idea that the departments are separate and separated from the governing councils of the University which once assured but today contains departmental influence.

Departments believe that they are better off because they can keep out of harms way, or at least claim their right to be left alone. In carving out separate spheres of authority the department receives at most a qualified freedom of independence to handle its internal academic pursuits.

The practical arrangement which has made this possible and which allows a safe distance between themselves and the central authority, Simeco Hall, is their relationship to the Dean of the faculty. He speaks for and represents all chairmen to higher authorities. In turn they negotiate and carry on their University business only through him.

Based on this relay system of information, policy passes through a chain of command

"If I made a budgetary appeal I have a feeling that it goes before some vague tribunal who may all wear black hats for all I know, and that they are making decisions on the basis of inadequate knowledge because they are so many statutory moves away from the actual departmental operation." — D. A. Chant, Zoology Chairman.

that connects one hierarchy to the next. The cost of the Dean's protection is high. Internal autonomy is traded for external dependence.

On one hand, a departmental chairman will not hesitate to give the impression that the power of the department remains intact. On the other hand, he is likely to recount at length the narrow restrictions which bind him. And the nature of the contradiction is such that both assessments have some validity. In terms of the sheer amount of academic activity the department is the University in miniature. But the second assessment, that the department and the chairmanship operate under a policy determined elsewhere, comes closer to the objective conditions.

The hiring of new staff, the teaching of new courses, the allocation of new facilities, the decision to expand the department's range of interests may be the suggestion of the department but the decision to give the department a free hand in these academic affairs is the result of an external decision. The department's decision-making power is conditional on someone else giving it permission to exercise its own powers. Professor Duff's encounter with CAF (Committee on Allocation and Facilities) illustrates the point.

Duff: I went first to PACAF (Presidential Advisory Committee on Allocation and Facilities). Oh I went to the Dean. Through the Dean I went to PACAF. PACAF said no.

Drache: Do you have any access to PACAF directly?

Duff: No. I have to go through the Dean.

Drache: Does he make a representation for you? Duff: Well he does and he doesn't. I am, shall we say, not very happy about that.

Drache: Do you know who sits on PACAF?

Duff: Some of the people, yes.

Drache: Did they give you an explanation?

Duff: No. PACAF was totally incomprehensible and a highly incompetent body. I may be in a particularly exposed position on this particular issue, but my own feeling is that the distribution of space and accommodation within the University is in a highly unsound condition. The clumsiness of the system in attempting to rectify it is almost beyond belief. There is no contact for example between the Department of Superintendents' Office, the Physical Plant Office and the teaching departments. So if I request something like adjustment of blackboards in a room it takes six months to do it and then it is done wrong.

"I found myself locked into an organizational system where there didn't seem to be any way in which, as chairman, I could affect changes which would feed back into University policy." — T. A. Goudge, former Philosophy Chairman.

Drache: What channels do you go through?

Duff: Oh, we have to go through all sorts of channels. The result is that in some places people just get screwdrivers and do it themselves. We are not equipped for that, but we may come to that ourselves too.

Drache: Channels upon channels.

It is inevitable in a large institution such as the University that all decisions will be the result of a number of authorities giving their approval or withholding it. However, the weakness of the present arrangement derives from the isolation of the departments from the top bodies, particularly on account of the mode of organization and the hierarchy of authority which keeps students and faculty ignorant of who makes policy and how.

It is this process of indirect representation which over time has seriously weakened departments as important centres of decision-making within the University.

Professor Duff put the matter plainly in noting "the department runs itself in a certain

"We are told the amount of the budget by the Dean's office. We are also told the amount, the lowest amount we can give for salary increases and the highest amount. We are also told rules governing raises and things and so when you actually get clear on the discretion given to the chairman of the department, it is really very little" — J. G. Slater, Philosophy Chairman.

sense within the budget limitations and facility limitations that it has." In other circumstances this would be considered only a casual comment but in the present context it carries the full weight of the University restrictions under which departmental autonomy barely exists. If the department is regarded as an important part of the University, as the rhetoric suggests, then the flow of information, the centre of power, the stationing of authority properly belongs at the base.

Departmental reforms do not address themselves to the larger picture of whether the department has power to determine policy on academic and University matters, nor do they answer how much power a department should have. The tendency to propose reforms for a part of the part without realistically assessing what role and what authority the department should have reveals a weakness in the current reform movement.

Reform of the University can either redistribute power or consolidate power in the hands of the governors.

It is of real significance that when the departmental chairmen were asked if they participate in the setting of University priorities, the answer was a plain no. By contrast, they spoke of the increased number of budgetary restrictions, the current efforts of the administration to standardize procedures, the growing importance of University bodies like the Committee on Allocation and Facilities.

These changes point to a further consolidation of power among the top structures of the University. They are part of the larger pro-

continued on p. 23

cultural nationalism and revolutionary nationalism in québec

What came to be called Lower Canada and later Quebec was conquered by England in 1760. One portion of the French-Canadian ruling-class instantly set sail for France, another decided to throw in their lot with the new English conquerors and derive what benefits they could.

These vendues had their successors, some of whom even became Prime Ministers in the Federal Government.

French-Canada, whose political expression has been the province of Quebec, has always been an oppressed nation within Canada. Demands for autonomy were put down by force in the rebellion of 1837. Demands for separate French schools in the then new province of Manitoba were not met in the crisis of 1890. Although a majority of the Quebecois opposed participation in both of the two World Wars, conscription was imposed upon them. In the conscription crisis of the First World War federal troops were sent to Quebec.

Quebec has always been treated as a pool of cheap labour and an easily exploited supply base for raw materials and water-power. English and later American capital entered into an alliance with a compliant colonial elite and an obscurantist Church to impede and absorb the growing Quebec labour unions and to take the maximum possible profits out of the province. Clerical conservatism combined with the completely colonial role that big business had assigned to Quebec to ensure that hardly any of those profits were used to build the necessary industrial infrastructure, still less to satisfy any of the social needs of the people. Quebec was the last Province in Canada to have old age pensions and the first to completely sell out her waterways to American capital.

Quebec has always been worse hit by depressions than English Canada. In the early Thirties unemployment in Montreal according to official figures rose as high as thirty percent. And of course right now Quebec is in the grip of a major recession which began in 1960. Unemployment in Montreal is now around 12 to 15% and the slump has hit construction, that is housing, the hardest.

We have to add to this, the gradual erosion of French-Canadian culture against which the Quebecois have been waging a rear-guard fight since the Conquest. Urbanisation, which has been much more sudden in Quebec than in the rest of Canada, has made the question of language more and more urgent. It is impossible for Quebecois working in English or American owned and administered companies to get very far, to be promoted, or even in more and more cases even to function at the lowest levels without a working knowledge of English.

The masters speak English: the culture and language of the workers in Quebec becomes less and less useful and increasingly downgraded.

Here in Canada — in English-speaking Canada — we are told little of all this. We buy, through our own chauvinism and through a lack of knowledge which the mythology and propaganda of the mass media and the schools does little to dispel, the rhetoric of the ruling-class in Canada. The most powerful are of course always on the side of internationalism against the 'narrow' nationalism of those who are subordinate to them.

Similarly, in Canada those who rule this country justify their continual oppression of the people of Quebec by appeals to national unity and the virtues of federalism. Some of the most powerful federalist demagogues, it should come as no surprise, have been drawn from the ruling elites within Quebec. Trudeau who participated in the movement of intellectuals and technocrats to overthrow Duplessis, has a lot to be defensive about.

In an atmosphere of almost total ignorance among the people of English Canada, the struggle in Quebec is intensifying every day. Here, many elements of the Left are beginning campaigns of solidarity with those who are struggling in Quebec. In such a situation, almost anything which throws some light on the situation, even at the level of crude historical events, is a positive advance.

So the translation of a set of writings by various French-Canadian intellectuals, even if almost wholly drawn from the Right or the Centre, is very welcome, even if it is getting a bit late.

That said, the Anthology 'French Canadian Nationalism', contains one basic flaw which is common to much of bourgeois historiography. It traces, or describes, the development of an idea or an ideology rather than analysing socially and historically the concrete conditions which generated or reinforced the ideology.

The history of Quebec has been the history of the conflicting social forces within it: it cannot be written as if it were the history of the concept of French Canadian nationalism. For in that case one would not understand with any clarity the differences between the defensive Catholic corporatist cultural nationalism which has been the traditional dominating myth of Quebec and the current movement towards national self-determination and national liberation.

To see the latter as an aspect of the former, which for instance Trudeau in his essay seems to do, merely confuses the issue: which is that the current struggle of the Quebecois certainly as it is embodied in the practice of its most conscious elements, has more in common structurally with the struggle of the Vietnamese or the struggle of the blacks in the States than it has with the clerical fascism of Villeneuve.

It is not that the struggle has an anti-imperialist rhetoric because of the peculiarities of French-Canadian culture, but rather that the growing workers and students struggles are bound to become anti-imperialist in reality because they objectively pose a threat to English-Canadian and American capitalist interests.

Cultural nationalism was fostered by the Church and tolerated by continental business interests which it did really threaten and in terms of keeping the Quebec working-class coopted and otherworldly actually helped. That it found some acceptance among the rural and urban population at all, particularly in the intelligentsia and small business class, was due to the real threat to French-Canadian culture. This will readily be understood by Canadians infuriated by the seemingly inexorable destruction of all that is culturally Canadian by the juggernaut of American culture.

But even though cultural nationalism was in some way a natural reaction to Anglo-American cultural assimilation, it at the same time mystified the entire process. The new revolutionary nationalism of, let us say, the worker-based Front du Liberation Populaire (FLP) goes more to the root of the matter.

As Jean-Marc Leger remarks in his essay 'Where does Neo-nationalism lead?'

"We start from the fact that as a group we are a proletarian and tenant people in our own homeland, and, given that, the defense of our cultural values and the attempt to improve them, as well as the search for a kind of economic strength, are all doomed to failure as long as the fundamental characteristics of our fundamental situation remain unchanged."

The fight against Bill 63, which would further downgrade the language spoken by the people of Quebec taken by itself can achieve nothing — not even the ultimate preservation of French. As all the analytical essays in the anthology eloquently testify, the defensive fight for the preservation of French culture in Quebec has been fought and gradually lost for a hundred years and more.

The fact will still remain that if a Quebecois wants to survive in his job or be promoted he must learn English because the interests, the class that controls his place of work is English-speaking.

What is more, those who run Quebec, and certainly the hierarchy in the Church, would like nothing better than to divert the struggles of students who face a jobless future and a reactionary educational process and even more the workers who fight for better housing conditions, higher wages and more control over their places of work, they would like nothing better than to channel these increasingly dangerous struggles into the narrow path of a traditional fight for the preservation of French culture.

The right wing with its access to money and publicity made sure that it dominated the grand PNF coalition to fight against Bill 63. The left was consistently denied a platform.

The same contradiction between cultural and revolutionary nationalism ran through the movement that organized Operation McGill. The right had its slogan adopted: McGill Français. The left was defeated: its slogan had been McGill Quebecois. There is the world of difference between a bourgeois university that instructs in French, and a university whose very daily function is to serve the people of Quebec.

We live in Ontario — the richest and the most developed province in Canada. It is here that the communications media are centred which daily distort the struggle of the people of Quebec. It is here that state-power is centred: the troops which occupied Montreal were dispatched by Ottawa. It is here that the local Canadian centres of finance capital are centred: the major corporations most of which are American and all of which are dominated by American capital which dominate the lives of both Quebecois and English-Canadians.

To make the connection more concrete, the same man Prof. Woods who headed the federal task force on Industrial Relations was the Dean of Arts of McGill most instrumental in firing Stan Gray.

We who live in this Province should begin to understand the connection between the system which we in our passive way find more and more grotesque and the struggles in Quebec.

And we should listen carefully and non-hysterically to the words of J. M. Ptiote, who writes in the last essay of the Anthology:

"We have survived since the Conquest, but an uninterrupted succession of defeats and humiliations has accustomed us to the companionship of fear and shame. Now is not the time for compromise and hesitation. We must free ourselves completely from all our alienations, or else agree to continue hugging the walls in hostile country. This is not the time for sentiment: let us become violent and overthrow the foreign capitalists and their servants our bourgeoisie."

Vietnam ten thousand miles away: three hundred miles lies Quebec — our own Vietnam.

As the say in France: Ce n'est que le début: continuez le combat.

Andy Wernick

Ramsay Cook. French-Canadian Nationalism. An anthology Published by Macmillan Hardbound. $8.95 (unfortunately.)

Society may be nothing but a scenario after all ...

In the intellectual and pseudo-intellectual community of New York and the provinces, word travels fast. Legends arise and fall as each new actor or actress dons raiment, oaths, excrement or whatever else there is left to drop.

But the one time they still talk about is the night last winter that The Living Theatre really did live their theatre.

It happened at an intellectual soiree for the New York intelligentsia, a meeting in a series known as "The Theatre for Ideas". The series featured such village voices as Nat Hentoff, the multi-facets, Norman Mailer of the exalted ego, and Paul Goodman of the glorious anarchy.

The topic on the night in question was "Theatre or Therapy" and the head table guests were those two frazzled urchins in the grand house of legit theatre, patriarch and matriarch (respectively) of The Living Theatre, Julian Beck and Judith Malina.

There also to deliver a harangue (this kind of theatre could lead to fascism!) was the distinguished critic of drama, Robert Brustein. His view was essentially that the Becks' theatre of confrontation with the audience (I cannot go naked, I cannot travel without a passport, I cannot smoke marijuana I cannot drive genshiff) was really a kind of mass therapy session which was unprofessional, usually diffuse, nearly always mindless.

Brustein stated his point in a short, tersely worded condemnation of the Living Theatre that almost begged the trouble that was soon to come.

It's not quite certain when it happened but as Brustein or Hentoff was speaking there arose various shouts from the audience. These increased until the Hentoff, the chairman asked that their owners identify themselves. That they did readily. From the audience poured members of the Living Theatre Company, appropriately freaky-looking in contrast to the politely modish spectators who had paid an almost exorbitant amount to attend.

They stormed down the aisles, yelling obscenities, hollering at people. To describe the ensuing effect as hysteria is to be polite. It was a mass orgasm of phlegm, sweat and spit. A member of the freaks grabbed a ladies purse, ran up to the stage and emptied the contents on the floor. That was one of the milder incidents.

All the while, the chair was trying to instil order (half the audience had left, the other half were death-locked in struggle). Norman Mailer bellowing like a wounded Minotaur grabbed the microphone and tried to intimidate everyone into stopping. Luckily for him, nobody was listening. And all the while Judith Malina surveyed the stage from the stage where she was sitting, and kept on repeating, "It's beautiful. Oh, it's so beautiful. Beautiful. Beautiful." Beck looked on with paternal delight.

Paul Goodman kept on rationalizing his existence: "O'm baysikil an aynachist. O'im reely an aynachist..." in his Brooklynian accent.

But the best words came from the audience itself. One lady confronted a freak who had the microphone. "You give me that goddamned microphone, you fascist you," she yelled.

"Try and take it away from me, c'mon," he yelled back. She tried.

"Giimme that microphone, goddamn it, giimme."

"No."

"Listen, if I weren't what I am I would have killed the cops long ago."

"Go on, why don't you call the cops, you're gonna murder!"

But she didn't. Neither she nor anyone wanted to call the cops for fear of embarrassment. After all, what would a cop think seeing a room full of his intellectual "superiors" fighting over purses and microphones?

The guerrilla theatre had worked beyond the wildest dreams of its perpetrators. It was the talk of the town for weeks, even months afterwards. Protests and counterprotests appeared in the Times, The New York Review of Books, The Village Voice and all the other journals of the trade. The Living were naughty but no doubt attendance at their performances went up just as attendance soared for Cleopatra when the masses discovered that Liz and Dick were doing hanky panky.

But it began to occur to many people that the "Ideas" performance may have been the most convincing that the Living Theatre had ever done.

Instead of playing at living, they had really lived the point of what they were trying to do.

When you run stark naked through the aisles in your own theatre to embrace John Q. Liberal, he'll comply half out of politeness, half out of embarrassment that he be "with it". But try to do the same in his theatre and he will violently assure you that "it's my ball so he'll play my rules." So you have to find out how to deflate the ball.

Where does the fascism come in? Chances are that if you deflate his hall(s), he's gonna smash you one right in the teeth, ergo fascism.

Liberals have a classic paranoia about the BACKLASH. It seems that they always get caught in the middle just as the elastic of equilibrium becomes too tight for them to hold. And alas, there is no honour in being crucified that way.

But let us go back, back two weeks ago to a conference at the University of Western Ontario. There assembled to discuss the state of modern theatre were various and sundry university professors; (One U of Guelph prof. But Sir, this new theatre you talk about, why it's, it's anarchy!)

There to speak to them were four drama critics, white-haired Martin Esslin, portly and distinguished (my class, how many have read Ibsen's "Theatre of the Absurd"?) Hands up. Well we can't study Godd! if you haven't...). Herbert Blau, a former director of the Lincoln Centre in its more progressive days, Theodore Hoffman, a professor of theatre history at NYU and Carnegie Tech in New York and James Kerans, drama professor from somewhere on the west coast.

Hoffman's remark about the "New drama" pretty well sums up the attitudes expressed (in what turned out to be a pretty well four-way tetralogue among the distinguished critics.) Hoffman came right out and stated that "It's the only theatre in North America worth quarrelling about."

It may also be added that it's probably the only theatre in North America worth even talking about.

To say that existential theatre has run its courses is to be simplistic, of course, and yet, at the risk of sounding naive, it seems as if, like Encounter magazine, the National Student Association, European Communist parties, Rock Festivals and the legalization of marijuana it's all a CIA plot to keep the masses groovy and silent.

The theatre of revolt is perfect bourgeois theatre. From the distance of the stage, the actor tells you that you will die, that life is meaningless, that society is corrupt, that you are (Omgod!) GUILTY (Guiltily vs. charged your honour with failing to disturb the peace.)

Nat muly is it boring to hear a character try to decide whether to wait for Godot or not, but it's a waste of time. There are better things to do. This doesn't mean that socialist realism is the answer either. There can be no revolutionary theatre before the revolution (when, where). There can only be attempts. Yet the time has come and the time is ripe to give people glimpses of reality as it is today. And as Che once said in a fit of revolutionary snark "I can't help it if reality is Marxist."

Modern theatre has always had as its aim the raising of consciousness of the audience, and in this it has gone farther than any theatre before. In fact perhaps the most violent revolution in theatre came at the turn of the century. The audience was middle class and the theatre exhibited an inherent respect for the audience never before seen. The theatre was beginning to involve the audience in an ongoing dialectical process.

Now that's a very dangerous thing, you see, because an ongoing dialectical process, once started, cannot stop so easily. It sometimes leads to a thing called "awareness" defined as knowing exactly what's happening to you all of the time.

And of course, if you know exactly what's happening to you all of the time, you're not going to be too happy. You're going to try to change things. Pretty quickly.

The trouble with the "modern" theatre is that it has led us so far and no further. It has led us to doubt God and believe that society is inherently evil and that authority is a bad thing. These are all fine and good, but taken just as they have been dropped, they are the breeders of the common malaises today, apathy, disdain for fellow man and worst of all that devil's curse - cynicism.

Martin Esslin took issue with what the other critics were saying when he asserted that General Motors and IBM and U.S. Steel are not responsible for the current malaise of professional theatre. In a sense he is right. The very existence of capitalism should make for an exciting theatre. All a player need do is take the audience to a helching steel plant, print to it, do a few cartwheels and say "Yecceeh" Hoffman added "The new theatre needs a command both of social thought and Marxist dialectic."

But the legit theatre isn't doing that, or anything much else. Brustein and Blau and many others said that truly great theatre is essentially pessimistic. But theatre has no right to be pessimistic, nor has it the right to be optimistic. The business of the theatre is to present the reality of life in as many revealing ways and means as possible. If Abby Hoffman or the New Left Caucus can show reality by guerrilla theatre (burning money at the stock exchange) it will either make us pessimistic about the stock exchange and capital or it will make us optimistic about the hope of smashing it. In either case, the theatre is coming to terms with modern conditions in the capitalist state.

The ideology of the state has so pervaded every part of our lives that the only way theatre can hope to continue to be rebellious is to fight back with the same weapons. Just as the medieval theatre left the church and went out into the world, modern theatre has to leave the theatre and engage the world on its own ground, in the streets, in the seats of government and in the theatres of the establishment (a play within a play disrupting a play? etc.)

The new theatre is still in its infancy now and it shows. Brustein has a very good point when he called it unprofessional. It is and that is one of its great weaknesses. No matter how radical your ideas are, there's no excuse for slowness, mindless vociferation and lack of discipline. Mainly because it's not going to work if you aren't professional.

Or, as Blau said paraphrasing Baudelaire, "Do what thou wilt, but no bullshit," adding that "The not revolutionary ambitions require the most persuasive performances."

Most theatre of this type has failed miserably. Both the San Francisco Mime Troupe and the Vancouver Street Theatre, traveling troupes of dedicated players have given performances in Toronto. Both used the highly versatile Italian Commedia dell'Arte style and both were summarily unconvincing. Not that they weren't funny or even incisive but to see what they performed and to listen to what they believe is to see a very serious gap between form and content. Despite the archaic trial and sentence, it is generally agreed that the Futz performed last spring in Toronto is by no means a very good play. The Living Theatre is regarded now with a polite tolerance. People are starting to take off their clothes without even being asked. The nude Che that scandalized New York last year is described by Kerans as "probably the worst and most embarrassing piece of theatre I've ever seen."

Well, as the saying goes, what is to be done? How are we to make living theatre more alive? The distinguished critics at Western left the argument at this point. Possibly because the job of the critic and historian is primarily to criticize and historicize. And yet it's not so hard to find some guidelines for a new theatre of confrontation. One of the best pieces of advice is "don't forget about your head." Your head is very helpful in thinking about what you're doing which in turn helps make for a better performance.

But most helpful of all is that which is all around you. Once you realize the techniques being used to fuck your mind, switch the tables around.

Are you barked by liberal solutions? Are you alienated from the means of production? New improved I felt wishes to the side of the problem. Tim cadres of the new in gradient direct action speed directly into the social mainstream, giving fast, relief. Yes if you're feeling low take Source Hall's Besides if a small group of Crazyes can be labelled "fascist" for disrupting a meeting and police can get away with murder, we've really got nothing to lose anyway. Get thee to the streets, thespian.

Larry Haver
REVIEW 3

WALTZING GOT YOU DOWN then

DANCE

to

"MT. MISERY MUSIC CO"

SOUL! MOTOWN!
REAL DANCE MUSIC, ALICE!
TONIGHT!

NEW COLLEGE (WETMORE) HALL

8:30 P.M.

LAMBS - $1.00 WOLVES - $1.50
FISH - $3.00

Remodelling & Alterations

— A Specialty —

STUDENTS' ELITE

Cleaners & Tailors
654 Spadina Ave.
922-4361

10% DISCOUNT
ON PRESENTATION
of A.T.L. cards

MEMBER OF INDEPENDANT
CLEANERS ASSOC.

R
E N
T
A L
S

TYPEWRITERS

ADDING MACHINES

T.V.'S

STEREO TAPE
RECORDERS

STEREO RECORD
PLAYERS

698-2589

DANFORTH
TYPEWRITER

2940 DANFORTH AVE

FREE DELIVERY

GSU BY-ELECTION

FRI. NOV. 7, 1969

FOR POSITION OF VICE PRESIDENT

POLLING BOOTHS AT THESE EASY TO REACH LOCATIONS:

AEROSPACE

GALBRAITH BLDG. LOBBY

GSU

MEDICAL BLDG.

OISE

SID SMITH LOBBY

SIG SAM LOBBY

VIC LIBRARY

WALBERG LOBBY

School of Graduate Studies Divisional Meetings

All members of the graduate faculty of each Division, and all graduate students enrolled in the departments, centres, and institutes constituting the Division, may take part in these meetings.

Division I (The Humanities) —Friday, November 14, 1969, 4:10 p.m. in the Senate Chamber, Simcoe Hall

Division II (The Social Sciences) —Monday, November 17, 1969, 4:10 p.m., in the Senate Chamber, Simcoe Hall

Division III (The Physical Sciences) —Wednesday, November 19, 1969, 4:10 p.m., in the Senate Chamber, Simcoe Hall

Division IV (The Life Sciences) —Friday, November 21, 1969, 4:10 p.m., in the Senate Chamber, Simcoe Hall

Centre for the Study of Drama and The St. Lawrence Centre for the Arts

presents

Slawomir Mrozek's
TANGO

translated by Nicholas Bethell, adapted by Tom Stoppard, directed by Joseph Shaw, designed by Martha Mann, with: David Brown, Barbara Borland, Nancy Kerr, Jane Mallett, Jack Medley, William Needles, Sean Sullivan

Mondays to Thursdays to November 20 at 8:30

Tickets $3.00 Students $1.50

and

Eugene O'Neill's
MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA

directed by Leon Major settings by Murray Lauder, costumes by Marie Day, with: James Bradford, David Drown, Patricia Collins, Neil Dainard, Michael Fletcher, Maureen Fox, Ron Hastings, Don McManus, Jack Medley, William Needles, Norma Oliver, Kate Reid, Anna Reiser, Sean Sullivan, Jonathan White

Fridays and Saturdays only, to November 22 at 5:30

Tickets $4.50 Students $2.25

HART HOUSE THEATRE

Box Office open 10:00 to 6:00 - 928-8668

Gala Opening Performance November 7 - $7.50 Students $3.75

TYPISTS WANTED

A publishing company would like to farm out work of a specialized nature. Typists should be graduates, preferably in English, who can type with patience and accuracy from manuscript of a complicated nature. Must have own typewriter and be able to put in a minimum of 10 hours weekly till spring.

PLEASE PHONE 255-4493-EXT. 75

CENTENNIAL FILM BOARD

WE HAVE MONEY

ANY ONE INTERESTED IN MAKING A CO-OPERATIVE FILM
MEETING: MON. NOV. 10 5 P.M.

S.A.C. OFFICE

an allegory with two left feet

Theatrical allegories make me nervous. So many things can possibly go wrong, and usually do. The audience is required to make as many possible correlations between their world and the onstage one — an exercise which is undeniably amusing, uplifting, and full of vitamins BC&D.

But it's unlikely to be particularly profitable unless you have a script and company whose complexities are designed to mesh with each other. If the allegory is a simple equation or if it ties up all loose ends with identification tags, you have an essentially boring show in which nothing can happen that the audience won't really already know better and more closely through experience or projection. If, on the other hand, the allegory is many-layered and constantly shifting, the play is in effect an open invitation to myopia. When there's a lot going on in front of you, you look for the familiar focus of your particular squint.

Consider Tango as performed by Hart House Theatre on weekdays through 19 November. This modern (1965) Polish (author Slawomir Mrozek is an exjournalist now expatriated to Paris) product takes off from the standard stage metaphor for the family of man in cosmic context — a household whose physical trappings define and reflect its occupants. As soon as you walk into the theatre, you know from the cluttered condition of Martha Mann's curtainless set that the human condition represented on it will be one of chaos — too many things from too many times and places.

And so it is. The cast of characters turns out to be: (a) three generations of literal and figurative Bohemians; (b) Eddie, the friendly local sob who slinks around stage being "elemental" and claiming to sleep with the lady of the house; and (c) Arthur, the son of the house and its misfit, who wants to return the household to normalcy. But now standards are reversed:

STOMIL: So what do you want? Tradition?

ARTHUR: World order!

STOMIL: Oh, is that all?

ARTHUR: That and the right to rebel.

STOMIL: But you've got it! — I keep telling you, rebel!
ARTHUR: Can't you see that you've destroyed any chance I ever had? You've been knocking over the totems for so long that there's nothing left for me to kick against — nothing! Abnormality is the new norm, and all I've got to rebel against is you and your muck . . . Rebel against you? How the hell can I fight a blob? — nothing is integrated so how can it disintegrate. Your world has no shape, no structure and no substance — it's indestructible.

STOMIL: You mean we're no help?

ARTHUR: No help at all — you're so tolerant.

STOMIL: Yes, it's a difficult situation.

So Arthur tries to find a frame of reference which he can impose on his family. His propensity for systematization — he is a medical student who carries a philosophy textbook under his arm — can be imposed on the family because, as his mother Eleonora remarks, "Arthur is the first man in fifty years to have principles. It's so original."

But the principles shift. He begins as a peevish disciplinarian with a bizarre taste in punishments, making Greatuncle Eugene stand in a corner with a birdcage on his head and Granny play dead on the catafalque in the corner for their participation in a cardgame. He ends as an AntiChrist figure who, having enlisted the aid of good ol' bestial Eddie, stands on a table and shouts:

"Look at me — I've crowned your wildest dreams. Uncle, we shall have law and order. Father, you did nothing but rebel, and your rebellion led only to chaos, and destroyed itself. But look at me! — Isn't power rebellion? Rebellion in the form of order, the top against the bottom, the high against the low. There can be no high without a low, and no low without a high — and that's what power is all about: the opposites don't cancel each other out, but define one another. I am neither compound nor component, I am the act itself. I am the act itself. I am will, I am energy. I am power! I am above, within and around everything. You should fall on my neck — I have fulfilled your youth. It's yours! And I get something out of it too — form, any form I fancy, not one but a thousand possibilities. I can create and demolish at will, it's all within me, here!"

Shortly after that spiel he is cut down by Eddie, who indeed falls upon his neck — with a Karate chop and then it is Eddie's turn to call the tunes and the dances.

The most obvious and painless reading of all this is to take Tango as a morality play of 20th-century East European politics. Arthur the idealist, revolted by the disjointed and disoriented nature of his society, seizes absolute power which corrupts him into the absolute apotheosis of Fascism, only to be destroyed by mean nasty ugly Communism.

This would seem to be the interpretation taken by the Hart House production, insofar as I could discover any direction in Joseph Shaw's directing (which isn't very far, aside from a few inspired stage pictures). The intention seems to have been to turn the final act into a melodrama, fusing the original first two acts into one long farcical blur and saving the fireworks for the final situation. (Actually, it's a strobe).

The same emphasis on the end is to be found in the acting: after slinking harmlessly around the stage, Sean Sullivan as Eddie suddenly becomes supremely sinister, and David Brown as Arthur seems to be aiming at the same thing but remains as boring as ever. The rest of the family's role not only subsides but is all but forgotten. And even if Uncle Eugene, played with brilliant attention to detail by Jack Medley, is recognizable as a self-out to each of the successive new orders, his responsibility in doing so is minimized.

This imbalance de-emphasizes some of the script's great ironic echoes. More important and more shortsightedly, the interpretation which results ignores the play's operation by a process of dialectic. It moves along at least two related sets of tensions. One operates between Arthur and one member of his family after another. It is here, in Arthur's attempts to woo his relatives, that the hand of adaptor Tom Stoppard Rosecrantz and Guilderstern Are Dead) shows itself — playing edgy, witty games of intellectual pingpong. The game is at its best on the occasions when one of the players is William Needles as Stomil, Arthur's father, a theatrical experimenter who strides around the stage with the fly of his pyjamas unfastened:

ARTHUR: I wish you'd do up your flies.

STOMIL: Why?

ARTHUR: What do you mean why?

STOMIL: Why? The simplest of questions and you're stuck for an answer.

ARTHUR: Because — because it's simply not done.

STOMIL: There you are — meaningless. A typically conventional reply which fails to survive intellectual analysis.

ARTHUR: Isn't that enough?

STOMIL: Too superficial. If we are going to discuss it, we'll have to dig deeper.

ARTHUR: For God's sake, Father, can't you do up your flies and then discuss!

STOMIL: That would be a reversal of the rational process. — The act before the thought. Man must live rationally, not mechanically.

ARTHUR: So you're not going to do yourself up.

STOMIL: No. Anyway, I can't. The buttons are missing.

In moments like these, there sneaks by the suspicion that the paralyzing clutter on stage is born, not of liberation from convention, but of the liberal intellectual heritage that collects remnants from various cultures and is trapped by them — "a brotzel," says Arthur, "where anything goes and nothing works."

If Arthur had been a little more lovable and the chaos a little less so, the Hart House opening night audience — liberals every bloody one of us — might have found that, among other things, the joke was on them too. Or maybe it wasn't a joke — "Tragedy," Arthur protests to his father, "doesn't exist because you don't believe in it — and that's because of your damned everlasting compromises."

An even more unnerve uncomfortable joke of interpretation derives from the second tension, which is between Arthur and Arthur. As his epiphany puts it, "He lived for reason too passionately; he died because his thoughts betrayed his feelings."

And the person who wins out is Eddie, who gives no evidence of suffering any tensions at all: "Eddie is simplicity and truth — he is the basic essential which we've been seeking for so long in all the wrong places because we didn't know what we were looking for. I am afraid Eddie is a fact and you can't hate something which is elemental. You should love it."

The advice is Arthur's and signals surrender before the fact. And if Arthur's efforts to impose rationality on himself and his surroundings lead only to absurdity, why, pray tell, should we risk imposing allegorical meaning on the play? In both the play's plot and its impact on the audience, intellectual systematization loses out to "the value of dynamic force, bang on target in its very aimlessness. . . ."

But this production took aim and only Messrs. Medley and Needles hit the target with any consistency. My overall reaction to the play was summarized in one of their exchanges about Stomil's experimental theatre:

STOMIL: By a direct act we have achieved unity of action and perception . . . It's got something to do with theatrical phenomena, the dynamic of the sensual fact. Did you feel yourself respond to it?

EUGUENE: To tell you the truth, not very much.

Eugene gets no sympathy from me — Stomil's company of one didn't claim to be professional.

marion o'connor

In Search of the Under conditions of material prosperity and security, men need religion to tell them this well-being is not sinful. This is what Billy Graham is doing when he paraphrases God: "I have found a way to forgive you, I have found a way to adopt you into my family, I have found a way to make you whole, I have found a way to wash away your sins."

Under conditions of hardship and suffering, men look to religion for the promise of a better life, for the spiritual strength to carry on in the face of doubts, and for a sense of solidarity with other men.

This second reasoning accounts for the high popularity of the Methodists in the pioneer communities of Upper Canada in the first decades of the 19th century. In Britain the Methodists catered to the urban and rural poor with huge open-air camp meetings, itinerant preachers and hymn-singing, and in Upper Canada this tradition was perpetuated by the saddle-bag preacher, a dedicated clergyman who travelled by horseback a regular circuit through the backwoods, bringing to the pioneers the spiritual strength to face the rigours of an exacting life.

The part played by the saddle-bag preachers among the "God-Hopeful" people of Upper Canada is excellently portrayed by Clara Thomas in a new biography of one of these men, Egerton Ryerson.

In the 1820's Upper Canadian farmers paid a high price for material success, writes Prof. Thomas, "often the loss, for a generation or more, of any meaning in life beyond the tanning of a plot of unresponsive land in a tough climate."

The Methodists, with their evangelical drive and fervour, injected into this bleak picture a feeling of solidarity and purpose, especially through the holding of camp-meetings, "great occasions among a people who needed every kind of recreation, of security and of reassurance, social and spiritual."

In its early years Methodism performed a vital function for the ordinary Upper Canadian and was viewed with hostility by some members of the establishment, perhaps for its suspected republicanism (Methodism enjoyed huge success south of the border), but primarily for its popular orientation — its unorthodox practice of taking the church to the people, preaching in market-places, in homes in the backwoods. This kind of religious movement did not appeal to the Upper Canadian aristocracy who saw the colony as an idyllic 18th century English countryside where social patterns were set by the landowners and the established (Anglican) church.

One Anglican bishop of the time described the "itinerant and mendicant" Methodists as "a set of ignorant enthusiasts whose preaching is calculated only to perplex the understanding and corrupt the morals; to relax the nerves of industry and dissolve the bonds of society."

So when Egerton Ryerson, at the age of 18, converted to Methodism, his Tory Loyalist father was quite upset. Of him, writes Prof. Thomas, "Methodism was socially unacceptable and, worse than that, unmauly; his revulsion was like a modern father's whose son has grown long hair and joined the Flower People."

How Ryerson, in the course of his career, separated himself from the nascent popular tradition and rose to a position of power and authority in Upper Canada, is the main theme in Prof. Thomas' carefully researched biography. By the standards of Canadian history writing this book is extraordinarily good, combining social history with a fine appreciation of people and ideas. She follows up her first rate expositions of early Upper Canada and the beginnings of Methodism with a thorough tracing of Ryerson's career as it reflects Upper Canada's transformation from an insecure frontier society to a stable social order. Yet, while Prof. Thomas is not over-favourable to her subject, she does not put the argument forcefully and explicitly.

Ryerson was a man of great talents. This was recognized by the Methodist church who used him to win their fight for a share of government monies, and later by the colonial government who used him to introduce a modern system of universal public education. Ryerson was a man who did not have to look back; the path to success opened magically before him and he proceeded comfortably along it.

He was kept busy by many concerns — publishing a Methodist newspaper, engaging in Church diplomatic activities, setting up a Methodist educational institution of which he became principal at Cobourg (later to be U of T's Victoria College) and founding a Methodist printing house (later to be The Ryerson Press — publishers of the present biography).

After Ryerson's talents had successfully helped obtain for the Methodist Church the same privileges as the Anglicans and generally secure for Methodism a permanent niche in the social structure of Upper Canada, Ryerson directed his interests towards education.

In this second career Ryerson almost singlehandedly, founded a modern system of public schools. He undertook extensive speaking tours through the colony to convince sceptical parents of the need for education, authored textbooks on subjects from grammar to horticulture, founded teachers' colleges and for 32 years guided the infant school system to its unchallenged

GEORGE RYERSON
(Aged 91 years)

WILLIAM RYERSON

RESIDENCE OF THE LATE COLONEL JOSEPH RYERSON
(Near Vittoria, Norfolk County)
Here the Ryerson brothers spent the days of boyhood

JOHN RYERSON

EDWY M. RYERSON

Colonial 'Good Life'

berth in the social system.

A favorite boast of Ryerson during his tenure as superintendent of schools was that he was "above politics". This aspect of his development points to an important part of the Canadian political complexion.

Ryerson's attitude to the Reform movement of the 1830's and 40's shows what lay behind his assumed a politicality.

In the early '30's there had been a loose and informal alliance between the reformers and the Methodists, since they were both assailing the privileged ruling elite, the Compact landowners and the Anglican church of Bishop Strachan. An angry Kingston mob, for instance, on one occasion burned both William Lyon Mackenzie and Ryerson in effigy.

Ryerson's 1833 visit to England during which the Colonial Office promised an equitable division of the Clergy Reserves income among the Methodists, Presbyterians and Anglicans, was likely the decisive point in turning Ryerson's sympathy away from the Reform movement. His primary goal, achieving security for his church in Upper Canada, was to be granted within the existing order. A letter to Egerton from his semi-literate conservative brother congratulates Ryerson on the rupture, adding "I have long been of the opinion that we (Methodists) had . . . leaned too much toward Radicalism and that it would be absolutely necessary sooner or later to disengage ourselves from them entirely. You can see plainly that it is not Reform but Revolution they are after . . ."

Ryerson demonstrated the severing of ties with the Reformers with a series of letters published in the London Times in 1836. He portrayed the struggle for responsible government, as one for independence, which he opposed. His part was influential in popularizing this view and helps to account for the defection of moderates as well as most Methodists from the Reform cause.

His only other direct intervention in politics was in 1844, when Ryerson launched a full-scale assault on the moderate reformer Baldwin. Ryerson's support of Governor Metcalfe — an authoritarian governor, the last to believe he personally ruled the colony — in this successful campaign was followed by his appointment as superintendent of schools. Ryerson naively protested he had not expected this reward, and while one must accept his good faith, the evidence shows he had wanted the job. Metcalfe had discussed it with him, and Ryerson had performed a rare and virulent attack on the "disloyal reformers."

Ryerson's main aim, as he saw it, was "the ordering and civilizing of Upper Canada into a corporate community" and his main tool in this was expediency, a quality he greatly admired in the English Whigs.

For him it is easier to accept rapid advancement to positions of authority than to challenge existing processes. Often it never occurs to him that he is part of something called the ruling class or elite. He believes he has arrived purely on his merits and that he is above mere political controversies.

This blindness of his, this backing away from principled stands, this deliberate effort to discount the existence of issues which cannot be settled by compromise, probably entitle Ryerson to be called Canada's first great value-free liberal.

He was not an evil man. He performed valuable tasks in raising the quality of Upper Canadian civilization.

Easy-going, trusting, accommodating, desiring to associate with persons of his own level of culture and learning, Ryerson developed from teaching illiterate Indians and travelling with a message of hope through the frontier, to leading church politics and becoming a bulwark of an embryonic social system.

A new society develops a consensus which buries potential conflicts. An outright refusal to modify the original Tory vision of Upper Canada would have resulted in a serious explosion, perhaps radically changing the nature of the civilization. Instead radicalism in Upper Canada was defused and isolated, largely through the influence of men like Ryerson. His law and order stand made reform more difficult and, when it did come, less wide ranging.

The unanswered question is, in effect, this: if Ryerson, the Methodists, and other large numbers of persons had not been preoccupied with material security and social advancement, what revolutionary changes might the colony not have undergone?

Ryerson chose not to make choices and in this way contributed to making moral and political affairs in Canada a matter of comfort and convenience rather than resolution. He helped lay the foundation for a cultural tradition which buries conflicts and makes the pursuit of material well-being the supreme goal.

dave frank

Ryerson of Upper Canada
by Clara Thomas
The Ryerson Press, $5.95

left

The major threat to Canadian survival today is American control of the Canadian economy. The major issue of our times is not national unity but national survival, and the fundamental threat is external, not internal.

When U of T economics professor Mel Watkins returned from the Winnipeg New Democratic Party convention last weekend, the first question most radically bent students wanted to ask him was bow Watkins could dare embrace parliamentary politics and still consider himself part of the Left.

The same question could be put to Danny Drache, who has been a part of the Toronto Left for "going on 10 years", and who, until matter," he says.

"And you have to use the government if you're going to fight imperialism. We are taking a hard line on this."

At the end of the convention, one third of the delegates were pledged to the Waffle brand of NDP leftism.

"My interest is in the left, not in power," says Watkins. "We did not appeal to the centre, and we made this very clear. So we emerged with no obligations to the centre."

"The problem was that the Waffle accepted the terms of the debate that the right was setting forward. This was a discussion of principles, not a political program. And it was in this sort of environment that it became confusing for many delegates because the centre and the right are always trying to bug you close and claim there's not much difference when it comes down to principles."

...at for the Waffle ndp cen- tre right

by sherry brydson

of the working people?"

But now, the left must get down to some serious talking and idea-trading, and Watkins has already proposed a seminar for May, 1970.

"We would invite all members of the NDP and all those who consider themselves Left, and do some serious work around organizing and struggling out our differences."

The Waffle group came under fire from the more establishment-oriented delegates like John Harney, who termed the Wafflers separatists.

The Waffle position on Quebec is based on a respect for independence for that province if she wishes, but at the same time a call to the Left to persuade Quebec that there is a common enemy in the American empire, and that perhaps they could best fight it together: "two nations, one struggle."

The New Democratic Party must be seen as the parliamentary wing of a movement dedicated to fundamental social change. It must be radicalized from within and it must be radicalized from without.

— the Watkins manifesto, For an Independent Socialist Canada.

between the place of women in the NDP — totally subservient to the men — with the place of women in New Left organizations was as different as night and day," says Drache.

"Once you get out of the New Left, the place of woman is so decidedly that of a slave, in some sort of slavemaster relationship, that it almost freaks you out to go into those old relations again."

Left — going on 10 years" and who, until recently, went along with the current Left thinking that parliamentary channels are a no-no.

Both Drache and Watkins are of like mind on this point: they went to Winnipeg to shake up the party, and they were enormously successful.

"I went to Winnipeg because I thought the issues central to the Watkins manifesto are THE central issues facing Canada today: namely, the building of an anti-imperialist, anti-capitalist movement," says Drache.

"Anyone who is interested in and committed to those ideas would naturally gravitate to a place where they were being put on the agenda of this country for, really, the first time."

"No one has made any serious attempt to turn the NDP into a Left party," says Watkins, "and so it's inappropriate to write them off when no one has made any attempt to see if they can be made into a serious Left party."

The Watkins group — the Waffle, they were affectionately dubbed — took a hard-line anti-imperialist stand and refused to back down. Their aim was to discover just how far left the NDP was prepared to go. The response was amazing.

"What happened at the convention was that we got one third of the votes," says Watkins, "enough that in my view it's still worth continuing this struggle. There is a thirst in that party for a Left position."

For the first time the NDP's national outlook of welfareism in a dependent capitalist state was challenged seriously from the Left. The Waffle group did force the debate on principled political issues that socialism as a credible political alternative for Canadians had to be defined in terms of an anti-imperialist strategy and an anti-capitalist program.

"We were trying to define a Left caucus in the party, and one that could not be called a sectarian caucus, but one that could show that it had broader appeal to all the different groups in the party," says Watkins.

Watkins sees his role in this left movement as inside the NDP itself; it was a caucus decision to run a slate of people for the 120-member national council, and to put forward two candidates for the vice-presidency positions. Watkins was elected to a vice-presidency.

Watkins and Drache differ only in that Watkins now feels he is committed to working for a left movement within the NDP, while Drache sees his priorities elsewhere. This did not mean that Drache felt himself unable to affect what happened at Winnipeg.

"I went to Winnipeg to take part in the debate — to put forth an anti-imperialist, anti-capitalist position, that's the nub of the comes down to principles.

"There was a tendency for the Waffle group to back off, but the people out West saw it as THEIR politics, because they saw the problem as anti-imperialism and anti-capitalism."

The compromise manifesto, For a United and Independent Canada, was drafted largely by centre elements within the party. It was approved by most delegates after the Watkins manifesto was defeated 2-1 in a stand-up vote.

Watkins was not entirely unhappy with the compromise. "It is strong on the need for an independent Canada. The NDP now is the only party in Canada that can claim to be a nationalist party."

One of the things that surprised — and saved — the Waffle group was the amount

So long as Canada is governed by those who believe that national politics should be limited to the passive functions of maintaining a peaceful and secure climate for foreign investors, there can be no meaningful unity between English and French Canadians.

of support from the West. It seems ironic that it should be a number of Ontario intellectuals, with virtually no support in their own constituency, who should come up with the concretization of what has been Western — especially farm — feeling for many years.

"The farmers know from their day to day lives that the corporations are screwing them," says Watkins. "We're very optimistic about them. They can relate to what we're saying."

On the subject of the farmers, Drache waxes a almost thapsodic. "Last summer wasn't happy with the Waffle. In fact, despite the rather lengthy passages in the manifesto on labor and the democratization of industry, the union caucus voted 132-18 against the manifesto.

Watkins doesn't think the union opposition to the manifesto means that unions have no place in the new, socialist NDP.

"If you're on the Left, and therefore committed to a working-class party, then you've damn well got to relate to the unions. How else do you go about being a working-class party?"

"Unless someone knows of a strategy to get the support of working class people, unless someone shows us that strategy, because that's where the unions are."

Drache's feelings on the unions are much stronger. "The trade union bureaucrats made it very clear that they were committed to defending American capitalism in this country."

"I think this can be explained by the fact that the Canadian trade union movement is in the hands of the American unions. These American unions defend American capitalism at home and protect American investment abroad."

"The trade union officials at the convention acted like unions. Labor would travel in a pack of about 80, and when we were debating issues in front of a policy panel, they would come in and swing the vote to their side."

The inability of the manifesto group to speak to the problems of labor, says Watkins, was one of its greatest weaknesses. The democratization of industry and the question of Canadian versus international unions is something the Left caucus will now have to come to terms with, "and we're not credible until we do that."

"How can you be a left party independent fight it together: "two nations, one struggle."

"The NDP met at a time when there were 20,000 people outside the Quebec legislature and was unable to say anything serious about Quebec. This is bad."

Essentially, Watkins said, the Waffle brand of Quebec radicalism is coming from people outside the Quebec NDP. He feels the NDP could perhaps encourage this.

"One of the things we were trying to argue — and by our acts, demonstrate — is that there is a lot of radicalism in Canada which the NDP isn't relating to and which a lot of the people of the NDP have never even heard about. And it's not a serious Left party until it comes to terms with that."

Drache says, "The NDP is in a thousand ways a totally a bourgeois party."

The most serious hindrance to radicalism within party ranks, says Drache, is the class structure of the party itself. There are the right; the centre; the unions; the student radicals — and above all, the women.

An English Canada concerned with its own national survival would create common aspirations that would help to tie the two nations together once more.

The NDP women, perhaps for the first time in their political lives, decided they no longer wanted to play a serving role to the convention and to the party. Accordingly, they brought forward a proposal to seat a minimum of 25 women on the 120-seat federal council, a resolution that failed by one vote.

"I want to emphasize that the contrast that it antitoxin treats you get to go into those old relations again.

"And what you see, of course, is the failure of the left to take its ideas out into the public and be political with them."

But the steps taken by the NDP women were steps in the right direction, and both Watkins and Drache are convinced that 1971 will see a much stronger women's caucus.

This stronger women's caucus, Watkins is confident, will not allow (as it did this time) men to sit in their caucus meetings — with full voting privileges.

Watkins feels the Waffle's wholehearted endorsement of the women's caucus was instrumental in gaining votes.

One of the biggest problems with the manifesto seems to be its language. Much of the criticism from the right and the centre was on the basis that the language was too hard-line, somehow to "difficult" for the "average voter" to understand.

"The objection to the language," says Drache, "was that the Canadian people don't know anything about problems of anti-capitalism and anti-imperialism, and that somehow these problems are not real, but ideological and abstract problems."

"The right and the centre, led by David Lewis and John Harney, kept repeating the point that somehow these were ideas foreign to the Canadian public. This reflects the elitism in the leadership, who do not talk with the Canadian people, do not listen to them, and do not address themselves to the central issues."

"This is the way the leadership looks at this question: that the Canadian people don't know anything about the problems that affect them in their everyday lives. This is a very gross way for a labor party to proceed about its business."

As a vice-president of the NDP, Mel Watkins has a unique position for a politician: he ran — and won — on a strictly hard-line platform, leaving him with a free conscience as far as the right and centre of the party is concerned. He ran on a platform of leftwing agitation, and he has a few promises for his followers.

He hopes to forge a strong alliance with farmers' unions, and will travel west soon to talk with them.

He will use his power as a vice president to see that there is "a lot of radical input" into the committee the party set up to rewrite the NDP statement of guiding principles.

Through the May convention and the committee on extra-parliamentary activity, he will continue to try to build a larger left movement in Canada, a left movement that has a Canadian, not a continentalist, orientation.

To this end, he says, the Waffle group will set up left-wing caucuses within each provincial party. "Even," he smiles, "in Ontario."

Hey gang! Here's a trick you can do. Paste this picture on a computer card and run it through the computer to see what it says. Or if you're an engineer, you can probably read it right off this picture. Send in your answers to Varsity Review Contest 3, 91 St. George St.

TO ALL CAMPUS CLUBS

PLEASE SUBMIT BUDGET
IF YOU WISH GRANTS FROM SAC

Deadline TODAY

External Affairs Commission,
SAC Office

THE SALTY DOG
Discotheque
THE SALTY DOG
DISCOTHEQUE
Open Fri., Sat & Sun.,
8 p.m.-3 a.m.
Special Student rates for weekends of Nov. 7th-9th and 14th-16th only $1.00 Admission with Student Card. 964-7060
482 Yonge St.,
1 Block North of College

RESTAURANT TAVERN
Steele's
Charcoal-Broiled
Sizzling STEAKS
Served in Burgundy Wine
and succulent ROAST BEEF
Entertainment nightly in the
UPSTAIRS VENETIAN LOUNGE & BAR
Appearing Nightly ANDY NICCOLS
Steele's
TAVERN-RESTAURANT
EM. 8-5180 349 YONGE ST.
(Fully Licensed)

FINAL WEEK
THAT SUPER MUSICAL CLOSES NOV. 15
JACQUES BREL IS ALIVE AND WELL AND LIVING
IN PARIS
PLAYHOUSE THEATRE - 1605 BAYVIEW
STARRING THE ORIGINAL CANADIAN CAST
TIMES AND PRICES: SUN., TUES., WED., THURS. AT 8:30 P.M. -
2.00, 3.00, 4.00, FRI. AT 9:45 and SAT. AT 6:15 and 9:45 - 3.00, 4.00, 5.00
• STUDENTS •
$2.00 ALL PERFORMANCES EXCEPT LATE FRI. & SAT.

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
Toronto Professional Bldg,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 101, Ontario

IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS

Telephone 364-0973

STUDENTS...

SAVE

50% and be 100%

INFORMED!

The Northern Miner

Canada's National Mining Newspaper
77 River Street — Toronto 247, Ontario

Canada's mining industry continues to grow at a hectic rate and outpaces all other industrial groups. The future calls for accelerated expansion.

By knowing the facts, and they appear each Thursday in The Northern Miner, you can keep abreast of the mining industry and what it means to Canada. Read all the news of all the mines—all the metals.

A special $5.00 per year subscription rate (regular price $10.00 per year) is offered only to University students.

Take advantage of this special student offer by completing and mailing the coupon below with your $5.00 remittance.

Name _____
Address _____
University _____
Year of Graduation _____ Faculty _____

龍門客棧

CHINESE KUNG-FU IN TORONTO

DRAGON INN

PRESENTED BY C.O.S.A. CINEMA
COLOUR- WITH ENGLISH SUBTITLE
CINEMASCOPE- 30' x 15' SCREEN
LOCATION- CONVOCATION HALL
TIME- 7:15, 9:30 FRIDAY NOV. 21
ADMISSION- $1.50 PER PERSON
TICKETS- ADVANCE TICKET
AVAILABLE AT 33, ST. GEORGE

CLASSIFIEDS

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Day you buy a diamond" H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416, 921-7702.

TYPING theses, essays, notes, charts, English, French, other languages. Mimeographing, electric typewriters. Mary Dale Stott (M. Dawes) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225, 922-7624.

UNIVERSITY AREA Town House, $2900 down. Six rooms, completely renovated, 71 Ulster Ave. Only $23,900! Good conditions and easy terms. Gertler and Winer Rt. 927-4492.

BOOK SALE — All new and used books half price — Nov. 1-7, 10-10 a.m. - 7 p.m. Volume One - 427 Spadina Ave. (just south of College) 924-3844

M.G.B. OWNERS — new fiberglass hard tops, with tinted sunroof and side windows. Custom-made for M.G.B. All colours. Call 923-1704, after 5.

JAZZ CONCERT Northern Secondary School Jazz Ensemble in Concert Fri., Nov. 7th 8 PM Admission $1.00 NSS — 851 Mt Pleasant Rd

ONE BEDROOM of two bedroom apt available on Madison Ave. Call 964-7854

NEW COLLEGE DANCE Society presents the second of a series of "Friday'smyday" "SOUL DANCES" Every Friday afternoon 4-7 p.m. — New College (Classic & Huron) downstairs. IT'S FREE!

New College Motion Picture Society presents MIA FARROW in "ROSEMARY'S BABY", two Showings Sunday 6:30 & 9:00 p.m. New College (Weinman) Dining Hall (21 Classic Ave.) Admission $1.00.

MALE OR FEMALE assistants needed for Cub Packs, Boys B-11 North Toronto, call Brian 488-6614

SALTY DOG DISCOTHEQUE Will rent premises Monday to Thursday, Day or Evening. For information call A. Curry 964-7060 or 633-2677

HOUSE FOR RENT 8 Rooms Parking Central $275 922-6646

LOST: Would the magnanimous bastard who took a black umbrella with a leather handle at Hart House Dance Sat. nite, please return it. Phone Don, 534-5336

WANTED — Girl to share 2 bedroom flat with 2 other girls. Monthly rent $70. In Bathurst-Bloor area. For details call 531-7394

OPEN PARTY at McGill. All welcome. Delta Upsilon Frat. 3434 McTavish Montreal 9 p.m. - 2 a.m. Free Band, beer. Tonight Fri. Nov 7

LOST: 1 black key case in vicinity of Textbook Store or old Physics Building on Friday, Oct 31. Please return to No. 431, New College DANCE to the SOUL SOULSOUNDS of the "Mount Misery Music Company "TONIGHT!" 8:30 p.m. New College Babes - $1.00, Studs - $1.50 The odd couple - $3.00 Virgins free! (Must show proof)

GIRLS BLED — So do Guys Today, for the last time. Sig Sam Library, & U.C. Junior Common Room. Save a Life, don't let somebody die!

TUTORING in Mathematics and Statistics for undergraduate and engineering students by an experienced teacher (M.Sc. Queen's). Also mathematics for high school students. Call 920-1819

ARTS and SCIENCE

Final Year Students

Today, the Chartered Accountant plays one of the most exciting roles in business management. He tackles complex and fascinating problems. For the professionally-trained man the scope is limitless.

Discuss career opportunities with Clarkson, Gordon representatives, on campus

Nov. 10, 11 & 14

Appointments should be made through the Student Placement Office. If this time is not convenient, please contact us directly. 368-2751

Clarkson, Gordon & Co.
CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Halifax - Saint John - Quebec - Montreal - Ottawa - Toronto
Hamilton - Kitchener - London - Windsor - Thunder Bay - Winnipeg
Regina - Calgary - Edmonton - Vancouver - Victoria

the great white wonder bootleg dylan

The new Dylan album has been called The Great White Wonder. Actually, it doesn't have a name. The 2 lp's come in a plain white folder with not a word on it.

The album is a mixed collection of Dylan material taped off radio and TV over the past six or seven years — a record of Dylan's career from its beginning up to the present.

Nobody knows who produced the album — which is just as well, since its distribution is highly illegal (the records seem to have been pressed and packaged in Japan). Columbia, the record company Dylan is contracted to, has already sued for an injunction against further sale of the album by record stores. If they ever find the producers there's likely to be a serious lawsuit.

In the meantime, sale of The Great White Wonder continues. Somebody is driving around from store to store all over the United States and Canada unloading cartons of records.

Sale of the album (at least in Toronto) hasn't been that fast. It's not really suited to the casual listener for several reasons. First, being tapes off the radio, the fidelity is extremely poor. Only a dedicated Dylan fan could have the patience to listen to it. Second, many of the songs are extremely early (remember the civil rights movement?). It's a fantastic document if you're interested in Dylan's history, but for the most part it's not rock.

However, if Dylan's seeming changes of heart over the years are important to you (that is, if you think Dylan's history is your own history), then the album is an occasion for a good deal of thought. In fact, the whole thing is positively eerie. Hearing tinny reproductions of home recordings and live performances, material that was meant to be forgotten as soon as it was heard, brings out aspects of Dylan that are usually passed over on his professional recordings. Instead of concentrating on the content of the lyrics or on the music, one concentrates on Dylan's different moods as they are revealed through the songs.

The result is uncanny. Dylan has always been complex and contradictory, perhaps as much so in the beginning as he has been more recently, certainly always far more so than his audience. The juxtapositions in Dylan's character are perfectly preserved on the album. Thus, amidst songs about being a "ramblin' worker," about Southern lynch mobs ("and they hang Hezekiah as high up as a pig-geon"), and about hoboes dying in the gutter ("he was only a hobo, but one more is gone leavin' nobody to sing his sad song"), all material from his folk-music days. Dylan can come up with some of the funniest personal reflection in all of pop music (the album has several cuts of Dylan just talking):

Hey, man, you ought to see some pictures of me. I'm not kiddin' . . . Um — I look like Marlon Brando, James Dean or somebody. You ought to see me . . . With the blue turtle-neck sweater . . .

This isn't to say that Dylan didn't mean what he said about social justice and that sort of thing — just that that wasn't all there was to him. Satire and irony have always been components of his outlook, especially his outlook on himself.

Just this is graphically illustrated in the rendition of Candy Man on the album. It's very much the same version of the song that Donovan does on his first album (circa 1965). But where Donovan comes off straight and innocent, Dylan can't help sounding like he's just playing around and it's all a big joke. It makes one think of the scene in the movie Don't Look Back where Donovan sings "To Sing For You" and Dylan says that it's really nice, and then proceeds to play "It's All Over Now, Baby Blue."

Listening to country music next to Dylan's earliest folk music suggests an interesting pattern (if I may indulge in rock metaphysics). The chief figure in the folk songs was the drifter ("But I am just a refugee As I go ramblin' around . . ."), the man on the outside, alone, wandering around. At the same time, there was the typical folk pre-occupation with civil rights, dealt with especially through song of outrage at atrocities and miscarriages of justice (songs about lynch mobs in Southern towns and guilty Klansmen going free). Dylan, of course, left this all behind him when he moved into rock.

His most recent move into country music is particularly significant since it involves a return to the world referred to in the early folk songs — only this time from exactly the opposite direction. With country music, Dylan is no longer the lonely drifter, but has settled down. He is a solid country citizen. And this is the music of the very people that the protest songs took offence with. Dylan now lives comfortably among them.

What it all means is hard to say. Dylan's motives are, no doubt, as complex now as they have always been.

r. d. schwartz

surprise at the poorhouse

The theatre doesn't tell us very often how to run our lives. And when it does, the message doesn't leave much room for art. A notable exception is "Two Soldiers" playing today at one o'clock in the Victoria College Gymnasium, put on by the Poorhouse Theatre.

Michael Bawtree has translated and directed this play by a young Colombian playwright, Carlos Reyes, making the most of three props and stark lighting to create effects of tremendous impact. The play is a dialogue between two soldiers sent by the government to put down a strike by banana workers. One questions the morality of their mission, the other doesn't. We watch the dialogue slowly awaken political consciousness in the soldiers, and through the theatrical medium, in ourselves. It is difficult not to be moved by the simplicity of the argument — there is no overt rhetoric, no theory. Human beings caught in a predicament which we are thankful, and guilty, not to be part of.

The program opens with a reading of "Contradictions," an extended poem by another Colombian, Enrique Buenaventura. The four factors read the sequences individually and in chorus. The poetry is again simple and powerful if only because of the immense suffering which the lines convey. These are cries from the underworld, where there is no possibility of release. Art's only justification is that articulated pain is better than silence.

mark czarnecki

d i s c c o l u m

Stink — McKenna MENDELSON
MAINLINE — Liberty LBS 83251

A local group playing gross-out blues — this is the band's own definition, but it's a gimmick in this album. In spite of some good lead guitar & vocals the 'home-spun' touches are too much. When they settle into something less image-conscious they'll probably be very good.

Aoxomoxoa — GRATEFUL DEAD —
Warner WS 1790

Mmmmm. Yum. Yum. It's really slow easy stuff. You can see the guitarist hearing each note before he — lets — it — drop. And it's all clean & magical. Mountains of the Moon especially. All this and an electric-organic album cover.

With A Little Help From My Friends —
JOE COCKER — A & M SP 4182

It's great! An Englishman who doesn't just imitate soul. There's something full and satisfying in the perfectly executed breaks: whether it's the army of organs, the back up girls or (on "Help From My Friends") Joe Cocker himself. Stevie Winwood & Matthew Fisher lead the backup group of Cocker's 'friends'.

FAT MATTRESS — Polydor 543.075 is ordinary. Contains Noel Redding of Jimi Hendrix and terrible lyrics. LSD muzak created by freaked-in computers. Noted for its blandness.

Bless It's Pointed Little Head — JEFFERSON AIRPLANE — RCA LSP-4133

This is a live album. It is supposed to be blues. But they haven't completed the style change. And Grace Slick has no guts. Although it's tasteful (as always) and pleasant listening, it never quite takes off.

daug walters

'other sounds'

Several years ago the corporate fathers of CHUM Ltd. decided that classical music returns very unclassical profits, and turned the company's FM outlet, CHUM-FM to the then unexploited field of "progressive rock". The new product's personality exploded into big business, and CHUM's shareholders were eminently pleased.

Not so pleased were the occasional freaks, like myself, that really do like to listen to the so-called "classical music" that CHUM-FM's pullout eliminated from the listening spectrum in Toronto. Alas, it seemed that commercial radio couldn't afford the luxury of classical programming. The alternative (god bless socialism) was non-commercial radio, either government or institutional.

Rare, but scarcely feeble, is the current classical scheduling of CJRT (91.1), a fully professional station broadcasting 24 commercial-less hours a day in stereo, courtesy the dollars and control of its owner, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute.

"CJRT doesn't intend to compete with anybody," says Ron McKee, assistant manager of the station. "Our classical programming is an attempt to develop a unique service to a small but very real segment of the public."

Far from dull, programmes like Michael John's "Heritage", two hours of baroque music heard Sunday nights from 8 to 10, are particularly useful for Sunday night essay-spewing, smoking, lovemaking or even Varsity article writing, particularly if you happen to lack John's 1500-record baroque music library.

McKee admits the station shies from heavy use of relatively modern composers like Mahler in the daytime, yet Prokofiev and Mozart can blissfully coexist in the station's evening concerts. Likewise do superb tapes of the Cleveland Symphony (possibly North America's finest orchestra) in summer concert at Blossom Centre, and Angel Records' new releases of the USSR Symphony.

Weeknights from 10 to midnight, a large bearded man named Ted O'Reilly plays an unusually catholic jazz show ranging from The Original Dixieland Jass (sic) Band to Ornette Coleman. The show probably doesn't earn the adjective "hip", nor does its DJ. But the music is very nice.

McKee's current project is an exploration of the non-institutional, educational possibilities of radio. "Radio-study" is a nightly one hour series of formal lectures, aimed at over-thirty types who can't (or are too smart to) spend some time at University, but still would like some information on miscellaneous subjects, like the History of Music or Human Behaviour.

"Radiostudy", or CJRT itself, are scarcely revolutionary. But they are eminently listenable. My god, I even caught myself listening to a lecture one night — bird migration or something. And damned if I'm over thirty, yet.

thomas d. o'connor

SALUDOS AMIGOS! PANCHO TACO

COMBINATION SPECIALS

Mexican Fiesta $1.69

Enchiladas, taco, burrito, Pancho con Carne, Pancho beans, corn chips, and fresh chef's salad. This can be called a Mexican sampling. An opportunity to taste many of the varieties of Mexican food.

Bushel-O-Tacos $4.95

8 Tacos, Pancho con Carne, Pancho Beans, Taco Sauce, Corn Chips and Chef's Salad. A party in a bushel.

Mexi-Cheese Crisp Fiesta $4.95

8 Mexi-Cheese crisps, Pancho con carne, our own special Pancho con carne, special Pancho Taco sauce, corn chips and fresh chef's salad.

Enchiladas Poblanas $4.95

8 Enchiladas, Pancho beans, Pancho con Carne, Corn Chips, Enchiladas sauce, Pancho sour cream, chopped onions and fresh chef's salad.

SPECIAL DISCOUNT TO ALL STUDENTS WITH A.T.I. CARD
MINIMUM DELIVERY ORDER $3.95

967 Eglinton Ave. W.
782-8751

the Villager shoe shoppes

The BOOTEE

Beautiful and Young grey - navy - tan - brown
- black

Glove leathers only 15.00

OPEN Thursday and Friday nites.

C.O.O. Orders Accepted.
Credit and Chargex cards honored.

126 BLOOR STREET TEL: 921-1779

he strikes out

hooker's batting .250

"Sad Night" sang John Lee Hooker, and a sad night it was. Hooker (playing at the Colonial until Sunday) showed his contempt for the audience by arriving over an hour late, and then rubbed it in by referring to the evening as a "warm-up." Supposedly, the "warm-up" remark would have been more palatable if the Colonial management had arranged a special "warm-up" cover charge, but since this was not the case, Hooker's remark was inexcusable.

All of Hooker's troubles were not of his own making, however. He was severely handicapped by the so-called backing of the Atlanta Blues Band. I don't want to say that the Atlanta Blues Band is the worst blues band of all time, simply because I haven't listened to all the blues bands ever formed. Last week, Big Mama Thornton was able to whip them into shape with small gestures and comments. Hooker didn't possess the same control, for his furious glances at the drummer did nothing to tone him down (and a drummer who can knock the suds off your beer and leave you with a migraine needs a lot of toning down.)

Because of the loud drumming, the songs "Stairway," and "I Got My Eyes on You" were almost unintelligible. Only two songs really came off in the first set. "Baby Talk" succeeded because it was such a hard driving number that it didn't matter how loud every body played.

"Serve Me Right" worked for the opposite reason. It was such a soft, reflective number that even the drummer cottoned on to the fact that he had to cool it. Hooker's guitar work on this number was sparse but extremely effective. He kept chord changes down to the absolute minimum, and even gave up chording completely at times so that he could damp the strings and give the effect of a soft snare drum.

Two out of eight wasn't a very good batting average, so I left after the first set, nursing my headache and lamenting the flat beer.

— Alex French

love! death! reality!

incongruousness to the rescue

A morality musical based on a speech from Shakespeare may strike you as an incongruous contribution to campus drama. Yet Jim Belts (librettist, composer, and director of the piece) is staging The Ten of Us at Vic, and one of the plays' points of interest is that very incongruity.

Student plays are supposed to be pretentious, self-serious, and more tract than drama; or so runs the conventional wisdom. If comedy is essayed, ordinarily the result is superficiality or a heavy handed adaptation of stale one-liners. In the main, The Ten of Us eludes both pitfalls.

There are plenty of opportunities to go wrong, most of which are firmly rejected. The play is organized as a series of sketches, running from childhood to old age. The characters are all would-be actors who take the various roles (soldier, adolescent lover, judge, king, fool, old man.) This self-conscious delusion principle is one very easily founded upon; the play's deprecating humor saves it. Instead of a mishmash of talk about "love," "death," and "reality," we get spoofs of that kind of syrup. The scene which comes closest to not working is one where a take-off on war melodrama occurs; and the only defect there is not in the idea (which is tightly conceived and well staged), but in the fact that John Wayne is really too easy a target.

Mr. Belts' individual performance as the head "actor" in the plays-within-a-play is marred only by an unruly voice. (This may well settle down by performance time.) Other especially attractive performances are turned in by Marie Nichols (whose deadpan agility is first class), Cathy Falls (an ingenue-type without the saccharine) and Bill Ostrander (his posturing is worthy of Gilbert and Sullivan.)

These paragons of high spirits may be viewed at the Vic New Administration Building, Room 3, on the 7th and 8th of November (Friday and Saturday.) Curtain time is 8:00, and the admission only 50c. The stage is cramped, making production numbers difficult, but then there's a lot going on.

— J. Yeager

nothing dirigible about them

zeppelins don't bomb

At the O'Keefe Centre Sunday afternoon things seemed to be dying a slow and painful death until Led Zeppelin came on stage and took charge — singer Robert Plant wearing snake-skin boots, lead guitar Jimmy Page in shiny brown patent leather boots and shiny mauve pants that looked as though they were sewn right on him, bassist John Paul Jones, and drummer John Bonham, all of them with flowing shoulder length hair.

Plant's first comment was, "this is all very Establishment, isn't it", but it was obvious from the start that neither he nor the rest of the group was going to let it bother them. They broke into "Communication Break-down" — several thousand watts of music power, a gale of sound organized into thrusting bass lines, shattering chords and hypnotic rhythms and the audience forgot what a down O'Keefe Centre was.

Jimmy Page was probably playing as well as he ever has, producing dazzling runs and dizzying slides of tremendous drive and force which his four sets of loudspeakers put across with soul-shaking intensity.

Robert Plant's personality, expressed through his voice, is equally powerful. He doesn't sing lyrics as much as screams, yells, and moans of pure emotion. Together the two of them strut and dance around the stage, showing off like a pair of roosters.

Led Zeppelin's appeal is hard to pin down, and can really only be experienced live. At first the appeal seems to be based on sex, and the erotic does play an important part.

But sex is there only because it is the only emotion basic enough and powerful enough to match the elemental passion of their music. This music is not complicated. It is in fact deliberately simplified in some aspects, using simple chord structures, and often very repetitive. Yet this is necessary to effectively convey its awesome and hypnotic power.

Led Zeppelin gets right to the heart of rock, and this is why their concert was so good. It's man's use of the unlimited power that machines have given him as an extension of his will, applied to music. There may be other groups more musical in a general way than Led Zeppelin, but none with a better understanding of the power of rock, and then they play live, nothing, not even O'Keefe Centre, can get in their way.

nicholas schmidt

have you got a dandruff problem?

Fallout, one of Anansi's Spiderline series of first novels by Canadian writers, is set in the Ontario of the fifties — the brief age that saw Elliot Lake rise from pine forest to become a later-day Klondike in new-found uranium fields.

On the one hand, the permanence of rock and fir in the Laurentian Shield of prehistory; on the other, the technology to change the landscape overnight with machines and capital from Toronto. And in the middle, the laborers — immigrants, French and English Canadians, Indians.

Peter Such was born in England and came to Canada at 14, old enough to remember the civilization of the homeland and yet young enough to catch the adventure of a land where the frontier was but a few hours north-west of Toronto by rail.

Something about Such's style that stresses roughness, something about the long, rambling sentences with their sparse punctuation and frequent omission of articles that makes them unpolished, unexpected, suited to the roughness of a frontier town. Apt, but difficult to read for the first sixty pages or so.

Peter Such is a writer, generally a good writer. More importantly, he is a young man with something to say about the global struggle of the natural order against advancing technology. In a largely undeveloped land, with millions of acres in which to experiment, we are in a unique position to reverse the inevitability of the American nightmare — provided, we heed their mistakes. Early American pioneers crossing the Appalachians also thought that they had found an inexhaustible Eden — instead, they founded Pittsburgh. Save an unexpected market collapse, we almost founded Elliot Lake.

Fallout is neither a novel of heroes nor the anti-heroes now so much in vogue. Perhaps because of the difficult style, only two of the dozen or so characters come through with any clarity. Then again, perhaps Such intended it that way to draw out all his characters in the technological boom atmosphere. All, that is, except for two Indian laborers who were raised in the neighborhood long before some ass found uranium there.

Peter Such, Fallout, Anansi, $1.95.

tim inkster

no not the whip . . .
anything but the whip . . .
anything ?

Viewing De Sade can only be regarded as the purest masochism . . . the film is so bad that it can only be recommended for young men with Oedipal problems and for old men with failing memories.

Regrettably De Sade will not content itself with being a flesh film. It pretends to be a serious treatment of the twisted values of the greatest pervert of them all. The film's decor, a sort of Rosedale Regency, hints that the period is actually the naughtily waning years of the eighteenth century. Sure enough, a prophecy is even made concerning the French Revolution near the end of the film by a fortune-teller who isn't really a fortune-teller, but John Huston in drag.

This sort of falsification strikes the note of the meaninglessness to be found in De Sade. The effort involved in portraying the hero's life in a series of psycho-dramas strains too hard against the two score mamarries, innumerable thighs and quasi-lascivious gestures which punctuate the 'message-oriented' portions of the film. Simply stated, De Sade is pretentious.

John Huston lurches about looking liverish and porcine as the Abbe de Sade, who corrupts our Hero, and treats the dull Mr. Dullea to a brisk review of the sewers of a life passed in sin and lechery. He is another version of a new-type of character — "The Aging Freak with a Sordid Past". It seems the Abbe really enjoyed whipping his nephew in his formative years and especially enjoys inflicting "This Is Your Life" stage shows on the young de Sade as well as on the suffering viewer.

Most segments of the psychotic dramas in De Sade are direct steals from other films. Remember Bloom in the court of accusing ladies in Ulysses? Remember de Sade (alias Keir Dullea) in 2001, aging, seeing himself in various age-perspectives, and being made up to seem less wooden than he usually is? Remember gauzy sequences with girls in white dresses in Elvira Madigan? Remember good movies?

The main character — Louis Alphonse Donatien de Sade — is ineptly portrayed by Keir Dullea whose only concession to sadism is that he occasionally wears leather vests and boots. The poor, pudgy Marquis would never have recognized this blue-eyed mannequin.

Orgy scenes are emphasized by a magenta filter and swirling effects to confuse the myopic senior citizens in the audience and to baffle the ever-vigilant censors. As in Anthony Newley's ego-drama, Heiromymous Merkin, all the bare and unexciting flesh just generally writes about enjoying its own leanness or stands stupidly suggesting a line-up at a chest clinic. Perhaps someone out there enjoys Keir Dullea kissing an anonymous navel, but I suspect that the obscenity and sickness in De Sade lies in the fact that masses of unsuspecting people are being exposed to this perverting material.

sharon dunfield

next time I'll explain to you what I'm singing
wha?

An ancient Greek, (his mother named him Aristotle), once defined a play as an action with a beginning, a middle and an end.

This doesn't seem to be a particularly profound comment until you consider James Saunders' "Next Time I'll Sing To You" which is currently playing at the Glenmorris Church, under the auspices of the Centre for the Study of Drama. You see, this play has a beginning, and it has an end (thank God!). But Saunders attempts to defy Aristotle by putting absolutely nothing in between.

As in Beckett's "Godot", waiting is the principal action of the play. The players themselves sit around waiting for the play to begin. Then they are only killing time until the climax comes, asking all sorts of metaphysical questions about life, death and dung beetles. Insofar as there is any plot, it centres upon the presentation of a "top-sided once-nighly dream world." During the presentation, one of the actors becomes involved in his own portrayal of a hermit-self-proclaimed saint. He is systematically torn apart by the other players for daring to feel emotions as human as grief, pain and pity. The hermit-player suffers a ritualistic crucifixion, and if you were waiting for a climax, there it is.

But somehow director Tony Stephenson and his cast of five seem genuinely comfortable with the play. They are all polished in their delivery — particularly Harry Lane as the Hermit, and Pam Campion as something or other, and they fortunately set a brisk pace which saves the one quality which the play has. Particularly effective is the unsympathetic way the players break down the barriers between the stage and the audience. They mock the audience for sitting and waiting for the entertainment to begin, for fidgeting and shifting their bottoms when nothing does happen, and for being smug and bourgeois when they don't understand why nothing happens (the old futility of man's existence bit.)

At one point in the play, Dust, one of the characters turns to the audience and says in all sincerity, "We are not discussing the man, or the reason for the man, but the reason for the discussion of the reason for the man." If this makes any sense to you at all, then they're waiting for you on Glenmorris on Friday and Saturday night.

lorne fienberg

akakakakakak -
akakakakakak -

In the past few years there has been an alarming change in our approach to things like war and violence in general. Civil unrest and the tragedy of Viet Nam have given bloodshed a bad name, although it is more than ever in vogue. Movies like Easy Rider and The Wild Bunch exploit violence, but make it clear that it is ugly and inhuman. They call on our moral conscience to be revolted by the sight of gore and to shout out against the futility of man's slaughter of men.

Well that's what's so good about The Battle of Britain. It is a movie without a moral conscience. War is not tragic and futile, it is heroic, ennobling and the phrase "dulce et decorum est pro patria mori" is the keynote. You know who to root for and who to root against. The bad guys win for a little while but you know before you walk into the theatre that British courage, perseverance and know-how are going to win out in the end. All you have to do is sit back and enjoy it. (If you can stand it.)

For model airplane buffs, children under five years of age, and R.A.F. veterans there is the finest collection of spitfires, messerschmitts and what have you, ever assembled on a movie screen. What a shame that someone went to all the trouble of building them just so they could be blown to bits in an endless orgy of fire and blood-letting.

The continuous air battles which comprise over half the movie are in fact sheer artistry. The film is actualistic and precise in every detail and the fantastic explosions and wipe-outs look nothing but genuine (although they were all filmed on a movie lot.) Nothing can detract from the skill used in filming these segments of the movie. So much for what is good about the movie.

It must be kind of obvious already that this is not a very thoughtful movie. It uses a thin and questionable veil of historical accuracy to disguise the fact that there is absolutely no drama nor human interest of any kind in the entire movie. There is very little dialogue, and this was probably a very shrewd move since whatever there was, was hopelessly banal and ignorant.

A large impressive cast including Michael Caine, Trevor Howard, Ralph Richardson and Laurence Olivier plod self-consciously through the movie, grimacing, looking determined and showing exceedingly large amounts of British stiff-upper-lip. There is not a single creditable or credible performance in the movie, except for Michael Caine's dog who whimpers knowingly as his master's plane gets shot to smithereens over the Channel.

loren fienberg

Orford string quartet

Last Sunday's performance by the Orford String Quartet at the Edward Johnson Building demonstrated the best and the worst of the string quartet as a musical medium. This young ensemble, the quartet-in-residence at the University of Toronto, at times put forth a beautifully whole sound. At other times the youth of the group showed as imbalance among the instruments. The first violin tanged from mezzoforte to fortissimo resulting in top-heavy ensemble playing, especially in view of the rather subdued cello. The discrepancy between first and second violin was especially apparent in parallel passages for the two violins.

The program began with the Quartet No. 3 by Juan Cristosomo de Arriaga, a seldom played work, written at the age of 15, by a little-known contemporary of Beethoven. All the enthusiasm of the Orford Quartet couldn't conquer the thematic triteness of the work which smacked of early Beethoven, late Mozart, and perennial shmalz.

The second work, Quartet No. 2 by Oscar Morawetz, was the high point of the evening. First performed in 1956, this vibrant, rhythmically driving piece exploits the technical and expressive capacities of the string quartet to the fullest; and the Orford Quartet played with depth and intensity, urging the work towards its exciting conclusion.

The evening closed with the Quintet No. 2 by Mendelssohn. This quintet, for two violins, two violas and cello was performed with the assistance of Raphael Hillier, violist formerly of the Juilliard String Quartet. Mr. Hillier's part was a minor one but he played with understanding, overshadowed though he was by the volume produced by his colleagues. The first movement seemed too fragile a vehicle to carry the vehemence with which the players attacked it; further, intonation problems, especially in the first violin and cello detracted from the rushing joy this romantic music is meant to convey. By the last movement however the quintet had intonation and expression under control and the work finished with a glowing buoyant excitement that is Mendelssohn's trademark.

tony jahn

bookprints

hello

There is really very little to say about Anansi's Spiderline Editions, all of which are first novels by Canadian writers and therefore worth ten times their weight in Stephen Leacock reprints. Anansi has shown us that there really are good young novelists around and about, although up to now, there doesn't seem to have been anybody hip enough to print them. Seems they've been there all along. So I pronounce Anansi good and Spiderline good, and aside from the fact that I don't like the typography of The Telephone Pole (crooked margins, letters very unevenly spaced, etc.), I have nothing but plaudits for the concept.

I hadn't read ten pages of The Telephone Pole before I put it down again. It made me want to write something myself — right away, while I still felt excited about what it was doing to me. This is my ultimate criterion. There are countless books lying around my apartment unread because I felt I just had to write something that the book had given me. This is the only reaction I ever have to literature that I have absolute faith in.

However, I do have some faith in the following:

The book is mad; and despairing; and cynical; and very funny. It is written in a curiously direct kind of associative writing that puts me in mind of an illiterate Flann O'Brien. The effect however is marvellous. It relies on a simple, direct-statement kind of poetry that implies nothing by its tone and everything by its content:

Dorothy is a silent person. She likes highways and river-banks and unknown cities and long bridges. And that is the reason why I am going to murder Dorothy. I am going to murder Dorothy because I feel like murdering Dorothy. I like murdering people. That's the sort of person I am. Have you every murdered a stranger? I've murdered a few strangers. It is exquisite. Especially when they're perfect.

So. Sometimes it sounds a little like a monologue. That's probably why, despite its cruelty, and its hopelessness, and its depravity, it is very funny. All the time I was reading it, I kept thinking of Jackie Vernon delivering it: a Jackie Vernon who had killed his mother, allowed her corpse to lie on the living room sofa for a few weeks while he said absurd things and smoked cigarettes and was sometimes happy, sometimes not, had tea with a crazy little old lady with dragons on her dress, then came directly to the studio without cleaning up, (clothes or mind) and since the characters seem to fade into each other anyway, persuading you that there's really only one voice in the novel, engaged in an endless conversation with itself. It has to talk, because then everyone (including itself) will come to the full and exquisite realization of the absurdity and the loneliness and the deja vu of it all. A common enough literary pre-occupation these days, but a very uncommon treatment of it.

Too often, a novel like this sums up everything the novelist can do for a while. He's really reached the bottom — Dante's inner circle of those who can only sum-up one quick brilliant picture of degradation before they're burnt out. But anyone who can make such utter emptiness funny, and in a queer sort of way, triumphant, surely has more than this one level.

The few things that Marois tries to do in this novel, he does very well. It's certainly not the great psychological novel. It's certainly not great. And, while you'll never meet any of its characters on the street, you may meet them somewhere inside your own head.

Real life isn't so exciting and real and utterly hopeless and so frequently happy as this, but the symbolic potential is there. I can see Thomas in several of my friends, and there's at least one Dorothy I could have strangled.

A funny, inconsistent, child's-vision-of-death book. But it'll get you.

bob allen

The Telephone Pole Russell Marois, Spiderline Edition (Anansi Press) $1.95

headshaker in the land of nod

In the last part of his posthumously published autobiographical review of his own life, Jung, after many surprising and surprising insights suddenly speaks of evil.

"We stand face to face with the terrible question of evil and do not even know what is before us, let alone what to pit against it. And even if we did know, we still could not understand 'how it could happen here'."

He agrees with Fuller, Gurdjieff, Bern, Leary and the many (but still not enough) others, who have seriously studied the logic of the psyche, in seeing that the vast majority of humanity is unconscious, somnambulant and generally unaware. His reference to the need for a conscious "myth" is his personal effort to suggest a way that people can unify their awareness of their relationship to their experiences within and without.

His interest in alchemy, along with virtually every other discipline, gave him some unique perspectives that repeatedly prove to be profoundly beneficial.

Quoting the "leadern" statement of an archetypal politician, he not-so-magically-at-all transmutes it to pure psychological "gold" simply by following it through. . . . "a naive statesman proudly declaring that he has no 'imagination for evil'." Jung enlarges it meaningfully: "Quite right: we have no imagination for evil, but evil has us in its grip. Some do not want to know this, and others are identified with evil. That is the psychological situation in the world today: some call themselves Christian and imagine that they can trample so-called evil underfoot merely by willing to; others have succumbed to it and no longer see the good. . . ."

Jung perceives the need "of a myth commensurate with the situation". That is, sufficiently epic to effect the alchemical initiation of transforming our leaden and poisonous situation, to the "gold" of unified consciousness.

If you can, and want to see, it's happening.

The book is Memories Dreams Reflections. Read it. He is a good friend.

jon karsemeyer

Memories Dreams Reflections C. G. Jung 450 pages approx $3.

king's comedy of marriage

In 1956, a fledgling filmmaker called Allan King directed Skidrow, the first short to emerge from the CBC's Film Department in Vancouver. In 1967, Warrendale, King's unflinching probe into the lives of a group of emotionally-disturbed children, was screened during Critic's Week at Cannes and was awarded the "Art et Essai" Special Prize. "What's past is prologue." Etc. Etc.

Last evening, Allan King's recently-released portrait of marriage, A Married Couple, premiered to a full house at Cinecity. The following remarks are excerpts from an interview, taped earlier this week at King's home, during which he spoke, among other things, of his latest film.

Review: Why did you make A Married Couple?

King: Well, because it seemed like a good commercial idea . . . no, not really. I suppose there were a lot of factors involved. One was that it was something in which everyone is involved and you usually look for something which is of concern to everybody. After Warrendale when I was thinking of what to do next, it seemed to me that no one had ever explored marriage in this way. I was intrigued with the risk, with the gamble of trying to get at what is an extremely private experience. I've always known that if you're dealing with a social message or a social issue, that that's where the drama lies — it has its own momentum. It always seemed to me that it was much more difficult to make a personal film in this sort of way. And a secondary reason was that I've been very much concerned with the issue personally as a child.

Review: How long were you in production with the film?

King: Too long. Almost three years raising the money. That's a very exasperating process and immensely wasteful. I got the funding settled in the spring of '68. Then I started to narrow down my choices. I had talked to a number of couples. I became more and more aware of the amount of time that it takes to know enough about a couple, to really be aware of what they're like and not to just intellectually pick them apart or psych them. I found myself being more and more drawn to Billy and Antoinette Edwards who I knew quite well from four years previously.

Review: After seeing A Married Couple, it seemed to me that your film had a sort of built-in distancing mechanism contained within it. You get a very disoriented view of this married couple since they don't react to one another in the same way as the typically middle-class couple with whom we're familiar.

King: I have noticed that a kind of distortion occurs. There isn't, in fact, much mental brutality on the part of Billy and Antoinette. What does occur is very hard hammering. I've seen all sorts of married couples viciously cut one another, but Billy and Antoinette don't cut each other. They don't personally wound each other. Antoinette pushes Billy, but she doesn't nag him. Billy hammers Antoinette, but he doesn't try to destroy her as a person. It's emotionally very, very upsetting because we can't forget the times when we've really shouted at someone. We've all really blocked them out or else we don't even do it. So when we're faced with it we find it upsetting I think. I personally don't find it that upsetting. I get fascinated with it. In fact, there's probably, in this film and the past one, a preoccupation with it. But the film is really a comedy.

Review: It seemed to me that it could very well have been a documentary made by Edward Albee. There was always a tinge of the absurd. Did you intentionally stress that in the editing?

King: Yes. The main thing in the editing was to include the humour and the wit and the ridiculousness and particularly to keep tensions in balance. You can only hold tensions tight for so long until you've got to release them. I think the point you made earlier is a question of whether they were held too long and perhaps should have been released earlier, particularly in the two key fight scenes which are too long. I don't think they are, but some people will inevitably feel that they were. The reactions to the film are extraordinarily individual in the same way that they were to Warrendale but rather more confined to the characters in the film.

When I say comedy, I mean it in the traditional sense. Chekhov always called his plays comedies. The Seagull is an anguished play and yet it's a comedy in the sense of the disparity between what people intend and the manner and mode of life. That discrepancy, I guess, is what comedy is basically about.

Review: Were any of the events that arose during the shooting of A Married Couple turned to your advantage or manipulated by you?

King: No. In this film, not as a matter of ideology or doctrine, I chose not to intervene in any way — not to require things of Billy and Antoinette or push events or even directly to talk to them about their feelings and things other than very early in the film in asking them to be as direct about their feelings as they could. I was anxious to record as unimpededly as possible.

Review: This film is a little different from other films that you have made. Warrendale was a film about disturbed kids, and since it was, I think that most people felt that they should feel concerned because of the theme and the concerns. But A Married Couple is about marriage — an almost inviable tradition . . .

King: Do you think that many people feel that nowadays?

Review: Well we protect marriage with so many safeguards — the political state is founded on marriage, the religious state is founded on it. I think that in Western society it is an inviable institution.

King: Well, I quarrel with that. I guess I tend to ascribe to a biological theory — that the reason there are a great number of institutions constructed around marriage is because it's a vital human relationship. I think that the confusion that occurs about marriage is that the forms which once ritualized and socialized it have become meaningless. We're really fed up with all the bullshit that goes with the state, the bullshit that goes with economics. All of those measures are now devoid of human contact and direct meaning. But because those forms are so abstracted as to be virtually meaningless . . . are bullshit . . . isn't to say that the way people are, by propensity, inclined to function together is wrong.

Review: A Married Couple, unlike Warrendale and unlike Skidrow, is not the kind of film that encourages a set of preconceptions before you enter the theatre.

King: All the earlier films I made hinged on a social issue. I never wanted them to be social tracts or sermons. Technically, at that time, I found it extremely difficult to deal with personal material in a documentary way. To a considerable degree, I left Canada and went to England for ten years because I really despaired at getting at the urban experience, getting at the people that live behind the iron mask of a city. I guess this film is a new step in the sense of being able to focus on personal motivations. Warrendale I intended to be that way and would have been had not Dorothy died.

Review: Is it possible to make a strictly objective documentary in the environment in which we live today?

King: No. It's a myth. It's not only a myth but it's a kind of irresponsibility. When you record events, you only take a chunk of them and that's necessarily subjective. I'm really not much interested in making documentaries and never have been. I don't think that my films are documentaries — they're stories that happen to involve people.

Review: You've had considerable experience with censorship. Could you briefly capsule the problems you met from the Ontario Board of Censors with A Married Couple?

King: I knew that it was going to be difficult because certain words aren't used in theatres. I knew that the censor would be faced with the dilemma of whether or not he felt that there would be community acceptance. This is assuming that you have to deal with a censor. The premise of censorship is an outrageous one and a totally unacceptable one. But censorship exists. It was really a matter of trying to demonstrate to the minister and to the censor that society wouldn't collapse and that it would be better to allow the film to be released than to repress it.

ian ritchie

watsUP

MUSIC

Now there are several main events coming up. First, for those who are getting into country music, JOHNNY CASH is bringing his show into Maple Leaf Gardens Monday night. There may still be a few tickets left. Then on Thursday, ARLO GUTHRIE comes to Massey Hall, and a week from Monday (Nov. 17), LAURA NYRO will be at Massey.

Elsewhere, there's blues of sorts at the Colonial Tavern, where JOHN LEE HOOKER plays with an inferior group over the weekend, and there will be jazz at Hait House next Wednesday when the RON COLLIER JAZZ ORCH. appears (tickets free from the hall porter). Collier's band will play music by Canadian jazz composers (cf. last year's record with Duke Ellington.)

On a different musical scene, the SAINT AUGUSTINE BOYS CHOIR sings at Eaton Auditorium Saturday at 8:30, and Sunday, the BOYD NEEL ORCHESTRA presents its second concert in Hart House at 7:30. Next week, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday, the TSO presents Benjamin Britten's WAR REQUIEM.

FREE THIS WEEK

Sunday afternoon at 3:00 the ORPHEUS CHOIR sings at the Art Gallery of Ontario, and later Sunday, at 8:30, there's a recital by two sopranos and harpsichord at the Metropolitan United Church (Queen & Church).

Monday at 5:00, PATRICK WEDD presents an organ recital in Convocation Hall. There's the free jazz in Hart House on Wednesday, and finally, on Thursday at 2:00 the BUFFALO BRASS WIND ENSEMBLE plays in the Johnson Building.

The Guided Pickie, a new coffee house at 174 Avenue Rd., is looking for amateur folk and folk-rock musicians. Anyone who is anxious to be heard should phone Kim Jones at 921-2051 or 925-4756.

NANCY COMES TO PENTICTON

We think it's about time to assure the countless readers whose telegrams and phone calls have been pouring into the Review's office in recent days — ROD MICKLEBURGH LIVES! He is in fact, as the photo above testifies, the living sports editor of the Penticton Herald. We weren't going to let you in on the secret, but we got tired of being continually waylaid by folks (I) anxious to know the real fate of the Yarsity's former beloved sports editor. And when his mother called the office, expressing her fears that her friends would soon start sending sympathy cards if we didn't retract our vicious rumours, we knew it was time. Until he gets fired for spitting on the floor, Rod will probably keep plodding through his crummy daily routines — like interviewing Nancy Green.

THEATRE

The Tempest — A Most Delicate Lobster combines the most exquisite dramatic poetry in the English language with the ultimate in theatrical possibility. Theatre Mickities current production is a sea-sorrow which drowns both.

Done in the round, the production suffers from the monotony of blocking which constantly works in a counter-clockwise circle. Timing, so much an issue in the text is lethargic and completely without dramatic pause. Production details from the mottled and unattractive costuming to some garish choreography, badly danced are pretty careless.

The cast does not bang together very well and the result is lack of fluidity.

The original music score is quite nice however although spoiled by lack of coordination with the singers and the dancers, and in Michael McCabe, director Barry Brodie has found a fairly good Prospero. Not quite quite a thoughtful enough performance, sadly, but the best in the cast. Terry Moore's Ariel is conceived in seriousness and her natural grace is detracted from a little by her tinny voice. Richard Dollinger and Patrick Elia are fairly adept in their portrayals of Sebastian and Antonio; inexplicably all the shipwrecked Milaneses look a bit like UCC boys on a half holiday.

The trouble with this presentation is that it gives a pedestrian reading of a play which simply does not exist on street level. A literary Tempest is "useless and pointless knowledge". The missing ingredient is magic.

hilarly mclaughlin

ART

A new young Toronto painter, Ben Woolfitt, will have his first show at York University, starting this Wed. Featuring some exceptionally large canvasses, the show goes on until Dec. 6 (hours 10 a.m. — 4 p.m.) The paintings are being displayed in the basement of Founders' College at York's main campus, Keele and Steeles.

Cover photo by len gilday

THEATRE

Poorhouse Theatre Company ("a media co-operative") has extended their production by two days. You can catch their performance of Two Soldiers and their reading of Contradictions, both contemporary Colombian works, today at 1:00 in Vic's Old Gym behind the Colonnade. Go if you're interested in South America and/or the theatre, or if you wonder what "media co-operative" means.

Another experiment opening on campus this week will be Thanatos, a four-man reading of poems about death. It's compiled and directed by Stephen Katz, sponsored by UC Players' Guild, and will happen 11-13 November at 8:30pm in UC's West Hall.

Mourning Becomes Electra is sold out in Hart House, so forget it unless you can get to the student postview on 20 November. Tickets will be cheaper then. Meanwhile Tango has seats available on weeknights.

Both St. Mike's Tempest and Vic's The Ten of Us opened last night and will be playing this weekend (the former, through Sunday, the latter, till Saturday only) in the auditoriums of their respective colleges.

Off-campus . . . The Price opens Monday at the Royal Alex, and The Ecstasy of Rita Joe, produced by the University Alumnae Dramatic Club and directed by Herb Whittaker, opens Thursday at Central Library.

mo'c

RADIO

The 1969 Massey Lectures will be given by the fiery Canadian philosopher George Grant of McMaster University. Professor Grant will devastate complacent and generally held views on Time As History in six lectures on Wednesdays beginning November 12 on AM's Ideas Network at 9:03 p.m. and Mondays and Thursdays on FM's Ideas beginning December 1 at 7:00 p.m.

TELEVISION

Hey, Hey, Hey — It's Fat Albert. In sort of a reverse Charlie Brown television special, the familiar voices and noises of the Bill Cosby gang, Weird Harold, Dumb Donald, Fat Albert and others will be animated for their football game against the ferocious Green Street Terrors to determine "the tackle championship of the whole world." Tomorrow night, Saturday, November 8 at 7:00 p.m. on channel 6.

radio and television....daniel mack

films....ian ritchie

associate....jack mccaffrey

editor....larry haiven

radio and television....daniel mack theatre....marion o'connor books....bob bossin and steve langdon

DRACHE: 2

cont'd from page 6

cess of reorganization in line with the corporate ideal and corporate image of the industrial university.

And though one does not speak of measuring power, the balance of power shifts in stark practical ways away from the departments. The corporate strengthening of the University is carried out by weakening the base.

There is considerably more evidence which could be introduced to demonstrate how far the plans to "rationalize" the corporate structures of the University of Toronto have progressed. Three examples might be mentioned briefly.

First, the Province's use of a formula to determine the basic income unit support cost of students enrolled in this or any other provincially supported university. The Government's decision to put grants on a more equitable footing has forced the University administration to increase its control over the expenditure and internal allocation of monies.

Secondly, the proposed introduction of program budgeting, a sophisticated accounting and planning device developed by the Pentagon to ensure greater uniformity between ends and means, or between the amount of money allocated for a specific purpose and the results achieved. At the University of Toronto the Office of Institutional Research (or its successor) is responsible for adapting this technique as a planning and budgetary instrument of control with particular reference to the departments.

Finally, the potential employment of computers to store and computerize information and information flows with regard to all aspects of University decision-making is in the offing.

Professor Richard Judy of the University received a Ford Foundation grant of three-quarters of a million dollars to study the possibility of developing such a system. These advanced corporation devices of control-management are an important indication of the "reform" measures changing the structure and decision-making procedures of University government.

It is no exaggeration to believe that the

"There is the question of secrecy whereby some chairmen think it tactfully wise not to say too much about the things they are doing. There is a tendency of the Dean to negotiate separately with each chairman and it is a sort of battle of wits." — A. K. Warder, East Asian Studies Chairman.

department will become less important than it already is as a policy-making centre as the corporate strengthening of the University occurs. Corporate reforms reinforce the hierarchical and elitist structure of the University. And if there is truth in the statement that qualitatively more goes down by way of departmental decision-making than comes up, the one way flow of policy traffic cannot help but become more pronounced as the corporate side of the University asserts itself.

• We have seen that decision-making within the University is a deliberate blend of informal procedures within a vertical tightly knit grouping of formalized centres of authority with power rising to the top;

• that the doctrine of departmental autonomy restricts departmental freedom because it isolates a department from the setting of policy within the University;

• that the University and departments rely on a system of government which buys institutional peace at the worst price possible by mystifying the decision-making process.

There is no incentive within these elitist terms of reference for creating democratic procedures and democratic centres of decision-making.

The departments have suffered a net loss of power in the decision-making structure of the

"In no sense would I be willing to discuss actual dollars and cents and the construction of the budget ... If everybody in the department — students, staff, and everybody else knows what is in each account you are just building trouble for yourself and I really don't think it is anybody's business." — D. A. Chant

University at a time when they are taking steps to reform themselves. For all intents and purposes they remain structurally isolated from the centres of power in the University.

And what lends particular seriousness to the situation is that corporate reforms further estrange the base of the University from the top bodies. Neither faculty nor students are in a position to make important academic decisions or to participate in the setting of University policy.

The larger issue of whether the University will retain an elite anti-democratic decision-making structure makes all the more urgent the question of whether the department will be a force for democracy; whether the department will have real authority and power to participate directly and indirectly in a University government organized on the principle of structural democracy and committed to democratizing decision-making.

And that possibility depends upon the base of the University being able to control the direction and intent of the corporate reforms. To say the very least the likelihood of that occurring is not great.

Democratizing a department in itself, does not lead to the democratization of the University.

ATTENTION ALL FLAPPERS THERE'S A CHARLSTON CONTEST

EVERY MONDAY NIGHT AT THE SPEAKEASY
WINNER RECEIVES PLANE FARE TO NEW YORK
HEAR TOBY LARK
COME ON AND JOIN IN THE FUN
"FREE ADMITTANCE FOR DOLLS EVERY MONDAY"
AND DON'T FORGET
WE DO OUR "THING" EVERY FRIDAY
FROM 4 TO 7 P.M.
EVERYTHING 1/2 PRICE
GET YOUR FREE PASSES
FROM OUR MAN WITH THE GLASSES

"YE SPEAKEASY" THE GREATEST

JUST CLIMB THE STAIRS — NO PASSWORD NEEDED
529 BLOOR ST. W. 532-4292
(UPSTAIRS)

COMMERCE Final Year Students

Today, the Chartered Accountant plays one of the most exciting roles in business management. He tackles complex and fascinating problems. For the professionally-trained man the scope is limitless.

Discuss career opportunities with Clarkson, Gordon representatives, on campus

Nov. 10, 11 & 14

Appointments should be made through the Student Placement Office. If this time is not convenient, please contact us directly: 368-2751

Clarkson, Gordon & Co. CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Halifax • Saint John • Quebec • Montreal • Ottawa • Toronto
Hamilton • Kitchener • London • Windsor • Thunder Bay • Winnipeg
Regina • Calgary • Edmonton • Vancouver • Victoria

The Department of History, The History Students' Union and The Graduate History Society

ANNOUNCE

A HISTORY TEACH-IN

Thursday, November 13
To Discuss

- The relevance of History as a discipline today
- The role of the student and teacher in the classroom and the department
- The structure and organization of the department
- All History Students and Staff are urged to Attend
- The Department has recommended cancelling classes
- Watch the Varsity for further details!

CHESS CLUB SIMUL
Monday, November 10th
Debate's Room - 7 p.m.

50th ANNIVERSARY CONCERT OF CANAOIAN JAZZ COMPOSITIONS

RON COLLIER ORCHESTRA

Great Hall - 8:30 p.m.
Wednesday, November 12th
Tickets: Hall Porter
Ladies Welcome
(Sponsored by Music Committee, Hart House)

Hart House Anniversary Oebate

"PARLIAHENTARY OEOHCRACY HAS OUT LIVED ITS USEFULNESS"
Honorary Visitor
HON. ERIC WH. KIERANS
Minister of Communications

For the Ayes: Ed Bridge, SGS
Ted McGee, III SMC
Speaker of the House: Sydney Hermant, M.A.

For the Noes: Michael Scherk, III U.C.
James Yeager, III SMC

8:00 p.m. in the Debate's Room
Wednesday, November 12
Ladies Welcome

50 YEARS AT
HART HOUSE
IN PICTURES
PREPARED BY THE CAHERA CLUB
OPENS IN THE ARBOR ROOM ON SATUROAY, NOVEMBER 8th

THE HISTORY OF CHESS PUBLIC LECTURE
MUSIC ROOM - 8 p.m.
Tuesday, November 11th

UNDERWATER CLUB PRESENTS AN EVENING WITH
PHILIPPE COUSTEAU
Film director of the Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau and the expeditions of the research ship Calypso
GREAT HALL - 10 p.m.
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10th
Tickets: $3 - Graduate Office, S.A.C.
and Engineering Stores
Everyone Welcome

HART HOUSE FARM FALL FAIR
Saturday, November 8th
from no from Noon on.....
SQUARE DANCING
HAY RIDE
BEARO CONTEST
CIOER PRESSING
Meal Tickets, $1.25 - Hall Porter and Graduate Office. Maps & Info available from Graduate Office.

EASTERN CANAOIAN INTERCOLLEGIATE CHESS TOURNAMENT
Opens Friday, November 14th - Oebates Room - 2 p.m. and continues through Saturday and Sunday. Final play will begin 4 p.m. Sunday, November 16th

SERVICE OF REEOICATION
GREAT HALL
TUESOAY 11 NOVEMBER at 11:15 a.m.

OPEN HOUSE
SUNOAY 16 NOVEMBER
2-5 p.m.

50TH ANNIVERSARY
SUNOAY EVENING CONCERT

LOIS HARSHALL

Great Hall 8:30
November 16
Tickets - Hall Porter

THE LIBRARY COMMITTEE
PRESENTS
JACQUES GOOBOUT
50th Anniversary-Writer In-Residence

WORKSHOPS:
Monday, November 10 Thursday, November 13
Tuesday, November 11 Friday, November 14

LIBRARY EVENING:
Monday, November 10 - Hart House Library - 8 p.m.

REAOING:
Wednesday, November 12 - Music Room - 4 p.m.

(Ladies Welcome)

PRIZE-WINNING PHOTOGRAPHS
from contest sponsored by CAHERA CLUB & FARM COHHITTEES Exhibited in CAHERA CLUB ROOMS
BEGINNING HONOAY, NOVEMBER 10

SYMPOSION

Report and Videotape highlights on a three-day discussion of Education held mid-October with staff and students.
Thursday, November 13th
Music Room - 4 p.m.
Ladies Welcome

HART HOUSE ART COHHITTEE IN CONJUNCTION WITH
THE NATIONAL GALLERY
CANAOIAN PAINTINGS
FROM THE VINCENT MASSEY BEQUEST
TO THE NATIONAL GALLERY
IN HART HOUSE ART GALLERY
NOVEMBER 11th - NOVEMBER 25th
Monday - Saturday 12-6 p.m.
Sundays 2-5 p.m.

TYPOGRAPHY & PRIVATE PRESS BOOKS: a panel discussion of private press work and fine printing as seen by the antiquarian bookseller, private press printer, book designer and bibliophile. Library at 8 p.m. on Thursday, November 13th

HART HOUSE FILM FRSTIVAL AWAROS
Friday, November 14th
Library at 8 p.m.

NOON HOUR FILMS
Entries from the Canada-wide Film Festival will be shown East Common Room - 1:00 p.m.
November 10, 11, 12, 13 & 14
Saturday, November 15th:
Rescreening of Films Entries begins at 11 a.m. and continues through the day in the East Common Room.
Ladies Welcome

ARCHERY CLUB TOURNAMENT
Rifle Range - 7:30 p.m.
Wednesday, November 12th
(Open to all members and former members)

AMATEUR RADIO CLUB
will operate publicly in Quadrangle (weather permitting) from
Mon. Nov. 10 - Fri. Nov. 14 and invites members & guests to send messages to friends around the world by ham hook-up

NOON HOUR OEBATES
Monday, November 10th

"A WISE HAN'S WHISPER CARRIES FURTHER THAN A GREAT OUTCRY
FROM A KING OF FOOLS"

Wednesday, November 12th

"THE MEHBERS OF THIS UNIVERSITY ARE BECOHING INCREASINGLY RELATIVISTIC, NIHILISTIC, CHAOTIC, WEARY AND TRIVIAL
Guest Speaker: RICHARD NEEOHAM
Friday, November 14th
"MULIER EST HOHINIS CONFUSIO"

1:00 p.m. OEBATES ROOM Ladies Welcome

CLASSICAL CONCERT
Wednesday, November 12th

HARTIN POLTEN
Guitarist

Music Room, 12-2 p.m.
Ladies Welcome

TABLE TENNIS SPECIAL DEMONSTRATION

FILMS OF EUROPEAN HASTERS IN COHPETION
Wednesday, November 12th
8:00 p.m.
Main Gym & Fencing Room

HART HOUSE ORCHESTRA
HART HOUSE GLEE CLUB
Present
A Joint Concert to Celebrate the 50th Anniversary of
HART HOUSE
Great Hall - 7:45 p.m.
Sunday, November 9th
Tickets: Hall Porter

Toronto universities protest Vietnam

VMC hoping to close down U of T for day of protest

The Vietnam Moratorium Committee will ask again for the use of Convocation Hall for the Nov. 14 Moratorium rally.

The first request was turned down by the administration.

At an organizational meeting Wednesday the VMC voted to empower its executive committee to deal with the administration to obtain a suitable hall for the protest rally.

Convocation Hall will be the scene of the U of T graduation exercises the evening of Nov. 14, and the maintenance crew has opposed the opening of the hall to another program earlier in the day.

"On Nov. 14 there's not likely to be 3 feet of snow. We can always have the rally outdoors," said a student.

The VMC's prime objective during the moratorium is to shut down the university Nov. 14 in keeping with an international day of protest against the war in Vietnam.

In order to build a mass base to halt the university machine for a day the VMC is rearming as politically neutral as possible.

Formerly characterized by the slogan "End Canada's Complicity," the anti-war movement has changed the left-tinged "complicity" to "involvement" so that no middle-of-the-roaders will be alienated.

Petitions and leaflets are being circulated declaring the committee members' intentions to either forego and suspend classes on Nov. 14 or devote them entirely to the discussion of Canada and the war in Vietnam and to call for suspension of classes by the administration.

The tentative four-hour moratorium rally program consists of folk and rock music, speeches by VMC members and guest speakers, an open mike period, and a short production by a theatre group.

Glendon decides to cancel classes for moratorium

York University's Glendon College will cancel all afternoon classes Nov. 13 as part of the continent-wide Vietnam Moratorium set for next week.

The Glendon Faculty Council voted 23-22 in favor of the move yesterday afternoon.

The deciding vote was cast by college principal Escott Reid.

Police force VMC to change route for protest march

The Vietnam Mobilization Committee has been denied a route down Yonge St. for the Nov. 15 anti-war march because of a city by-law against undue traffic congestion during business hours.

By-law No. 12 exempts parades which had taken place ten years before the passing of the by-law in October, 1964. Eaton's Santa Claus parade, to go down Yonge St. on the morning of Nov. 15, fills this requirement.

The by-law can be waived if an area municipality requests a parade permit or if the parade is of unusual importance, the final decision being made by the police chief and the police commission.

"If any organization at all could hold a parade on Yonge St., you can imagine the congestion," said a police department spokesman.

"If you give a parade permit to one organization, every organization will want it," he said.

The VMC has tentatively accepted a route down Bay St. to the City Hall, where there will be a rally.

DISCOVER THE NEW CONCEPT IN SHOES BOLD ONES HAVE ARRIVED AT

CAMEO SHOES
262 YONGE
French Room
226 YONGE & THE COLONNADE
T.W. 45 AVENUE E.D.

SAVE 10% WITH A.T.L. CARD

CHARGE X

HERE AND NOW

TODAY

ALL DAY

Applications for committee which will consider implementation of the Campbell Report. Three SAC appointees are needed. Send to SAC Judicial Committee, SAC office. Deadline today at 5 p.m.

Drawing, painting and photography exhibition by Michael Macrae, Yvonne Slika and David Turvey in the Buttery until Nov. 14.

9 a.m.

Auditions for Samuel Beckett's "Embers" Room 121 Westmore Hall, New College until 11 a.m.

1 p.m.

Tickets available in lobby of Mechanical Bldg for Nov. 19 trip to the McLaughlin Planetarium to see the "Moon Show" in the Star Theatre and to hear the president of SPAR aerospace speak on "Canadian Engineers' Role in the Space Program". Dept. of Geology Films shows Eruption of Kilauea and The Ant and Insect World Mining Bldg 170 College Rm. 128

8 p.m.

St. Michael's College Frim Club presents Ingmar Bergman's Virgin Spring Carr Hall Also at 10 p.m.

A march to the Liberal headquarters in support of the French demonstration in Montreal demanding 1 Quebec political prisoners be freed 2 the resignation of René Paul, Minister of Justice, 3 the withdrawal of Bill 63. The march is sponsored by the New Left Caucus, the Friendly Radical Organization (Glendon), and the York Student Movement. All those interested in joining the march, meet at Queen's Park, University at College

8:30 p.m.

Beltre Bash — e dance with the Al Harris Band Free food, admission $1. McLaughlin Hall, York U. Keale and Steeles Ave U of T students welcome

11 p.m.

The Barefoot Coffee House, in Wymd-wood Live entertainment by Scott Walker until 2 a.m. 75c per person, $1.25 per couple.

SATURDAY

NOON

Fall Fair for 50th anniversary of Hart House Square dancing, hayride, order pressing and beard contest Outdoor games and contests of skill and strength Charge for meal only $1.25 Tickets in advance for this at Graduate office, also maps and transportation info. Event at Hart House Farm

11 p.m.

Barefoot Coffeehouse, Wymdwood Live entertainment until 2 a.m. 75c per person, $1.25 per couple

SUNDAY

7:45 p.m.

Concert of Hart House Glee Club and orchestra Starts off the 50th Anniversary Year Tickets from the hall porter

NEW COLLEGE DANCE SOCIETY

presents

a follow-up of last week's

"FRIDAY'S MY DAY"

SOUL DANCE FREE!

EVERY FRIDAY AFTERNOON 4-7 P.M.

NEW COLLEGE (21 CLASSIC AVE.)
DOWNSTAIRS

CUT YOUR CLEANING COSTS by 2/3

at the Church & Wellesley Self Service Dry Cleaner

OPEN EVERY DAY

Attendant on Duty

568 Church St.

924-6010

PROJECT 999

Toronto organizes Quebec solidarity march

The New Left Caucus, the York Sunday Movement and the Friendly Radical Organization of Glendon College are co-sponsoring a march tonight in sympathy with a protest march in Montreal.

Both marches will begin at 8 p.m. The Toronto contingent will form up at Queen's Park and proceed to Liberal Party headquarters on Adelaide St. and the Ontario County Courthouse on University Ave.

The marches are in support of demands that:

- all political prisoners be released, including Charles Gagnon and Pierre Vallieres. (Gagnon and Vallieres have spent the past three years in jail awaiting trial on charges of murder.)

- Justice Minister Remi Paul, who introduced new laws allowing police to make preventative arrests and confiscate material which could be used for "disturbing the peace", resign.

- the Quebec Government withdraw Bill 63 — in effect a demand for French-only schools.

The Toronto march was organized in response to a request from Montreal Sunday.

"The Toronto supporters are marching to the Liberal Party headquarters because the interests of the dominant English minority in Quebec are the interests of the business community across English Canada, whose financial power is centred in Toronto," a spokesman for the Toronto group said.

Wow, did we have a great time, yes !

"Man, what a spaced-out scene," said poet Irving Layton yesterday to the assembled Varsity staff and friends gathered in the Cl. Bissel room of the newspaper offices for an Open House.

He was speaking on the occasion of the celebration of the Varsity's 90th year in print.

Also present at the gala festival were writer and broadcaster Pierre Berton and poet Lenny Cohen. A rousing time was had by all and Cohen was heard to remark, "Shit, this scene is really heavy; I'm going to write a song about it."

The attendance was limited despite the fact that the first two drinks were free. Nevertheless those who came called it the best happening of the year.

Many people called the Varsity expressing doubt about the verity of the posters announcing the event. One person even suggested it was a Massey College hoax. He was assured that the gathering was indeed very real.

When asked to comment Brian Johnson, Varsity Editor remarked, "Yes, it was a very successful party and we're seriously considering having another one if we can get a grant from SAC. It just the thing to get the warring factions on this campus together."

Pierre Berton later admitted, "I was really zonked. It's just gotta be the best meeting of minds I've ever been to."

Massey College fellows were conspicuous in their absence, even though they had been invited.

More SAC

Moratoriums, Danny Drache and beauty contests came under SAC scrutiny at the general meeting Wednesday night.

SAC voted $300 and its moral and organizational support to the Nov. 14 and 15 Vietnam Moratorium.

"We want the administration to cancel all classes on Nov. 14 or else instruct all faculty to devote the class time to a discussion of Canada's role in the war," said Ken McEvoy, co-chairman of the ad hoc university Moratorium committee.

SAC also demanded the university administration make the controversial CUG research report by Danny Drache available "in such a way that will make it accessible to the university community."

If the administration hasn't complied by Nov. 12, SAC will publish 150 copies of the major section of the report.

In response to a motion by election committee chairwoman Ceta Ramkalawansingh (I New), SAC turned thumbs down on beauty contests and slave auctions on campus.

"Beauty contests are highly elitist, create false assumptions of human value, judge human beings as cattle, and represent the ultimate objectification of women in society," Ceta told the chastised males on council.

SAC also rejected plans to grant separate representation to the 100 students in second year pre-med.

"We've been screwed by the Faculty of Medicine," said class president Jeff Green, "but the students just don't care."

Today is your last chance to bleed on campus for the Red Cross. There are clinics at the Sigmund Samuel Library and the UC Junior Common Room.

To date, 663 pints have been donated. There is little hope of attaining the projected goal of 3,500 units but there is a good chance of surpassing last year's total of 3089.

Don't let somebody die — Be a blood donor.

More jobs than Gen Arts students last year

By HENRY MIETKIEWICZ

There weren't enough General Arts graduates at the Placement Service last year to fill all the positions available, career counsellor Rosemary Gaymer said Wednesday.

"Last year we had to turn away a great many recruiters who were looking for General Arts graduates, because so few students took the trouble to show up for interviews," Miss Gaymer said.

"There were about a hundred companies on campus asking for General Arts kids last year," she added, "and of those students who got properly involved in the recruiting program, 70-75 per cent found employment."

A generation ago, said Miss Gaymer, anyone with a B.A. got by very easily. But today's society has provided so much competition that an Arts degree has become "a basic prerequisite."

She emphasized that the General Arts student, despite his lack of formal training in a particular field, has this prerequisite and is therefore just as eligible as anyone else to finding a job.

"He has had the mental training of three years at university," she said, "and has the added advantage of being free to choose almost any profession he wishes."

Miss Gaymer warned those present not to be discouraged from applying for the same job as someone with a specialized degree. "Those companies are looking for vibrant individuals, not degrees."

She also strongly urged all General Arts students to make a habit of reading the career information in the Placement Center, and signing up for interviews with recruiters on a regular basis.

NEW YORK PIZZA HOUSE

620 YONGE STREET CORNER OF ST. JOSEPH — 925-1736
To specialize in New York and New England style pizza and home-made spaghetti. WE MAKE THE BEST PIZZA IN TOWN
STUDENTS FREE DELIVERY IN OUR AREA & HOT PIZZA RIGHT TO YOUR ROOM
5:00 P.M. — 1:00 A.M. DAILY

ARTS AND SCIENCE

in day classes

must confirm their programme of studies

BEFORE NOVEMBER 20th

of the Office of their College Registrar (Regular Students)

or

at the Faculty Office STUDENTS (Special Students)

This procedure is essential in order to ensure accurate records and so that EXAMINATION arrangements may be made. A late fee will be imposed after November 20th.

N.B. Students who do not wish to write on Passover because of religious observance should write "Passover" under their programme. An effort will be made to avoid those days.

B & M FINE ARTS PRODUCTIONS
IN ASSOCIATION WITH C.H.U.M.-M
PRESENTS

Laura Nyro

AND THE SUGAR SHOPPE
AT MASSEY HALL

Mon. Nov. 17, 8:30 p.m.

TICKETS: $5.50, 4.50, 3.50

NOW AT MASSEY HALL BOX OFFICE
AND A & A RECORDS, YONGE ST.

Co-ordination & Production: Martin Ortol.

S.A.C. NEEDS

UNDERGRADUATE REPRESENTATIVES FOR

COMMITTEE TO IMPLEMENT

CAMPBELL REPORT

(3 TO BE APPOINTED)

SEND APPLICATIONS TO:

SAC JUDICIAL COMMITTEE
SAC OFFICE

DEADLINE FRI. NOV. 7 - 5 P.M.

RuggerBlues capture division title; outlast weary Waterloo squad 17-9

By DAN McAUISTER

The Rugger Blues retained the western championship Tuesday in their hardest match of the season. Waterloo was the opposition and they simply refused to admit defeat until the final whistle.

The game opened with very crisp play, and the cut that captain Wynn received over his eye on the first sequence was indicative of the toughness of the match.

The first fifteen minutes of the game were scoreless. Then, in his reliable form, the "Gold-entoe" Andy Cairns opened the scoring on the first of many penalty kicks.

The half continued uneventfully with neither team able to control the wet ball. With only a few minutes to go, Cairns scored on another penalty kick to make the score 6-0 for Toronto.

Early in the second half Toronto scored yet another penalty goal. This seemed to inspire the Waterloo team and they pressed deep into Toronto territory. They maintained their drive long enough to score six points on two penalty kicks.

Undaunted, the dogged Waterloo side pressed back. Their ¾ line was just crossing the Toronto twenty-five when Toronto winger Ian Hartley blocked a pass and stopped the play. But the referee ruled the block an intentional knock-on and Waterloo was awarded a penalty kick. The successful boot made the score Toronto 12, Waterloo 9.

The bloodthirsty Waterloo fans were now going wild. With five minutes left in the game, a Warrior victory was still possible.

Then, centre Peter Enals and winger Ian Hartley saved the day for Toronto.

The Toronto pack had been pushed back to their own thirty yard line. The ball was fed to the Blue back line but the Waterloo pressure was almost intolerable. Then, Enals took a pass and drew two Waterloo backs toward him. Just before he was flattened, he slipped the ball to Hartley who eluded the Waterloo winger and back row.

With only two more defenders to beat, Hartley turned on the jets and blasted straight down the sideline to score the only try of the game. Cairns made the convert to add two more points to the Toronto score.

The Waterloo team fought hard for the remaining seconds but when the final whistle sounded the score was still Toronto 17, Waterloo 9.

The victory brought the western championship to Toronto. The OQAA final is tomorrow at Queen's. Toronto defeated Queen's in last year's final, so the match will be the best of the season.

The Second's game was a miserable incident. It was dark, the field was muddy, the referee unfamiliar with the game of rugger, and all the players wanted to do anyway was get off the field and celebrate the league championship. Nonetheless, the match was played out and Toronto won fifteen-or-so to nothing.

Interfac Roundup

Can you buy a Rodmickle burgher at Harvey's?

by GELLIUS
REVIEWS

"... this... stuff..." (Miss Boyd, in an interview soon to be published in Playboy magazine.)

LACROSSE

Vic beat Innis by default and went on to blank SMC 5-0 on goals by Ryan (2), Murphy, Prince Vallilee, and Clem. SMC then go^o off the killing floor to absolutely ablativie Innis, 7-3. Travers (3), O'Reilly, and O'Toole (3) scored for SMC, Bessley (2; cf. "How doth the bessley little bee...") and Okhiro for Innis.

Law (Pashby 2, Ritchie, Ochterlony 2-Och/ter /lony Augustin" was a World War I song) 5; Eng (Wilson 2, Scully) 3.

Crocker had 4 goals, Bull-ock, Christie, Connolly, and Blake ("Blake, Blake, Blake on thy cold clay stones, o sea" — Tennyson) singles as PHE downed Dev (Munroe, Cassel-man, Gay), 8-4.

RUGGER

Cotter (5), Harvey Griesbur-ger (3), Horan (3; the Horan is an Israeli dance), O'Neil (2) and Burns (3; no relations to "the banks and burns of bonnie Doon" of Robert Braes' famous poem. Bonnie Doon ac-tually married a man called Hérgesheimer; Lorna Hérgesheimer, later immortalized in the novel of that name, was one of her descendants) were scorers when SMC litzenber-gered Trin B, 16-0.

UC (Dunford 3, Templeman 2, Sidey 3) bea Law, 8-0.

Trin topped Scar, 10-3. Compton and Bley scored for Trin. (You will recall Bley from the well-known Afghan nursery rhyme, "Little Miss Muffet sat on a tuffet eating her Kurds and Bley.") Seery had Scar's points.

CONTEST

It was revealed today that Uncle Roderick Mickleburgh has posthumously won the recent Varsity Sports contest. Mr. Mickleburgh's answer to the question, "Oh, say can you see by the dawn's early light" was, "Yes". As requested by the winner himself at a Sunday night seance at the home of Varsity jazz critic and medium Jack McCaffrey, the prize will be a teeny-bopper. Any interested parties should contact the Varsity Sports Office. You can ship anything in a Bathurst container.

The theological and scientific implications of Mr. Mickleburgh's answer will be considered at an extraordinary meeting at the Grauniad, Mr. L. Haiven will conduct a seminar entitled, "Rod, Graves, and Scholars: Mickleburghian Eschatology Reconsidered."

This week's contest is Qp to Q4! Kp to K4?

Address all answers to Contest, Varsity Sports. The decision of the judges is so.

POST-GAME
OPEN BASH

SAT. NOV. 8th

KAPPA ALPHA SOCIETY

3605 UNIVERSITY ST.
MONTREAL

BEER-BAND-ARTSIES-ENGINEERS

VARSIITY BLAZERS

Varsity Tartan

Kilts Ties and Scarves

made to order

RICHARDSON'S

546 Yonge St. 922-3141

HART HOUSE
UNDERWATER CLUB
PRESENTS

PHILIPPE
COUSTEAU

NOV 10

HART HOUSE

8:00 PM

TICKETS $3.00 AVAILABLE AT THE FOLLOWING

SAC GRAD. OFFICES ENG STORES 928-2446

WOULD YOU LIKE TO LEARN TO SAIL? IN-STRUCTION FOR BEGINNERS AND NON-SAILORS

SAILING INSTRUCTION

WILL BE GIVEN BY THE U.T.S.C.
NO ENROLLMENT FEE! NO
TEXTS! LECTURES BY VICE-COMMODORE RON FACTOR.
FIRST MEETING FRIDAY, 7 NOV.
IN BECKERSTETH ROOM OF HART
HOUSE AT 1 P.M. CO-EDUCAT-IONAL

McDONALD, CURRIE & CO.
CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Our representatives will be pleased to discuss your plans for a career in Chartered Accountancy during their annual recruiting visit at the University of Toronto on:

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1969

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1969

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1969

Engineering students will also be interviewed on:

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1969

There will be openings in the various offices of our Firm in the Province of Ontario and throughout the other Canadian provinces for 1970 graduates in Commerce, Science, Arts, Engineering and Law.

Please contact the Student Placement Office of the University of Toronto to arrange a convenient time for a personal interview on campus or to obtain a copy of our recruiting brochure.

If the dates of our visit do not suit your time schedule, you are invited to call Mr. John B. Cole, in our Toronto office, at 366-2551.

SUMMER PART-TIME EMPLOYMENT

QUALIFY AS A COMMISSIONED OFFICER
in the
CANADIAN ARMY RESERVE
with the
GOVERNOR GENERAL'S HORSE GUARDS

The applicant must be a male,
Canadian Citizen, age 17 to 23, registered in an undergraduate day course.

and available for one 16 week summer practical training period.

Apply at Denison Armoury (Dufferin and Highway #401), Tuesday or Friday evenings, or Phone 636-2481.

A Memorable McGill Weekend lies ahead

Varsity fullback Bill Stankovic (35), churns for yards as unidentified team-mate moves to block out McGill's Bob Burke (39). Redmen Bill McKenna (29) and Don Duimige (68), and Varsity end Mark Sloier (70) converge on the action.

By PAUL CARSON

As everybody must know by now, tomorrow's showdown in the muddy morass of Molson Stadium will decide whether Varsity Blues of McGill Redmen are to be acclaimed champions of the SIPL for the 49-70 campaign.

Redmen have assembled a carefully trained team and have aimed at this game since Tom Mooney took over the coaching reins four years ago.

Mooney will lose 17 starters after this season, so it's all or nothing for him.

For the Blues, 1969 has been a roller-coaster type of season, as they alternated between great victories and embarrassing defeats — remember Guelph?

For Blues to win the crown, they must defeat McGill and trust in winless McMaster to come within about 65 points of Queens in that season finale in Kingston.

McGill needs only a tie to win the Yates Cup for the first time since the glory years of Tom Skyppek, Willie Lambert and Dick Fiedler ended in 1962.

From the Varsity standpoint, the situation is reminiscent of 1965. Blues finished second to Western last year, but defeated the Stanges during the regular season and were thus permitted to force a playoff for the championship.

Before a rabid Mustang crowd in London, Blues quickly fell behind 14-0 but then Mike Eben, Gerry Sternberg and Bryce Taylor went to work and Varsity

Photo by Spencer Higgins

Yates Cup Showdown

Varsity McGill

2 pm Molson Stadium

Hockey Rivalry

Varsity Loyola

8 pm Loyola Arena

came from behind to win 21-14.

The word from McGill is that Redmen have "unquestionably the best defensive team in the country" and any offence that produces the league's leading rusher can't be all that good.

In the six league games played to date, Redmen have scored 173 points while allowing 90. By comparison, Blues are 136 for and 106 against.

The McGill publicists also are spreading the line that Blues 17-16 win at Varsity Stadium in early October was a pure fluke. They blame the loss on two missed field goals from inside the Toronto 25, "its a neat excuse which manages to ignore the fierce Varsity rush that forced the usually accurate Sol Lovetchio to hurry both kicks.

Two sidesteps to the action will be serious threats to SIPL records set by members of Varsity's outstanding 1968 team which romped to an undefeated season and the Yates Cup (snatch!).

McGill's powerful fullback, Dave Pleiszer has 10 TD's, only one short of Tim Reid's mark, and Lovetchio has 18 converts — Walt Adams holds that record with 21.

Blues have the talent, the coaches have the plays, if the team plays up to its potential, Varsity will win.

As the Queens Manager said last week, "I don't know what it is, but we know we can't beat McGill but the Varsity boys seem to know they can beat McGill whenever they really want to."

Action around the Loyola net in last year's grudge match in Varsity Arena. Blues ended Warriors' dreams of a national title by soundly beating them 5-1.

By JIM COWAN

Tom Watt, U of T's well-known trend setter and coach of Blues' championship hockey team, was sporting a new fall look yesterday.

The "new look" consisted of a scarred and slightly putty nose and faint dark circles under the eyes. Watt said he discovered the style while playing hockey Wednesday night.

But he refused to reveal what team he was playing for at the time.

Anyway, he found it some what safer directing Blues practise last night, as the team prepared for an exhibition game against Loyola in Montreal Saturday night.

The Toronto-Loyola games are assuming the characteristics of a feud. Last year Loyola defeated Blues 6-4 in Montreal, but Blues came back to trample Warriors 5-1 in Toronto.

The exhibition game in Montreal featured 31 penalties and hacking, mostly by the Warriors.

Blues open the season minus several big guns from last year. Steve Montiehl, Bob McClelland, Ward Pass and Gord Cunningham all graduated last spring.

But there's still lots of strength at centre, on defence and in goal. Only the wings are questionable quantities.

"I know they can skate," Watt said last night.

"The question is can we score enough goals."

Blues aren't really ready for this weekend's game, according to Watt. He made his last cuts on Tuesday, so the lines have only been working together for two days. The training camp didn't open until Oct. 23 and the players are not yet in top condition.

Loyola, by contrast, has already played three exhibition games against teams in the Atlantic Provinces.

Blues roster after the final cuts is:

Goal: Adrian Watson and Grant Cole.

Centre: Paul Laurent, John Wright and Brian St. John.

Wings: Brian Tompson, Mike Boland, Mike Cyr, Len Burman, Terry Peterman, Bob McGinnis, Mitch Holmes, Bill Buba, George Nappola and Robbie Ellis.

Defense: Dave Field, Bill L'Heureux, Brent Swannik, Bob Hamilton and Dave McDowall.

Cole, McDowall are all rookies.

Of the veterans, only three were with the team when it journeyed to Innsbruck, Austria, in late January 1968. And only eight have had more than one year's experience in intercollegiate hockey.

But once they settle down and work their way into condition, they should be contenders to take the CIAU championship again this year.

THE varsity

VOLUME 90 8 NO. 21
November 10, 1969

TORONTO

inside

Memories of the war

● centre

Montreal march of 2000 fizzles in drizzle

By PAUL CARSON and JIM COWAN
Varsity Demonstration Editors

MONTREAL—A demonstration—predicted by its organizers to be the largest ever in Montreal—fizzled in the rain Friday night.

Only 2,000 marchers—a small fraction of those expected—converged on the City Hall and Courthouse to protest alleged police repression and the provincial government's language and education policies.

But in a fifteen-minute rampage which followed the main demonstration, the protestors hurled fire-bombs at the Courthouse and smashed dozens of windows in the city's main financial district.

Nineteen demonstrators were arrested but only six were held and charged with disturbing the peace and disorderly conduct. No injuries were reported.

Montreal police, prepared for a major disturbance, sealed off the Courthouse area early Friday afternoon. A special riot squad of 1,000 officers of the Montreal force and the Quebec Provincial Police stood guard at key locations.

Oh yes, the police. There you see a line of motorcycles in front of the Montreal courthouse, part of a force of 1,000 men called out for the Friday night demonstrations.

JUSTIFY PRECAUTIONS

Police officials justified the unusually severe precautions on the grounds that four previous nationalist demonstrations had degenerated into violence.

The march—organized by a "common front" of Quebec nationalist organizations—demanded the release of Pierre Vallieres and Charles Gagnon, imprisoned for the past three years on charges arising from various terrorist activities.

Their trials on charges of murder are scheduled to begin later this week.

The "common front" also demanded the resignation of Quebec Justice Minister Remi Paul and the withdrawal of controversial Bill 63, which would classify French as the "priority language" in Quebec while allowing parents to choose the language of instruction (French or English) for their children.

Among the organizers of the march were Raymond Lemieux, lawyer for Vallieres and Gagnon, and Stanley Gray, the former McGill political science lecturer who was fired during the summer for disrupting administration meetings.

4-PART FRONT

Organizations comprising the "common front" included the Front de Liberation Populaire, the Ligue Pour L'Integration Scolaire, the Ligue Socialiste Ouvriere, and the Montreal Council of the Confederation of National Trade Unions.

The march began about 8 p.m. in east-end Lafontaine Park, a favourite meeting place for separatist activities. Organizers' hopes for a massive demonstration were dashed when only 150 people, mostly students, turned out in the chilly, wet weather.

But the ranks swelled to 2,000 during the 1½ mile march to the Courthouse.

There the demonstrators massed against police lines and waved placards with slogans such as "Nous Sommes Seditieux", "McGill a condamner Vallieres et Gagnon", and "SOS-FLQ".

The marchers chanted, "Le Quebec va sauter!"—Quebec is going to blow up!

As police moved to disperse the Freaked out freshman engineer Ron Pugi directs traffic in downtown Montreal following a power failure which blocked out most of Quebec around noon on Saturday. When the power failed quick-thinking Pugi simply marched out onto Dorchester Ave. with his whistle and went to work.

photo by Jim Cowan

crowd, many demonstrators ripped their placards and hurled the wooden sticks at the Courthouse windows. None were broken.

Six fire-bombs were thrown at the Courthouse. All landed on the massive steps and were quickly extinguished.

The crowd moved off towards the financial district at 10:30, and sporadic incidents of fire-bombing and window-breaking were reported during the night.

Police used searchlight-equipped helicopters to aid in detecting the demonstrators as they fanned out over the downtown area.

By 11 p.m. the Courthouse—City Hall square was deserted except for about 40 police and the occasional onlooker.

RIDICULES DEMONSTRATION

Speaking to reporters, one policeman ridiculed the demonstration and played down the damage.

"Nothing much happened tonight," he joked. "Montreal police are too good for them (the marchers)."

"I've had worse trouble at hockey games."

Nevertheless, there were continual rumors of fires and explosions, and motorcycle detachments of six to eight two-man units patrolled the downtown area all night.

Anything unusual—no matter how trivial—was investigated.

VERY NOISY MUFFLER

Shortly before midnight, a crowd of about 35 watched as 16 officers stopped and thoroughly searched a small sportscar and questioned its young driver. All they found was a very noisy muffler.

Once the demonstration passed on, police at the Courthouse laughed and joked with the few reporters still at the scene.

One QPP officer flashed a V for Peace sign, but quickly snapped it down when a Varsity photographer raised his camera.

About 11:45 a carload of French-Canadian students drove up to the Courthouse.

After a brief look at the perfunctory police guard, one asked the only reporter still examining the debris, "C'est fini, ca?" and they drove away.

New College blows its cooler

A vat of oil exploded in the elevator control room under New College's Wilson Hall last night, almost blowing the door of the room off its hinges. Some confusion resulted when the sprinkler shut-off valve could not be located and water mixed with oil spewed as far as the snack-bar area.

The explosion occurred at about 8:15 p.m. in a room housing oil-cooled electrical machinery used to control the building's elevators. However Fire Chief H. Moores said he didn't "yet know the exact cause" of the accident.

The residents of Wilson Hall were evacuated because of an expected fire, but Chief Moores said "in the event of a fire, the sprinkler system probably would have kept it under control."

One resident, after being told that the elevator control room had blown up, walked into an elevator and pushed a button. "Oh, it's not working," she said. There has as yet been no estimate of damage.

THE BALL

CUT YOUR CLEANING COSTS
by 2/3

at the
Church & Wellesley Self Serve
Dry Cleaner

OPEN EVERY DAY
Attendant on Duty
568 Church St.
924-6010

FREE U of T
3rd WORLD FILM - DISCUSSION GROUP

WEDNESDAYS 4-6
INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTRE
(33 St. George)
CUMBERLAND HALL

Nov. 12 - NATIONAL FILM BOARD ON AFRICA
- COLONIES LOOK AHEAD
- ROAD TO INDEPENDENCE

龍 門 客 棧

CHINESE KLING-FU
IN TORONTO

DRAGON INN

PRESENTED BY C.O.S.A. CINEMA

COLOUR - WITH ENGLISH SUBTITLE

CINEMASCOPE - 30' x 15' SCREEN

LOCATION - CONVOCATION HALL

TIME - 7:15, 9:30 FRIDAY NOV. 21

ADMISSION - $1.50 PER PERSON

TICKETS - ADVANCE TICKET

AVAILABLE AT 33, ST. GEORGE

HISTORY DEPARTMENT TEACH-IN

CONVOCATION HALL

THURSDAY
NOVEMBER 13

10 a.m. - 12:30 p.m. 2 - 5 p.m.

All history students and staff welcome!

Centre for the Study of Drama
in association with
The St. Lawrence for the Arts
presents

Slawomir Mrozek's

TANGO

Translated by Nicholas Bethell
Adapted by Tom Stoppard
Directed by Joseph Shaw

Mon - Thur Nov 10-13 and Mon - Wed. Nov. 17-19

HART HOUSE THEATRE

Tickets $3 00

Box Office 928-8668

Students $1.50

ALL PERFORMANCES OF MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA SOLD OUT

NO EXAMS
ON PASSOVER

"Every person an equal member of the community"

When courses are confirmed in November,
INDICATE YOUR DESIRE THAT U of T NOT SCHEDULE EXAMS
ON PASSOVER

HILLEL FOUNDATION 923-7837 for information

SKI-HOLIDAY
INNSBRUCK
2 weeks

Departure December 23
Return January 5

$330.00

INCLUDES: Return Airfare KLM DC-8 Jet
Montreal to Innsbruck
Accommodation, two meals a day
Transportation to Ski areas,
Ski pass for unlimited skiing,

CHRISTMAS FLIGHT TO LONDON

$206.00

DESTINATION - Toronto/London return
Plane - DC 8 Jet
Departure - December 19th, 1969
Return - January 3rd, 1970

For further information and application form contact

OUS TRAVEL DEPT.
44 St. George St.
Toronto 181, Ontario
Tel: 921-2611

Children in Conflict

a series of films produced by Allan King Associates for Brown Camps Ltd., with the co-operation of the C.B.C.

TUESDAY, NOV. 11 - 8:30 P.M.

A DEBATE BETWEEN JOHN BROWN AND A REPRESENTATIVE FROM WARRENDALE.

MECHANICAL BLDG. Rm. 102

50c

P.S.U.

: the experts look at what's happening

By DAVID FRANK

"How can you say cars are not a moral problem?"

A student had stood up in the Edward Johnson Concert Hall and was asking a question at the final session of this weekend's symposium on urban affairs.

He wanted to know why the whole notion of cars vs. people was such nonsense when you could just look around and see what cars were doing to the city.

Pollution. Noise. Displacing pedestrians. And destroying the downtown to make way for parking lots.

Two answers were given.

First, Prof. Alex Murray of York University:

A TRADE-OFF

"You have to look at it as a trade-off, not as an issue of cars or people. You give up certain things in return for the freedoms you get, for the choices you are able to make."

In effect he was saying "You can't tell people whether or not to drive their cars, and where to do it."

And secondly, from Metro Planning Board Commissioner Wojciech Wronski:

"The only way to get cars out of the downtown is to price them out. No matter how many subways you build, you won't be able to change people."

"Hit the motorist in the pocket."

PRICE CARS OUT

Price him out of his car." Treble the parking rates, downtown and he will start to leave his car for the subway, unless it is absolutely necessary to him.

Equal opportunity of choice.

And that is why Metro is building the Spadina Expressway.

"Spadina is part of the total system," explained Wronski. "We have one of the most balanced transportation systems on the continent. If you take out one chunk of it, you have to re-think the whole thing."

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY

"Our system tries to achieve equal opportunity of choice both in regard to mode of travel and time spent on reaching a destination."

And that is what has happened to the city, that is one of the major qualities of "metropolitan civilization" as described by U of T social work Prof. Albert Rose at the weekend symposium.

"We have developed a highly mobile society. It is almost axiomatic that a man must travel more or less continuously in his day.

"Mobility of this kind is also a state of mind, a willingness.

And this kind of mobility has led to a "miraculous" kind of invisibility for social problems.

"It is possible for a man to drive from the outermost reaches of the Don Valley to his downtown place of business, without ever encountering a house, or a resident of a house, not encased in an automobile."

INVISIBLE POOR

As one result there is now an anomalous situation in North America first, pointed out by Michael Harrington. Social disparities are more evident in statistical data, but less visible. "The poor have tended to become invisible."

"It is quite common for people to say, quite genuinely, quote: I didn't know these conditions existed, unquote."

Metro has never entirely recovered from the influence of Metro's first chairman, Frederick C. Gardiner, described by Prof. Rose as "the exponent par excellence of the technical and practical utility of the bulldozer."

"Social and human issues have been seen as scarcely the concern of Metro. Social needs did not supersede initial physical development. And those who disclaim this are simply not supported on the evidence."

Prof. Rose called for a "turning inward of Gardiner's 'Metro concept'."

BUILD FROM WITHIN

"It is possible to accommodate growth in a better quality of life by rebuilding the city of Toronto from within and not by erecting new boroughs in the north and east. . . .

"New boroughs in the north and east. . . ."

There has been a running battle between Metro and Queen's Park over what the proper limits of Toronto's growth are.

Queen's Park last year endorsed the concept of regional government, but, charged Metro Planning Commissioner Wojciech Wronski, the province violated its own criteria when it announced a plan for regional governments to the north and east of the city.

Wronski, who said Toronto was growing at a rate which was adding a city of the size of Oshawa to its size every year, said the province was trying to curtail "the logical and inevitable growth of Toronto" with these regional governments.

NEW PATTERNS

"I am not advocating Metro growth for its own sake," Wronski stressed, "no one would be more pleased than I to see growth patterns redirected in the province. But in the absence of provincial leadership in this direction, I can see only one way to handle the problem" — expanding the authority of the Metro government to include the full 720 square miles of the need an attractive and functional, sophisticated and bold series of plans for the whole area."

But he did not see the provincial government about to develop any bold program for decentralization and land use control in the Toronto region, because of "fear of political ing a huge fan outside in north west Toronto in order to bring fresh air into the city and drive out the bad

That kind of scheme wouldn't work anymore, ecologist Prof. Henry Regier told the 400 students at the weekend symposium. "We are now getting our inputs from the Panelists at the final session of the mini-teach-in on urban affairs held this weekend by the Toronto University Geographical Society include, from left, Metro Planning Commissioner Wojciech Wronski, York University's Prof. Alex Murray, U of T ecologist Prof. Henry Regier and U of T social work Prof. Albert Rose.

photo by Errol Young

Metro Planning Region. Metro is presently only 240 square miles large and is unable to control what happens outside that limit, north of Steeles Ave.

City planning experts contend that Queen's Park endorses no particular plan for the area surrounding Metro and is allowing haphazard development which is at odds with the regional plan they have prepared for the whole Toronto area.

"Cutting off Metro expansion at Steeles Ave. is naive," said York University's Prof. Alex Murray, "a posture appropriate for an ostrich."

He told students at the symposium Saturday that Queen's Park is dominated by a "small-town superiority myth" which prevents a realistic look at Toronto problems.

The province uses this typically North American suspicion of cities as a "cultural justification" for keeping Toronto at bay.

Queen's Park accepts unquestioningly the dictum that the bigger the city, the worse, he said.

"A crass answer would be that Toronto is too big for Queen's Park to control," suggested Prof. Murray, "too big to give cohesive power to one-third of the province's population and half its wealth. This is a powerful reason behind the government's reluctance to widen Metro's scope."

Prof. Murray called on Queen's Park to set aside the "rural anti-urban myth" and begin a major rethinking of urban growth policies.

"We can't afford to go on with urban development in response only to short run pressures," he said, "we difficulties." The province always seems to "back off when any political flak develops."

SUPERFAN

In years gone by a city father seriously proposed install-outputs of others. Our outer environment is not intact."

"Either we live with this or we will have to opt for a Buck Rogers kind of hermetically sealed existence of the sort envisaged for the Moon."

GRADUATE ENGLISH STUDENTS

Why do you suppose everyone thinks you're so snotty?

It could be that you get into such things as allegory, metaphor, oxymoron, litotes, hyperbole and the significance of the mole on Hamlet's neck to the extent that you don't dig the real aesthetic experience anymore.

Come, let us supply a handkerchief to your soul.

UNIVERSITY BOOKROOM

BY APPOINTMENT TO

THE HONOURABLE
NON-ESTABLISHMENT
PURVEYORS OF IRRELEVANT AND ENJOYABLE
READING MATERIAL.

When human society advances to the point where classes and states are eliminated, there will be no more wars, counter-revolutionary or revolutionary, unjust or just; that will be era of perpetual peace for mankind.
— Mao Tse-Tung

In the last 5,500 years, there have been 14,531 wars, for an average of 3.18 wars a year. In the last 20 years, the frequency has increased to 5.2 a year.

lest we forget

the varsity
TORONTO

Editor
Review Editor
Associate Review Editor
News Editors
City Editors
Features Editor
Sports Editor
Design
CUP Editor
Photo Editor
Executive Assistant
Advertising Manager
Editorial Offices
Editorial Phone
Advertising Office

Guan Johnson
Larry Hanson
Jack McCallay
Jim Cowan
Frank Meigs
Louis Erickman
Neil Strabaly
Mary-Kate Rowan
Paul Carson 923-4053
Steve Frank
Barbara Bencherman
Sue Bender
Mark Rubin
Harriet Kubacki
Carol Cooper 923-8171
91 St. George 2nd Floor
923-8741, 923-8742
91 St. George 1st Floor

The Varsity a member of Canadian University Press was founded in 1880 and is published by the Student Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Webb Gilbey Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Student Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Editorial complaints about the editorial or business operations of this paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity, Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

In the first world war, 95 percent of the fatal casualties were members of the armed forces. In the second world war, 56 percent were from the armed forces. In the Korean war, 88 percent of the fatal casualties were civilian. To date in Vietnam, 91 percent of the dead have been civilian.

Abols on CUPE: "If SAC gives students rights, it must allow them to exercise those rights."

I am sending this letter to help clarify what I feel are a number of misconceptions your paper holds on some of my positions, and to dispel some misleading implications some of your writers made in last week's Varsity. Let's start with the latter.

Jane Hollingworth, in last Wednesday's Varsity, reporting on the SAC executive meeting stated that I was not present at the meeting because I may have felt it was not "very serious" to be there.

Even a superficial effort on her part to check the facts would have revealed that I was not at the meeting for the simple reason that the SAC had sent me as a delegate to the AUCC (Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada) conference held last week in Ottawa. This was also why I was unable to attend the general meeting of the council on Wednesday night.

Secondly, in your editorial on Friday you refer to Bob Vernon (III Law) as my "vocal front-man" without substantiating the charge with an ounce of fact or other evidence. Although Mr. Vernon and I agree on some issues, so did Mr. Barkwell and I. Nonetheless, we disagree on others, as again did Mr. Barkwell and I.

I know that you are concerned about the mystification of issues in our society. However, I would be grateful if you as editor would not add to this mystification in your editorials.

Thirdly, I have always favoured workers unionizing to achieve job security, bargaining rights and "office democracy."

My objection has always been to clauses in the contract that I felt gave the workers an effective veto power over SAC policies. I expressed this concern in an earlier letter to your newspaper.

I would like to point out the SAC workers, to the best of my knowledge, have not been suppressed or tortured by the "ogres" that have managed the SAC office in the past, nor do I believe that even in the absence of a contract, would this be the case in the future.

The real purpose for unionizing the workers, insofar as I have been able to ascertain it, is to help unionize the university workers generally. SAC workers are to be the vanguard. There may be nothing wrong about this, but let's at least be honest as to what the reasons for unionizing the workers are.

Lastly, I would like to make some comments on the rejection of the petition asking for a referendum on whether CUPE contracts should be ratified by the general student body.

To be quite legalistic (I am often accused of this by some council and executive members) the SAC constitution states that if 2,000 or more students demand a referen-ding that it make CUPE contracts subject to ratification by the general student body.

If the above is correct, council is not yet legally obliged to hold a referendum on this question. I should point out also, that if this is a introduced by last year's council. At that time, Mr. Barkwell voted in favour of such a referendum procedure.

If in your editorial you argued that the council acted according to the spirit of the constitution and not its letter, I argue that the contrary is true. I believe that the council acted against the spirit of our constitution.

The democratic spirit of our constitution clearly embodies the concept of referendum as a means of allowing the student body to check the actions of their representatives. It is implicit in such a procedure that if 2,000 or more students sign a petition seeking the reversal of a council decision, council is more likely than not unrepresentative of the student body.

It is this aspect of our constitution that the council has breached.

I would like to conclude by stressing that the critical question is whether the SAC will abide in the future by the principles it itself determines voluntarily and unilaterally.

I would urge that SAC members reconsider last week's decision rejecting the petition for a referendum. If the SAC gives students rights it must allow them to exercise those rights.

Gus Abols
SAC President

photo by Spencer Higgins

SAC President Gus Abols who was away in Ottawa when the CUPE crisis blew.

dum on any motion passed or rejected by the SAC the council must hold a referendum. I believe that council has not yet been presented with a motion specifically request-problem, it is merely a procedural one and could easily be overcome by the signatories to the petition.

I would also add that the referendum procedure was

... and Vernon says "Many SAC reps don't give a damn about the opinion of the students"

The report of the last meeting of the Students Administrative Council and the accompanying editorial in the Varsity failed to present the background to the contract with the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the petition for a referendum on its ratification.

Such information is essential to an enlightened discussion of this particular issue and to an explanation of a broader issue — the rift that has developed between those Council members who feel obliged to represent the interests of the students who elected them, and those members who act as if their election gave them carte blanche to ignore the opinions of their constituents.

The right of SAC employees to unionize has never been questioned. Council, including those members who assembled the petition, voted unanimously to recognize CUPE as the exclusive bargaining agent of its employees. Throughout the summer it became increasingly apparent that the proposed contract was to be the keystone in the "student-worker alliance" that SAC Vice-president Bob Barkwell envisaged, rather than, as claimed, a method of establishing democracy in the SAC office. The true purpose of the contract is indicated by excerpts from SAC meeting minutes:

"The contract will probably be used by CUPE as a model contract in unionizing efforts in the future. The contract would be waved under the noses of Simcoe Hall and used as a foothold for the unionization of other U of T employees."

Barkwell's attempt, on August 24th, to impose closure on the contract debate culminated an effort to achieve Council ratification of the contract before the student body returned from summer vacation. By a similar coincidence, the first mention of unionization of the SAC employees arose at the April 28th SAC Executive meeting, at a time when the student body was either writing final exams or on the way home for the holidays.

The only way to permit cross-campus discussion of the contract and its implications was to invoke By-Law III, paragraph C of the SAC Constitution:

"3. The student body shall have the right to vote by referendum on any motion, passed or defeated by the Council, on presentation of a petition to this effect signed by two thousand eligible voters with names and A.T.L. numbers, subject to the provision that no more than five hundred such voters be from any one constituency."

This by-law is the only check on Council power provided for by the Constitution — a by-law which the majority of Council is now attempting to ignore.

As the purpose of the petition was to create an opportunity for discussion of the contract, it was deliberately worded in a neutral fashion to avoid pre-judging the issue.

Approximately 2300 students subscribed to the request for a referendum as follows.

"We, the undersigned, being students at the University of Toronto paying fees to the Students' Administrative Council, hereby petition for the right to vote by referendum as provided for in sub-paragraph 3 of paragraph C of By-Law III of the S.A.C. Constitution, on any contract or contracts to be entered into by the Council with any labour union or employees' Association, and in particular, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the contract with the Canadian Union of Employees now under consideration by Council."

It is true that a great many changes have been made in the contract as originally drafted, but the opportunity for such modification was only made possible by the presentation to Council of a petition for a referendum. Nevertheless, a number of very controversial clauses still remain in the contract.

The parallel between a labour union and a student union has been drawn to justify student-labour co-operation. Extending this parallel further, and recognizing that the entire labour union membership has an opportunity to ratify any labour contract arrived at by its negotiators, why should the entire membership of the student union not have an equal opportunity?

Moreover, the "union-management" relationship between SAC and CUPE (if it is possible to identify a true management element in this case) appears to have some of the features of a "company union" that the Labour Relations Act seeks to prohibit under the description of "unfair labour practices" under section 48:

"48. No employer or employers' organization and no person acting on behalf of an employer or an employers' organization shall... contribute financial or other support to a trade union..."

SAC records show that interest-free loans were made to CUPE Local 1222 as recently as the middle of last month: August — $100.00, September — $50.00, October — $50.00.

To say, as has been suggested, that student opinion on this matter has

continued next page

Mayorality candidates show promise as rhetoricians

By LAURA KELLY

Between Wednesday's SAC meeting and Thursday evening's assembly at New College of Toronto's mayorality candidates, it has become obvious that someone is holding well-attended classes in "Rhetoric: the All-Purpose Guise."

The four city mayorality candidates spoke in Wetmore Dining Hall Thursday to a small student audience, many of whom were in Political Science 100 and had come to see live political specimens.

The incumbent, Mayor Dennison, spoke first and briefly. He was dead serious, tense, and on the defensive.

"I opposed the taking away of the right of people to vote for the Board of Control," he said.

This election is the first since 1900 in which the mayor and aldermen will elect the Board of Control the mike to the chairman.

Margaret Campbell, city controller, a robust woman with a booming laugh, took the floor.

VOICE FOR CITIZENS

"Just as students have a part in the decision-making process so I feel all citizens should have a voice," she said.

"I happen to believe that people are terribly important and the variety of the people in the city makes the city a living thing. Steel and concrete are not measures of the city," she said.

"What about the amalgamation of Pickering?" a student asked.

"We should keep the door open to be part of the planning process in Pickering," Mrs. Campbell said.

In response to the question on the Spadina Expressway, Mrs. Campbell spoke of her previous action.

flict between private industry and the people's interest within City Hall.

NO CITY VOICE

Labor, tenants, ethnic minorities, and students have no voice in city government according to Riddell.

CLARKSON IS SMOOTH

Professor Stephen Clarkson, the Liberal candidate, late-coming and early-leaving, spoke smoothly.

"What the city of Toronto needs is not administration. It needs leadership," he said.

Clarkson accused the present government of irrelevancy

A student asked Clarkson what made him "non-old-garb."

"The average age in my party is between 35 and 40. We're concerned about problems. We're the young planners, the young architects, the young lawyers," he said.

"Prove to me how I am a

photo by DAVE BULL

DEFENDS AMALGAMATION

Dennison defended his concept of amalgamation of all city boroughs under one government and one mayor. He predicted fair taxes, more services, increased growth.

"What about the Spadina Expressway?" a student asked.

Dennison said he was waiting for the report of the Metro committee on integration of the expressway into the city before he voiced an opinion.

After recalling that his first project in office was to extend the vote to everyone over 21 years of age, he quickly handed

AGAINST EXPRESSWAY

"In '61 and '62, I opposed it. I led the opposition at the time," she said. There was no mention of action in 1969.

John Riddell, the League for Socialist Action candidate, spoke next.

He is young, urgent, and has perhaps missed one or two rhetoric lectures.

"A high school is run like an army, so is a factory, so is a city government. The city government rolls onward in its own inscrutable logic year after year," he said.

Riddell said that the major problem in Toronto is the con-

He proposed the popular election of the Police Commission, creation of a Civilian Review Board, tenants control over management and maintenance of housing, price control by consumers, and democratization of high schools and public schools.

Riddell urged free public transport. "When you're talking about bringing people into the city core, expressways are nonsense," he said.

Riddell firmly committed himself to representing the working class.

"Tax the rich; that's where the money is," he said.

(Mayor Dennison's face tightened a bit) and pleaded for structural and ideological transformation of the system.

Clarkson counted the problems of pollution, drugs, transportation, and housing, and suggested that the election of a Liberal party team would permit coherent policy in the city government.

Clarkson suggested the creation of a Metro Parliament run by "a new breed of men."

NON-OLD-GARB?

"Throw the old garb out," he said.

part of the corporate elite," Clarkson challenged. The student shrugged and sat down.

Clarkson promised a total review of parking and transportation, an overhaul of the TTC, and the halting of the Spadina Expressway at Eglinton.

The meeting broke as Dennison, Clarkson, and Mrs. Campbell scurried to their next engagements.

If nothing else Toronto will have parks. All the politician said they were in favour of parks.

Vernon on CUPE

cont'd from page 5

been heard is ludicrous. At the time when student opinion on the contract was supposedly being solicited, the document in question (originally printed by SAC) was out of print and unavailable. Needless to say, for this reason very little meaningful discussion was generated.

What happened at last week's SAC meeting clearly indicates that many SAC reps don't give a damn about the opinion of the students they were elected to represent.

The petition for a referendum was presented by Eric Miglin (II APSC) whose constituents make up the largest group of signatures on the petition. Although the Constitution takes an issue out of the hands of Council when such a petition is presented, and gives Council no right to pass judgment on whether or not to conduct a referendum, Council voted 22-8 to ignore the Constitution.

The record of those voting against accepting the petition and holding a referendum is worthy of reproduction:

SAC Vice-president Bob Barkwell — who earlier in the year expressed a desire for greater student involvement in campus affairs until the discipline crisis made it clear to him that mass democracy wouldn't always work his way.

Wayne Richardson — who has declared himself to be a candidate for the position of SAC president next year and who is supposedly a representative of the 500 engineers who signed the petition.

University College reps — John Frank, Craig Heron, Art Moses, and Tony Usher

Victoria College reps — Lee Coulter, Bob James, and Ken McEvoy

St. Michaels College reps — Greg Kealey, Mike Marino, and Tom Mathien

Scarborough reps — Rick Crouch, Mike Simon, and Rob Stewart

New College reps — Ceta Ramkhalawansingh and Chris Szalwinski

Pharmacy reps — Glenda Barkwell

and Mary Lou Pigeon, and Jeff Green (Innis) and Gary Klassen (Forestry). It is absurd to say, as several did, that this petition is contrary to the spirit of the Constitution and equally so is the suggestion that the reasons 2300 students had for signing the petition no longer exist. The purpose of a constitution is to delineate the power given to a governing body. The SAC Constitution provides a specific limit on council's authority when certain conditions have been met. In such a case, the decision of the student body is to be substituted for the opinion of council.

Just last month the students of this university voted 5-2 against continued membership in C.U.S., which a majority of SAC members tried to force upon them. It is quite apparent that Council is not prepared to risk a similar repudiation so soon after the first.

It would be naive to demand the resignation of the 22 SAC reps who voted against holding a referendum and it would be unwise at the present time for colleges and faculties who feel aggrieved by SAC's irresponsibility to withdraw from the Council. The alternative is the impeachment and replacement to those members of Council who continue to violate the constitution and refuse to represent the interests of their constituents. The Constitution provides that:

"An election shall be called in any SAC constituency and the member shall surrender his seat on the day of the election when twenty-five per cent of the eligible voters in that constituency sign a petition with names and A.T.L. numbers."

It would be most difficult for an individual member of Council to personally ignore such a provision.

Failure to overcome the impasse which SAC now faces could be fatal to university-wide student government, for SAC cannot justify continued existence if it is unable to operate within the limits and protections of its Constitution.

Bob Vernon (III Law)

From patient to palette

If an ordinary picture is worth a thousand words, then one which helps a Medsman pass his year is worth a million.

Squeezed onto the third floor of a smallish brick building at 256 McCaul St. is an almost unknown department of the Faculty of Medicine — the Department of Art as Applied to Medicine. Although not well known on campus, the department has an international reputation.

The department was founded in 1945 but up until 1966, offered only a diploma course. The power to offer a degree, and the fact that the five other similar schools are in the States (there are none in Europe) enables it to draw students from as far away as Sweden.

At present there are 12 students enrolled in all three years of the course which offers a Bachelor of Science (Art as Applied to Medicine). The department graduates as many as five students a year which makes it among the largest schools of its type.

Although there have never been as many medical illustrators as doctors, the development of the art closely parallels that of medicine. Perhaps the most famous of anatomical illustrators, besides Leonardo da Vinci who was primarily an artist with a secondary interest in anatomy, was Vesalius. Unlike his contemporaries Vesalius derived his information from actual human dissections. Because of this his drawings were a tremendous advance in anatomical knowledge and still remain classics in medical history.

NOT ONLY REPRODUCTION

Today the medical artist does not have to be concerned with strict reproductions of anatomy and can turn his talents to such things as surgical techniques.

Senior Jorge Perez Vela, an Assistant Professor at the faculty says "the movement from Vesalius to the modern is essentially a movement from two dimensions."

Sr. Perez Vela reflects the international favour of the department. He is a medical illustrator in the General Hospital in Mexico City, makes his home in Mexico, and travels to Canada twice a year to instruct students here.

His work in the hospital is typical of many illustrators who work closely with doctors. The illustrator will often become part of a surgical team in order to gain first hand knowledge of the operation. Listening as the doctor explains the procedure, he illustrates the important steps for students and other doctors. Although an operation often is photographed, the camera cannot always separate the vital steps as clearly as the artist.

CHARTS AND ANIMATION

It is the job of an administrator such as Heinz Loth, one of last year's graduates from the department, to coordinate various methods of illustrating such as films, drawings and slides. The artist will use charts or even animation to clarify surgery or biological concepts such as cell functions or enzyme actions. Heinz is presently head of the Art Services Division of Audio-Visual Resources in the Biological and Medical Sciences Building at U of T.

In illustrating the circulation of the blood for instance, the medical artist must combine the two necessary abilities of teacher and artist. Miss Nancy Joy, the Director of the department says "the camera has opened up the field for all artists because it has provided new areas for the illustrator's knowledge and imagination to work in" such as tape and slide shows.

Marg Wherry, another member of last year's graduating class of five, now works in the faculty as a freelance illustrator.

"Most students," he says, "will story and photos by

John Benson

This is an example of the medical illustrator's work. In this case it is the surgical removal of a gall bladder. (Could it be IBJ's? Ugh!)

work for a hospital or a university although some will work for publishing houses in the States. The mostly highly paid illustrators are those that work for pharmaceutical companies and it is possible to earn up to $100,000 a year."

Most of the students are professional calibre artists in their own right. They have to deal expertly with realistic techniques although many will specialize in areas where they are most proficient

SPECIALIZATION

One well-known illustrator has specialized to such a degree that he draws nothing but the structures and functions related to the back of the eye. "The field is as wide-open as medicine itself," says Miss Joy. "There is even room for a person with a flair for cartooning."

One student in the school whose artwork is familiar to most students on campus is Harold Eckstein, last year's Varsity cartoonist.

Admission to the department is flexible. Because of the small size of the department 'prospective applicants' drawings are judged by all the members of the school, including students. All the students have received formal art training before entering the department. Some, like Per Lundquist, who comes from Sweden, have studied art in Europe, but most are graduates of Canadian art schools.

The medical illustrator is not a pseudo-doctor, but with the increasing amount of information that medical students are forced to learn, his work increases in value. The thousand-word picture is already out of date.

Note:- The department is having an open house sometime in March. Anybody who is interested is invited to come to 256 McCaul St., Third Floor.

Students at work in Department of Art as Applied to Medicine. Drawing on bulletin board is Per Lundquist's fantasy of a leg amputation.

— a day in August, 1969 at Tofino, B.C.

The morning sky hung grey and discouraging over the harbour. There were four of us in the cabin of the fishing boat: Oscar, Herman, Jim and myself. Oscar and Herman were Finns; squat, bull-necked men, with rough faces battered by storms, alcohol and time. They both had the massive hands, gnarled like claws of steel, that could only belong to fishermen. Although both were in their early sixties, their eyes still had that chill pale-blue fire that could dance with laughter in the tavern but rather stob in defiance at the sea. They could speak a ragged Finn-English but preferred to keep silent, joining the conversation only for a joke or a judgement.

by bill templeman

Jim was Canadian from Winnipeg, taller and not as rugged as the Finns, but more talkative and quick to laugh. In his mid-forties, Jim was the epitome of the harbour's definition of success: a new boat (with bank loan paid off), a home to go to (wife and kids in Vancouver), and popular (a waitress in Port Alberni and a 19 year old Indian girl in port).

And there was me, bearded and bookish, with the muscular features and calloused hands of a library-haunting literature student.

We had been waiting out a storm in Tofino harbour for five days. There was nothing to do but sleep, talk and drink. I had abandoned my Ulysses the day before, fed-up with reading. I had been Oscar's deckhand for over a week; my single daily task was to lug beer cases down from the hotel. And this morning grumped from a typical 'night before' memories of the war

some colossal secret which somehow I had missed. And I had missed: when peace was declared in Europe I was still months away from my second birthday.

I guess today I still have those questions — not the what-where-why variety but questions about the actual experience of living through the war. So I started on Jim.

"Did they ever try to land or look around — I mean the Japanese?"

My curiosity triggered a torrent of stories. All the legends about the B.C. coast during the war were soon resurrected — the submarine that shelled Victoria, the fishing boats that were gunned, the invasion scares, the magic migration of Prairie prostitutes into Vancouver. Our talking grew in enthusiasm — even Oscar took part, but-in-in with salty vigour during Jim's critique of the Vancouver whore scene. I jumped at my chance.

"Oscar, were you in Canada then?"

"Yaa, I was coming here in nineteen hundred forty."

"Oh, so you weren't in the war?"

His face twisted with a strange boyish impatience.

"Oh no, no — Yaa, Yaa, I was in big war, eh Herman, Yaa, three years!"

Seeing that my only way out was onward, I didn't try to hide my muddlement.

"But the war didn't start until..."

Herman to the rescue.

"Yaa, but wait a minute. Dat was all time." Herman started to chuckle, but stopped short. Oscar was sullen "It was wery bad, wery bad."

Jim, with that naive humor that Canadians accept as tact, broke in. "Guess it was pretty good to get over here, eh?"

Jim was answered with a full cycle of tales describing the arrival of Oscar and Herman in Halifax, their years of mining in Sudbury, their coming to the coast and starting in the fishing business. But the mention of the war had disturbed a labyrinth of memories, and soon Jim was telling his story.

"Yeaah, all them magazine stories about Nazis this, Nazis that, that's all bullshit. Sure they had some mean special corps — so did we — but the ordinary guy, you know the ordinary German fighting like he was told to, he wasn't no sadist or anything. Like the ones we captured east of Paris. One of 'em could speak a bit of English. Know what he said? 'I'm luckier than you moving in close to his words and I couldn't escape.

"Sure we had to stop Hitler, but I just don't know anymore. I mean, when I look at the way big business and the government are screwing the little guy out of the right to live his own life, I just wonder what the hell it was we were fighting for. I mean, when you watch the news and all you see is riots and protestors, you have to ask yourself 'was — all of us groggy and weak from wretched boiled plisner. The three fishermen were administering to each other the usual remedy: shots of rye washed down with noisy throat-tulls of shell beer. I abstained, wisely daydreaming about legendary blocks of Laotian hashish, big as barges, sweeping across the Pacific to save my digestive system from further abuse. Jim was killing time with talk about local navigation hazards.

...and that damn long Beach, got a watch out for them bitchin' landing possis."

I thought to myself 'Well, why not? Might as well learn something about this life of theirs. I'd rather fish than teach high school English anyway.' So I asked my questions.

"What landing possis? You mean those big cement things? What are they there for anyway?" Jim smirked. "Stop the invasion. During the war. Figured the Japs'd land." The war. When I was younger, the war was a fantastic yarn, an adventure fable which someone had told while I was asleep. I remember catching bits of anecdotes from adult conversation, but whenever I asked my questions, I was told such matters weren't for my entertainment. Which made me ask more questions. The whole topic gradually became clouded with the darkness of something unknown; I felt everyone around me had been in on your Englander war. In Finland we start before you, Russians."

Snippets of Waller Cronkite's Sunday afternoon voice whipped through my mind. Ah yes! The Prudential Insurance Company and DBS delight in bringing the Russo-Finn war of '36-'39 — blurred films of caped Finns skiing through woods, shooting at stranded Russian tanks, shooting frozen horses lying stiff like brittle trees in the snow. Indeed! One of Cronkite's better shows.

Oscar was staring past us out to the breakwater, his head nodding as if agreeing with something his memory alone couldn't quite confirm.

Feeling wreckless, I continued my game. "Were you...ummm... in the army?"

Herman sat straight up. He stopped fidgeting with the bottle opener, took a sharp breath and turned, looking far out to sea.

Oscar moved his mouth without sound, gestured with his open hands then spoke aloud to himself, like a man naked — "Well you know, well, Jesus Krice, you know, . . . it was very bad, very bad, Jesus Krice . . ."

Herman turned on me with a great innocent grin as if he were going to relate the exploits of a comrade who was forever putting snow balls through school-room windows. "Yaa, he was ski trooper, eh Oscar, play around in snow guys.' We asked him why. 'Cause I'm going to get to Canada before you.' See, they knew if they were captured they'd be sent here."

I could be more open with Jim. "But in a way you make it sound like those magazine stories — almost an adventure."

"Well, we thought like that at first too, but — well listen, I got a fifteen year old kid and he's got hair like a woman, been thrown outa school and has got in shit for smoking that pot or whatever but I wouldn't put the little bastard through what I went through for anything, no matter what."

"Yes, but I've heard men who were officers carrying on about 'war brings out the best in a man' and so forth. Two weeks ago I was picked up while hitchhiking by an American who had just come back from Vietnam and he . . ."

Oscar was gesturing again, without words, his hands like trembling mallets. Jim answered, "Now listen, this Vietnam business, it's not the same thing at all. At least before we got over there we felt as if we had to fight. But you guys are a step ahead of us. You know what it's like before you go over. Look, officers reason. Don't let anyone in a magazine or one of them damn movies tell you any different."

Feeling incredibly foolish, I tried a weak pun about movies but Jim was it really worth all that shit? I said nothing watching Jim's expression shift.

"Jesus, you know, I'll never forget the first dead man I saw."

Astounded by the sound of my own words, I heard myself ask that bubonic question "was he one of theirs or one of yours?"

Jim took my bumbling in stride, almost as if I hadn't asked. "He was one of our guys, a Nova Scotia Highlander lad, his face looked just like he was asleep but from his chest down was all open, you know, a light mortar burst, but it scared me 'cause he looked like a good soldier, — he was about 23 or 24, a good bit older than me."

How old were you?"

Jim grinned. "Seventeen."

"How did . . ."

"Ah shit, I guess that's where my own kid gets all his hell from. I volunteered at fifteen — lied about my age, I was big for a kid — ran away from home to the Watch, yeah, I guess it sounds sorta romantic — running around France with a Bren gun in a war at seventeen." Jim stopped short, and stared down at his beer, embarrassed by his own display. Up from the rubbish of my mind came memories of heroism from my own teenage years — that moment of existential courage testing a formidable bra snaphistol shouldn't I and what will she . . . with Elvis singing All Shook Up on the dash radio.

Herman suddenly grinned with glee. "Soy listen, you must have got quite a few of those little Frenchie girls."

"Now, I didn't get laid until I got back to England." The cabin exploded with laughter. "That was my first time." More laughter — the tension cut by the buckish bantering common to all men who have served in armies. While they rambled on about all their famous lays, I tried to picture other men sitting in their places, men I knew who had fought in wars. I tried substituting a family friend in his seventies who had flown biplanes with the Royal Flying Corps in the first war — right now he'd be chortling through his stories about his greatest error as a twenty-year-old pilot — "Hell, it wasn't ack ack or Hun fighters we were scared of, it was those ruddy thunder storms." I remembered one of the commissioners who counted noses in the libraries back in Toronto. He wore Flying Corps wings above his ribbons and sat there, day after day, his face blank, his eyes reflecting the pale light from the tall windows, with no one to talk to and little to say while the buses and bottoms of strange, preoccupied young people drifted across his field of vision. Would he agree with Jim or would he cling to some ideal? What would all of them say? In the end, perhaps Oscar had the final answer: "It was very bad . . . very bad."

A successful playwright who can't make a living

By GARD SHELLEY

"Being a playwright in Canada is like being a thirsty man in the Sahara Desert."

Lennox Brown is a tall, thin, native of Trinidad who has lived in Canada for the past ten years. He is also a playwright.

His friendly easy manner made it difficult to stay on the topic of plays.

"You can't separate the emotional from the intellectual, you have to make value judgments," he says. "What people feel is more important than what they think."

His favorite play, "I Have to Call My Father", last week won him first prize in Category A (English section) of the Canadian University Drama League Playwriting Competition.

Even though Lennox has been relatively successful in selling and receiving prize money for his plays, he is not able to make his living at it.

I ask what other jobs he's had, he smiles, "I worked as a newspaper reporter in Northern Ontario, and I worked in a car wash."

Very little encouragement is provided for unknown playwrights and thus prizes and awards are highly valued.

His first full length play, "The Voyage Tonight", won a prize of $200 in the Norma Epstein National Creative Writing Competition last week.

"Fifty per cent of writing is reading," he says. "At one time I was reading four books a week but now I average one or two."

James Reaney is his favorite Canadian playwright. "A playwright should go deep into the psyche of his country and marry it with his art. Reaney has created a Canadian mythology," he says.

The conversation wanders a little and he talks about the West Indies. "Blacks are now looking to Africa for their cultural origins," he says.

Another of his plays, "Saturday's Druid", was produced by Lennox Brown, SGS, has won two awards for his plays.

the CBC for radio in September. In February "The Meeting" will be shown on CBC TV as part of a series which deals with the problems of youth. See a Lennox Brown play.

Get
campus
Notebooks
and Writing Supplies
at your Book Store

campus
Stationery Supplies

CHESS SIMULTANEOUS EXHIBITION

HART HOUSE - DEBATES ROOM
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10 - 7:00 P.M.

Mr. GEORGE KUPREJANOV, A Yugoslav - Canadian Chess Master will play up to 40 Games of Chess - SIMULTANEOUSLY - INTENDING TO WIN ALL GAMES

All student and faculty chess players are invited to attend this mind-boggling event.

Spectators: Free Admission
To Play: Club Members (50¢)

REFRESHMENTS

(Assisted by Veracity Fund)

HOT CATS? 536-0475

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
SERVICE OF REMEMBRANCE
SOLDIERS' TOWER, HART HOUSE

Tuesday, November 11th, 1969
10:55 a.m. to 11:05 a.m.

All members of the University Community are invited to participate in this very brief and silent service, consisting only of the tolling of the carillon, the laying of a wreath, and the traditional Two Minute Silence.

It is understood that no lectures will be cancelled but perhaps they might be concluded sharp at 10:45 to make attendance possible for all who wish to do so.

Morris Gross
President

HERE AND NOW

TODAY

ALL DAY

Exhibition by three Fine Art students of sketches and photos done in Europe this summer. Buttery, Trinity College.

Today's opera performance has been cancelled.

The medical arts and sciences society meeting on aerospace medicine has been cancelled.

Noon

Amateur radio station VE3UOT will be operating in the Hart House Rotunda. This is a good chance to send messages world wide (free even).

1 p.m.

First meeting of the new campus science newspaper. All science students who would like to contribute. SAC Office.

Films: "Physics and Chemistry of Water" and "Quantum Mechanical Harmonic Oscillation." Rm. 15B Chemistry Bldg.

Moratorium Committee meeting to finalize program and publicity plans for Nov 14. Rm. 10B7 Sid Smith

4 p.m.

Lecture by Prof Lawrence Stone Princeton University "The Family in Early Modern England" Rm. 2117 Sid Smith.

4:30 p.m.

Lecture by Prof Roman Jakobson on "In the Laboratories of Slavic and General Peonics." West Hall, University College.

8 p.m.

El Club espanol presenta "Las Rutas del Libertador" refresco, fiestecita de guitarra y cancion despues entrada gratis. Music room Wynniwood Victoria College.

TUESDAY

12:16 p.m.

Jean Marie Scott, mezzo soprano, Clara Salisbury Baker, speech arts end drama Concert Hall, Royal Conservatory of Music, 273 Bloor Street West.

1 p.m.

Yavneh will give a talk on Parshat Toledoth (to Loeth) by Jerry Tempelman Rm 2129 Sid Smith.

There will be a meeting of Group B people (Honours and General) to discuss Faculty Council Rm. 1070 Sid Smith.

4 p.m.

Prof. Lawrence Stone, Princeton University will conduct a seminar on "The Family in Early Modern England" Massey College Upper Library.

Psychology Student Union meeting, Innis College.

6 p.m.

Hillel Omers Club, call 923-7832 for reservations 186 St George

7 p.m.

Blue and White Society meeting Bickerteth Room, Hart House.
The U of T Homophile Association will hold a discussion on "Aspects of Sexuality" Upstairs lounge, GSU, Bancroft St

7:30 p.m.

A class in Bible end commentaries (torah and Meloshim) will be given by Rabbi Ben-Glas at Shaarei Tefillah Synagogue Neptune and Bathurst.

Christian Science Organization weekly testimony meeting, Rm. 200 Larking Bldg, Trn.

Council meeting of Chemistry Course union Rm. 204 Lash Miller

8 p.m.

Do you want to stop the Spadine Expressway? If so attend meeting of Pexis Faculty and Rate Payers Association, 373 Huron St.

8:30 p.m.

Film from the "Children in Conflict" series. Followed by a debate between John Brown and a representative from Warrendale Mechanical Bldg., Rm. 102 Admission 50¢.

GETTING ENGAGED

FORGET ABOUT LOVE WHEN YOU BUY A DIAMOND RING

Love is Fine. . . . But buying a Diamond is Business. It represents a Major Investment. To help you make this Investment Based on Facts, We offer a Free Booklet "The Day you Buy a Diamond". Tells you what to ask for and what to expect when you make this Important Investment.

WE ARE DIRECT DIAMOND DEALERS

High Proctor & Co.

DIAMOND DEALERS
131 BLOOR W. STE. 416
921-7702

Pink Whiskers
BOUTIQUES
2200 Yonge St. at Eglington
1 Bedford Rd. of Bloor
924-1974

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
Toronto Professional Bldg,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 101, Ontario

IMMIGRATION
CONSULTANTS

Telephone 364-0973

Toronto radicals march happily for Quebec libre

About 150 people, chanting "Le Québec au Québécois" and carrying placards reading "Smash Bill 63" marched from Queen's Park to the Liberal Party Headquarters Friday and then to the New Court-house.

The march was organized by the New Left Caucus, the Friendly Radical Organization of Glendon College, and the York Student Movement.

Their march to protest the subjugation of Quebec to English speaking interests was orderly and rather low-keyed. It culminated in a spirited merry-go-round dance at the New Court House.

The marchers gathered at 8 p.m. on the lawn in front of Queen's Park. From there they proceeded briskly down College St. chanting some half a dozen slogans — often simultaneously and usually in French. The police escorted the marchers all the way and one officer said that he found the exercise thoroughly enjoyable. Later the same officer mingled with the marchers and asked questions about their cause.

After circling in front of the Liberal Party Headquarters several times the marchers went to the New Court House. Here they formed several circles and danced merrily singing "Solidarity Forever" and "Révolution".

In a pamphlet distributed to the public they charged that Bill 63, which proposes to give parents the right to choose the language of instruction for their children, "would entrench the privilege of parents to choose English." This policy would be the final phase in "the cultural genocide of the Quebec people."

They also charged that the Quebec and Canadian governments are "systematically and often violently" denying Quebecois the most fundamental freedoms that are inherent in a democracy.

They argue that Pierre Vallières and Charles Gagnon are held in "preventive detention" contrary to the principle of innocence until the proof of guilt.

At the conclusion of the march Rob Ryan of the New Left Caucus spoke briefly. He told his audience that "this is just the beginning of a long struggle" and success lay in establishing a strong socialist movement in Canada.

History Dept. shelves abolition of seminars

The history department will keep third year seminar courses for at least one more year.

That was the outcome of a Friday afternoon meeting of the department at which the curriculum committee withdrew an earlier proposal to abolish the seminar courses for next year.

The student-faculty committee decided to back down in the face of protests on the part of students and faculty in the seminar courses.

Curriculum committee chairman R. J. Helmstadter said the proposal would be shelved until the spring, when "allocation of teaching resources could be examined at a more leisurely pace."

"We decided there was no time now to try to persuade the department of the wisdom of the action we recommend," he said. Plans for next year's curriculum must be finalized immediately and the delay means a proposal to end the seminar courses could not take effect until 1971-72.

"It is too late to have a thorough discussion now and we decided unanimously it would be wrong to press ahead." Prof. Helmstadter told the department meeting.

There was no discussion at Friday's meeting of the merit of the proposed dropping of the seminars, in which enrolment is limited to 12 students. The committee recommendation says these seminars take up too much of the department's manpower and that more lecture courses are necessary to forestall dramatic increases in enrolment in existing lecture courses.

The Friday meeting endorsed the principle of offering half-year courses and of considering "sympathetically" requests to have some courses not offered by the department counted towards the earning of a specialist degree in history.

The meeting also approved a minimum specification for receiving a history specialist degree under the new program — seven history courses during the three years after freshman year.

A future bone of contention may prove to be policy for admission to the limited enrolment seminar courses offered in third and fourth year. Most faculty seem to favour the criterion endorsed by the arts and science faculty council — leaving the choice up to the professor conducting the seminar, with admission guaranteed to no students.

TODAY
7.30 p.m.
Cooking with Steven Helperer, a pro cook, 79 Brunswick Ave

TUESDAY
7.30 p.m.
Seminar on the Family. Advisory Bureau, Harbord and Spadina above the bank

The following groups have not sorted out first meeting — we would like more reaction from the campus. If interested, phone Maggie Bizzell or leave message at SAC office 923 3940: Bible As Revolutionary Document, Conversational Yiddish, Libertarian Psychiatry, Non-Authoritarian Medicine, Art, Anarchism and Communism, The Nuclear Hexagram, A New Way into the I Ching, History Counter Courses, Educational Research, Education — What Is It and What It Should Be, Labor History of Canada, T-Groups, Psychology of Religion, "Neurotics in the Church"

SELECTED WORKS OF MAO TSE-TUNG

Soft Cover Edition $7.50 Cloth Edition $11.00

SELECTED MILITARY WRITINGS OF MAO TSE-TUNG

Soft Cover Edition $2.00 Cloth Edition $3.00

PREPAID ORDERS POSTAGE FREE

SUBSCRIBE TO CHINESE PERIODICALS IN ENGLISH

PEKING REVIEW

A weekly political and theoretical journal of Chinese news and views. Airmailed all over the world.

1 Year	2 Years	3 Years
$4.00	$6.00	$8.00

CHINA PICTORIAL

Published every month in Peking for readership abroad. Each issue has 44 pages or more, 12 to 16 in colour.

1 Year	2 Years	3 Years
$3.00	$4.50	$6.00

CHINA RECONSTRUCTS

A popular, illustrated monthly for the general reader.

1 Year	2 Years	3 Years
$3.00	$4.50	$6.00

CHINESE LITERATURE

A monthly magazine on Chinese literature and art.

1 Year	2 Years	3 Years
$3.00	$4.50	$6.00

FREE 1970 CALENDAR FOR EACH SUBSCRIBER

Catalogue and Samples upon request. All Periodicals mailed from Peking. (Allow 6-8 weeks for delivery). Add "plus exchange" on cheque only. Order from:

CHINA ARTS AND CRAFTS LTD.

33 East Hastings Street, Vancouver 4, B.C.

You'll love being a Kitten girl!

Glenayr

Kitten

WOOLMARK DOUBLE KNITS

Feel at ease in this cosy Kitten Woolmark Knit sweater. Raised contrasting stripes on front, turtle neckline with zipper, long sleeves. A wide selection of glowing new colours. Dry clean only.

Straight-cut Woolmark Knit pants with elastic waistband New "Pointeroma Stitch", dyed-to-perfectly-match your Kitten Woolmark Knit sweater. Pick from Kitten's palette of new Fall shades. Dry clean only

W41 W17

PURE VIRGIN WOOL

Without this label  It is not a genuine KITTEN.

Hart House Anniversary Debate

"PARLIAMENTARY DEMOCRACY HAS OUTLIVED ITS USEFULNESS"

Honorary Visitor

HON. ERIC WM. KIERANS
Minister of Communications

For the Ayes:

Ed Bridge, SGS
Ted McGee, III SMC

For the Noes:

Michael Scherk, III UC
James Yeager, III SMC

Speaker of the House: Sydney Hermant, M.A.

8:00 p.m. in the Debates Room, Hart House
Wednesday, November 12
(Ladies Welcome)

(Assisted by the Varsity Fund)

CHESS CLUB SIMUL
TODAY
Debates Room—7 p.m.

THE HISTORY OF CHESS

PUBLIC LECTURE
MUSIC ROOM— 8 p.m.
Tuesday, November 11th

50th ANNIVERSARY CONCERT OF CANADIAN JAZZ COMPOSITIONS

RON COLLIER ORCHESTRA

Great Hall—8:30 p.m.
Wednesday, November 12th
Tickets: Hall Porter
Ladies Welcome
(Sponsored by Music Committee Hart House)

Hart House Anniversary Debate

"PARLIAMENTARY DEMOCRACY HAS OUTLIVED ITS USEFULNESS"

Honorary Visitor

HON. ERIC WM. KIERANS
Minister of Communications

For the Ayes:
Ed Bridge, SGS
Ted McGee, III SMC

For the Noes:
Michael Scherk, III U.C.
James Yeager, III SMC

Speaker of the House: Sydney Hermant, M.A.

8:00 p.m. in the Debates Room
Wednesday, November 12

Ladies Welcome

UNOERWATER CLUB PRESENTS AN EVENING WITH
PHILIPPE COUSTEAU

Film director of the Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau and the expeditions of the research ship Calypso

GREAT HALL—8:00 P.M.
TDNIGHT

Tickets $3—Graduate Office, S.A.C.
and Engineering Stores
Everyone Welcome

EASTERN CANADIAN INTERCOLLEGIATE CHESS TOURNAMENT

Opens Friday, November 14th—Debates Room—2 p.m. and continues through Saturday and Sunday. Final play will begin 4 p.m. Sunday, November 16th

50TH ANNIVERSARY
SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT

LOIS MARSHALL

Great Hall—8:30
November 16
Tickets—Hall Porter

THE LIBRARY COMMITTEE
PRESENTS

JACQUES GOOBOUT

50th Anniversary-Writer in-Residence

WORKSHOPS:

Monday, November 10 Thursday, November 13
Tuesday, November 11 Friday, November 14

LIBRARY EVENING:

Monday, November 10—Hart House Library—8 p.m.

READING:

Wednesday, November 12—Music Room—4 p.m.

(Ladies Welcome)

PRIZE-WINNING PHOTOGRAPHS

from contest sponsored by

CAMERA CLUB & FARM COMMITTEES

Exhibited in the

CAMERA CLUB ROOMS

BEGINNING MONDAY, NOVEMBER 10

SYMPOSIUM

Report and Videotape highlights on a three-day discussion of Education held mid-October with staff and students.

Thursday, November 13th
Music Room—4 p.m.

Ladies Welcome

NOON HOUR FILMS

Entries from the Canada-wide Film Festival will be shown East Common Room—1:00 p.m.

November 10, 11, 12, 13 & 14

Saturday, November 15th

Rescreening of Film Entries begins at 11 a.m. and continues through the day in the East
Common Room.

Ladies Welcome

HART HOUSE FILM FESTIVAL AWARDS

Friday, November 14th
Library at 8 p.m.

NOON HOUR DEBATES

Monday, November 10th

"A WISE MAN'S WHISPER CARRIES FURTHER THAN A GREAT OUTCRY FROM A KING OF FOOLS"

Wednesday, November 12th

"THE MEMBERS OF THIS UNIVERSITY ARE BECOMING INCREASINGLY RELATIVISTIC, NIHILISTIC, CHAOTIC, WEARY AND TRIVIAL

Guest Speaker: RICHARD NEEDHAM

Friday, November 14th

"MULIER EST ADMINIS CONFUSIO"

1:00 p.m.

DEBATES ROOM

Ladies Welcome

CLASSICAL CONCERT

Wednesday, November 12th

MARTIN POLTEN
Guitarist

Music Room, 12-2 p.m.

Ladies Welcome

SQUASH CLUB

INSTRUCTION & EXHIBITION MATCHES

November 10th—November 14th

7-9 p.m.—Squash Courts

TABLE TENNIS SPECIAL DEMONSTRATION

FILMS OF EUROPEAN MASTERS IN COMPETION

Wednesday, November 12th
8:00 p.m.

Main Gym & Fencing Room

FOLK CONCERT TODAY

Music Room—1 p.m.

ROSS CULINER

Ladies Welcome

McGILL WINS YATES CUP

One yard short of the record for most touchdowns in a single season, McGill's ace halfback Dave Fleiszer is stopped by Blues Pete Lamantia (20), as Ian Kirkpatrick (38) moves in to make sure. McGill QB George Wall (12) looks on. That's McGill's

Pete Bender (24) on the ground in front of Kirkpatrick. McGill scored two plays later, but Fleiszer didn't get another chance to break the record. He gained only 15 yards in the entire game. photo by jim cowan

McGill Redmen did everything right in the gloom of Percival Molson Stadium Saturday afternoon as they won the Yates Cup by defeating Varsity Blues 17-0. It was McGill's tenth SIFL Championship, the first since 1962. Redmen finished first with a 6-1 record, Queens beat Mac by only 39-14 and are second at 5-2, Blues are third, 4-3.

As has been the case all season McGill's outstanding defence was the key to victory. Their aroused defensive unit held Blues to a meagre 27 net yards along the ground on 27 carries, including an embarrassing minus-2 yards in the second half. The alert McGill secondary picked off five of the many errant Toronto passes and stifled Varsity's scoring hopes with almost ridiculous ease.

With McGill ahead 7-0 late in the first quarter, Blues forced rushing leader Dave Fleiszer to fumble and cornerback Bob Bloxham recovered on the McGill 24.

On the next play, Varsity QB Vic Alboini tried to hit split end John Chapman on a stop-and-go pattern. Chapman went, the ball didn't and McGill's Steve Neville intercepted on the goal line. It was that kind of day.

Operating against a swirling wind, Redmen jumped into an early lead after recovering a fumble on Blues' first play from scrimmage. Coach Tom Mooney's polished running attack drove the ball into the end zone on nine plays from the Varsity 30.

Halfback Ken Aikin got the touchdown on a short pitch after Blues had stopped Fleiszer on two tries from inside the five.

The McGill drive was earlier aided by a questionable offside against the Blues when Redmen were about to gamble on a third down from the 10-yard line.

A VERY MUDDY FIELD

Two days of almost steady rain left the field a greasy, muddy quagmire. To gain better footing, Blues switched to special cleats. These "Moose-hooves" helped somewhat, but Blues simply couldn't move the ball.

In the first Varsity-McGill meeting on October 4, rookie Wayne Dunkley had taken over when Alboini went cold, and guided Blues to a thrilling 17-16 come-from-behind win.

Unfortunately, Blues had no such heroics in store Saturday. Alboini was disastrously inaccurate, and Dunkley completed only one pass for 10 yards, before being knocked out in the third quarter with a rib injury.

Blues receivers, especially Chapman and Eric Walter, spent a frustrating afternoon watching passes sail over their heads or drop agonizing inches beyond their outstretched fingertips. Chapman was regularly getting behind the McGill secondary, but the ball did not reach him 'till the second half, when he caught three for 52 yards.

Walter was open on numerous short patterns, but spent most of his time breaking up possible interceptions. Probably Blues only cinch all-star, Walter finished an otherwise successful season with his second consecutive Saturday without a pass reception.

Blues went nowhere against the wind and late in the first half, a short punt set McGill up on the Varsity 33. Redmen's passing quarterback, Dan Smith, got his only completion of the half for a first down and two plays later veteran Sal Lovechio booted a 26-yard field goal.

TIMER'S GOOF HELPS BLUES

After an exchange of punts, Blues tried desperately to get on the scoreboard before half time. The McGill timekeeper appeared to have see PUNT RETURN on next page

radio varsity grows

Radio Varsity the voice of campus news at the U. of T., has several openings for speaker locations. If you know of a suitable location fill out the blank below:

radio varsity grows

91 St. George St.
U. of T.

Please consider the following locations for radio varsity outlets:

For further information contact
Patrick Dymond
Radio Varsity
954-1444

Room #.....
Building.....
Name of President of appropriate student society.....
Name of Dean of appropriate academic division.....

WHY NOT?
BUY FROM THE CHAR-BURG
PIZZERIA
CHEAPER - BETTER
FREE DELIVERY
536-0475
PARTY - STUDENT PRICES

PROJECT 999

90 yard punt return sinks Blues thwarted their efforts when he allowed the clock to run 15 seconds while the officials called timeout to chase down an errant football.

With only seconds remaining, Dunkley tried to repeat the 17-16 script by going to rookie Jack Buchan, who was all alone at midfield. But Buchan slipped in the mud and his defender turned from goat to hero with an easy interception and long runback.

Lovecchio was wide on another field goal attempt, and Walt Sehr fumbled the return on about the 7-yard line. A dozen or so jerseys converged on the ball, but fortunately for Blues the McGill official's error had allowed time to run out.

Blues' passing game improved somewhat in the second half, but Varsity's serious threats ended in either incompletions or interceptions.

Fullback Bill Stankovic did ramble 60 yards into the end zone when Pet Bender fumbled a Paul McKay punt, but Blues had been called for no yards and the score was wiped out.

McGill appeared content to use a token offense and rely on their sturdy defence to protect the slender 10-0 lead. Lamantia gave Blues new life midway through the fourth quarter with a 60-yard runback of another Lovecchio field goal effort.

PLUNT RETURN ENDS IT

Blues managed a couple of first downs and appeared to have established good field position when McKay punted to Chris Rumball on the Redman 20.

However, Mr. Rumball's specialty happens to be punt returns.

90 yards and many blocks later, he was a hero; Blues were finished and McGill had it wrapped up, 17-0.

To Blues' credit, they refused to quit, but the McGill defence blitzed Alboini relentlessly and picked off two more passes.

Blues only victories were statistical. They accumulated 195 yards of total offense compared to McGill's 133. In passing, Alboini and Dunkley went 15 of 37 for 168 yards while the McGill duo of George Wall and Smith completed only three of 17 for 31 yards.

Blues had 11 first downs; McGill had six. Varsity ran 77 plays and McGill 75. Along the ground McGill, as expected, was way ahead, 133 to 27.

While Blues held Fleiszer to only 25 yards, Aikin got free for 60 on 22 carries. Walt Sehr led Varsity with 25 yards on 10 attempts.

Realizing the game was up after Rumball's touchdown, the large contingent of U of T Engineers began to chant "We're number 3!! We're number 3!!"

And that seems to be about right.

BLUESNOTES . . . Varsity prevented Fleiszer er and Lovecchio from breaking two scoring records set by members of the championship 1958 Blues. . . Fleiszer was held scoreless and finished with 10 touchdown's, one short of Tim Reid and Lovecchio kicked two converts to come within one of Walt Adams (21) . . . despite his poor showing Vic Alboini easily won the passing title but official stats will probably show Waterloo's Don Manahan has edged out Walter for total receptions; Walter was way ahead in total passing yardage. . . Blues keyed on Fleiszer and held the powerful back to only 15 net yards on five carries; he is still an easy winner of the rushing title with 694 yards unofficially. . . the power failure that hit almost all of Quebec about noon turned Blues dressing rooms into dingy sweat-boxes but good organization enabled all players to install their moose-hooves in plenty of time. . . the sudden failure also delayed a refereeing clinic at the McGill Arena as five guys and 50 girls were left to skate around in virtual darkness. . . fun, eh? . . . congratulations to McGill; they worked hard for the Yates and deserve the praise they'll receive. . . Windsor edged Bishop's 23-22 and meet Manitoba in the Western Bowl this weekend. . . McGill travels to Halifax to play U.N.B. in the other College Bowl semi-final. . . look for Manitoba and McGill to match horns for the national title at Varsity Stadium on Friday Nov. 21. . . bye now.

-- Paul Carson

Three straight shutouts as gals win field hockey

By MARIE LANDMESSER

The women's field hockey team has walked away with top honors in the Women's Inter-Collegiate Two-Conference Association tournament for the fifth successive year.

In the finals, the Varsity gals defeated Western 4-0, Queens 5-0, and wrapped it all up by edging McMaster 2-0.

Outstanding player in the tournament was Toronto goalie Joan McClymont who made several brilliant plays, including a sensational save on a Mac break-away in the final game.

As usual, Sally Manning led the Toronto attack with six of the eleven goals—four against Queens and one in each of the other games.

Despite the impressive scores, the field hockeyettes had difficulty polishing and finishing their plays around the enemy nets; the usually accurate Varsity passing combos failed to click with any consistency.

Kudos also go to Toronto fullbacks Alice Shank and Liz Daniel, whose steady defensive play was a major factor in the three shutouts.

COMMERCE HONOURS ECONOMICS M.B.A.

We will be visiting the University of Toronto campus on to discuss career opportunities in public accounting and its related fields of taxation and management consulting. Appointments should be made through the Student Placement Office, where brochures are also available. If the date of our visit is not convenient please call Mr. William R. Reynolds in our Toronto office, 366-6243.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13

ARTHUR ANDERSEN & CO. CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Toronto Montreal Winnipeg Calgary Vancouver

HOT CATS? 536-0475

CLASSIFIEDS

FAST ACCURATE home typing — Miss Linda Flood — 884 6526 Keep this name and number for future use

NEED CASH? Cut out this ad. Above average earnings Part time now full time summers Sales and management For appointment call Mr. Schultz — 920-4726

ESSAYS. Theses, typed professionally on electric machine Paper supplied 30c per page Close to campus 75 Madison Ave Phone 921-2278 after six Ask for Lovec

EXPERIENCED TYPIST. Typing of theses, notes, essays, done quickly accurately and neatly Economical, electric typewriter Phone 421-9036

TYPIING — electric last neat accurate Students rates 30c a page text only, no math Excellent work satisfaction guaranteed Miss Gilbert 487-5639 after 6 30 pm

USED TV sets for sale Less than $50 30 day warranty on parts and labour. Act now Limited supply Phone 925-7071 after 6 pm

CAR POOL DRIVERS wanted Lawrence Bathurst Baycrest Area — Arrive on campus 9 00 a.m. — Leave 10 30 p.m. — We have parking Contact Althur at 783-1533

MALE OR FEMALE assistants needed for Cub Pack, Boys 8 11 North Toronto Call Brian 488-6614

SALTY DOG Occasione will rent premises Monday to Thursday all evening For information call A. Curry 964 7080 or 633-2877

1 BEDROOM apt $150.00 per month Bathurst & College 368-5118 days 221-8512 evenings

WANTED. Girl to share 2 bedroom flat with 2 other girls Monthly rent $10 in Bathurst Bloor area For details call 531-7394

New College Motion Picture Society presents W. C. FIELDS in "MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE" — Wednesday, 8 p.m. New College (Westmoor) Oving Hall (21 Classic Ave.)

TYPIING theses, essays, notes charts English, French, other languages Mimeographing, electric typewriters Mary Oeie Sotir (M. Dawes) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225, 922-7624

GETTING ENGAGED! Send or phone today for free booklet "The Day you buy a diamond" H. Proctor and Co. 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416, 921-7702

TUTOR REQUIRED. writer wishes to obtain verbal outline of Biology 3 or 4 year course and/or Psychology 304. Girl preferred 421-6893

SEX? No — But "tops" in typing essays etc. and only 50c per typed page Five years' "experience" Phone 633-7124 Monday to Thursday

TYPIING. Essays, theses, IBM electric typewriters. Located on St. George St. Telephone 921-9326

WANTED — Male or female to share three bedroom apt with two males Phone 531-8903 after 6 00 p.m.

AVENUE RD. — BLOOR I need one gal to share upper two floors of renovated townhouse, partially furnished Available Nov 15 Call 573 30 p.m. Linda 925-0410

VOLUNTEERS needed at St. Christopher House, 67 Wates Avenue Bathurst and Dundas Area Sociology or Psychology Students. Nursing Headstart Program 9 to 11 30 am or 1 to 3 15 p.m. daily After School Program Girls Department — 3 to 5 p.m. Phone Miss Avril Brown at 364-8456

FUR COAT for sale, rabbit with antelope suede bands new from Europe too small for me (size 10) $120 Phone Eva 781-7956

FOUND pair of women's glasses rounded tortoise shell frames in front of UC Call 928-4881 651-3253 after 6

FOR RENT — 1/3 of a house, single room Bay Yorkville area Call 964-0235

FURNISHED. self contained apartment, Rosedale, in exchange for personal and ground duties, approx 4 hours per week required time 751-1080

NOBODY KNOWS EVERYTHING

But you'll know much more if and when you "plug in" to the library orientation program. Tapes and slides giving a general introduction, card catalogue advice and a few clues about the stacks are available for viewing at both main entrances to the University of Toronto

LIBRARY

U.C. Ployer's Guild presents

THANATOS

AN EVENING OF READINGS ON THE SUBJECT OF DEATH

NOV. 12 & 13 — 8.30

WEST MALL ADMISSION FREE

University of Toronto

ORGAN RECITALS

November 10 — Patrick Wedd
November 17 — Aubrey Foy
November 24 — Charles Peaker

University of Toronto Organist

MONDAY AFTERNOONS

at five minutes past five o'clock

CONVOCATION HALL

Ruggerites hang tough with early lead

from page 16

against McMaster. They wanted another win.

With a strong wind in their faces, and a solid lead, the Blues concentrated on defensive tactics. The accurate kicking of fly half Ian Owens and fullback Larry Mckenna kept the Blues out of serious trouble.

Early in the half, Graehem Wynn suffered a terrible injury. In blocking a kick he received a foot full in the mouth. His two front teeth were knocked cleanly out. With blood streaming from the wound, he left the field.

But, only two minutes later he returned to the field and finished the game with his best play ever. Wynn has been the backbone of the team for the entire season and his injury took most of the happiness out of the victory.

Queen's never gave up and scored a penalty goal and a back line try before the end of the game.

At one point they were almost assured of another try. With three consecutive penalties awarded against Toronto on their five yard line the Queen's pack couldn't have asked for a better opportunity. The solidity of the Blue pack stopped them dead, three times. Then from a tight scrum Owens kicked the ball out of danger.

This amazing defense deflated the Queen's team and the game ended with two exhausted teams hobbling off the field. The final score was Toronto 22, Queen's 12.

With the victory came the OQAA championship for the third consecutive year. Next year should be equally successful as the Second team will provide strong players to fill the positions left vacant by graduating Blues.

photo by busy jim cowan

Blues split end John Chapman (76) cuts between McGill defenders Steve Neville (35) and Norm Woods but can't leap high enough to grab wayward pass. Chapman repeated this aerial performance several times in Blues 17-0 loss. See details on pages 13 and 14.

Vic beats PHE 20-1 to claim first

By LYNDON LITTLE

The "Scarlet and Gold" from Vic (4-1) have demonstrated once again that they know how to win the big games as they downed Keith Johnson's previously unbeaten PhysEd (4-1) crew 20-1 in a pivotal game played Wednesday.

Should both Vic and PhysEd win their remaining game this week and end in a first place tie then Vic will be awarded top spot in the first division by virtue of their greater point spread in the two games played between the two teams PhysEd defeated Vic 15-0 in their first encounter).

Both teams, however, will be participating in the Mulock cup playoffs as the two top teams in the first division earn playoff spots.

Diminutive halfback Peter Fairgrievies led the Vic attack with a pair of touchdowns. One came on a 4 yard sweep around left end in the second quarter and the other on a 15 yard pass from quarterback John Baird on his last play of the game. Fullback Bruce Carroll scored the other Vic major on a 3 yard plunge over right guard.

PhysEd's lone point came on a wide field goal attempt by massive defensive end Grant Tadmam.

Since the 15-0 loss to PhysEd, Vic head coach Tony Speciale has strengthened his team with the acquisition of three quality players. Dave Harris, Peter Wade and fullback Carroll.

Yesterday, the Dents (5-0) kept their undefeated string intact as they edged Scarborough College (1-4) by a score of 16-12.

The victory was worth four points as it also took into account a game postponed early in October.

Rick Ward and Bob Sullivan had majors for the Dents while Dave Menhort and Mat Nakamura scored touchdowns for Scarborough.

Meds (4-1) stayed within striking distance of the Dents in the second division with two wins. On Oct. 31, they defeated Scarborough 12-9 (Tom Kruner and Bill Davies with majors for Meds and Nakamura for Scar.) and last Tuesday they downed winless University College 14-7 (Kruner and Rick Rowland with touchdowns for the Meds and Steve Freeman for U.C.)

The Meds must defeat Dentistry by 13 points when the two teams meet today to decide the second division and the Mulock cup playoff position.

In the third division, both Forestry (4-1) and New College (3-2) picked up victories. Forestry downed Trinity (1-3-1) 14-2. Bill Snell and Bruce Pamplin had majors for Forestry. On Tuesday it was New over Pharmacy 6-0 with quarterback Mark Albert breaking the game open with a 65 yard punt return in the third quarter.

New College must defeat Forestry by 28 points in their final meeting tomorrow to finish first and advance into the playoffs.

In the battle of the first division's bottom two teams Monday, Engineering picked up its first win defeating St. Mikes, whose moribund offense has produced only six points in five games, by a score of 7-0. John Pearson was the hero for the Engineers scoring on a 4 yard counter play late in the third quarter for the same's only major.

HART HOUSE
UNDERWATER CLUB
PRESENTS

PHILIPPE
COUSTEAU

NOV 10

HART HOUSE

8:00 PM

TICKETS $3.00 AVAILABLE AT THE FOLLOWING
SAC GRAD. OFFICES ENG STORES 928-2446

GRADUATING? UNDECIDED?

We Understand

Discuss your career opportunities as a Chartered Accountant with us at the placement service

NOVEMBER 18

or call Steve Burns at our office

STARKMAN, KRAFT, ROTHMAN, BERGER & GRILL
CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS
3101 BATHURST ST., SUITE 601
TORONTO 19, ONTARIO
TELEPHONE 782-1155

Management and Specialist Careers for Graduates

Sun Life of Canada will be on campus to discuss your future with you.

The life insurance industry today offers an interesting and rewarding future to individuals with management and technical potential.

Make your appointment now at the placement office to see Sun Life on

NOVEMBER 20th

Our booklet "Careers with Sun Life" is available at the placement office.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The Insurance People with Ideas

HEAD OFFICE: MONTREAL

RuggerBlues win OQAA title 22-12

By DAN McAUSTER

The Rugger Blues retained the OQAA Rugger Championship for the third consecutive year in Kingston Saturday. It was a tough haul this year as the Blues almost lost their chance when they fell to the Guelph Gryphons early in the season.

The field was wet, the sky was dark and a light rain fell. The fans outnum-

Three minutes after Cairn's kick veteran second row Maris Apse stomped over for Toronto's first try.

It came after a sloppy lineup ball that was finally grabbed by Graehem Wynn. He quickly slipped it to wing forward Dan McAlister who after a short run fed it to Apse.

Apse then put his head down and dived the remaining ten yards over two Queen's players for the score. Cairn's convert made the score Toronto 8, Queen's 0.

Queen's, a team renowned for not quitting, came back and scored a forward try through the surprised Toronto pack. Fortunately, the Queen's kicker could not cope with the wind and the try was not converted.

HOLMES' QUICK REPLY

Toronto quickly responded to the Queen's retort. Centre John Holmes, on a standard move that would feed the ball into the forwards, spotted a hole in the Queen's line. He cut for it and left the two Queen's centres lying on the turf. The remaining four Queen's defenders were nothing for Holmes as he romped through them and touched the ball down between the posts. With Cairn's successful convert the score was Toronto 13, Queen's 3.

By now the Toronto pack and the "Golden Toe" were hot. The Blues pressed unmercifully into the Queen's zone and their worried back row was continually blown offside. In six minutes, Cairns scored nine more points.

With only a few minutes left in the half, the Blue pack rested a little too much and allowed the Queen's team to advance into scoring position. Toronto was finally blown offside and the opposition closed the half with a three point penalty kick.

With the score 22-6, the Queen's team needed more than effort to win. While Queen's coach was trying to put some hope into his team, wily Toronto coach Neville Nankeville simply told the Blues to keep up their drive.

QUEENS HAD FAN SUPPORT

The field was now electric with tension. Several hundred Queen's fans spilled over the sidelines following the Gael's successful football game

see RUGGERITES on page 15

HockeyBlues beat Loyola 7-4

By JIM COWAN

Varsity Blues dispelled all doubts Saturday night that their rookie-laden hockey team might have trouble scoring goals, as they overcame a chippy Loyola Warriors team 7-4 in an exhibition game in Montreal.

In a game marred by poor refereeing and cheap penalties, Blues played just well enough in the first two periods to stay ahead, outscoring Warriors 3-2. Then in the third period they came alive, skated and checked Loyola into the ice and slammed in four more. Warriors picked up two cheap goals, one while Blues were two men short.

Warriors showed a marked inability to clear the puck out of their own end and had trouble finishing off plays in Blues territory. As it was Blues were outshot 35-34, but many of the Loyola attempts, especially in the third period, came from outside the Varsity blue line.

ROOKIES SHINE

Blues opened the scoring at 9:32 of the first period. With Loyola short-handed Toronto's rookies came through as Nick Holmes finished a play from Robbie Ellis and Bob McGuinn to put to Toronto one up.

It was a good night for the newcomers. Bill Buba picked up his first goal as a Blues player, and rookies had a hand in four of the seven goals.

Grant Cole was sharp in his first start as a Varsity goalie, and while Blues generally make any goalie look good, Lanky Grant came through with several key saves when his defense forgot how to clear the puck.

Veteran Paul Laurent picked up where he left off last year, scoring two goals, including the winner. It was a classic Laurent effort. After digging the puck out of the corner, he circled in from front of the Warriors' net, then calmly potted it past Loyola's acrobatic goalie, Rocky Martin.

Blues other goals came from Bryan Tompson, Len Burman and John Wright, while Danny McCann, John Donnelly, Alair Tremblay and John Hutton scored for Warriors.

SIN BIN FULL

The game, while not as rough as last year's which Loyola won 6-4, was slowed by frequent penalties. Blues received 11 minors (including a triple minor for roughing to Bob Hamilton in the second period) while Loyola was assessed eight minors. Two Loyola goals came while Blues were shorthanded. Blues picked up three power play goals.

BLUENOTES . . . Loyola goalie Rocky Martin is one of three 17-year-olds on Warriors squad this year . . .

A blur of speed, Len Burman carries the puck out of Blues' zone as Bill L'Heureux looks on.

football Blue Ron Kishimoto went to the hockey game and was promptly conscripted as an assistant manager. . . Loyola general manager John Berrigan spent the game coaching from the Loyola side of the penalty bench, conferring with coach Dave Drapper between periods . . . the four year old Loyola arena drew compliments from Blues' Paul Laurent for its excellent ice surface . . . it was Brian St. John's first game as captain of the Varsity hockey squad, and while he didn't score he showed he has the qualities to rally the team and be a real leader on the ice . . . Radio Loyola was so bad it made Radio Varsity look good.

Toronto coach Neville Nankeville bered by several times the crowds seen on Toronto sidelines.

The match began with devastating Toronto play. Two minutes after the kickoff, the "Golden Toe" struck. Aided by a favorable wind, Cairn's boot sailed through the uprights to open the scoring.

By now, the Toronto pack had established their dominance. Good binding in the lineouts combined with solid jumping by Curt McGuire and Jeff Ellwand completely frustrated the Queen's pack. The excellent hooking of Toronto's Mike Code added to their troubles.

The End

The Beginning

The student council at the University of Saskatchewan Saskatoon campus Monday condemned Remembrance Day as a glorification of war rather than of peace. The council said it did not wish to show disrespect for the dead, but wanted to protest the "commercialism of war" encouraged by praise of military actions and solutions.

At U of T, as you can see from these pictures, Remembrance Day went off without a hitch. For the second year in a row 11 a.m. classes were held as usual. Officially, classes will be on again as usual Friday, despite appeals for U of T to join in the continent-wide Vietnam Moratorium.

THE
varsity
TORONTO

VOLUME 90 — No. 22
November 12, 1969

Senate says it's business as usual on Moratorium Day

By CECELIA VIGGO

The University of Toronto will not officially close in observance of Vietnam Moratorium Day, November 14.

President Bissell referred a request by the Moratorium Committee to close the university to the Senate, which advised against an official suspension of classes.

The Moratorium Committee is, however, sponsoring a student boycott of classes on Friday and encouraging attendance at a Vietnam rally in Convocation Hall.

The committee circulated petitions asking students and staff to request official closing of the university and indicate their intention to participate in the boycott of classes.

Petitions with 1500 signatures were submitted to President Bissell on Tuesday.

Since the administration has disclosed that individual departments may suspend classes on Friday, the committee has also sent letters to department and division heads and staff, asking their cooperation in the Moratorium Day observances.

To encourage student boycott of classes, and attendance at the Vietnam rally, the Moratorium Committee urged concerned students to speak out in their classes on the importance of Moratorium Day observances.

Plans to publicize both boycott and rally include "mass leafleting and poster" of the campus, a press conference, tentatively scheduled for Wednesday, and, possibly "guerrilla theater" performances on Vietnam in college cafeterias.

The Vietnam rally in Convocation Hall will feature as speakers, U of T professors W. C. Berman, history department, and M. H. Watkins, political economy department. "At least one rock group", and "several folk singers" are also slated to appear.

Other groups also plan to observe Moratorium Day.

At Saint Basil's Church, on the St. Michael's College campus, a vigil will be held from noon Friday to noon Saturday.

The Union of American Exiles will hold a mass rally on the evening of Nov. 14 at the Medical College Auditorium. On Saturday afternoon, they plan to march on Nathan Phillips Square, and then to picket the American consulate.

Committee could cancel classes to consider CUG

The Commission on University Government Programming Committee is considering cancelling classes for two days sometime in the next two or three months.

It is hoped that during these two days the CUG Report might be very widely discussed throughout all parts of the University.

The CUG Programming Committee, consisting of three faculty members and three students, has been set up to give some guidance for organizing discussion in various groups in the university about the implementation of the CUG Report. It had its first meeting last Friday.

It hopes to do this by encouraging the formation of various ad hoc committees throughout the university.

Disagreement has arisen over the form that these ad hoc committees should take.

A draft letter to the university community by Robin Ross, Secretary of the Programming Committee, has recommended that the committees should be made up of an equal number of staff and students.

Both the original commission and the Programming Committee have had student-faculty parity.

Several members of the Programming Committee, including SAC President Gus Abols, feel that many members of the faculty are not ready to accept parity between faculty and students and would thus feel alienated by the ad hoc committees.

It was also felt that since parity is one of the CUG recommendations, and that parity is the ultimate position that students might attain, it should not be instituted before discussion on the matter takes place.

Larry Hoffman, GSU representative on the Committee, argued that to not institute parity on the ad hoc committees would be backing down from the spirit of CUG and the Programming Commission itself.

Mr. Ross's letter also suggested that the committee should recommend organizing a final, more formal debate on the CUG Report.

This debate would take place on a university-wide basis and would consist of a widely representative elected assembly of 100 to 200 members which might meet in late February or March of 1970.

The letter in its final form will be widely circulated throughout areas of the University. It will recommend that serious consideration be given to methods of forming staff-student committees to discuss CUG.

More bedroom time for men at Whitney Hall

Men's hours have been extended in Whitney Hall, University College's women's residence.

The changes, effective today, allow men in bedrooms from 2 p.m. to 2 a.m. on Fridays, Saturday and Sunday.

The hours for the past year have been 7 p.m. to 11 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays, and from 2 p.m. to 11 p.m. on Sundays.

Men are allowed in the common rooms from 8 a.m. to midnight every day.

The Residence Council of Whitney Hall did not vote to extend weekday hours at Monday's meeting, though Dean of Women Charity Grant was reported to favour a more consistent approach for administrative purposes.

The changes are believed to be in reaction to two questionnaires circulated in the residence, which favoured extension of Men's Hours.

Under the new regulation, a floor can vote to reduce, but not further extend, bedroom hours.

The residence regulations read in part:

"Men are expected to observe accepted standards of dress and behaviour. They are required to comply with house rules and to leave promptly at closing time. Men may not enter the bedroom corridors unless accompanied by a Whitney Hall resident."

Girls late, get gate

HALIFAX (CUP) — The administration of St. Mary's University has suspended two female students and expelled another for violating a residence curfew.

The three 17-year-old girls signed in 15 to 45 minutes after the 2:30 a.m. deadline. The severe penalties made good the threats of President Henry Labelle, who promised Friday to expel anyone breaking residence regulations.

Labelle's threats of Friday were in response to a student vote of Nov. 3 to abolish residence curfews and visiting rules. He said he "didn't think boys and girls should be able to move from one building to another without regulations."

courtesy of C.M.H.A.

HELPLESSNESS is a state of mind
...so is loneliness ...so is despair ...so is mental illness

it's hard to rejoin the community.
it takes guts.
a lot of guys have made it.
a lot of guys are trying.
we need people who are willing to help.

hell is a state of mind.
so is HOPE

PROJECT 999

film and discussion refreshments
hart house
music room thursday nov. 13
7:00 pm

Happy Hart House 'hams' will hold open house

By DON GLENDINNING

Howard White (SGS) and Erv Weiss (IV APSC) sat in the rotunda of Hart House joking and laughing with California, occasionally switching to Revelstoke, B.C. and then hearing Ethiopia carrying on a conversation with Chicago.

They are HAM operators in the classic sense and this is the Hart House Amateur Radio Club — VE3UOT — a nucleus of approximately ten members who have kept together for the past two years in spite of the lack of an aerial, which prevented actual transmission.

Today and all this week members of the committee will be making up for that silence by demonstrating their new HAM (high frequency modulation) equipment from 12 noon to 2 p.m. daily.

"We've been getting a lot of publicity broadcasting here," said Weiss.

"Our intention is to create an interest in HAM broadcasting and increase the membership in our club to approximately 50. We'll take anyone."

White broke in. "I guess you can tell them of the general meeting on November 19. It'll be an organizational type of thing; meeting people, finding out about HAM broadcasting, the requirements for a license (which we can teach) to broadcast."

A constant changing crowd of about 15 seemed interested enough in listening to people speaking from faraway lands. But surely there was more to the club than just exchanging jokes and pleasantries with Winnipeg HAM operators?

"We intend to be giving a course on the HAM equipment and theory on its operation. It's quite a lot of work to learn the intricacies," said White, "but the genuine interest of the members and the variety of people you meet make it easier."

I picked up their radio log book, which had 15 entries ranging all over the North American continent put in since VE3UOT began transmission Monday.

There were names beside each location reached: Stan, Bill, George, etc. I asked White if he knew these people.

"Well, I just met them ten minutes ago."

"Don't get the idea that getting a transmitting license is hard. One fellow I know got his in two and a half months," said Weiss.

"It mainly involves learning to transmit and receive morse code at a certain rate and some understanding of electronic theory pertaining to radio."

They changed the frequency

photo by Errol Young

and White cheerfully spoke into the microphone.

"This is VE3UOT... Is there anyone on this frequency?... This is University of Toronto in Ontario, Canada, fiftieth anniversary of Hart House here."

A southern drawl answered back. It was Atlanta, Georgia. Very happy to hear from y'- all... our best wishes from down here to all your celebrations... you were asking about the strength of your signal... man, it's clear as a bell."

Québec Français plans to protest Montréal anti-demonstration by-law

MONTREAL (CUP) — The Front du Québec Français, a broad-front coalition of nationalist and unilingualist organizations, has announced a "massive" demonstration for today to protest Montreal's proposed anti-demonstration by-law.

The demonstration will take place outside the city hall, as local legislators consider the measure proposed by executive committee chairman Lucien Saulnier to ban any demonstration "considered likely to turn violent."

The by-law would provide 60-day jail terms and $100 fines for violators.

It was proposed immediately after last Friday's violent demonstration when molotov cocktails were hurled by protestors outside the city's Palais de Justice.

The by-law has already drawn the attention of Federal Justice Minister John Turner, who said Monday the government could challenge the constitutionality of the legislation.

Turner has asked the Montreal City Council for the text of the measure.

The by-law adds another grievance to the list compiled by opponents to Bill 63, the government's bilingualism legislation now in its third reading in the Quebec National Assembly. The bill originally caused the creation of the FQF and provoked mobilizations across the province for three weeks.

It gives parents the choice between English and French as languages of instruction for their children while proclaiming French the "priority language" for the province.

Opponents to the Bill, led by the FQF, say its passage will legitimize the eventual destruction of the French language and culture in Quebec.

The furor over Bill 63 — and the resulting demonstrations — continued in Montreal courts Monday as Michel Chartrand, President of the Montreal Central Council of the Confederation of National Trade Unions was freed on $2,000 bail after being charged with uttering seditious statements.

Chartrand is alleged to have made the statements at a Quebec City rally October 29 organized to protest Bill 63.

Monday night, the Executive Committee of the CNTU's central council voted "to condemn energetically the neo-fascist regime into which (Provincial Justice Minister) Remi Paul is plunging the people of Quebec."

It was, the motion said, the greatest absurdity that although Chartrand had been charged with sedition, neither the prosecution nor the judge could say what he had said was seditious.

Sue R sez belz an Harry et is about four months explain ing Heggel, a famous german furry from Sherrys Carl Marks hows Brian singing in his den / Atlantis rears it head herein an Donovan has us to think it swim, it do and is within. Don'Lendenning Cecilia-viggiaAcolinPilmerAlouiserAjohnbenson of building fame layout Hannah of Goldhar claim. Dave off Frank one hears it sed that some named in here're off there head, off there stick or off their nut off they're sticker off their rut. Geoffmeggs, Carsuecup too Superel drew Spadina blue, and said the art show did get threw. Me is jon and you is u and they are he and we are thru. But will that do?... and IS IT ALL TRUE!!!!?Time will tell... if you get through. To the ARE rooders, yes people, sometimes, though not off, things ARE really as we seem. To the typists; awake! you're in a dream. Peace, Love, Joy all Blessings.

✧ once a day is good ✧ twice a day is better and three times a day is just beautiful.

... it happens three times a day at the UNIVERSITY
BOOKROOM
Come and dig it.

Nixon tells it like it is

... We Americans are a do-it-yourself people — an impatient people. Instead of teaching someone else to do a job, we like to do it ourselves. This trait has been carried over into our foreign policy. . ."

President Richard Nixon's television rhetoric contains flashes of irony — the hysteria of a nation somehow forces some truth past this man's irrational, confident facade.

As the war in Vietnam continues, the presidential promises become more and more ludicrous. They become their own parody.

"I believe that one of the reasons for the deep division in this nation about Vietnam is that many Americans have lost confidence in what their Government has told them about our policy," Nixon told millions of viewers recently.

The understatement is absurd. How do you maintain confidence in a government that has promised troop withdrawals to stave off internal dissent and then ignored those promises?

"In order to end a war fought on many fronts, I initiated a pursuit for peace on many fronts," Nixon continues.

Read imperialism for war. Read stability for peace. Vietnam is just the most dramatic example of the drive to secure an American economic dominance over the underdeveloped countries of this world.

South-East Asia has been rejecting that dominance for years. The one, two, three, many Vietnams that Che Guevera alluded to are potentially in South America, Africa, Europe, and Canada.

As Canadians, we must see the war in Vietnam as it relates to our own history. We have developed as a U.S. colony to an extremely sophisticated level. The U.S. grip on Canada thus seems less severe than that on Vietnam.

But we are an obedient colony, whose infra-structure is neatly integrated into the U.S. economy. No jagged edges. No guns. American managers for their subsidiaries in Canada are long since obsolete. They have Canadian mandarins.

And as Ontario's branch-plants have carried the domination a second step — into Quebec — it's deemed wise to hire French managers, elect French Prime Ministers, put French on the other side of the cereal boxes.

Despite the cover-ups, Canada remains an underdeveloped "affluent" society, that pipes its natural resources south of the border practically free-of-charge. The Quebecois remain as a class in cultural ghetto.

U.S. imperialism relates Canada to Vietnam.

Ironically Nixon realizes there could be other Vietnams: "I want to end the war to save the lives of those brave young men in Vietnam. . . in a way which will increase the chance that their brothers and their sons will not have to fight in another Vietnam someplace in the world."

Circle 1975: read "Quebec" for "Vietnam".

If you support the moratorium Friday, there's no reason to think you are just supporting the Vietnamese.

letter from philosophy

In response to a request for funds by the U.S. Vietnam Moratorium Committee, the undersigned members of the Department of Philosophy have sent a contribution directly to them at 1029 Vermont Ave., N.W., Washington D.C., U.S.A.. We invite other members of the university community who share our concern to do likewise.

J.V. Canfield, Frank Cunningham, R.B. DeSousa, D.P. Gauthier, Hans Herzberger, John Hunter, J.C. Morrison, David Savan, Wayne Sumner.

note to varsity staff

Full staff meeting today at 1 p.m. to finalize arrangements for the trip to Hamilton and ORCUP this weekend and to discuss Friday's issue of The Varsity. Friday's paper will involve a New Concept with regard to the Review.

varsity

TORONTO

Editor
Review Editor
Associate Review Editor
News Editors

City Editors
Features Editor
Sports Editor
Design

CUP Editor
Photo Editor
Executive Assistant
Advertising Manager
Editorial Offices
Editorial Phones
Advertising Office

Brian Johnson
Larry Hansen
Jack McCaffrey
Jim Cowan
Goff Mlegg
Louis Eichenman
Noel Stickle
Mary Kate Rowan
Paul Carson 923-4053
Dave Frank
Barbara Barchanin
Sue Rinder
Mark Rubin
Hermet Kideckal
Carol Cooper 923-8171
91 St. George 2nd floor
923-8741 923-8742
91 St. George 1st floor

The Varsity a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

... In order to end a war fought on many fronts, I initiated a pursuit for peace on many fronts. . . The defense of freedom is everybody's business — not just America's business. . ."

Barkwell asks Vernon to look again at the facts

By BOB BARKWELL

Bob Barkwell is Vice-President of the students administrative council.

"THE TRUTH SHALL MAKE YOU FREE" — sign over the entrance to Victoria College.

"The first mention of the SAC employees arose at the April 28th executive meeting, at a time when the student body was either writing exams or in the way home for the holidays."

— Bob Vernon, Nov. 10, 1969.

That's one of a set of interesting implications that Bob Vernon compiled in his letter on the SAC union contract that appeared in Monday's Varsity.

The letter seemed to be a well-documented history of a conspiracy.

In fact, much of the documentation is incompatible with official SAC minutes.

The SAC Executive did not have much choice in deciding when they would first consider the question of unionization.

The SAC President's secretary, Miss Jeanne McGuire, approached the executive first at the 34th executive meeting, April 28.

Miss McGuire explained she had been trying to organize the employees of the SAC for some time, but that there had been a delay while the employees decided which union they wished to join — the Office and Professional Employees International Union or the Canadian Union of Public Employees. After the decision to join CUPE,

"She (Miss McGuire) stated that all eligible employees had been signed by herself in a period of one hour."

— excerpt from the 34th executive minutes.

At that time, the executive decided to voluntarily recognize CUPE as the sole bargaining agent for the SAC employees.

"The motion was approved by a straw vote of the new council."

— excerpt from the 34th executive minutes.

By June 10, the union announced that the contract was ready for negotiation. Negotiations took place over two days. On the first day, all but three clauses were approved, and it was agreed to meet again in two days to complete the negotiations.

But in the interval, Mr. Abols had decided he had objections to some of the clauses previously agreed to, and asked that negotiations be reopened on them.

The union negotiating team objected that this constituted bargaining in bad faith, and the other two members of the management team (Bob Barkwell and Mike Simon) agreed. After some argument, the negotiations went on and the final three clauses were approved.

"Throughout the summer it became increasingly clear that the proposed contract was to be the keystone in the 'worker-student alliance' that SAC Vice-President envisaged, rather than, as claimed, a method of establishing democracy in the SAC office. The true purpose of the contract is indicated by excerpts from SAC meeting minutes: 'the contract will probably be used by CUPE as a model contract in unionizing efforts in the future. The contract would be waved under the noses of Simcoe Hall and used as a foothold for the unionization of other U. of T. employees!"

— Bob Vernon, Nov. 10, 1969.

One might assume that this was a position put forward by Mr. Barkwell, — unless one had access to SAC Minutes.

"Miss McGuire explained the organization. She stated that all the eligible employees had been signed by herself in a period of one hour. She mentioned that the contract would be 'waved under the noses of Simcoe Hall' and used as a foothold for the unionization of other U. of T. employees."

— unedited, unchanged version of the 34th executive minutes, April 28, 1969.

The contract was first brought up for discussion at the SAC summer-meeting, August 9, 1969. There it was discussed for several hours, but at no time did anyone make the point that the contract should not be ratified before the student had a chance to see it.

"Thirdly, I have always favoured workers unionizing to achieve job security, bargaining rights, and 'office democracy.'"

— Gus Abols, Nov. 10, 1969.

"Gus stated that he was unwilling to pass the ultimate running of the office to the workers in it."

— excerpt from SAC summermeeting, Aug. 9.

Since there was no quorum present at that meeting, discussion was postponed to a special meeting called August 24, for the express purpose of discussing CUS and CUPE.

"Barkwell's attempt on August 24, to impose closure on the contract debate, culminated an effort to achieve council ratification of the contract before the student body returned from summer vacation."

— Bob Vernon, Nov. 10, 1969.

One might expect from this that those who opposed Mr. Barkwell made some concerted effort to make clear the reasons for their opposition.

"Motion: that at two o'clock, when some people have to leave, a vote be taken on the CUPE contract.
Defeated."

"Mr. Vernon rose to say that the minutes of last year's 34th executive meeting at which the voluntary recognition form was signed have not been ratified, and ratification cannot take place at this emergency meeting. Therefore the Union debate cannot happen now."

— excerpt from the SAC summermeeting.

Following this, the Chairman ruled that the contract could be discussed. Mr. Vernon challenged the ruling of the chair.

"Ruling upheld: 16-4-4."

"At this point Mr. Vernon and Miss McPherson walked out of the meeting."

"Sachs: Call for a quorum count."
— excerpt from the SAC summermeeting.

The next opportunity for debate was the meeting of September 24. Unfortunately, it was in the middle of the discipline crisis, so the union voluntarily asked that consideration of the contract be put off so that the discipline crisis could be given the fullest consideration.

By the next meeting, it was known that a petition had been collected and the union decided that it would agree to go back to negotiations and consider amendments, even though, under Ontario Labour Law, they were entitled to refuse to reopen negotiations.

"As the purpose of the petition was to create an opportunity for discussion of the contract, it was deliberately worded in a neutral fashion."

— Bob Vernon, Nov. 10, 1969.

"Mr. van Geijn said that it would be possible to not have a referendum, since it was understood that the petition itself was a tactical manoeuvre."

— excerpt from SAC 3rd general meeting.

Taking both of these statements at their face value, the council decided to put an ad in The Varsity soliciting amendments and comments on the contract.

"At the time when student opinion was supposedly being solicited, the document in question (originally printed by SAC) was out of print and unavailable."

— Bob Vernon, Nov. 10, 1969.

The next day, extra copies of the contract were printed, in order that those SAC reps who had lost their copy as well as those students who would be responding to the Friday ad in the Varsity might get a copy.

Many of those copies are still in the SAC office, since the response was underwhelming.

In fact, the only amendments offered were made by three SAC reps: Mr. van Geijn, Mr. Sachs, and . . . Mr. Vernon. The union accepted virtually all of the amendments put forward that were consistent with office democracy.

"Nevertheless, a number of very controversial clauses still remain in the contract."

— Bob Vernon, Nov. 10, 1969.

"26.01 — delete or narrow greatly — management should have some rights."

— Bob Vernon, proposed amendments to the SAC contract with CUPE Local 1222.

"My objection has always been to clauses in the contract that I felt gave effective veto power over SAC policies."

— Gus Abols, Nov. 10, 1969.

"26.01 — UNION NOTIFICATION OF CHANGES Three months before the introduction of any technological or other changes WHICH AFFECT THE RIGHTS OF EMPLOYEES, CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT, WAGE RATES, OR WORK LOADS, or methods of operation which affect the rights of employees, conditions of employment, wage rates or work loads, the employer shall notify the union of the proposed change. Any such change shall be made only after the union and the employer have reached agreement on such, THROUGH COLLECTIVE BARGAINING. If the employer and the union, local 1222, fail to agree on the results of the change, the matter shall be referred to the grievance and arbitration procedure of this agreement."

— excerpt from the SAC contract with CUPE local 1222.

One of the concessions that the union made was that they gave up the right, gained in the first round of negotiations, to have the SAC pay the union dues. (Actually, to have their salaries raised to cover the dues.)

During the summer, since the union felt the bargaining had gone on in good faith, and since the contract, when ratified, would be retroactive to July 1st, it asked for a loan to cover their dues between July and September. That would enable CUPE members to attend the CUPE convention in Toronto.

In order that legalities might be observed, the SAC made such a loan, rather than an outright gift.

"4B. No employer or employers' organization and no person acting on behalf of an employer or an employers' organization shall . . . contribute financial or other support to a trade union."

— portion of the Ontario Labour Relations

Act quoted by Bob Vernon.

"Nothing in this section shall be deemed to deprive an employer of his freedom to express his views so long as he does not use coercion, intimidation, threats, promises, or undue influence."

— portion of Section 4B of the Ontario Labour Relations Act NOT quoted by Bob Vernon.

Finally, the SAC agreed to the amended contract and also voted overwhelmingly not to recognize the validity of the petition put forward by Eric Miglin (in Mr. Vernon's absence from this debate).

"The referendum procedure was introduced by last year's council. At that time, Mr. Barkwell voted in favour of such a referendum procedure."

— Gus Abols, Nov. 10, 1969.

"SAC Vice-President Bob Barkwell, who earlier in the year expressed a desire for greater student involvement in campus affairs until the discipline crisis made it clear to him that mass democracy wouldn't always work his way."

— Bob Vernon, Nov. 10, 1969.

"Mr. Barkwell said that constitutionally the petition meets the letter of our constitution, but not the spirit. He said that students should have a right to be involved in the decisions that affect their lives. This decision, however, does not affect the lives of the students at large, but the lives of the employees of the SAC."

— excerpt from the fifth general meeting of the SAC.

The council decided that it didn't seem all that likely that the lives of average students were going to be affected by the contract.

Conversely, it was obvious that the lives of the 17 people who work for SAC are profoundly affected. Based on the principle that people should have control over their own lives, the SAC agreed to ignore the petition.

"The report of the last meeting of the Students' Administrative Council and the accompanying editorial in the Varsity failed to present the background to the contract with the Canadian Union of Public Employees and the petition for a referendum on its ratification."

— Bob Vernon, Nov. 10, 1969.

"IF THE TRUTH SHALL MAKE YOU FREE, WILL EXCESS OF TRUTH MAKE YOU PROMISCUOUS?"

— SAC Education Consultant's Report, 1969.

Loyola admin threatens use of cops

MONTREAL (CUP) — The administration of Loyola College took a new, hard-line stance on campus disruption yesterday apparently to legitimize the use of police in ejecting student council president Marcel Nouvet from a meeting of the college senate last Thursday.

According to the new policy, use of police on campus may become the rule rather than the exception in dealing with disorders.

Loyola Dean of Students Roderick Shearer issued the statement yesterday declaring the college senate had instructed him "not to permit further disruption of classes, laboratories or other academic areas, and has authorized all necessary outside help to be called in case that should take place."

The outside help would normally come from "recognized municipal law enforcement bodies," he said.

Shearer was the administration officer who called police last Thursday to eject Nouvet from the senate meeting after the student council president interrupted several speakers and refused to leave at the request of administration president Patrick Malone.

That meeting degenerated into chaos as faculty and students alike protested against Shearer's action, and finally forced the administration to allow Nouvet's release.

Shearer's statement was issued the day before a mass student meeting was scheduled to take place at Loyola, called by Nouvet after his ejection from the senate.

The student meeting is in defiance of an earlier administration order that no protests would be allowed on the campus in connection with the case of Dr. S.A. Santhanam, a physics professor dismissed by the college without explanation last spring.

The Santhanam affair has kept Loyola simmering since the beginning of the school year, as students and faculty demanded binding arbitration by the Canadian Association of University Teachers in his case.

The administration has declared it considers the case closed.

GEOGRAPHY CUG COMMITTEE

ELECTION OF 2 ADDITIONAL UNDERGRAD MEMBERS

TODAY
1.00

ROOM
622 SS

METRO ELECTIONS ISSUES

Experts discuss them in Sid Smith Foyer at 1:00 p.m.

Wednesday 12: Urban Renewal

Thursday 13: Role of Tenant Associations

Centre for the Study of Drama
in association with
The St. Lawrence for the Arts
presents

Slawomir Mrozek's

TANGO

Translated by Nicholas Bethell
Adapted by Tom Stoppard
Directed by Joseph Shaw

Mon.-Thur' Nov. 10-13 and Mon.-Wed. Nov. 17-19

HART HOUSE THEATRE

Tickets $3 00

Box Office 928-8668

Students $1 50

ALL PERFORMANCES OF MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA SOLD OUT

School of Graduate Studies Divisional Meetings

All members of the graduate faculty of each Division, and all graduate students enrolled in the departments, centres, and institutes constituting the Division, may take part in these meetings.

Division I (The Humanities) —Friday, November 14, 1969, 4:10 p.m. in the Senate Chamber, Simcoe Hall

Division II (The Social Sciences) —Monday, November 17, 1969, 4:10 p.m., in the Senate Chamber, Simcoe Hall

Division III (The Physical Sciences) —Wednesday, November 19, 1969, 4:10 p.m., in the Senate Chamber, Simcoe Hall

Division IV (The Life Sciences) —Friday, November 21, 1969, 4:10 p.m., in the Senate Chamber, Simcoe Hall

SAC tries to combat student apathy in municipal elections

With Toronto's municipal elections less than three weeks away, the majority of U of T students appear to be in little danger of losing their traditional apathy.

The Metro Election Committee, sponsored by the S.A.C. Information Bureau is working to end this disinterest on campus, by clarifying the issues and involving the university in the community.

It is a non-partisan organization, supporting no candidates, but rather publicizing equally the views of all candidates on the major issues. Such issues are urban renewal, the role of tenant associations, welfare institutions, the Spadina Expressway extension, and university expansion.

Richard Peachey, a member of the committee, says information will be spread through a series of seminars, guest speakers, and leaflets, culminating in a candidates meeting at Convocation Hall.

Committee members hope that this program will lead to greater student awareness and involvement in the Ward 6 area, of which U of T is a large part.

If you would like to work with the Metro Election Committee drop in at the SAC office anytime.

Re-opening of applications for SAC appointees for the committee to consider the Campbell Report. Please bring applications to the SAC office before Friday at 5 p.m.

Political Economy Course Union

Meeting of all undergraduate class rep's

Time: Thursday, Nov. 13, 7:30 p.m.

Place: SSH 1071

The undergraduate council of the Political Economy Course Union meets for the first time to elect a Standing Committee whose responsibility it will be to determine:

- 1) A general policy for the implementation of CUG in the Dept.
- 2) The future development of the Political Economy Course Union
- 3) The basic structures under which the Standing Committee and the General Council of the Political Economy Course Union will operate
- 4) The provisional guide lines for the conduct of critical student research projects on topics such as Tenants Association & Spadina Expwy.

The Standing Committee will consist of two members each from Political Science, Economics, and Commerce. The Meeting and the nominations will be open to any student taking one or more courses in the Political Economy Department

SAC office-workers deny union is ogre or pawn

It is apparent that further clarification is needed in the controversy over the SAC contract with CUPE (Canadian Union of Public Employees) Local 1222.

Council members have had copies of the contract since the beginning of August (negotiating teams a month earlier).

The negotiating teams on three different occasions reached agreement on the proposed contract — July 25, August 24, October 29. After the initial agreement there was no legal obligation for the union to re-open negotiations.

On October 29, a memorandum of agreement was signed by all six members of the bargaining team. We cannot but question Mr. Abols' intentions as a member of that team when after a three-and-a-half-month negotiating period culminating in his signing the memorandum, he again raises objections to certain clauses.

Do the employees have control over SAC policy?

According to Article 8 of the contract which calls for (at least) monthly meetings between SAC and the members of the Union "to discuss any questions, excluding grievances, which may arise in connection with office procedures, as well as any suggestions which may be forthcoming to improve the various phases of the business of SAC.

"The committee shall not have jurisdiction over the wages or any other matter of collective bargaining, including the administration of this collective agreement.

The meeting shall have the power to make recommendations to the Union and the employer with respect to its discussions and conclusions."

Should any disagreement persist, the problem would be referred to the six-man bargaining committee. Ultimately, and in accordance with the grievance procedure outlined in Article 10 the difficulty would be resolved through the Minister of Labour under the authority of the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

As a union, our interest in SAC concerns only the working conditions that affect us directly, i.e. the bureaucratic operations of the SAC, and this is the only area in which our contract gives us equal control.

It is true that the SAC office has not been run by ogres in the past. SAC is elected each year and each year council differs in its political philosophy. By unionizing and negotiating a contract with the SAC, the workers were able to institutionalize and stabilize office procedures and job security. Another benefit of the contract is the mutual control over the functioning of the office by SAC and the workers.

The contract also gives the union control over its members with regard to the hiring of new staff.

Regarding organizing the university campus in toto. This is a decision that is CUPE's, not entirely Local 1222's.

Now that we are unionized however, it should be pointed out that we are eager to help other non-union employees organize.

Why should we be the only ones to reap the benefits?

It is also valuable to point out that SAC can not use Local 1222 as a pawn in their efforts to build the student-worker alliance. Local 1222 is organized and run by SAC employees and we will decide our own priorities and what our direction should be.

At the time of the summer-meeting, Union and Management had been in negotiations for a month at that time and had reached agreement.

In presenting the contract for ratification at the first opportunity Mr. Barkwell was merely carrying out his duty as part of the Management negotiating team.

However, the representatives decided that they were no longer representative enough to make a decision about the contract although they could make other decisions. At this same summermeeting the council had an opportunity to make any changes they desired to see in the contract. This discussion was prevented by a walkout and called for a quorum count by the people who are now screaming that they didn't have any opportunity to voice their opinion on the contract.

These same people pushed for an open hearing on any proposed amendments to the contract. Only one person chose to show up to discuss his amendments. Three others merely submitted their amendments to the bargaining committee.

All those who came into the office were supplied with contracts by the Union, although management did not warn us that extra copies would be needed, nor move to provide them themselves.

What about the allegation that Local 1222 is a company union? There has never been action by the SAC on behalf of the Union.

The Union was organized last spring by Miss Jeanne McGuire, last year's Secretary to the President.

Once all the members were signed up and the Union recognized, the contract was then written by the Union in conjunction with our CUPE Organizer, Mr. Frank Kitchen. Only when the contract was finalized and agreed upon by the Union was it presented to the management negotiating team.

Unions aren't ogres either

CUPE, Local 1222

LET'S TALK ABOUT SAVING YOU MONEY ON YOUR DIAMOND RING

GETTING ENGAGED?

You don't need a masters degree in marketing to know that the more hands a product passes through the more it costs the final consumer. The reverse is also true. We are "Direct" Diamond Dealers. We import our own goods and sell on a "Direct" basis. Because of this we can and do sell well below the established market structure.

If you're in the market for a diamond ring drop in and compare for yourself. Ask for me personally.

(Alternately, we would be pleased to send you our free booklet "The Day You Buy a Diamond!")

WE ARE DIRECT DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.

DIAMOND DEALERS

131 BLOOR W.
STE. 416

921-7702

Actuarial Careers for Mathematics Graduates

Sun Life of Canada will be on campus to discuss your future with you.

The life insurance industry today offers an interesting and rewarding future to individuals with management potential.

Make your appointment now at the placement office to see Sun Life on

NOV. 20

Our booklet outlining opportunities as an Actuary is available at the placement office.

SUN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The Insurance People with Ideas

HEAD OFFICE: MONTREAL

BY RULING OF THE BOARD OF STEWARDS THE GREAT HALL WILL BE OPEN TO WOMEN OF THE UNIVERSITY BEGINNING WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 12 LUNCH 11:45 a.m. - 1:30 p.m. DINNER 4:45 p.m. - 6:30 p.m. MONDAY TO FRIDAY INCLUSIVE letter from

1
 The Canadian Revolution has never seemed more remote, more impossible. True, the newspapers claim there were 20,000 demonstrators in Quebec City two weeks ago (so let's say 30,000), but Quebec isn't Canada, and federal troops would be used to crush anything serious, just as they were called in during the strike in Montreal a few weeks ago.

The revolution will probably have to begin first in Quebec. If things haven't started to happen by then in English Canada, the Pierre Trudeau can still fart around with mannequins while administering the country for the Americans and their Canadian acolytes, then in the crunch, English Canada will act like she did during the Riel Rebellion and crush the revolution in Quebec. It is profoundly exasperating nonetheless, to realize how insignificant English Canada is as a political entity from a distance of over 3000 miles. Years of hard revolutionary work lie ahead before anything resembling a coherent left-wing movement can emerge in the land of the marshmallow.

Phil Resnick is a U of T political science graduate student who received a Canada Council grant this year to study the extra-parliamentary opposition in France and Germany. Last year he was an initiator of guerrilla theatre tactics at U of T and one of the founders of the Toronto Student Movement.

2
 France, too, has some distance to go before a left-wing victory can occur. Here, at least, revolutionary traditions mean something, and when you talk about direct action or bourgeois society you are not hitting your head against the brick wall of stupidity and indifference that passes for a political tradition back home.

But the moment you look further, the complications begin. For it is not enough in this country to simply prattle about socialism or revolution.

Everybody left of centre does. The real issue is what kind of revolution, whether through the traditional political parties and trade union structures or in some new, as yet undefined fashion. The problem is how to act when a Communist Party, tied to Moscow's apron strings and as revisionist as any social democratic party in Europe, openly accepts the role of a party of order, and does all it can to keep back revolutionary ferment in the trade unions, the universities, and elsewhere. When it sees left-wing revolutionary activity as a greater threat to its interests than the reformism of the centre-left or, more importantly, the domination of the right. The problem is how to make heads or tails of a myriad of 'groupuscules' which make the political splits in Toronto look like child's play. There are at least three divergent Trotskyist groups, several Maoist, several anarchist (not to speak of Maoist-anarchist), scores of action committees and groups of militants, enough to keep the eschatologist of revolutionary tendencies busy for years. There is also the Parti Socialiste Unifié, a 'revolutionary' socialist party with an extra-parliamentary perspective, well to the left both of the moribund French Socialist Party and Communist Party, and with an ideological sophistication which we could well make use of in Canada. It alone of any of the established forces supported the revolutionary current during the Days of May. But its constituency is still small (four to five per cent of the popular vote, limited strength in some unions), and the problem of developing a revolutionary movement is much larger than the growth of the PSU.

The every crisis An impor the referer once than The 5th R around, i have com no means state.

To be expense sic. Tol s beneficia under ca themselv ciple by parts, is universi state inv systems. where t realm si developm ance.

Thu wildcat have be strikes h sectors coordin which a But mili heat fro At vch ste chitectu chances Latin Q as much zations h Tr tuol flouri ity an It n...ny re ed, o m large: We have wres But until th dion intelle industry, ove colonial choro Back in 1. Nothing. Who looks facing a Co VENCEREMOS

MPSCU

Notice:

To all Mathematics and Physics students.
ELECTIONS: Friday, November 14, 1969
 Give nominations to any course representative.

Positions available first year representative physics coordinator mathematics coordinator society coordinator
 3 undergrad. physics students for CUG
 2 undergrad. for math. committee on organization

HISTORY DEPARTMENT TEACH IN

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 13

CONVOCAION HALL

10 a.m. - 12:30 p.m. - 2-4 p.m.

- To what end is an education in history directed and what is the nature of the educational process?
- What should the structure of the department be and how are the student members of the department to be represented?

All History Students and Staff urged to attend.

CLASSIFIEDS

EXPERIENCED TYPIST. Typing of theses, notes, essays, done quickly, accurately and neatly. Economical electric typewriter. Phone 421-9036

TYPIING theses, essays, notes, charts English, French, other languages. Mimeographing electric typewriters. Mary Dale Stott (M. Qawas) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225 922-7624

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Day you buy a diamond" H. Proctor and Co. 131 Bloor St. W. Suite 416, 921-7702

NEED CASH? Cut out this ad. Above av. wage earnings. Part time now, full time summers. Sales and management. For appointment call Mr. Schultz - 920-4726

1 BEDROOM apt. $150.00 per month. Bath/sh. & College. 368 5118 days 221 8512 evenings

WANTED - Male or female to share three bedroom apt. with two males. Phone 531-8903 after 6:00 p.m.

SALTY OOG DISCOTHEQUE Will rent premises Monday to Thursday. Day or Evening. For information call A. Curry 964-7060 or 633-2677

PLEASANT FURNISHED basement apartment for girl in professor's house. Good transportation to University. Rent $14 weekly plus occasional babysitting help. Phone 489-2367

THIS IS IT BABY The Bugger-all poverty Symposium is here. What's your excuse? Be there and Alibi

A.S.U. POVERTY Symposium Thurs. Nov. 20th Anthropology Departmental Library

ROOM AND BOARD. Welmer Road. Male preferred. Plus Russian and French tutoring and translation in these and all Slavic and Scandinavian languages. Phone 922-6376

New College Motion Picture Society presents W.C. FIELDS in "MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE" - Tonight 8 pm - Classic Ave.

AVENUE RD - BLOOR I need one girl to share upper two lofts of renovated townhouse, partially furnished. Available Nov. 15 call 5-730 p.m. Linda 927-0706

PRIME OF MISS JEAN BROUÉ - movie tonight in Sid Smith Bldg. Room 2118 at 8:15 p.m. and 9:15 p.m. Admission 75c at door. All welcome over 18

Applications Still Needed For UNDERGRADUATE REPRESENTATIVES FOR
COMMITTEE TO IMPLEMENT CAMPBELL REPORT
 (3 TO BE APPOINTED)

SEND APPLICATIONS TO: SAC JUDICIAL COMMITTEE
 SAC OFFICE

DEADLINE FRI. NOV. 14 - 5 P.M.

A LOT OF PERIODICALS WERE PUBLISHED

Between 1669 and last week. We have many of them. From Mercurius Musicus, 1669 to Philosophy Today, 1969. You can find them in the card catalogue, find them in indexes - simply FIND THEM. We will tell you how in seminars and on tours conducted by the Circulation, Reference, and Science and Medicine Departments - University of Toronto Library.

M.A.S.S.

THE MEETING ON AEROSPACE MEDICINE SCHEDULED FOR THIS WEEK HAS HAD TO BE POSTPONED. THE NEW DATE WILL BE ADVERTISED.

HOT CATS? 536-0475

Meeting for Formation

Of T-Groups

Thursday, Nov. 13 1:30 p.m.

Music Room Hillel House
 186 St. George
All Welcome

U.C. Player's Guild presents

THANATOS

AN EVENING OF READINGS ON THE SUBJECT OF DEATH

NOV. 12 & 13 - 8:30
 WEST MAIL ADMISSION FREE

GRADUATING? UNDECIDED?

We Understand

Discuss your career opportunities as a Chartered Accountant with us at the placement service

NOVEMBER 18

or call Steve Burns at our office

STARKMAN, KRAFT, ROTHMAN, BERGER & GRILL
 CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS
 3101 BATHURST ST., SUITE 601
 TORONTO 19, ONTARIO
 TELEPHONE 782-1155

ACADEMIC EUNUCKS UNITE - POVERTY PARASITES GATHER - - - BE THERE - - - SEE CLASSIFIED

Don River dead

Pollution Probe tearfully announces the passing of the Don River, and wishes to notify friends and relations of the deceased that funeral services will be held Sunday, Nov. 16 on the banks of that one-time clean stream. A car cavalcade will form at Convocation Hall at 1 p.m., proceed east on College, south on Yonge, east on Adelaide, north on Jarvis and east on Queen to the resting place, arriving at 2 p.m. R.I.P.

TCDS presents French play

Les Jeunes Comediens, the youth company of Montreal's Theatre du Nouveau Monde, will present Le Voyage tonight under the sponsorship of the Trinity College Dramatic Society.

The piece, an original work conceived by the group, will be performed at 8.30 p.m. in Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's College, Devonshire Place.

WHY NOT?
 BUY FROM THE CHAR-BURG
 PIZZERIA
 CHEAPER - BETTER
 FREE DELIVERY
 536-0475
 PARTY - STUDENT PRICES

Why take a pill for a headache?

Maybe you just need glasses. So go get your eyes tested, then come and see us at Brodbeck Optical. Why? Because we give 20% off to students, and we've got the greatest collection of fantastic frames you'll ever look through. We're just around the corner at 15B St. George. Come and see!

Open Window HANDICRAFTS

Reasonably priced:

- IMPORTED TOYS
- THEATRE POSTERS
- ESIKMO ART
- "IN" JEWELRY & ACCESSORIES

585 MARKHAM STREET
 (Village)

50th ANNIVERSARY CONCERT OF
CANADIAN JAZZ COMPOSITIONS

RON COLLIER ORCHESTRA

Great Hall — 8:30 p.m.
Wednesday, November 12th
Tickets: Hall Porter
Ladies Welcome

Mart House Anniversary Debate

"PARLIAMENTARY DEMOCRACY HAS OUTLIVED ITS USEFULNESS"

Honorary Visitor

MON. ERIC WM. KIERAHS
Minister of Communications

For the Ayes:

Ed Bridge, SGS
Ted McGee, III SMC

For the Noes:

Michael Scherk, III U.C.
James Yeager, III SMC

Speaker of the House: Sydney Hermant, M.A.

8:00 p.m. in the Debates Room
Wednesday, November 12

Ladies Welcome

THE LIBRARY COMMITTEE PRESENTS
JACQUES GOOBOUT

50th Anniversary Writer-in-Residence
WORKSHOPS: Thursday, November 13
Friday, November 14

4 p.m. — Library

READING: Wednesday, November 12

4 p.m. — Music Room
Ladies Welcome

OPEN HOUSE
SUNDAY 16 NOVEMBER
2-5 p.m.

CLASSICAL CONCERT TO OAY

HARTIH POLTEH, Guitarist

Music Room, 12-2 p.m.

Ladies Welcome

TABLE TENNIS SPECIAL DEMONSTRATION
FILMS OF EUROPEAN MASTERS
IN COMPETITION

Wednesday, November 12th
8:00 p.m.
Main Gym & Fencing Room

HART HOUSE ART COMMITTEE
IN CONJUNCTION WITH
THE NATIONAL GALLERY
CANADIAN PAINTINGS
FROM THE VINCENT HASSEY BEQUEST
TO THE NATIONAL GALLERY
IN HART HOUSE ART GALLERY
UNTIL — NOVEMBER 25th

Monday — Saturday 12-2 p.m.
Sundays 2-5 p.m.

MART HOUSE FILM FESTIVAL AWARDS

Friday, November 14
Library, 8 p.m.

SYMPOSIUM

Report and Videotape highlights on a three-day discussion of Education held mid-October with staff and students.

Thursday, November 13th
Music Room — 4 p.m.
Ladies Welcome

50TH ANNIVERSARY SUNDAY EVEHNG CONCERT
LOIS MARSHALL
8:30. November 16
Great Hall.
Tickets — Mail Porter

ARCHERY CLUB TOURNAMENT

Rifle Range, 7:30, To-night
Open to all members

EASTERN CANADIAN INTERCOLLEGIATE CHESS TOURNAMENT

Opens November 14 — Debates Room at 2 p.m. and continues through Saturday and Sunday. Final play will commence November 16 at 4 p.m.

NOON MOUR DEBATES

Today:

"THE MEMBERS OF THIS UNIVERSITY ARE BECOMING INCREASINGLY RELATIVISTIC, NILHILISTIC, CHAOTIC, WEARY & TRIVIAL"

Guest Speaker will be RICHARD NEEOMAM

Friday, November 14

"MULIER EST HOMINIS CONFUSIO"

1:00 p.m. Debates Room Ladies Welcome

AMATEUR RADIO CLUB

will operate publicly in the Rotunda from 12-2 p.m. until Friday, November 14th, and invites members & guests to send messages to friends around the world by ham hook-up.

NOON MOUR FILMS

Entries from the Canada-wide Film Festival will be shown East Common Room, 1 p.m. November 12, 13, & 14.

Saturday, November 15th

Rescreening of Film Entries begins at 11 a.m. & continues through the day — East Common Room. Ladies Welcome.

TYPOGRAPHY & PRIVATE PRESS BOOKS: a panel discussion of private press work and fine printing as seen by the antiquarian bookseller, private press printer, book designer and bibliophile. Library at 8 p.m. on Thursday, November 13th

For most people evangelism is Billy Graham at Maple Gardens, Burt Lancaster as Elmer Gantry or rural southerners singing, "Give Me That Old Time Religion" in "Inherit the Wind."

For the students and faculty of the Ontario Bible College at 16 Spadina Rd., evangelism is a way of life.

"We believe that the Bible alone, and the Bible in its entirety, is the written Word of God and, therefore, inerrant in the autographs and absolutely authoritative. . .The academic program at this College is built upon the foundation of Christian truth as revealed in the Scriptures and seeks to lead the young Christian to view the whole of life from the perspective of that truth."

This is the College's doctrinal statement as presented in its calendar and it is this belief in the literal and objective truth of the Bible that sets the College's members outside of the mainstream of 20th century religious thinking and 20th century life.

"Christ is the most important person in my life," says Ian McAlpine, a fourth year Bachelor of Theology student, and his dedication to evangelism is representative of the importance of religion in the life of the College's students.

The Toronto Bible College was founded in 1894 as a non-denominational, co-educational institution by Baptist pastor Elmore Harris and on June 1, 1968, it merged with the London College of Bible and Missions to form the Ontario Bible College.

The college has 352 day students and 21 full-time faculty members and in the 75 years since its inception it has produced over 4,200 graduates.

Since it receives no financial assistance from the government, it relies solely on student fees and contributions from churches and individuals to maintain its existence.

The college offers three four-year degree courses: Bachelor of Theology, Bachelor of Religious Education and Bachelor of Sacred Music.

George Melendy is a 20 year-old student studying for his Bachelor of Religious Education. Before coming to the college he spent a year working for an accounting firm.

"I knew that I was in the wrong place," he says. "I tried other avenues but the Lord closed the doors. Finally I felt that God was calling me here, and when I came I knew that I was no longer a square peg in a round hole."

Melendy deliberately chose the Bible College over a university theology course.

"At university," he explains "I would be studying the words of man. At the Bible College I'm studying the actual word of God. I can tell that I'm working with the truth."

Most of the college's students come here for reasons similar to Melendy's. They were all evangelists before coming and are committed to serving God in some way.

"This education is training me to be a servant of God and the only effective way to serve God is to know the Bible," Melendy says.

The members of the College view themselves as true Christians, with emphasis on the word "true", and have a strict interpretation of what constitutes a Christian.

"A Christian is a person who lives for Christ and believes in the Bible as the revealed word of God," says first-year student Linda Bussey.

Fourth-year student Bill Smith gives another definition.

"A Christian places God at the centre, man second and himself last. Man cannot be an end in himself, only a means to an end which is to glorify God."

Despite the increasing secularization of society and the large numbers of people turning away from the organized church, the Bible College students are not dismayed.

"I think people are leaving the church because it is basically adulterous," comments Smith. "The people that are in it haven't experienced Christ."

"Man in his basic spiritual state has not changed. It was just as hard for people centuries ago to believe as it is now," Smith adds.

"I'm not worried," says Melendy. "The fellow I'm working for is God and He knows what He's doing."

It is this faith, in God, in the Bible and in the future of evangelism that sets the Bible College apart from all other institutions of learning. Unlike university, no one at the College doubts the relevance of what they're doing.

"The truth which Jesus taught is relevant for all ages thus the message doesn't change," explains Academic Dean Dr. William Foster.

"When you have The Truth" said Melendy, "you get so excited you have to tell everyone."

This is the basic reason behind the evangelist's self-confidence and sense of purpose.

In a society made up of alienated and self-doubting people, he possesses "The Truth". Once you accept the Bible as the revealed word of God you are free of the countless doubts and uncertainties that are a part of living in a society where there are no absolutes and everything is relative.

This is the cocoon that the Bible College provides, for unlike the outside world, the Bible College student is surrounded by people who believe, as he does, that the Bible is the revealed word of God.

Imagine a university in which the president, board of governors, faculty and students are all dedicated Marxists and Marxism is all that is studied.

Substitute evangelism for Marxism and you can understand the unity of purpose and ideas that is imbedded in the minds of everyone at the Ontario Bible College.

"We are revolutionaries in that we tell people they must be regenerated," says Melendy. "As Christians it is our job to tell. Whether people believe is up to God."

But if the principles of evangelism are the same, its character is changing. While not denying the emotional appeal of evangelism, the College is placing more stress on the rationality of Biblical truth.

"I'm against the high-pressure salesman form of preaching," explains Bill Smith. "Preaching is the best way of spreading the Word, but you must have a balance between reason and emotion."

The Bible college Students have great respect for the accomplishments of Billy Graham but few would attempt to use his approach.

They feel instead that communicating on a person to person level is a more effective way of obtaining true converts.

"The church should not be after numbers for the sake of numbers. I'm after souls rather than numbers," said Smith.

In the final analysis, it is this de-emphasizing of the idea of world conversion that provides the Bible college student with faith in the relevance of his life.

As Bill Smith explains, "My end is not the conversion of souls but the glory of God. I won't measure the success or failure of my ministry by the number of souls I convert, but rather that I have been faithful in my ministry."

Hart House Anniversary Debate

"PARLIAMENTARY DEMOCRACY HAS OUTLIVED ITS USEFULNESS"

Honorary Visitor

HON. ERIC WM. KIERANS

Minister of Communications

For the Ayes:

Ed Bridge, SGS

Ted McGee, III SMC

For the Noes:

Michael Scherk, III UC

James Yeager, III SMC

Speaker of the House: Sydney Hermant, M.A.

8:00 p.m. in the Debates Room, Hart House
Wednesday, November 12
(Ladies Welcome)

(Assisted by the Varsity Fund)

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

"SKIING" - Organizational Meeting - Thursday Nov. 13 th - 5 p.m. Benson Building. Please come - All skiers interested in intercollegiate skiing. All ski reps or presidents.

PERSONAL CALENDARS - For only 50¢ get your own calendar booklet, 8 x 11-page for every month. Also outline of complete Women's Athletic Association program for year.

HOT CATS? 536-0475

Vic, Dents, PhysEd, Forestry remain in chase for Mulock

By LYNDON LITTLE

The Mulock Cup playoff positions have finally been decided.

Dentistry's 18-7 victory over the Meds on Monday completed their unbeaten season and gave them top spot in the second division and a Mulock playoff spot.

Yesterday, Vic edged Engineering 7-6 in a real thriller to claim the first division championship. PhysEd had clobbered St. Mikes 35-0 on Monday to force a Vic win.

Also yesterday, Forestry defeated New College 14-7 to claim the third division title with a 5-1 record. New finished in second place at 3-3.

The Mulock playoffs will take the form of a double-header next Tuesday at Varsity Stadium. Vic will meet Forestry at twelve noon with the PhysEd-Dents game to follow at 2 o'clock.

The Mulock final is scheduled for the Stadium the following Wednesday at 1:00 p.m.

King Draper on a 60 yard pass from quarterback Al Jones on the game's first play from scrimmage and Bob Sullivan on a 90 yard kickoff returned the Dents to their victory over Meds. Gary Kushner added a pair of field goals.

Fullback Doug Watchorn scored Meds lone major on a 9 yard pass from quarterback Bill Davies.

John Osborne, Rick Johnson, Larry Theed, Rick Rae and Gord Harvey all had touchdowns in PhysEd's massacre of St. Mikes.

A touchdown on a 2 yard quarterback sneak late in the game by Rob Dickinson that brought the score to 7-6 almost gave the Engineers a surprise tie with Vic. However, a strong rush by the Vic line caused the convert attempt by Ron Oliver to fall wide and preserved Vic's first division championship.

Fullback Bruce Carroll had given Vic a 7-0 lead with a major on a nine-yard run in the first quarter. Rock Basta converted.

Touchdowns by Frank Pfaff and Rick Souter gave Forestry their win over New College. Paul Braun crashed over from 9 yards for New's lone score.

Squash stuff

Instructional squash lessons will be given tonight and Thursday by members of the intercollegiate team at 7 and 8:20 in the Hart House courts.

Exhibition matches between the team and some of the better ranking players of the Toronto area will go at 7:40 both nights.

Xerox: For engineers who think of more than engineering.

Creative people like John Gardner see engineering as only one outlet for their talents.

Among John's other concerns is today's widespread shortage of technical talent. Due in large part, as he sees it, to children's lack of exposure to the excitement of science.

John's doing something about it. He's turned the Gardner basement into a part-time laboratory, with almost-weekly demonstrations and projects for neighborhood kids. Where children as young as seven make simple photoelectric devices. Measure ballistic projectile velocities. And explore subjects like polarized light, fiber optics, and electronic calculators, with the help of equipment loaned by Xerox.

"My biggest delight," John recalls, "was seeing the first youngster's face light up when he gave his home-made electric motor a shove, and it kept moving."

"Children's interests," John maintains, "should be stimulated early. Not by spoon-feeding answers, but by stimulating them to question."

As an Area Manager in our Advanced Development Department, John asks—and answers—some interesting questions of his own. If you'd like to work for the kind of firm that respects, supports and recognizes people like John, why not talk to us about the opportunities at our suburban Rochester, New York facilities. Your degree in Engineering or Science may qualify you for some intriguing openings in a broad spectrum of developmental and manufacturing areas.

See your Placement Director for a copy of our brochure and to arrange an interview with our representative. Or, write directly to Mr. Roger VonderPloeg, Xerox Corporation, P.O. Box 251, Webster, New York 14580. An Equal Opportunity Employer (m/f).

XEROX

Coming Events of

U of T FLYING CLUB

1. Open Meeting, Thurs. Nov. 20 7:30 P.M. Music Rm. Hart House Guest Speaker: Mr. H. Cunningham from Experimental Aircraft Ass. Topic: "Homebuilt Aircraft"

2. Last Breakfast Flight of 1969
Destinations: Open for suggestions
Time: Sat. Nov. 22, 10:00 A.M.
4 Pilots so far, room for 12 passengers

for Pilots and Nonpilots interested in flying

Walter wins Copp; Fleiszer takes Omega

Eric Walter, who set a new SIFL career scoring record of 30 touchdowns this year, has been named the winner of the Johnny Copp Trophy.

The Copp trophy is awarded annually to the Varsity player judged by his team mates to be the Blues' most valuable player.

The Omega Watch Trophy for the most valuable player in the SIFL was awarded to McGill fullback Dave Fleiszer.

Walter came to Toronto two seasons ago after four years at McGill. He will be with the Varsity squad at least one more year.

He finished third in scoring this year with six touchdowns for 36 points and was second among receivers, hauling in 25 passes. But he gained more than twice as many yards as Don Manahan of Waterloo, who was the leagues leading receiver with 26 receptions.

Walter was named most valuable player on the McGill squad in 1962 and 1964 and made the league's all-star team both years and last season as well.

Fleiszer topped the lead league in scoring (60 points) and yards rushing (703 yards in 111 carries) and was no surprise as the Omega selection. The Omega winner is selected by opposing players.

In 1968 season Fleiszer took two awards at McGill, as the most improved McGill player and the most valuable Redman.

Copp Winner ERIC WALTER

Help!

The women's intercollegiate hockey team still needs a capable, energetic, hard-working and disgustingly dedicated Manager.

Anyone interested may obtain more information at the Benson Building or at Room 101, 91 St. George (Varsity offices).

Also, talented players are still needed. Next practice is Tuesday, November 18 at 8 a.m. at Varsity Arena. Be there by 7:45.

League rules demand all players use tube skates, and these cannot be supplied by the WAA. Anyone with skates to sell is asked to contact the secretary to the illustrious coach at 923-8171.

SIFL standings, scoring leaders

McGill	17	Toronto	0
Queens	39	McMaster	10
Waterloo	29	Western	20

	WON	LOST	FOR	AGAINST	POINTS
McGill	6	1	190	50	12
Queens	5	2	133	96	10
Toronto	4	3	155	126	8
Western	3	4	159	139	6
Waterloo	3	4	112	157	6
McMaster	0	7	63	244	0

	TD	FG	CONV	SING	POINTS
Dave Fleiszer	10				60
Jeff Hilton	8				48
Eric Walter	6				36
Sal Lovecchio		4	20	2	34
Keith Eaman	5			1	31
Doug Cozak		6	12	1	31
Walt Sehr	5				30
Rick Wiedenhoert	5				30
Ottavio Colisimo		4	15		27
Bill Stankovic	1	2	14		26
Ken Aiken	4				24
Chuck Wakefield	4				24

VARSITY ARENA HOCKEY OPENER

Blues vs Laurentian
FRIDAY at 8:00 p.m.

HOCKEY BOOKS ON SALE AT ATHLETIC OFFICE,
HART HOUSE AND AT GATE.

$3.00 for 11 games

Make sure of your book TODAY

CUT YOUR CLEANING COSTS
by 2/3

at the
Church & Wellesley Self Serve
Dry Cleaner

OPEN EVERY DAY

Attendant on Duty

568 Church St.
924-6010

UTAA

SPORTS SCHEDULES WEEK OF NOV. 17th

BASKETBALL

Tues Nov 18	4:00 Trin A	vs St M B	Schwartz, A Sternberg
Wed Nov 19	4:00 Arch A	vs Bus	Fienberg Gee
	6:30 Jr Eng	vs Pharm A	Hafner, Chapnick, L Sternberg
	7:30 Inns I	vs Scar	Hafner, L Sternberg, Chapnick
	8:30 Enn I	vs U C I	L Sternberg, Chapnick, Hafner
Thur Nov 20	1:00 U C II	vs Vic II	Puzens, Blinck
Fri Nov 21	1:00 Vic I	vs St M A	Schwartz, Gee
	6:30 Law I	vs New I	Hummel, Oon Mockford
	8:00 Med A	vs PHE A	Chapnick Tessis

VOLLEYBALL

Tues Nov 18	1:00 Eng I	vs New	Orav
	7:30 Scar	vs PHE	Horenblas
	8:30 Wyc	vs Knox	Horenblas
Wed Nov 19	5:00 Eng II	vs Trin	Orav
	6:00 Oent C	vs Oent B	Orav
	7:00 For A	vs St M	Senkw
	8:00 Bus	vs Med	Senkw
	9:00 Pharm	vs Oent A	Senkw
Thur Nov 20	1:00 Vic	vs U C A	Senkw
	7:00 Enn	vs Inns	Bodnaruk
	8:00 Arch	vs Emman	Bodnaruk
	9:00 Wyc	vs Oent C	Bodnaruk

SQUASH

Tues Nov 18	6:20 Law A	vs PHE
	7:00 Eng I	vs Med A
	7:40 S M A	vs Trin A
	8:20 Vic I	vs Scar
Wed Nov 19	7:00 Grad	vs Law B
	7:40 Wyc	vs Eng II
	8:20 Oent	vs Trin B
Thur Nov 20	6:20 Forestry	vs Inns
	7:00 Med B	vs St M B
	7:40 New	vs Vic II

LACROSSE (Balance of League Schedule)

Tues Nov 18	1:00 Eng II	vs For B	Trafford, Feaver
	6:30 Inns	vs PHE A	Murphy, Hanna
	7:30 Vic	vs Erin	Okhiro, Crocker
	8:30 For A	vs Law	Okhiro, Crocker
Wed Nov 19	1:00 PHE B	vs Eng I	Trafford, Clem
Thurs Nov 20	6:30 Knox	vs PHE C	Murphy, Stephen
	7:30 Scar	vs Oent	Murphy, Stephen
	8:30 Oev Hse	vs St M	Murphy, Stephen

HOCKEY

Mon, Nov 17	12:30 Geol	vs II Cvil	Murray, Allen
	1:30 Vic VIII	vs St M E	Murray, Allen
	7:00 Vic I	vs Law I	Richardson, Nelson
	8:15 Sr Eng	vs St M A	Richardson, Nelson
	9:30 Pharm A	vs Campus	Westlake, Oubnak
		Co-op
	10:30 New II	vs IV Ind A	Westlake, Oubnak
Tues, Nov 18	1:30 Trin O	vs St M F	Seckington, Kolin
	5:00 Knox	vs U C II	Taylor, Titus
	6:00 Bus I	vs Med A	Taylor, Titus
	10:30 Oent A	vs St M B	Bullock, Fraser
Wed Nov 19	12:30 Trin A	vs PHE A	Richardson, Bertrand
	1:30 Vic II	vs Law II	Richardson, Bertrand
	7:00 For A	vs U C I	Skinner, Klinck
	8:15 Scar	vs Ern	Skinner, Klinck
	9:30 IV Cvil B	vs III Ind B	Embrey, Billings
	10:30 IV Elec	vs III Elec	Embrey, Billings
Thur Nov 20	2:30 New I	vs Inns I	Westlake, Oubnak
	7:00 Law I	vs Sr Eng	Sullivan, Hemphill
	8:15 Oev Hse	vs PHE B	Sullivan, Hemphill
	9:30 Oent O	vs Med B	Piercell, Hemphill
	10:30 IV Chem B	vs IV Ind B	Piercell, Hemphill
Fri Nov 21	12:30 PHE A	vs Vic I	Nebata, Seckington
	1:30 For C	vs Vic X	Sebata, Seckington
	5:30 St M B	vs Scar	Sullivan, Koutsans
	6:30 Ern	vs Bus I	Sullivan, Koutsaris
	8:00 St M A	vs Trin A	Miller, Skinner
	9:15 Med A	vs Oent A	Miller, Skinner
	10:15 IV Eng Sc	vs Med C	Miller, Skinner

HEAD COME!

THE END

I'M LIKE A DINOSAUR--IN THE CRO-MAGNON AGE! AN ANACHRONISM--WHO'S OUT-LIVED HIS TIME!

IT ISN'T HIP--TO DEFEND THE ESTABLISHMENT!

THIS IS THE DAY OF THE ANTI-HERO--THE AGE OF THE REBEL--AND THE DISSENTER!

-- ONLY TO TEAR IT DOWN!

THE
varsity

VOLUME 51 — No. 23
November 14, 1969

TORONTO

AND, IN A WORLD RIFE WITH INJUSTICE, GREED, AND ENDLESS WAR--

WHO'S TO SAY THE REBELS ARE WRONG?

BUT, I'VE NEVER LEARNED TO PLAY BY TODAY'S NEW RULES!

I'VE SPENT A LIFETIME DEFENDING THE FLAG--AND THE LAW!

PERHAPS-- I SHOULD HAVE BATTLED LESS--AND QUESTIONED MORE!

ARTS AND SCIENCE STUDENTS

in day classes
must confirm their programme of studies

BEFORE NOVEMBER 20th

at the Office of their College Registrar
(Regular Students)

or

at the Faculty Office (Special Students)

This procedure is essential in order to ensure accurate records and so that EXAMINATION arrangements may be made. A late fee will be imposed after November 20th.

N.B. Students who do not wish to write on Passover because of religious observance should write "Passover" under their programme. An effort will be made to avoid those days.

TRINITY UNITED

427 Bloor St. West at Welles Rd
Minister
Rev. J. Robert Wall,
B.A., B.D.
Organist John W. Linn

11 A.M.
"Lovable Spondherbs"
8:30 P.M.
TRINITY YOUNG ADULTS
(18-30 YEARS)

STUDENTS CORDIALLY INVITED

ESSAYS TO WRITE?

When you find it difficult to decide how to find information you need, we can help. The Reference Department conducts general reference seminars, the Science and Medicine Reference Staff gives special subject seminars and the circulation staff will clear a path for you through the stacks. Plan ahead and get some help from the University of Toronto.

LIBRARY

HILLEL PRESENTS

the Movie

"BEDAZZLED"

Sunday, November 16, 8:30 p.m.

Hillel House

Members free

Non-members 50¢

SEMINAR

Monday, November 17, U. C. Room 314

1:00 p.m.

Dr. Frank Talmage

on

"JEWISH STUDIES IN NORTH AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES"

Bloor Street BLOOR AT HURON

MINISTERS:
THE REV. DR. E. HOWSE
THE REV. DONALD GILLIES
MINISTER OF MUSIC
10 A.M.
CHURCH SCHOOL
SEMINAR ON
"POLLUTION"
11 A.M.
APPLIED RELIGION
DR. E. M. HOWSE
NURSERY CARE DURING SERVICE

The Opera Department
presents
The Toronto Premiere
of

L'ENFANT ET LES SORTILEGES

(In English)

Opera by Ravel

Poem by Colette

November 20, 21, 22, 23

at 8:30 p.m.

MacMillan Theatre

Edward Johnson Building

(Queen's Park behind

Planetarium)

University of Toronto

Tickets $2.00

Students $1.00

Box Office - 928-3744

HOT CATS? 536-0475

PRICE: $1.50/PERSON

PLACE: OLD PHYSICS 135

TIME: 9:00 P.M.

- 1. "Ouck Soup" & "Horse Feathers"
- 2. "Poppy"
- 3. "Casablanca"
- 4. "Bonzo Goes to College"

AND (get this)

BONZO HUMPHREY BOGART W.C. FIELDS MARX BROTHERS

$1
Classic
(Huron & Oling Hall
New College
6:30 & 9:00 P.M.)
TWO SHOWINGS:

MOVIE
MARTIN LUTHER

One of the greatest MOVIES
of all time

ONE HELL OF

SATURDAY NITE

NEW COLLEGE

presents

COFFEE SHOP

GRAND OPENING of

TONIGHT & Saturday Nite

10:00 P.M.

11:00 A.M.

featuring IAN ROHER

-Fri.

ELLIOT STRON

-Sat.

50¢ - SINGLE

75¢ - COUPLE

Support for moratorium is strong across Canada

OTTAWA (CUP) — The Canadian contribution to the second Vietnam Moratorium began 24 hours early in Montreal Wednesday but continues on a normal schedule in the rest of the country, as students march, talk and boycott classes today and tomorrow in protest against the war.

Approximately 50 McGill University students, dressed as US soldiers and Vietnamese peasants Wednesday afternoon acted out the pacification of Freiligsburg, Quebec, a small village in the Eastern Townships.

The name of the pacification target was kept secret by organizers until Wednesday; the action was the first phase of the week's moratorium and was designed to call attention to the teach-in at McGill yesterday and to show the tragedy of Vietnam in a situation familiar to the people of Quebec.

The moratorium effort is not officially supported by any Canadian university; Toronto's Glendon College, whose faculty council backed the moratorium November 7 had the decision reversed Thursday by the faculty council of York University, its parent institution.

The York council ruled that Glendon principal Escott Reid acted unconstitutionally when he broke a tie vote to swing the college behind the moratorium as a "political act."

More than 625 of Glendon's

1,200 students and faculty have since signed a petition supporting the council's original stand; 40 York faculty members have also signed a petition declaring they will cancel classes today in support of the protest.

In Vancouver, anti-war organizers plan a demonstration Saturday to the Vancouver courthouse.

The Moratorium committee at McMaster University will distribute a special information kit on the war to every student at the Hamilton campus. The McMaster student council has also issued a request to every professor at the university, asking that they spend half of each class today in a discussion of the war.

Students at the University of Waterloo will symbolically burn a bomber tonight, capping a torchlight parade. Students are also boycotting classes to attend teach-ins on the war.

Dalhousie University students, probably with support from students at neighboring St. Mary's and Mount St. Vincent universities, will march through Halifax Saturday.

Campus teach-ins are also planned at the University of Western Ontario and Queen's University.

Faculty oppose parity

The Commission on University Government Programming Committee yesterday failed to endorse the concept of staff-student parity for committees studying implementation of the CUG report.

The committee, proposing ad hoc committees to study the report, did adopt a resolution stating: "the committee believes that such a purpose (effective study of the report) might be met if joint bodies contained an equal number of staff and students."

Staff-student parity was a basic principle of the CUG report itself.

Although SAC representatives Gus Abols and Ken McEvoy (III Vic) pushed for parity, faculty members M.L. Friedland, F.E. Winters, and R.A. Spencer wished to leave the composition of the bodies to the various groups establishing them.

The Association of Teaching Staff voted 106-38 in a Wednesday night general meeting to accept a resolution which rejected "staff-student" parity in all department and faculty matters.

Many members of the faculty who voted against the resolution protested against the general conduct of the ATS meeting, claiming full debate was not allowed.

"The question was continually being put before full discussion was allowed to take place," said Prof. Frank Cunningham in an interview last night.

In contrast to the ATS decision to reject parity the students' council executive on the same night passed a motion urging that any bodies which would study the CUG report should be constituted on an equal staff-student basis.

Ken McEvoy, who made the motion at the SAC Executive meeting, expressed fear at the CUG programming meeting that the proposed ad hoc committees would "shovel CUG under the rug."

"As a result the best discussion would come from a parity group," he said. "The students do not have anything to go on except trust and co-operation."

Although President Bissell and the Senate both refused to cancel classes today for the Vietnam International Moratorium, many students at U of T plan to observe the two-day event.

More than 2,500 students have signed a petition asking that classes be cancelled.

The Executive Committee responsible for planning the Moratorium at U of T has organized a rally at Convocation Hall with two themes: Canada's involvement in the war in Vietnam, and support of the U.S. Moratorium.

Professors Elliot Rose and William Berman of the History Department will be speaking in the morning and rock groups and folk singers are slated to appear. An open discussion will centre on the two topics.

The Moratorium has the support of the Students' Administrative Council, the Engineering Society, the Graduate Students' Union, the Victoria College Union Council, the New College Students' Council and the Committee of Concerned Scientists.

Money problems may force Rochdale to sell out

By JIM STRUTHERS

Rochdale College will either have to sell its building or refinance its mortgage to prevent bankruptcy, council chairman John Bradford told members of the 14th floor commune last night.

The present crisis arose when Rochdale failed to meet its Nov. 10 payment of $54,000 to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

If the money is not paid by Dec. 10, the building will be put under the trusteeship of the CMHC. CMHC would then take over the Rochdale College corporation and assume responsibility for the building's management.

Bradford told the meeting that the College had narrowly avoided being put under the trusteeship of Campus Co-operative Organization (Campus Co-op has the third mortgage of $133,000).

"They are not sympathetic to the kinds of people that live here. They would freeze the Charter, which would mean no council and no management by Rochdale College. In my opinion I expect that by next September they'll have all the over-flow from the U of T here and force us out."

Rochdale had forgotten to place their official seal on the mortgage contract which authorized Campus Co-op to assume trusteeship of the building 10 days after a default in payments.

The building is presently owned in trust by Co-op College which has financial liability for the mortgage payments.

TRANSFER COSTS

"Any talk of re-financing or selling will have to take into account the $263,000 cost of transference of this ownership," said Bradford.

He also said that Campus Co-op has worked out an agreement with the CMHC, which would allow it to assume trusteeship of the building by having the mortgage payments deferred for a year.

At present the College has had two firm offers for re-financing and four offers to buy the building.

One re-financing offer of $1,500,000 was made by Mann and Martel, a Toronto Real Estate firm. It would allow the College to pay $25,600 monthly to the CHMC and $31,760 to Mann and Martel over a 10-year period with payments deferred for the first six months.

"That kind of arrangement should not be entered into unless there is a firm commitment to sell the building and use the six months to look for a buyer or unless we decide to work our asses off to save the building by putting on as much political pressure as possible," Bradford explained.

SWISS, AMERICAN MONEY

Bradford also mentioned a re-financing offer from a Swiss bank backed by West German and American money.

"We have had four offers of over $7,200,000 to buy the building as of today. I expect that by Tuesday at least two will be in writing," said Bradford.

Bradford also outlined the difficulties any prospective buyer will face.

"If the purchaser is not an educational institution or if he does not agree to run the building as a student residence he cannot pick up the mortgage but will have to buy the building from the CHMC for $4,884,000."

He added that all people who had made the offers were aware of those conditions and that one of the offers was from an educational institution, although he refused to reveal its name.

"It would be stupid and foolish for anyone to buy this building and run it as a residence and hope to make money since the operating budget alone is over $40,000.

"Only the university could do it since they subsidize resident students up to $2,000."

out what' happenin'

Come in from the edge and find in the center

the
UNIVERSITY
BOOKROOM,
one of the University's little-known, great meeting places

BOOKS

Show that Vietnam exists

By now Vietnam is a cliché. For many people, it's the over-worked word and the all-purpose issue that you plug into a conversation to create "relevant" discussion.

"Yeah, -but-what-about-the-war-in-Vietnam?" is the standard jargon to tell someone he's irrelevant.

For the past four years, television and Life magazine have drummed the graphic atrocities of war across the world.

After a while the horror of genocide becomes domestic entertainment.

McLuhan's global village does not promote awareness. It regurgitates the world as a consumer-item.

The war in Vietnam is still on the other side of the world. It still exists. It's not just a cliché.

The Vietnam Moratorium, which takes place today throughout the world, is an attempt to demonstrate the urgency of Vietnam, to show that it's not just a "relevant issue," but an ugly fact Demonstrations often seem to be a futile exercise in frustration.

But that futility dramatically illustrates the sharpest division in the United States, and the key to the sluggish persistence of the war that won't go away.

That division is the vast power-gap between the people, who are in the streets of Washington today and waving placards; and the administration, who are also in the streets of Washington today, but in the form of 9,000 riot-trained soldiers.

People believed that the United States was engaged in a war that was a battle against Communist aggression, until it became clear that the U.S. was doing the aggressing.

The U.S. is not only engaged in a war, but in a revolution. The American generals are not on the Vietnamese side of the barricades. They are fighting behind a weak puppet-government. And despite all their military firepower, they are losing because neither they nor that puppet-government have the support of the people of Vietnam.

And meanwhile the American people suffer; the war is "a welfare system for the rich", as I. F. Stone calls it. The military is picking up the profits.

As the U.S. Administration realized that withdrawal would be inevitable to avoid civil war at home, it transferred that welfare system for the rich to another area — the ABM system, a fat new contract for the military. Again the selling point was the Communist scare.

You are probably against the war in Vietnam.

Everyone is — even Nixon.

But by participating in today's Moratorium, you will be part of a collective attempt to end that war sooner, and it might bring you closer to the fact behind the cliché.

LETTERS

tomorrow's nixon

Secnario

Date: Christmas Day
News Release from Washington

National Guard "Shoots to Kill"
Thousands of War Protestors Placed in "Camps." President Closes Canadian Border

President of the United States Richard Nixon, in a Christmas Eve message to the American People, labeled as "fainthearts" those who would criticize his latest moves to unite the country behind his Vietnam policy.

In his presentation to the nation the President spoke casually and without notes as he explained his decision to arrest the vast numbers of protest marchers in the December 24th "March for Peace and Freedom" which resulted in violence in both Washington and San Francisco.

President Nixon praised the FBI, the National Guard and the crack 113th Airborne Division of the Marines for their "swift and thorough" action in handling the protestors.

The President explained that the controversial "shoot to kill" orders which Washington rumors had attributed to the President in the days immediately preceding the March were not the official policy of the American Forces.

unless otherwise ordered by their local officers.

Nixon went on to point out that Vice-President Spiro Agnew's December 22 speech before the Daughters of the American Revolution, in which the phrase "shoot to kill" appeared at least 15 times, contained only the personal beliefs of the Vice-President and therefore did not have to be approved by the White House.

President Nixon described the compounds in which protestors were placed in Washington and San Francisco as "Relocation Camps". Nixon compared them to "strategic hamlets" used in Vietnam and pointed out that the purpose of the camps were to protect the people placed there.

Recalling the use of camps during World War II, Nixon said the camps would not be used exclusively to house war protestors, but would also be made available to immigration officials and as temporary housing for people displaced by urban renewal projects.

The President also announced that the need for internal security made it necessary to place restrictions on travel to and from Canada. President Nixon said that he was "dismayed" that the Canadian Government had failed to honor its unofficial immigration agreements with the United States.

In conclusion, Nixon called on the "forgotten Americans" to unite behind his Vietnam policy and to support his new initiatives to end dissent and make the nation "safe for democracy." He asked all good Americans to pray for him and to have a Merry Christmas.

— paul reinhardt

from an engineer

Sir,
Unjustified Unification Worse Than Separation.

Our civilization worships power and sheer magnitudes, and with it, violence.

No individual has the right to the wealth and power which the millionaires and billionaires wield. This happens only through the default of other individuals who fail to exercise their rights and instead permit others to wield them in their behalf.

No government of any people has the right to the power which the USA and the USSR wield today. The people of Canada, and particularly the Quebecers, feel the essential evil of the massive U.S. influence.

Did the superpowers really earn the right to the power they wield, or did they acquire it through the default of those peoples who failed to assert their right to independent existence?

Peter Presnaka,
Professional Engineer, Ont.

the varsity

TORONTO

Editor
Review Editor
Assistant Review Editor
News Editors
City Editors

Feature Editor
Sports Editor
Design

CUP Editor
Photo Editor
Executive Assistant
Advertising Manager
Editorial Offices
Editorial Phone
Advertising Office

Brian Johnson
Sally Mason
Jack McGaffey
Jim Cowan
Cecil Mergel
Louis Erickman
Rud Steadler
Mary Kate Rowan
Paul Carson 973 4053
Dave Evans
Barbara Batchman
Sue Randle
Mark Rubin
Harriet Kiseckel
Carol Cooper 923 8171
91 St. George 2nd floor
923 8742 923 8743
91 St. George 1st floor

The Varsity is a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Privately Owned. Official Publications, Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the content or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Building Directors, 91 St. George St.

varsity occupers:
meet at the office
today at 12 noon

PHOTOGRAPHY AND THE POWERLESS

When I was working as a full-time organizer in the Trefann Court urban renewal area in Toronto (I started there in the summer of 1966 and continued until the end of 1968), one of the regular nuisances experienced by the residents of the area was the continuous presence of assorted photographers. They came from the local newspapers, the national magazines, and they came as eager free lancers "doing their thing". In addition to them, there were the filmmakers from the National Film Board and the TV producers and cameramen. They all came uninvited, they never asked for permission to take pictures and film, and they used their products any way they pleased, without the slightest concern for how the exposure might affect the people whose pictures were being taken.

The residents (classed as "the poor" by the visitors) found photographs of themselves and their families spread over the front pages of newspapers; they found them in magazine articles; they found them in photography collections and exhibits; and they watched themselves on the TV screen — and they never had any say in what texts were affixed to their pictures (usually the text referred to them as "slum-dwellers" regardless of what their situation was and what the condition of their home was.) People sitting on their front steps, children playing on the street, in the backyards and in the lanes, people looking out of their windows, women hanging laundry in their backyards — all were easy prey to the ambitions of the photographers. It seemed that the existence of the area residents was a public one, that in terms of their persons, their faces, their identities, they had no rights at all and photographers literally walked all over the people, children, youth and adults alike.

It wasn't at all that the photographers and filmmakers were interested in the situation of the residents and the content of their long fought battle against the injustices inherent in current urban renewal practices; no, the photographers were only on the lookout for good, expressive materials for their own purposes. Of special interest were little children found playing in the lanes or found resting on some steps or sidewalks — especially if they had dirt on their faces and looked somewhat sad. Likewise, rundown houses and boarded up properties were a favorite target, as were piles of garbage (prior to the day's pickup), back lanes and junk on the yards of vacant buildings. Photographers never had enough of these things — they loved any signs of what to them was general gloom, despair, decay, deprivation, child neglect — those very features which the area residents were actively fighting against.

But there were things in the area you could never make the photographers stop to look at. Like people fixing up their houses, families doing things together, mothers walking their children to school, fathers talking to their sons, neighbours conversing in a friendly manner — anything that might indicate that health, happiness, cleanliness, friendliness and family life existed in the area. These were the features which did not fit into the conceptualization of the photographers and which lacked sufficient drama to sell and to make headlines. For who wants to see a picture of a carpenter fixing up his basement into a recreation room for his children, or a photograph of a family involved in fixing up their backyard, when you can show a picture of an overflowing garbagecan, and of children playing in a broken-down car or of boarded up windows of a house on the verge of demolition or of an old wine standing on a street corner.

It became quite evident to me that the photographers did not come to the area seeking to understand the reality of the people there; they came to exploit the people in one way or another. As a rule they were both outrageously sentimental and arrogant, drawing vast conclusions from individual shots and not having an iota of respect for the dignity and privacy of the area residents.

The residents detested the photographers and spent long hours in discussing the problems created by these people. "My children were sitting on the steps, eating ice cream and rubbing it and mud all over their faces and having a good time — and the next thing you know their picture appears in the evening paper with something about 'poor slumchildren' and the rest of it. How do you think it makes our family feel — with relatives and acquaintances calling and with everybody thinking that all of us down here neglect our children. . . Nobody bothers to find out that my kids get washed and cleaned up many times a day and that we love and care for them as much as parents anywhere in the city." Others were making jokes about being "the slumdweller of the week" and still others remarked that the photographers without fail found the junkiest places in the area — places which the residents in the area themselves found difficult to locate. There were discussions about whether people could see newspapers and individual photographers and when such legal protection was found not to exist, people would talk about the possibility of confiscating the film whenever they caught a photographer in action, of telling him to get out of the area and warning him from ever coming back.

by marjaleena repo

Perhaps if they would have acted upon this often proposed suggestion, Cathy Wismer's photography book Come See My Garden. . . (Martlet Press Limited, 1969) would never have seen the daylight — and at no particular loss to anyone. Cathy Wismer has taken one of these inevitably sentimental journeys to Toronto's Cabbagetown, snapping pictures of children, back lanes, rubble, garbage, broken down cars, boarded up houses etc. The children are invariably sad — I counted only 6 smiling faces amongst 24 — their little faces are sometimes dirty, they look pensive etc. and to underline Wismer's own interpretation of her journey the pictures are filled in by supersentimental text about rats and crying mothers and sisters who don't have fancy clothes but have boyfriends and about scary lanes, and to top it all there is an epilogue that sums it all up in a way that could only delight the United Appeal campaign but which to me is a very feeble attempt to justify the existence of the book.

EPILOGUE

Too soon the walls and fences that were a playground
Are a prison.
The rubbish is rubbish.

The clammy atmosphere of reality has predictably polluted
All things that grow in the garden.
And the noble naiveite
Gives way to hopelessness and hostility.
We who peer patronizingly over the fence
Say, "What can you expect from people who live like that!"
Then turn away, snugly secure in the knowledge
That poverty will be with us always,
That we give at work.
That nothing really can be done to change the inexorable cycle of the Garden.
Or can it?

Wismer's book — like others of this nature — brings three main questions into focus:

- 1) The ethics of photographers.
- 2) The meaning of individual shots.
- 3) The question of what pictures were not taken.

1) Ethics has to do with whether people with cameras have the right to go around stealing other people's faces. Vorsity recently accomplished a feat in publishing a full-page picture of an old man in a wheelchair glaring angrily (I think) and in some confusion at the photographer. Obviously the old man was defenseless against the photographer's weapon and perhaps therefore he was an ideal "subject". I see Wismer's photography in the same terms, particularly as I know some of the children in the pictures and know for a fact that they and their parents do not deserve this exposure and the false sentimentality pouring out all over these pages. It is not a coincidence that photographers who wouldn't consider taking embarrassing shots of the people in their own middle class neighborhoods, drop their ethics when they enter a working class neighbourhood. Downtown every person is fair game.

2) The second question is a most crucial one and here I think that most photographers on the poverty kick commit serious errors. They assume that what they see is real and true and represents the totality of the experiences of the people of that neighbourhood. The question which should be asked about each individual picture in Wismer's book is: yes, the picture is excellent, but what does it mean? What does it mean to see a pensive child leaning against a fence, with scratches on his legs? Or a child standing next to neatly piled garbage, sucking her thumb. Or piles of junk spread on the ground. Or children swinging amidst broken cars, or children staring suspiciously at the photographer, or to see a busted garage and so on. To Wismer, these sights indicate one thing: POVERTY and she is SHOCKED and she wants to transmit her shock and make people CONCERNED ("Give generously").

To me these pictures are pictures of individual children in a working class neighbourhood, some of them momen-arily sad, others laughing at the moment, some pensive, perhaps tired, others active, many suspicious. Surely similar pictures could be taken in any neighbourhood of the city, including Cathy Wismer's own. Photography at this level is in my opinion totally meaningless: it attempts to create a simplistic and sociologically false impression of the people in working class areas; it propagandizes in favour of a position rather than depicts the real and far more varied and complex circumstances of the residents of these areas.

3) This leads to the final point: what is it that is not being shown in the pictures. No photographs are taken of the other circumstances existing in the area, the far more "normal" conditions which I discussed earlier, i.e. people having neat homes, of people looking after their backyards and relating well to their children.

Secondly, what material decay and neglect exists in the downtown areas (and I am well aware that it exists) in the form of run down houses, unkept yards, etc., exists for the very concrete reason that it is allowed to exist, not because of a generalized "people don't care" but because somebody benefits from the decay and disorder. The properties shown in Cathy Wismer's pictures are invariably owned by absentee slum landlords — who get exorbitantly high rents for their "investment properties" from large families who cannot find accommodation elsewhere. These lanelo/ds live in the better parts of the city, (Rosedale, Forest Hill) they are real people with real names and addresses, and what is more interesting, real faces. What about taking a few pictures of them and their families, just in order to introduce some balance to the presentation? Furthermore, City Hall has systematically neglected the downtown areas, by not doing ordinary maintenance repairs on streets and sidewalks and by not enforcing housing standards on absentee owned properties. What about taking a picture of the head of the housing inspection department in the act of trying to explain why nothing has been done? or a photograph of the aldermen of the city council permanently asleep?

There are endless possibilities if a photographer seriously wants to investigate the problems encountered by working class people in the downtown areas. Comparison is the best method at arriving at a balanced picture: comparison between the tenants and their landlords, between absentee owned rundown properties and resident owned well-kept ones, between the condition of the streets and sidewalks in the working class areas and those in Rosedale and Forest Hill. In the process of these comparisons the photographer would get educated herself and might have an altogether different story to tell than the one presented in Cathy Wismer's Come See My Garden.

Traditionally, the social worker in Canada has been seen as the local shoulder to cry on, the expert who can help solve any man's problem, from very poor to the upper class.

But unfortunately, this is usually as far as he goes; he doesn't try to get at the roots of the problem, and he never solves the problem of every man, or of a society.

In simplified terms, the job of the social worker could be seen as making the poor people happy, but he never seems to ask the more basic social question, that being why are poor people unhappy? (well maybe it's because they're poor. Yes, but why are these people poor? Well, maybe that's what the problem is. Hmmm.)

But this traditionalist, one-dimensional attitude toward social work is being seriously questioned by several members of the University of Toronto's School of Social Work. Discontent and frustration with the role of social work in society seem to be the underlying factors in this challenge to established practices in the profession.

As social work student John Weiler said, "Social work as a profession deals with symptoms; it is not a cause-oriented service. It helps people to cope with their environment, adjust to a family breakdown rather than question the economic and political factors that cause social problems."

Don Parkinson and Bill Davidovitz, two other social work students both agree with Weiler's analysis of social work. Parkinson termed it "helping the individual to adjust himself to the system."

What these three students would like to see is social work becoming a tool by which the system is adjusted to the individual. And they would like to be active tools in adjusting that system.

In doing so, however, they want to avoid falling prey to what Weiler called "expertitis" — a "know-it-all attitude" on the part of many practising social workers "because they are professional."

Davidovitz enlarged on this. "A middle class social worker is obviously not going to be at par with a poor man."

But the social worker concerned with change is barred at every door.

"Social work tends to lack any structural analysis (of society)," says Parkinson, "And when you raise the issue of structure analysis in class, the response is little more than polite listening, but it doesn't go beyond that. You get 'Well, let's go back to our techniques of case work.'"

Parkinson feels there is a preoccupation with "techniques which lack a strong theoretical basis."

And fundamental innovations in course content at the school of social work are hard to bring about.

Despite the establishment of faculty-student curriculum committees to plan long range changes in the courses, Davidovitz feels "a sort of frustration" with the committees in that their structure and goals were predetermined.

"The goals were long range curriculum changes, but more or less within the traditional framework," he says.

The committees were comprised of an equal number of students and faculty plus a chairman. Since there have never been any student chairmen, the faculty has always had a majority, the chairman voting to break any deadlocks.

Weiler, who had been a member of one of these committees, tried to step beyond the preset structures, but found himself "caught up in the ongoing process" of the committees and unable to effect any meaningful change.

At one point he and several other students tried "to involve the community, the real people, the poor people in an authentic participatory function in formulating the curriculum."

The group decided to present a brief to the committee based on community involvement in course content changes — an involvement in which the committee determined what they needed in the way of social work, "instead of being told what is good for them."

"We actually went out and met some of these people — in the Kensington area," said Weiler.

But the committee would not wait. There was a time limit set within which it was impossible to gather the necessary information, and the students were forced to submit a theoretical brief rather than an empirical study to the curriculum committee.

These frustrations of the students are only magnified in actual social work practice.

One practising social worker said that basically the social worker "must decide whether he will be part of control or change (in society)."

"You don't want to injure someone in power because that's a threat to you. You can speak out and shake up things, but you may be pushed back for it," he warned.

"Social workers have become more aligned with structure than with change," he added, "But what social workers are, is not necessarily what they have to be. They can initiate change; they do not have to be part of a system which controls." He asked to remain anonymous so as not to endanger his job.

Many students at the School of So-

SOCIAL WORKERS:

looking for something else

by harriet kideckel

cial Work have become concerned with these aspects of the situation and have recently organized a group called the Just Society Associates. This organization acts as an auxiliary to the Just Society, a group of Toronto's poor who are concerned with changing the situation of the poor in Canadian society.

At a recent meeting, one student commented that "social work is based on inequalities of rich and poor and the purpose of social workers is to infiltrate the ideas of the upper parts of society into the bottom third — a type of co-optation."

His attitude was shared by many people at the meeting, but most would like to change things. Davidovitz would like to see social workers "working with people to help them identify their own problems and issues and establish indigenous leadership."

However, these few students of social work and even fewer practising social workers who question the social structure are still a small minority.

"Social workers are generally apolitical," commented Weiler.

"And that is opting for the status quo," added Davidovitz.

There is as well, among social workers, a "preoccupation with status", according to Parkinson.

The social worker working with the people instead of for the people which Weiler envisioned is not the same social worker that the professionals see.

"The social worker is more becoming concerned with class and with the client's class," Parkinson says.

An attitude quite contrary to the feelings of these three students but prevalent throughout the social work profession is the desire for equality with other professions like Medicine and Law.

To obtain a similar high status rank, Parkinson explains, "the Canadian Association of Social Workers and the Ontario Association of Professional Social Workers are on a registration thing now, like psychiatric registration where you are recognized as a professional with special qualifications."

The problem is that many people who are presently doing social work do not have a master of social work degree.

Parkinson worked for two years in social work after he received his BA, before entering the school.

Social workers find themselves in a contradictory situation. Their traditional seniors seek prestige and probably the higher salaries to go with it, while aspiring social workers want to "help" people. They want to help yet they know they offer only symptomatic relief to problems caused by a larger social structure. And if they try to radically alter that structure, they stand a chance of losing the opportunity to "help" anyone at all.

Perhaps the greatest dilemma facing the aspiring and practising social worker now is whether to direct his energies toward, as Weiler put it, "the immediate social need of the individual or structural change of society, neglecting the human need now."

"You can't be all political and forget about human need," he added regretfully.

MIDDLE CLASS POVERTY:

The warm smell of pipe tobacco curls into the corners of the office on a Monday morning. In the distance diesel transports roar along Dundas. Kids are shouting behind the steel link fence enclosing a paved schoolyard on Beverley. J. Diamond of the Jewish Family and Child Service packs the tobacco into his pipe and strikes a wooden match.

"Kids are saying, in effect, that 'Now that we're 8 and have sharper eyes. Now that we're 12 and have sharper social sensitivities. Now that we're 15 and find ourselves confronted with the need to construct a moral base of our own — we're sharply struck by the ways in which we cannot join with our parents in the ways in which they lived their lives.'

What we unfortunately call 'the generation gap' is an inability to live together on the same set of propositions. It has to do with problems of integrity in relationships. In the middle class family, integrity in relationships is a very, very serious problem. The double messaging that goes on in the average middle class family provides questionable alternatives for the kids. Either they split from the family or they try to split themselves internally. The alternatives are flee or become schizophrenic."

Last summer the owner of a furniture showroom at College and Bathurst propped a hand-printed sign against the plate-glass window of his store: "GOING OUT OF BUSINESS. MUST VACATE, SELLING OUT TO THE BARE WALLS." But few people who live in the area of Kensington Market and the southern fringe of Little Italy can afford to buy furniture on a regular basis. So the same store owner still pleads with the same passers-by and the same hand-printed sign still stands behind the same plate-glass window.

If the social problems (at times there's no escaping the power of the cliché) of the "lower" class are not as distinguishable on a purely economic basis as, perhaps, they once were, what of the owners of the string of grocery, clothing and variety stores along Spadina Avenue? What of the problems of the owner of that furniture showroom with an annual income of $9,000 or more? Why are there so many kids from Etobicoke in juvenile courts?

by ian ritchie

Social agencies such as the Family Service Association of Metropolitan Toronto are well-endowed by the United Appeal, and by provincial and municipal government. In 1968, the total revenue of the F.S.A. for both family and group services topped the one million dollar mark. But the willingness of business and government to subsidize these agencies stems from their organizational commitment to the traditional problems of our environment — the problems of families in what social agency publications euphemistically refer to as "the lower income bracket".

The annual report of the F.S.A. tabulates the characteristics of those families served in 1968. While those with incomes below $7,200 comprised 79 per cent of the total aid (Not welfare) offered, only 21 per cent of all family problems emerged from those with incomes above $7,200.

The Family Service Association of Metropolitan Toronto is operated, as are most social agencies, by a basically suburban-oriented executive which must learn to relate to social problems foreign to it. Consequently F.S.A. activities such as Bolton Camp, an annual twelve-day group discussion project for mothers with minimal financial resources, are as much a learning process for the counsellors as they are for the people involved.

Fraser Woodhouse, director of the F.S.A.'s camp project, summarises the attitude of many middle class-administered social agencies.

"Traditionally, those people in lower income brackets have been the people with the greatest need and, although professional social workers have developed skills that can be applied right across the board, we feel we must give priority to these people. There are certain attitudes within the community that prevent the middle class from seeking help from a social or family agency."

Yet, the Jewish Family and Child Service, long-acustomed to dealing with the distinctly middle class problems of a community with distinctly middle class goals, assumes a near-opposite view of the relation of agencies to middle income groups.

"One of the greatest problems social agencies face in dealing with the problems of middle-classness is to determine whether social work is wise enough, sensitive enough, real enough to offer sound and useful attention to these problems. Or do we bring to it a nineteenth century outlook to deal with problems far and away from the nineteenth century?"

Diamond views the problems with which his department deals as essentially problems of goal achievement. "We're dealing with large numbers of families, the fathers of whom are earning good pay, are able to sustain their families from small businesses which bring in good incomes, but who are not 'professionalized'. Their espoused goals and their capacity to achieve them is where the gap arises. How to live these goals without anxiety?"

"In the past the implication was that if you were economically at ease you could easily live out the true meaning of a liberal democratic society. But it just doesn't work that way at all."

The Family Service Association, ("A gift, bequest or donation . . . is a living memorial to the concept of enduring family relationships,") because of its orientation, has relatively little difficulty in financing action programs in low rent public housing projects in Lawrence Heights or Warden Woods. Even the value of maintaining projects of questionable significance like Illahee Lodge in Cobourg — a 'retreat' for older people and medically handicapped kids operating for six two-week periods in the spring and the fall — is seldom questioned.

But when the question is whether or not personal, family and social problems originating among people with middle class incomes should be dealt with almost exclusively by one agency, the situation is radically different.

The Jewish Family and Child Service deals primarily (although not exclusively) with family problems originating from sources other than simply low incomes. As Diamond pointed out, "Jews are essentially middle class people. Even when most deprived their orientation has been one of middle-classness, namely, to become, as soon as possible, sufficiently oriented towards upward mobility to protect the family as an entity. To provide standards for the growth of the family implied that marriage is good, having children is good, education is good, shaping the family continuum is good."

"We're always being told by the Provincial Government and the United Appeal that we're running a Cadillac service in a Ford economy. That's a lot of bullshit."

"We're no longer dealing with the strong, quiet, proud carpenter-type but with the guy who changes his car once every two years — even with the guy who smokes pot so he can tell the boys at the Kiwanis Club that he tried it."

Within the past several years, the number of cases tried involving, but not typically associated with, middle and upper income groups

MONEY ISN'T EVERYTHING

— assault, breaking and entering, rape — have appeared to be on the increase. All this is to exclude the phenomenon of marijuana busts which, in Diamond's opinion, is a red herring and is also particularly evident among kids from middle class suburban homes.

On the whole, most family services and counselling agencies are not overly frantic about the condition of the middle class, preferring instead to level their resources at the poverty-line victim in keeping with the traditional concept of social aid.

"But we have discovered that a lot of serious problems emerge in homes where the parents earn $10,000 and up.

"Many of the problems of the middle class in North America are due to the fact that the plurality of value systems in our society never got knit together closely enough to make sense. For example, in the Jewish community one's business ethics never had that much to do with one's religious ethics.

"The middle class is still, after all this time, not accustomed to dealing smoothly enough with specific class kinds of differences."

The whole prickly personal question surrounding the educational goals that parents establish for their children, particularly (God help us) at the university level, Diamond interprets as a function of middle class goals.

"Since it's an intrinsic goal of the middle class to have your child university-educated, it then becomes the rebel reaction of the middle class kid to fight off this goal-setting that's been established for him. I fear in the future that the deliberately non-educated segment of our society will be those same middle class kids who fight off the imposition of these kinds of goals. We sell our kids some very phoney ideas concerning what education is all about."

Marital problems, divorce and separation (plus abortion) are particularly characteristic of the kinds of problems which Diamond's agency confronts.

Last year the Jewish Family and Child Service, in dealing with over 600 cases, was the busiest marital counselling agency in Metropolitan Toronto and with the new federal legislation concerning divorce, the figures for the current year will be even higher. The most striking characteristic of these problems is the fact that the income level in these marriages is well over the $8,000 a year mark. Affluence, or at least economic security, breeds a unique set of problems.

"For example. It's not unusual in middle class families for the mother not to know how her husband earns his money or what his business involves. Her business is raising kids. Because the family is economically well-off, the mother is as ignorant of this dimension as the kids are. It is not at all unusual when a husband dies for the wife to go into a panic about how she'll manage with the resources he left her. For money to be an effective tool, you have to know how to work it.

"The average kid who comes out of this middle class family is barely able to survive on his own. This is especially true for girls who find themselves in the very difficult position in their young marriages of never having dealt with the simple problems of living before. One of our major counselling resources is a simple consultative thing on money management — to help them learn to do what their parents did not help them to do in preparation for marriage."

What remains to be said concerning the social problems of the middle class is the momentous question of whether or not a society can adapt itself to those problems generated by its own characteristics.

Translation: can the middle class cope with itself?

Diamond neatly summarized the entire question. "We're still in many ways, living beneath the superstructural impositions of primitive capitalism which is bringing our society, our middle class society, down of its own weight. Sooner or later we're going to have to gear our open-ended capitalist structure more democratically."

NEW COLLEGE presents

ONE HELL of
a

SATURDAY NITE

One of the greatest MOVIES
of all time

GRAND OPENING of
THE

TONIGHT & Saturday Nite

10:00 P.M.

til... 1:00 A.M.

featuring IAN ROHER
- Fri.

ELLIOT STRON
- Sat.

50¢ - SINGLE

75¢ - COUPLE

MOVIE MARATHON

MARX BROTHERS

- in 1. "Duck Soup"
&
2. "Horse Feathers" in 3. "Poppy"

in 4. "Casablanca"

in 5. "Bonzo Goes to College"

W.C. FIELDS

HUMPHREY BOGART

BONZO

AND (get this)

TWO SHOWINGS.

6:30 & 9:00 P.M.

New College

Dining Hall

(Huron & Classic)

$1

TIME: 9:00 P.M.

PLACE: OLD PHYSICS 135

PRICE: $1.50/PERSON

EASTERN CANADIAN INTERCOLLEGIATE CHESS TOURNAMENT opens today in the Debates Room at 2 o'clock and continues through Saturday and Sunday. Final Play will commence 4 p.m. Sunday, November 16.

HART HOUSE ART COMMITTEE
IN CONJUNCTION WITH THE NATIONAL GALLERY
CANADIAN PAINTINGS
FROM THE VINCENT HASSEY BEQUEST
TO THE NATIONAL GALLERY

IN THE HART HOUSE ART GALLERY
UNTIL 25 NOVEMBER

Monday - Saturday 12-2 p.m.
Sundays 2-5 p.m.

NOON HOUR FILMS:

Entries from the Canada-wide Film Festival will be shown in the East Common today at 1 p.m.

Saturday, November 15th - Rescreening of Film Entries begins at 11 a.m. & continues through the day in the East Common Room.

(Ladies Welcome)

NOON HOUR DEBATE

Today, 1 p.m. Debates Room

"HULIER EST HOMINIS CONFUSIO"

Ladies Welcome

THE EXTREMELY SERIOUS
IMPROVISATIONAL ENSEMBLE

In a free flow of new sounds

Tuesday, November 18th
12-2 p.m. - Music Room
Ladies Welcome

OPEN HOUSE
SUNDAY 16 NOVEMBER
2-5 P.M.

50TH ANNIVERSARY SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT

LOIS HARSHALL

Great Hall 8:30 November 16

Tickets, Hall Porter

HART HOUSE FILM FESTIVAL AWARDS
To-night 8:00, Hart House Library

AMATEUR RADIO CLUB will operate publicly in the Rotunda from 12-2 p.m. and invites guests to send messages to friends around the world by ham hook-up.

THE LIBRARY COMMITTEE PRESENTS

JACQUES GOOBOUT

50th Anniversary Writer-in-Residence

WORKSHOP: Today - 4 p.m. - Library

(Ladies Welcome)

your children are the innocent victims of all the lies you believe

-the mothers of invention

UNITED

APPEAL:

A SMALL PURSE

WITH

MANY

STRINGS

"POVERTY," THE SIGN SAYS, "IS NO DISGRACE — JUST RIDICULOUSLY INCONVENIENT."

The sign, in the Huron Street offices of the Just Society, overlooks John Mooney as he deals with the inconvenience of Toronto's poor.

Most of the inconveniences, he'll tell you, grow out of patchwork welfare systems that deal with "case poverty . . . poor health, poor education and physical disabilities are seen as the causes of poverty rather than the symptoms of it."

This city's United Appeal, for example, just wrapped up a campaign that got it themselves invest."

son were, their secretaries said, too busy—but one of their assistants said that "the United Appeal shouldn't comment . . . ask the welfare council if you like."

The council had a great deal to say—a spokesman said she could not understand why UA found the May meeting "difficult."

"It was a very exciting and vital conference. There were over 500 people who turned up that we hadn't expected. We couldn't accommodate them so they were standing along the into direct contact (and sometimes conflict) with neighboring areas in which many of Toronto's exploited live.

Other firms represented on the board of trustees are Eaton's, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Imperial Oil, Ford, Massey-Ferguson, Proctor and Gamble, Molson's and De Havilland.

Forty of the board's 64 trustees are business executives. The remainder—24 include trade union bureaucrats, civil servants,

"The class bias of our problems is reflected by the emphasis that psychologists and sociologists place on 'case poverty.'

"Poverty is not divorced from the political economy of the country. Poverty in Canada is a product of capitalism and capitalism is the force which commands resource allocation and produces such a distorted sense of priorities.

"It's interesting the paper won't print that we call men like John Yeager and John

by Anne Boody

This city's United Appeal, for example, just wrapped up a campaign that got it $12,100.

The UA is a little more than a fund-raising body for 70 agencies in Metro. It also:

- Controls these agencies by determining which it will aid and the allocations each will receive.
- Involves major corporation executives in a world they understand so poorly they cannot hope to help it.
- Has the power to say who may or may not be members of each agency — and uses that power.

The UA, in short, helps the needy by providing a kind of sustenance that is conditional and temporary. As Mooney says: "Our problems have a definite class bias and anyone going into a poor area hoping to make things better should know it won't work."

"You can't expect to go into a depressed area with some kind of a liberal mentality and expect miracles."

Then a womanis on the phone, calling to tell the Just Society that she has a drunk landlord and her apartment is infested with red ants which bite the baby.

Mooney says he'll try to help, but he's been this way before and he isn't optimistic. He'll have to try to fix it by dealing with patchwork welfare people.

"We're in a position to try and help but it gets damn exasperating working through 'the right channels.' But we have to try and help, we have to organize our people."

Mooney organizes outside existing structures because the Just Society — "the union of the poor" — does not receive a cent from the United Appeal.

A UA spokesman says member agencies do not provide either income maintenance or financial assistance, both considered a government responsibility.

"We serve those who pay membership fees and belong to the agencies we allocate money for. We have four boys' clubs in the low-income areas where delinquency is high."

If an individual cannot afford membership fees in his agency there could be negotiations, but, the spokesman says "people take more pride in services in which they themselves invest."

UA's campaign book says: "Governments have no mandate to finance all health and welfare services. If this happened it would mean that our contributions would be in the form of higher taxes and there would be no cost-saving volunteers."

"Instead, in our democratic system, government and services exist side by side and in many cases work with one another."

"The United Appeal keeps pace with changing times. All its agencies are reviewed regularly so that none of them become extended and so that services are provided in the most efficient manner."

For all the drawbacks of this top-down approach to patchwork welfare, there are still services which member agencies such as the Ontario Welfare Council would like. But the council found out earlier this year that there are strings attached even to top-down assistance.

The council, which receives nearly one-third of its funds from UA, was told after it elected two welfare recipients and two students, that it could lose its grant. The threat grew out of the council's annual meeting last May, when the students and the representatives of the poor were elected.

Arthur Langley, committee chairman of UA's United Community Fund, wrote the council that its function would be reviewed after "an analysis of the difficult 1969 Ontario Welfare Council's annual meeting."

"It was suggested that the Council's management, programme and finance be the concern of the review. The Committee asked the basic question: Is the Ontario Welfare Council an appropriate agency for continued support from the fund?"

The Just Society also says John Yenger, director of the United Community Fund, told directors of councils receiving funds that "he had asked the Metro Police Intelligence to investigate those organizations and elements involved in the Ontario Welfare Council meeting."

UA found itself unable to give official comment on these charges — both Yenger and public relations director Hugh Norri-

There were over 300 people who turned up but we didn't expect. We couldn't accommodate them so they were standing along the walls.

"If you were a part of the establishment you might have been upset at their appearance — their long hair and jeans and old clothes — and a daughter 20 years old so I'm used to it."

"He had them all there, the Indians, the poor, people with housing problems and youth. They were all our guests and we made them feel as welcome as possible. For those who couldn't afford it we paid their food and accommodation."

"You know technically we've always had poor people represented on the council board but we just never made it public until this spring."

And then: "Most of these people are concerned more about their dignity than money problems."

So, as far as the poor are concerned, two Establishment groups argue about how to look after the poor and who does it better — and they do it without involving the poor.

That's reflected in several ways, not the least significant involving traditional welfare links with business and government in an effort to maintain credibility.

The standard approach to welfare by such organizations as UA or the Canadian Welfare Council places the emphasis on case poverty. There's virtually no response to the exploitation of people by corporations for profit and production.

And that's where the business links come in — the membership list of UA's board of trustees looks like a social register.

The board's chairman, for example, is John Barrow, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Simpson-Sears Co. Ltd. and Allstate Insurance Co. Ltd.

Charles Osbourne Dalton, another prominent trustee, is executive vice-president of Canadian Breweries Ltd. and a director of Canada Breweries (Quebec) Ltd., Dominion Malling Co. Ltd., Carling Breweries Ltd. and O'Keefe Ale. O'Keefe and Carlings are owned by Canadian Breweries.

The University of Toronto's executive vice-president (non-academic), Alexander Rankin, is a trustee — and also in charge of U of T expansion, a job which brings him

Forty of the board's 64 trustees are business executives. The remaining 24 include trade union bureaucrats, civil servants, politicians, professionals and lawyers. The edge goes to the men who have fought labor hardest and are least disposed to discuss, say, redistribution of wealth or profit.

The board, then, with its assortment of executives loaned by monopoly capitalism to improve a slipping image, ends up functionally serving forces which perpetuate poverty while claiming to offer solutions.

Toronto welfare's Social Planning Council, served by the UA, is directed by John Frei, one-time head of Czechoslovakia's auto industry.

Dr. Frei also was once Director of the Urban Social Development Project in Montreal, where he managed to act as consultant for developers expropriating the area in which lived the poor to whom he was to have been responsible.

Now that he helps supply UA with trends and guidelines used in making budget allocations, Dr. Frei finds that social development is too important to be left to social workers alone.

There is, he says, a need for more architects, engineers, economists and politicians. But he's not sure about the poor.

"We tried it in Montreal and it didn't work, and experience in the States shows that it doesn't work. One welfare recipient won an election in Toronto's 45-member board last spring, but her decisions did little to change the decisions of the board."

As the Just Society's Mooney might note, however, it means little to leave one welfare recipient fighting for survival among 44 executives. And the corporate collision over how the rich should help the poor is unaffected.

So men like Mooney get involved with groups like the Just Society, hoping to work with the current 300-member base of welfare recipients and lower-class workers for social change that will end the need for patchwork welfare.

The Just Society, Mooney notes, must work outside political mainstreams. Change will come only through analysis, education, organizing and action in a combination that excludes traditional approaches.

It's interesting the paper won't print that we call men like John Yenger and John Frei damn liars.

"They are the reason we won't fight in the traditional political mainstream, because they are all alike. None of them really give a damn."

"Our people know what is happening to them, they feel it in their guts."

"Once we have a particularly strong power base, I'd say within two to three years, then we're in a position to set up an alternative model. We'll have free day care, an educational system where the child's education is fundamentally rather than economically oriented. We'd also set up politically-based consumer co-ops from which we'd organize."

Our people are apathetic now. They've been screwed. Why is there only a 37-percent turnout in elections? We know we're voting for crooks, fuck it, why should we bother with them?"

The telephone rings again.

A woman is calling on behalf of her brother, in hospital suffering from a severe asthmatic condition.

He is on welfare and allowed only $20 a month for drugs. He needed more but couldn't get them. Now he's bedridden

He has received a letter from the welfare people saying that since he is getting food and a bed in the hospital his usual welfare cheque of $119 a month will be cut down to $50.

His medical rates will be the same — $20. He still needs $98 a month for rent.

The report sends Mooney back to the phone with the welfare people for the ninth time.

"Certainly the man should be allowed what he needs," he says. "Isn't there anything you would like to do?" Comes the response:

"Sorry, I don't care to answer that. I take my directions from head office and can't go against the regulations. We are really all very compassionate people here. I've been here for 10 years and should know."

"Now really if he has been cut down and is having trouble, he can appeal on Form 60."

Life with Father....

gone awry

In the current Hart House production of Eugene O'Neill's Mourning Becomes Electra, the visual presentation of the House of Mannon is terrific. Literally. Designed by Murray Laufer, the revolving set centers around the facade of a Greek revival mansion. Executed in whites and greys, and illuminated by unpleasant blue light, columns and triangles are assembled into a geometry student's nightmare in which a single fluted beam extends out beyond the proscenium and over the audience. The initial effect is of suspended mass awaiting the single swift kick which will send it crumbling. The collapse never occurs, but as the play progresses, the sepulchre grows dirtier and deader in direct proportion to the corruption of its occupants.

But Mourning Becomes Electra is the actor's show to make or break, not the set's. And the Greek revival drama they enact is even more difficult to work with than the set obviously is. O'Neill lifted his plot and the manner of its execution from Aeschylus, whose actors and audience operated in the context of an opaque and implacable universe. Somewhere, somehow, in the hands of the gods or in an overriding force, there was an order of existence, and if a mere mortal violated the pattern by accident or design, there was hell to pay until the original crime worked itself out through the last horrible detail of retribution. It is argued today that this mysterious order was merely man's projection of the incomprehensible he experienced in himself. This may very well be true, but the understanding of the universe was on one of the forces outside man and beyond his ken and control.

In O'Neill's rewrite of the history of a cursed house, the universe shrivels into the limits of the human psyche as defined by Freudian psychology. The unforgivable sin is sublimation conforming to hypocritical social standards. Vengeance is exacted by one's own personality interacting with others equally hung up, and the mystery is not why it happens but why it persists. As Christine (Clytemnestra) puts it (shortly after poisoning a husband who had just begun to hope there was more to life than The Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism): "Why can't all of us remain innocent and loving and trusting? But God won't leave us alone. He twists and wriggles and tortures our lives with others' lives until — we poison each other to death!"

The theatrical result of this interpretation of the (dis)order of things is a drama of poisoned personality which places tremendous demands on the people who enact it on stage. O'Neill's stage directions call for mask-line make-up and manner on the part of the Mannons, and his dialogue leaves little room for interesting bits of stage business. While maintaining their postures a la Greek theatrical convention, the actors must at the same time communicate the presence of living, shifting, incomprehensibly complicated characters behind the masks. Otherwise, the 5-plus hours of adultery, incest, murder and suicide degenerate to the interest and inspiration level of a situation tragedy... Life With Father gone awry.

As evidenced by the increasing frequency of nervous giggles from the audience in the latter parts of the trilogy, the Hart House cast is not completely up to the effort. Directed by Leon Major, they are scrupulously faithful to the script, and some of them do indeed bring their Freudian figures to life by expressing every possible emotional undercurrent in their lines. Kate Reid's method of doing this — and she does it with a superbly sinister charm — is the exploitation of nervous hand gestures and unexpected voice pauses. These mannerisms seem to have infected much of the company, and unfortunately she is the only one who can pull them off without seeming to be fishing for her lines. Likewise, William Needles made his brief onstage life as Ezra (Agamemnon) into an interesting and moving presence that lingered on to haunt the rest of the play. As their son Orin (Orestes) Neil Dainard got better and better as the character got worse and worse, the heir of the house ending up as an inextricable complex of neuroses who commits suicide over having helped drive his beloved mother to the same point.

Lavinia (Electra) activates the succession of catastrophes and, after a fashion, survives them. She should be the most complicated character of the lot. But Anna Reiser's straightforward reading of the part, though strong in moments of confrontation with Mummy, gives small suggestion of emotional subtleties. Similar boredom set in with Sean Sullivan's Adam Brant, Daddy's cousin and Mummy's lover, but casting Mr. Sullivan as a romantic clippership captain was a mistake to begin with.

Set in blissfully simple relief against the Mannons and their madness are a pair of would-be wooers — made appropriately inane and slightly simpy in their normality by Ron Hastings and Patricia Collins — and a whole slew of choric characters from the neighbouring New England town. The comic opportunities available to the latter group were played for all they were worth (and perhaps a bit more), with particularly strong performances coming from David Brown as the local halfwit and Jonathan White as the Mannon's omniscient but tactful handyman.

If you got tickets weeks ago, enjoy the show and maybe the House of Mannon will crumble for you. If you're too late, enjoy the pictures.

marion o'connor

see over

COURSE EVALUATIONS

Tues. Nov. 18, 1 P.M. 1085 S S

All course union people, professional societies, faculty and others cordially invited.

This is an absolute must for groups wanting to do evaluations before Christmas.

THE BULL & THE BEAR

Draught beer on tap from noon till after midnight. Hearty lunches from 75c. Wild atmosphere.

THE BULL & THE BEAR

The Bull and The Bear in The Sutton Place Hotel - On Wellesley east of B.

NEW YORK PIZZA HOUSE

620 YONGE STREET CORNER OF ST. JOSEPH - 925-1736
 To specialize in New York and New England style pizza and home-made spaghetti. WE MAKE THE BEST PIZZA IN TOWN
 STUDENTS FREE DELIVERY IN OUR AREA & HOT PIZZA RIGHT TO YOUR ROOM
 5:00 P.M. - 1:00 A.M. DAILY

MARTIN ONROT PRESENTS
IN CONCERT
THE MOODY BLUES with NUMBLE PIE
 SAT. NOV. 29 - 8:30 p.m.
MASSEY HALL
 TICKETS: $5.50, 4.50, 3.50

MAIL ORDER NOW: Send cheque or money order with stamped self addressed envelope to Massey Hall, 178 Victoria St., Toronto.

Tickets available now at all Sam the Record Man locations.

BOX OFFICE OPENS NOVEMBER 21.

a situation

CHRISTINE You're a big man now, aren't you? I can't believe it. It seems only yesterday when I used to find you in your nightshirt hiding in the hall upstairs on the chance that I'd come up and you'd get one more good-night kiss! Do you remember?

ORIN You bet I remember! And what a row there was when Father caught me! And do you remember how you used to let me brush your hair and how I loved to. He hated me doing that, too. You've still got the same beautiful hair, Mother. That hasn't changed. Oh Mother, it's going to be wonderful from now on! We'll get Vinnie to marry Peter and there will be just you and I!

Christine convicts herself of the murder of her husband by her reaction to the presence of her bottle of poison in his coffin. Her children subsequently kill her lover, and she kills herself.

ORIN I love you now with all the guilt in me — the guilt we share! Perhaps I love you too much, Vinnie!
LAVINIA You don't know what you're saying!
ORIN There are times now when you don't seem to be my sister, nor Mother, but some stranger with the same beautiful hair.

tragedy

B & M FINE ARTS PRODUCTIONS
 IN ASSOCIATION WITH C.H.U.M.-FM
 PRESENTS

LAURA NYRO
 AND THE SUGAR SHOPPE
 AT MASSEY HALL
 Mon. Nov. 17, 8:30 p.m.
 TICKETS: $5.50, 4.50, 3.50
 NOW AT MASSEY HALL BOX OFFICE
 AND A & A RECORDS, YONGE ST.
 Co-ordination & Production: Martin Onton.

THE BALL IS COMING

VIC'S BOB REVUE

THE EMPEROR'S NEW CLOTHES

NOV. 18-20 $1.50
 NOV. 21-22 $2.00

8:30 NEW VIC THEATRE
 NEW ACADEMIC BLDG.

TICKETS IN WYMLWOOD OR AT THE DOOR

..... if you wonder where your mother goes every morning I'll tell you ... she has a part time job cooking at meat and potatoes and she just won't quit she says she's worried you're not eating properly 338 huron street at harbord

the Villager

shoe
 shoppes

Every girl has the right to look beautiful Revolt against the ordinary
 Remember pretty feet make the girl
 Swing to boots of all heights

Drench yourself in gorgeous snuggly furs Villager has the great stuff — fashions that are merry and delightful —
 Enjoy our wonderland of accessories — Enjoy!

Open Thursday and Friday nites. C.O.D. orders accepted. Credit and Charge cards honored.

126 BLOOR STREET

TEL: 921-1779

Centre for the Study of Drama
in association with
The St. Lawrence for the Arts
presents

Slawomir Mrozek's

TANGO

Translated by Nicholas Bethell
Adapted by Tom Stoppard
Directed by Joseph Shaw

Mon Wed Nov 17-19

HART HOUSE THEATRE

Tickets $3.00

Box Office 928-8668

Students $1.50

ALL PERFORMANCES OF MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA SOLO OUT

JANIS JOPLIN WITH BIG BROTHER ANO THE HOLO
ING COMPANY SCOTT MCKENZIE MAMAS AND PA
PASCANNE O'HEATHUGH MASEKELA JEFFERSO
NAIR PLANE WITH GRACES LICKERIC BURONAN
O THE ANIMALS THE WHO COUNTRY JOE AND THE FISHOTIS REDDING JIMIE HENORIX RAVISHANKAR

MONTEREY POP

FILMED AT THE MONTEREY INTERNATIONAL POP FESTIVAL
In 4-Track Stereo in COLOR

STARTS FRIDAY NOV. 14

EGLINTON
EGLINTON - AVENUE RD.

MPSCU

Math and Physics Students

Elections: all day Friday

Physics Lounge - Room 200

Math Library - New College Basement

The Centre for the Study of Drama
presents

IN THE BEGINNING

the first play in the cycle

Back to Methuselah

by George Bernard Shaw

directed by Robert Gill

and

A SANTA CLAUS MASQUE

by e. e. cummings

directed by Sheldon Clark

Studio Theatre

4 Glen Morris

November 18, 19, 20, 21, 22

8:30 p.m.

admission free

HOT CATS? 536-0475

WAREHOUSE SALE

STARTS SAT. NIGHT

AT 6:30 P.M.

ALL MAXI
COATS

REG. FROM $49-$69

$30 EACH

HOURS

Mon. 11-6

Tues. 11-6

Wed. 11-6

Thurs. 11-8

Fri. 11-4:30

Sat. WE OPEN AT
6:30 P.M.

Sun. 11-4

776 Yonge St. (below Bloor)

CLASSIFIEDS

TYPING theses, essays, notes, charts English, French, other languages. Mimeographing, electric typewriters. Mary Oate Scott (M. Oates) 88 Bloor St. W. Room 225. 922-7824.

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet, "The Day you buy a diamond" H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416. 921-7702.

AVENUE RD. - BLOOR I need one girl to share upper two floors of renovated townhouse partially furnished. Available Nov 15. Call 5:30 p.m. Linda 927-0706.

EXPERIENCED TYPIST. Typing of theses, notes, essays, done quickly, accurately and neatly. Economical, electric typewriter. Phone 421-9038.

ESSAYS. Theses, typed professionally on electric machine. Paper supplied 30¢ per page. Close to campus. 79 Madison Ave. Phone 922-8564 after six. Ask for Loree.

NEED CASH? Cut out this ad. Above average earnings. Part time now, full time summers. Sales and management. For appointment call Mr. Schultz - 920-4726.

SALTY OOG Discotheque will rent premises Monday to Thursday day or evening. For information call A. Curry 964-7060 or 633-2677.

NEED A ROOM? 2 vacancies available for males in co-op residence. Call Inns College 928-2512 or drop in at 63 St. George Street, Room 202.

DOUBLE ROOMS for rent at male fraternity for $45 to $50 per month. Meets available. Phone 925-8245.

SAILING INSTRUCTIONS beginners' lessons now in Rm 241, Gerald Larkin Bldg., Trinity College, Fridays at 1 p.m.

TWO PEOPLE wanted to share house about Dec 1. $45 a month plus 1/4 hydro each. Call Larry Tabick 364-5872.

PART TIME manufacturers agent required to call on furniture, lamp and gift stores. Call 228-2447. Car essential.

BATHURST-ST. CLAIR - Bedding in apartment, reliable girl, private, frig, own grill, large walk-in closet. Door leads to bath. All supplied - $16.00 - 782-2070.

DIAMOND RINGS FROM IMPORTER. High quality, low prices. Call 368-9474 for a private appointment, under no obligation.

TUTOR WANTED immediately for 2nd year Math & Physics - Call 653-7219 or 653-6810.

TYPING in English, French, fast accurate service on 18 M. Selectric by experienced typist two blocks from University Campus 177 St. George St. 929-5370 - 40¢ per page.

WANTED: one person to share 3 bed-room flat. $50 a month 466-3318.

PARENTS wishing to establish a school in the spirit of the Hall-Oennis report call 445-6103 or 924-6012.

FOR SALE 1965 VW 44,000 mi., winter tires, radio, seat covers, excellent running condition. $300. Call 233-9517 evenings 5:30-7:00 on weekends.

DISCOVERED excellent Italian dress designer on 18 M. for who would like to work from his home in the west end. If interested call 247-4453.

CAR POOL DRIVERS needed for 8ey-view-Finch-Steeles area parking space arranged call 222-3886 after 8:00 p.m.

TWO FEMALES (prefer nurses) to assist gentle lady confined to bed, evenings and weekends. Room, board and salary. Case Loma area. Mr. Mrs. Wells 922-8286.

LOST in Sidney Smith Hall blue onyx ring center diamond. High reward to finder. Please phone 928-3408 or 445-1956.

RIDE WANTED from Keele-Finch. Shop-paid area to campus daily phone Greg at 633-5677.

NEW COLLEGE presents ONE HELL OF A SATURDAY NIGHT! ("Rosemary's Baby," "W. C. Fields, Marx Brothers, The "Belly-Button" Coffee Shop, etc.) See DISPLAY AOS in this issue.

WANTED - Someone to share 3 bedroom Apt with 2 guys. Cheap. 5 minutes walk to campus. Phone 368-5835 after 6.

downhill all the way corrupt skiers

Downhill Racer is a film with rather exalted intentions, designed to show the real story behind the achievement of the Olympic athletes — as Hollywood says: "the unvarnished account of the action-packed, no-holds-barred world of professional competitive skiing."

Well, sports fans, this movie definitely has miles of absolutely beautiful footage of the Swiss Alps, and a tummy-wrenching over-the-shoulder skier's view of the downhill slalom course. More interesting yet is the fact that the film seems to grasp the chillingly imperative nature of one-man competitive sports like skiing. Where Downhill Racer falls flat is in plot development.

The hero, David Chappellet, is a tough young American from Cow's Haunch, Colorado, who comes to Europe to win The Big Race and still maintain his intrinsic identity. By a series of the sort of fortuitous accidents which seem endemic to skiing, he manages to make the team. Poor boy, he soon learns that trying, not winning is where the enjoyment lies. His attitude toward skiing throughout the film seems like that of Marcello Mastroianni at his most degage — he gives forth with that kind of terse, bored comment which characterizes the man who does not relish anything he does. He has a sort of street-fighting mentality, suks a lot, and is self-tough to race his main fellow-competition into a brick-wall.

Redford created the film around himself and consequently the other characters are so subordinate as to be largely insignificant. Gene Hackman (Estelle Paron's husband in Bonnie and Clyde) is an exception to this. He is very much the earnest American selling the Olympic athletes as "living examples of the American way", to the hard-nosed promoter. Camilla Sparo is that sweetly-packaged optional accessory so popular these days — the gratuitous affair.

But, both these characters demonstrate the corruption of what should be sport at its most just. The managers of the athletes care for the men, but the men are bought and sold as commodities of national prestige. Included in the crew of exploiters and parasites is a very stupid lady reporter, the fickle crowds who are alternately yuletide and congratulatory and crass newscasters mispronouncing names and mangling reputations.

Nonetheless, the camera has managed to catch some fairly sensitive moments — most notably the final shot of Chappellet believing he has won the gold medal, then watching a German skier almost steal his victory, only to fall and brokenly slide down to the end of the race. Cow's Haunch, Colorado is also rather nicely caught in some folksy "this is old America" shots, and, of course, the Alps are as always, their usual magnificent selves. It's just too bad the characters and the plot don't measure up to the scenery — Downhill

Racer seems to be as corrupted by commercialism as the skiers it portrays.

sharon dunfield

poets reveal Thanatos no. 1 killer

Wednesday evening in the West Hall of U.C. four members of the University Player's Guild took on the "Subject of Death". Naturally the number of witnesses to this engagement was small — not so many people are actually grabbed by the subject.

Unfortunately the performers evoked in the space of an hour such a wild succession of these moods that, while the audience was consistently absorbed during that hour, the evening as a whole had a tinge of insanity to it. Now this might have been exactly what Steve Katz had in mind — pathos, absurdity and awe, the grotesque and the moving elbowing each other, the delicious ramblings on the subject of suicide by a mind severely out of wack juxtaposed to the meditations of Donne — but then neither does it catharsize the collective psyche of an audience, or whatever an evening of entertainment is supposed to do.

Anyhow the players carried it off quite well. Paul Mulholland and Eleanore Lindo are blessed with stage presence which can project, respectively, John Donne and Emily Dickinson without reminding you in the slightest of your Eng 100 lecturer phil marchand

memories show promise

Theatre Passe Muraille's Memories For My Brother should be seen not just as a show in itself but as a seed for the future. The first consideration is still the major one, and each spectator may or may not like the way things have been done. But the second consideration is important and I would argue that it places some responsibility upon the audience to support the show and also (this is much trickier) to take a positive attitude towards it in any way that is possible.

The production displays some poor acting, some sloppy direction and some over-written, clumsily arranged sketches. There are moments of embarrassment during which the stark intimacy set up between a audience and cast only increases the discomfort. But there are long sections of this fragmented-juxtaposition of improvisational pieces which make such structures irrelevant because of their intense force concentrated, complex, yet simple to respond to.

But the close intimacy and carefully built details of the scenes — whether they be stylistic or realistic in presentation — make any moral evaluation impossible. What is experienced as perverse is the forces attacking the humble lives: the idiotic police who appear occasionally or (ironically) the pretentiousness of the director who wants to bring nudity and copulation on stage in order to give theatre something with which to combat film and T.V.

The show needs much more rehearsal. It lacks a sense of company to make up for the lack of personality so obvious in some of the actors. In this sense it is a warm-up for what Theatre Passe Muraille will do later in the season — there is some really fine acting fighting its way through. This, however, is unfair to John Palmer. One could say that it is a warm-up for his career as a writer and director (with emphasis definitely off the latter). But there is enough good material in Memories For My Brother for the show to stand on its own feet (or scaffolding). What it really lacks is an audience

richard musphet

butch and sundance

Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid is in many respects a continuation (although it occurs in an earlier time period — the Spanish-American War) of the theme of Bonnie and Clyde — the humanization of the outlaw. There's poignancy, comedy, tragedy, violence and just plain kibbitzing. Over it all lurks an atmosphere that is one-half true life and one half fairy tale. The tragedy of Butch and Sundance, like that of many of us, is that they are beautiful people, but they're not "straight".

It's heart-rending to see them miserable over the killing of a robber gang — something they felt compelled to do on the only legitimate job they took — guarding a mine payroll. Near the movie's finale, when they each have about two bullet holes apiece, we delight to find them affectionately teasing each other, trying to maintain each other's spirits and stalwartly fighting back the pain — a fantastic ultimate test of friendship. The trust, affection and endurance of their relationship permeates the atmosphere of the movie, giving it a validity far beyond the law.

Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid could be the American rendition of Robin Hood. It has all the ingredients — humane outlaws, with their "merrie" band of men, or hillbillies and their hearts, as well as their pockets, of gold. The same tone of reality pervades. Butch and Sundance exist beyond the constrictions of law and society, indeed, beyond time and space. They are effective because they are eternal.

The director presents us with screen-sized photographs, speeded-up collages, slow-motion photography and silent movie excerpts (at the beginning). These techniques juxtaposed on a period of American history which saw the flux of old and new (i.e. the bicycle and the train beside the horse, the skyscrapers of New York against the backdrop of western log cabins and dirt roads) serve to accentuate the human and the technical anxieties inherent in the period. They also help to create the fairy-tale atmosphere of the movie and prepare us to accept the film as a beautiful fantasy which, at the same time, operates on a very "real" level.

The ending is stupefying. A battalion of the Bolivian Cavalry lines up to cut them down when they attempt to make their get-away and they are frozen in a still (made immortal for us) before the bullets reach them.

alex mercer

here's watsup

THEATRE

Vic's Bob Revue, The Emperor's New Clothes, written and directed by John Bamrose, opens Tuesday (8:30) and plays through Saturday.

Trinity College Dramatic Society presents a free noon-hour (i.e., 1:15 pm) production of Mather-lick's The Intruder off next week in Cotwright Hall of St. Hilda's College.

Also free — the Drama Centre's productions of two short plays — G. B. Shaw's In the Beginning (which is the beginning of Back to Methusalem) directed by Robert Gill, and e.e. cummings' Son-to Claus Masque, directed by Sheldon Clark. Curtain on is at 8:30 in the church on Glenmorris Street, from Monday the 17th through Saturday the 22nd.

FILM

The National Student Film Festival ends today with a final screening to be held today at 1 PM in the East Common Room of Hart House. Awards will be presented to winning entries in all categories that evening at 8 PM in the Hart House Library. A five-hour re-screening of entries will be held on Saturday, November 15th beginning at 11 AM and continuing through the afternoon.

MUSIC

Next Thursday at 2:00, the Women's Musical Club of Toronto presents singer Thomas Paul (bass) at Eaton's Auditorium (50c with ATU). The featured artist this week at the TSO is BRUNO LEONARDO GELBER, who will play Brahms' First Piano Concerto.

WANDA JACKSON, well known to C & W fans, opens Monday for a week at the Horseshoe Tavern (George Hamilton IV the week after). The Hawks Nest, which has now begun an all rock policy and opened its membership to all ages, will have TEAGARDEN and VAN WINKLE tonight and Saturday, and SPOOKY TOOTH on Sunday. MOTHER TUCKER'S LITTLE DUCK have hired the old Rock Pit for a show Thursday night.

Vancouver pianist Al Natl (he of the jazz avant garde) at the Art Gallery of Ontario, Wed. Nov. 19.

"I'm not nervous I'm quick"

'hi, i'm johnny cash'

Two godawful small amplifiers and a sound big enough to fill the cavernous Maple Leaf Gardens. The hip, the straight, the old the young, the artist and the plumber, they were all there, all stomping, clapping till their palm were a swollen red and tiny grains of dirt rose to the surface. Carl Perkins and The Tennessee Three played rockabilly and the bitter frustrations of fifteen years melted away, things were easy in 1955, we just didn't know. Blue Suede Shoes was the national anthem of the fifties.

A Cajun in a purple suit, the Tiny Tim of country music, Doug Kershaw danced over the stage like a marionette gone mad, Captain Hook on acid. He blew them all down, even the plumbers. Violin swerving and plunging, pouring out the rhythms of the bayou. Diggy diggy lo, diggy diggy li, he's a Lewisiana man.

The stage went dark. When the lights came on again, Johnny Cash was singing Big River. It was all his. He was always in command and quite obviously enjoying himself. He stalked the stage, careful to sing to all sides, at one point, he even sang to the people behind him. The songs were steeped in history and the rural south. Guitar slung over his back, a mouth-harp in each hand, he became The Orange Blossom Special, rolling down the railroad line. He sang in that gravelled voice and told tales of his and America's. Tales of cotton pickin' and the Blues, of John Henry and drunken Ira Haynes. He sings with a rough resonance, lifting the guitar high up on his chest and his pick crawling up the neck.

The whole family came on. The Staller Brothers, Mother Maybelle and the Carter family and 18,000 people just sitting for a spell. A good old family singsong with the Carter girls in bouncing, fluffy dresses of chiffon. Christ, if only you could square dance ur jig or something. You half expected to discover Jed Clampett, Ma and Pa Kettle or L'I Abner next to you. No luck, only a plunging neckline and My Sin perfume. Still we all stomped and howled. The hymns came, the revival meeting started. Cash looking for all the world like some backwoods preacher.

Daddy song bass
Mamma song tenor,
Me and little brother
Got right in there.

We all got right in there. We walked the Holy Land and sang of Jesus, the carpenter of Nazareth. Johnny Cash sang and sang, encore after encore.

Oh, the circle won't be broken,
By and by Lord
By and by.

Johnny Cash could pick 350 lbs. of cotton a day, he swallowed a hundred amphetamines a day and he could sing. The rural south and the Depression have never really left him or his music. Simple and blunt, a poet without rhyme. As he says, "I'm not all that damned noble." Arnold Aronowitz can testify to that. "The first time I met Johnny Cash, he wanted to punch me out I still don't know why and he doesn't remember."

The underground rock stations play his music and the young pour into his concerts. What has he got to offer? Causes? He fights for convicts and Indians.

What does he think about Vietnam? "I think everybody should serve their time for their country. I did. It's not up to every man to decide when it's time to go defend our country. We elect men to decide that for us." Sounds like heresy. George Wallace or General Hersey might have said it. The frontiersman's faith in his country and it's leaders. Good men, they died in trenches, on deserts and in the jungles of the world. Yet he can sing of Ira Hayes and make you cry. John Henry is a hero, he fought a machine because "a man is but a man."

Johnny Cash is the most important man in the current Country Renaissance. This reflects something more profound, more meaningful, than a rediscovery of a certain kind of music. Country is American and it's in America that the Renaissance is in full bloom. This trek back to the music and sound of the pioneers, the sweaty labourers, above all to simple men, is in effect, a return to the type of men and ideals that built America and made it great. It is a movement which may break the shackles of decadence brought on with the heady opium of luxury and power that America reaped as the fruits of the labours of the millions of simple men who really make history but are never noted by history.

The fantasmagorical Xanadu of the Love Generation and The Beautiful People has burst like a bubble under the pressures of racism, assassination and Vietnam. Americans and their music have become a little less clever, a little less sophisticated and complicated. The picture of loose-limbed youths freaking out to orgasmic bombast is suddenly dispelled by one ugly man with an unamplified guitar, knowing nothing of gurus, incense or strobe lights. True Grit.

don quinlan

disc column

blues— alive and well

GEORGE SMITH. A Tribute to Little Walter. World Pacific 21887... Of The Blues. Bluesway 6029

Tribute is an attempt by harmonica player George Smith to recreate some of the greatest songs by one of the very greatest harp blowers. In comparison with Little Walter's work, the album is a disappointment, but even imitation Little Walter, played with the Muddy Waters band, as it is here, is above average. The Bluesway album is uneven, but in some ways it's more satisfactory, since it presents Smith as himself. The material ranges from standards like "Got My Mojo Working" to "Ode to Billie Joe" and the theme from the TV show Hawaiian Eye. Mostly it's rocking blues in the Waters/Walter/Cotton line, and, as for some of the tunes, it can be said that "Billie Joe" never sounded better, albeit a little out of place.

JACK DUPREE. When You Feel... Blue Horizon 7702

Jack Dupree, a foremost barrel-house piano player with a singularly mournful voice, has cut what is probably his most boisterous record. Some of the bitter cynicism towards U.S. racism which was so evident in his records a few years ago has largely given way to humor with a relieving loss of bathos. The earlier LPs can be fascinating, but the overall musical effect is better on this one, in spite of the "help" of some English musicians on half the numbers.

OAKLAND BLUES. World Pacific 21893

I had no idea that such good contemporary blues is being played in California. Most of the West Coast blues I've heard has been heavy with saxophones, but this LP, featuring virtually unknown musicians, is a revelation. The bands are five man units, much like Chicago groups, but their blend of country and city styles creates very much their own sound. With the exception of a poor first number, a fine new album.

ALBERT COLLINS. Truckin'. Blue Thumb BTS 8

This is more the sort of thing that I associate with the West Coast (or with Houston, Collin's home town). The LP leans heavily on guitar and saxophone instrumentals with riffing saxes, organ and even some occasional Mexican-type brass. The first cut has a nice sound, but then the LP begins to drag. Collins hasn't developed enough yet to create interesting long solos and the sax-playing is unexceptional. It's all supposed to be cool music, but it quickly gets dull. Good as bluesy background music, perhaps.

m. lambertier don't hear you

"This is awful!" whines Germaine in Act II of Monsieur Lambertier, the current offering of the Academy of Theatre Arts in the Ward-Price Building. Well, not awful, but supremely challenging to the audience's eardrums and dramatic sensibilities.

Written in 1928 by Louis Verneuil and translated by Lionel Levy, this two-character shouting match has been updated in costuming and language by director Z. A. Turzanski, but its guts remain rired in the crime passionnal emotionalism from which it emerged.

Maurice decides Germaine has been his mistress long enough and marries her, only to discover that her "fond godfather", Lambertier, was never the latter but quite heavy on the former. From this discovery spring jealousy, intrigue, murder, remorse and other fun sports, each of them exploited for maximum decibels and painfully prolonged backdrop silhouettes by Turzanski.

As the strong-throated newlyweds, Thomas J. O'Hanley and Marysia Kovalchuk stumble gracefully and shout manfully through the evening. Miss Kovalchuk's elegantly carved voice and features are shamefully wasted, particularly on Mr. O'Hanley, who stubbornly refuses to look either his partner or the audience in the eye.

Eugene Chruscicki's cluttered set seems designed as a maze for which the actors were never given a road-map, a fitting background for the steady procession of climaxes and denouements from which the audience retires not really lost, but quite bored.

rocking horse winner

David Helwig explores experience on more than one level. To me he is most compelling at the basic, physical plane. Here he works with a deft assurance that draws the reader in and invites him to take as much from the poem as he can. Pieces like "Sunny Afternoon", "English Winter", and "Late October" show him at his best. Simply by using a tight construction and a carefully-controlled perspective, he is able to generate an amazing tension.

"Hallowe'en-Christmas", if more ambitious, packs less force. The control, the tense, inviting tone, are missing. One senses a nascent, inarticulate profundity forcing itself off the page. One starts asking, What is he trying to say? and the impact of the poem is undermined.

Helwig never lapses into pleasurable banality, and fights against the attraction of unetaphysical vacuity. The final selection in the book, "Metamorphosis", is full of good things, but doesn't quite work. The poet, by his lack of confidence, seems aware of his failure. It is this awareness that makes me think Helwig, although he is still losing battles, will eventually win the war.

gary ross

david helwig
the sign of the gunman
oberon press
152 pp., $4.00

one and one is two
 one and one is two what's two?

hey hey hey

You are young William Cosby. Your gang has just been challenged to the tackle championship of the whole world by the Green Street Terrors. So you all go to see the Werewolf Triple Feature at the movies and when you come out it's dark and you've just seen what werewolves do and you have to cross that 9th Street Bridge. So whatya do? You start humming, cause monsters can't bite your face off when you're humming.

For a half hour last Saturday night (and again on Wednesday), cartoon comedy took one giant step for itself and one for the evolution of television in general.

Hey, Hey, Hey, — It's Fat Albert was the Cosbysque saga of a day in the life of boyhood: football, threats, promises, movies, monsters, fears, success, bribery, friendship, status and bubblegum. William, his little brother Russel (Mania bought you at the Salvation Army for 50¢ 'cause she felt sorry for you), Dumb Donald, Weird Harold and Fat Albert — the gang of voices that made Cosby famous — made him a highly successful appearance in the world of the animated cartoon.

It's a rough and risky trip, this transposing of comedy from one medium to another. Cosby was eminently successful with the gang in his spontaneous comic narrative-monologue that seemed to depend so much on his rubber face mannerisms and body english for its dynamics. But Fat Albert was a television success. Instead of animating familiar comics and adding voices like Peanuts, the familiar voices take on cartoon appearances. Everybody knows what Fat Albert sounds like and most everybody has an idea what he should look like. Adding voices to familiar images is easier than providing suitable images for familiar voices, especially in a culture that is visually oriented.

Nonetheless, Fat Albert and the whole gang appeared in full colour (sorry, I mean negro, or that is Black). Behind them was not the standard detailed cartoon scene, but high contrast film clips quite appropriate to their activity (ghetto areas, sand lot football games, Lon Chaney werewolf films, etc.). And throughout the whole show was original jazz by Herbie Hancock. In this rather unorthodox environment for cartoon characters the Cosby gang went along in various degrees of lanky limber gaits to face the Green Street Terrors, werewolves, monsters.

Besides the music and films, there was a certain amount of very effective hyperbole. No real monsters or witches or werewolves appeared, but certain things were exaggerated to provide the perspective of adolescent reality. When Fat Albert first appeared, he was so big and so fat that he literally broke through the doorway. He sounded (or resounded) like the Jolly Green Giant. And in the football game the opposing players looked like little kittens clinging to his massively fat hulk. Other times he was just the proportionately chubbiest of the gang. At first glimpse, the Green Street Terrors looked like fierce Watusi Warriors, not the sandlot team from the next block. These selective visual exaggerations created an aura of boyhood reality that made a fine setting for Cosby's script and voices.

Boyhood nostalgia is Cosby's comic element, but it takes more than Cosby alone to make good television (his new series sadly testifies to that). In the transposition from the oral comic monologue to the visual medium of television cartoons, there was enough innovation and license taken with the available techniques of television that the dynamics of Cosby's humour were not only well preserved but greatly enhanced. It proved to be a successful gamble, good television and a delightful mixture of animation and adolescent, fantasy, music and nostalgia.

daniel mack

Captain Saint Lucifer where is the night luster?

Don't go to Gibson cross the river they hand the alley cats on Gibson Street taken from Laura Nyro's new album, New York Tendaberry. The words are pretty flat by themselves. They exist as suggestions for her voice to swoop down on, dwell in, linger and caress. She backs herself with a jerky piano that never sits still. (This is all written on the assumption you haven't heard her. Not enough people have.)

She is unique and private. Her only major concert exposure (at Monterey) was greeted with boos. She was taken for a very out-of-place and hard-to-figure nightclub singer. It's true her arrangements often sound like bits & pieces extracted from some infinitely strange Broadway show about God and the Devil. Only it goes on. In New York inside her.

I hope this doesn't make her sound very forbidding. Because the fact is, Laura Nyro has written some of the gutsiest exciting love songs to be heard today on Top 40 underground radio. Yeah, she's a soul singer too. And blue. But I don't really want to take her apart. (Because I can't.) And she's quite right by herself and

Our very own Top 40 Underground station, CHUM-FM, with promoter Martin Ornot are bringing her to Toronto, next Monday, November 17, Massey Hall, B.

30 p.m. I'm converted. (I mean, I like her stuff.)

doug watters

looks like up

Richard Farina is dead. Definitely. He died in a motorcycle accident in 1966 on his way home from a party celebrating the publication of Been Down So Long It Looks Like Up To Me. His death, and certainly his life, as husband to Mimi Baez (Joan's sister) and close friend of both Baez and Dylan provide the stuff from which American folk-heroes are made. Unfortunately, his total creative output at death was one novel and two albums of folk-music — not quite enough to ensure him true fame as the subject of a wall poster.

Perhaps to fill the demand created by Farina's novel and hero-type image, his widow has collected a volume of his stories, poems, journalism and song lyrics and had them published posthumously under the title Long Time Coming and a Long Time Gone.

I have little doubt that, were Farina still alive, this particular book would never have been published. Much of it, especially the little "nothing" poems, is trash:

Nothing
 Matters anymore.

Neat, as an example of the spare-time doodlings of a potentially great author, but doodlings still.

Apart from the trash, and Mimi's sentimental prose notes, there is also repetition — The Good Fortune of Stone . . . as a short story, is identical to the wolf episode of Been Down So Long . . . except that the later, novel version is shorter, terser, and much more powerful.

As a book by Richard Farina, Long Time Coming . . . is poor; as a book about the author, it is excellent.

Apart from the excellent prose in which it was written, Been Down So Long . . . is most notable for its prophetic accuracy. Based on the author's experience at Cornell in the late fifties, it has only recently come into its own as an accurate synopsis of contemporary university life.

The same sort of prophetic sensibilities show through in Long Time Coming . . . Farina, son of an Irish mother and Cuban father, was an American. He wrote both Cuban and Irish stories, but with American feelings which have, again, only recently been publicly recognized as national hangups.

"An End To a Young Man" deals with a young American fighting with the Irish Republican Army and with the American hangup (now widespread on the issue of Vietnam) of fighting other peoples' wars. The fighter successfully bombs a British patrol boat but fails to rouse enough interest in the second part of his mission, to cut a wire fence surrounding the grave of Irish patriot, Roddy McCortley, to remember to bring wire cutters.

tim inkster

THE VARSITY, Friday, November 14, 1969 — Page 19

RESTAURANT • TAVERN
Steele's
 Charcoal-Broiled
 Sizzling STEAKS
 Served in Burgundy Wine
 and succulent ROAST BEEF
 Entertainment nightly in the
 UPSTAIRS VENETIAN LOUNGE & BAR
 Appearing Nightly ANDY NICCOLS
Steele's
 TAVERN-RESTAURANT
 DM. 8-5100 345 YONGE ST.
 (Fully Licensed)

Should I skip Phys. Ed. this week?

Girls who rely on externally worn sanitary protection frequently use their monthly period as an excuse to cut gym classes. They find it uncomfortable to be active while wearing a bulky belt-pin-pad contraption.

For these girls there's an easy answer: Tampax tampons. Because they're worn internally, you can't even feel them when they're properly in place. There's no possibility of chafing. Odor can't form. And after strenuous exercise you can tub or shower—even swim—and be your own cool, clean, fresh self again.

If your school has compulsory Phys. Ed., it pays to be compulsive about Tampax tampons. They're available in 3 absorbency-sizes — Regular, Super and Junior — wherever such products are sold. Easy to get, easy to use, easy to dispose of.

DEVELOPED BY A DOCTOR
 NOW USED BY MILLIONS OF WOMEN
 TAMPAX TAMPONS ARE MADE ONLY BY CANADIAN TAMPAX CORPORATION LTD.
 BARRIE, ONTARIO

We, the Students For Israel, realizing that Israel stands for the right of Self-Determination of the Jewish People, condemns the U.S. Government for suppressing the similar rights of the Vietnamese people:

Students For Israel is not able to participate in the International Day of Protest, Saturday, Nov. 15, due to the respectful observance of the Sabbath. Therefore we urge all those who support self-determination for all the Peoples of the world to join us as we record our protest at the U.S. Consulate on Fri. Nov. 14, 1 p.m.

We will be leaving from the Moratorium at Convocation Hall — Fri. — 1 p.m.

Please sign this petition as is. Collect as many signatures as possible and bring it with you to the U.S. Consulate on Fri. Nov. 14, 1 p.m.

Intimidation of politicians will get action on civic problems says Sewell "Politicians react to power," said Ward 7 alderman candidate John Sewell Wednesday. "A group has to confront the politician."

Speaking to a meeting of Pollution Probe, the SAC-supported candidate urged the formation of groups to "intimidate" elected officials to get action on civic problems.

Sewell, who says his ward is polluted by the Kern and Englehart power plants, told Pollution Probe "intimidation" could take the form of picketing politicians' homes, writing letters, or even attending City Council meetings.

"It's not enough to say we're dying fast," said Sewell. "Facts don't have power. The safest thing a society can do is research them."

Since "a politician's life is short and pollution's is long" the pollution problem is neglected, Sewell said, because no politician wants to tackle a problem that won't be resolved during his term of office.

Thus the development of local pressure groups would be a better way of attacking the pollution problem than simple fact-finding and research.

Sewell said his experience at Trefann Court taught him that the most effective power bases are made up of people directly affected by a particular problem. He suggested formation of residence groups where pollution is extensive.

He felt that those who believe that pollution can't be tackled on a municipal level are wrong.

"The most important unit in Canada," Sewell affirmed, "is the large city. If people did something in Toronto, it would spill over into the province."

Another speaker felt that Canada's wilderness is as threatened by exploitation as her cities are by pollution.

Charles Erikson, naturalist and member of the Algonquin Wildlands League explained the plight of Quetico Park.

"Quetico Park is one of the most beautiful places on earth. I've watched its deterioration, and it's making me sick," he said.

There's a funeral Sunday. Staged by Pollution Probe, it will mourn the demise of the Don River. The cavalcade leaves Convocation Hall 1 p.m. Funeral services begin just north of the Bloor viaduct at 2 p.m. Everyone is welcome. Rides provided. If you have a car bring it.

HERE AND NOW

ALL DAY

TODAY, SAT., SUN

Eastern Canadian Collegiate Chess Championship Six round tournament First round at 2 p.m. Friday. Further rounds 7 p.m. Friday, 10 and 4 Saturday end Sunday. Debates Room, Hart House

TODAY ALL DAY

MPSCU Elections in Physics Lounge-Room 200 McElliott Labs and Math Library in Basement of New College

Exhibition of European sketches by Michael Macree, Yvonne Slipka and David Turvey, Trinity College Buttery

Any student of U.C. interested in being on a committee to govern use of Women's Union Theatre, apply to U.C. Players Guild, J.C.R. Lt office

Applications for committee to consider implementation of the Campbell Report. Three SAC appointees are needed. Send applications to SAC Judicial Committee SAC office. Deadline today at 5 p.m.

12 p.m.

Radio Varsity will launch Lawrence Beder into a stationary orbit 69 miles above the U of T campus. The launch vehicle will be a hot air balloon. At Hart House Tower Amateur radio station VE3UDT will be operating in Hart House in the rounds Hems and observers welcome. This is a good chance to send messages world-wide for free

1 p.m.

Department of Geology films Cliffhangers, Secrets of the Plant World, and Universe Mining building, 170 College St.

CUSO fall lecture series Focus Latin America. Speaker will be Bob Anderson, co-ordinator for Chile, Morning Room, ISC. CUSO co-ordinator for Peru, Martin Rotmann, will speak about the CUSO Engineering programme in Latin America. Mechanical Engineering Building Room 102.

Beginners instruction in sailing Gerald Larkin Building, Room 241.

Tickets for Nov. 19 trip to the McLaughlin Planetarium to see the "Moon show" President of SPAR Aerospace speak on the "Canadian Engineers Contribution to the Space Program" Lobby of the Mechanical Building.

2 p.m.

Eastern Canadian Collegiate Chess Championship, first round. Debates Room, Hart House

Latin American Studies Course Union, Founding meeting 21 Sussex St., Common Room, Second floor

6:30 & 9 p.m.

Rosemary's Baby, Wetmore Hall New College, Admission $1

7:30 p.m.

In Memory of Norman Bethune — Social Function and Revolutionary Film "East is Red" Rm 2158, New Medical Building

8 p.m.

Adjudication of the National Student Film Festival by Allan King. Screening of the award-winning films. Ladies welcome. Hart House library.

St. Michaels College Film Club presents Ingmar Bergman's Through a Glass Darkly. Carr Hall, 100 St. Joseph's St. Shown again at 10 p.m.

10 p.m.

Bellybutton. Coffee house and Discotheque Stag 50c, Drag 75c. Ian Rober performing, New College, Wilson Hall Snack Bar.

SATURDAY

11 a.m.

Complete rescreening of all entries in the National Student Film Festival. East Common Room, Ladies welcome

9 p.m.

New College Presents A Movie Marathon with Duck Soup and Horse Feathers (Max Bros.) Poppy (with W. C. Fields), Casablanca (with Bogie), Bonzo Goes to College. Old Physics Rm 135, $1.50 per person

10 p.m.

Belly Button Coffee House Discotheque, New College Wilson Hall, Stag 50c, Drag 25c, Elliot Strom performing

SUNDAY

3 p.m.

F U of T Dawn of a New Age 76 Scollard

6:30 p.m.

Tom Jones, starring Albert Finney. Wetmore Hall, New College. Admission $1 at door.

7 p.m.

Why don't you join the Lutheran Student Movement for the provocative film "The Supper" Discussion afterwards University Lutheran Centre 610 Spadina (opposite New College)

8:30 p.m.

Hillel presents the movie "Bedazzled" Hillel members free. Non-members 50c. 186 St. George

9 p.m.

Tom Jones movie, starring Albert Finney. Wetmore Hall, New College. Admission one dollar at door.

CAN CAMELS SWIM?

The Great White Wonder in limited supply at the Textbook Store

$11.69

One per customer while supply lasts

THE TEXTBOOK STORE

SMC COOP DANCE

(Student Centre)

with the

MARC TYMES

$1.00/person 9-12

SAT. NOV. 15th

- come to roost at the coop -

Applications Still Needed For UNDERGRADUATE REPRESENTATIVES FOR COMMITTEE TO IMPLEMENT CAMPBELL REPORT

(3 TO BE APPOINTED)

SEND APPLICATIONS TO: SAC JUDICIAL COMMITTEE SAC OFFICE

DEADLINE FRI. NOV. 14 - 5 P.M.

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
Toronto Professional Bldg,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 101, Ontario

IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS

Telephone 364-0973

GRADUATING? UNDECIDED?

We Understand

Discuss your career opportunities as a Chartered Accountant with us at the placement service

NOVEMBER 18

or call Steve Burns at our office

STARKMAN KRAFT, ROTHMAN BERGER & GRILL
CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS
3101 BATHURST ST., SUITE 601
TORONTO 19, ONTARIO
TELEPHONE 782 1155

NEW COLLEGE motion picture
SOCIETY presents

SUNOAY NITE AT THE MOVIES

"TOM JONES"

- - starring ALBERT FINNEY

TWO SHOWINGS ONLY: 6:30 & 9:00 P.M. SUNOAY

NEW COLLEGE (Wetmore) DINING HALL
(Huron & Classic)

See... "ROSEMARY'S BABY" - SAT. - SAME TIME

Gellius appeals to the masses

by GELLIUS
RUGGER PLAYOFFS

But first
FINAL STANDINGS

GROUP I (4 to playoffs)
Eng	5-1
Scar	5-1
Trin	5-1
UC	2-4
PHE	1-4-1
Law	1-4-1
Vic	1-5

GROUP II (3 to playoffs)
Eng II	5-0
Innis	3-1-1
SMC	3-2
Wyc	2-3
Trin B	1-3-1
Emm	0-5

And now that suspense is really almost palpable for goodness sakes — Trin beat Innis 11-0 on points by Waldin (his grandfather invented ponds) 3, Compton (2), Bosworth (his grandfather discovered fields) 3, and Richardson (3). His grandfather discovered

SOCCER

In which it is revealed that For (Zwart; this means "black" in Dutch; the Black Forestry, however, is in Germany. So what?) and Jr. Eng. (Miles) tied 1-1.

Archvillainmoriarty (Sepka, Summers, Maragna — as in "Take out the garbage, Miguel" "Maragna" 3; Trin B (Smith 3, Leslie) 4.

Saltzman scored two and Da Rosa (now you know how to say "Give me a rose" in Latin) too and the dogged Chien one and New Gnu beat Dents (Skelton, Ward), 5-2. The gnu is a small South African antelope related to the Ninth Battle of the Isonzo.

Knox (Pattison; cf. "pattison, pattison, baker's man, bake me a cake as fast as you can"; McGinnis, Brox (Brox?) and Wymann) 4; Jr. Eng. 0.

LACROSSE

For (Morden 2, Johnson-Brox ?) — O'Reilly 3, Glover, Griffin 3; Eng. (Wolfe the Dauntless Hero 3, Skully, Burt-nick-old word for "hippie", Walker) 6.

Munro had 3, Devonshire Howse 2, Gay and Parris singles as Dev beat Innis, 7-6. Innis scorers were Lobero, Kril (2), Okihiro (2), and Matsuba.

PHE (Feaver, Connelly 2, Crocker 2, Reid, Bullock) 7; Vic (Ryan 2, Birze, Clem 4) 7.

CONTEST

There were no answers to last week's Varsity Sports contest (Kp-R4! Qp-Q4 ?) and as a result the judges all died, lamented by all of a surfeit of chagrin. There will be a new contest and new judges next week, d. v. (that stands for "Deo Volente", author of songs like "Get Together" and "Dink's Blues"). Meanwhile, I think I should get more money. Why don't you all write letters to Paul Carson, Varsity Sports, suggesting some such thing? Much love.

Waterpolo Grads beat Blues 10-9

By ALEX LEROY

The Varsity Grads defeated this years Blues 10-9 in a close-fought match at Hart House Wednesday night.

The Grads capitalized on the Blues mistakes in the 2nd quarter to build up a 8-2 lead at the half. Toronto came back strong in the second half but time ran out on the Blues before they could get the equalizer.

Coach Kirk Thompson was disappointed with his team's performance. "They made too many mistakes and their play patterns were erratic."

Alex LeRoy led the Blues attack with 3 goals. Brian Barras and Hunter Milbourne fired 2 each and Terry Bryant and Mike Guinness completed the Varsity scoring.

Dave Breech paced the Grads attack with 3 goals. Chris McNaught, Gaye Stratton, and Zolten Urbanovites fired 2 each, and John Archibald got the other Grad goal.

The Blues now brace themselves for the first part of the OQAA Round Robin series in McMaster where they face Western and Guelph in a doubleheader on Saturday.

Mac and Waterloo are also entering teams in the West Division, while Varsity and McGill are the only teams in the East Division.

Of course, should Blues win both divisions simultaneously, they will technically play themselves for the championship.

"I wanted freedom — plus the opportunity to get out and meet people."

Before graduating with his B.A. degree from the University of Toronto in 1964, Bill Jackson decided that whatever line of work he chose, he didn't want to go behind a desk. "That sounded like work," he says, "but what I wanted was freedom — plus the opportunity to get out and meet people." Bill chose a career as a group benefits specialist, and he now says, "It hasn't really been work — it's been pure enjoyment. Of course, I'm not trying to make it sound easy, but I receive more than a regular salary to compensate for the extra effort I've put into it." Bill's "extra effort" has paid off in other ways, too: he moved quickly through supervisory positions and was recently named a sales management assistant in Halifax.

There's a challenge waiting for you, too, at London Life.

For further information consult your placement officer, or write to the Personnel Dept., Station 160A.

LONDON LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

London, Ontario

THOMAS PAUL

BASS

PRESENTED BY WOMEN'S MUSICAL CLUB
THURSOAY AFTERNOON
NOV. 20th, 2 P.M.
EATON AUDITORIUM

STUDENT TICKETS AT DOOR
WITH A.T.L. CARD 75¢
PHONE 225-0318

Hockey Opener Tonite

By JIM COWAN

Laurentian Voyageurs paddle their way in from the wilds of Sudbury tonight to take on a hurting Blues hockey team.

The Varsity squad lost its new captain, Brian St. John, earlier this week after he strained the ligaments in his right knee during a practice. St. John will have his leg in a cast for the next month and he'll miss at least the first five league games.

Goalie Adrian Watson is another doubtful starter. The allstar netminder is still limping after stopping a shot on the side of his foot last week.

Coach Tom Watt said he had intended to alternate Watson with rookie Grant Cole, but he may have to use Cole, who looked sharp in Blues' win over Loyola, again tonight.

Another newcomer, Dave McDowall, is hampered by a pulled groin muscle, but it's not serious enough to keep him out of action.

Voyageurs after playing Junior A in Sudbury, but eventually decided to come to Toronto.

Nick Holmes, a freshman at Scarborough, played Senior A with Barrie last year. Mike Cyr and George Nuppola have played Junior A hockey, while Robbie Ellis played Junior B in North York.

Tonight's game will give Varsity fans their first look at two new defensive pairs. Bill L'Heureux is working with oldcomer Bob Hamilton, who has returned to the team after a year in Europe. L'Heureux's partner from last year, the large Dave Field, is matched with rookie McDowall. Brent Swanick is Blues fifth defenseman.

Even using a fifth defenseman is a change for Watt. Last year only four rearguards dressed, and if one of them was penalized Ward Passi dropped back to kill the penalty.

This year, says Watt, "I don't have a Passi. But it makes life behind the bench less complicated. I always used to have to think about

BRIAN ST. JOHN

GRANT COLE

BOB MCGUINN

And finally, Paul Laurent was cut on the eye in last night's practice, but returned after being stitched up and should be alright for tonight.

Filling St. John's place at center will be Terry Peterman, who played on one wing with St. John and Bryan Tompson in Montreal. Len Burman will take Peterman's place on the wing.

Both Burman and Tompson scored against Loyola.

Filling gaps has not been a problem for Watt, and this year again he seems to have come up with a bumper crop of rookies to replace the veterans he lost last spring. There are eight newcomers with the team, but it's hardly accurate to call them rookies.

Bob McGuinn, for instance, starred as an undergraduate with the Big Red team of Cornell University. It was McGuinn, in fact, who two years ago scored the goal after six seconds of the first overtime period which sank Blues 1-0 in a game at Ithaca, N.Y. He also scored last year as Blues went down again, 7-2.

And the other "rookies", while they may not have intercollegiate experience, all come from Junior A or Junior B teams.

Grant Cole, a freshman at Erindale, played for the Junior B St. Michaels Buzzers last year. Dave McDowall, at Brock last year, played with St. Cathrines' Junior A team in '68-'69. Bill Buba almost ended up with the two steps ahead to see when Passi's regular turn was coming up. Now I just use the fifth defenseman."

Blues will have their work cut out for them in tonight's exhibition game as Laurentian tries to redeem their 6-3 loss to Varsity in the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union playoffs last spring. In two exhibition games last year, the teams tied 4-4 in Toronto and Blues won 7-5 in Sudbury.

The Voyageurs have already shown why they are rated in the top five teams again this year. They split a home-and-home series with perennially strong Waterloo, and lost to Canada's national team 8-2. Reports out of Sudbury, however, suggest that score should have been much closer.

With St. John out, tonight could be the first test of how deep Blues bench strength goes. Game time is 8 p.m.

BLUENOTES: So he won't have to explain any more than necessary, St. John wants it known that he was injured while trying to cut around the net on Monday. As he cut, another player fell against his knee, straining the ligaments, dislocating the knee cap and dislodging a bone chip. "Since it wasn't very serious a cast seemed better than surgery," he explained last night. . . . up-to-date stats show teams under Tom Watt have compiled an amazing 89-13-5 record over the past four years. . . . in league play they've had a monotonous 14-1-1 record for the past three seasons.

Where have all the sportsies gone?

Dave Burt, Tom Little, Walt Burgess, David Orenstein, Harry Walker, Peter White, Rob Herman, Mike Silver . . . Sports editor wants to see you . . . SOON!!!

Also Frances Flint, Nan Flindall, Jennifer Smith also anyone else interested in writing sports. Sports Office, 2nd Floor, 91 St. George, today and Sunday, or phone 923-4053.

Coming Events of

U of T FLYING CLUB

1. Open Meeting, Thurs. Nov. 20 7:30 P.M. Music Rm. Hart House Guest Speaker: M. H. Cunningham from Experimental Aircraft Ass. Topic: "Homebuilt Aircraft"

2. Last Breakfast Flight of 1969
Destinations: Open for suggestions
Time: Sat. Nov. 22, 10:00 A.M.
4 Pilots so far, room for 12 passengers

for Pilots and Nonpilots interested in flying

WHY NOT?
BUY FROM THE CHAR-BURG
PIZZERIA
CHEAPER - BETTER
FREE DELIVERY
536-0475
PARTY - STUDENT PRICES

R
E
N
T
A L
S

TYPEWRITERS
ADDING MACHINES
T.V.'S
STEREO TAPE RECORDERS
STEREO RECORD PLAYERS

698-2589
DANFORTH TYPEWRITER
2940 DANFORTH AVE
FREE DELIVERY

CUT YOUR CLEANING COSTS
by 2/3

at the
Church & Wellesley Self Serve
Dry Cleaner

OPEN EVERY DAY

Attendant on Duty

568 Church St.

924-6010

VARSIITY ARENA HOCKEY OPENER

- BLUES VS LAURENTIAN
TONIGHT AT 8:00 P.M.

Hockey books on sale at Athletic Office,
Hart House and at gate, $3.00 for 11 games.

Make sure of your book today.

ATTENTION ALL FLAPPERS THERE'S A CHARLSTON CONTEST

EVERY MONDAY NIGHT AT THE SPEAKEASY
WINNER RECEIVES PLANE FARE TO NEW YORK

HEAR TDBY LARK
COME ON AND JOIN IN THE FUN
"FREE ADMITTANCE FOR DDLLS EVERY MONDAY"
AND DON'T FORGET
WE DO OUR "THING" EVERY FRIDAY
FROM 4 TO 7 P.M.
EVERYTHING 1/2 PRICE
GET YOUR FREE PASSES
FROM OUR MAN WITH THE GLASSES

"YE SPEAKEASY"

THE GREATEST

JUST CLIMB THE STAIRS - NO PASSWORD NEEDED
529 BLOOR ST. W. 512-4292
(UPSTAIRS)

VICTORY IN VIETNAM?

9 years

860,000 military dead

260,000,000,000 dollars spent

Support the moratorium

10:00-2:00 p.m. • TODAY • Convocation Hall

1:00 p.m. • TOMORROW • Queen's Park

Don River gets grand send-off in mock funeral

By MARY KATE ROWAN

The Don River was officially pronounced dead yesterday and 200 mourners couldn't keep the broad grins off their faces.

Sponsored by U of T's Pollution Probe, an anti-pollution organization sparked last year by a series of Varsity articles, the funeral was quite an event.

Invitations announcing "the untimely passing of the Don River" asked all the "grief-stricken parties to weep and gnash their teeth".

The group, sporting black crepe paper armbands, met at Convocation Hall under the watchful eye of U of T police.

The cavalcade of fifty cars made its way through Cabagetown to the banks of the deceased (just north of the Blood viaduct).

Probe almost had a hearse. Actually the green Volkswagen bus looked as if it had seen better days, delivering vegetables to the St. Lawrence market.

MRS. SIMCOE

At the funeral site, kneeling before an orange and black sign which read R.I.P. Don River, a black clad Mrs. Simcoe (Meridith Ware, II Vic) wailed "Weep my brethren, weep for me, shed tears for the Don."

The original Mrs. Simcoe, wife of the first lieutenant governor of Upper Canada, John Graves Simcoe, often sketched the Don. The sketches show a pleasant valley with large trees and clear water.

As Miss Ware read from Mrs. Simcoe's diary, she wiped her eyes and told the smiling group how people used to swim in the river and even drink the water.

Martin Daly (SGS) quoted a popular magazine of 1871 which described the Don Val-

continued on p. 3

Lady Simcoe and her lover grieve at passing of Don River

varsity

VOLUME 9 — NO 24

November 17, 1969

TORONTO

inside
the Moratorium
● page 3 and centre

Report recommends private financing of student loans

By BRIAN JOHNSON

The method of financing higher education in Ontario will change from public taxation to private investment, if the Provincial Government accepts the recommendations of a recent report from U of T. The report, prepared by Professors Gail Cook and David Stager, comes from the U of T's Institute of Quantitative Analysis of Social and Economic Policy, headed by Prof. Richard Judy.

The Provincial Government's Department of University Affairs commissioned the report, which was jointly financed by the DUA and a Ford Foundation grant to the U of T.

The Foundation grant was slated for the study of "Efficient Resource Allocation in Higher Education."

The report suggests the cost of education can be re-allocated from the public (taxation) sector to the private investment sector, if the government decides too much of its tax revenue is going to education.

INCOME RELATED LOANS

The researchers set up a model of an "income-related" loan system that would allow students to pay their tuition fees — whether they remain the same or are raised to cover the complete cost of education.

After examining the history of Student Aid in Ontario, the present OSAP scheme, the attitudes of students, and the possible alternatives, the report recommends that:

- the Ontario Government set up an investment agency to issue bonds to private investors;

- "academically qualified" students be allowed to take out loans from the agency to cover the full cost of their tuition fees and living expenses — either a living allowance, or a stipend to match estimated foregone earnings.

- after leaving university, students repay their loans with interest compounded annually by paying the agency a fixed percentage of their annual income.

(When a student takes out a loan, a repayment rate is fixed. "For married women not participating in the labour force", an income level is set to determine the repayment rate.)

- the scheme "perhaps augmented by a program of grants related to need and allocated according to a strictly administered means test."

CORSAP-EOB

The report calls the new loan scheme a "contingent repayment program for student financial assistance" (CORSAP).

The older and more familiar name for CORSAP is the Educational Opportunity Bank (EOB) — the name of a similar proposal made in 1967 by the Panel on Educational Innovation, an advisory committee to the U.S. Government.

The idea of replacing OSAP with some sort of EOB has been kicking around the Department of University Affairs for quite a while.

During the summer, the DUA's Committee on Student Awards, chaired by Dr. Douglas Wright, was looking for such a plan.

Now it will seriously consider the CORSAP proposal.

Prof. A. R. Dobell, who directed the research, concluded from the findings that:

- the cost of post-secondary education is rising at rates "not likely to be sustainable in light of other demands on government resources;

- summer employment prospects are unlikely to improve as a source of private financing of university costs, and summer employment is in any case an uneconomic method for meeting such costs";

- "As access to post-secondary education extends to lower income groups parental contributions become less likely as a source of finance to meet educational costs."

A SOCIAL CONTRACT

He says the report advocates "the evolution of a social contract under which those drawing when young, as students, upon the resources of all the community recognize their specific obligation to replenish, according to their ability, a student assistance fund in the future.

"In this way coming generations may, in their turn benefit from the opportunity of an education without regard to their present resources, or the constraints of income and wealth inherited from their past, and without visiting on those least able to pay, the burden of supporting those best able to pay."

The research team used computer simulations to create models of related-financing.

The simulations were based on a theory of "cohorts" — "that the community consists of a complex layering of successive cohorts or generations, all moving through time together, and each engaged in a variety of transfers with the other, and in programs which redistribute income from one to the other."

NEXT COHORT

By paying into the investment agency after he leaves university, the student pays for his own education and refurbishes the initial capital outlay so that more loans can be made to the next "cohort" of students.

The rate of repayment is a variable that the research group tested in the simulations. But the report does not suggest any specific rate in its recommendations.

Free University of Toronto

These courses are going, end will continue each week. For information call the resource person or Maggie Bizzell, SAC Office 923-3490

Mysticism and Occultism: Thursday 5:00, Innis College, Lounge above Bruce Cuen, 461-0373

Creative Communications: Wednesday 5:00, Innis College 1, Lounge above Lawrence Bedder, 923-999B

Communal Living: Advisory Bureau, Thursday 7:30 Bob Bruning, 742-9307

Third World Group Wednesday 4: 6, International Students Centre Graham Hicks, c/o SAC Office

Marxist Economics: call John Foster (781-3485) for time and place

Poetry of Physics: Wednesday 7:30, Advisory Bureau Bob Logan, 783-7779

Seminar on the Family: Tuesday, November 18, 7:30, Advisory Bureau Rose Marie Harrop

Cooking: 79 Brunswick Ave Steve Halpern, 925-8576

Communism: Innis College II, Rm 205, Thurs, 5-6 Brian Mossop 425-4589

Computers: call Manny Gordon for time and place 782-9488

Proposed courses — if interested please call Maggie Bizzell

Bibles as Revolutionary Document

Conversational Yiddish

Libertarian Psychiatry

Art

Anarchism and Communism

Non-Authoritarian Medicine

The Nuclear Hexagram! A new way into I Ching

History Counter Course

Education Research

Labour History — What it is, what it should be

T-Groups

A SERVICE FOR YOU

An experienced Christian Scientist who is working with college students in the area is available to talk with you. If this LOCAL ASSISTANT can be of help to you in Christian Science, you are most welcome to contact:

MR. AND MRS. McCLELLAN

ON THIRD TUESDAYS OF EACH MONTH

4 P.M. TO 7 P.M.

IN THE CHAPLAIN'S OFFICE

HART HOUSE

NOVEMBER 18, DECEMBER 16, JANUARY 20, FEBRUARY 17

COURSE EVALUATIONS

Tues. Nov. 18, 1 P.M. 1085 S S

All course union people, professional societies, faculty and others cordially invited.

This is an absolute must for groups wanting to do evaluations before Christmas.

STUDENTS IN RESIDENCE AND STUDENT TENANTS!

Are you satisfied with the place you live in? If not, join the

SAC WORKING GROUP ON RESIDENCES AND TENANTS' ORGANIZATION

This group will be the focus for SAC activity and policy on existing student housing. If you have any specialised knowledge you can contribute, or if you are simply concerned about your residential environment, then you can help us and maybe we can help you.

First meeting: TUESDAY 1 PM — SAC OFFICE

Future meetings will be listed in Here and Now. If you want any information or want to get in touch with us, call Tony Usher, 653-2296, or leave your name, etc. at the SAC office.

THE BALL

HART HOUSE NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL
FULL STEAK MIDNIGHT DINNER

CHAMPAGNE BAR

Dancing To JIMMY MACDONALD

THE MAGIC CYCLE

ALLAN WOOD QUARTET

Special Honky-Tonk Pianist:

"ALEX RAGTIME READ"

in the Arbor Room - FREE Drinks

GALA CELEBRATIONS AT MIDNIGHT

All in the romantic setting of Hart House
Tickets $17/couple — Available NOW
Hall Porter & Undergraduate Office
Reserve NOW — Purchase EARLY

3,000 protest Vietnam in Toronto's Moratorium

By LAURA KELLY

A protest march of about 3,000 wound through downtown Toronto Saturday to City Hall and the American Consulate chanting "Peace Now" and "Withdraw U.S. Troops."

The demonstrators paraded in ten contingents representing divergent political, labor, and student groups.

The few onlookers offered little harassment as the line filed over College St. and down Bay St. Several times the march stopped to permit traffic to flow past.

Each group chanted its own slogans. "Dare to struggle, dare to win," the students yelled. Cries of "Public Transport" went up as the march passed Elgin Motors.

The march rambled onto Nathan Phillips Square, and the City Hall windows mirrored the milling crowd and the red flags of the New Left Caucus.

Skaters stopped to watch as organizers tried to steady the rally and start the speeches.

MARCH SPLITS

Approximately one-third of the marchers left the City Hall square to join the Union of American Exiles demonstrating in front of the American Consulate.

Carrying signs with slogans attacking U.S. imperialism, the demonstrators walked slowly back and forth. The Edmund Burke Society stood outside the picketing line and heckled.

"Reds out, Reds out," the generally older but incensed crowd of Burkers yelled.

"If they burn the Canadian flag, we'll burn their flag," one shouted.

"Burn them," added his companion.

In the space between the anti-war protesters and the Edmund Burke Society a young, bearded man talked calmly to an older man.

"But the Communists don't go in and clean up the country after they bomb it," the older man insisted.

ROCK BAND

The picketers continued quietly for an hour until the people shifted back to Nathan Phillips Square. The speeches had ended and a rock band came on.

A number of protesters joined bands and started a snake dance through the crowd. A gallery of people stood on the upper deck of City Hall, watching and pointing.

Several scuffles started and an angry counter-demonstrator yelled obscenities and started throwing punches.

A mounted policeman grabbed him by the coat collar and bawled him into the City Hall.

"You pigs," a demonstrator screamed. The cop nodded calmly.

Several times the mounted police directed the crowd away from City Hall and onto the centre of the square.

A New Left Caucus member Dennis Corcoran was extricated from a fist fight and arrested.

The crowd polarized, and the green-beribboned Burke Society members screamed "Reds out," and the anti-war marchers chanted "Burkers are violent." Each group called the other murderers.

Police walked through the crowds and stood between the two factions until the people dispersed.

It was a very cold day.

Don River dies

cont'd from page 1

ly as "one spot in the vicinity of Muddy York which all visitors should make a part of their visit".

As they listened to the tales of the Don that used to be, the mourners stood in the mud, asphalt and concrete blocks of the site (the actual site described by Mrs. Simcoe in her diary).

Simon Greed (actually U of T grad Tony Barrett) represented big bad industry. Dressed in a formal black coat and wearing a large dollar sign in his top hat he talked with a mock southern, big businessman's accent.

THAT'S PROGRESS

"Use, use, that's what nature's for, use it," he drawled.

"That's progress; 200 years ago nobody was using the Don except fish."

The group responded by tossing fruit and vegetables at Mr. Greed.

As an award to industry "for keeping rivers green and the country-side brown" Pollution Probe presented Mr.

Greed with a pie in the face.

And the mourners booed and hissed, all to the fanfare of two tubas.

Rev. J.S. Cunningham, Hart House chaplain, refused to give a eulogy. Instead, he drank "a glass of pure spring water, just as pure as the Don used to be." The mourners cheered and clapped.

To help drown their sorrows the mourners sang hymns, such as, (to the tune "When the Saints come Marching In"):

Ob, when the sludge comes floating down
Ob, when the sludge comes floating down
I don' wanna be in the river
When the sludge comes floating down.

MEMORIAL UNVEILED TODAY

As some mourners signed a Remembrance Book, others trod down to the muddy Don for one last short look.

Rob Mills (IV Vic) termed the funeral "a sort of a joke". But he did comment that pollution itself is a serious matter.

Daly said that the maximum concentration of harm-

Simon Greed scoffs at funeral of Don River

photo by Don Andrews and Spencer Higgins

ful bacteria in the Don is 25 times the safe level. Only one of 18 samples taken by the Ontario Water Resources Commission has been classified as safe.

Mills urges all those concerned about pollution to write letters and make telephone calls to both the government and the companies responsible for pollution.

Today, at 1 p.m., Probe will unveil "a lovely piece of modern sculpture" at Queens Park, in a memorial service for the Don.

Probe says the service will be more serious in tone than yesterday's funeral.

photo by Gary Wieland

George Kuprejanov, a Canadian Chess Master, played at Hart House last Monday night in a simul against a few brave ones who hoped to beat him. Their hopes were frustrated since only one player, Bob Bowerman, managed to win. Of the other nine participants two were able to force a draw against the master, and the rest went home beaten.

Come in from the edge and find out what's happening at the centre you stand in the UNIVERSITY BOOKROOM long enough you'll meet all of your best friends.

If

Buy a student—best investment you can make

The latest report from Professor Richard Judy's Institute for the Quantitative Analysis of Social and Economic Policy comes as no surprise.

The report (see page one) is a revamped version of the Educational Opportunity Bank — a scheme whereby private investors, instead of taxpayers, would invest in the financing of higher education.

The financing of higher education has been a political thorn in the side of the Ontario Government for quite a few years.

As our advanced technology demanded more trained manpower, and more skilled research, the economy demanded more universities with greater enrolments and larger facilities.

As university construction boomed, education ate up a continually greater section of the tax-dollar.

But the factory-system of education allows the student to ask fewer questions. He is processed to reproduce his own labour-power.

As students started to ask questions about their role in the university, and the university's role in society, something happened called the student movement.

Rebellious students started making themselves visible. Demonstrations. Sit-ins. Non-negotiable demands on the power-structure.

That's embarrassing to a government: while the tax-paying electorate watches it pour a fortune into universities, students reject the "gift".

"If those damn-students don't appreciate the taxpayer's generosity, we'll stop paying for their education," public starts murmuring against government.

At the same time, the price-wage spiral of inflation demands that the government stop spending in certain areas.

The government is forced to make cuts in areas that won't affect the corporate economy. Capital grants to universities are cut slightly but still comprise 30 per cent of the provincial budget. Student aid makes up only one per cent.

A majority of taxpayers are paying for the education of the upper-middle class. And the miniscule aid program offers no help.

Somehow the government must respond to that public pressure and that financial squeeze without slowing down the university business. That would slow down the economy and bite into the corporations that receive direct economic benefit from the universities.

FACT: Higher education is an industry which is becoming more and more geared to a corporate economy, a market economy.

FACT: The capital outlay that finances the industry is not an integral part of the market economy.

FACT: Only a very small part of the initial cost of education is privately financed: tuition fees which the student pays through summer earnings. Corporations make profit from that sector.

FACT: The Ontario Government asked employers to INVEST IN A STUDENT THIS SUMMER. But there weren't enough jobs. It didn't work.

IDEA: Why not shift all of the financing of higher education over to the private sector so that corporations may invest directly in students?

Human capital is the best investment: as the student progresses through university he multiplies his future labour power for the corporate economy. And when he leaves university, he repays the loan plus interest. As his labour power creates profits for the capitalist, his income becomes coupons for the capitalist's clipping-file.

The U of T study, prepared by Professors David Stager and Gail Cook, provides the government with the technical vehicle to "re-allocate" financing more efficiently.

It's not co-incidental that the Ford Foundation — one of the greatest owners of multi-national capital — helped finance the report.

The original proposal for an income-related loan plan came from Milton Friedman 15 years ago. He was Barry Goldwater's economist.

Friedman said, "There is clearly here an imperfection in the (capital) market that has led to under-investment in human capital..."

Economists realized that education could be a key area for investment in human capital.

Ironically, the Institute's report itself describes the development of the same economic motives that the Ontario government responded to in commissioning the report:

"The 1960's have brought what one prominent economist has called 'the human investment revolution in economic thought'. The emphasis has shifted from public support of the consumption aspects of college education ('they were the best four years of my life') to an emphasis on the investment aspect, the formation of human capital and the high rates of return to this investment, both for society and the individual."

The Institute's report is typical "value-free" technical research that fills out the government's intentions and assumptions.

The entrepreneurs of research are supplying the foundation for the new multiversity of entrepreneurs.

And the report itself does not answer the basic problems of access to higher education:

A loan system would put too much financial pressure on the lower class student who could not risk the loan. The class nature of enrolment would not be broken down: it would be strengthened.

- Education would meet the needs of the community even less than it does today; the community would lose even their nominal control of education; education would appear to benefit only the individuals attending and would actually benefit the corporations;

- The plan does not deal with the basic class barriers to education which are contingent on an unequal income and taxation scale and environmental inequalities.

- The report ignores the conclusions of the earlier report (Aid and Access) prepared by students in the same Institute — that any new aid program must consist of grants, not loans, and that the taxation structure must be totally revamped.

- The loan scheme would just mystify the real problems of unemployment and inflation by taking students off the summer labour market.

- The scheme also assumes that most married women will stay off the labour market.

The name of the game is exploitation.

If the Department of University Affairs implements the Institute's report, education will cease to be any kind of publicly-owned resource.

It will become a privately owned commodity. And you'll be for sale.

the varsity

TORONTO

Editor
 Review Editor
 Associate Review Editor
 News Editors
 City Editors
 Features Editor
 Sports Editor
 Design
 CUP Editor
 Photo Editor
 Executive Assistant
 Advertising Manager
 Editorial Offices
 Editorial Phone
 Advertising Office

Brian Johnson
 Larry Hagan
 Jack McCarthy
 News Editors
 Geoff Meggie
 Louis Eschman
 Noel Stieckly
 Mary Kate Rowan
 Paul Carson 923-4053
 Dave Farris
 Barbara Bruberman
 Sue Risher
 Mark Rubin
 Nancy Redford
 Carol Cooper 923 8179
 91 St. George 2nd floor
 923 9741 923 8742
 91 St. George 1st floor

The Varsity is a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Privately Web Offset Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

CUG

without discussion the report will die

by ART McILWAIN

Art McIlwain, a 4th year Engineering Student is President of the Engineering Society

There is a considerable amount of analysis and evaluation going on in the University today. It centers around the central purpose of the institution as an educator of people, and it seeks to determine how the institution can better fill that role.

Analysis put forth by both "radicals" and "moderates" within the University indicates that the way the University has come to run its affairs, and the way it has come to interact with its membership... students and academic staff alike, mitigates against real educative learning taking place within it.

It was in this atmosphere of reasoned analysis and academic soul-searching that the Commission on the Government of the University was established. The Commission went to great lengths to make itself a focus for the introspection the University is undergoing, and to leave out little in its analysis of the needs that the institution will feel in the coming years.

The CUG report is a reflection of the success of that venture. It sets out in minute detail a system for running the affairs of the University in a manner which will allow it to respond to the needs of its membership. It argues for the inclusion of all segments of the University Community in the decision making bodies of the University.

As was expected, the report is being attacked by the radicals because it is too conservative and by the conservatives because it is too liberal. But it is really unfortunate that these arguments are not taking place in the open.

The radicals attack it in The Varsity and the conservatives attack it in closed committee rooms. Both sides engage in the monologue.

And if somebody doesn't pretty soon provide a forum for public discussion of the document, it will die and the ideas it contains will die with it.

Perhaps the most damaging arguments raised so far have to do with the alleged lack of validity of universal involvement in decision making bodies. CUG supports this universal involvement. The radicals and the conservatives reject it.

The conservatives sit behind their closed doors and mutter about "instant wisdom" and say that the student is an inferior being who doesn't really know what he wants.

The radical analysts say that as soon as you get universal involvement in a decision making body the power of that body vanishes. That the Chairman or some other power hungry ego-tripper absconds with it and slinks off into the night.

It seems to me that both these positions rather obviously miss the point.

If we accept that the primary purpose of the university is to be a place where people can learn, and if we accept that the university may have evolved to a point where it must adapt its thinking and its structures or risk losing its capacity to be a truly educative community, then a couple of things emerge.

One of them concerns education. It seems clear from a lot of the writing that has been done on education that too, and he is frightened. He has become so accustomed to thinking of himself as knowing what is best for his wayward flock of students that he fears their participation. It would rob him of the God-like respect he has come to expect.

And that must be pretty frightening.

The radical critic, on the other hand, points to past attempts in this direction and says that the university is still the same. This indicates to him that participative structures can have little effect on learning and should therefore not even be attempted. To me this is pretty simplistic.

The hard truth of the matter is that no structure in and of itself possesses the capacity to modify the learning ex-

photo by hugh crymble

McIlwain, shown here at a Convocation Hall debate on CUG, wants more discussion of the CUG report.

real learning is not a passive experience. It only takes place in response to the needs people feel around them (whether those be connected with jobs, with social justice, or just degrees.) And even then it can't be just a passive thing.

If we relate this to the University as a decision making complex, one dominant principle emerges.

If educative learning is to take place in the University, the decisions it takes on all manner of things must be taken with full knowledge of the needs of its members.

It seems to me that meeting this goal would be the major effect of implementation of the CUG report.

The conservative thinks so experience at the University. The people within the University must do that themselves.

The fact that Mr. Drache does not find people asking what he calls the class question of knowledge is not a sufficient basis for attacking universal participation in decision-making.

The system proposed by CUG is a tool, not a magic charm. It will only allow people to ask those questions if they want to ask them. And it will only allow people to have educative learning taking place at the University if they want it to take place there.

What makes the CUG report and the very real possibility of its implementation so exciting is the high probability that they do.

Column and a half

Whirlpools in One Dimension

The majority of students at the University of Toronto don't care...

An English professor at Victoria College teaches students to count footnotes.

Meanwhile the Quebecois count the few remaining years of their survival.

Society prepares their upper-middle class children for this university, and their lower-class children for technical schools and low-paying jobs... and unemployment.

The U of T has a luxurious faculty club.

It has no student-centre.

Gus Abols is President of the SAC.

Bob Barkwell is Vice-President.

Our air is unbreathable; our waters undrinkable — our only free commodities.

Indian reservations are a reflection of the serene, trouble angry, desolate, earthly face of the Canadian Indian, who has never recovered from the First Colonization.

Twenty-nine per cent of Canada's population is below the poverty line according to a recent study by the Economic Council of Canada — our affluent society.

Quebec is a police state.

Decisions affecting each individual in our country are made, not by our elected representatives, rather by large U.S. corporations motivated by the drive to maximize profits.

We live in a pseudo-democracy; worse we are an extension of America, mother pie, apple hood, baseball and violence.

A Biafran is right now dying of starvation, a bag of bones and wrinkled flesh.

Nigeria is armed by Britain.

Protestants are fighting Catholics, Jews are fighting Moslems, and Moslems are fighting Hindus.

This is 1969.

California is in a state of civil war, a permanent generation-morality-gap.

California grapes are still being sold and bought.

An A-bomb must be tested regardless of evil consequences to alien peoples... an A-bomb must be tested... mark of an advancing technology, and of an I'm-tough-see-what-I-got attitude.

Chicago, summer of 1968, was not a bad dream or a Communist plot — it was one of many spontaneous outbursts in urban ghettos by repressed angry people, it was Mailer's troops against... it was Ginsberg's OM emitted from a blood-filled mouth... it was the totalitarian Mayor Daly showing the world about Law and Order.

Capitalism is based on false competition between a few multi-national corporations. How we are going to fight poverty and work towards total economic equality within such a system neither Smith nor Keynes nor anyone else knew. The whole problem is ABSURD. The solution is simple.

Two men walked on the moon... another died with a foreign heart in his breast.

The United States is North America will have its ABM defence system. Russia will have theirs. And if there is a war we'll all be wiped out anyway.

Students at R.M.C. in Kingston are warned against the yellow man: if a student at drill is found with a dirty rifle, he is asked how he expects to kill a yellow man coming over the hill if his rifle is dirty. This fear of the omnipotent yellow bogey man is pounded into the cadets at every opportunity. Kingston is in Ontario, Canada and it is our own Canadian Armed Forces that are training these cadets.

The mind of Everyman is not together; rather within it lies the never-ever land: a one-dimensional whirlpool of anachronistic absurdities.

"One small ball for man, one major holocaust for mankind."

... But most students at the University of Toronto just don't give a damn. They know they hate hysteria, anarchists, socialists, radicals, revolutionaries, Maoists, Guevaristas, hippies, humanists; anyone that gives a damn and tries to do something about it. You see it is easier to watch T.V. in a suburban setting, secure in the knowledge that one's future is basically stable, and to pretend to be happy, and not to get too involved with what one sees. The capitalized deity 'Y' is unfortunately the end all for too many people.

— john gladki

HART HOUSE
AMATEUR RADIO CLUB
VE3UOT

OPEN MEETING
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19
7:30 P.M. DEBATES ROOM

HART HOUSE GLEE CLUB WELCOMES NEW MEMBERS

PROPOSED TOUR IN MAY
- 20 NEW MEMBERS WELCOME

MEET US THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 20th
MUSIC ROOM, HART HOUSE, 5:30 P.M.

Not a hoax!

Anti-womanism dies at HH Great Hall

The Hart House Board of Stewards has decided that women will be allowed to eat in the Hart House Great Hall.

Until last Wednesday, only men whose "dress was in keeping with the dignity of Hart House" were allowed to dine in the dimly-lit, oak-paneled hall for lunch and dinner. There are no formal dress regulations.

Carmen Guild, assistant to Hart House Warden E.A. Wilkinson, and a member of the Board of Stewards, said the decision to admit women would hold at least until Christmas, when it could be reviewed.

"These things come up from time to time, as the time is appropriate," he said.

One condition of the deed granting Hart House to the university was that women would not be allowed to use its facilities, which include a library, several reading rooms and two music rooms. But recently changes have been made allowing women into the Arbor Room, Tuck Shop, debates and concerts.

A committee has been set up to consider the future use of Hart House and its recommendations could open the house further.

Lunch is served in the Great Hall from 11:45 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. and dinner 4:45 to 6:30 p.m. Service is cafeteria style.

Moratorium group blockades trains

LACOLLE, QUE (CUP) — Montreal students blockaded two CNR freight trains scheduled to cross the border Friday delaying them a total of three hours.

The trains were blocked to protest Canada's complicity in supplying arms used by the Americans in the Vietnam war.

"If even one screw destined for this purpose were on one of those freight trains," said McGill moratorium chairman Steve Wall, "and if they were delayed by the blockade just long enough to miss the factories' deadlines, then a number of Vietnamese lives could be saved.

"If even one screw destined for this purpose were on one of those freight trains," said McGill moratorium chairman Steve Wall, "and if they were delayed by the blockade just long enough to miss the factories' deadlines, then a number of Vietnamese lives could be saved.

"Thus the blockade could have concrete as well as symbolic repercussions."

The 120 students from McGill and other Montreal schools and universities started out for the border crossing at noon Friday in three busses.

Two of the buses stopped at Lacolle, Quebec, near the Vermont and New York state borders, to block the CN tracks. A third bus continued on to Washington for the moratorium demonstrations there.

Half the group blockaded the rail line, while the other half walked to meet the oncoming train. Using walkie-talkies, the second group reported the train was shunting to change tracks. Although the students did not reach the train in time to block it, it was delayed an hour.

A second train, 65 cars long, was sandwiched between two groups of demonstrators for two hours.

Two RCMP cars followed the buses from McGill to the border, but did not interfere. The buses were stopped by Quebec Provincial Police for a 15-minute check, then released. Police did not intervene during the demonstrations.

Seminar to discuss Expressway

The Spadina Expressway — will it come down or will it be stopped?

That's the topic at today's session on city election issues sponsored by the SAC Metro election committee.

A.C. Finklestein from the Spadina businessmen's Association will be on hand along with Economics Prof. David Nowlan and Sociology Prof. Alan Powell.

Prof. Nowlan is about to release a research paper on the Spadina artery while Prof. Powell teaches a course on the Expressway at Erindale.

Today's seminar will get under way at 1 p.m. in Room 2106 Sidney Smith Hall.

INDIAN ORAMA GROUP

PRESENTS

LABANAKTA

SAT. NOV 29 7 P.M.

BICKFORD PARK HIGH SCHOOL AUDITORIUM
(Bloor and Christie)

Think Ahead

Think banking.

More than a job.
A management career.
Of challenge. Decision.
Commitment.
With today's bank.
Find out the facts.
Interviews . . .

Tues., Wed.
Nov. 25, 26

Consult your placement office for further information.

Bank of Montreal

Canada's First Bank

1 | S | H | R | A | U | P | E | R
T | H | E

DANCE
2 BANDS

2 | C | A | T | A | L | I | S | T
T | H | E

8:30 SAT. NOV. 22
AT NEW COLLEGE (WETMORE HALL)
CHICKS $1 CHUCKS $1.50 GOOSSES $3

B and W Band defies SAC to enter beauty contest

The Blue and White Band has announced that, despite a recent SAC motion, it will enter a competitor in the Miss College Bowl contest.

The SAC motion, moved by Ceta Ramkhalawansingh (II New) and passed overwhelmingly, disappointed strongly of beauty queen contests in any form and requested that participation in such practices be discontinued by the Blue and White Society.

Dale Wilson (IV Mus), leader of the Blue and White Band called SAC "a bunch of moralists who decide things, neglecting the campus." He said the band carried out a survey of students around campus and found that students generally wanted an entrant in the contest.

There are three reasons why

U of T should be represented in this contest, said Wilson: Toronto is the host of the College Bowl, it is a worthy cause, and the contest is informal — there is no lineup of contestants.

Wilson said that the girl chosen by the Blue and White Band is not a representative of U of T. "She's representative of the Blue and White Band who will be U of T's representative at the game," he explained.

Wilson, who was a SAC member for two years, said he realizes the principle involved in the SAC motion. But he added that in this case one can overlook principles.

"Almost every university in Ontario plus McGill and Manitoba are sending representatives," he said. "They don't feel like SAC does. We'd be letting them down if we didn't send a representative."

The girl chosen by the Blue and White Band is 21-year-old Sheila Willson, (III Vic).

Asked how she felt about the contest Miss Willson said she didn't feel like a Miss anything. Rather, she said, she felt that she was representing the students of U of T just like anyone else, male or female, represents U of T at different functions.

Miss Ramkhalawansingh said SAC cannot do anything to stop the Blue and White Band from entering anyone in the contest.

"Beauty contests," she said, "create false assumption of human values and are highly elitist, competitive and dehumanizing in nature."

Sheila Willson

photo by mark rubin

Bomb threat highlights Moratorium Day at U of T

JIM KARAMITANIS

The threat of a bomb hidden in Convocation Hall provided the only unexpected incident during last Friday's Moratorium Day proceedings. Other than the Moratorium was a Moratedium.

Cliches and speakers were rampant as some one thousand students turned up to protest the war in Viet Nam. About a dozen people spoke and several entertainers diverted the spectators.

Prof. Elliot Rose of the History Department and Chairman of the Faculty Committee on Viet Nam spoke first. He strongly denounced Canada's complicity in the war, saying Canadians "are junior partners in imperialism" and "the guilt and shame of the war is our guilt and shame."

He charged that the International Control Commission is "a military affair" and called Canadian diplomat Chester Ronning and his associates "stooges" of the U.S. who send their information straight to Washington.

At this point the bomb threat was announced and everyone was asked to evacuate the building. No one took the threat seriously and one student suggested that everyone look under the seats to save the police a great deal of trouble.

Ellie Kirzner of the Young Socialists commented that "someone is trying to wreck this rally."

HALL CHECKED

The demonstrators gathered outside Convocation Hall and shivered for some forty minutes until the hall was checked.

Outside there were more speeches delivering the same message. Mike Nevin of the Canadian Party of Labor spoke of Viet Nam as an "imperialistic kind of war". But his hand-me-down style provoked laughter and his speech was generally not well received.

By the time Alice Klein of the Young Socialists finished reading a tirade against U.S. and Canadian imperialism morale had sunk pretty low. Spirits rose tremendously when everyone started jumping up and down and shouting "Withdraw U.S. troops."

More speakers followed. Harry Kopyto was a slight exception for style if not for content. "What we are doing here is helping society. This is real education" he said.

Back in the hall Prof. William Berman of the History Department delivered the longest and perhaps best speech of the day. Prof. Berman, an American citizen, called the war the "most stupid and evil adventure in American History." The "Pax Americana is Pax Americana" he said, and the war is waged by men "who have no sense of history and no humanity."

Eaton's pays $100,000 price tag

Santa wows 500,000

Santa Claus, universal present giver and good guy, was in Toronto over the weekend to play the leading role in the annual Santa Claus parade.

More than 500,000 people lined Yonge and Dupont streets Saturday morning to greet Mr. Claus and his staff.

Mr. Claus, who was available for comment after the parade, said he has been working out daily practicing roof scaling and chimney climbing in preparation for Christmas eve.

"Soon I'll be working out twice and eventually three times a day during the last week," he added. There is no truth to the rumor that Mr. Claus wasn't feeling up to it this year.

Official reindeer trainer, Jim

Laing said that the "reindeer have been undergoing a rigorous physical training program since early September." He said that he and Mr. Claus would be picking a final team of reindeer between now and the first of December.

Reindeer colisthenics consist of silent roofhopping and long distance jogging.

A new type of sled runner has been tested lately and will most likely be used on the sled this year. The new runner is made of anti-single-wear materials and is guaranteed for 24,000 miles or 24 hours (which ever comes first).

Everyone involved in the parade felt that this year's Christmas would be a success.

The University of Toronto Engineering Society

Proudly Presents

CANNON BALL

a gala extravaganza with 6 Great Bands a folksinger or two and the LGMB

in

HART HOUSE FRI. NOV. 28

tickets $4.00 at the SAC office, Eng. Stores and your engineering class rep.

"IF HE DOESN'T ASK YOU TO THIS ONE GIRLS, HE JUST DOESN'T CARE"

MORATORIUM DAY

toronto

to nov. 15

photos by mark rubin

The Centre for the Study of Drama
presents

IN THE BEGINNING

the first play in the cycle

Back to Methuselah

by George Bernard Shaw
directed by Robert Gill

A SANTA CLAUS MASQUE

by e. e. cummings
directed by Sheldon Clark
Studio Theatre
4 Glen Morris

November 18, 19, 20, 21, 22
8:30 p.m.
admission free

N.C. DRAMA GUILD PRESENTS
JEAN ANOUILH
MEDEA

DIRECTED BY ALEXANDRA MERCET
NOV. 20 & 21
NEW COLLEGE WILSON HALL
8:30 P.M.

NO EXAMS ON PASSOVER

"Every person an equal member of the community"

IF YOU OBJECT TO EXAMINATIONS BEING SCHEDULED ON PASSOVER

WRITE IN "PASSOVER"

on the form when you confirm courses this month

Hillel Foundation 923-7837 For Information

There is

MORE VARIETY and MORE OPPORTUNITY in Chartered Accountancy today than in almost any other avenue of endeavour

If you are graduating in Arts, Science, Business and would like to discuss this statement, members of our firm will be on your campus on Tuesday, November 18 and Wednesday, November 19 to answer your questions.

If by chance you are unable to make an appointment at this particular time, get in touch with us direct by calling Mr. Warren Labrie, or the partner in charge of our Toronto Office, at (416) 366-6521.

TOUCHE ROSS & CO.
CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Halifax • Saint John • Quebec • Montreal • Ottawa • Toronto •
Hamilton • Kitchener • London • Winnipeg • Regina • Saskatoon • North Battleford • Calgary • Edmonton • Vancouver •
Victoria • Nassau and Freeport, Bahama Islands

Hillel fights exams on Passover

Three years ago, Jewish students at U of T, in order not to violate their religious principles, spent a part of Passover locked up in Hillel House and wrote two of their final examinations from 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.

The Hillel Organization is presently carrying on a campaign to make sure that such a situation will not occur again this spring.

Because any type of work, including writing, is strictly forbidden on the first and last two days of Passover (this year April 21, 22, 27 and 28), Jewish students say scheduling exams on that holiday would prevent their attendance.

Such a move would also cause Jewish students to miss celebrating the "Seder", a home service which requires the presence and active participation of each member of the family.

Early in October Hillel officials conferred with Dean A. D. Allen and Assistant Dean W.
D. Foulds of the Faculty of Arts and Science, who agreed to add a restraint to the computer-prepared examination program if enough students indicated their unwillingness to be tested on Passover.

He is "hopeful that no problems will arise", but concedes that Passover exams might be necessary, depending on how many departments decide to schedule final exams this year, and how many days can be left open as alternatives to Passover.

Hillel President Mark Okrent is dissatisfied with the situation. "When we discussed the matter with the Faculty of Arts and Sciences in October", he said, "we agreed that students would voice their opinions by checking off a preference on their course confirmation sheets.

"This additional statement has not been added. Instead, students are required to write the word 'Passover' on their sheets if they wish to reschedule their exams".

St. Mike's, New and Victoria College student councils have already voted to support Hillel's request. UC is expected to discuss the matter this week.

"Just as there are no classes on Good Friday or exams on Sundays," says Okrent,
"Jewish students should, therefore, not be forced to write on Passover".

HERE AND NOW

TODAY

1 pm

A filmed interview with Linus Pauling will be shown in Rm 159 Chem Build.

The Vic VCF invites you to a discussion led by Oon Fraaman in the Wymliwood Musicroom. Everyone welcome

Hillel "Meet the Faculty Series" presents Prof Frank Talmage on "Jewish Studies in North American Universities" in Rm. 314

4 pm

An Open meeting of History Dept. structure committees will happen. All profs and students welcome. Rm. 604 Sid Smith.

7:30 pm

Auditions for West Side Story will be held by the New College Orama Guild in Watmore dining hall

8 pm

There will be a meeting of the Christan Perspective Club. Ted Plantinga will introduce the discussion on "the shape and style of the secular City" in the South Sitting Room, Hart House.

TUESDAY

1 pm

There will be an Inter-disciplinary studies course union meeting in Rm. 592

Sid Smith.

There will be a course evaluation meeting in Rm 1085 Sid Smith. Students and faculty welcome.

1:15 pm

The TCOS lunch Hour theatre presents
THE INTRUDER by Maurice Maeterlinck, directed by Martha Mackinnon Carwright Hall St. Hilda's Admission Free

4 pm

Prof David R. Layzer, Harvard speaking on "Formation of Astronomical Systems".
David Dunlap Observatory, Richmond Hill.

4:15 pm

An experienced Christian Scientist will be available for consultation and questioning concerning Christian Science in the Hart House Chaplains Office

8 pm

Hillel is having a buffet supper at 185
St. George. Phone 923-7837 for reservations.

The Toronto Section of the Chemical Institute of Canada is holding a dinner meeting at the faculty club. Speaking will be Prof J. O. Nicol Administrator of Ciminal Justice curriculum, University of Illinois on "Scientific aids to the solution of Crime."

7 pm

The U of T Homophile Association will hold a meeting in the upstairs lounge of the Graduates Students Union. All Homophiles welcome

7:30 pm

Christian Science Organization weekly meeting will feature Testimonies of healing in Rm. 202 Larkin Blvd. Trinity College

8 pm

The Ukrainian Students present William Kurelek (artist) just returned from world tour in "Open Discussion" at St. Vlado Inst.
620 Spadina Ave

The U of T Outing Club will hold a general meeting in Cook Hall. Slides movies and refreshments will be served

8:30 pm

Poculi Ludique Socetas presents Hycke
Scoram, a rogue morality, directed by Ien
Lancashire, in the West Hall of UC.
Admission Free

The Centre for the Study of Orama presents IN THE BEGINNING by G. B. Shaw and A SANTA CLAUS MASQUE by E. E.
Cummings at the Studio Theatre, 4 Glen Morris Admission Free.

HELD OVER

THAT SUPER MUSICAL
JACQUES BREL IS ALIVE
AND WELL AND LIVING
IN PARIS

PLAYHOUSE THEATRE - 1605 BAYVIEW

STARRING THE ORIGINAL CANADIAN CAST
TIMES AND PRICES: SUN., TUES., WED., THURS. AT 8:30 P.M. -
2.00, 3.00, 4.00, FRI. AT 1:45 and SAT. at 6:15 and 9:45 - 3.00, 4.00, 5.00

* STUDENTS *

$2.00 ALL PERFORMANCES EXCEPT LATE FRI. & SAT.

Pink Whiskers
BOUTIQUES
2200
Yonge St.
at Eglinton

1 Bedford St. at Bloor
924-1874

The Opera Department
presents
The Toronto Premiere
of

L'ENFANT ET LES
SORTILEGES
(In English)

Opera by Revel
Poem by Colette
November 20, 21, 22, 23
at 8:30 p.m.

MacMillan Theatre
Edward Johnson Building
(Queen's Park, behind Pineasterium)

University of Toronto

Tickets $2.00

Students $1.00

Box Office - 928-3744

INSTITUTE FOR THE HISTORY AND PHILOSOPHY OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

"Motion in the Void: Aquinas and Averroes" by James A. Weisheipl, O.P., S.T.L., Ph.D., D.Phil.(Oxon), Professor of Philosophy, Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies, University of Toronto.

21st November 1:10 p.m. Room 202 McLennan Laboratory
(New Physics Building)

Sponsored by the Varsity Fund. All members of the University Community are invited.

Vic defense harnes St. Mike's passer in mid-season action photo by don andrew

Mulock semi-finals Tuesday at noon

By LYNDON LITTLE

How will the powerful Dentistry running duo of Bob Sullivan and Rick Freeman, which ravaged second division defenses, fare against the fine defense of PhysEd?

Will the impotent Vic offense (average of only 9 points per game) be able to break out against third division winner Forestry?

These interesting questions and many more will be answered for all to see tomorrow afternoon in the Mulock Cup semi-final double-header scheduled to commence at noon at Varsity Stadium.

Vic (first division winner) tangles with Forestry in the first game followed by PhysEd (runner-up in the first division) against the Dents (second division winners).

All four teams have lost key men through injuries but, as in the Vic Washington-Dave Raimey situation between the Argos and Ottawa, any potential advantage has been fairly well cancelled.

Forestry suffered the greatest blow as their fine QB, Dan Yamasaki, separated his shoulder in a hockey practice prior to his team's windup game against New.

NEW QUARTERBACK

If Yamasaki is unable to go against Vic, Forestry coach "New" Feaver will call on Bruce Pamplin, a defensive back for most of the year. Pamplin handled the quarterbacking chores capably in the 14-7 win over New.

Meanwhile at Vic, Feaver's counterpart, head coach Tony Speciale, plays it straight when asked about his attitude towards the Forestry game.

"We expect a lot from Forestry," he commented. "and we are definitely not looking past this one to the final."

As far as injuries go, Vic will have massive linemen Ken Howard back in action with a padded cast (at least the Forestry linemen hope it's padded) on his broken right hand. On the negative side, veteran defensive stalwart Dick Beamish will miss the playoffs as he is being sent to sea to do research on his graduate programme in zoology.

"My only disappointment this year," comments Speciale, "is that we didn't score more points."

DENTS LOOK STRONG

Dentistry coach Brian Jones was, as expected, very satisfied with the way his undefeated team performed this year.

"We have always had quality players," he noted, "but the big difference is that this year we had enough extra bodies for two complete platoons."

However, he adds, "in tomorrow's game you may see some of my best men going both ways."

"The loss of our flanker Mel Pearlman at mid-season hurt our passing game but in King Draper and my brother Al at quarterback we still have a potent pass-catch combination."

If any team has a reason to be frustrated this year it was PhysEd. Their powerful offense led by halfback Larry Theed (seven TD's in two games) Gord Harvey, Rick Rae, quarterback John Osborne and pass receivers Rick Johnson and Tom Crocker rolled up a league high 28 points per game average. Yet their only loss, 20-1 to Vic, cost them top spot.

SOLID PHYSED DEFENSE

The PhysEd defense also were league leaders with a 3 points allowed-per-game average, including four shutouts. However, there have been some key late season injuries here!

The defensive backfield has lost two top performers. Kent Duncan fractured a knee cap (another hockey casualty) and Dave Turner separated his shoulder in the last game against Vic.

Coach Keith Johnson was forced to don the pads to fill the gap in the defensive backfield and will likely remain there for the playoffs.

HART HOUSE 50

THE EXTREMELY SERIOUS IMPROVISATIONAL ENSEMBLE

In a free flow of new sounds
Tuesday, November 18th
12-2 p.m. - Music Room
Ladies Welcome

AMATEUR RADIO CLUB VE3UOT

OPEN MEETING
Wednesday, November 19th
Debates Room - 7:30 p.m.

CLASSICAL CONCERT

for Piano and Clarinet
MARY ANN CONOVER
and LYNNIE MILNES
Music Room, 1-2 p.m.
Ladies Welcome

Anyone interested in playing at a noon hour concert is asked to call: David Belue (465-0706) or Ross Cufner (534-8649)

CAMERA CLUB MEMBERS COLOUR SHOW

Wednesday, November 19
Club Room, 1:10 p.m.
Maximum 4 Slides

HART HOUSE GLEE CLUB
WELCOMES NEW MEMBERS
PROPOSED TOUR IN MAY
20 New members Welcome
Meet us Thursday, November 20th
Music Room, Hart House, 5:30 p.m.

ART GALLERY CANADIAN PAINTINGS

From the Vincent Massey Bequest
To the National Gallery
Until November 25
Monday - Saturday 12-2 p.m.
Sundays 2-5 p.m.

NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL
TICKETS
NOW ON SALE!

GRADUATING? UNDECIDED?

We Understand

Discuss your career opportunities as a Chartered Accountant with us at the placement service

NOVEMBER 18

or call Steve Burns at our office

STARKMAN, KRAFT, ROTHMAN, BERGER & GRILL
CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS
3101 BATHURST ST., SUITE 601
TORONTO 19, ONTARIO
TELEPHONE 782-1155

METRO ELECTIONS ISSUES

Experts will discuss them in Room 2106 Sid Smith 1 P.M.

Monday 17: Spadina Expressway Extension

Tuesday 18: Quality of Inner City Education

Interfac swim meet Tuesday

Attention, all Varsity swimmers! Here's your chance to prove yourselves!
The annual intramural swim meet will be held tomorrow evening in the Hart House pool at 7 bells. There are ten events including 5 relays so you are sure to find one that is just suited for your physical condition.
All students are eligible except former members of the senior intercollegiate team or grads without Athletic membership. Entries must be received at the intramural office by 5:30 this afternoon, SO HURRY!
All entries should report to the pool NOT LATER THAN 7:00 p.m. tomorrow evening.

go government with ontario's public service

We're short on quill pens, high stools, eye shades and sleeve garters

We dig computers, mini skirts, on-the-job training, beards, promotions based on merit, hard-nosed idea people

We need honours graduates in most disciplines

To Learn More About us and Specific Job Openings
See our brochure at your placement office

To Apply for an on campus interview

1. Complete a personal information form available at your placement office
2. Mail it, in the return address envelopes also available at your placement office, or to:

Liaison Officer,
Schools, Colleges, Universities,
Department of Civil Service,
Parliament Buildings,
Toronto, Ontario.

no later than December 31, 1969.

3. For on campus interview dates, check our brochure or your placement office

ONTARIO
PROVINCE OF OPPORTUNITY

WRITERS' WORKSHOP

ANYONE who is serious about writing is urged to attend a new university-wide writers' workshop at the Writing Lab, Innis 1 (north of main library), 5 p.m. Thursdays. The editors of the various college magazines will be there. If you'd like to read, please bring copies of your work. If you're interested but can't make it, leave your name and phone number at the Writing Lab.

University of Toronto ORGAN RECITAL by AUBREY FOY

TODAY
Convocation Hall 5:05 p.m.

Organizational Meeting INTERDISCIPLINARY STUDIES COURSE UNION

Tuesday, Nov. 18th
at 1 p.m.

Room 592 - - - Sid Smith

CLASSIFIEDS

DISCOVERED excellent Italian dress designer and tailor who would like to work from his home in the West End. If interested call 247-4453.

LOST in Sidney Smith Hall blue onyx ring with diamond. High reward to finder. Please phone 928-3400 or 445-1966.

DANCE: 2 BANDS 1) Shrauder 2) The Catalyst (5 piece R&B) New College Sat Nov. 22 (Wetmore Hall) Gals $1.00 Guys $1.50 others $3.00

TUTOR IN STATISTICS — idiot adult student needs advice setting up and proving minor statistical study. Phone 920-4607.

COUNTER HELP needed 2 to 5 days per week, noon to 2:00 p.m. Bloor University Area. Pay $3 plus lunch per day. Phone 445-0040

MEN WANTED to sing good music with a chamber choir. Phone I. Schreiber, 928-5171, 536-5019.

RESEARCH project on snow storms, requests helpers to conduct evening telephone interviews, a few evenings only. Attractive rate of pay. If interested telephone Prof. Burton or Mrs. Goodwin, 928-3379.

DUAL 101D TURNTABLE New shure cartridge, teak base, teak and plerless top cost new $140 as new, $75 - 789 4007 ask for Chuck or leave message.

FAR FROM THE MOODING CROWD 8:00 p.m. Friday November 21, at Faculty of Food Science Bloor at Avenue Road 75¢ free popcorn bring your own pillow.

STUDENT JOBS 2 TOURS IN EUROPE For a complete description and application form in a 42 page booklet send $2.00 to Gord Allan, 25 Teylorwood Dr., Islington Ontario, M2N 1P1. Every student guaranteed a paying job in Europe.

SALTY DOG DISCOTHEQUE Will rent premises Monday to Thursday Day or Evening. For information call A. Curry 964-7060 or 633-2877.

TYPING theses, essays, notes, charts, English, French, other languages. Shmeographing, electric typewriters. Mary Dele Stott (M. Owens) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225. 922-7624.

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Day you buy a diamond" H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416. 921-7702.

NEED A ROOM? 2 vacancies available for males in Co-op residence. Call Innis College 928-2512 or drop in at 63 St. George Street, Room 202.

BATHURST-ST. CLAIR Bedsitting in apartment, reliable girl, private, frig, own grill, large walk-in closet. Door leads to bath. All supplied — $16.00 — 782-2070.

FAST ACCURATE Home typing — Mrs. Linda Flood — 884-6526. Keep this name and number for future use.

TUTOR WANTED immediately for 11th year Maths Physics — Call 653-7219 or 653-6810.

RELAXACIZOR, 3-dial, like new, $120 or best offer. Call Ruth at 928-3224 (days) or 534-6403 (evenings).

WANTED: one person to share 3 bedroom flat $50 a month 486-3318.

FOR SALE 1965 VW 44,000 mi., winter tires, radio, seat covers, excellent running condition 5800 Call 233-9517 evenings 5:30-7:00 or weekends.

Members of Varsity's SwimBelles — sorry, Tarpons — relaxing at the Windsor meet.

photo by pat smith

Tarpons gain important win

By PAT SMITH

The women's swim team stole the honors at a tri-meet in Windsor Saturday night, amassing a total score of 112 compared to Windsor's 71 and only 48 for Western.

Varsity's ace medley relay team of Ruth Unger, Mabel-Anne Brown, Liz Daniel and Judy Kent captured their speciality in an excellent time of 2:14.9.

SwimBelles captain, Randy Croome, led the way in individual performances with three first place finishes — 200-yard free style, 50-yard back and 100-yard back.

Frances Flint swam both butterfly events, winning the 100-yard in 1:21.2 and coming a close second in the 50-yard.

Varsity's breast-strokers, Maye Hurley and Mable-Anne Brown, made a runaway of their events, finishing first and second respectively in the 100-yards in 1:29.5 and 1:29.6.

Toronto divers continued the scintillating Varsity display, especially in the 3-meter competition as Leslie O'brien and Barb Beauty grabbed the first two positions.

The overall victory is an accurate indication of the skill and depth of the Toronto team, especially in view of the absence of veteran star Merrily Stratton, sidelined with a sprained ankle.

When Merrily gets back in the swim, the Varsity gals will be a match for any university team in Ontario.

FROGKICKS . . . the swim team has finally settled on a nickname — Tarpons . . . complete results including times are available at the WAB . . . Univ. of Guelph has assembled a powerful team, including a couple of Olympic swimmers; the final meet should see a battle between Guelph and the Tarpons for the championship.

THE BULL
Draught beer on tap from noon till after midnight. Hearty lunches from 75c. Wild atmosphere.

THE BEAR

e Bull and The Bear in The Sutton Place Hotel • On Wellesley east of B.

IT'S WHERE ITS HAPPENING
Meet your friends at
PETIT PALAIS COIFFURE
All the Latest Mod Styles and Cuts by any of our 5 Stylists
We specialize in long hair styling
20% discount Monday through Thursday with proof of A.T.L. Card
415 Bloor St. W. Corner Spadina - Borders, campus
Open Thursday and Friday Evenings
For appointment phone 922-2823

A LOT OF PERIODICALS WERE PUBLISHED

Between 1669 and last week. We have many of them. From Mercurius Musicus, 1669 to Philosophy Today, 1969. You can find them in the card catalogue, find them in indexes — simply FIND THEM. We will tell you how in seminars and on tours conducted by the Circulation, Reference, and Science and Medicine Departments — University of Toronto Library.

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
Toronto Professional Bldg,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 101, Ontario

IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS

Telephone 364-0973

Field hockey title goes to PHE III

By NAN FUNDALL

The Interfac field-shinny season climaxed in the mist and mud of Varsity Stadium Friday morning as PhysEdettes battled for the championship.

Kit Koehler, PHE III's persistent right-winger, overwhelmed PHE I goalie Judy Bowness and tallied three goals; all were set up by perfect passes from centre Karen Zarudney.

Steady net-minding by Paule Vine kept PHE I scoreless until late in the match when Gerri Rodman finally broke the shutout.

Final score, PHE III — 3, PHE I — 1.
Congrats to PHE III and to all players who braved the continual rain, snow, mud and cold throughout the season.

JET FLIGHTS EUROPE '70

$181⁰⁰	$190⁰⁰
TORONTO LONDON	TORONTO PARIS

VIA AIR CANADA

DEPART TORONTO	DEPART LONDON	DURATION
8 MAY	31 MAY	3 WKS
1 JUN	12 SEPT	15 WKS
6 JUN	28 JUN	3 WKS
9 JUN	14 SEPT	14 WKS
13 JUN	15 SEPT	14 WKS
20 JUN	16 SEPT	3 WKS
27 JUN	17 SEPT	10 WKS
28 JUN	6 SEPT	10 WKS
3 JULY	24 JULY	3 WKS
10 JULY	31 JULY	3 WKS
17 JULY	7 AUG	3 WKS
24 JULY	14 AUG	3 WKS
31 JULY	21 AUG	3 WKS
7 AUG	27 AUG	3 WKS
14 AUG	4 SEPT	3 WKS
8 SEPT	28 SEPT	2 WKS
2 OCE	23 OCE	2 WKS
18 DEC	2 JAN	2 WKS
19 DEC	3 JAN	2 WKS

DEPART TORONTO	DEPART PARIS	DURATION
1219 00	1200 00	42 H 55
10 JUN	13 SEPT	13 WKS
8 AUG	8 SEPT	4 WKS

Subject to Government approval and space availability
$25.00 deposit required for each seat reservation
Please enclose your cheque with coupon below

POST HOUSE TRAVEL BUREAU
3302 BLOOR ST. WEST
TORONTO 101 ONTARIO
PHONE (416) 767-5401

GENTLEMEN I AM ENCLOSE MY CHEQUE FOR $ PLEASE RESERVE SEATS TO DEPARTING
NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ PHONE _____

VIC'S BOB REVUE

THE EMPEROR'S NEW CLOTHES

"A COMEDY WITH MUSIC"

BY JOHN BEMROSE & TOM PLAUNT

NOV. 18-22 NEW VIC THEATRE

8:00 P.M. NEW ACADEMIC BLDG.

TICKETS AT WYMLWOOD OR AT THE DOOR

Centre for the Study of Drama
in association with
The St. Lawrence for the Arts
presents

Slawomir Mrozek's

TANGO

Translated by Nicholas Bethell
Adapted by Tom Stoppard
Directed by Joseph Shaw

Mon.-Wed Nov 17-19

HART HOUSE THEATRE

Tickets $3 00

Box Office 928-8668

Students $1 50

ALL PERFORMANCES OF MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA SOLD OUT

Waterpolo Blues win two

The Varsity Blues moved a step closer to the OQAA Western Division title defeating Waterloo 12-6 and Guelph 11-4 on the weekend at McMaster.

Waterloo has a new, young team and Blues were so confident of an easy win that they found themselves with only a 5-4 lead at the half. They then started to play seriously and coasted to the victory.

Guelph has a rough, tough team that can score quickly if you let up for a second. Toronto came through with their best game of the season to win.

The entire team was back-checking well, breaking up potential Guelph scoring plays before they could get organized. The game was highlighted by Blues teamwork, which was the deciding factor in the game. Toronto took advantage of their strong swimming to set up their play patterns and score. When someone lost his check there was always someone else back to cover up.

Alex LeRoy led the attack in the Waterloo game with four goals. Mike Guinness and Jim Adams scored 3 and 2 respectively. Singles went to Lyle Makowski, Brian Barras and Peter Petzold.

Terry Bryon paced the Blues in the Guelph game with five goals. Jim Adams fired 3, Lyle Makowski 2 and Theo Van Ryan completed the scoring.

Blues Fencers were outstanding against the foilists and sabreurs of Buffalo and Queens on Saturday but struggled against Buffalo's epeeists. Toronto defeated Buffalo 19 bouts to 8 and Queens 18-0.

Varsity launched a second team into intercollegiate competition. What a start, beat Queen's 12 bouts to 6 and just lost to Buffalo 13-14.

Sabreurs three, Martin Peros, Andrew Benyei and Vladimir Hatchinski devastated the weak Buffalo and Queens attack winning every bout. Our rookie foil team resisted the craft of Buffalo 6 bouts to 3 and outclassed Queens 9-10. The experienced Buffalo epee team defeated Toronto 5-4 in a tense match.

For the second squad, Martin Moskovits lead the sabreurs with 5 victories. The foil team cliffhanged a close 5-4 victory against Queens and then a 4-5 loss to Buffalo.

The epeeists, lead by the nonchalant Bill Gibson and his accurate point took three wins from strong Buffalo team.

Centre for the Study of Drama

Faculty of Music

Department of East Asian Studies
present

THE BUDAYA TROUPE FROM INDONESIA

The Performing Arts of Bali, Java and Sunda
presented by

The American Society for Eastern Arts

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 26 at 8:30

MacMILLAN THEATRE

Edward Johnson Building

Tickets $3.00 Box Office 928-3744 Students $1.50

CANADIAN COLLEGE BOWL

FRI. NOV. 21

8.30 P.M.

VARSITY STADIUM

THE COLLEGE FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP OF CANADA

EAST

Winner of McGill vs UNB

VS

WEST

Winner of Manitoba vs Windsor

PROCEEDS GO TO THE
CANADIAN SAVE THE CHILDREN FUND

Parade and College Bowl Queen

Tickets $1.00 and $1.50

Available at SAC Office

Blues rally beats Laurentian 6-4 plan revenge on York Tuesday nite

photo by art mcilwain

Laurentian goal-tender Pat Lange and defenseman Roy Bresnahan cover a rebound while Blues cossy center Paul Laurent (8) moves in hopefully. Voyageur's Kent Pollard (19) does his best for the cause, removing another Blue from the vicinity.

By JIM COWAN

It took them 40 minutes to figure out what game they were playing Friday night, but Varsity Blues somehow managed to pack enough hockey into one period to beat the Laurentian University Voyageurs 6-4.

Two periods of poor passing, sloppy defense, atrocious shooting and plain, old-fashioned bonehead plays allowed the Vees to rack up a 4-1 lead. More than one of the 4,300 fans in Varsity Arena left at the end of the second period, writing it off as just one of those nights when nothing goes right.

Blues opened the scoring at 8:13 of the first period, but even that foreshadowed things to come. Paul Laurent worked the puck in from centre, faked out the Laurentian defenseman, beat goalie Pat Lange and — hit the post. But Bryan Tompson was there to put it away.

Laurentian came back and tied it up six minutes later as John Valiquette and Kent Pollard broke in on Blues' goalie Adrian Watson. Watson stayed with Valiquette, who laid the puck on Pollard's stick. All he had to do was flip it over the sprawling goalie.

Then came the second period.

Blues' defencemen suddenly decided they should be forwards, and the forwards stood back admiring the rearguards' efforts. Laurentian, unimpressed, scored three goals, all unassisted.

Thirty-four seconds into the period, with defenseman Bill L'Heureux caught outside the blueline, Mike Jakubo grabbed the puck and blasted a hard shot along the ice and into the corner of the net.

At 5:20, with both teams playing three aside, Blues watched while the Vees took half-a-dozen swipes at the puck. Watson made a couple of saves, one shot hit the post, and finally Ron Dussiaume tucked it in.

Hockey Blues
next home game
Tuesday 8 p.m.
YORK Univ.
remember last year?
York 3 Varsity 1

What should have been the insurance goal came at 18:30 when Ray Lamont stole the puck at centre ice and, with nary a Blues defenseman in sight, beat Watson for Laurentian's fourth goal.

In the third, Laurentian went into a defensive shell and Blues, remembering perhaps that they are the CIAU champions, started playing hockey. The transformation seemed to stun the Vees into immobility.

At 6:32 Terry Peterman did something unusual for Blues — he got a hard shot away quickly. Goalie Lange was so surprised he never made a move. Peterman's wingmen Tompson and Len Burman were given assists.

From then on Blues took command, and at the nine minute mark Bill Buba scored after a pileup in front of the Vees net. Twenty-seven seconds later John Wright took a pass from Dave Field and tied it up with a blistering shot from just inside the blueline.

With Laurentian fully in retreat Laurent finally ended his night of frustration. At 14:49 L'Heureux fired a hard drive from the point which Lange stopped but couldn't hold. The puck dropped at his feet and Laurent, looking again like his old self, backhanded it past the Vees goalie.

Blues insurance goal came at 18:53, as Laurent flew in from left wing, drew the defenseman to him then hit Bob McGuinn with a picture pass. McGuinn showed why he was an allstar at Cornell, potting it past Lange.

BLUESNOTES: Toronto outshot Laurentian in all three periods, with the final count 44-23 . . . Blues picked up 7 minor penalties, Vees 8 . . . Varsity was coeached by Dave "Red" Stephen, when Tom Watt was called away due to his father's death . . . Red handled the team for three weeks while Watt was still involved with Blues football. . .

SEEING'S BELIEVING

A 1/2 CARAT DIAMOND COULD BE WORTH
$200 or $500

DEPENDING ON CUT, COL
OUR AND CLARITY

The only way to be sure is to use it for yourself in a gem microscope. If you're in the market for an engagement ring, we invite you to drop in. We'll try our best to show through our scope what makes the difference in diamond values.

WE ARE "DIRECT
DIAMOND DEALERS"

SEND FOR FREE BOOKLET. The Right Ring for the Left Hand. Outline what you should expect and get when you invest in a diamond. You CAN buy on a Direct Basis.

DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.
131 BLOOR W., STE. 416
921-7702

Coming Events of
U. of T.
FLYING CLUB

1. Open Meeting, Thurs. Nov. 20 7:30 P.M. Music Rm. Hart House Guest Speaker: Mr. H. Cunningham from Experimental Aircraft Assn. Topic: "Homebuilt Aircraft"
2. Last Breakfast Flight of 1969 Destinations: Open for suggestions
Time: Sat. Nov. 22, 10:00 A.M.
4 Pilots so far, room for 12 passengers
for Pilots and Nonpilots interested in flying

Hillel

Meet the Faculty Series
Presents

PROF. FRANK TALMAGE
on Jewish Studies in North American Universities

Monday, November 17, 1:00 p.m.

U.C. Room 314

All Welcome

Outing Club General Meeting

Cody Hall 8:00

Free Refreshments

Tuesday Nov. 18

Slides, Movies

You'll love being a Kitten girl!

Glenayr

Kitten

MACHINE-WASHABLE
PURE WOOL

This smart striped pullover in machine-washable English botany has a mock turtle neckline with zipper, full-fashioned 3/4 raglan sleeves, Continental band and cuffs. Pick from Kitten's new Fall palette

A swinging hand-washable mini skirt with box pleats in front, and plain back giving A-line appearance. Pure wool worsted, fully lined. A wide range of glorious new Fall colours

PURE VIRGIN WOOL

665 694

Without this label  it is not a genuine KITTEN.

HART HOUSE

$2.00

DENTANTICS

NOV. 27,28,29

Somewhere in the forest
the fragments are falling:
splinters of wood,
infinitesimal droppings, parings and nests in the leafage —
but the stillness is changeless, the chill in the dark does not lessen.

— pablo neruda

SAC report says Spadina Expressway could disrupt U of T

Add one more to the list of groups opposing the Spadina Expressway — the Students' Administrative Council.

In a report approved by SAC Nov. 5, engineering member Wayne Richardson (IV APSC) opposed the completion of the Spadina Expressway below St. Clair.

Present plans call for the expressway to terminate near Sussex and Spadina.

If this happens Richardson predicts Harbord-Hoskin and St. George will become major routes to and from the Spadina expressway and will "suffer complete slowups" of traffic.

"If you bring the expressway only as far as Sussex, you will seriously disrupt the university," Richardson maintains.

to use a lower speed after passing Sussex.

"The first traffic lights will be at Harbord, then College, so most drivers will use Harbord-Hoskin as an exit route."

An independent consulting report, commissioned by the university and the Metro Roads Department, has suggested both St. George and Harbord-Hoskin be closed to traffic.

This report would balance the resulting loss in traffic flow by constructing over-passes at University and Bloor and at University and College.

The total cost for both over-passes has been roughly estimated at $6 million.

CLOSE ST. GEORGE

St. George should be closed from Bloor to College, Richardson says. "St. George is being kept open solely because of the need for expressway feeder routes."

SAC approved a motion calling for a 35 mile per hour speed limit on Spadina from Sussex to the Gardiner Expressway if St. George must remain open.

SAC also called for the retention of angle parking on lower Spadina, no elaborate "expressway to expressway" interchange for Spadina Ave. and the Gardiner, and assurances from Metro authorities that "no new expressways will be built within the boundaries of the city of Toronto."

Richardson fears Toronto planners are succumbing to "the expressway syndrome, as in Los Angeles, where one expressway led to the need for another. The Crosstown Expressway follows naturally after the Spadina is completed."

from the 401 to the Gardiner.

"The effect of this will be the death of the garment industry on Spadina; 23,000 jobs will be lost, since you simply cannot relocate an entire industry."

Richardson blames narrow-sighted planning by city and Metro officials for the current controversy surrounding the Spadina project.

"They merely did a feasibility study from an engineering standpoint," he says. "They didn't even consider any sociological or economic studies as to how the areas through which the expressway passes would be affected."

If the expressway is completed as planned, traffic and noise must be at least artificially removed from sight and hearing to create a peaceful and safe environment, Richardson concludes.

"The implications of the Spadina Expressway could destroy the university."

TRAFFIC JAMS

"There will be a traffic back-up as the large number of cars using the expressway at high speeds are forced

NEW EXPRESSWAY

If the Spadina Expressway is not stopped, he says, there will be a high-speed limited-access expressway

THE varsity

VOLUME 90, No. 25
November 19, 1969

TORONTO

There's hope left for Rochdale

By PAMELA BERTON

"When it first started there was no intention of selling," Wilfred Pelletier, Council member and Acting Co-ordinator of Rochdale College said yesterday in an interview. "The idea was to get the means to pay the mortgage, and one of the alternatives was selling. Somehow it got twisted around and became a political issue."

The discovery that the free university on Bloor St. failed to pay the November mortgage instalment ($25,600) to the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has precipitated a barrage of articles and editorials in the Toronto newspapers, on the necessity of the sale of the 18-storey apartment building which houses the college.

Another alternative would be to refinance the building for $1.5 million. This would be used to pay off the smaller second, third and fourth mortgages to the Rubin Corporation, Campus Co-operative, and the Nu Sigma Nu Fraternity. It would also be used to transfer the building from Co-Op college which now holds it in trust for Rochdale College.

Many of the residents feel that the third possibility, asking CMHC to defer payments, is the one which would work out best. This, however depends on the good will of the Federal Government.

Members who feel this way have formed a group called The Rochdale Home and School Association. Floor Representatives, who will act as a liaison for the Council and for the administration, are meeting to report the views of their respective floors. They feel that with an educational program and a show of responsibility and involvement that the government might feel that Rochdale is a worthwhile experiment.

DEBTS PAID

Meeting the mortgage was a problem because rents were not coming in fast enough to cover all the bills and the $25,600 to CMHC. The occupancy of the building is 84 per cent, which was not enough to cover the loss incurred last month.

Rochdale, with a change in both Council and Administration, has managed to pay off all other debts, some of them outstanding from last fall when the building was run in part by Campus Co-op.

Rochdale was originally set up as a co-operative by Campus Co-op, and the building was built by Co-op College. The educational concept was conceived by a group of York University professors. Rochdale as an educational body began in several houses in the spring of 1968 and moved into the present building in the fall, while the confusion of construction was still taking place.

Since that time the people have undergone many hardships. Lack of experience and kind hearts allowed the "crashers" ... the overflow of mixed-up kids fleeing the mainstream suburban world ... to control the building. In a similar way the residents inherited the problems of drugs and 'hikers' from the society. The three man security force now patrols the building, and amphetamines and other hard drugs result in immediate eviction.

Sign on front door of Rochdale — the members want to prevent Rochdale from being sold.

"We were dealing with the problems of the city, not our problems," council member Rev. J. A. Mackenzie said.

BAD PUBLICITY

Many of the members feel that the worst handicap has been bad publicity. The media pictures Rochdale as being full of hippies, speed-freaks and immorality. They regularly reported the unfortunate aspects of the experiment, such as garbage in the halls, and yet neglected to mention that the building has passed weekly health inspections since June. It was not reported that Rochdale was the first in Canada to declare "speed" illegal.

Evidence that Rochdale has not failed is found in projects such as the sculpture seminar, the Coach House Press printing courses, ceramics, the library, writing, the fourteenth floor commune, the farms near Killaloe, Theatre Passe Muraille, the Indian Institute and many more. There are academic courses too. In the past year most of the residents have studied philosophy, politics, economics, law, interior design, psychology, bio-chemistry, sociology, and ethics, mostly all run as simulation courses.

"If we go under," Rev. Mackenzie said, "it is because the society can't stand dissent. We call into question the values of society."

14th floor commune holds a birthday party

photo by Errol Young

Centre for the Study of Drama
in association with
The St. Lawrence for the Arts
presents

Slawomir Mrozek's

TANGO

Translated by Nicholas Bethell
Adapted by Tom Stoppard
Directed by Joseph Shaw

Mon.-Wed. Nov. 17-19

HART HOUSE THEATRE

Tickets $3.00

Students $1.50

Box Office 928-8668

ALL PERFORMANCES OF MOURNING BECOMES ELECTRA SOLD OUT

THE ENGINEERING SOCIETY
PRESENTS
THE

CANNONBALL

AT

HART HOUSE

FRIDAY NOV. 28

8 P.M. - 1 A.M.

$4.00 PER COUPLE

- FEATURING -
"CATHEDRAL"
"ALTAR EGG"
"JACK LOVE"
"DORION MOORE"

TICKETS - ENG. STORES, CLASS REPS, SAC

HART HOUSE

$2.00

DENTANTICS

NOV. 27, 28, 29

MUSICAL REVUE — CRACKERS & CHEESE —

SUNDAY NOV. 23 8:30 P.M.

(WILSON HALL) NEW COLLEGE

FANTASTICALLY CHEAP!!!! $1

ARTS AND SCIENCE STUDENTS

in day classes
must confirm their programme of studies

BEFORE NOVEMBER 20th

at the Office of their College Registrar
(Regular Students)

or

at the Faculty Office (Special Students)

This procedure is essential in order to ensure accurate records and so that EXAMINATION arrangements may be made. A late fee will be imposed after November 20th.

N.B. Students who do not wish to write on Passover because of religious observance should write "Passover" under their programme. An effort will be made to avoid those days.

WRITERS' WORKSHOP

ANYONE who is serious about writing is urged to attend a new university-wide writers' workshop at the Writing Lab, Innis 1 (north of main library), 5 o.m. Thursdays. The editors of the various college magazines will be there. If you'd like to read, please bring copies of your work. If you're interested but can't make it, leave your name and phone number at the Writing Lab.

THE

COFFEE SHOP - DISCOTHEQUE

every Friday & Saturday Nite

10 P.M. . . . 'til . . . 1 A.M.

at NEW COLLEGE

50¢/STAG 75¢/DRAG

Chicago convention rioters stand trial

CHICAGO (CUP) — American justice is wending its slow but sure way to a decision in the trials of those involved in 1968's Chicago Democratic Convention riots.

On September 24, a year after the riots, the trial of Bobby Seale and seven others began, the first in which Federal officials have tried to attach a conspiracy charge — a felony — to demonstrators. The best known are Seale, David Dellinger, anti-war organizer; Tom Hayden, one of the founders of Students For a Democratic Society; Abbie Hoffman and Jerry Rubin, leaders of the Youth International Party (Yippies).

The eight defendants are being charged with conspiracy to cross state lines with the intention of inciting a riot during the 1968 Democratic Party National Convention at Chicago.

Seale, chairman of the Black Panther Party, requested a postponement of his trial because chief counsel for the Black Panthers, lawyer Charles R. Garry was absent because of illness. Judge Julius Hoffman ruled Seale was represented by the lawyers for the other seven, although Seale, the lawyers, and the other seven disagreed.

GAGGED AND BOUND

When he refused to remain silent, Judge Hoffman ordered him gagged and manacled to a metal folding chair.

Seale is now in prison, sentenced by Judge Hoffman on Nov. 5 on 16 counts of criminal contempt, each carrying a three month sentence, to a total of four years.

At the same time, Judge

American Yippie Jerry Rubin is on trial for conspiracy.

Hoffman declared a mistrial in Seale's case and set April 23, 1970 as the date of the new trial on conspiracy charges.

On Wednesday, Nov. 12, a bench warrant was ordered for the arrest of Jerry Rubin after he left the Federal District Courtroom thirty minutes before the usual recess time. Judge Hoffman also ordered Rubin's $10,000 bail revoked over protest by defense attorney William M. Kunstler. Rubin left behind a written waiver of his constitutional right to be present at his trial before leaving to catch a plane to a speaking engagement at Rutgers University that evening.

The defense contends any rioting at the 1968 demonstrations was caused by persons such as Chicago Mayor Richard R. Daley who sought to stifle all effective protest. Daley agreed on Nov. 10 to take the witness stand in the case.

On Nov. 17, the "Chicago

Seven" were refused a mistrial despite their attorney's charges that the U.S. Government has been spying on their defense.

Defense attorney Leonard Weinglass told Judge Hoffman that mail was being opened and "even our waste paper has been taken by the Chicago Police Department. We can't talk to witnesses. We can't have confidence in our own office staff."

Weinglass objected that the government had admitted to three illegal wiretappings of defendants and cited two Federal court rulings in which mistrials were declared because of surveillance by the prosecution.

It was the second time that Judge Hoffman had refused to declare a mistrial in the case of the Chicago Seven. The first was requested because "inflammatory testimony" concerning Seale would prejudice the jury concerning the other defendants in the case.

Loyola sit-in planned

MONTREAL (CUP) — Loyola College students will sit-in again today outside the office of administration president Patrick Malone in anticipation of a Canadian Association of University Teachers (CAUT) investigation.

CAUT is expected to announce this week whether it will form a commission of inquiry into Loyola's unexplained dismissal of Physicist S.A. Santhanam. Students hope the sit-in will show CAUT their determination to have Santhanam rehired.

Five students, including student president Marcel Nouvet, were placed on "disciplinary probation" by the administration for their part in a sit-in protesting the dismissal November 12. On Thursday approximately 250 students blocked the corridors of the administration building to protest the "disciplinary probation" of the five students.

The students demand binding arbitration by CAUT in Santhanam's case and protest the administration reprisals against their protests.

Under the terms of the probation, the students "may not participate in, or be an observer to, any activity on the Loyola campus" except to fulfill course requirements.

Violation of the probation would bring immediate suspension or expulsion from the college.

The Senate, which voted to rehire Santhanam in June and then retracted its stand when the Loyola trustees objected, has appointed a three-man committee, including one student, to look into the case of the five students.

The Loyola administration has refused to listen to student and faculty demands that the case be arbitrated by CAUT; university president Patrick Malone declared the affair officially closed Nov. 5 after Santhanam turned down an offer of $10,000 to leave the campus stating he would rather have "justice than money".

Some Loyola students have chosen other ways to protest Malone's refusal to consider rehiring Santhanam.

Monday night stink bombs were placed in the president's office, the offices of the dean of students and the division of student services. Last week stink bombs were put in the air filtration system of the four-storey Bryan Building, newest building on campus.

And Monday morning a swastika with the initials 'S.J.' in the corner flew from the Loyola flagpole. The 'S.J.' referred to the Jesuit Board of Trustees. A firetruck had to be called to bring down the flag.

No ad today.

Watch this space on Friday for an important revelation.

University of Toronto Bookstore

If there is anyone out there in the wilds who is thinking of going to tonight's SAC meeting here is a rundown of what's on the agenda. The fall budget is being presented, discipline, CUG, a report from the committee to examine the structure of SAC and a battle royal over the SAC lawyers. See the SAC ad somewhere in the paper for time and place.

CAPITAL RECORDS

MOTHER TUCKERS

YELLOW DUCK
IN CONCERT
SAT. NOV. 22

AT THE MASNDC TEMPLE (888 YONGE ST.)
(FORMERLY THE ROCK PILE)

TWO SHOWS

8 P.M. & 11 P.M.

ADMISSION $2.50

GENERAL ADMISSION ONLY

DOORS OPEN AT 7:30 P.M.
M.T.Y.D.

exhibition & sale of original graphics for collectors

by Chagall, Bashin,
Roussif,
Daumier
& many others

RYERSON INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY

MAIN CAMPUS

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19

10 A.M. to 5 P.M.

Arranged by Ferdinand
Rosen Galleries
Baltimore Md.

CUG:

two movements

About a month ago piles of newspaper were stacked in campus doorways all over the U of T.

One day. Fifty nine pages of type. No pictures.

... Miracle: the Commission on University Government's report descended from on high like loaves and fishes.

A few weeks later piles of capes were still lying untouched in the doors of Sidney Smith and other buildings.

They were a familiar sight to the students who passed them each day to attend their lectures.

Then one day they weren't there any more: someone had carted them off into the night — they were becoming an embarrassing symbol of apathy.

The CUG Report is a piece of paper; its arrival is an event.

Many people see it as the broom that will sweep campus politics under the rug without raising too much dust.

But the CUG Report can't be evaluated as a document, as an academic paper. For it posits only structural and rhetorical changes in the university — the structure of a more representative committee structure and the rhetoric of co-operation, community, freedom, etc.

The CUG report is an abstraction that can mean anything you want it to mean, until you fill those structures with content and that rhetoric with action.

And until you look at the concrete, historical forces which created that abstraction, you won't know what CUG means to the real university.

CUG is a product of two movements — from the administration and from the students — both going in opposite directions. For the administration, CUG was to be a blueprint, a static model of the problem-solving university that would still be stable and efficient.

It was to be the end of reform and the absorption of the student movement that had begun to look ominous with the Dow demonstration and the Clark Kerr disruption.

For the radical students on the Commission, CUG was to be the beginning of reform — a focus for a debate about "the issues".

During the 10 months and 125 meetings of non-struggle and concession, both sides gave in somewhat.

The report emerged as a stark, structural outline of a future university — divorced of any solid analysis of the form and function of today's U of T.

By the time the Commission had put itself on paper, it was so removed from the people it was supposed to be about that it almost became a dead issue.

But last week something happened:

• The CUG Programming Committee rejected imposing parity (50-50 student-faculty) for the committees set up to implement the CUG report.

• The Association of Teaching Staff voted down the principle of parity in all departmental and faculty matters.

By rejecting parity, those two bodies have negated the fundamental principle on which CUG was based.

In fact, the ATS is the same body which last year helped force the administration to accept parity for CUG itself. As soon as that principle comes close to home — the classroom, curriculum, hiring and firing — when it hits the guts of the departments, then it becomes an issue.

The content of the divisions between faculty, students, and administration becomes clear. CUG becomes an issue and a strategy around which students must organize.

In Friday's editorial, I'll talk about how that question of parity is important to students.

brian johnson

LETTERS

always improving the product

As one who has supported the United Appeal for many years in whatever urban community he happened to be living, I compliment the reporter who researched and wrote the challenging article in The Varsity on Friday, Nov. 14, on the United Appeal.

The idealism behind this line of thought is noteworthy; however, I would dispute the privilege of the author to seem to judge the motivation of the many citizens of all walks of life who choose to support the work of the 78 participating agencies. Could the idealism and energy be better directed to voluntarily working to improve the services of these agencies, and to helping them to be ever more responsive to the needs of their clients? The work of each agency is so very important to the lives it touches, that all creative ideas are needed.

It is my understanding that the United Appeal Board and the agency Boards welcome and require hundreds of citizen volunteers to assist in constantly upgrading the quality of services and the careful managing of these large private funds. I find it impossible to believe that any sincere, creative person who volunteered to help would be denied this opportunity, he will be rich or poor in material things.

The description of the reactions of the Just Society people and their policies of working "outside the political mainstreams" and excluding "traditional approaches", leaves me very uneasy. They seem rather unimaginative spoilers. I wonder how many of them have actually volunteered to help an ongoing program become better? There could develop something destructive in this negative thinking.

But back to the idealistic people, who are more promising. I am sure the director of the Metro Social Planning Council would find such people stimulating and compatible teammates on any number of vital Metro projects. I hope they try and find out.

I also feel sure that the Ontario Welfare Council, made up as it is of qualified professional people, will end up with a responsible Board able to assure the United Appeal Board that it will make wise use of its share of the United Community Fund. It is comforting to know that there can be debate and difference of opinion between agency Boards, and I expect the end product can be the better for it.

Lois James, Chairman, Area Westhill-Highland Creek U.A. Residential Campaign, 1969 stop research from going to the dogs

What makes people want to believe that medical researchers and "young pre-university students" perform various sadistic mediaeval experiments on people's pets? How could anyone perform an operation on a dog which is not anaesthetized? Ever been bitten?

Bill 194 (Research Animals Act) protects pets (if you don't believe me, then please read the bill). What's more, Bill 194 eliminates dog dealers. And it saves the taxpayer money.

This summer, Queen's University was forced to cancel medical research because not enough dogs were available. Meanwhile every year, 50,000 unwanted, unclaimed dogs are killed by Humane Society Pounds in Ontario. It's dumb.

If the public does not want Bill 194, or if a majority wants it but allows its voice to be drowned out by the vociferous and misinformed opposition to the bill, then the Ontario public will face the consequences — decreasing standards in patient treatment.

Medicine is a dynamic field — if we don't have the facilities, we can't keep up.

Barbara Baxter (II Meds) Chairman, Committee for Public Education on Bill 194

Editor Brian Johnson
Review Editor Larry Haven
Assistant Review Editor Jack McCallister
News Editors Jim Cowan
City Editors Geoff Mudge
Local Exchange Noel Buckley
Faculty Editor Mary Kay Rowan
Sports Editor Paul Carson 923 4053
Design Dave Frank
Debate Section Barbara Bachman
Staff Writer Sue Rastler
Mike Rubin
Harriet Kocokol
Card Group 923 8171
91 St. George 2nd Floor
923 9741 922 9742
91 St. George 1st Floor

The Varsity is a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in the newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

"It was a soze strange night as varg bloomed them willered, bev troiled to the eight while owen covered to see how objectively pomelo was going over rockdale, noel worked over while uscup came up with her usual quips - has anybody seen those features? try community mkr with hanna and barb was flowed quickly at twelve and sue ndove helped subbies many times, while chief johnson laid out air hoping to breathe life into it later.

COLU m and a half

by david frank

waiting for Santa

It was cold — cold and windy under shining blue skies — Saturday afternoon on Bay St. when a salesman popped his head out the door of the Elgin Motors showroom, looked up and down the street at the line of marchers and shouted in a shrill voice: "Where's Santa Claus! Where's Santa!" He popped back in behind the plate glass, laughing, and eight fellow salesmen, all wearing wide colourful ties and modish double breasted suits, grinned, laughed, poked each other in the elbows and went Yuk Yuk what a wit Yuk Yuk until the guy did it again.

The Santa Claus parade of course had been much earlier in the day and it had gone down Yonge St., bearing Santa Claus into the cavernous Eaton's complex that marks the heart of the city. It was freezing cold, but more than 500,000 people lined the of picket signs rapping against the cold cement overpowers the waltz on a P.A. system. Everyone is milling around waiting for something to happen, speeches, anything. Some singing starts and a circle is formed, going around and around, faster and faster, and singing All We are saying, until everyone is ready to collapse, Is give peace a chance, and everyone sits on the pavement, still singing this hymn until it all begins again, this time with three rings of people, give peace a chance...

Some start shouting On to the Consulate! and a large number, maybe 1,000, start off across the square, under the courthouse singing Solidarity Forever, to University Avenue where the U.S. Consulate is.

A flock of Harley Davidsons races up the street from the south and eight mounted police come galloping down from the north to take up positions between the Consulate and the protesters. It is intimidating to stand three feet from a horse which is one and a half times your height and not standing still. The light changed again and a few more people crossed.

A man with green and white ribbons on

photo by Mark Rubin

Anti-Vietnam protesters, march up and down in front of the American consulate.

streets three and four deep to watch the procession which, for the 65th year this Saturday, was installing Santa Claus in the Queen St. Toyland of a department store. The ritual marks the opening of the shopping season and it is also big business because Eaton's spent $100,000 on it this year.

For Canada the war in Vietnam is also big business: $320 million in 1968. In the last ten years Canadian sales to the U.S. of explosives, bullets, rocket propellants, mines, plus sophisticated electronic and aircraft components total $2.1 billion.

500,000 people watching Santa Claus and maybe 3,000 marching from Queen's Park to City Hall with signs against the war.

Things Santa Claus never saw:

At College and University a boy was sitting on the sidewalk strumming a guitar with his frozen fingers and singing: "Everybody get together got to love one another, right now" and across the street, in front of six streetcars and a sea of automobiles, four mounted Metro police stood waiting, their horses pawing the pavement and defecating warm lumps on the road.

At Gerrard and Bay a couple in their late twenties is standing holding hands at the curbside; him with sunglasses and a crew-cut, her with a semi-serious semi-cynical smile; They are wearing badges saying "Nixon is good for freedom" and "We like capitalism."

The march snaked into City Hall square where it is so cold there are already skaters on the fountain, and the resonant sound his overcoat and a placard saying Freedom and Independence of the Ukraine has joined the march up and down the sidewalk and one of his friends grabs a student by the arm saying with a smile why are you wearing this? and ripping away the armband, and shoving the student back. This happened repeatedly; once there was a scuffle.

We kept on walking up and down, watching the line of 50 police between us and the Consulate, eavesdropping on the walkie-talkie clipped to a policeman's lapel. We're bringing 15 more up from City Hall the wagon is waiting around back, listening to a kid shouting in a hoarse voice MARAT WE'RE POOR DONT MAKE US WAIT ANY MORE WE WANT OUR RIGHTS AND WE DONT CARE HOW WE WANT A REVOLUTION NOW while others chanted POWER TO THE PEOPLE and HO HO HO CHI MINH THE NLF IS GOING TO WIN and a short man passed out evangelical tracts shouting THE CAUSE OF WARS IS NOT MAN BUT HIS SIN THE ONLY REDEMPTION IS IN JESUS CHRIST HALLELUJAH and there were black flags and black armbands and red flags and red armbands, COPS NEED UNIONS TOO, some chuckled while others kept a stern exterior and the plainclothesmen with squashed-in noses were sneering on the steps and the mounted police looked like Tsarist cossacks and we joked about Santa Claus and what would have happened if, that morning, he had waved to a half a million people in Toronto and more all across the continent on television HO HO with a two fingered Peace sign.

HART HOUSE 50

TOOAY

CLASSICAL CONCERT

for Piano and Clarinet

MARY ANN CONOVER

and LYNNE MILNES

Music Room — 1-2 p.m.

Ladies Welcome

CAMERA CLUB

Club Rooms — 1:10 p.m.

MEMBERS COLOUR SHOW

Maximum 4 Slides

AMATEUR RADIO CLUB

VE3UOT

OPEN MEETING

Debate Room — 7:30 p.m.

HART HOUSE GLEE CLUB

WELCOMES NEW MEMBERS

Proposed Tour in May

20 New Members Welcome

Meet us Thursday, November 20

Music Room, Hart House, 5:30 p.m.

ART GALLERY

CANADIAN PAINTINGS

From the Vincent Massey Bequest

To the National Gallery

now showing in the

Hart House Art Gallery

Until November 25

NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL

TICKETS

NOW ON SALE

Anyone Interested in giving a Noon Hour Concert is asked to call Oave Belgue, 465-0706 or

Ross Cullner, 534-8649

ART GALLERY OF ONTARIO

317 Dundas St. W., Toronto

Tel. 363-8185

TONIGHT

AL NEIL TRIO

a 'jazz' trio from Vancouver will perform at 8:30 p.m.

Admission free with ATL card.

HART HOUSE AMATEUR RADIO CLUB

VE3UOT

OPEN MEETING TODAY

7:30 p.m.

DEBATES ROOM

NO EXAMS ON PASSOVER

"Every person an equal member of the community"

IF YOU OBJECT TO EXAMINATIONS BEING SCHEDULED ON PASSOVER

WRITE IN "PASSOVER"

on the form when you confirm courses this month

Hillel Foundation 923-7837 For Information

Commerce and Finance may leave Political Economy Course Union

Commerce and finance students could withdraw from the fledgling Political Economy Course Union, if a recommendation of the Commerce Club is approved at a general meeting tomorrow.

Commerce Club president Bill Sklar (IV UC) said last night the club was unhappy with the way the union was being set up and added that commerce students were afraid their views would not be adequately represented to the department.

The Commerce Club is a voluntary-membership organization which in the past has acted as a quasi-course union for C & F students.

The Political Economy Course Union was originally established last year, but was plagued by poor turnouts to meetings. Following low attendance at a teach-in earlier this term, it was decided to restructure the union before the fall elections.

"You just can't do things on that basis," said Alf Chaiton, president of the PECU. "So we decided to take the issues to the students."

90% REPRESENTATION

"Taking it to the students" was accomplished by asking each class in the department to name a class representative to a general assembly. About 90 per cent of the 85 classes involved now have representatives.

Interest in the new union was highest in the first two years, said Chaiton. "First year students didn't really know what they wanted, but they knew they were concerned. In the upper years it was like pulling teeth — worse — teeth come out," he said.

But last Thursday about 60 rep's met to decide what format the new organization would follow. Basically, one group argued for making the class rep's the supreme legislative body, while others wanted to return to the old system of holding open general meetings to approve policy.

The final decision was in favor of a modified method which would allow anyone to attend and vote at meetings of the general assembly of class representatives.

A future meeting will choose members to an executive committee.

It was at Thursday's meeting that Chaiton first learned that commerce might pull out of the new union.

MEETING TOMORROW

Sklar said the meeting tomorrow would decide if C & F would stay in, and if the decision was to withdraw, a committee would be set up to examine alternatives. One possibility would be for commerce students to form their own course union.

Chaiton said he hoped the commerce faction would decide to stay in the union, but added "It's up to them. We've argued until we're blue in the face. They don't seem to realize it's not in our best interests to have them in, politically, but we want the whole department together."

Tomorrow's meeting is in Room 2118, Sidney Smith Hall, at 1 p.m.

METRO ELECTIONS ISSUES

EXPERTS WILL DISCUSS THEM

IN ROOM 2106 SID SMITH 1 P.M.

TODAY UNIVERSITY EXPANSION

THURS. NOV. 20 WELFARE INSTITUTIONS

HAVE YOU TASTED THE ZUMBURGER EXPERIENCE?

ZUMBURGER

Two groovy little restaurants at Bloor and Yonge, and Bloor and Bay

3 new locations opening soon

Centre for the Study of Drama Faculty of Music

Department of East Asian Studies present

THE BUDAYA TROUPE FROM INDONESIA

The Performing Arts of Bali, Java and Sunda presented by

The American Society for Eastern Arts

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 26 at 8:30

MacMILLAN THEATRE

Edward Johnson Building

Tickets $3.00 Box Office 928-3744 Students $1.50

1] S T H R A U P E R

9 P.C. R & B

DANCE

2] C A T H E L I S T

2 BANDS

NEW COLLEGE SAT. 8:30
NOV. 22 (WETMORE HALL)

CHICKS $1 CHUCKS $1.50 CHUMPS $3

N.C. DRAMA GUILD PRESENTS
JEAN ANOUILH
MEDEA

DIRECTED BY ALEXANDRA MERCET

NOV. 20 & 21 8:30 P.M.

NEW COLLEGE WILSON HALL

The Centre for the Study of Drama presents

IN THE BEGINNING
the first play in the cycle

Back to Methuselah
by George Bernard Shaw
directed by Robert Gill
and

A SANTA CLAUS MASQUE
by e. e. cummings
directed by Sheldon Clark
Studia Theatre
4 Glen Morris
November 18, 19, 20, 21, 22
8:30 p.m.
admission free

Groovy crimes all in day's work to criminologist

By JOHN GLADKI

Dog turd and trousers as evidence in a criminal investigation? Sure. Take the case of the person who rapes a little old lady while kneeling in dog turd.

Prof. Joseph D. Nichol, administrator of the Criminal Justice Curriculum at the University of Chicago, was speaking to about 100 ambitious Canadian chemists at U of T's plush Faculty Club last night.

New trends in today's youth movement cause difficulties for criminologists. Take hair for example. An investigator used to be able to tell the sex of the criminal by the length of a hair. Now with unisex the problem becomes more difficult.

He added that criminology is not a topic for table conversation. Criminologists must have "intestinal fortitude for the intestines one will have to look at," he said.

Nichols also showed slides of groovy crimes that he had investigated with "no apologies for the way they may look."

There were some real life pictures of gory crimes; suicides, homicides, mother rapings, father rapings.

There was a picture of a marijuana plant and a ragweed plant, almost indistinguishable. "Many a narcotics agent will run into the bush and kill ragweed plants, all in vain," said Nichol.

The "nares" know about cut-out books for storing joints. Nichol showed a picture of such a book complete with three well rolled cigarettes.

The name of the book was "College and Conscience".

Another picture showed a homicide which resulted from a family quarrel. The husband went out on Christmas Day to see a stag movie. After he came home his wife told him that she did not feel that this was the proper way to spend the holidays. "She then took out her peashooter pistol to emphasize her point."

An unrecognizable, mouldy bear paw kept some of Nichol's coborts occupied for months trying to figure out which crime it was connected with. It was found to have traces of boney... obviously a thief.

Probe lays memorial to dirty Don

Members of U of T's Pollution Probe continued to mourn the demise of the Don River yesterday during a demonstration in front of the Parliament Buildings.

The Probe group, accompanied by the Lady Godiva Memorial Band, marched to Queen's Park at 1 p.m. carrying a green plastic garbage can implanted in a plaster base. Inside the can was Don River water.

In a brief speech, Probe member, Martin Daly (SGS) said the Don River's funeral, held Sunday, had been called "too negativistic... (bolding) no hope for the future."

"An official of the Don Valley Conservation Authority said the authority had spent several million dollars to clean up the Don," he said.

"But the efforts of these sincere, intelligent people has obviously failed," he added.

He called for government intervention in the control of pollution.

After a brief speech, Probe executive member, Geoff

Mains, also called for government action.

The group was barred entrance to the Parliament Buildings, but they left a book of Don River mourners' names to be delivered to George Kerr, Minister of Energy and Resources.

Stop being a watery-eyed student!

Might make people think you're sorrowing for the whole world—it's probably just your eyes. Go get them tested, then come and see us at Braddock Optical. We've got the greatest selection of frames you'll ever look through. And as a student you get 20% off. Our nearest branch—just around the corner at 158 St. George. Come and see!

The Opera Department
presents
The Toronto Premiere
of

L'ENFANT ET LES SORTILEGES

(In English)

Opera by Ravel

Poem by Colette

November 20, 21, 22, 23

at 8:30 p.m.

MacMillan Theatre
Edward Johnson Building
(Queen's Park, behind Planetarium)

University of Toronto

Tickets $2.00

Students $1.00

Box Office—928-3744

Hoechst is Chemistry

And plenty of it. Hoechst has more than a full century of research and achievement in chemistry to draw upon—products and ideas that have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents.

But big as we are in chemistry, we're more than just chemistry. We're medicine too, and engineering and plastics and dyestuffs. And marketing. And ideas. Ideas most of all. Ideas about the future, about people's needs and wants. About how to meet those needs and wants. Good ideas, young ideas. Your ideas maybe.

If you'd like to know more about Canadian Hoechst, write our Head Office.

CANADIAN HOECHST LIMITED

3400 JEAN TALON STREET WEST MONTREAL • ASSOCIATES OF FARBERWERKE HOECHST AG, WEST GERMANY

A CENTURY OF SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT THROUGH RESEARCH

M-2289A

G S U FRIDAY NIGHT DANCE

Nov. 21st - 9:00 p.m.
BAR & FOOD

Music by: "The Undergrads"
(everyone over 21 years welcome, students, staff and friends)
Admission: $1 - ladies
$1.25 cents

16 Bancroft Ave. (923-2391)

HART HOUSE GLEE CLUB WELCOMES NEW MEMBERS

PROPOSED TOUR IN MAY
20 NEW MEMBERS WELCOME

Meet us THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 20th

MUSIC ROOM

HART HOUSE at 5:30 P.M.

Lecture by

MARGARET LAURENCE
University Writer-in-Residence

HALF WAR / HALF PEACE

The working regulations between writer and publisher

Concert Hall, Edward Johnson Building
Thursday, Nov. 20, at 4:30 p.m.

CLASSIFIEDS

SALTY DOG Discotheque will rent premises Monday to Thursday day or evening. For information call A. Curry 964-7060 or 633 2677

ESSAYS These, typed professionally on electric machine. Paper supplied 30¢ per page. Close to campus. 79 Madison Ave. Phone 922-8564 after six. Ask for Loree

NEED A ROOM? 2 vacancies available for males on co-op residence. Call Innes College 528-2512 or drop in at 63 St George Street, Room 202

DIAMOND RINGS FROM IMPORTER. High quality, low prices. Call 368-9474 for a private appointment, under no obligation

WANTED: one person to share 3 bed room flat $50 a month 456-3318

Typing french, other languages. Memes, graphing, electric typewriters. Mary Dale Scott 1M Daves 86 Bloor St W Room 225. 922-7524

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Day you buy a diamond". H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St W., Suite 416, 921-7702

COME BACK SUZANNE. You can't leave now. I need a date for the Cannonball next week. Sam

LOST - Black briefcase containing notes and books - in the basement of University College. Please return notes at least. Reward Phone 92D-8163

LOST: Ladies gold watch with inscription on St George Nov 13/69 Phone 423-5688

SURPRISINGLY attractive room in grm, but interesting house. Full kitchen facilities. $50/mo. Walking distance to school - if B. DeWille movie production. Tonight in you're energetic. Dundas & Jarvis area. Room 2118 of Sid Smith Bldg - 379-9577

NIGHT THEY Raided Minsky's Move at Wetmore Hill New College 2 showings 8:30 & 9:00 PM Sun Nov 23 Admission $1 at door

"BELLY BUTTON" Coffee Shop Discotheque New College - Wilson Hall Shack Bar 10 pm every Fri & Sat Stag 50¢ Drag 75¢

DANCE - Double Dynamite 2 Bands at Wetmore Hall - New College 8:30 Sat Nov 22 Lamps $1 Wolves $1 50 Fish $3 $1 00 cheap!

CRACKERS AND CHEESE - a fantastic musical revue - Sunday, Nov. 23, 8:30 PM - Wilson Hall Dining Hall, N.C. - $1 00 cheap!

HOUSE On Major St. To share with two students. Phone 922-5798 or materialize at 33 Major.

COUNTER help needed to 5 days per week, room to 2 00 P.M. Bloor University Area. Pay $3 plus lunch per day. Phone 445-0040.

MEN WANTED to sing good music with a chamber choir. Phone J. Schreiber, 928-6171. 536-5019

RESEARCH Project on snow storms requests helpers to conduct evening telephone interviews. A few evenings only. Attractive rate of pay. If interested telephone Prof. Burton or Mrs. Goodwille 928-3379

FAR from the Madcap Crowd 8 P.M. Friday Nov 21 at Faculty of Food Science Bloor at Avenue Rd 75¢ free popcorn. Bring your own pillow.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS - Cecil B. DeWille movie production. Tonight in room 2118 of Sid Smith Bldg - 379-9577

Admission 76¢ at door. All welcome

HERE AND NOW

TODAY
ALL DAY

Submit color slides by Tuesday noon to Hart House Hall Porter for judging on Wednesday. See Club Bulletin board for field trip

NOON

Tickets for Hart at 10 per cent discount for dates Jan 28 and Jan 29. Inns College Rm. 109 63 St George Math and Physics society and course union presents the film "Matter Waves" Rm 102 New Physics Bldg

1 p.m.

Members Color show with cash prizes Hart House Camera Club
U of T Bahans invite you to find out about their way of life. Topic: The Down of a New Age Rm 204 UC
Yavneh Presents Allan Haber who will give a talk on Parshat Vitzlam Rm 2129 Sidney Smith
Seminar on university expansion. Panel to include members of the Huron-Sussex residence assoc and Prof. Forester and Keele Gregory Rm. 2106 Sidney Smith

1.16 p.m.

TCDS lunch hour theatre "The Intruder" by Maurice Maeterlink. Directed by Martha Mackinson. Admission free. Cortwright Hall, St. Hilda's College Devonshire Pl.

3.40 p.m.

"Stability of Differentially Rotating Stars" speaker Mr. Peter Bierman, Max Plank Institut fur Physik und Astrophysik Rm. 202 McLennan Physical Laboratories.

4.10 p.m.

Physical Science Graduate Students attend Division III meeting today to determine action on CUG Report. Seneca chamber.

6 p.m.

Singing auditions for "West Side Story" Music Practice Room (5B) Wetmore Hall.

7 p.m.

SAC meeting Wilson Hall.

Cecil B. De Mille's "The Ten Commandments" Admission 75¢ Rm 2118 Sidney Smith

Hart House Amateur Radio Club VE3UDT open house, Debates Room Hart House

Mathematics and Physics society and course union present Prof. K.D. May lecture "All about Gauss" Rm. 203 New Physics Bldg

8 p.m.

F U of T Third World Film and Discussion group. More propaganda. USA Film Club. Wats. International Student Centre 33 St George.

Vic Classics Club meeting. Dr. Graham will speak and show slides on "The Isles of Greece" Wymwold Music Room.

8.30 p.m.

The Bob Revue "The Emperors' New Clothes" by John Bemrose and Tom Plaut. New Vic Theatre, Rm. 3, New Academic Bldg.

THURSDAY

1 p.m.

Medical, Arts and Science society discussion and involvement meeting on Bill 194 Auditorium, Medical Sciences Bldg.
Dept of History and History Students Union sponsoring a lecture by James Duran on North American Indian Policy. New College 1016

Yavneh presents Rabbi Emmanuel Farman of Shariel Shomayim who will speak on "Woman's Role in Jewish Life - Emancipation or Subjugation" Rm 2129 Sidney Smith

1 p.m.

Ad Hoc committee to plan demonstration for Dec. 4 to demand release of the two Israeli passengers held in Syria. Rm. 2127 Sidney Smith

1.16 p.m.

TCDS lunch hour theatre "The Intruder" by Maurice Maeterlink. Admission free. Cortwright Hall, St. Hilda's College. Devonshire Pl.

3 p.m.

CUG programming committee meeting. Senate Chambers, Simcoe Hall

4 p.m.

Meeting of the Latin American Studies Course Union, Rm. 622 Sidney Smith.

4.10 p.m.

"Neutron Scattering and Liquid State Physics" Dr. Peter A. Egelstaff of Atomic Energy Establishment Harwell, England. Rm. 102 McLennan Physical Laboratories.

6.15 p.m.

Varsity Christian Fellowship meeting cancelled in lieu of Saturday's Roller skate

8 p.m.

Acting auditions for "West Side Story" Rm. 2002 Wilson Hall, New College.

7 p.m.

Seminar groups re: Crisis in Israel. 186 St. George St

7.30 p.m.

"Mathematics and Physics Society and Course Union presents Prof. K. O. May giving a lecture on "Karl F. Gauss" free refreshments. Rm. 203 New Physics Bldg.
U of T Red Cross general meeting. Music Room International Students Centre University of Toronto Graduate Wine-Making Guild - Investigating Fastings. Graduate Students Union upper lounge.

7.30 p.m.

U of T Flying Club open meeting. Mr. H. Cunningham, president of Experimental Aircraft Association - on Home Built Aircraft. Music Room, Hart House.

8.15 p.m.

Royal conservatory of Music Silver Medals Presentation and Concert. Concert Hall 273 Bloor St. West.

8.30 p.m.

New College Drama Guild presents Medea by Jean Anouilh, directed by Alexandre Mercer. New College, Wilson Hall.
ASU Poverty Symposium Dialogue between anthropologists, spanning anthropologists and poor people about the academic scribe poor people campaign. Dept. of Anthropology.

8.30 p.m.

The Opera Dept. presents "L'Enfant et Les Sortilèges" by Maurice Favé - In English. Tickets $2 and students $1 at box office Macmillan theatre.

Open Window HANDICRAFTS

Reasonably priced:

- IMPORTED TOYS
- THEATRE POSTERS
- ESKIMO ART
- "IN" JEWELRY & ACCESSORIES

585 MARKHAM STREET
(Village)

York's McLaughlin

Movie Club

Presents

W. C. Fields

&

Bob Hope

In

"Big Broadcast of '38"

Plus Marx Brothers in

"Monkey Business"

Thursday, Nov. 20th

at 9 p.m.

Lecture Hall D

Admission $1

INSTITUTE FOR THE HISTORY AND PHILOSOPHY OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

"Motion in the Void: Aquinas and Averroes" by James A. Weisheipl, O.P., S.T.L., Ph.D., D.Phil. (Oxon), Professor of Philosophy, Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies, University of Toronto.

21st November 1:10 p.m. Room 202 McLennan Laboratory (New Physics Building)

Sponsored by the Varsity Fund. All members of the University Community are invited.

STUDENTS' ADMINISTRATIVE COUNCIL

GENERAL COUNCIL MEETING
WILSON HALL COMMON ROOM
- NEW COLLEGE

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 19th
7:00 P.M.

ALL WELCOME TO ATTEND

Excellent archery clinic this weekend

By KIT KOEHLER

An Indian uprising or a Rob-in Hood convention?

Well, neither. Just some of the many enthusiastic archers coming to the exciting Archery Clinic on tap at the WAB this weekend.

All U of T students (including the men) will be admitted FREE as spectators or participants.

The clinic is designed for every possible level of interest and ability, from the novice to those with serious hopes of making the '72 Olympic team.

The WAA have managed to attract the best archery coaches in North America for the clinic — Lura Wilson and Bill Bednar.

Mrs. Wilson, a former American champion, is a director of the internationally regarded Teela-Wooket Archery Camp in Vermont, while Bill Bednar has won more tournaments in the last ten years than any other professional archer in the U.S.

The clinic program begins Friday at 7 p.m. and continues all day Saturday from 9 a.m.

All students and even faculty types interested in archery should make plans to be there. . . it should be the most valuable archery clinic ever held in the Toronto area, and like we said, it's free.

photo by kit koehler

VolleyBlues a solid second

By UNCLE CHARLIE

At the mid-point of the regular season, after tournaments at Western Nov. 8, and McMaster last Saturday, the Blues volleyball team finds itself solidly entrenched in second place.

Blues were really hot at Western for all but their last game which they gave away to the McMaster team. Blues started quickly by downing Western in two hard-fought games, then coasted to an easy win, 15-1, in their first game with Waterloo.

The second Waterloo game was almost a disaster as the Warriors suddenly caught fire before being subdued 15-11. Waterloo went on to cause Guelph Gryphons, the league's most solid team, a great deal of trouble before being defeated.

Blues themselves got fired up for their games with Guelph and after losing a close one, 15-11, came back to hand the Gryphons their only defeat. Blues' match with McMaster was anti-climatic and the ease of winning the first game led to the final defeat.

Thus Guelph, with a 7-1 record topped the league, followed closely by Blues at 6-2 with the others trailing in this order: McMaster, 4-4; Western, 3-5; and an unfortunate Waterloo squad, 0-8, though they were rarely outclassed.

Last Saturday at Hamilton, Blues play was unprintably sloppy, compared to the previous week. Miraculously, though, all the other teams were off too and the Blues didn't suffer badly with their 5-3 record.

Blues met and squeaked by Waterloo 15-13, 15-12; then fell prey to Guelph 15-5, 15-1. After that humiliating loss to Guelph, who was also playing poorly, Blues settled down somewhat and took both games with Western 15-11, 15-7.

In the first game here Blues top set-up man, Alex Kovaloff, badly sprained his ankle coming down off a block. His services will be lost for the rest of the season, so he was immediately elected team manager, in keeping with the tradition of the last three years. Blues again split with McMaster by letting up after winning the first game.

Today the third of four round-robin tournaments is being held at Waterloo. To take first place Blues must produce successive 3-0 records in both tournaments, which means beating Guelph in all their future encounters.

Blues are capable of this; they only have to realize it. In any event, the Blues must put a lot more hustle into their game if they want to make the OQAA finals this year.

LET'S TALK ABOUT SAVING YOU MONEY ON YOUR DIAMOND RING

GETTING ENGAGED?

You don't need a masters degree in marketing to know that the more hands a product passes through the more it costs the final consumer. The reverse is also true. We are "Direct" Diamond Dealers. We import our own goods and sell on a "Direct" basis. Because of this we can and do sell well below the established market structure. If you're in the market for a diamond ring drop in and compare for yourself. Ask for me personally.

(Alternately, we would be pleased to send you our free booklet "The Doy You Buy a Diamond")

WE ARE DIRECT DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.

DIAMOND DEALERS

131 BLOOR'W.
STE. 416

921-7702

..... if you wonder where your mother goes every morning . . . I'll tell you . . . she hos o port time job cooking of meat ond pototoesond she just won't quit she soys she's worried you're not eoting properly 338 huron street of horbord

GRADUATING IN 1970?

ARTS AND COMMERCE STUDENTS INTERESTED IN CAREERS IN

- ADMINISTRATIVE MANAGEMENT
- ACTUARIAL SCIENCE
- SALES AND SALES MANAGEMENT

will be interviewed at the Placement Office

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 24

Metropolitan Life

THE BALL IS IN
HART HOUSE
NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL
TICKETS - HALL PORTER
& UNDERGRADUATE OFFICE

Poverty Parasites Gathering

Thursday, Nov. 20, 8:30 p.m.
Dept. of Anthropol Library
Prof. Carstens, Philpot, Wallman and kids
Be There.

Lecture by

James A. Duran

TOPIC: U.S. Experience with the Termination of Federal Responsibility for Indians:
A Tragic Failure

Thursday Nov. 20, 1 p.m. -

Room 1016 New College

Informal gathering

2:00 p.m. Room 3050 Sid Smith

Sponsored by HSU & Dept. of History

College Bowl is real championship battle

By PAUL CARSON

It's taken five years, but the College Bowl organizers can finally boast of a true national championship battle for their annual Varsity Stadium extravaganza.

Until this year, the Bowl game has been plagued by sloppy organizing, some incredibly amateurish publicity campaigns, uncertain co-operation from several conferences and schools, and lousy weather.

The College Bowl committee can't be expected to do much about the climate, but they have assembled the two best college football teams in Canada to battle for a genuine championship Friday night.

University of Manitoba Bisons are undefeated in season and playoff competition; they averaged over 33 points per game and yielded on the average slightly less than 12.

McGill Redmen, Yates Cup

winners as champs of the SIFL, lost only one game, 17-16, to Varsity in early October.

In eight games, Tom Mooney's crew scored 210 points while a stingy defence allowed but 58, including two shutouts.

In College Bowl semi-finals last weekend, McGill played its usual powerful physical war of attrition while sweeping aside New Brunswick 20-8 and Manitoba recovered from a shaky start to crush Windsor 41-7.

SIFL rushing leader and MVP, Dave Fleiszer, led the potent McGill ground attack through the mud of Halifax Stadium, but it took a rare Redman pass, 47 yards from Dan Smith to speedy flanker Pete Bender, to turn the tide in the fourth quarter.

The sturdy McGill defence picked off four UNB passes and set up the final touchdown late in the game.

Only UNB scores came on a 65-yard punt return and a safety touch.

Out West, the underdog Lancers grabbed an early 7-0 lead, but Manitoba stormed back with a 28-point second half turning the close game into a rout.

Like McGill, the Manitoba attack is essentially along the ground, and centers around scatback Dennis Hrycaiko. Bisons amassed 308 yards rushing against Windsor, and passed only when necessary.

Friday's game is thus the classic showdown between two powerful running attacks stacked up against two defences skilled at stopping the run.

Both teams are vulnerable to a polished passing attack, but neither Manitoba's Bob Kramer nor the McGill duo of Smith and George Wall is a proven consistent aerial threat.

Since the weather and field conditions almost dictate a concentrated running attack, it will be strength pitted against strength, with the winner truly Canada's number one college team.

Special student tickets are on sale from noon at the Stadium. Game time is 8 p.m. Friday night.

Coming Events of U. of T. FLYING CLUB

1. Open Meeting, Thurs. Nov. 20
7:30 P.M. Music Rm. Hart
House Guest Speaker: Mr. H.
Cunningham from Experimental Aircraft Assn. Topic:
"Hornbill Aircraft"
2. Last Breakfast Flight of 1959
Destinations: Open for sugestions
Time: Sat. Nov. 22, 10:00 A.M.
4 Pilots so far, room for 12 passengers for Pilots and Nonpilots interested in flying

ROLLER SKATE

SATURDAY, NOV. 22

FIRST

MEET AT VIC

WYMLWOOD

6:30 P.M.

LATER
TO
THE TERRACE

SKATE
AT GROUP RATES

Varsity Christian Fellowship

CANADIAN COLLEGE BOWL

FRI. NOV. 21

8.30 P.M.

VARSITY STADIUM

THE COLLEGE FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP OF CANADA

McGILL

VS

MANITOBA

PROCEEDS GO TO THE
CANADIAN SAVE THE CHILDREN FUND

Parade and College Bowl Queen

Tickets $1.00 and $1.50

Available at SAC Office

Interfac Hockey Begins

By COLIN PILMER

With football season drawing to a close, interfac hockey began last week.

Most teams have already played at least two games and standings in all four groups are taking shape.

In group 1, Sr. Eng. and SMC "A" are tied on top with two wins and one tie each in three games.

Hawes scored 3 for Sr. Eng. in a 5-1 win over Trinity; Currie and Maloney tallied in a 2-0 shutout of PHE.

SMC won two close games, 3-2 over Law and 1-0 over Vic on McCann's goal. In Monday's battle for first place neither Sr. Eng. nor SMC could score and the game ended in a 0-0 tie.

After three games Vic is in second place with four points. They beat Trin 4-1 and Law 5-0 before losing to St. Mike's.

PHE (Cyr, Ellis, Nelson) shutout Law 3-0 to even it's record at 1-1. Law and Trinity remain winless.

In group 2 Meds "A" and Erindale each registered a win and a tie.

Erindale (Perry 2, Ryan 2, Robb, Brady) downed defending Interfac champion Dents (Koutsaris, Akiama, Hustwitt) 6-3 in their first game then tied Meds 3-3. Meds had previously beaten SMC "B" 3-0.

Dents, Scar, and Bus all have one win and one loss. Dents beat Scar 6-3, Scar topped Bus 3-1, and Bus blanked SMC "B" 5-0. St. Mike's dropped two games, unable to score a goal.

In group 3 PHE "B" is on top with two wins. They beat Vic II 3-1 and Law II 4-2.

Other group 3 scores: For 4, Jr. Eng. 2; For 2, Dev. House 2; U.C. 3, Jr. Eng. 1; Dev. House 2, Vic II 1.

Women's Gym and Basketball

By NAN FLINDALL

Bluette gymnasts were in action Saturday as York came to Toronto for a duel Invitational Meet. York U is top dog in gymnastic circles. Their coach is Yugoslav national coach, and the team carries two ex-Canadian team members.

Against such odds, Toronto made a surprisingly good showing (not surprising to coach Carol-Ann Letheren) running up 135.6 points to York's 147.5.

Tops for Toronto were Susan Christilaw, with two seconds on bars and vaulting; Marty Kemeny, second and third on floor and beam; and Connie Lindemberger, with 28.5 individual points. Although York captured four firsts, the Toronto team showed more depth.

The gals go to Ottawa this weekend, then have a return meet at York before competing in the WITCA competitions here January 31.

Varsity Senior Basketbelles ecked out a meagre win against York Saturday morning 26-23.

Joanne Petzell tallied nine points for Varsity, but play was scrubby and neither team seemed to click.

The Blue-belles finished the first half with a 15-1 lead, but York came back in the second half to dog the Bluettes, who managed to hold them off in the dying minutes of play.

(Hey gals, settle on one nickname, please; with Basketbelles, Blue-belles and Bluettes, it's getting kinda confusing - editor).

APPLICATIONS FOR GRADUATE STUDENT REPRESENTATIVES

- COMMITTEE TO IMPLEMENT THE CAMPBELL REPORT - one appointment
- USERS' COMMITTEE OF THE GRADUATE COMPLEX - six appointments (the planning of the Graduate Residence and student centre)
- PRESENTIAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON THE TRIMESTER SYSTEM - one appointment
- PRESENTIAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON STUDENT HOUSING - two appointments
- GSU-CUG REVIEW BOARD - open
- EXECUTIVE CHAIRMAN (for weekly meetings, with remuneration)

Send applications to: G.S.U. Policy Committee, 16 Bancraft Ave., Toronto 5 (928-2391 & 928-6233)

Deadline Friday, November 21st - 5:00 p.m.

ESSAYS TO WRITE?

When you find it difficult to decide how to find information you need, we can help. The Reference Department conducts general reference seminars, the Science and Medicine reference staff gives special subject seminars and the circulation staff will clear a path for you through the stacks. Plan ahead and get some help from the University of Toronto

LIBRARY

EXPORT "A"

Canada's Finest

FILTER

Cigarette

REGULAR AND KINGS

WATER POLO OFFICIALS WANTED!

Apply now at Intramural office, Hart House.
Schedule starts December 2nd.

SPORTS SCHEDULES - WEEK OF NOV. 24TH

HOCKEY

Mon. Nov 24	12:30 Music vs IV Ind A Barnhouse, Westlake
	1:30 Law IV vs St M D Barnhouse, Westlake
	7:00 Trin A vs Law I Bullock, Fraser
	8:15 Jr Eng vs Dev Hse Bullock, Fraser
	9:30 Campus Co-op vs New I Bullock, Miller
	10:30 IV Mech vs Dent B Bullock, Miller
Tues Nov 25	1:30 PHE, C vs Vic IV Seckington, Kolin
	7:00 Arch vs Knox Richardson, Murray
	8:15 Inns I vs Pharm A Richardson, Murray
	9:30 Law II vs For A Wright, Nelson
	10:30 III Cwll vs Emman Wright, Nelson
Wed Nov 26	12:30 III Eng Sc vs Pharm B Gordon, Allen
	1:30 St M C vs Tnn B Gordon, Allen
	7:00 Enn vs St M B Sullivan, Dubnack
	8:15 Scar vs Med A Sullivan, Dubnack
	9:30 Vic IX vs Med D Ellis, Nebata
	10:30 Bus II vs IV Cwll Ellis, Nebata
Thur Nov 27	12:30 Eng I Yr vs II Ind Kolin, Seckington
	7:00 Vic I vs Sr Eng Hemphill, Klink
	8:15 Bus I vs Dent A Hemphill, Klink
	9:30 Dent E vs Vic X Cyr, Koutsaris
	10:30 For B vs IV Chem A Cyr, Koutsaris
Fri Nov 28	12:30 PHE A vs St M A Richardson, Bertrand
	1:30 U C I vs Vic II Richardson, Bertrand
	5:00 IV Eng Sc vs Vic VII Titus, Percell

BASKETBALL

Wed Nov 26	1:00 U C I vs Sr Eng Hummel, Schwartz
	4:00 Inns I vs St M B A Sternberg, Schwartz
	6:30 Med B vs PHE B Blinck, Hafner
	7:30 SGS vs Enn II Blinck, L Sternberg, Hafner
	8:30 Law I vs Scar Hafner, L Sternberg, Blinck
Thur Nov 27	6:30 Vic I vs Med A Doug Mockford, Don Mockford
Sat Nov 29	12:00 Dent A vs Tnn A Tessis, Saltzman
	1:30 St M A vs PHE A Chapnick, Tessis

VOLLEYBALL

Mon. Nov 24	4:30 Wyc vs Emman Orav
	5:30 U C vs Eng II Orav
Tues Nov. 25	7:30 Dent B vs For B Horenblas
	8:30 Scar vs Tnn Horenblas
Wed Nov. 26	5:00 St M vs Bus Gesing
	6:00 PHE vs Pharm Gesing
	7:00 Emman vs Knox Senkiw
	8:00 New vs Enn Senkiw
	9:00 Dent A vs Vic Senkiw
Thur Nov 27	7:00 Med vs Eng I Bodnaruk
	8:00 Knox vs Arch Bodnaruk
	9:00 For A vs Inns Bodnaruk

SQUASH

Tues Nov 25	6:20 Law A vs Eng I
	7:00 Tnn A vs Vic I
	7:40 Wyc vs For
	8:20 Vic II vs Dent
Wed Nov 26	7:00 Law B vs Med A
	7:40 Tnn B vs Inns
	8:20 St M B vs New
Thur Nov 27	6:20 PHE vs St M A
	7:00 Scar vs SGS
	7:40 Eng II vs Med B

Blues' blunders key to 4-4 tie with York Yeomen

By PAUL CARSON

Varsity Blues continued to play give-away hockey at the Arena last night and it twice cost them chances to defeat their new nemesis, York University Yeomen.

With Blues ahead 3-2 early in the final period, the Varsity defense persisted in donating the puck to Yeomen wingers behind the Toronto net.

After a half-dozen or so of these hand-outs, York's Steve Latinovitch flipped a loose puck behind Blues rookie goaltender, Lanky Grant Cole, and it was 3-3.

But Varsity wasn't quite finished.

LEN BURMAN
Second Period Goal

With less than five minutes to play, rookie winger Bill Buba cut behind the York defense but a retreating Yeomen rearguard piled him into York goalie Bill Holden.

As the three became progressively entangled in the crease, Blues center John Wright slid the puck into the net.

Blues, however, had more generosity to bestow, and eighty seconds later the game was again tied as York rookie Licio Cengarle was allowed to cruise unopposed in front of Cole.

Cengarle calmly deflected Rodger Bowness' perfect pass into the net for the final goal of the night.

Both teams had excellent chances to outch the winner in the last twenty seconds.

York managed a two-on-one break and Cole was forced to make an outstanding save; on the return rush, Paul Laurent tested Holden with a sharp backhand with but one second remaining.

Blues lost to York last year 3-1 in the initial game in the new rivalry, and based on last night's sloppy effort, they might never win.

York has a swift-skating team that forechecks with devilish authority but the Yeomen simply don't have Blues experience or shooting ability.

Keys to the York attack are Latinovitch, a former Junior A star with St. Catharines, and former Varsity captain and ace penalty-killer, Murray Stroud.

Stroud, now enrolled at Osgoode

Hall, was up to his usual tricks last night, hounding Blues in their own end and setting up his wingers with numerous accurate passes.

He provided the rebound for Latinovitch's power-play goal in the second period and supplied the pass for the goal in the third which tied the game 3-3.

Bowness opened the scoring for York in the first period, poking in a rebound during Blues first penalty, and Toronto rookie Mike Cyr evened things on a similar play at 19:10 with Yeomen playing shorthanded.

Only solid goaltending from Holden kept York in the game during the opening stanza as Blues outshot Yeomen 21-7 and both teams successfully killed double minors.

Blues had only six shots at Holden in the second period but made two of them count as Burman and Buba bracketed deflections around Latinovitch's first goal.

Overall, Blues had the edge in shots, 36-28.

However, it was definitely not a good night for Varsity as Blues made countless elementary mistakes and were continually caught far out of position.

Most glaring offender was massive defenceman Dave Field, who appeared to be skating about in a daze, took two stupid penalties, and was generally a liability on every shift.

Blues will spend the weekend in New York State, visiting traditional rivals

Clarkson and St. Lawrence. Coach Tom Watt obviously will use both games to rid Blues of their appalling habit of handing grateful opponents many cheap goals.

BLUESNOTES. . . York boasts three graduates of the famed St. Mike's hockey system, defencemen Roger Gallipeau and Ed Zuceato plus winger Brian Dunn. . . Yeomen also have Dave Kosoy who played Jr. A at Peterboro and Cornell grad Ken Smith. . . three stars were Stroud, Buba and Latinovitch. . . Blues next home game is the SIHL season opener against Western Mustangs on Friday Nov. 28.

MURRAY STROUD
New York's Captain

Vic, PhysEd roll to easy semi-final victories

By LYNDON LITTLE

It will be Vic and PhysEd in the Muck Cup final next Wednesday afternoon.

The form chart held yesterday afternoon as both teams slogged through the mud and rain to gain convincing victories. Vic downed Forestry 18-2 and PhysEd followed with a 18-0 triumph over Dents.

Although neither team ran up a big score, they both won by a sizeable margin on the statistic sheet. Vic had 274 yards in total offense to Forestry's 49, while PhysEd picked up 271 to the Dent's 155.

With the heavy rain precluding a successful pass attack, coaches Keith Johnson of PhysEd and Tony Speciale of Vic eschewed the aerial route and used their big fullbacks to grind out the yardage.

Vic 18 Forestry 2

The only sizeable ground gains came on straight ahead dives and counters between the tackles as the atrocious footing doomed the end sweeps.

CARROLL SHINES

Bruce Carroll of Vic handled the ball a whopping 24 times as he picked up 159 yards, most of them against the left side of the Forestry defensive line. Dave Rae, Carroll's counterpart in the PhysEd backfield, carried 13 times for 82 yards.

John Baird of Vic was good on 3 of his 7 pass attempts for 40 yards, while Ray Giza of Forestry hit on 6 of 16 for 49 yards.

John Osborne of PhysEd was 2 for 5 for 16 yards while the Dent's Al Jones completed 3 of his 4 attempts for 29 yards.

VIC QB JOHN BAIRD

The first quarter of the Vic-Forestry game was scoreless but early in the second Carroll capped a 69-yard drive in 9 plays by smashing eight yards off left tackle for a major.

Forestry came back before the half with two singles on punts by Bruce Pamplin to close the margin to 6-2.

LONG PASS

Vic took the second half kickoff and marched 56 yards in only three plays for their second touchdown. A 35-yard pass from Baird to Peter Wade gave Vic a first down on the Forestry eighteen. From there, Carroll romped in for the score on the next play.

Peter White on a 10-yard counter play to the right in the fourth quarter completed the scoring.

Vic missed the converts on all three touchdowns.

PhysEd scored on their first series. They took the ball on the Dent's 40 following a short punt and six plays later Rae plunged one yard over right tackle. Grant Tadman's convert was good.

PHE 18 Dents 0

Before the half, PhysEd added a single following a Doug Neave punt and a safety touch when Dent punter Gary Kushner fumbled a punt snap in his own end zone to run up a 10-0 lead.

Just as Vic had done, PhysEd scored early in the third quarter to put the game out of reach. On the first play after the opening kickoff had been returned to the 34, halfback Gord Harvey broke away on a 89-yard counter play to the left for a major. Osborne fumbled the ensuing convert attempt but recovered and threw to tight end Ross Kleberg for two points and a final score of 18-0.

16 campuses will meet to plan new national union

OTTAWA (CUP) — At least 16 major universities will meet here in late December to discuss starting another national student union.

Hugh Segal, vice-president of the University of Ottawa Student Council, said yesterday he sent invitations to all Canadian universities after the Canadian Union of Students folded last month.

So far Segal says he has received affirmative replies from 15 universities, including Sir George Williams, McGill, Montreal, Queens, Western, Waterloo, York, Windsor, Dalhousie, Brock and Mt. Allison.

Several Western Universities have said they will also attend the conference.

Gus Abols, University of Toronto students' council President, says he was aware of the discussions although he has received no formal correspondence.

SAC will probably discuss sending delegates at its next meeting.

"There is clearly a need for a national organization," Abols said, but it must be one that does not impose its political beliefs on the students.

Segal said the conference was called to see if Canadian university students want some kind of national organization. But it will be up to the individual universities to make recommendations.

"Whatever is proposed, we must steer clear of the political pitfalls that destroyed CUS," he added

THE varsity

VOLUME 90, NO 25
November 21, 1969

TORONTO

inside

Teachers going militant? • page 19

University as octopus ?

Local residents attack U of T expansion plans

By TOM WALKOM

"You (the Huron-Sussex Residents Association) cannot tell the Board of Governors how to operate. We are not prepared to let you take part in the planning of this area."

Professor S.N. Benjamin of the U of T Architecture Dept. was quoting A.G. Rankin, Executive Vice-President (Non-Academic) of U of T at a debate Wednesday on University Expansion.

Benjamin, speaking for the Residents Association, criticized the university's "lack of responsibility to the community."

University officials, he said, had confessed last spring they were ignorant even of the number of houses in the area. They admitted no policy of community relations existed, he said, but agreed to meet later with Benjamin's group as a first step in rectifying this.

STILL WAITING

"We're still waiting," said Benjamin.

Prof. Benjamin said the university has offered to discuss expansion plans into Huron-Sussex only after these plans have been approved by the Board of Governors.

"Responsibility to the community must be balanced by responsibility to the province," countered D.F. Forster, executive assistant to the President of the University.

Forster disagreed with the image of the university as a "heartless octopus."

The university, he said, didn't expand south to Dundas as originally planned, "since this would threaten a substantial Chinese community."

"It is quite clear too that we are not going to expand north of Bloor into the Annex," he said.

"But who knows what will happen in 50 or 100 years," he added.

Land west of Spadina is considered safe, Forster said "Even if we wanted to, the proposed Spadina Expressway would act as an effective barrier to expansion."

AREA RAZED

Huron-Sussex was, however, to be razed because "of new commitments on the graduate level."

Lawyer Gunther Sack, another resident, laid into the U of T master plan, charging that it changed "almost daily."

"U of T may decide tomorrow" to reverse these decisions, he said. The only thing saving areas west of Spadina from being "gobbled up" by university expansion is a lack of provincial funds and the Spadina Expressway.

Forster hotly denied this, insisting that the university has no interests west of Spadina "except the Robert St. playing field."

Sack: "What guarantees can you offer?"

Forster: "We have reached the maximum level of student enrollment."

Benjamin: "It was reached before in 1957."

Forster: That had to be revised.

Benjamin: "How do you account for Mr. Rankin's statement in the Globe and Mail that the University wouldn't be limited by its boundaries?"

Forster: "I don't know. As far as I can see, we have no intention to expand."

Sack: "Who speaks for U of T, you or Rankin?"

Forster: "He probably has the safer position; nothing is certain."

MAXIMUM SIZE

Sack questioned the whole university policy of centralization and expansion. "Maybe U of T has reached its maximum size; maybe we should limit further expansion."

"Our policy is a maximum enrollment of 25,000," said Forster.

The audience laughed.

Benjamin then questioned the university's need for more land.

"If there are vacancies in New College," he said, "why must you build something called Walker Hall right over my bedroom?"

"Our plan calls for big buildings and open spaces," replied K.S. Gregory, an assistant to Rankin.

This is the typical view these days in the Huron-Sussex area north-west of the campus. The entire area is slated for U of T expansion.

Defeated SFU faculty plan to establish

Louis Riel University

BURNABY (CUP) — Suspended faculty from Simon Fraser University's Political Science, Sociology and Anthropology Department are planning to start their own college, PSA professor Louis Feldhammer said last week.

"Plans for a new college, Louis Riel University, are now being put into action," Feldhammer told 50 students at the University of British Columbia. "The college should be open for registration some time very soon."

Feldhammer was one of eight PSA professors suspended by administration president Kenneth Strand for their part in the 41-day PSA strike that ended Nov. 4.

Feldhammer was one of eight PSA professors suspended by administration president Kenneth Strand for their part in the 41-day PSA strike that ended Nov. 4.

Feldhammer said the students had forced PSA faculty from just teaching into the radical activity that led to the administration crackdown on the department.

"And the reason why we had so much trouble with the administration was that we not only taught Marxism, which is acceptable, but we went further and acted Marxist. That they could not take."

Meanwhile a committee of the SFU Board of Governors continues to hear appeals against the suspensions from seven of the eight professors. Anthropology Professor Kathleen Aberle dropped her appeal Monday when the board refused to hear testimony about events before the strike began on Sept. 24.

MUSICAL REVUE
— CRACKERS & CHEESE —

SUNDAY NOV. 23 8:30 P.M.
(WILSON HALL) NEW COLLEGE
FANTASTICALLY CHEAP!!!! $1

GSU
FRIDAY NIGHT
DANCE

Nov. 21st - 9:00 p.m.
BAR & FOOD
Music by: "The Undergrads"
(everyone over 21 years welcome, students, staff and friends)
Admission: $1 - ladies
$1.25 gents
16 Bancroft Ave. (928-2391)

TRINITY UNITED

427 Bloss St. West at Walmer Rd.
Minister
Rev. J. Robert Watt,
B.A., B.D.
Organist: John W. Linn
11 A.M.
"Feeling The Faith of God"
8:30 P.M.
TRINITY YOUNG ADULTS
Dr. Gary Van Loon will tell of experiences in past three years in India.
STUDENTS CORDIALLY INVITED

Bloor Street
BLOOR AT HURON

MINISTERS:
THE VERY REV. DR. E. HOWSE
REV. DAVID R. ALLAN
THE REV. DONALD GILLIES
MINISTER OF MUSIC
10 A.M.
CHURCH SCHOOL
SEMINAR ON "POLLUTION"
11 A.M.
"EMBALMING AND CREATORS"
DR. E. M. HOWSE
NURSERY CARE DURING SERVICE

COFFEE SHOP-DISCOTHEQUE
every Friday & Saturday Nite
10 P.M. . . . 'til . . . 1 A.M.
at NEW COLLEGE
50¢/STAG 75¢/DRAG

BE IN ON THE BALL

HART HOUSE NEW YEAR'S BALL
TICKETS AVAILABLE - HALL PORTER'S DESK
- UNDERGRADUATE OFFICE

NAINOTS NAINAUHTI HSILO
HELLUP '69
UNGARIAN ATVIAN KRAINIAN

8:30 P.M. "DRINKS, DAMES & VIBRATIONS"
FRI. NOV. 28/69 U.N.F. HALL

Centre for the Study of Drama Faculty of Music

Department of East Asian Studies
present
THE BUDAYA TROUPE FROM INDONESIA

The Performing Arts of Boli, Jovo and Sundo presented by

The American Society for Eastern Arts
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 26 at 8:30

MocMILLAN THEATRE
Edward Johnson Building

Tickets $3.00 Box Office 928-3744 Students $1.50

HART HOUSE

$2.00

DENTANTICS

8:30 P.M.

NOV. 27, 28, 29

HILLEL MAJOR LECTURE SERIES

RABBI WALTER S. WURZBURGER
on
"NEW TRENDS IN JEWISH THOUGHT"
Sunday, November 23rd
8:30 p.m.
Hillel House

MR. THEODDRE COMET
Consultant on Overseas Services Council of Jewish Federations

on
"THE JEWS IN ARAB LANDS AND BEHIND THE IRON CURTAIN"
Monday, November 24th
4:00 p.m.
Hillel House

MR. CHANDLER DAVIS
Dept. of Mathematics, U. of T. on
"IS THE VIOLENT MOVEMENT DEAD?"
Monday, November 24th
1:00 p.m.
U.C. Room 314

ATS opposition to parity brews controversy

By TREVOR SPURR

Motions passed at last week's Association of Teaching Staff meeting — widely interpreted as an anti-CUG resolutions — remained contentious issues at yesterday's gathering of the CUG programming Committee.

Fear of such motions being passed at next Wednesday's Arts and Science Faculty Council meeting was the focal point of the Programming Committee's discussions.

The ATS motions rejected the concept of staff-student parity and said that judgment should be withheld on the structure of the top governing body of the university until the parity issue was resolved.

SAC President Gus Abols proposed the Arts and Science Faculty table these motions until further discussion of CUG could take place.

"It is the duty of this committee to advise how the debate on CUG should go on," he said.

FURTHER DISCUSSION

All members of the Committee were agreed on the necessity of further discussion of CUG proposals but a difference of opinion arose over the effect of the ATS motions.

"The ATS has undercut any further discussions by the passing of these resolutions," said Larry Hoffman (SGS).

"I fear faculty members will be bound in any discussion of parity on committees if they accept those resolutions.

"Its an example of bad faith which goes against the initial pages of the CUG report itself which talks about cooperation and good faith.

"On CUG the students and faculty made a compromise. Students are now frightened they will have to start all over again," said Ken McEvoy (III Vic).

History professor R.A. Spencer defended the ATS motions, saying it was part of the debate on CUG and not a hindrance to discussion.

"It isn't opposition to debate. It is opposition to the conclusion on parity of the CUG report.

"There is nothing this committee can do to prevent the ATS resolutions from being debated and voted on at the Faculty Council meeting.

"I am very concerned with any suggestion that we dictate to the Council," said Spencer.

MAKE VIEWS KNOWN

"I think this committee would be mistaken if they didn't let the faculty council know what its views are," countered Registrar Robin Ross.

"The faculty council is going to take a fairly hard line stand without even talking to students. I think they are really afraid of students," said Abols.

"Well, I don't think that's true," said Ross.

Unable to decide whether to advise the Arts and Science Faculty Council or not it was suggested that Robin Ross attempt to formulate a letter to the Council.

The letter is to suggest no decisions be made without full discussion at the meeting.

"We might find a resolution on our part will make the faculty pass stronger motions because they don't want this committee pushing them around," said Ross.

Municipal planning: a study in decision-making sequence

By JEAN BUBBA

Man must control the city or it will control him.

That's the opinion of Prof. A.L. Murray, co-ordinator of urban studies at York University and chairman of the Toronto Regional Branch Planning Association of Canada. He was speaking at the first session of the State of the City Conference sponsored by the U of T School of Law.

In attempting to define city planning, Prof. Murray stated that "to plan is to choose. . . The crunch comes when one has to make choices." Urban study, he said, "was the study of the sequence of decision-making."

He traced urban growth historically, from a household conception of the city to the secularized conception, to the ecological conception of the city.

The city is not a vast self-regulating organism like a wood-lot, he said. "What happens is what we choose."

Supplementing his lecture with slides, Prof. Murray showed how the cities in the Netherlands could serve as examples of successful communities because of the "over-riding discipline" that is brought by the threat of water. This made for "conscious, creative and regulated expansion in accordance with a detailed plan," he said.

UNUSED POTENTIAL

In applying this principle to the urban problems today, Murray emphasized the concept of urban control in face of permanent dangers.

"The danger now is of unused potential," he said. "We have a capacity to shape our cities. . . Our greatest challenge is one of communicating. We must create a cultural, political and intellectual consensus on what kinds of goals we are striving for."

Dr. A.J. Dakin, Chairman of the Department of Urban and Regional Planning at University of Toronto, put forward some hindrances to creating a public consensus on urban planning.

Most of the problems, he said, resulted from "problems related to an aggregation of decisions taken by many individuals. . . Apparently small decisions taken by many people lead to unintentional results. None of us intended to pollute the air by factories."

After using examples from city planning in Sydney, Australia, Teeside, England, and New York State, Dr. Dakin brought the issue home when he revealed the lack of concern on the part of the province of Ontario for the distribution of industry and population.

"We have not got an adequate indication of concern for these two principles from the Ontario government," he said.

Bomb blast rocks Loyola

MONTREAL (Special) — A dynamite bomb exploded in the administration building of Loyola University last night, a campus which has been in an uproar over the unexplained dismissal of a physics professor for the last week.

The bomb, which appeared to have been planted in a stairwell, caused what police called "very extensive damage, but no loss of life."

There has been only one explosion although the university earlier yesterday received warnings that three bombs had been planted.

The sudden bomb blast follows three days of one-hour student sit-ins demanding rehiring of physics professor S.A. Santhanam. Wednesday they hocked the corridors outside the office of administration president Patrick Malone.

Faculty members at Loyola voted by a two-to-one margin Wednesday to support binding arbitration of the dispute by the Canadian Association of University Teachers.

The faculty narrowly defeated a motion of non-confidence in Arts dean Michael Blamer who has not supported arbitration.

Wednesday five students, including students council president Marcel Nouvet, were released from "disciplinary probation" imposed for their part in the first sit-in Nov 12. Disciplinary hearings have been postponed indefinitely.

The CAUT is expected to announce a commission of inquiry into the dismissal of Santhanam.

photo by Ampersand Barker

Why is this man smiling? Well, it's because he is holding in his arms a stray dog he adopted two years ago.

Under the Ontario Government's Bill 194 stray animals are to be made available for scientific research.

Yesterday the faculty of medicine cancelled classes and about 600 med students turned up at an open meeting of the province's Select Committee on Animal Health Care.

Representatives of the Council of Deans in Medicine in Ontario spoke strongly in favour of the bill, noting that research animals are humanely treated, while the president of the Ontario Humane Society opposed the bill, suggesting that for research purposes animals should be specially bred.

LOW ON BREAD FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS
PRESENTS?

USE YOUR CHARGE -
ACCOUNT AT THE UNIVERSITY
BOOKROOM

B
O
O
K
S

The universities are being run by men who spend 5 per cent of their time thinking and talking about education, and 95 per cent of their time thinking and talking about money.

— Richard Needham.

CUG: Parity becomes a vital demand

The faculty of this university are trying to bury the Commission on University Government's Report before it gets out of the committee room.

Last week the Association of Teaching Staff voted down the principle of staff-student parity in all departmental and faculty matters.

Next Wednesday the Faculty Council of Arts and Science will deal with a motion to "reject the concept of parity".

The faculty is reacting with almost instinctual paranoia to the basic principles of the CUG Report before the report has been discussed openly amongst staff and students.

That kind of defensive reaction by the faculty is an expression of bad faith that will seriously inhibit the open sessions and the departmental negotiations.

The CUG Report is a product of two movements: an administrative movement to stabilize the university, and a student movement to change the university.

When these two movements meet the result could be a bogged-down network of committee structures that neutralize the efforts of both sides — both the drive for efficiency and the drive for change.

But the faculty have wedged themselves in between those two forces and have upset the equilibrium. As the student bureaucrats curse faculty opposition, the mandarins of Simcoe Hall are worrying what the faculty opposition will do to upset and polarize the university.

But that faculty hostility against the principle of parity finally puts the CUG Report in a real perspective. It removes it from the utopian level that already assumed the paper-bound ideal of a community-of-equals.

For the university is not a community now, as the CUG Report assumes. It's a massive conglomeration of fragmented disciplines, balkanized colleges, and hierarchical guilds.

A new, improved set of committees won't turn-U of T into a community.

But talking about that faculty hostility, and confronting the faculty with parity demands could move the people, not just the structures, of this university.

Parity becomes relevant when we experience the negation of parity — what exists today at the U of T — and when the faculty reveal their true colors, as they are now doing.

Faculty are opposed to parity because there are fundamental political differences between them and students.

An academic guild of political privilege exists in all disciplines at the U of T. That guild not only divides student and professor as slave and master, but it divides senior professors from junior professors, and junior professors from teaching assistants.

And tenure is the magic word that guarantees academic immortality.

To achieve vertical mobility in the academic guild, you must conform to the guild's standards — its ideological standards.

In Philosophy you would study analytic philosophy; in Political Science you would study behaviouralism or systems analysis; in Law you would study the legal status quo.

The narrow parameters of each discipline present a world-view of hundreds of unrelated, academic atoms.

We are taught a non-systematic view of a social and economic system, a view that apologizes for it. We are taught social science that takes the pieces of society without describing the relations that tie them together, without explaining cause and solution.

— Varsity cartoon by Per Lundquist

Robin Ross: The CUG couldn't appear to be boiling over. I wish the faculty wouldn't get so upset about parity; we never took it seriously.
Cloude Bissell: Shut up and keep the lid on.

The university generates ideology, technology, and manpower to maintain an inhuman status quo. When it provides criticism, it's "merely academic".

"The university provides a number of courses that are directly apologist: history courses that don't deal with pollution, ecology courses that only deal with history, art and literature courses that only deal with politics as what happens in parliament, political science course that never discuss the nature and function of art itself, and economics courses that teach Samuelson."

— from Bob Bossin's unrevised section of the CUS education policy-statement.

Academia does not deal with the real world in a way that could change it.

And the academic guild's undemocratic structures help maintain that.

Students must use parity to challenge faculty in curriculum; hiring, firing, promotion, and tenure; research; etc.

Parity does relate to the "average" student.

For example, when the University College French Department presents students in the year's first lecture with a full schedule of what each seminar for the rest of the year must discuss, then it affects you if you are a French student.

Students should organize around CUG in general and parity in particular to change the power relationships in the university.

Structural demands can be a strategy for change in the content of what the university is doing and for whom it's doing it. The students at Simon Fraser University realized that.

When the SFU Political Science, Sociology, and Anthropology Department achieved parity and shifted their emphasis from corporations to the community, they were smashed by the administration and the government. Those bodies would not allow those changes in content to take place.

But still at SFU, and now at U of T, that question "Knowledge for Whom?" must be asked. The vehicle should be a demand for total student-faculty parity, a demand that can be made both in the classroom, and at meetings like the Faculty Council meeting next week.

—brian johnson

The Varsity

TORONTO

Editor Review Editor Associate Review Editor News Editor City Editor Features Editor Sports Editor Design CUP Editor Photo Editor Executive Assistant Advertising Manager Editorial Offices Editorial Phone Advertising Office	Brian Johnson Larry Hyman Jack McCalliey Jim Green Geoff Meggs Louis Ertchman Noel Stachey Mary Kate Rowan Paul Cusum 923 4053 Dave Frank Barbara Becherman Sue Pender Mark Rubin Harold Edelick Carol Cooper 923 8171 94 St. George 2nd floor 923 8741 923 8742 91 St. George 1st floor
---	--

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by West Offset Publications, Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Editorial complaints about the editorial or business operation of this paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Censorship Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

What did you learn in school today?

By BOB JAMES

Come one! Come all! Step right up there! Yes, you, too — the lady in the red there — come and see the show! Today, before your very eyes, you will see the workings of a true (yes, folks, a veritable truth-like) democracy. Presented by your very own Political Economy Course Union, and under the watchful eye of (shades of the Wobblies) Gad Horowitz!

Now we all realize, don't we, that this course is dealing with the real issues of democracy. We have come through two tortuous months of the theories of elites and their response to the seeming ineffectualness of the democratic system — probably just a rationalization.

We have studied Mosca, Michels, Pareto, Laswell, and even (gasp) Mills (C. Wright, that is). We all know, don't we, that that is the way the nasty real world out there operates. But we're in university, and that is, after all, a different type of world.

Political Science 307 is a course in Political Analysis. Gad Horowitz runs a class taking an analytical and academic look at the theories of elitism. But, you see, that's just the trouble — it's academic.

We had a real taste of the workings of democracy in our November 10 class. We were told, among the cries of 'All Power to the People', that the Course Union (sic!) had decided to allow us to have a class representative. (Is it true that ideas fall from the sky? or maybe just directives?)

It seems that the publishing of the CUG report has meant that the Course Unions all of a sudden have to make themselves relevant to the students they represent. (I mean, this is a liberal democracy, isn't it, and doesn't that imply a representative democracy, and we all know that that means we have to elect representatives — it's really all very solemn.)

"Now then, who wants to run... come on, you don't even need a seconder... you can nominate yourself... the purpose of a class rep, well, that's kind of indefinite, but I guess they're for a liaison between the union and the class... now then, let's have a vote on how these people... no, you can't have both of them for a class rep, that's not what the rest of them are doing... ok, are you ready to vote?"

Is it true that a course on elitism can have no relevance to what goes on in our everyday life? Maybe we should all be able to make those connections ourselves. But we did not discuss the idea of having a class rep at all.

It was elitist to tell us to have a rep without this prior questioning of that premise.

There are important issues coming up that the course union will have to deal with — CUG and Campbell to name only two. But there was no perceived need for that representative in that class.

At the time, I was pissed off that the class treated the whole thing so lightly, but I think that was probably the only way to treat it.

How do you stop elitism? How do we set up a structure so that the theories of Mosca and Pareto do not take hold within them, so that the iron law of oligarchy does not set in?

That election was taken to be a farce because it was an attempt to impose a structure on people from above. The class realized that intuitively, and reacted unconsciously. They knew that the representative system of government doesn't work.

How often do they hear from their representatives to Ottawa or City Hall or SAC or the Course Union, once they are elected? Not often, unless there happens to be a CUS referendum or some other election.

We ended up choosing both people to be our representatives. Two heads are better than one, or so the adage goes. But complications arose when the reps themselves began to feel guilty about the way they were elected.

Last Monday they came back to us to suggest that we choose one of them to be the rep, and one only. Some questions were asked about the purpose of having a rep, and some were asked about the politics of the nominees. People weren't interested — let's get back to talking about elite theorists.

Bourgeois political science tries to separate the real world from that studied in the schools — to say that it is necessary to take subjects into the laboratory to make an 'objective' analysis of them.

In our course on elitism, we were witnessing a living example of how an elite develops.

Needs are formulated from a structure seeking legitimacy, and an election procedure goes through the process of "legitimizing". The system works well.

Except that it is not democratic. There was no educational process to raise the political consciousness of that class — issues existed only in a vacuum — academically, if you want. There was no will-iness on the part of the class to set up a structure of accountability within that class so that the people elected could become representative in any real sense of the word. Another elite was set up within an existing elite.

And so, folks — you have seen, before your very eyes, the true democracy at work! You have seen, for the first time, your course union coming to you to ask for your support! And what a show it was! We had elections, debates, speeches — what more could anyone ask for?

But now, let's get back to serious business...

colu m and a half

The U.C. Refectory looks like the type of place where revolutions are spawned; the Trinity Buttery where revolutions are compromised.

Each cafeteria has a definite mood to it. The Refectory combines all the elegance of Union Station with the cleanliness of a vomitorium.

Bit it has a wide, open air about it. Any person or thing could conceivably blow into the Refectory; it is consistently incon-sistent.

Scant yards away squats the Buttery — enclave of civilization. Quiet, clean and spacious, it tolerates only the quiet murmur of relaxed conversation. Like all enclaves, it is somewhat of a backwater.

In the Refectory, quiet is a meaningless concept. Radio Varsity blares Dylan at people who glare cross-room "how'er ya's" at each other.

The Buttery stands proudly on Devonshire Place. From the west, it is just a short stroll past the placid academia of Massey College.

Visitors from the east may take a slight detour through the Trinity quadrangle, past black-gowned Men of College, who lounge about sipping coffee.

The Refectory is in the basement of University College. From inside, you find it at the end of a corridor of lavatories. From the outside you can clamber down one of a pair of stairs disguised as coal chutes (undoubtedly, this camouflage has allowed the place to escape the notice of public health officials).

At lunch-time, hairy, unkempt males, and combed, curled females jam the Refectory to capacity, each armed with a cup of sure-spill coffee.

The Buttery is never crowded — with either people or furniture. It has enough space to minimize the threat, ever-present in the Refectory, of uncola-sloshers squeezing thigh and buttock between the scrunch of tables.

Refectory conversation swings between the inanities of normal living and impassioned expositions on movements and causes.

Buttery boys chat. When something taking place outside the sphere of college is discussed, it's with an air of cynical detachment — like an Olympic Pantheon observing the futile games of mortals.

Refectory females are far from modest. Take, for instance, the Mansfieldian-breasted girl who marches gleefully up and down in front of the sandwich counter, virtually daring you to balance a bagel and coffee on her continental shelf.

A Buttery Belle wouldn't march — she'd mince. Butterinas are nice girls — quiet subdued and ("organ — but we're not in church") innocent.

While Butterinas look like professional virgins, Refectorettes — sleek and eye-shadowed — look just professional. What about the feelings of the inmates of each cafeteria?

"Eat in the Refectory — Gawd!" — Trinity boy who has never been in the Refectory.

"It's a nice place. I wish we had something like it at U of T" — UC girl speaking of the Buttery.

"I've never seen so many ugly boys and good-looking girls in all my life." — Trinity boy emerging from the Refectory for the first time.

tam walkom

LETTERS

incorrect allegations and erroneous inferences

In The Varsity of October 31st, there is a front page report of a meeting which referred to an "open letter", issued by seven persons. It charged that the United Appeal was "run by business and trade union executives who do not allow the poor to be represented on the various boards of directors". The letter claimed that the United Appeal had "decided" to review the Ontario Welfare Council's right to receive U.A. funds because it had elected two young people and two welfare recipients to its board of directors.

Within hours of the charges, the president and director of the Ontario Welfare Council issued a statement which said, in part:

"We cannot permit the United Appeal to suffer because of a statement, however well intended, which contains incorrect allegations concerning our relations with the United Community Fund of Greater Toronto... The election of recipients of agency services to our Board at our last Annual Meeting in May (an event which we in no way regret) was not advanced as a reason for the review... The Ontario Welfare Council recognizes the essential responsibility of the United Community Fund to undertake periodic reviews of the policies and operations of its member agencies, and we welcome the proposed review of our organization."

The Varsity has a reputation for fairness which we feel sure you will want to maintain. I think you will agree that your report on the "open letter" was not wholly accurate and the purpose of my reply is to correct some misleading statements and to set the record straight.

J. Stuart MacKay,
President,
United Community Fund, Toronto.

P.S.

Since writing the above my attention has been drawn to the article in your November 14th supplement by Anne Baady. This article repeats many of the same allegations made earlier and which are answered in my letter above. There is one point in this article, however, that might leave an erroneous inference.

The "welfare case" whose allowance was cut down has nothing to do with a United Appeal agency but refers to a Government body.

Since most of the article purports to deal with United Appeal, I would not want your readers to get the impression that a United Appeal agency official is being quoted.

Kealey resigns from SAC

In a surprise move at Wednesday night's SAC meeting, Greg Kealey (IV SMC), resigned both his executive position as University Government Commissioner and his seat on council.

In a short speech Kealey explained his decision as "I need to prioritize my time."

"I have a lot of work to do in the History Students Union as well as my work in the New Left Caucus. I also have an academic life and a desire to live a personal life with some sort of sanity in it," he said.

Kealey, as University Government Commissioner, was heavily involved in the restructuring of the university and the implementation of the CUG report. In his resignation speech he made some observations on the future of this work.

"I think things are getting very difficult in terms of university government. We are going to have to work very hard to get the changes we need.

LOWER LEVEL

In an interview after his resignation was accepted by SAC, Kealey said he felt he could best work for change at a lower level than SAC.

"The issues have been formulated at this level by the councils of the past several years. Now we must work with people at a lower level to bring these things into practice," he said.

"I want to try and do work where I am in more direct contact with things that are happening such as at the departmental structural level", he said.

Several members of SAC expressed regret at Kealey's decision to leave the council.

DILIGENT MEMBER

"Greg has been one of the most diligent members of the Executive. Although we don't agree ideologically I would like to thank him for the work he has done", said SAC President Gus Abols.

Ken McEvoy (III VIC) was named University Government Commissioner.

Kealey is the second member of SAC to resign in as many meetings. Alan Broad (II Scar) gave up his seat two weeks ago to demonstrate what he felt was the irrelevance of SAC to his campus.

photo by Allen Rosen

As university commissioner Greg Kealey was a leading SAC strategist until his resignation Wednesday.

THE ENGINEERING SOCIETY
PRESENTS
THE CANNONBALL

AT
HART HOUSE

FRIDAY NOV. 28
9 P.M. - 1 A.M.
$4.00 PER COUPLE
- FEATURING -
"CATHEDRAL"
"ALTAR EGO"
"JACK LOVE"
"DORION MOORE"

2 OTHER SANDS & THE LGMS

TICKETS - ENG. STORES, CLASS REPS, SAC

campus items

WLM invades Arbor Room

The Women's Liberation Movement invaded the Arbor Room Wednesday morning.

Women are banned from the Hart House cafeteria before 2 p.m.

Carmen Guild, assistant to the Warden of Hart House, confronted the ladies and advised them to take their complaints to the President's Committee on Hart House.

The WLM made its bid to the committee Wednesday afternoon. They protested against the segregation experienced by women on campus, emphasizing the attitude of Hart House.

They complained that there is no non-exclusionary student union on campus.

Charnie Cunningham (III UC), a WLM member, called what took place in the Arbor Room "direct action." The WLM has invited all campus women for lunch in the Arbor Room today at 11 a.m.

Dents contribute most blood

Students contributed 3098 pints of blood (a measly 9 more than last year) in U of T's semi-annual bleed-in for the Red Cross.

The biggest contributor, as expected, was the Faculty of Dentistry. An astonishing 62 per cent of the students donated as compared with no more than 18 per cent for the rest of the campus.

Wycliffe came second with 40 per cent and Knox third with 36 per cent.

The faculties of Music and Law made the fewest contribution. A pathetic 5 and 7 per cent respectively of each faculty donated.

Hans Viegever (III Dents), the chief planner of the drive, was somewhat disappointed and said that the "big colleges just did not come across." He found the 14 per cent turnout by Meds students who should know the importance of blood, "puzzling".

Miss Ann James, a senior Red Cross official was quite pleased with the turnout during the second week, but found the first week disappointing.

Erindale will postscript the campaign by holding a clinic on Thursday.

ring around the white house

NOVEMBER MORATORIUM

I. IMPLSIONS, OR PROOFS OF THE SUBSTANTIAL SAMENESS OF THINGS

Approximately one in ten marchers had a camera, most of which were expensive. This wasn't poor people, nor oppressed minorities, but a different wing of middle America than Spiro Agnew is willing to concede exists.

Setting out to post an eviction notice on the South Vietnamese Embassy, rather than to stone or burn it, is not only an adoption of theatricality but true Americana. It's not that violence is un-American, it's that the rites of property still infect the young more strongly than mass destruction does.

Getting a ride anywhere in DC was easy; people would pull over even if your thumb wasn't out. Why does camaraderie take a war or a demonstration to manifest itself?

Being tear gassed ought to be part of every march. It brings home to us middle class kids a tithing of the discomforts of war. Fear and uncertainty of police intentions are a good thing as well; they may spark an effective, rather than merely empathetic, response to ghetto life.

If writing Congressmen and doing hey-boy work for candidates were as glamorous as Washington marches, the war could have been ended in 1968.

I saw more black policemen than I did black marchers.

II EVERY MAN BENEATH HIS VINE AND FIG TREE

Almost Anglo-Saxon bluntness in the naming of places. The hill. The monument. The white house. The memorial bridge. Most ironic, the marcher slang for the Attorney-General's troop-filled quadrangle: simply, "Justice."

The speeches — pungent, like David Dillinger's, or wry, like Dick Gregory's, or moving, like Coretta King's — were come-ons, adiphora, like the rock groups. That was all the Mobilization, the mass march down Pennsylvania, a convention in the streets nominating, naming, "Peace! Now!" as the standard-bearer.

The day before, the Moratorium, the march from Arlington National Cemetery, resting place of the debris of policy, past the White House (Mr. President, the roll of the dead) to the Capitol, past the seats of policy, aside from the cries at the White House, the marchers were as silent as a majority. Augustan columns of windwhipped marble, official Washington, were made confessionals for the cries of discontent, of mourning. The Moratorium was the difference, the new liturgy which celebrates life by grieving at the waste of humanity.

Single file, carrying signs with names of war dead (past Navy Department secretaries giving the peace sign, past lunchtime bureaucrats who wouldn't meet your eyes because it broke the firmness of their scorn), marching four miles constantly for forty hours, lined up for traffic lights in front of the National Archives (block capitals engraved there: "The Past Is Prologue"), 40,000 marchers for the honor of the dead. The signs each bore (Charles Rogiers, Illinois) were placed (Jimmy Bedgood, Georgia) in symbolic caskets (Michael Shae, Nevada) at the foot of Capitol Hill (Leslie McMacken, Colorado) where a girl sang "Catch the Wind" to an autoharp she played (Clyde Ray Carter, North Carolina) with the dedication of a widow.

Music at the end, like Army bands at funerals: Music at the beginning, a tolling bell in Arlington which rang metro-nomically, slowly, inexorably, like the mounting toll of statistics, rolling euphoniouly from the tongues of bland Pentagon spokesmen.

Names. Music. Speeches. Arlo Guthrie: "None of you needed to turn out. When they put the machine guns on the Capitol grounds, the point was made."

Half a million people sitting on Washington Monument hill. And Clyde Ray Carter in the same damp earth they sat on.

III A GLOSS UPON THE TEXT

Almost as important as the fact of the march is the nature of official reaction to it. Such feely concerns as those mentioned above did not noticeably affect Attorney-General Mitchell or his assistant, Richard Kleindeist. Both have since blamed what violence there was on the avowedly non-violent New Mobe (a gratuitous attempt to discredit the peace movement), and have sniffed about "supporting our boys."

However, as even the Globe and Mail (which favors Administration propaganda) was at pains to mention, this hard-line response was opposed to most other official opinion. DC Mayor Walter Washington, Presidential Communications Director Herb Klein, and Police Chief Jerry Wilson made suitably approving noises about the peacefulness of the marches.

What is significant is that there was an official counter-voice to the Agnewisms of Mr. Mitchell. There was no unanimous government sentiment for oppression, as there had been in 1931. In that year, when the Bonus Army (not disreputable activists, but WW I veterans seeking their pensions) camped out in Washington, President Hoover ordered General MacArthur and his troops forcibly to run them out of town and burn their shacks. MacArthur accepted gladly, saying "Thank God we still have a government which knows how to deal with a mob!"

Even though the present Republican Administration stationed machine gunners at the Capitol, had a cop at every street corner, alerted the Guard, and enforced a six-block square "no movement" zone around a White House ringed with buses, the only overt overreaction was the gassing at Justice. The opportunity for a massive, official-ly countenanced police riot of the magnitude of Chicago existed, and that it was not taken is owing both to the good order of the DC police and to the fact that other voices than Mitchell's were in a position to be heard.

The tolerance of the Administration to the march and the demonstration is instructive — it may have practical effect as well as signalling a change in the public taste. The monolithic deafness of the Johnson Administration has been somewhat diminished — though the official ear is still remarkably discriminating, as it vaunts supporting telegrams but "will not be affected whatsoever" by unfavorable demonstrations.

But such protestations are not completely accurate, as reaction to the Moratorium indicates. One distinctive quality of the Nixon Administration is its delight in appearances rather than substance. They'd much rather work on a press release than a program. Public relations is more important to Nixon than policy, and the latter is moulded almost solely at the dictates of the former. That is one of the effects of having been a perennial candidate: the president still thinks in terms of his image, not his accomplishments.

Thus theatre, liturgy, such as reciting 40,000 names and turning out better than a quarter-million people for a procession, is well calculated to affect a man who revels in spectacle (like moon shots). Nixon has never been much of an analyst; to him, issues have always been more of a means to provoke a favorable response from an audience than a challenge to constructive thinking. (Witness all his "law 'norder" speeches which suppressed any mention of programs to alleviate ghetto tension.) The marches may have "exposed the contradictions of liberal capitalism" as Arlo Guthrie implied, but they may also easily have a practical effect, on this Administration, before the millenium when mass democracy and an absence of contradictions obtain. Nixon might be obtuse, straight, and locked into the rigid piety of anti-communism, but he is also scared of unpopularity. If pure politics and image-consciousness are the determinants of Nixon's policy, then ceremony with a political point to it is a decent mode of influence.

I do not mean to put myself out on a limb of euphoria, saying because of the Moratorium all things shall change, and policy be different. As George Eliot remarked in a fit of lucidity, "Of all forms of mistake, prophecy is the most gratuitous." I merely wish to counter the hardliners of both left and right who claim that the Moratorium will have no discernible impact. I have indicated some signs that dissent is becoming more respectable, and the war less so. Both indicate progress, though hardly the millenium: the respectability through dignity which the march has fostered for antiwar activity is, I would maintain, a long-term effect.

The war may not be ended sooner than otherwise, or again it may, because of the Moratorium. But in any case the tone and forms of political action in a TV society (with a situation-comedy President) have been permanently altered. Street action can't and won't set policy; but it will provide feedback for it. Action there is no longer dismissible as radical and uninformed. There were too many silent Americans shouting names of war dead in front of the White House.

James Yeager

happy families are all alike

but

For the sizeable segment of Toronto's culture buffs who run the gamut from distaste for the avant-garde but enjoy an occasional play, to those who have, through repeated exposure, cultivated a loyalty to Arthur Miller's adept exposés of our society's moral make-up, the Royal Alex offers a capable presentation of Miller's latest play for the next two weeks.

The Price lacks the political sophistication of The Crucible, the concrete sense of societal responsibility of All My Sons, or the consistently agonized introspection of After the Fall, but it is a well-written and adequately-executed play nevertheless.

The playwright, who in 1963 wrote The Price, is a more relaxed man than the one who has probed his society's morality in some six postwar plays. He has abandoned the surrealism of Death of a Salesman (1949) and After the Fall (1963?), where the people who populate the anti-hero's imagination actually appear on stage, for a more muted suggestion of the past.

The only set is an attic, whose wealth of cluttered memorabilia blends well with the Royal Alexandra's latter-day elegance to project two brothers into their youth, when they last saw each other, and to suggest the crippling effect of their past on any viable future.

The play is a study in the alienation that the materialism of our society produces. The Price deals on the surface with a business transaction: the disposal of family furniture in a house about to be demolished, and the reunion of a "successful" surgeon and his police-chief brother for the transaction. But the business deal becomes a multi-level metaphor for human interrelationships. For example, the surgeon, Vic, paid the price of a nervous breakdown, and the resentment of his brother, for his financial success. Walter, the policeman, cut short his scientific education in order to take care of a father whose spirit was broken by the stock market crash of '29, though Vic counselled financial self-interest (as did Willy Loman's ruthless brother).

The apparent immorality of this creates a similar quagmire of crippling resentment in Vic as Miller had shown in Biff Loman. Morality in the family, the microcosm of society, is a top concern of Miller's. But he defined morality as "living the truth" (in After the Fall) and for Miller the truth is usually multi-faceted. The tension of his plays is often based on unravelling this "truth", in order to allow his characters a fresh, moral start. But in The Price, the brothers only have intimations of this truth, are always "one step to forgiveness", and so, unlike Quentin in After the Fall, cannot start anew.

Some of the "ugly truth" is that Vic's father had laid aside more than "the price" needed to complete his education, but had hoarded it as some sort of survival insurance. But the revelation, made well along in the play, is agonizing only to Vic's wife, whose delicate balance of tender understanding and the materialism compelled by our society is well maintained by actress Betty Field.

Vic had suspected this truth, but allowed his suspicions to fade. He is like Quentin, who in the earlier reflects: "Of course I understood . . . but it's what you allow yourself to admit. To admit what you see endangers principles!"

Vic's moral principles are overbalanced in favour of a false concept of family solidarity, as are the fathers in both All My Sons and Death of a Sales- man. One message implicit in all three family-oriented plays is that our society doesn't allow the selflessness that Miller's ideal of family solidarity requires. The pathos of this comes across in Miller's commentaries on his plays; he writes of "images of people turning into strangers who can only evaluate one another" and feels "the spectacle of human sacrifice in contrast with aggrandizement is a sharp and heart-breaking one".

Miller's plays are always eminently playable. His dialogues have a natural rhythm. For this they often sacrifice verbal dexterity, and it requires good acting to strike a balance between rhetoric and realism in such exchanges as the musing of the couple in The Price as they wander about the old attic at the play's start:

"Time . . ."
"Yah, I know."

The only character who occasionally fails to strike the balance is Michael Strong's Vic, partly because he is allowed neither the gutsy wifely rhetoric that Miss Field's Esther requires, nor the periodically pompous "professionalism" of Shepperd Strudwick's Walter. It is possible to justify in a similar way the often-wooden stance of Strong's policeman, who has not arrived at the smoother sense of self that his wife and brother have acquired. However, that strained quality is sometimes uncomfortable for a critical viewer.

The fourth character in The Price is an old Yiddish furniture appraiser, who supplies the extended comic element absent in the younger Miller. The tragicomic aspect of this play is excellently handled by Harold Gray, who shows a sure grasp of Gregory Solomon's blend of hypochondria, humour, andchutzpah. That Gray manages repeatedly to deliver such lines as "Nothing ever stopped me — only life" better than any stand-up comic almost makes of Miller's tale a musical about materialism.

The role of the Brooklyn businessman, a soulful swindler, is used by Miller (who directed the first performances of the touring company) to control the timing of the play. It lags a little at the beginning, until Solomon's entrance twenty minutes after the play's start. From then, Solomon's role is essential in that, by re-appearing whenever the brothers have almost come to understand each other's motivations, he indicates that their reconciliation cannot take place.

The play ends with the couple leaving to attend the same movie they had planned to attend before the arrival of the successful brother, whose combination of a few new truths and "influence" had held out a hope of rejuvenation for the policeman-cum-frustrated scientist and his wife. The only rejuvenations are the surgeon's, whose nervous breakdown (external to the play) gave him a new start, and that of the old furniture dealer, whom Vic's summons has brought out of retirement. Gregory Solomon is left on stage laughing about the tragicomic view of life that he shares with the mellowing Miller.

And the audience dissolves back into a world not too different from the one on stage. They are probably on the way to indulge in the refreshments that the Royal Alex exceptionally failed to provide. The management recognized the importance of the playwright's timing by skipping its doubtlessly profitable sherry break. If any further proof of the guaranteed success of a Miller play is required by 1969, here it is. It is some comfort to those of us student-types who spurn materialism (for the time being anyway), that Miller has "arrived" because he is good. And he's got Social Conscience

agi lukacs

even if you haven't studied the perineal region

"And so, Phoebe Zeit-Geist is cast adrift in a world she never made.

"There is a lesson to be learned here and it is as follows: not beauty nor wealth nor position can stem the strange and unfathomable tides that shape our lives. In the midst of society's notables, surrounded by scores of liveried footmen, our ill-fated debutante sips what appears to be a perfectly ordinary pousse-café. She comes to, scant hours later, at an oasis in Death Valley, California, the prisoner of a potentous stranger."

I first met Phoebe Zeit-Geist some four years ago in the pages of Evergreen magazine. Over the next few months, they ran what appeared to be a series of totally unrelated episodes in the life of "24 year-old sophisticate, Phoebe Zeit-Geist, daughter of a Serbian aristocrat, raised in Northern Tibet where she mastered the mysteries of Oriental combat, studied ballet in Montevideo . . . danced briefly with the "Grand Ballet du Marquis Cuevas", and then . . . completed her education at an exclusive Swiss finishing school." Each episode exposed our heroine (usually literally) to some perversion or other (sadism, pedophilia, lesbianism).

Now Grove Press has published the entire "Adventures of Phoebe Zeit-Geist", and I find two things: there is actually a minimal connection between the episodes; and the range of perversion is greater than I had imagined in my wildest dreams.

The format is black-and-white drawings à la Mary Worth, except that there is considerably more anatomical detail than normally appears in Mary Worth. (Also, the artist never seems to have studied the perineal region.) Along with the black-and-white drawings go some of the most purple prose ever written.

"Why did we end here? Is it

AND WITH WHOSE SACRIFICE, THE ESKIMOS WOULD RISE UP AS A PROUD NATION AND DRIVE OUT THE WHITE INVADERS WHO HAD DRAINED THEIR NATURAL RESOURCES AND RAPED THEIR WOMEN...

AND NOW, FOR YOUR AMUSEMENT, THIS LADY YOU CHAINED TO THE FLOOR WILL BE RAPED BY A 12-FOOT KOMODO DRAGON, SYMBOLIZING THE INEVITABLE TRIUMPH OF MARXIST-LENINIST DOCTRINE OVER WALL STREET PROFITEERS!

THE REPUGNANT REPTILE IS UNLEASHED...

SLOWLY, WITH FLOPPING FORKED TONGUE, IT APPROACHES THE PRONE PRISONER... CLOSER...

because the next panel will be so repulsive and blood-spattered that only the NATIONAL ENQUIRER would dare print it? And as Phoebe queried, "What does it all mean?"

"These seemingly imponderable questions answered in the next mind-staggering episodes of the 'Adventures of Phoebe Zeit-Geist', entitled 'Peril Diver.'"

The story begins and ends in an Antwerp garden-party, but in between, Phoebe is:

- i) killed by a blind Zen archer in episode III;
- ii) captured by a band of necrophiliacs and taken to Terre Haute;

iii) shipped to Ceylon as a seedbed for a new type of fungus;

iv) rescued there by an Eskimo who recognizes her as the legendary Ice Princess "with whose sacrifice the Eskimos would rise up as a proud nation and drive out the white invaders who had drained their natural resources and raped their women;"

v) brought back to life by an Eskimo witch-doctor in episode VII.

vi) captured by . . . but by this time you must get the idea.

Phoebe Zeit-Geist exists (more or less) on about three levels. At the first level, it's simple pornography, the kind of thing you wouldn't show to mother (not unless you wanted to go to bed without dinner.) At another level it's a clear satire on both the kind of pornography it seems to be on level one, and on society in general. And on a third level, it's saying "This is a satire, but you really groove on these drawings, don't you, hah?"

The structure of the story line seemed vaguely familiar to me — reality at each end, and a sequence of increasingly improbable fantasies in between. Finally, while re-reading the book for about the 25th time ("you really groove on those drawings, don't you?") it came to me. If the Marquis de Sade had written Alice in Wonderland, it would have been Phoebe Zeit-Geist.

The Adventures of Phoebe Zeit-Geist, Grove Press, 106 pages (about) $1.75.

bob barkwell

ANOTHER FANTASTIC ENGINEERING HUSTLING DANCE

TONITE
AT THE DRILL HALL
WITH THE JUST SOCIETY

YOUR LAST CHANCE TO GET A DATE FOR CANNON BALL! BE THERE

GUYS $1.00 GIRLS 75¢

CAPITAL RECORDS
MOTHER TUCKERS

YELLOW DUCK
IN CONCERT
SAT. NOV. 22

AT THE MASONIC TEMPLE (888 YONGE ST.)
(FORMERLY THE ROCK PILE)
TWO SHOWS
8 P.M. & 11 P.M.
ADMISSION $2.50
GENERAL ADMISSION ONLY
DOORS OPEN AT 7:30 P.M.
M.T.Y.D.

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
Toronto Professional Bldg,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 101, Ontario

IMMIGRATION
CONSULTANTS

Telephone 364-0973

dancers aren't computers

Kraan means "to perfect"; erg, "energy". Roland Petit has created a ballet "with the complicity of the dancers," he says, in which he hopes "each of us will approach his own level of perfection."

For the National Ballet of Canada, Kraanerg is an energetic exercise in geometric perfection. In performance at the O'Keefe through Saturday 22 November, the work aims directly at the sixties by concentrating on its components: op art executed in black and white spheres and squares by Victor Vasarely and Yvaral; Iannis Xenakis' multi-tonal score, orchestra amplified by stereo tapes of electronic music; and the dancers' celebration of pure muscle control. This is NOT Les Sylphides!

Petit's choreography does not attempt a story line. In the first act, each of seven movements is discrete unto itself; most of the second act, however, seems to form a progression from group grope through partnership to mass copulation. But essentially the ballet, like its kinetic environment, concentrates on the art form itself. Though operating with humour and eroticism, the results are stark, complex and abstract.

Precision of execution is the vital factor, for an out-of-place foot or a one-second time lag gets magnified when concentration is on the dance movements rather than narrative or emotion. Thankfully, the corps de ballet showed much improvement over past seasons, showing special wit and coordination in the final, satiric movement of Act I. But they still haven't hit "kraan" yet.

Some of the soloists came closer. Georges Piletta's opening solo is a brilliant introduction to Kraanerg's style, and he maintained his superb power throughout subsequent appearances, including a lyric Adam and Eveing in Act II with Lynn Seymour. Miss Seymour shines, but with a romantic quality to her dancing style which seems strangely out of place in Kraanerg's world of matter and energy.

Another outstanding performance is given by Veronica Tennant, particularly in the first act's final movement, which she opens alone and in complete silence, as a perfect white circle descends from overhead. In this delicate movement Kraanerg achieves a perfect meshing of all the parts it is programmed to use. Its failure to do so elsewhere is perhaps attributable to the fact that, in spite of the ballet's built-in intentions, its performers are not computers. But neither they nor their audiences are sylphs, either, and Kraanerg's cerebral celebration comes close to challenging what and where they and their arts are.

caroline morgan

tell laura i love her.

a stoned out girl

When a virtuoso violinist plays, he is alone. Self-contained, oblivious to surroundings, the life of the performance is in the striving of man and instrument for pure musical expression.

This leaves the audience to do little more than be awed: they are allowed to watch a "star's" private exercises. When Laura Nyro stepped on to the Massey Hall stage she was greeted with bouquets and a standing ovation. The audience continued to react throughout with the same mechanical, hysteric adulation. With the first chords of every number came the inevitable applause; the people recognized the song, which was about the only reaction available. (At one point, she introduced a song as "one more from the House of Hits.")

What I am suggesting is that Laura Nyro's communion with the world is very limited. It's just her songs and the swoop of their words, the perfectly expressed, almost visual, tensions of her rhythms. She sang totally absorbed. This out of necessity, perhaps; for the intensity of her music seems to demand that she surrender herself to the songs as a real world.

She told a story, "I had a friend, not a real friend, imaginary . . . but he became real, he was a little overwhelming . . . he got so big that I was afraid of him . . . so I had to make friends with him, he was called Timer . . . applause, the song began . . . "Let the wind blow Timer"

"I am soft and silly and my name is Lilly"

A big girl in a layered chiffon gown. She walks slowly, and blinks at the lights. Trying to reach the piano, dealing with the audience — everything seems to be very difficult until she sings. Then we hear the black realms — the lovers, devils, street hopes all transformed and held.

Passion let out in one superb cry that suddenly twists and, as it falls away to silence, the piano begins to move in again, first, out of time, then a new rhythm rises. But it's all held in. There is safety in the music for her. The night will never be let loose.

A very stoned-out girl; after the second encore she said quietly, "You know . . . I think you're just trying to get on my good side." Her manager was careful to take away her piano stool after that. Like a prize fight handler, he whisked away his property from the gladiatorial mob. But the songs stay, to sit and sit in the mind.

doug walters

rah rea

David Rea, who became somewhat famous as a guitarist with Ian and Sylvia, opened a two week stand at the Riverboat on Tuesday night, looking somewhat drawn due to a case of food poisoning. However, his performance seemed to show little sign of this, although his voice began to fade at the end of each set.

Rea, who admits that "he can't sing worth a shit", demonstrated why his guitar playing was such a well known aspect of Ian and Sylvia's performances especially on such instrumentals as "Claw" by Jimmy Reed and an unnamed Doc Watson tune. His voice, though not good is adequate enough and at no time does it offend the listener. The songs which he did were mainly from an album which he has nearly completed and which should be released in January.

Despite his soft easy-going stage manner, there are some things which Rae does (or doesn't do) which can't help but offend, such as his total lack of verbal communication with his audience, his failure to introduce any of his material, and his frequent name dropping which tended to give me the impression that almost every known folk artist was his "good friend". Most annoying of all was his habit of doing the shortest sets which I have ever heard. This habit tends to break the bond which he is most capable of creating with his audience and is generally quite aggravating.

issy dubinsky

HEY ALICE!!! DANCE DOUBLE YNAMITE

2 BANDS

1) SHRAUDER
(9 piece R & B)

2) THE CATALIST
(HARD-ACHES BY THE NUMBER)

8:30 SAT. NOV. 22 NEW COLLEGE
WETMORE HALL (HURON & CLASSIC)

HOT HUSSIES $1 HORNEY HUSTLERS $1.50
HARDY HUBBIES $3 VIRGINS FREE!
(Must show proof)

Only 1st 400 will be admitted

VARSITY BLAZERS

Varsity Tartan
Kilts Ties and Scarves
made to order

RICHARDSON'S

546 Yonge St. 922-3141

THE

COFFEE SHOP-DISCOTHEQUE

DISCOTHEQUE

every Friday & Saturday Nite

10 P.M. . . 'til . . . 1 A.M.

at NEW COLLEGE

50¢/STAG 75¢/DRAG

by Jack Mc Caffrey

Coleman Hawkins

IF COLEMAN HAWKINS HADN'T FINALLY DRUNK AND STARVED HIMSELF TO DEATH, he would have been celebrating his 65th birthday today. But no one was surprised when he died last May 18; in fact, perhaps the most amazing thing about Hawkins is that he held on so long.

Did Coleman Hawkins have a death wish? This suggestion, hotly debated in the jazz press a couple of years ago, was first put forward after Hawkins collapsed at the Colonial Tavern in early 1967. Prior to his collapse that winter night, Hawkins had eaten nothing for a week. And, as was his wont, he had been drinking two bottles of brandy a day.

If Hawkins was attempting to destroy himself (and given the evidence, this seems at least a possibility) the reason why must remain a mystery. For Hawkins, patriarch of the tenor saxophone, had a life as rewarding as any could be in jazz. For over four decades, he made substantial creative contributions to America's only indigenous art form. He achieved worldwide recognition as a great jazzman. And, though not rewarded as well as many black popular musicians, Hawkins was always able to wear three hundred dollar suits, drink Haig & Haig Pinch, and fly first class. "I was always a rich musician," he said. "I never played for five dollars a night."

Right from the beginning, Hawkins was a star. After touring with Mamie Smith's Jazz Hounds, he joined Fletcher Henderson in 1923, soon becoming a featured soloist along with Louis Armstrong, Jimmy Harrison, Red Allen, Benny Carter, etc. (the list could go on, for Henderson's band was the greatest of its time, always filled with the most brilliant talents.) By the time he would be unthinkable. When Hawkins left the Henderson band after ten years of stylistic innovation and consolidation, Lester Young — a man with a radically different way of playing — was hired to replace Hawkins, but was quickly fired because he didn't "fit." Henderson had to find a Hawkins disciple.

In 1934, Hawkins — at the peak of his powers — suddenly left for Europe and did not return to the U.S. until just before the war broke out. While he was away, the challengers were sharpening their axes, getting ready to cut Daddy down.

But Hawkins had not stopped experimenting and growing musically during his sojourn. Rex Stewart, another Henderson alum, testifies that Hawkins retained the crown after a number of barites fought at after-hours jam sessions in Harlem.

Of course, Hawkins had always taken these cutting contests and sessions seriously. He had developed the necessary staying power years ago, when, after a hard night's work with the Henderson band, he used to invite Jack Teagarden and Jimmy Harrison — two of the greatest trombonists in jazz — over to his house to jam until noon the next day.

As if to settle the question for good — and in public — Hawkins recorded Body and Soul not long after his return in 1939. Designed to become one of the most famous solos in the history of jazz, Body and Soul (still available on the Victor record mentioned above) is a deliberate, restrained, and intelligent exploration of a ballad, with none of the excesses of the "rhapsodic" style, none of the heavy handed sentimentality often found in music of that period.

From the first note, Hawkins is improvising, re-aping the melody, then going on to construct new patterns on the harmonic structure. The form appears to be carefully tion comparable to that of the boppers. — with their long flowing lines based on chord structures — he always retained a swing era feeling for the beat. Consequently, he never had the rhythmic ease and lightness of men like Charlie Parker.

Still, Hawkins made some fine records in a bop vein, especially with the band featuring Howard McGhee in 1946. Twelve tunes reissued on Hollywood Starline (Capitol) — including the classic Staffs and Riffide — show a control over harmonic — and rhythmic materials which makes the music still sound fresh and original today.

Though he slipped out of the public's awareness in the early '50s, Hawkins surfaced again in the latter part of the decade. Recording prolifically, he astonished critics and musicians with the energy and inventiveness of his playing. "The older he gets, the better he gets," said Johnny Hodges. "If ever you think he's fallen behind, he's just gone on ahead again."

Records like Soul and Hawk Eyes (Prestige) demonstrate Hawkins' raw emotional power and almost satanic drive. His mastery of the ballad (never flaccid, never sentimental) is evident on The Hawk Relaxes (Prestige, Moodsville).

Even into the early '60s, Hawkins remained a major creative artist. His new version of Body and Soul on Benny Carter's Further Definitions (Impulse) made the other musicians' jaws drop in amazement. And his duet with drummer Shelly Manne on 234 (Impulse) is a perfect instance of Hawkins' ability to spontaneously create intricate patterns within an overall structure.

Hawkins' own favorite from this period is Today and Now (Impulse). Though he was 58 when he made it, he plays with great exuberance and freedom. The huge, thick tone (never equalled by any other saxothe best brilliant talents.) By the time he left the Henderson orchestra ten years later, Hawkins had become the band's heaviest gun, soloing on almost every record the band made.

Becoming the leading man on his instrument was an effort of sustained and intense self-will. Before Hawkins came to prominence, the saxophone was not really considered a musical instrument; it was simply a handy arsenal of ridiculous noises, used mainly for "comedy" effects. Hawkins had to grope toward a viable way of playing his horn — and with no established idol to emulate (or defy) it was a slow and clumsy process.

But by the late 1920s, Hawkins had evolved a style that was to influence a whole generation of jazzmen. You can hear it on pieces like Sir Louis Shuffie and One Hour on Body and Soul, RCA Victor LPV 501.) The first number, a "stomp" recorded by the Henderson band ("I always thought Fletcher should have stayed a stomp band and stomped all other bands out of existence," Hawkins said) features a solo which, though rhythmically rather stilted, has intense drive, and a good sense of form. The second piece shows Hawkins' "rhapsodic" style, characterized by a big warm tone heavy with vibrato and an elaborate kind of improvisation concerned with architectonic pattern and decoration.

These two basic approaches were refined in the early '30s until they gave Hawkins complete domination of the whole tenor sax scene. If you wanted to play the tenor, you had to play it like Hawk — anything else structure. The form appears to be carefully controlled, with its beautifully symmetrical phrases, each one proceeding logically from the one before, culminating in a climax in the last eight bars, and subsiding in a simple coda — and yet the entire performance is spontaneous. Hawkins claims that the number was never anything special as far as he was concerned; it was just something he used "to get off the stand. I was just making those notes like I always did."

During the 1940's, Hawkins enjoyed the most creative period of his life, playing and recording in a wide variety of settings. Many of the solos he recorded for the old Commodore, Keynote, Signature and Apollo labels (among others) are classics of swinging era jazz. Perhaps the epitome of his playing of this period are the four solos he made with Oscar Pettiford and Eddie Heywood in 1944 reissued on Classic Tensors, Contact CM-3; among them, The Man I Love is outstanding for its supple yet insistent swing and its marvelous symmetry of construction.

When the bop movement began, Hawkins was listening, and in fact he encouraged the young radicals, hiring musicians like Thelonious Monk ("His favourite trick was falling off the bands and Hawkins recalled Miles Davis, J. J. Johnson, and Fats Navarro. On the first bop recording date, Hawk led the band, which featured Dizzy Gillespie.

The influence of bop on Hawkins' style often resulted in a curious tension, for a while Hawkins had a harmonic sophistica-tone (never equalled by any other saxophonist), the dancing rhythms, the fine sense of form — all coalesce in vital expression of his greatness.

But that was the last good record that Hawkins made. He continued to work off and on until his death last May, but he seemed only sporadically interested in music and in life. He could still get up and demolish his rivals (as he did one night at New York's Philharmonic Centre, when he almost obliterated John Coltrane and Sonny Rollins). But it really didn't matter to him any more.

When he recovered from his collapse at the Colonial Tavern, Hawkins started eating and quit drinking entirely — for two weeks. But he remarked, "I know when I get back to New York, I'll start in drinking a little brandy again — maybe half a bottle a day. And after I've been back for a couple of weeks, I'll probably be back up to two bottles a day."

A couple of months later, Hawk was back in Toronto with Jazz At The Philharmonic. He shuffled across the stage at Massey Hall barely able to stand up. When he blew into his horn all we could hear was the breath — no sound. The tone that finally emerged was shaky (though it still reminded us of the huge passionate sound he always had). Hawkins could scarcely put one phrase after another; he kept running out of breath; he could hardly hold himself together.

We never saw him again.

b. Nov. 21, 1904
d. May 19, 1969

CLASSIFIEDS

RESEARCH project on snow storms in quotes helps to conduct evening telephone interviews, a few evenings only. Attractive rate of pay. Interested telephone Prof. Button or Miss Goodwillie, 928 3379

Typing theses, essays, notes, charts English, French, other languages. Mimeographing, electric typewriters. Mary Dale Stott (M. Davelle) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225, 922 7624

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet. The Day you buy a diamond. H. Proctor and Co. 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416 921 7702

SALTY DOG DISCOTHEQUE Will rent premises Monday to Thursday Day or Evening. For information call A. Curry 954 7060 or 633 2677

MEN WANTED to sing good music with a chamber choir. Phone I. Schreiber, 928 5171 535 5019

COUNTER HELP needed 2 to 5 days per week room to 2:00 p.m. Bloor University Area. Pay $3 plus lunch per day. Phone 445 0040

SUZANNE, Please come back. I can't live without you and brides. Cannonball is only a few weeks away. I need you. Sam

ATTRACTIVE GIRLS needed for regatta icon and exhibit work at Trade Shows. Phone 762 3066 Mrs. Korr, Mrs. Mac Lennan

SMOKE? Come and get yours at the Kappa Sigma smoke! Free refreshments! Home of the live guys. All interested invited. Mon. Nov. 24 7 p.m. 218 Bavelley St. 922 1494

EXPERIENCED TYPIST will do essays, theses etc. Electric typewriter. Call 922 5388 any time

ESSAYS, Theses, typed professionally on electric machine. Paper supplied 30¢ per page. Close to campus. 791 Madison Avenue. Phone 922 8564 after six. Ask for Lou

FOUND — ladies gold inscribed watch on Hoskin Ave. Thursday Nov. 13th. Phone 267 7802

STUDENT JOBS AND TOURS IN EUROPE. Every student guaranteed a paying job in Europe. For a complete description and application form in a 42 page booklet send $2.00 to Gord Allan 25 Tay lorwood Dr. Islington

GRAD STUDIES "A". Soccer team des perately require a goalkeeper with experience. Contact John Punter 922-5173 or 928-2057

TUTORING — All undergraduate math, science, programming and drafting. Counselling — personal, drug, study and vocational. 925-9882

"HAIR" tickets for Jan 28th & 29th are now on sale for 10% less at Innis II, 63 St. George St. Rm 109

BAREFOOT COFFEE HOUSE presents Raffi Cavoucan Nov. 21, and 22 from 11 p.m. to 2 a.m. Coffee, donuts, etc. At Victoria College, Wymilwood

SURPRISINGLY attractive room in quiet, but interesting house. Full kitchen facilities $50 mo. Walking distance to school — if you're energetic. Dundas-Jarvis area. Call 363 9977

NIGHT they raided Minsky's. Movie Westmore Hall New College. 2 showings u 30 & 9 p.m. Sunday Nov. 23 Admission $1 at door

"BELLY-BUTTON" Coffee Shop-Discot heque New College - Wilson Hall. Sneak Sat. 10 p.m. every Fri & Sat. Steg 50¢-dmg 75¢

TUTOR REQUIRED, writer wishes to obtain oral outline of Biology 3 or 4 year course and of Psychology 304. Girl preferred 421 6893

DANCE — double dynamite 2 bands at Wetmore Hall. New College 8:30 Sat. Nov. 22. lambs $1, wolves $1.50, fish $3.00

CRACKERS and CHEESE — 2 fantastic musical revues — Sunday Nov. 23, 8:30 p.m. — Wilson Hall Dining Hall, N.C. — $1.00 cheap!

HOUSE ON MAJOR ST. To share with two students. Phone 922-5798 or materialize at 33 Major

RENTALS
 TYPEWRITERS
 ADDING MACHINES
 T.V.'S
 STEREO TAPE RECORDERS
 STEREO RECORD PLAYERS
698-2589
DANFORTH TYPEWRITER
 2940 DANFORTH AVE
 FREE DELIVERY

Remodelling & Alterations
 — A Specialty —
STUDENTS' ELITE
 Cleaners & Tailors
 654 Spadina Ave.
 922-4361
 10% DISCOUNT
 ON PRESENTATION
 of A.T.L. cards
 MEMBER OF INDEPENDANT
 CLEANERS ASSOC.

AFGHAN COATS
 Long fleeced
 Suede jackets & coats
 Hand made
 Limited supply
LIDCHI ORIENTAL RUGS
 2098 Yonge Street at Manor Road
 Phone 481-5501

The Wymilwood Concert Committee
 presents
 A Programme of Music From the Renaissance
 with
 The Clerkes
 under the direction of Giles Bryant
 and
 The Sarum Waites
 under the direction of Francis Braunlich
 Wymilwood Music Room
 (150 Charles St. W.)
 Sunday, November 23rd.
 9 p.m.
 Admission Free

N.C. DRAMA GUILD PRESENTS
 JEAN ANOUILH
 MEDEA
 DIRECTED BY ALEXANDRA MERCET
 NOV. 20 & 21 8:30 P.M.
 NEW COLLEGE WILSON HALL

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE
 DANCE
 SAT. NOV. 22nd
 WITH THE SCARBORO FAIR
 HOWARD FERGUSON HALL
 9:00 - 12:00 $1.00

XARHAKOS - THEODORAKIS - HADZIDAKIS

GREEK MUSIC FOLK & MODERN DANCING

BOUZOUKI SIRTAKI

GREEK FOOD & SWEETS GREEK FUN

GREEK NIGHT 69

ON FRIDAY NOV. 21 8:00 PM

FILM "PHAEDRA" WITH MELINA MERCOURI AND ANTHONY PERKINS. (ENGLISH SPOKEN)

GREEK ART

GENERAL ADMISSION: $1.50 WITH A.T.L.: $1.00

GREEK ARTICRAFTS

MUSIC BY: ATHENAIKI

AT INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS CENTRE 33 ST. GEORGE ST.

musical monologue

arlo

Last Thursday night before a filled Massey Hall, Arlo Guthrie displayed his revolutionary folk concept. He is a performer whose beauty lies in his beautiful sense of humour and warm stage manner as much as in his music.

His renditions of such numbers as Don't Think Twice, It's Alright are quality performances, but only on such tunes as Motorcycle Song does the true brilliance of the performer shine through.

The first half of the concert was spotty, though the more comedy oriented things Guthrie did were warmly received. Unfortunately, a fine rendition of Grand Coolie Dan, a song which his father Woody wrote and sang, went unappreciated by the audience, who probably didn't recognize the song.

The second half of the concert was marked by the realization of the potential which underlined the first set, as Guthrie related a bilarious version of the story of Moses (a narration which bore, by the way, no semblance to Cosby's story of Noah as was reported in The Star) which was a most enchanting comic tale. At the concert's end, the stage was mobbed by hundreds of members of the audience, but rather than blow his cool, Arlo promptly sat down at the piano (which he plays quite well) and did a rocked up version of Alice's Restaurant, and then walked off stage unbothered.

All of this is not to say that Guthrie is a comedian and not a folk singer. Rather, he has discovered a sedate, beautiful, and unique way of relating his message (primarily about drugs and cops) through comic discourse and song. Thursday's concert was evidence of the success of his method, and will stand as a testimonial to the best young performer in the folk field.

issy dubinsky

an intrusion

This week Maurice Maeterlinck's Intruder is making his presence felt at St. Hilda's College in a very competent noon-hour production.

From a theory of "static drama," Macterlinck developed stark symbols as a dramatic means of communicating a sense of the eternal and potent forces hidden behind nature. His plays are characterized by inaction, silence, and a sense of waiting.

What is awailed in The Intruder is unavoidable tragedy. In the TCDS production, the blind Grandfather, portrayed Rod Beattie, comes across very strongly . . . perhaps too strongly, since he seems to infect the rest of the cast with his own sense of imminent catastrophe. One gets a strong feeling of "the intruder," but the unlevelled interaction of the other characters' feelings is weakened, though there are some sharp exchanges between Beattie and George Young as the father.

The total effect is slight bewilderment as to what, if anything happened. Whether or not one actually does glimpse Maeterlinck's world of the eternal beyond nature is also debatable. However, as an interesting 20-minute exercise in the psychology of tension and the supernatural, the play is a success.

—Iothar mensch

ravel's l'enfant

The Faculty of Music's presentation of Ravel's "L'enfant et les Sortilèges", playing through Sunday is a deceptive piece of stagecraft. Written in 1925, based on a poem by Colette, it is one of Ravel's last works, and the second of his two opuses for stage. Ravel considers this work a "Jamaïque lyrique en deux parties" those who expect opera in the grand tradition will find the charm and naivety of the work disarming. However in the oeuvres of both Ravel and Colette, naivety is the result of much sophisticated effort.

This children's story relates the tale of a mischievous boy who is suddenly confronted by the victims of his pranks. Furniture and chinaware come to life, trees and animals grow articulate and reasoning. The frightened child repents and, exhausted, calls for "naana". On those two syllables, set to a characteristic Ravelian descending fourth, the work ends.

The opera is unconventional and poses singular problems both in staging and in performance. A simple plot with many characters, it is essentially a visual presentation which must rely on elaborate scenery and colourful costumes to convey its mood of enchantment. Last night's presentation was very impressive with imaginative costumes and ingenious sets. The huge stage, completely filled with colour, could have carried the production by itself.

Fortunately, the visual excitement of the presentation was extended and augmented by the music. The sounds were Ravelian at their luxuriant erotic best, with occasional interruptions by the less-than-conventional flute à coulisse (slide whistle) and rape à fromage (cheese grater). The two aspects of the music were convincing and excitingly played and never extraneous to the stage action.

The opera was presented in English, and as in most translated works of this sort, much of the original flavour is lost. The Wedgwood teapot, spouting British apborisms in English must have been very quaint in the French production, though here, surrounded by an English-speaking cast, much of its impact is lost. But this is a small point in a generally excellent production.

tony john

think -theatre

Those who like their theatre heavily spiced with philosophy will enjoy the Glenmorris street theatre's current double bill — Show's in The Beginning and e. e. cummings' Santa Claus Masque.

In The Beginning, the first play in Shaw's cycle Back to Methusala, portrays a speculative Adam and a pragmatic Eve trying to sort out all the human problems which will plague their children ages hence. The subject is ponderous, the plot nonexistent, and Shaw tends to pound incessantly on key points. Nevertheless, a certain charm envelops the young couple groping not only for values, but for words. And at times Shaw lets up the heavy verbal barrage and the silent actors speak: when the serpent reveals the nature of sex to Eve, she reacts with a kind of wordless horror.

It is unfortunate that Shaw set the play in Paradise. More unfortunate still is this production's costuming — animal skins, sandals and clubs. At best, the situation is a trifle cute. Stone Age embellishments make the actors seem more like the Flintstones than the archtypal human pair seeking the ultimate end of human life.

One senses that the actors feel the incongruity of their dress. Their movement and gestures are tentative and inhibited. Only Cain, played by Randolf Del Lago, rises above the stone club and leopard skin to seize the stage and embody Shaw's idea of a man in love with power. As Eve, Leigha Lee's lack of poise is redeemed by her voice — tired and yet insistent, forgiving and yet disappointed. She sounds like everybody's mother and Shaw's conception of woman: willful, wise and powerful. The voice of the serpent, Lea Usin, also proves highly effective. It writhes, twists, slinks, coils and almost compensates for her inability to move, constricted by drapes of shimmering green material. Robert Lackenbauer seems to be constricted by Shaw, who made the character of Adam so meditative that at times he comes off merely feeble.

e. e. cummings' Santa Claus Masque gives the audience more to watch and ponder. cummings makes no explicit points in this bizarre and sometimes grotesque play, in which Santa changes places with Death and brings about the reincarnation of joy in the world. Richard Murphet plays a striking death, while John Browne maintains a lovable Santa stuck with the problem of "having too much to give." An exceptionally effective chorus, plus director Sheldon Clark's superb blocking, also contribute to this very smooth production.

—cecilia viggio

ein kälter sonntag mit dem wunderkind

One of the pleasantest things to do on bright, cold Sunday afternoons in the fall is to wander down to the Art Gallery of Ontario, have a look at the current exhibition, and listen to one of the concerts that they present there Sundays at three. The Art Gallery is a good place to hold concerts; it reminds you of how close the different arts really are, even if its rather vibrant acoustics work best with things like choral groups, or wind instrumentalists, and aren't very suitable for other, less resonant musical sounds such as the solo piano of the last concert, which featured 18 year-old Wunderkind from the Royal Conservatory, Leslie Kinton.

Leslie Kinton's concert, played with lots of professional aplomb, showed that he promises to be a fine pianist. His technique is very sound and he plays with admirable clarity, which was particularly noticeable in the Haydn Sonata in D major that began the concert.

Beethoven's Appassionata, second on the program, is a piano sonata that's played a lot, but very seldom well, because it's a difficult piece. Leslie Kinton's technical prowess was up to the demands of the work, but his dynamic range and powers of expression are not yet well enough developed to give the sonata all it should have had.

The concluding Messiaen "Preludes" were excellent however. Kinton seems to have a good understanding of Messiaen's enigmatic mixture of impressionism, exoticism, and 20th century dryness.

Next Sunday the Royal Conservatory of Music Opera School Concert Group will perform, and although this is the last concert in the Art Gallery's fall series, they will begin again in the spring.

nicholas schmidt

tears tears tears

Ben E. King is a part of rhythm and blues history, and that's one of the problems with his show which is at Le Coq d'Or for the week. He put out some solid material several years ago, songs which are in fact, classics, a vital part of any performer's repertoire like, Spanish Harlem, Stand By Me and I Who Am Nothing. As is usual, history is better left undisturbed.

Wearing a checked sports jacket and open-necked shirt, he looked like a resurrection from the fifties. Throughout the set, he displayed little enthusiasm or real interest. He came on as a tired performer, a man limping along on hits of a decade earlier. In spite of his nondescript appearance and performance, his voice was in fair shape. The wonderful thick smokiness of his voice is still present and he did a fine version of Spanish Harlem. A moaning, discordant, even strident band took any edge there was off his performance. Playing heavy-handed with no finesse or subtleties, the band, which is his own, bored the audience before Ben E. King came on and then simply destroyed anything he had left. Even the topless dancers in the moving patterns of light were more interesting. Feebly clutching a microphone and weakly finger-popping, he sang,

"It brings back memories Of days that I once knew"

don quinlan

and she can yodel

"let's have a party!"

A shimmering dress of sparkling silver sequins, long, rich, black hair, warm, sensual, and she yodels. There is a popular stereotype of what a female country singer should look like. If you want to see that notion dispelled, see Wanda Jackson.

She has the pristine country sound, made more sensitive by the slight Oklahoma drawl which so richly textures her songs. She exudes a certain homey graciousness that gives her an easy, friendly, intimacy with her audience. (She began the set from her seat in the middle of the crowd.) An ability to communicate, to move an audience made the Horseshoe Tavern hers. Smiles creased the faces of people resting back and having a good time. Singing loudly, the crowd roared along with WALK RIGHT IN. At a time when many artists in country music are opting for the sound of the pop stars, it's reassuring to find a girl who is faithful to her medium and still able to put on a rousing show.

A lovely dynamo, but still a girl who likes to sing country songs, Wanda Jackson is having a party at the Horseshoe this week, and you're all invited.

dan quinlan

a ghost of a sound for the spooky tooth

Spooky Tooth is a heavy rock group which is always threatening to break through to major prominence, but never quite makes it. They have two albums out, both of which were quite good, but not really good, and they sold quite well, but not really well. There's another one on the way, and most likely it will be pretty similar to the others.

At first it is hard to see where the problem is. They have a good bass player, an inventive drummer, an organ player who occasionally shows flashes of almost classical musical insight (he also sings with a strong, penetrating voice), as well as a lead singer who is outstanding. Yet despite all this high-powered ability, too many of their songs don't make it, and there's often something missing in the ones that do.

Two sets at the Hawk's Nest on Sunday night revealed why. Of course the words to their songs don't help — instead of being effectively simple they're mostly just simple minded — but basically what's wrong is that they don't work hard enough to get varied musical content in their playing. Once having got hold of a few good ideas, rather than using them as a base for further exploration and elaboration to create an intriguing musical tapestry, they just work them to death.

This was particularly noticeable in "Evil II onan", their big jam number. Although it makes the Trogs version of the same song sound ridiculous, it went on far too long, with not enough happening to justify the length. More than once the group took a certain riff and just kept repeating it, over and over, until it sounded like a scratched record with the needle caught in one groove.

Not everything was like that though. The live performance of "Waiting for the II and", one of the better songs on their second album, was excellent, showing that Spooky Tooth could make an important contribution to rock music if more of their material was as interesting.

nicholas schmidt

UGH!

The Ecstasy of Rita Joe is a play which is filled with good impulses. First of all it is a new Canadian play — and that has to be a good sign. Second of all it deals with a vitally important issue in our society. Third of all, the production which runs until Saturday night at the Central Library Theatre has Molly Thom in the title role of Rita Joe. But with all these good impulses, The Ecstasy of Rita Joe is nothing but an artificial, superficial and stereotyped presentation of the plight of the Canadian Indian.

Breast-beating on behalf of the persecuted Indian has become something of a cause-célèbre in Canada. As if to make up for our relative ignorance of the state of affairs, and also to shoulder some of the guilt, more and more people are crying out against the shabby treatment of Canada's oldest citizens. Now I'm all for this kind of pseudo-social commentary, but The Ecstasy of Rita Joe is just too ignorant for words.

Sample the plot. Pretty, uneducated Indian girl makes a break from the confines of the reservation to make her fortune in the city. Ends up on skid-row as a shop-lifter, an alcoholic and a whore. Gets thrown in jail and eventually gets raped and killed. Ho-hum.

Blundering through this melodrama we get all the kinds of cardboard people one expects — the pompous, self-righteous magistrate, the kindly but ineffectual priest, the defiant young boyfriend, the middle-aged social worker whose solution to the Indian problem is a bowl of soup and old clothes, and best of all the paternal tribal chief who comes to the big city to rescue his daughter Rita Joe, mumbling parables about white geese and dragonflies.

If the story of "Rita Joe" wasn't bad enough, Herbert Whittaker's design and direction really tipped the tepee. The set was shabby and ineffective; the actors plodded across the stage doing all kinds of stilted and artificial things and produced no feeling whatsoever. Only Molly Thom as Rita Joe captured with some emotion what the plight of the Indian in the city is supposed to be. At least some of the time one wants to pity her, and surely that's all The Ecstasy of Rita Joe is supposed to be — an exercise in pity.

I don't want to seem unfeeling about the whole matter. It just seems that the Indian question in Canada is rapidly coming to resemble the weather. Everybody talks about it but nobody does anything about it.

lorne fienberg

country and cajun

DOUG KERSHAW. The Cajun Way. Warner Bros. WS1820.

From the land of Dr. John, comes Doug Kershaw with his bag of gris-gris. Fiddling, stomping, singing like a wild Alcaid, he lays down some fantastic tracks. Diggy Diggy Lo, Louisiana Man and Papa and Mama Had Love are a few of the best tunes. Kershaw's own special essence makes the album and experience. Johnny Cash said it all when he wrote,

*"He's been a long time coming
Thank God he has survived
Get ready for him this time, world
My Coon-ass friend has arrived!"*

JERRY LEE LEWIS & LINDA GAIL LEWIS. Together. Smash SRS-67126.

Jerry Lee has returned to his country roots within the last couple of years and has been very successful both financially and artistically. On this album, he brings his sister along with him. The best track is their hit, Don't Let Me Cross Over. Many of the other songs are country standards like Jackson, Cryin' Time and Gotta Travel On. Linda Gail has a good voice and just might make it on her own.

PORTER WAGONER. Me And My Boys. RCA. LSP-4181.

Porter Wagoner and his Wagonmasters are in the solid mainstream of country music. With suits of embroidered wagon wheels and covered wagons, they play straight country tunes. Songs of shucking corn and Tennessee studs are the fare. They play their music well and even the sophisticated urbanite cannot fail to respond to House of Shame, a moving tale of old people in "homes".

ROY CLARK. Yesterday, When I Was Young. Dot DLP 25953.

They used to say "You can take the boy out of the country, but not the country out of the boy." The country in Roy Clark has been emasculated by lush orchestration, record executives, and Charles Aznavour (who wrote the title song). Clark, a star of Hee Haw, and one of the finest pickers in country music doesn't even give his guitar a workout. Maybe he's traded it for a tuxedo and a grand piano. Too bad, he'll never make it as a caberet singer.

ROGER MILLER. Smash, SRS67123.

Another excellent compendium of Roger Miller humour, pathos, and tales for everyday people. This man can take the most ordinary fact of life and, with his special talent, weave a tale that evokes a deep, sincere reaction from his listener. There's not a bad track on the album.

WAYLON JENNINGS. Country-Folk. RCA. LSP-4180.

The "Nashville rebel" joins forces with a new group, The Kimberlys, and continues to try to interpret pop songs in a country context. Waylon Jennings fails in this album to successfully bring pop music into the mainstream of country music. All that is really achieved is a selection of tepid pop music. Side two is less pop oriented and is much better music.

dan quinlan

up with bourgeois liberalism

In compliance with the judgment of his deus ex machina that it is a great sin not to be contemporary, John Benrose has written a modest fable. The Emperor's New Clothes, which concludes its week-long run tonight and tomorrow night at the New Vic Theatre. Although complete originality is out of the question within such a genre, Benrose's first public work is retric rather than derivative, owing us much to King Lear as to H. C. Anderson.

The cast includes the good daughter, Anemia (Karen Evans), the ambitious daughter, Olivia (Diane Hoar), the expected fool (John Ingram Jackson), and the totally unexpected caprophilar (Jim Tait) who is incidentally right hand man to the aged industrial magnate O'Leary (Jim Ballard). Such a perversion is, to my knowledge, so rare on the stage that it is unfortunate that Tait's lines are for the most part unimaginative. Benrose himself plays the lecherous, plastic-Marxist, non-romantic lead. A couple of flower children and a "pig" keep the production up to date.

Although Tom Plaunt composed songs for The Emperor's New Clothes the play does not work well as a musical. One reason is that apart from Miss Evans none of the singers have pleasant voices. Furthermore the songs are for the most part too brief — the finale in particular — to create lasting impressions.

While the acting is in no case outstanding, The Emperor's New Clothes is a well paced and occasionally witty production. The rub is that while a fable must have a moral, the moral of this one is limited in its appeal. Ostensibly it preaches love — but then so does everyone. It also attacks the "Protestant Ethic", which may still pose problems at Vic. Fundamentally, however, it backs bourgeois liberalism: sliding tax scales, buying off the proletariat with higher pay and shorter hours, and even a municipal co-op to keep the flower children off the streets.

— mel bradshaw

and now in the category of best short feature on the subject of four-foot pink pythons.....

Like products of the underground-film world, campus movies are something of an acquired taste. The bulk of them are the overenthusiastic and unsuccessful attempts of youth, which have no more claim to enduring attention than the mediocre sophomore poems and short stories churned out yearly by would-be Uppikes and Salingers.

Occasionally, however, one may be lucky enough to discover a diamond or two buried under a ton of coal. Judging from the handful of gems screened last week at the National Student Film Festival, it seems that a promising wave of new artists is in the making.

Sponsored by the Film, Library, and Art Committees of Hart House, the festival invited the submission of amateur movies completed after January 1, 1968, by Canadian university or high school students. Each entry was classified as belonging to the Dramatic, Experimental, Animation or Documentary categories, with $75.00 and $25.00 grants per category.

Because of the relative novelty of such a programme, the Film Festival was well-publicized only in the Toronto and Ottawa areas, and as a result, all but a few of the 23 entries came from within Ontario. Despite the excellence of certain of the films, the festival lacked a Canada-wide atmosphere and too often fell back on Yonge Street or Parliament Hill for local colour.

The series in general was reproductive rather than inventive, with most of the films borrowing excessively from established themes (the alienation of The Graduate) or established techniques (flashing pictures with Expo 67's stroboscope rapidity). Only those movies with a properly developed core of originality were awarded prizes by festival adjudicator Allan King, director of Warrendale and A Married Couple.

The best category and most difficult to judge was Dramatic, which involved putting a fictional story onto film. With good reason, King passed over some fine submissions on the hopelessness of contemporary society, a study on claustrophobia, and even a silent Western in favour of two superb comedies: Snake Eyes by Thomas Browne, and Things by P. Grigg and M. Pigus.

A horror movie spoof, Snake Eyes (8 min., colour, Super 8) documents the reign of terror wreaked upon an unsuspecting community by a "ferocious" pink four-foot python. Unlike the conventional isn't-this-the-funniest-thing-you've-ever-seen takeoff, Snake Eyes follows through perfectly by tell-wood cut by Iron Short ing the story of the "pink peril" in flawless dead-pan style.

Things (13 min., b&w, 16 mm.) is a boy-meets-girl tale with a highly offbeat twist: the hero and heroine would rather read and collect books together than become better acquainted in the more traditional manner. Its quick pace never letting up for a moment, Things abounds in a series of excellent sight gags. For example, when the star-crossed lovers meet, they fall in love at first sight and reciprocate affection by throwing each other's books in slow motion.

Both Snake Eyes and Things succeed because they depend almost exclusively upon the originality of content of their well thought-out scripts. It is this factor which distinguishes them in a category whose films generally set too high goals. The Dramatic winners, like a good many of the better current movies, reject stop-action photography, split-screen, flash-backs and other complicated and sometimes confusing devices, and win out simply through the merit of their own material.

The Experimental category, whose films concerned themselves primarily with technique, was led by Up Only (7 min., b&w, 16 mm.). Produced by Whitney Smith, Up Only, in which a boy drops a watermelon off a tall building, was the only movie of any value in this area, since it related something of a story while the camera played its fanciful tricks. Outsight by M. Battle and A Film About by David Kirkham tied for second place, but in no way do they approach the whimsical slickness of the winner. While the runners-up may have achieved recognition because of a moderately developed sense of experimentation, they are, in terms of content, classic bores compared to Up Only. Which all goes to show that man does not live by technique alone.

Eden (6 min., colour, Super 8), a cartoon involving the creation of woman and the Original Sin, proved to be the only entry in the Animation category. Mr. King, who was at liberty to refuse first prize to Producer Robert Weltman, nevertheless granted Eden the award due to its overall smoothness of action and professional quality.

At first glance, one would not guess that this short piece took Weltman 15 months to put together. The plot is strictly Biblical, with no twists or surprises. Movement is slightly choppy in places, and the central figures are vaguely reminiscent of the Marvel Comics school of art.

Subsequent viewings, however, reveal Eden's true merit, and tend to make it an example of what cartoons can do to appeal to an adult audience. The simple background with its pure, but subdued, colours is perfectly suited to the theme and wisely evades the temptation of over-artiness usually associated with the Garden of Eden. In addition, the lack of flesh-and-blood actors makes it possible to give Adam and Eve an air of true naturalness by exposing their genitals. Unfettered by the ever-present strategically-placed palm branch, the man, the woman and the audience are at ease to appreciate the beauties of the new world.

When approached on a mature level, cartoons such as Eden become true art and further serve as reminders that the animation field, for all its Jetsons and Clutch Cargos, still contains the biting wit of Roger Ramjet and the fantastic beauty of Yellow Submarine.

The Documentary category was led by Howard Greenspan's Relation (25 min., colour, 16 mm.), a study on the corrupting power of knowledge on a wide scale. Relation achieves high professional caliber by staggering its story sequence between a pictorial history of the education of mankind and the reactions of college students and grade-school children towards T. S. Eliot's "The Waste Land". To reinforce the theme it also makes use of a wide variety of stunning visual images, including a symbolic Apple of Knowledge tightly sealed in a plastic bag.

Because no other film in this area could even attempt to approach Relation's polished script, control of technique, or the mature handling of a theme, Allan King not only named it the sole winner in the Documentary category, but declared it the best movie, and Greenspan the outstanding director, in the entire festival. He also commended Mrs. Roberta Charlesworth and the North York Board of Education whose institution of an advanced programme of amateur film-making led to the production of the first-place films in the Experimental, Animation and Documentary categories.

Under the guidance of eminent individuals such as Charlesworth, the celluloid explosion of the future will result in an increased number of top-quality movies. The winners of the National Student Film Festival are evidence of the growing body of truly talented students who are attracted to the cinema and turn out excellent material if properly instructed. Only when the supervised production of movies becomes an accepted and universal part of education will film assume its rightful place as the most vital form of modern art.

watsUP

radio and television....daniel mack films....ian ritchie
theatre....marion o'connor
books....bob bossin and steve langdon
editor....larry haiven
associate....jack mccaffrey music....peter hatch
art....mike kesterton photography....errol young

MUSIC

The Faculty of Music production of Ravel's L'enfant et les Sortilèges is on tonight, Saturday and Sunday at 8:30 in the Edward Johnson Building, and again Dec. 6-14 for school children.

This Sunday, the TSO presents its Pension Fund concert with Ancerl conducting. On Thursday the PRAGUE CHAMBER ORCHESTRA will be at Massey Hall, and Sunday, Nov. 30th, the BOYD NEEL ORCHESTRA, in its third concert will present a Bach program.

MOTHER TUCKERS YELLOW DUCK has rented the old Rock File for a concert Saturday night. The MOODY BLUES, making a comeback tour, will be at Massey Hall, along with Humble Pie, a week from Saturday (Nov. 29th). TREVOR PAYNE is at the Hawks Nest Friday and Saturday; on Sunday it's NICE. Next weekend the Hawks Nest have ZOOM and McKENNA MENDELSON MAINLINE.

JAZZ.

There isn't much. The main attraction is the AL NEIL TRIO which will present a mixed media concert with tapes, slides, drums, piano, and a dancer — Hart House, Wednesday from four to six. Then there's the JONAH JONES at the Colonial through Saturday, who once did play jazz.

ALMETA SPEAKS, who has a growing reputation as a blues, etc. singer, is playing upstairs at Old Angelo's. DAVID RAE will be on for another week at the Riverboat, and LENNY BREAU ends his two weeks at The Onion on Sunday — DAVE BRADSTREET opens there Wednesday. WANDA JACKSON is at the Horseshoe Tavern through Saturday, with GEORGE HAMILTON IV coming in on Monday. BEN E KING is at the Coq D'Or.

FREE

Nov. 21-23. Ravel's opera as above.

Nov 24 Organ recital by Charles Peaker, 5:00 at Convocation Hall.

Nov. 24. Gunner Bucht. Lecture on Swedish Music. 1:00 at the Edward Johnson building.

Nov. 25. CBC taping of Threnody by Murray Shafer. For this and the other CBC events, call the CBC for tickets and details.

Nov. 29. Chamber Players of Toronto under Victor Martin at the Faculty of Music.

Nov. 30. CBC taping of the Lyric Arts Trio. Faculty of Music.

Dec. 1. Chamber Music of Charles Ives, performed by students of the Faculty of Music.

Dec. 4. Violin recital by Victor Martin, 2:00 at the Faculty of Music.

THERE WON'T BE A REVIEW NEXT WEEK — COMMUNITY ISSUE

ph

THEATRE

Tickets for the upcoming Toronto production of Hair can be got obtained and otherwise procured from Innis College Room 109 for a 10 percent discount Go to Innis College II for more information. Tickets available for dates Jan. 28 and 29. And you don't even have to take your clothes off.

MISC.

Never before has the Varsity Review Subcommittee to Investigate Contests (V.R.S.I.C.) had as much response as it has had to Varsity Review Contest No. 3. If you will remember, we presented a dollar bill shaped like a computer card with a program punched into it. Remember. Well the answers have been pouring in by the thousands. So many correct answers, in fact, that we're going to give the grand prize to the fellow who made the worst mistake.

The program read

DANCE

While the National Ballet is currently giving top billing to its production of Kraanerg, an exercise in form stripped of Western classical convention, another dance company will be in Toronto next Wednesday to give a performance richly encrusted in national traditions. The Budaya Troupe of Indonesia — 16 dancers, musicians and a puppeteer from Bali, Java and Sunda — will present the Hindu epic, the Ramayana. Their media will be, according to their press release, "various forms of Indonesian dance, theater and puppetry. For example, the bird Jatayu will be depicted through Balinese dance; Rama and his brother Lakshmana, searching for Sita, the wife of Rama, will be shown through wayang golek (rod puppets); Hanuman, the monkey general, will be portrayed in a masked dance of the Javanese style; and Rama fighting with the demons will be depicted through wayang kulit (shadow puppet play). The dancers and puppets will be accompanied by a gamelan orchestra consisting of many gongs, xylophone-like instruments and drums."

Co-sponsored by the graduate Drama Centre, the department of East Asian Studies, and the Faculty of Music, the show will be literally unique — offered only on Wednesday, 26 November, at 8:30 pm in the MacMillan Theatre of the Edward Johnson Building. Student tickets, available now, are $1.50.

—mo'c

ent Seat, Wild Strawberries, Godard's disturbing vision of the future (Alphaville). Variety Lights, the first feature actively directed by Fellini in 1950 and Citizen Kane, which in 1941 marked the entrance of the infant terrible of American cinema, Orson Welles.

Hopefully, Janus Films will continue with New Cinema in the New Year, but in the meantime, the Directors' Festival may help you to see your way through a crushingly dull civic election.

ir

THEATRE

Not reviewed in this publication but worth checking out on campus at 8:30 tonight (last chance): in UC's West Hall Pocoli Ludique Societas presents Hycke Scornor, written by Medieval Anonymous and directed by Ian Lanchashire. Like all PLS productions, it is free, though "Christian charity hath precedent" when they pass the hat to subsidize the cast party. And meanwhile, over in New College's Wilson Hall, the New College Dama Guild is offering Jean Anouilh's Antigone.

Also not to be reviewed (because no Review next Friday) are several shows opening on or near campus next week. At noon hour (1:15) on Tuesday through Friday in Cartwright Hall of St. Hilda's College, Trinity College Dramatic Society presents Moliere's The Forced Marriage, directed by Ron Blattell. Also at noon-hour and also free will be Poorhouse Theatre's Poems Happen: An Event for Five. Directed by Bill Glasco, this will play Wednesday through Friday in Victoria College's Old Gym. Further away, Toronto Workshop Productions will open The Tempest at 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday in their Alexander Street theatre. General admission $2.00, subscribers 50c. And the Academy of Theatre Arts opens their sampling of commedia dell'arte, Goldoni's Mirandolina. Located at 23 Grenville Street, performances will be given on Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays through the second week of December.

—mo'c

Is the OSSTF going militant?

By ALAN J. DEACON

Alan Deacon is a U of T graduate who teaches English.

The Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation is clearly moving down the road towards militancy.

The invitation to Albert Shanker, President of the United Teachers Federation (USA) to speak to the members of the North York and Toronto districts of OSSTF underlines the new, strong interest in what other teachers are doing to speed up effective negotiations.

Speaking to the North York District of OSSTF Tuesday night, Mr. Shanker, who has led his 58,000 member union on several successful strikes, urged 400 listening teachers to use the weapon of strike only as a last resort, but to be sure that they will use it if forced to by procrastination in negotiations.

Towards this end, Shanker urged the formation of a union. Only a union can effectively wield sanctions with the support of other trade unions such as the Canadian Union of Public Employees that affect the operation of the schools.

"After all", he said, "if one union goes out on strike, all other unions will support such a legal strike in the same way that it occurs in industry. Why should teachers settle for any less than plumbers?"

polity School Board Chairman Barry Lowes, gave Shanker a standing ovation Wednesday, as he outlined the steps that lead to contracts in New York City.

Pointing out that the first strike had arisen out of the New York board's flat refusal to negotiate anything but salary, he gave some details of New York's present contract which makes the teachers the best paid in the U.S. with the best working conditions, fringe benefits, and retirement plans of any teachers in the world.

Laughing at the suggestion that he was an outside agitator, Mr. Shanker replied that he had been asked to speak primarily about methods of negotiation. He had been asked, he felt, because of the flat refusal on the part of either Metro or Toronto Boards to negotiate or to even suggest when they might open negotiations.

"I find the suggestion that I am an 'outside agitator' highly entertaining," chuckled Shanker. "When I first became interested in improving the position of the teachers in New York, I had to go out to Saskatchewan to get some excellent ideas on how to force negotiations. Far from agitating, I welcome the chance to help Canadian teachers to negotiate more effectively."

RIGHT STEP

Questioned about Toronto District's approval of a half-day strike to reinforce their demands, Shanker observed that it was a step in the right direction.

This half-day strike, to be called at the discretion of the Toronto OSSTF District 15 executive, was approved by 700 teachers last spring after Toronto Board, headed by Alec Thompson, denied Metro Board's right to make Toronto pay a retention bonus.

District 15 currently has the matter before the courts.

North York District president Ralph Connor denied that OSSTF was trying to raise the spectre of a Metro Toronto Teacher strike if the 1970-1971 negotiations break down.

"If a person wishes to read that into it, he can," Mr. Connor said. "The real reason we invited Shanker is that he is extremely knowledgeable about negotiations in large metropolitan areas."

Representatives of Metro's secondary school teachers met earlier Tuesday with chairmen of Metro area boards of education to discuss procedures for this year's negotiations.

Speaking of the apparent impasse, Mr. Connor said "I'll tell you one thing, the way the economy is going, our demands sure won't involve a decrease."

ALL STAR FLASH

Despite their third-place finish, Varsity football Blues led the polls with nine members on the SIFL all-star team announced late yesterday. Full story and pictures in Monday's paper.

STANDING OVATION

Toronto District teachers, despite the presence of Metro-

HERE AND NOW

TODAY

ALL DAY

Tickets for HAIR at 10 per cent discount Show dates Wed Jan 28 and Thurs Jan 29 Orders (cash or cheque) accepted now at Innis St. 63 St. George St. Room 110, 202 Today end all day next week.

Nominations for one fourth year representative on History Students Union at the Department of History office Mathematics and Physics Society Course Union elections for 1) Society Coordinator 2) Physics department Committee to discuss CUG 3) Mathematics Committee on departmental organization to be held in the New Physics Bldg Lobby and Math Library

Nominations forms and election rules available for SAC reps at the School of Business General Office Nominations close Monday at 5 p.m.

11 a.m.

Women's Liberation Movement is having a luncheon in the Arbor Room 11 and 12 a.m. All women welcome

1 p.m.

Department of Geology Films showing "Underground for Iron", "Westwind" and "Enduring Wilderness" Mining Bldg., 170 College St. Bring your lunch

Baifa Peace Now Come to Sid Smith Rm. 1074 to help organize National Day of Mourning Through Action for Peace in Baifa. Organized Unipax — the most open clique on campus

"Motion in the Void Aquinas and Averroes" by James A. Weisberg, Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Room 202 McLennan Laboratory (New Physics Bldg.) All welcome

3 p.m.

Attention Chemistry 221 students The TV program on spectroscopy will be shown again on Friday, Nov. 21 in Rooms 217 and 221

4 p.m.

SAC office SAC University Committee re CUG

8 p.m.

Come to the Fun Filled Greek Night Go Greek Have an outstanding Greek Night, Greek food, music and art At ISC "Far From the Madding Crowd" with Julie Christie Bring your own pillow Free popcorn 75c Faculty of Food Science Bldg. at Avenue Rd. across from ROM

8:30 p.m.

Poculi Ludique Societas presents a rogue morality play of the reign of Henry VIII called "Hycke Scourer", directed by Ian Lancashire Admission free

10 p.m. - 1 a.m.

Basefoot Coffee House presents Raffi Cavoukian 75c per person $1.25 couple

SATURDAY

9 a.m.

Committee for Public Education on Bill 194 is conducting a BLITZ of two Toronto Provincial Ridings — the truth about the Research Animals Act — it is a good Bill

10 a.m.

The U of T Flying Club is holding its last Breakfast Flight of 1969 Meet at Island Airport (Central Airways Office) at 10 a.m.

6:30 p.m.

Meet at Victoria College's Wymlywood for coffee and dessert at 6:30, then join the Varsity Christian Fellowship in going to the Terrace for a "Rollerskate"

9 p.m.

Dance with the Scarborough Fair at Howard Ferguson Hall from 9 to 12

SUNDAY

10 a.m.

Seminar group re Crisis in Israel at 186 St. George St

10:30 a.m.

An all-day meeting of the New Left Caucus in the Second Floor Lounge Sid Smith

11 a.m.

Join us for Worship and coffee fellowship afterwards Chaplain Larry Martin will speak on "For Whom the Bell Tolls" University Lutheran Chapel, 610 Spadina Ave. (Opposite New College)

8:30 a.m.

University Lutheran Chapel, 610 Spadina Ave. Larry Martin will give a presentation and lead a discussion on "The Meaning of Creation" Your ideas are needed. As a bonus, the coffee is free (bring your own sugar)

Crackers & Cheese — A Fantastic Musical Revue — $1 cheap Wilson Hall Dining Room, New College

9 p.m.

B Chritou will hold a discussion group in Rm. 666 of the Heavenly Host Restaurant on the topic — The Meaning of Larry Martin? Bring your own milk and honey

ANY TIME

Join A Commie — 920 5806 Up to the minute news on subversive activity. NLC WLM

Student stand-by ticket plan

You can now buy tickets to any Ballet performance on a stand-by basis for $2.00

For any seat in the house after 7:00 pm (12:30 pm for matinee performances)

National Ballet of Canada Fall Season November 18-29 at O'Keefe Centre Toronto Premiere: Kraanerg

First Week Nov. 18-22, Eve: 8:30 Sat. Mat: 2:00

Roland Petit's triumphant success that opened Ottawa's National Arts Centre and rocked the ballet world. Lynn Seymour and Georges Pilletta will guest star in this sensuous, electrifying, full-length ballet. Greek composer Iannis Xenakis created the original score and Victor Vasarely and Yvare designed the black-white op art symbolic decor.

Second Week Nov. 24-29 Eve: 8:30 Sat. Mat: 2:00

Mon & Tues. Nov. 24 & 25 Swan Lake. Wed. Nov. 26 La Sylphide, The Lesson (Premiere). Thurs. Nov. 27 Bayaderka, Le Loup (Premiere), Four Temperaments. Fri. Nov. 28 The Lesson, Bayaderka, Le Loup. Sat. Nov. 29 Mat: La Sylphide, Le Loup. Eve: The Lesson, Four Temperaments, Le Loup.

Tickets: Mon-Thurs $7.50, $5.75, $4.50, $3.50, $2.50
Fri. & Sat. Eve: $7.75, $6.25, $4.75, $3.75, $2.75
Sat. Mat: $5.50, $4.50, $4.00, $3.00, $2.50. Specially priced reserved seats for students.

NEW YORK PIZZA HOUSE

620 YONGE STREET CORNER OF ST. JOSEPH — 923-1736
We specialize in New York and New England style pizza and home-made spaghetti. WE MAKE THE BEST PIZZA IN TOWN
STUDENTS FREE DELIVERY IN OUR AREA & HOT PIZZA
RIGHT TO YOUR ROOM
5:00 P.M. — 1:00 A.M. DAILY

M.P.S.C.U.

Elections today in the lobby of Sid Smith or New Physics Building for:

- (i) 3 Physics students for the Staff-Student Committee to discuss the CUG Report.
- (ii) 2 Math students for the Committee on Departmental Organization. (These are important committees since they will discuss the implementation of the CUG and Campbell Reports and the structure and workings of the department in general.)
- (iii) The following executive position: Society Coordinator.

ATTENTION ALL FLAPPERS
THERE'S A
CHARLSTON CONTEST

EVERY MONDAY NIGHT AT THE SPEAKEASY
 WINNER RECEIVES PLANE FARE TO NEW YORK
 HEAR TOBY LARK
 COME ON AND JOIN IN THE FUN
 "FREE ADMITTANCE FOR DOLLS EVERY MONDAY"
 AND DON'T FORGET
 WE DO OUR "THING" EVERY FRIDAY
 FROM 4 TO 7 P.M.
 EVERYTHING 1/2 PRICE
 GET YOUR FREE PASSES
 FROM OUR MAN WITH THE GLASSES

"YE SPEAKEASY"
THE GREATEST

JUST CLIMB THE STAIRS — NO PASSWORD NEEDED
 529 BLOOR ST. W. 532-4292
 (UPSTAIRS)

STUDENTS TELEPHONE DIRECTORY

NOW AVAILABLE AT
S. A. C. OFFICE

50¢

(2c PROV. SALES TAX INCLUDED)

MARTIN ONROT PRESENTS
IN CONCERT

THE MOODY BLUES with HUMBLY PIE

SAT. NOV. 29 — 8:30 p.m.
MASSEY HALL

TICKETS: $5 50, 4.50, 3.50

TICKETS AVAILABLE NOW AT MASSEY HALL BOX OFFICE AND ALL SAM THE RECORD MAN LOCATIONS.

SAC report

The Student's Administrative Council will hold a special session next Wednesday to discuss the role of SAC in the university.

The Committee to Examine the Structure of SAC (Cessac), made up of SAC members, has been studying the problem of SAC's relevancy to student affairs, and will present a working paper to the special meeting.

Cessac was prompted by discussion within several faculties and colleges about withdrawal from SAC. The Engineering and Dentistry faculties, along with Scarborough College have expressed dissatisfaction with SAC services.

During the meeting, mainly concerned with the annual budget, SAC also allocated $2,000 from the general contingency fund to maintain the former Canadian Union of Students Travel Bureau, now directed by the Ontario Union of Students, which sponsors student flights.

SAC members also voted to endorse Eilert Frerichs, U of T United Church chaplain, for Board of Education trustee in Ward 6.

To the delight of the harried SAC members, Frerichs did not appeal for money. Instead he urged SAC members to commit themselves actively to the ideals they worship with words.

Frerichs said he was disturbed by the irrelevancy of the Board of Education to the real needs of the people.

The general meeting was running late when Ruth McPherson (III Food Sci) called for a quorum count soon after the budget was passed.

The quorum was sufficient only for an executive meeting, which was called immediately after the adjournment of the general meeting.

The remaining SAC members began a discussion of student-staff parity on committees to implement CUG.

The ATS at its last meeting passed a motion refusing staff-student parity at any decision-making level.

SAC President Gus Abols said that this move by the faculty was "hard-line", and should be resisted by the students.

The executive then voted to close the remainder of the meeting to observers while detailed strategy was discussed.

"Do you really want to use what you've learned?"

How many graduates move into jobs that fail to exploit the education they've received? "I've had every chance to use both mathematics and my interest in business here," says Bill Cuthbert (B.Sc. in maths, at U.B.C.) who joined London Life's actuarial department when he graduated in 1966. "After three years, I've served in two divisions and expect to move into another within a year." Bill also has completed four examinations leading to Fellowship in the Society of Actuaries. "The studies not only lead to professional status," he says, "but they also pave the way to advancement." Perhaps most important about his job, Bill says, is "a feeling you get of contributing toward something useful."

There's a challenge waiting for you, too, at London Life.

For further information consult your placement officer, or write to the Personnel Dept., Station 160A,

LONDON LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
 London, Ontario

Interviews will be held on campus November 26.

RESTAURANT - TAVERN
Steele's
 Charcoal-Broiled
 Sizzling STEAKS
 Served in Burgundy Wine
 and succulent ROAST BEEF
 Entertainment nightly in the
 UPSTAIRS VENETIAN LOUNGE & BAR
 Appearing Nightly RICKY LEE
Steele's
 TAVERN-RESTAURANT
 5th. B-5180 349 YONGE ST.
 (Fully Licensed)

Interfac fans rejoice!!! A 5-column hed for Gellius

by GELLIUS

SONG

"O Uldisfogs O Uldisfogs O Uldisfogs O Uldisfogs"
This song (entitled "O Uldisfogs", and sung to a similar tune) is the theme of the Latvian Government in Exile Marching Band. Written by Don Mills (Spanish priest whose brother, General Mills, is perhaps better known) it is printed here in honour of the twenty-first birthday of Uldis II Fogels, hereditary king of Latvia, now living in exile in Toronto; and working, under the obviously fictitious name of Uldis Fogels (for taboo reasons, the King is always addressed by some other name, e.g., "Ugly Awful-fog", "Apples Evilging") at Natrop, an eyelash factory which bears the name of the Royal Estate, now a home for retired Rock-Zot musicians.

SOCCER PLAYOFFS

Final Standings

GROUP I (4 to playoffs)

1.	SGS	6	0	1	13
2.	Eng.	5	2	0	10
3.	SMC	4	2	1	9
4.	Trin	4	3	0	8
	Meds	3	3	1	7
	PHE	2	4	1	5
	UC	1	4	2	4
	VIC	0	7	0	0

GROUP II (3 to playoffs)

1.	Scar	7	0	0	14
2.	New	5	2	0	10
2.	Innis	5	2	0	10

Dents	4	3	0	8
Knox	2	4	1	5
For	1	4	2	4
Jr. Eng.	1	5	1	3
Law	0	5	2	2

gun with one). Maibaum, Campbell and Saltzman (as in "I'm not the saltzman, I'm the saltzman's son"/ but I can rust your car till the saltzman comes" — traditional) led New over SGS B (Marafioti), 6-1.

Gilbert had 11 for New Gnu and his teammates added enough for a 32-26 win over Trin. (A Gnu is a small South African antelope related to the Immanentruith.) Bowen had 10 for Trin.

Vic 41, PHE 36.

Dents (Rayman 11), 40; Innis (Herling 10) 30.

LACROSSE

SMC (Bulger 4; Boris, ex-king of Bulger, was Uldis II's uncle; Bator 4, Travers 6, O'Toole) 16; Erin (Barbeau, Kril, Cherevaty 4, Pelech 2) 8.

AND EVEN BASKETBALL

Seppala and Grace each hit for 15 to pace Eng's 65-50 keffule of Erin (Shaw of Iran 17.)

SMC (Mooney 19) 83; Vic (Pasht 20; Pasht is not relation to the hero of Proust's "Remembrance of Things Pasht") 78

GROUP III (2 to playoffs, plus Erindale, for some reason)

1.	SMC	4	1	1	9
1.	SGSB	4	1	1	9
	Arch	3	3	0	6
	Trin B	2	2	2	6
	Emm	2	1	3	7oops
	Meds B	1	4	1	3
	Wyc	1	5	0	2

Beyer scored 2 and Dormelas one as Innis edged Erin (Vigna- "a large vignette" — OED; Gill), 3-2.

Da Rosa (2), Muskat (a big

RUGGER PLAYOFFS

Flemma had 3 and Shady 2 as SMC blanked Scar, 5-0.

Kour's 6 and Tibbo's 5 were the scoring as Eng bested Trin (Waldin 3), 11-3.

HEAVY

"Like nearly all those destined to the follies of passion, Marie had one eye slightly smaller than the other" — Drouin.

Interfacettes face off as hockey season begins

By JUDY WRIGHT

Although the temperature has not fallen quite low enough to solidify the puddles (the last vestiges of a very wet Homecoming), there is ice in Varsity Arena, and it's being used.

Ice time is limited because the men's interfac schedule has already started, but practices for women's interfac teams are well underway. However, two teams on the ice at once can create difficulties — especially when the girls haven't mastered the art of stopping quickly.

Games start in earnest — at least as earnest as girls trying to skate with the support of hockey sticks can be.

The league is divided into three divisions of six teams each. Pharmacy has been promoted to the first division, while Engineering and Erindale will ice teams for the first time.

The first division includes PHE I & II, Vic I, SMC I, Nursing and Pharmacy.

In division two, Erindale, POTS, Meds, and Vic II will challenge the favored Benson battlers PHE III & IV.

Division three features several old rivalries with St. Hilda's and Engineering, SMC II and Innis, PHE V and Scarborough.

SCARBOROUGH ISSUES CHALLENGE

The Scarborough gals won't play downtown until the finals, but they are challenging the other teams to play out in the sticks every Friday afternoon.

Games at Varsity Arena are played Mondays and Fridays at 8 a.m. (you've got to be kidding — editor), Mondays at 4, Thursdays at 9 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.

All teams could use a little extra support (apart from bigger hockey sticks) and any girls interested in a little fun are urged to join their college or faculty team. Prerequisites: the ability to skate without falling down and the ability to laugh when you do.

Body-checking is a no-no, so the only injuries come from using the boards as an emergency brake.

Spectators (even guys) are welcome at all games. The hockey may not be the best, but it will be energetic and entertaining.

Scores of games played to date — St. Hilda's 4 PHE IV 0; Nursing and Vic I played to a 2-2 tie; Erindale 8 Meds 1; SMC I 3 Pharmacy 0; PHE I 7 Vic I 2.

Feely fencers foil feelings

Do you have feeling for Beautiful Bodies?

This Saturday morning at 10:30 in the Fencing Gym of the Benson Building, ten ltithe some ladies will be bouting in an Inter-Collegiate Tournament.

Everyone is welcome, so come and excite yourself with some grace and fast action as the Women's Fencing Team displays its art.

Meanwhile, back at the ranch, the male fencers challenge the foils of York University in the Fencing Salle on Saturday at 10 a.m.

Varsity protagonists are Richard Wong, Oscar Wong and Alex Lee in the first squad and Michael Schonberg, Vladimir Gettler and Steve Jorgenson on the second.

the Villager

shoe
shoppes

One great look After Another

A-Black-Brown-Tan-Beige-Glove Leathers

B-Black Suede-Black-Navy-Brown-Tan-Bone-White-Glove Leathers By Brayco

C-Black-Grey-Brown-Tan-Glove Leathers

only $21.99

only $23.99

only $21.99

Open Thursday and Friday nites. C.O.O. orders accepted. Credit and Charge cards honored.

126 BLOOR STREET TEL. 921-1779

THE VARSITY Friday November 21, 1969 Page 21

Waterpolo squad third in West but title hopes still flicker

The Varsity Blues' OQAA championship dreams were almost shattered yesterday at Waterloo, as Blues lost to Mac 7-2 and 4-3 to Western.

In the Mac game the Blues tried the zone defence which worked so well against Guelph.

Mac, however, penetrated easily to take a 6-0 half time lead. The Blues switched to man on man and shut off the attack. They couldn't get their offence going and only got two goals back, scored by Derek Duvall and Brian Barras.

The pool was only four and a half feet deep but only the goalie was allowed to stand. This negated the goalie advantage the Blues had in Hartly Garfield. The ref let a lot of standing and grabbing go and this took away Blues slight swimming advantage.

The Western game was hard played and highlighted by close checking. Toronto controlled the ball for most of the game but couldn't find the net.

Late in the fourth quarter it was all tied up at 3-3. With one minute left in the game a Blue was thrown out of the game and 15 seconds later Western got the winning goal.

Blues were not finished yet and with only 2 seconds left in the game Lyle Makesky fired the equalizer. However it was disallowed and so ended a frustrating day for the Blues.

Alex LeRoy got two goals and Makosky scored the other Toronto goal.

The Blues now head to McGill for the start of a home and home series with McGill.

According to the OQAA publicity office, the winner of the Blues-McGill series will meet Western Division champs, McMaster, for the title.

Maybe.

Fleizer is number one

Dave Fleizer, McGill's outstanding halfback, has won the Hec Crighton Trophy as Canada's number one college football player for 1969.

Fleizer, six feet one and 190 pounds, is in first year medicine and should be around for at least two more years.

He was the leading scorer and top rushing in the SIFL this season with 60 points and 703 net yards.

Fleizer breaks a Varsity monopoly on the Crighton award, as the only previous winners are Mike Eben and Mike Raham.

One of the other nominees was Manitoba quarterback Bob Kraemer, who will lead the Bisons against Fleizer and the McGill Redmen in the College Bowl tonight.

Special Student Tickets are still available at the SAC Office or at the Stadium.

DAVE FLEIZER

PHE over Trin 3-2 in hockey action

By COLIN PILMER

In Wednesday night action in group one, PHE "A" downed Trinity 3-2. Bullock, Barnhouse, and Weiner scored for PHE as Trinity suffered its third straight defeat. The win moved PHE into a tie with Vic for second place. Both teams have records of 2 victories and 1 loss.

Group two remained very close after 3 games with only 1 point separating the top five teams. Meds, Dents, and Scar are bunched in first place with 4 points each; Bus and Erin-dale have 3.

Meds (Minaker) remained the only undefeated team in the division by tying Bus (Baker) 1-1. Dents moved up by rolling over winless St. Mike's 5-0. Stevens notched a pair with Taylor, Pollard, and Akiama scoring the others.

Previously unbeaten Erin-dale bowed 2-0 to Scar. Love scored the winner in the first period with his team short-handed; Sullivan got the other. Bruce Doulton registered the shutout.

In other games this week, U.C. I edged by For "A" 2-1 and U.C. II topped Knox 3-1.

In group four Arch "A" and Innis are undefeated. Scores so far:

Knox 5, Pharm 2
Arch 3, Campus Co-op 1
Innis 8, U.C. II 0
Knox 3, New 3
Arch 4, Pharm 2
New 2, U.C. II 0
Pharm 2, Campus Co-op 0
U.C. II 3, Knox 1

Hoechst is Medicine

And plenty of it. Hoechst has over a full century of pharmaceutical research and achievement to draw upon — products and ideas that have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents. But big as we are in medicine, we're more than just medicine. We're chemicals too, and engineering and plastics and dyestuffs. And marketing. And ideas. Ideas most of all. Ideas about the future, about people's needs and wants. About how to meet those needs and wants. Good ideas, young ideas. Your ideas maybe.

If you'd like to know more about Canadian Hoechst, write our Head Office.

CANADIAN HOECHST LIMITED

3400 JEAN TALON STREET WEST MONTREAL • ASSOCIATES OF FARBERWERKE AG WEST GERMANY

A CENTURY OF SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT THROUGH RESEARCH

Yes, Virginia, there is a basketball team

By PETER WHITE

The '69-70 edition of Varsity Basketball Blues emerged from the confines of old Hart House gym last night.

BRUCE DEMPSTER Gone to Western

While this exercise with the YMHA team could not proffer any accurate forecast for the upcoming season, it did give coach McManus a first look at his crew of many untried players under real game conditions.

Season's prospects at this date are strictly a guessing game but it is expected, as they say, to be a building year.

John McManus, now in his fifteenth season as chief dribbler, faces the unpromising task of replacing three of last year's starters.

Biggest and most difficult hole to plug will be that left by the departure of all-star guard, M.V.P. and all-round good guy, Bruce Dempster.

Dempster leaves behind a 13.5 points per game average and that intrinsic quality of inspiration which has fired many a comeback and endeared him to all good U. of T. basketball nuts.

Bruce is expected to be pitching them in at Western — why?

Problems are compounded by the absence of ailing Larry Trafford, an outstanding guard who is not expected to see action until the January 10 opener at Windsor.

Elsewhere-rebounding promises to be the key to the Blues fortunes and it is hoped the experienced hands (and legs) of John Hadden will pick off his share.

McManus deems the state of Hadden's enthusiasms the determining factor here.

John's ability has never been doubted.

As for the remaining hopefuls, only the rigors of the exhibition schedule will separate the Cream from the Crop. The Blues do boast a fine quandy of young go-getters who with increasing experience and time together could well form the nucleus of future Varsity basketball contenders — definitely! dynasties —???

The old Crop: Garth Evans, John Hadden, Mike Katz, Ross McNaughton, Larry Trafford.
The new Crop: Gerry Barker, Gordon Betch-

LARRY TRAFFORD
Sidelined till January

erman, Ivan Betcherman, Michael Betcherman (will they never end), Bill Boston, Angus Braid, Bill Clarke, Barry Markowsky, Brian Sickle, Brian Stevens.

CUG

The CUG Programming Committee announces the following series of public meetings on the St. George Campus to discuss the CUG Report:

Monday, November 24	12:00 noon — 2:00 p.m.	Room 2117 Sidney Smith Building
Wednesday, November 26	3:00 p.m. — 5:00 p.m.	Room 3 Victoria College (New Academic Building)
Tuesday, December 2	7:00 p.m. — 10:00 p.m.	Room 2158 Medical Sciences Building
Thursday, December 4	1:00 p.m. — 3:00 p.m.	Debates Room Hart House

Separate arrangements are being made by Scarborough and Erindale Colleges.

IF YOU HAVE QUESTIONS ABOUT CUG, COME AND ASK THEM. THE COMMISSIONERS WILL BE PRESENT.

ALL MEMBERS OF THE UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY, ACADEMIC AND NON-ACADEMIC, ARE WELCOME TO ATTEND AND TAKE PART IN THE DISCUSSION.

FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD

8:00 p.m. NOV. 21, 1969

Faculty of Food Science bring your own pillow

75c

Bloor at Ave. Rd.

free popcorn

HART HOUSE 50

NOON HOUR FILMS

East Common Room, 1:10 p.m.
Tuesday, November 25 & Thursday, November 27
N.F.B. Animation

WHAT ON EARTH?, THE GREAT TOY ROBBERY,
I KNOW AN OLD LADY WHO SWALLOWED A FLY
(with Burl Ives) and IN A BOX.
(Ladies Welcome)

ART GALLERY
CANADIAN PAINTINGS

From the Vincent Massey Bequest

To the National Gallery

now showing in the

Hart House Art Gallery

Until NOVEMBER 25

Monday - Saturday 12-6 p.m.

Sundays 2-5 p.m.

(Ladies Welcome)

NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL
TICKETS NOW ON SALE

MUSIC COMMITTEE PRESENTS

AL NEIL TRIO

from Vancouver

in the

GREAT HALL

on WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 26

at 8:30 p.m.

NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL
TICKETS ON SALE NOW

CHINA NITE '69

TRADITIONAL CHINESE MUSICAL PERFORMANCES

FOLK DANCES, FOLK MUSIC & FOLK LORE,
FRAGRANCE OF THE GOOD EARTH.

DATE: NOV. 29/69
TIME: 8:30 P.M.
PLACE: RYERSON THEATRE
50 GOULD ST.
(CHURCH & GERRARD)

TICKETS: $1.75 EACH
AVAILABLE AT I.S.C.
33 ST. GEORGE ST.
TEL. 928-2564

中國之夜

PRESENTED BY THE CHINESE OVERSEAS STUDENTS ASSOCIATION, U OF T

THE

varsity

VOLUME 90, NO 28
November 26, 1969

TORONTO

Faculty Council will vote on parity issue today

The Arts and Science Faculty Council will meet at 3 p.m. this afternoon in Cody Hall to vote on an integral part of the report of the Commission on University Government — student parity in key areas.

A motion is to be presented to the Council by Professors W. H. Nelson and J. M. Rist.

It resolves:

"(a) that the council of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences, while welcoming student opinion on all university questions, affirms its determination that its academic staff members continue to be judged in matters of appointment, promotion, tenure and/or dismissal solely by members of the academic staff of this University, or where proper, by professional colleagues outside this university.

"(b) that the Council, while recognizing the legitimate role of students in providing information and advice, rejects the concept of staff-student parity in matters of departmental and faculty governance.

"(c) that the Council withhold judgment on matters relating to the top governing structure of the University until the foregoing matters have been satisfactorily resolved."

The motion is more than a faculty-student squabble; it reveals an alienation of the teaching staff from the CUG report itself.

"CUG has sold us down the river," said one disgruntled history professor.

Students have reacted somewhat bitterly to this attitude. They feel that the professors are renegeing on a system that the faculty itself helped to create.

Four of the key people involved in this dispute were interviewed. Excerpts are printed below.

Prof. W. H. Nelson of the history department.

"I disagree with essential parts of the CUG report. I am opposed to governing bodies being parity bodies since it is not clearly demonstrated yet that student responsibility equals staff responsibility.

"Not to say students haven't an equal concern, but responsibility involves year to year continuity."

Nelson's ideas rest on his concept of the university, a view contrary to what he calls the radical view, and in fact to many of CUG's recommendations.

"The university as a social and political institution, trying to accept a wide point of view is contrary to my ideas. And I don't see the differences being reconciled in argument.

"The whole value of the university lies in resisting concerns of the moment. We are concerned with long-range social activity.

"The radicals see scholarship as an individual activity. I see it as a social activity whose results are unknown at the moment.

"The university is a free enclave for the pursuit of scholarship," he said, swivelling around to peer at the vista beneath his second-storey window.

"It frees a great number of people from direct social pressure, so a very few can make contributions to society."

He talked of the Drache report's criticism of the university as a guild system.

"Words such as master and apprentice are not offensive to me. The apprentice becomes a master."

Nelson saw student parity or a student majority justified in some instances — for instance a wholly student "grievance committee."

Complete parity would "institutionalize polarization," and by the creation of caucuses and block voting. "undermine openness."

He, too, was bitter about CUG.

"The administration considered it's own immunities and those of the radical students, but didn't consider the faculty's attachment to the old definition of the university."

Bob Barkwell, SAC vice-president.

"For them (the faculty) to argue they didn't have a chance to set up

Barkwell snorted at the claim that a student voice in matters of hiring and firing would politicize the university.

"Their assumption is that if they don't get involved in politics, they are apolitical. If you don't take a stand one way or another, you are necessarily for the status quo."

He didn't see as helpful a Students' Administrative Council move to have the motion tabled at today's meeting. "They will table it to use it as a club. We will go into negotiations later with the constant threat of this hanging over our heads.

"If the motion is passed, the short term effect will probably be good. It will give the students something to organize around.

Prof. J. M. Rist — Classics Department.

"My basic objection to student involvement is that it is very likely to introduce the political test. The majority of students will delegate responsibility to those with political consciences.

"The university should not teach any type of political belief."

He agreed that there was a danger of faculty members hiring "their own kind."

"But it is very difficult for a student to know what could make a good faculty member. What seems pedantic and dull at the moment may appear relevant in the future," said the classics professor.

With regard to hiring and firing, he called it "an insult to suggest faculty members be judged by people who were not experts. "As far as hiring goes, people would not want to come under these conditions."

see FACULTY COUNCIL p. 3

SAC rep Ken McEvoy, member of CUG Programming Committee.

CUG as they wish is untrue.

"When the faculty were running for CUG commissioners, they considered it improper to electioneer.

"The staff didn't know what they were voting for and it's their own goddamn fault."

"For the faculty to pass an anti-parity motion now is paranoia. They fear what happened to CUG will happen again — that reasonable argument will persuade people just as it persuaded Lynch and Etkin (two CUG faculty commissioners) to sign the report."

Ivey questions student competence to govern at CUG programming meeting

By JOHN BENSON

The Commission on University Government Programming Committee held the first in a series of campus-wide meetings Monday to discuss the implementation of the CUG report.

In the two-hour session, discussion ranged over many important issues raised by the report. The panel included four members of the CUG Commission.

In response to a question from New College Principal

Dr. D.G. Ivey about the structure of the proposed Governing Council, Gary Webster (SGS) who was a member of CUG replied that "the amount of involvement required from student representatives on the Council will be about equivalent to present members on SAC."

The Council as envisaged by CUG would include 20 lay members, 20 elected students, and 20 elected academic staff. There would also be six ex officio members.

In discussing the amount of time that a student would have to spend on the Council, former CUG member Prof. B.E. Etkin said that he "and other members of the CUG commission believe that all students in the university should have at least one major commitment outside his academic work. Serving on the Governing Council would in some ways be equivalent to playing on a football team in that it would take up a fair amount of the student's time."

COMPETENT STUDENTS?

Ivey said he was still worried about the "ability of students and faculty members in the Council to learn enough about the procedures involved in order to be competent."

Ivey also said that "Mr. Webster's analogy between student participation on the Council and in the Students' Administrative Council does not fill me with enormous confidence."

Professor L.E. Lynch another CUG commissioner, said the effect of an Arts and Science Council decision against student faculty parity "depends on how much the other faculties on campus feel bound to follow an Arts and Science decision. It could have no effect at all or it may decide whether the CUG report goes down the drain."

He said that the CUG Programming Committee had "a see CUG page 9

VARSITY DOWNTOWN EDUCATION PROJECT

NEEDS

COMMUNITY WORKERS TEACHERS

- PART TIME NOW TILL APRIL 30, 1970
- FULL TIME MAY 1st TILL AUGUST 31, 1970

MEETING: S.A.C. OFFICE
THURS. NOV. 27 7:30 P.M.

(3rd & 4th year students and graduates preferred)

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
Toronto Professional Bldg,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 101, Ontario

IMMIGRATION
CONSULTANTS
Telephone 364-0973

THE ENGINEERING SOCIETY
PRESENTS
THE

CANNONBALL

AT
HART HOUSE

FRIDAY NOV. 28
8 P.M. - 1 A.M.
$4.00 PER COUPLE

- FEATURING -
"CATHEDRAL"
"ALTAR EGO"
"JACK LOVE"
"ORION MOON"

2 OTHER BANDS 6 THE LGMB

TICKETS - ENG. STORES, CLASS REPS, SAC

CHINA NITE '69

Traditional Chinese Musical Performances,
Folk-dances, Folk-music & Folk-lore,
Fragrance of The Good Earth.

Date: Nov. 29, 1969 Time: 8:30 p.m.
Place: Ryerson Theatre, 50 Gould St. (Church & Gerrard)
Tickets: $1.75 Each, Available at I.S.C.
33 St. George St. Tel. 928-2564 and at The Door
Presented by The Chinese Overseas Students Association U of T

中國之夜

ACT!

IN THE CAVERN
BY JEAN ANOUILH
TO BE PRESENTED IN FEBRUARY
AT THE STUDIO THEATRE
AUDITIONS: TODAY 11 A.M. - 5 P.M.
WED. NOV. 26, 1 P.M. - 5 P.M.
FRI. NOV. 28, 1 P.M. - 5 P.M.
OTHER TIMES POSSIBLE
CALL 964-0709 or 537-5280

The world's only free T-Group

Thursday, November 27, 3:00 p.m.
186 St. George St.

This time it's for real sponsored by the Hillel Foundation.

FREAKY-COOL

SMITTY'S ELECTRIC FARM grooves

at
NEW COLLEGE (WETMORE)
DINING HALL

SATURDAY

8.30 P.M.
GALS $1.25

NOV. 29
GUYS $1.35

New national union formed for student services

Students will not be left in the cold by the disbanding of the Canadian Union of Students, at least not as far as services are concerned.

Last Friday, in Hart House a new organization took shape partially to fill the vacuum left by CUS.

The new organization — its real name is the Association of Post Secondary Educational Institutions' Students' Council which has been shortened to Association of University Students' Councils (AUSC) — is purely a non-profit services organization.

The main function of the AUSC is to provide services for the students. These include charter flights, International Students' Cards and life insurance plans. There is also room for expansion into other fields which might offer discounts to students.

The organization will have absolutely no political involvements. There is a non-amenable clause in its constitutions expressly to insure that AUSC does not become political.

INTERNATIONAL SCOPE

Hopefully this organization will become much larger and link up with other similar groups in foreign countries to form one large international services organization for students with a variety of benefits.

Each participating institution will pay 10 cents per student for membership. But this will be more like a loan, Gus Abols, students' council President and one of the founding members, said.

The organization will be self-supporting once it gets off the ground and may be able to repay the initial fees.

The AUSC has already taken over the CUS-OUS Travel Bureau. Robert Simond and his staff will be working fulltime.

The organization is also keeping the CUS Life Insurance plan although they are beginning a review into the plan.

ECONOMIC STRENGTH

"Having a collective organization will mean we, as students, will have more economic strength," Abols said.

"There will be better charter flight plans, and businesses, if they want to deal with students will have to deal with us," he said.

Purely profit organizations would not have a chance to exploit the students.

Eleven post-secondary institutions were represented Friday: University of Guelph, MacMaster University, Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, Carleton University, University of Manitoba, University of Dalhousie, University of Western Ontario, University of Waterloo and Waterloo Lutheran, York University, and University of Toronto.

Of these 11, five made positive commitments to the new organization, of which U of T was one. The others agreed in principle but had to go back to their councils before they committed themselves.

Abols felt that the AUSC would have a good idea about their membership by next month.

POOR STUDENTS

Low on bread for Christmas presents ?

Cheer up!

The Textbook Store has gifts you can afford

Inflatable Zodiac Cushions

Cedar Mounted Prints (looks good, smells good)

Silk screened, hand finished Linen Place Mats

Records (the new Donovan)

Books (e.g. The Impacted Lower Third Molar $1.95)

Starts Wed. November 26 and if you're really desperate, just say "Charge it!"

Faculty Council

cont'd from page 1

His position on parity was blunt.

"The position of staff as a body is superior to that of students as a body. The two estates are not equal."

Ken McEvoy — Vic SAC rep and member of the CUG Programming Committee:

"The minute you reject parity, you reject the notion that the faculty and students are equal. This is central to the CUG report."

The faculty, he said, were those who pressed hardest for change in 1968.

"When CUG was set up, the ATS passed a motion for it to hold four students and four faculty members. They obviously supported the concept of parity.

"Most staff members on CUG were conservative when they started. But in the end, they all agreed on CUG; most decisions were reached by consensus — very few votes were taken."

"As a result of their stand on CUG," McEvoy said, "the four faculty commissioners have been under pressure from the rest of their colleagues."

"If they didn't have tenure, they probably wouldn't be able to hold their jobs."

He criticized the faculty for "trying to start up negotiations all over again."

"CUG was a compromise between the status quo and the student viewpoint. Now they want to compromise the compromise."

He noted that although CUG advocates student participation on personnel committees, these are still to be advisory bodies to departmental chairmen.

"We want the possibility of parity to be present," said McEvoy, referring to the SAC move to have today's motion tabled. "We don't want the decision closed."

"At first parity is important. Once equality is accepted, it ceases to be important; there will be no staff-student polarization."

DENTANTICS STARTS TOMORROW

AT HART HOUSE THEATRE

CHEAPER AND FUNNIER THAN

"WAR AND PEACE"

8:30 P.M.

NOV. 27, 28, 29

$2.00

Feiffer

IF YOU ARE A POLITICAL PERSON—

AND DO NOT STUDY HISTORY—

YOUR POLITICS WILL PRO-VOKE CHAOS, ANARCHY AND REPRESSION.

IF YOU ARE A POLITICAL PERSON—

AND STUDY HISTORY—

YOUR POLITICS WILL PRO-VOKE DISILLUSION, APATHY AND CYNIC-ISM.

SO THE QUESTION IS:

WHETHER TO IGNORE
HISTORY AND BE JAILED

OR LEARN ITS LESSONS AND BE IMPOTENT.

WHAT A CHOICE.

Publications Symptoma

© 1969 by Feiffer

Faculty Council motions ignore students' existence

Today the Faculty Council of Arts and Science will consider a three-part motion (see front-page) that could effectively disrupt open discussion of the Commission on University Government's Report.

The motion rejects the idea of any student participation in matters of hiring, firing, promotion, and tenure, of faculty.

And it rejects the concept of staff-student parity in "matters of departmental and Faculty governance."

The motion is a blatant example of over-reaction to the CUG Report. It's an attempt to avoid any open negotiation with students. The third part of the motion says "that the Council withhold judgement on matters relating to the top governing structure of the University", until the above two questions have been resolved.

The council is a body dominated by faculty. There are just token student-members.

Last week the Programming Committee talked in cautious terms about the ominous Faculty Council meeting.

Most of the members felt the council's motions were dangerously premature, and could inhibit open discussion.

Even SAC President Gus Abols was militant. "The faculty are afraid of the students," he insisted.

SAC University Commissioner Ken McEvoy leaned over the U-shaped table and pronounced gloom over the meeting:

"On CUG students and faculty have made a compromise. Now I am frightened that we are going to have to start all over again."

But History Professor R. A. Spencer peered over his glasses and told the meeting it could not tell the Faculty Council how to conduct its business.

"I think the worst thing this committee could do is give any direction at all to the Faculty Council of Arts and Science."

The Programming Committee is essentially powerless. It can only organize discussion around CUG but cannot take sides; it must remain completely neutral.

University Registrar and Vice-President Robin Ross, a member of the committee, agreed the committee must not deliver a harsh statement to the Faculty Council, just a recommendation to keep discussion open. That would be more diplomatic.

But R. A. Spencer, a true knight of the order, suggested how he individually would rescue the Faculty Council and save the CUG Report:

"When the motion is made, I'll get the chairman's eye. I'll rise to my feet. Then I'll say something to encourage debate on the substantive issue of CUG rather than on the resolutions."

Bravo. R. A. will slay the dragon of irrelevance with one fell swoop of his academic sword.

No one in the programming committee paid much attention to the suggestion. Meanwhile it instructed Robin Ross to write a nice letter to the Council suggesting it keep debate open on CUG.

Last week the Association of Teaching Staff reacted negatively to the basic principles of CUG before open discussion had taken place.

Today the Faculty Council will have the same opportunity.

And the motions are prefaced with such generous concessions:

"... while welcoming student opinion on all university questions..."

"... while recognizing the legitimate role of students in providing information and advice..."

The professor consults the student; The professor consults the patient. That's the present situation in the university.

Students should attend today's Faculty Council meeting at Cody Hall and present the council with a blunt fact — the political existence of students.

attention!

There will be no regular Varsity this Friday.

Instead The Varsity is putting out a Kensington Community Issue which will focus on the following topics:

- university expansion
- the spadina expressway
- accessibility to education

It will also feature an interview with the candidates for olderman in the Word (6).

Financed by a $2,000 grant from the Students' Administrative Council, the community issue, which has been over one month in preparation, will have no advertisements, regular university news, sports coverage and no "here and now".

Twenty thousand extra copies (above the 18,500 printed for the university) are being printed.

Distribution of these extra copies to people outside the university is essential.

The Varsity desperately needs help in distributing these copies Friday morning. Anyone interested in helping The Varsity (Varsity staffer or not) please come to a meeting at 91 St. George, second floor, 1 p.m. Thursday.

varsity

TORONTO

Editor: Brian Johnson
 Review Editor: Larry Hanson
 Associate Review Editor: Jack McCallery
 News Editors: Jim Cowan
 City Editors: Edna Merga, Louise Elchman, Noel Stoddley
 Features Editor: Mary Kate Rowan
 Sports Editor: Paul Carson 923-4053
 Design: Barbara Bachmann
 CUP Editor: Sue Baxter
 Photo Editor: Mark Rubin
 Executive Assistant: Harriet Ardeschel
 Advertising Manager: Carol Cooper 923-8171
 Editorial Office: 91 St. George 2nd floor
 923-8741 923-8742
 Advertising Office: 91 St. George 1st floor

The Varsity is a member of Canadian University Press. It was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of this paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Canadian Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

shit it was a chop way nite when stuff poured in and people too, at one time or another we saw all these types... john cug Benson, karlhandler hauenstein, frankly laid out Dave, note barb this will not be a full page feature heather more, lots of bubbling jeans and ugly megas a new but psycho karen cooler, a community mkr, a feature wrap-up on maritimes, an absent freiman thing, a few sports corsans, a few arol type photos like francine, and the guy on duty, and jans dining out and neel... in and brion all bawgie ready to be soeed, and on the twelfth day of christmas my true love gave to me... a holiday, hi cup otti bibi.

plea to faculty

The Students Administrative Council forwarded the following letter to all faculty, in response to the motions that will be presented in today's Faculty Council Meeting:

Dear Faculty Member:

We are writing to you to express the deep concern we feel over the possibility of the Faculty Council approving the motions that will be introduced at the next Council meeting on Wednesday, November 26th.

The motion, moved by Professor W. H. Nelson, seconded by Professor J. M. Rist, proposes the following:

a) that students play no part whatsoever in hiring, firing, promotion and tenure.

b) that parity on governing boards of departments be rejected outright.

c) that no debate on the new governing body proposed by CUG take place until (a) and (b) are resolved.

What is disturbing to us about this motion is the fact it precludes the possibility of sincere, honest and full debate on the CUG recommendations before that debate has ever begun.

There are students on this campus, as well as administrators and faculty that have spent many weeks, months, and years in the attempt to resolve problems that seemed at times insoluble — problems faced by universities across this country. Their efforts have not been hasty. Their aim has been to determine the causes for unrest and frustration, and to seek solutions — the same unrest and frustration that affects all of us in this community.

Allowing extreme situations to develop has, in the past, harmed all members in the community — staff, students and workers alike. It would be tragic for all of us, at a time when improvements seemed imminent, should the faculty on this campus jeopardize the progress made over the past few months by placing limitations on debate.

We ask you, as a faculty member, a person who deals with students and therefore recognizes that most of them are serious and concerned, to attend the next meeting of the Faculty Council and either defeat or table the proposed motion until serious, interested and responsible debate has taken place on the CUG recommendations.

We ask that you, as a member of the faculty, not accept the traditional stereotype of students on which is based the fear that brought about the proposed motion.

We urge you to exercise the responsibility you hold. We urge that you do so now because this is a critical issue and a critical time.

Sincerely,

Gus Abols
President
Students' Administrative Council

Michael Vaughan
President
Graduate Students' Union

on enlightenment and power

It is Monday, November 24, early afternoon. I have just come back from a Political Science 101 lecture, normally conducted by Professor Thorson. Today it was not. Today we were privileged enough to witness what I believe might be termed as "revolution in action" on a small scale. It was frightening and unbelievable.

I am trying to be very objective in my view of the situation. Objectivity was one quality that was lacking in the whole procedure. The people who were causing the disruption were not being objective at all, the only point of view that they were able to see and take seriously was their own.

more than buy each poor person one pair of cheap shoes each year. Is this your solution to poverty?

I have no objection whatever to criticism of the United Appeal or its participating organizations. Any group in society, depending on income from citizens, voluntary or public, should be fair game for critics but, I consider the articles as an attack and not criticism. You seem to attack the voluntary organizations as if they were the cause of the uneconomic state of the poor, and that they had the power and the income to resolve the problem. This thinking is, in the language you understand, pure bullshit.

The total amount of voluntary donations in Canada for all United Appeals (Red Feather etc.) was just over 50 million dollars in 1968. It is estimated by reliable people that there are over four million poor people in Canada. If every last penny raised by voluntary organizations was spent to combat poverty in Canada, it would not do

There were several members of the New Left Caucus in the lecture hall, practically all of whom were not registered in that course. The attack today was very well organized I do not know by whom, but I can guess by the tactics. If this incident is exploited as an example of a mass student type of thing, it will be a lie! Also among the organized group of disrupters there was a group who joined the bandwagon. There were others who were truly dissatisfied with the course. But the definite majority of the people in that room did not want to end that lecture and did not want Professor Thorson to leave!

If we want to give "all power to the people", let those who profess to advocate this policy really take a good look at who they call "the people". Do they mean the "enlightened" people — the people who see what is wrong with the system and want only to smash it? Do they mean the people who are satisfied with things as they now stand? Do they mean the people who see some things which are wrong and would like to work to reform them?

I assume that the ultimate good of the majority of the people in the institution is what we are looking for. The last two groups of people are the majority and they do not want to see the kind of things happen which took place today. In the views of the elite, "enlightened" ones we are probably too ignorant to know any better. We were just stupid enough to come to this university because we felt it could offer us something in the way of knowledge. Perhaps what we want to learn is of the established order and wrong — but it is the choice that we have made. And it is our chance to make this choice. This chance was taken from us, the majority, by a minority.

This course is established by the university. If we want to attend it we should be able to. Dissenters don't accept the premise that a course is valid simply because it was set up by the university. The whole university is an invalid institution to them, as it now stands.

If you truly want to give "all power to the people", look first at who "the people" are and ask them what power they want. Let them decide, don't do it for them!

Christel Kleitsch
New College, Arts I

pentiction protest

There I was, sucking a cigar and perusing my favourite newspaper, THE VARSITY, when what should I discover but a Colin Pilmer doing Interfac Hockey! I mean, who is Colin Pilmer?

I mean, is "PHE (Cyr, Ellis, Nelson) shutout Law 3-0 to even its record at 1-1," really better copy than "Knox (Pattison; cf. "pattison, pattison, baker's man, bake me a cake as fast as you can"; McGinnis, Brox (Brox?) and Wymann) 4; Jr. Eng. 0" as penned by that immaculate bard of the great potato, that bearded Plato of the masses, GELLIUS, hollow be thy name.

Don't Interfac stud types realize their crap is perused by its greatest audience in history ever since Gellius took over. He has become famous across the nation — seriously! He brings beautiful uniqueness to the Varsity sports section which, after all, should be for all students, not just the jocks.

If the Colin Pilmer straight talk is allowed to continue under the interfac banner, you can bet Interfac's readership will dwindle once again to mere nothingness.

I beseech you, Mr. Editor, BRING BACK HUMOUR, BRING BACK IRRELEVANCE, BRING BACK GELLIUS!

Rod Mickleburgh (yes THE R.M.)
Sports Editor,
Pentiction Herald, B.C.

Sports ed. replies — Mr. Pilmer is attempting to follow in the footsteps of Mr. Mickleburgh's illustrious cohort, fiery Phil Bingley, and as such is hereby immune from criticism — so there!

United Appeal: part of a faulty economic system

My Dear Young Adults:

I do not feel adequate to compete in college rhetoric as I have spent most of my working years on an assembly line in a factory, Massey-Harris etc. However, I could not rest after reading two articles in The Varsity of October 31st and November 14th until I say that I interpret these articles as being real apologists for a faulty economic system.

Before developing this point let me say I am encouraged to learn that some college students have, after many years, grasped the common shop language of workers but, you should not be surprised if we do not get too excited with your ability to write "fuck" and "bullshit" etc. This has been the every-day language of the vast majority of hourly paid workers and has been used extensively for hundreds of years.

Nevertheless, I believe your understanding of our two languages (English and Profane) will or should governmental action and substantial appropriations of government funds will basically solve many of the social and economic problems facing our people and their communities, and that any attempt to divert the people from this truth would be wrong. We should not permit anyone to divert our attention from the undeniable fact that the basic health, welfare and educational needs of the Canadian people can be met only by the governments' assumption of full responsibility for meeting those needs.

My position is that until such time as we win the fullest possible protection that legislation can afford, those who need assistance today must not be passed by. Those of us who believe in the responsibility of the community to its members will not be found wanting.

M. McKay,
Weston, Ontario.

SAC Television Committee is producing a weekly T.V. program to be seen on Rogers Cable T.V.

General meeting for all interested Thursday, Nov. 27 at 4:00 p.m.
SAC office or contact Pat Dymond or Jon Levin 964-1444 923-6221

EVERYBODY WELCOME.

OHS won't give animals for research

By HEATHER MOORE

Where are the universities going to get animals for research? "Not from us!" says the Ontario Humane Society.

In a debate held Monday in the auditorium of the Meds Building, Tom Hughes, general manager of the Society, made his organization's position clear to a generally hostile audience of medical students.

The debate was sponsored by the Committee for Public Education on Bill 194. This bill would make some of the 100,000 dogs destroyed annually in Ontario available for research and teaching.

Hughes said that the OHS is a private foundation, supported by donations and membership fees, and to "hand animals over for research purposes is wholly against our principles. You might as well ask the Roman Catholic Church to run a string of brothels."

Drs. R. E. Haist and G. G. Clarke of the U of T Medical Faculty gave the scientific community's point of view. They pointed out that the Society operates "as an agent of the municipalities, partially supported by municipal funds."

EXPERIMENTS NECESSARY

Even Hughes admitted that medical experimentation on animals is necessary, but he wants his group's pound operations exempted from the jurisdiction of Bill 194.

Unfortunately, the Society already controls the fates of half the stray dogs in Ontario. Its pounds are the largest, and situated in the most populous cities. It would be difficult and expensive to collect dogs from the tiny pounds scattered around the countryside.

MOTLEY LOT

These experiments are usually designed to provide information about probable human reactions, and we humans are a motley lot, with widely different genetic backgrounds and upbringing. Pound dogs would also have this variety.

The act would certainly eliminate a lot of abuses that the Humane Society itself has been fighting. Dog catchers would be eliminated since it would be against the law to buy from them. Breeders would be more strictly policed since there would not only be inspection of the facilities for animal housing and care at the research institutions, but also at the source.

One pamphlet put out by the Society proclaims "no pets are safe." Strictly speaking, this isn't true, since there is an obligatory three-day waiting period under the act before any animal can be turned over to a research facility. This is greater protection than exists in many communities to-day.

Then, too, no animal is hey there, yes you, the one reading our ad want a job?

Are you a 1970 graduate in arts, science, business administration or commerce?

Then you got one!

We have several attractive positions to offer graduates in the areas of computer science and group administration. We offer you concrete career opportunities.

Our man will be conducting interviews at your University

Mon. Dec. 1st

Can you meet the challenge?

Register now at the placement office for your interview.

The Canada Life Assurance Company

photo by Francine Stein

Dean A. Chute of the Faculty of Medicine criticized Tom Hughes of the Ontario Humane Society at the debate to discuss Bill 194.

"Already," said Haist, "there are not sufficient animals for the support of teaching and research programs in Ontario; it has been necessary to go to other provinces and even the States to get them.

The Society has suggested that if dogs cannot be obtained from other pounds run by city governments, they be bred specially for the purpose of experimentation. The Hospital for Sick Children already has such a program.

Informed opinion at this university, however feels that for the vast majority of experiments, using specially bred animals would not be only vastly more expensive, but actually misleading.

immediately experimented upon. There is a conditioning period, varying in time from experiment to experiment. Any owner could ask for the sale record at the pound and then simply reclaim his pet.

More and more animals are needed for research and teaching. It was estimated that while 5,000 dogs were provided for medical schools in Ontario, about twice that number were needed.

Each year this figure will go up. The Humane Society is also expanding its services each year, and if it is exempted from Bill 194, that puts it on a collision course with the universities. Where will they get the animals they need?

Centre for the Study of Drama Faculty of Music

Department of East Asian Studies present

THE BUDAYA TROUPE FROM INDONESIA

The Performing Arts of Boli, Java and Sundo presented by

The American Society for Eastern Arts

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 26 at 8:30

McMILLAN THEATRE
Edward Johnson Building

Tickets $3.00 Box Office 928-3744 Students $1.50

War in the streets-- the Real Thing in 3-D

By MARK FREIMAN

Mark Freiman graduated from U of T last year in Honours English. Feeling some soft-hearted he writes this letter to us from sunny Stanford College, California.

"Everything I say is absolutely true. A ghastly thought."

California. All the cops ride around with sawed-off shotguns prominently sitting upright beside them. Max Rafferty, Supreme High Commandant of Education has decreed Darwin doubtful; he now "competes" with Genesis and Lamarck in high school biology texts. A local judge tells a Mexican-American (Chicano) on trial for incest that maybe Hitler was right and moral cripples have to be liquidated. The new head of the district conservation authority is a small-town mayor who likes the idea of filling in the San Francisco Bay for residential and commercial purposes.

Saturday night television. Channel 36 has "Saturday Night at the Bull-fights". The Mexican bulls and an American announcer. The matador botches his kill and the bull is running around in circles trying to get away from the waving capes so that he can lie down and die in peace. A heavily accented voice sells authentic taco sauce between bulls. Channel 44 is carrying an interview with David Hillyard, chairman of the Panthers. He talks about police repression and explains how a Marxist-Leninist analysis links Vietnam and American imperialism with domestic problems. The interview is interrupted for a commercial. Crew-cut, shirtsleeve salesman. Talks about a fantastic real estate bargain. Beautiful, unspoiled land at unheard-of prices. And what's the reason we can offer you this Unbelievable Deal? It's because this is Indian Land. That's right — Indian Land. And the federal government has just given us permission, for the first time, to put this choice area up for sale to the General Public. David Hillyard is followed by an interview with the Deputy Fuhrer of the American Nazi Party.

They're trying to set up a Free City in Berkeley. Signs in windows: We Honor All People's Holidays — All Power to the People. The Berkeley Tribe has a story about Paul McCartney's death and an article about the Weathermen and Motor City SDS's action in Chicago in which they paralysed one of the police undercover agents. Shakespeare & Co. Book-sellers does a good business selling "Zap Comix" and "The Adventures of Trashman." Trashman, Agent of the Sixth International, divides his time between humping radical chicks and shooting up society dinners as part of the campaign to bring the war home and into the streets.

Stanford is located in Santa Clara County. If Santa Clara County were a country, its GNP would be 42nd in the world. Stanford is quiet. The SDS still hasn't split into Leninist and non-Leninist factions. Stolen university documents reveal that research-oriented profs get paid $5,000 — $10,000 more than teaching-oriented ones. Dorms are co-ed but sexless. The Black Students' Union along with white radical allies, controls an ineffectual student government.

November 15. Two hundred thousand people march ten miles through San Francisco for the November Mobilization. A few blocks from the starting point, Bottomless Carol Doda nightly bounces her silicone boobs for conventioners and bored executives. And on Market Street you can see The Real Thing in Color AND 3-D: Continuous Shows Daily: Nothing Has Been Cut, Nothing Censored. But the Mobe heads the other way, in the direction of the sea, towards Golden Gate Park.

The scene is unreal. The whole world is marching — the crowd has no beginning and no end. People stand in front of their houses to offer water to the marchers. Thirty veterans of the Spanish Civil War, wearing black berets and American Flag lapel-pins sing songs of the International Brigade. The TV cameras carry "Get out of Vietnam" signs (My God, Agnew's right!).

At the park euphoria fills the air. So does the familiar sweet burning smell. Socialism is rampant as coke, cigarettes and food circulate through the crowd. Leonard Nimoy denounces the war. Wild cheers and peace signs everywhere. Then the Youngbloods and spaced-out Crosby Stills and Nash (Young couldn't make it) start playing and it's Woodstock West. A hundred thousand teeny-boppers want more music, not David Hillyard talking about fighting Domestic Fascism. He is booed. Rennie Davis, of the Chicago conspiracy has a bit better luck talking about the inevitability of an NLF victory. Ralph Abernathy flatters the audience and they love him. Chicanos talk about the grape strike and militant Indians demand they be given Alcatraz for a settlement (The cops have just evicted a landing party of 40 Indians who invaded the deserted island at night, carrying $24 worth of beads and trinkets as payment). Polite applause. Phil Ochs and Buffy St Marie sing political songs. It's music so the crowd wakes up again.

The Emma Lazarus Jewish Women's Club perks up to listen to former Senator Wayne Morse talking about the Constitution and Spiro T. Agnew. Then it's five o'clock and it's over.

We hitch back to Palo Alto. Six of us. Really disreputable looking: beards, beads, arm-bands, headbands. One of the girls holds up a sign: Harmless English Graduate Students. The passing motorists snort. Back on campus one of the English profs announces the arrival of a shipment of five kilos of Mexican grass.

photos by The Highlands, University of California, Riverside

California students protest Vietnam

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC GROUP

Improvisation Ensemble
Wednesday, Nov. 26
1 p.m.
Edward Johnson Bldg.
Room 078

Earle Brown-Four Systems
John Rea -Tempest
& Free Improvisation

RESTAURANT - TAVERN
Steele's
Chocolat-Enrolled
Sizzling STEAKS
Served in Burgundy Wine
and succulent ROAST BEEF
Entertainment nightly in the
UPSTAIRS VENEZIAN LOUNGE & BAR
Appearing Nightly RICKY LEE
Steele's
TAVERN-RESTAURANT
RM. 8-5180 349 YONGE ST.
(Fully Licensed)

Biafra: a chance to end apathy?

By JEAN BUBBA

Thursday, Nov. 27 may be a profitable day for the shareholders of Harvey's Hamburgers as the resolution of those starving-in for Biafra crumbles at the thought of a square meal.

While Harvey's enjoys extra business for the day, Shell Oil, British Petroleum and Gulf have been reaping profits from a war which should'n't exist. Great Britain is watching her Commonwealth being ripped apart by war and apathy. The Russians have a discreet finger in the Nigerian Airplane Fund. And two million are dead.

Like other wars of this century, the war in Biafra is fought just as much on the stock market as in the fields and towns of the Ibo. If the Federal troops don't win, it means that the major oil companies of the world will have to depend upon the Middle East oil fields a little more, which isn't too kosher when the Arab-Israeli war isn't over yet.

NOBLE SENTIMENT

The world conscience has not been pricked by the sight of genocide though it remembers things like the Declaration of Human Rights, the Geneva Convention and the findings of the Nuremberg Trials. The sentiment of these documents may be noble in itself, but what happens to nobility when two million are slaughtered?

There are many other things that are not remembered that concern Biafra, and maybe the fate of other African nations.

In August 1967, just after the Biafran defeat at Bonny, Shell-BP "discovered" a clause in its oil contract with the Nigerian Federal Government which enabled the oil companies to postpone royalty payments to Biafra from July 1, 1967 to March 31, 1968, the end of the fiscal year. With approximately 40 per cent of her oil payments in the balance, Biafra faced the Nigerian troops who had been promised an end to the war by April, 1968.

When Britain granted Nigeria her independence, she seemed to have forgotten that of the tribes that composed the new nation, the people of the Moslem north had preserved the colonial feudal life while the south was artificially cut off from the north by a string of protectorates under direct British rule during the colonial era.

The lie about the single nationality of Nigeria had to be perpetuated because if Biafra were allowed to secede, then other African nations might have been forced to adjust to accommodate the wishes of their people. By her struggles, Biafra is showing the world that the boundaries of Nigeria were drawn by some illogical colonial master whose concern was oil rather than the self-determination of a particular nation.

POTENTIAL

If the latter had been the case, then Biafra would have been a nation long ago as it has nearly 75 per cent of Nigerian oil and made its own deals with traders before the colonial regime. But at 25 cents a barrel royalties and an eventual 50 per cent of the profits, you can't really blame the Federalists for fighting. As one American oilman, fingering production and revenue statistics remarked, "You've got to be hit pretty hard to give up this kind of potential."

Biafra has been forced to give up Port Harcourt, the country's biggest refinery, and their capital city, Enugu. Yet the Biafran Ministry of Information still labels its publications as printed in Enugu; telephone operators still talk about placing calls through Enugu and banks still claim to refer accounts to their main offices in Enugu.

The unreal atmosphere that prevails is an indication of the fact that the Ibo are fighting for something more than an area of land. Forced to live on an area one-eighth the size of their former holdings, the Ibo are fighting for a way of life that has been traditionally theirs and for which they are being murdered — women and children first.

Canada is the second most powerful member of the Commonwealth. We have allowed our government to stand aside quietly when white racism took over Southern Rhodesia. Will we stand aside and shake our heads again when we can take effective means to leading the two nations to peace negotiations and to enabling relief flights to proceed without hindrance into ravaged areas?

There may be good reason for stationing international observers on various checkpoints to ensure arms and re-see BIAFRA page 15

MARTIN ONROT PRESENTS

IN CONCERT

THE MOODY BLUES

with HUMBLE PIE

SAT. NOV. 29 - 8:30 p.m.

MASSEY HALL

TICKETS: $5.50, 4.50, 3.50

TICKETS AVAILABLE NOW AT MASSEY HALL BOX OFFICE AND ALL SAM THE RECORD MAN LOCATIONS.

HAVE A BALL

NEW YEAR'S EVE - HART HOUSE

FUN, ROMANCE, SEX EXCITEMENT, DRINKS

- EVEN HONKY-TONK PIANO

A GOOD TIME!

CAREERS AT CGE

for

Engineers and Science Majors

Canadian General Electric's GRADUATE ENGINEER DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM provides an avenue of entry into careers in Information Processing, Manufacturing, Marketing, Research, Development and Design, and Employee Relations.

There are continuing opportunities for professional development. The broad diversification of the Company and its decentralized organization provide a dynamic environment for self-development and the opportunity through your career to move not only across functions, but also between product businesses.

Company recruiting officers will visit your campus to conduct interviews on:

DECEMBER 5

CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC

Psst!
Want some contacts?

We're talking about lenses, of course—those little things that can change your whole outlook. Who wants to look through frames or in through them, either! We're Braddock Optical, and we can tell you all about contact lenses—then you can decide if you want them. We're just round the corner at 170 St. George. Come and see.

R
E
N
T
A L
S

- TYPENRITERS
- ADDING MACHINES
- T.V.'S
- STEREO TAPE RECORDERS
- STEREO RECORD PLAYERS

698-2589
DANFORTH TYPEWRITER
2940 DANFORTH AVE
FREE DELIVERY

SNEEZLES!

SCHOOL OF NURSING * VARIETY * SHOW
Nov. 27 28 29 8:00 PM
CODY HALL $1.50 ALL TICKETS

Committee discusses CUG teach-in Campus-wide discussion of the report of the Commission on University Government will be held in university time sometime in January.

In a meeting Monday the CUG Programming Committee began discussion of the event, which could range anywhere from the single afternoon proposed by the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education to a "more extensive program" conducted faculty by faculty.

Prof. M. L. Friedland, meeting chairman, advised that "we leave it up to each faculty to decide on their own format".

Prof. F. E. Winter, reporting from the Association of Teaching Staff said "It's clear you will not get support from the faculty for a week-long moratorium, but possibly for a couple of days."

Student commissioner Ken McEvoy's (III Vic) suggestion of setting up a three week period in January during which each faculty could choose one or two days was favoured by the committee.

Registrar Robin Ross drew an analogy with Laval University and said, "It's important to let the university know that informed discussion of the CUG report is important. We would prefer to see it done in university time".

In preparation for the January discussions, the committee examined a draft letter suggesting how such bodies as the faculty council should be discussing CUG.

The committee agreed with Prof. Friedland that "all we've asked for is initial reports and reaction so that all members of the university are free to re-think their position".

The committee agreed to encourage discussion for as long as possible before hard and fast positions are reached, to make sure, as Prof. Winter said, that "whatever happens this term not be regarded as the end of discussion".

CUG

cont'd from page 1

great fear of decisions being made by groups on campus about the CUG Report before there has been proper discussion of its recommendations has taken place.

Gus Abols, students' council president, defended the ability of students to function intelligently on the council, and said "if university students are intelligent enough to absorb the wisdom of the ages they should be intelligent enough to help run the university."

CAMPUS FEAR

Lynch said the reason his Commission had decided to hold widespread debate on the CUG recommendations was that "the Commission was very aware of a fear on the campus that CUG would become a legislative body."

"Many of my colleagues", he said, "felt that this would be unfair and there would be no chance for debate. For this reason, the Commission didn't want to force decisions on the university and preferred that the university debate the proposals on its own."

Bob James, SAC finance commissioner, asked who was going to have the final say in the implementation of the Report, and Lynch replied "that while implementation to some extent is already taking place in areas such as faculty councils, the ultimate say rests with the provincial government in matters which affect the changing of the University Act of 1906."

One of the main problems affecting the implementation of the CUG Report is the formation of a suitable body on the campus to recommend to the provincial government what changes are to be made.

Professor M.L. Friedland of the CUG Programming Committee, who will be at least partially responsible for making this decision said "there is presently no group on campus that has the necessary confidence of all sectors of the university to make a decision of this nature".

UNSUITABLE STRUCTURE

D'Arcy Martin of CUG said "the present structure of the university is not suitable to enact the far-reaching changes that the Commission has in mind."

Commenting on a recent meeting of the ATS which passed two motions rejecting staff-student parity on governing bodies of the department and any student participation in matters determining staff competence and tenure, Etkin said "if taken literally these motions are not far from the recommendations of the CUG Report, but there was a great difference in the spirit of debate and the spirit of CUG."

Martin said "while there were no fundamental contradictions in the wording of the motions, the ATS resolution was an attempt to put forward a faculty position and did not attempt to open up discussion between groups on campus as does the CUG Report."

Webster and Lynch said "the motions passed by the ATS are a fundamental challenge to the spirit of CUG."

OPAQUE PROCESS

Martin, commenting on the amount of student and faculty apathy, said "one of the problems for students is that the decision making process is too opaque — not ineffective but hazy so that no one is able to see exactly what is going on. CUG wants to bring the decision making process down to faculty level where staff and students can get at it. Our primary aim is to simplify the structure so there will be fewer levels of bureaucracy separating the student from the areas where decisions are made."

Mr. R.A.K. Richards, an architect and a member of the Planning Division of U of T, said that he and other members of the support staff at the university were being made to feel "like second-class citizens because we have not been given any representation on the proposed Governing Council." Lynch replied that he had received 32 complaints from other members of the support staff, but said "I was not given the impression when on the CUG Commission that equal representation on the Governing Council was desired by the support staff as a group."

Martin agreed with the inference that CUG was treating the support staff as second-class citizens but said he felt "its up to the members of the support staff to organize and make themselves heard to the CUG Programming Committee".

Gus Abols also stated that he felt the support staff should have representation on the Governing Council.

Martin stated that he felt most of CUG proposals will be adopted and "implemented" by the letter, but that attitudes might be slow to change. A lot of people will adopt CUG to advance their own positions in the university."

"I have strong doubts about the willingness of people to accept a democratic community in the university," he said. "The spirit of tolerance embodied in the CUG Report depends on a person's willingness to define his own rights and stand up for them. Reaction to the faculty can be changed by an intelligent organized response from the student body."

SPECIAL EXTENSION

TO ENROLL FOR YOUR

UNIVERSITY

HEALTH AND ACCIDENT PLAN

THREE PLANS TO CHOOSE FROM

LIFE

$10,000 FOR $22.00 A YEAR

USE REGULAR APPLICATION

PLAN I

EXTENDED HEALTH CARE

NO DEDUCTIBLE ON ACCIDENT BENEFITS

PLAN II

OVERSEAS AND AMERICAN STUDENTS

STUDENTS ON STUDENT VISA

PLAN III

NEWLY LANDED IMMIGRANT

INTERIM HOSPITAL COVERAGE
EXTENDICARE PLUS LIFE

You need this coverage if you fall under one of the following categories:

1. Canadian students who are covered by OHSP and OHSC and need extended health care
2. Students in Canada on a student visa and are not covered by OHSP or OHSC
3. Students in Ontario from another province who do not have coverage from that province.
4. Newly landed immigrant students who are required to wait three months for the provincial plans to become effective.

ADMIN. — JOHN INGLE,
700 BAY ST. 364-4114
BAY AT GERRARD

NOTE: If you have not received your brochure, additional forms may be obtained of the Registrar's office, Student Council Office, Graduate Studies Office, FROS, Int. the Health Service, or Faculty Offices.

The Maritime provinces exploited

Students join People's Struggle

The Maritimes have often seemed only Canada's poor cousin, marked as they are by regional underdevelopment and chronic fiscal problems. In these two features, Canadian University Press writers analyse some of the roots of the Maritimes' problems and describe the beginnings of a student response to a situation old as Confederation. Paul MacRae, last year's Varsity editor, is CUP field secretary and has spent the last two months visiting every Maritime campus and its newspaper. Ron Thompson, CUP features editor, is stationed in Ottawa.

by RON THOMPSON

Students in the Maritimes region made one more attempt this year to found a regional student union.

After a number of false starts, the students gathered in October in Charlottetown, the birthplace of Confederation, where, 103 years earlier delegates to that conference gathered to discuss the broadening of the tax base — capitalism then needed money to build railroads to extend itself westward: the Maritimes had temporarily been exploited to the limit.

The federation, known as the Federation of Atlantic Student Councils, is only supposed to last a year. Hopefully referenda on the region's 12 campuses in the spring and the fall of 1970 will okay the founding of the Atlantic Union of Students.

The union would be a first for Canada in two respects. It would be a voluntary union, controlled by its membership, rather than a federation of student councils from each campus. It would also be the first regional union of students in the country.

That's the goal of the federation, then — not to act as a policy-making body, but to pave the way for such a regional union. Its job will be research, education and propaganda.

Two fieldworkers have been hired by the federation to take the concept and rationale of a Maritimes union to the region's twelve campuses. The two — Kathy Walker and Skip Hamblin — both have previous organizing experience: Walker, with the Women's Liberation Movement; Hamblin with the Company of Young Canadians in community/labor projects.

They will be talking on the campuses, not only to student councils but to meetings of campus interest groups. The message they take with them will be supplemented by the results of research initiated by the federation.

UNION PROBLEMS

Such a union is burdened with difficulties in coming into existence. Not the least of these is that student councils, the major stumbling block to most student unionism, are the organizations that founded the federation.

In the end, only half the campuses joined the federation. Two more did so provisionally: while the region's largest universities — New Brunswick and Dalhousie — stayed out, claiming they had no mandate.

But despite this — and despite the contradiction of student councils organizing towards a voluntary regional union — there are good reasons to hope for success for those who see the need for such an organization.

In the Maritimes, perhaps more than anywhere else in the country, the need for regional organizing, research and action by university students is rooted in the history and economics of the region.

Students all over the North American continent are beginning to grapple with the inseparability of problems in the university and in the society. In the Atlantic region, they are slapped in the face with this reality.

CLUMSY RESPONSE

The Maritime universities are a completely integrated aspect of the clumsy response by existing federal and provincial governments to problems of regional underdevelopment.

Economically, the region remains structurally underdeveloped. Indeed, in capitalist terms, development of the Maritimes can be considered dysfunctional.

Primary industry, as in most of Canada, remains characteristic — highly mechanized extraction of the region's mineral resources, exported elsewhere for manufacture.

Lack of social capital (i.e., a highly-trained work force) and abundant natural resources make the introduction of light and heavy manufacturing industry prohibitive, in a capitalist context.

The response to this underdevelopment by the federal government and various economic agencies has been one of 'pork barrel', social welfare capitalism — the expenditure of vast sums of money trying to buoy up the regional economy, and simultaneously attract employment-providing industry.

INVESTMENT LURE

Capital-intensive industries are to be set up to lure labor-intensive investment. Ancillary services, like roads, and tax incentives are the bait offered potential industries that will set up in the region.

The idea is, if you guarantee profits through such subsidies, capital flows in to reap the profits.

The negative effects of this kind of artificial development can be read today in the lives of the people of the Maritimes.

The region is heavily dependent on federal handouts — 60 per cent of the current PEI provincial budget is subsidized from the federal coffers. With the existence of this 'pork barrel' resistance to any real economic change is severe — the region has the lowest rates of organized labor, strict anti-labor laws, incredible unemployment, and extremely reactionary courts overseeing the whole.

It's a policy which uproots the people from their culture.

FISHING "STARVED"

Industries such as fishing are starved out as "uneconomic," while huge sums are spent subsidizing the development of larger — and without federal and provincial aid, equally uneconomic — industries. The little people as always take it in the ear.

The universities are crucial to this kind of development. Through them is channeled not only the development of the necessary "social capital" for the new capitalism, but also the re-culturation of the society: the training of the managerial and technical elite for the new culture of the maritimes.

So important is such social capital to the artificial-insemination brand of capital development programmed for the Maritimes, that Newfoundland, one of the poorest provinces in the country despite its natural wealth, was able to — indeed had to — set up the first fully subsidized university education (if only for a couple of years) on the continent.

In this light, the constant regeneration of fumbling attempts towards a regional student union begins to make sense. It's no abstract idea fallen from the sky. It comes out of the growing recognition by Maritime students of the political relevance of what happens in their universities, of the social and economic context in which they find themselves, even on the campus.

The development towards such a union can be traced through the history of the region's student organizations.

MINI-CUS

Prior to 1967, students operated through local councils affiliated simultaneously with CUS and a regional mini-CUS, the Atlantic Association of Students.

But these organizations were largely irrelevant to the needs of the region's students. Dealing primarily with student concerns in a vacuum, they created an alienation in students resulting in their eventual rejection.

Maybe, in the end, this will be only another false start, degenerating into nothing more than another student bureaucracy.

There is the contradiction of student councils trying to set up a voluntary region-wide participatory organization. There are the constant problems of how to get such an organization functioning in reality.

So maybe this time they won't pull it off.

But there is still almost a determinism to it all — students throughout the country will be watching to see what happens — it's been a long time coming.

Exploitation and poverty

Newfoundland: poverty, profits and politics

by PAUL MACRAE

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CUP) — Newfoundland presents an almost classic case of how not to modernize an underdeveloped region, only more so. The more so is Premier Joseph Smallwood.

It's been 20 years since Newfoundland staggered into Confederation. That it did so at all is a tribute to Smallwood's ability and hard work.

Macpherson — The Toronto Star

Today, the province has an unemployment rate of 10 per cent, with the lowest per capita income and the highest per capita debt in the country. A report prepared for the Smallwood government (and subsequently ignored) indicated that the situation will get worse.

The province's debt will rise from about $800 million last year to $1.2 billion in 1972, the report said. It added that only the out-migration (as it is called here) of thousands of Newfoundlanders has kept the unemployment rate from topping 30 per cent.

St. John's reportedly has more millionaires per capita than any other city in Canada. And Newfoundland's potential wealth in fish, minerals and timber is enormous.

FISHING GOLDMINE

The Grand Banks, as a former Smallwood cabinet minister told 3,000 Memorial University students at a rally October 31, is the greatest fishing ground in the world. Labrador is mineral-rich and the province's forests are worth millions in pulp, paper and timber.

"Newfoundland's 500,000 people are probably sitting on more wealth in natural resources than any other 500,000 people anywhere in the world," he said. Who is responsible for this paradoxical situation?

Looking at the record, it's easy to blame Joey. The record, as told to me anyway, indicated he has sold the province down the river for a mess of ERCO was supposed to bring a measure of prosperity to the region, providing jobs and income. In fact the company probably costs the government more each year than it brings in.

The government has had to spend millions setting up a special electricity generating plant to meet ERCO's needs. And ERCO gets a special deal on its electricity — only 2.5 mills per kilowatt hour.

By agreement, however, the government is committed to paying not less than 5 mills per kilowatt hour. The speaker estimated ERCO's subsidy at about $2,500,000 a year for electricity alone.

TIGHT CONTROL

I was told that 12 or 13 companies own most of the province's mineral-producing areas. A few mines are operating, but in most cases the land lies untouched until it is more profitable for exploitation. The mines now worked are worth hundreds of millions of dollars, of which Joey's government gets about $2,000,000 a year.

The Liberal government offered an attractive deal to one pulp and paper firm. The province put up about $30 million against $5,000,000 by the company to set up a plant. No losses guaranteed, largely publicly-financed, and entirely privately-owned.

Every year, I was told, this firm gives away a few hundred thousand dollars to "worthy" projects. The company can afford it — as part of the package, it pays no taxes.

These are all Joey's deals, and all are regarded with some anger by the Newfoundlanders I talked to. A student at Memorial University told me there are two widely-held opinions about Joey's efforts. The charitable view is that he doesn't know how to manage money and has been duped.

The other view is probably libelous.

THIRD WORLD PROVINCE?

Newfoundland's problem seems more like that of the Third World countries than of any other model, and if the experience of these countries is an indication, bringing in more outside capital will only create more problems than it solves.

At the basis is the nature of capitalism itself. There are already fears here that industry will turn the province into a gigantic slagheap if the province makes it too easy for companies to get in. More important is the capitalist attitude toward people as sources of profit, labor as a commodity like any other commodity, and the distortion of priorities that the capitalist's search for profit brings into an economy.

In their fight to survive as unique economic units, many of the Third World countries have turned logically to socialism as an alternative to American and European ownership of their economies. The countries that have followed the capitalist road find themselves still underdeveloped, and falling behind.

Newfoundland also resembles many countries of the Third World in the intense nationalism of its people. "We're Newfoundlanders first and Canadians second," explains one resident.

And their experience with the capitalists of Canada's mainland is not likely to tighten the bond.

PROFITS TO PEOPLE

Meanwhile the Newfoundlander pays millions to bring in private industries, money which could be used to create publicly-owned industry. There are two advantages in following the second course: The profits will belong to the people, and the profits will cease to flow out of the province as they do now.

It would also mean that the needs of the Newfoundland people, and not international capital, came first in priorities.

Joey has been Premier of Newfoundland since 1949 and no one was surprised that he again won the Liberal nomination for Premier last month. Joey controls Newfoundland. Buck Joey and the construction contracts may dry up. Vote Tory and you may lose your liquor license.

Joey's popularity is based largely on his history, and his power. But he cannot cope with the modern problems, nor will his successors. Following the pattern of Quebec, the province will pass over into the ownership of foreign corporations (and "foreign" to a Newfoundlandier includes mainland Canada, just as "foreign" means "English" to a Quebecker.)

But Newfoundland may be the only province in Canada where the people will make a break from the private enterprise ideology of their leaders.

Still lacking large industry, and thus without the powerful vested interests that cripple government action for the people in other parts of Canada, and in a situation where most of the people have nothing to lose, Newfoundland's political spectrum may shift left.

And following the pattern of Quebec and the underdeveloped Third World countries, Newfoundlanders may begin talking separatism or revolution to pull themselves out of the mess their leaders have created for them.

FISH ARE GONE

ERCO was in the thick of a flouride poisoning uproar at Dunnville, Ont., two years ago, a controversy which has yet to die down. Keenly felt here is another ERCO pollution triumph — the virtual destruction of Placentia Bay as a source of fish through the dumping of phosphorus waste.

Although ERCO denies it, a pollution expert estimated it would take 15 years for the bay to become fishable again. And meanwhile, Newfoundland fish must be marked as not from Placentia Bay to be acceptable as exports.

Dr. Hammond's Nerve and Brain Pills.
 GUARANTEED THE HIGHEST GRADE ON THE MARKET.

$1.00

SIX BOXES POSITIVELY GUARANTEED TO CURE ANY DISEASE for which they are intended. This will cure you if you feel generally miserable or suffer with a thousand and one indescribable bad feelings, both mental and physical, among them low spirits, nervousness, weariness, lifelessness, weakness, dizziness, feeling of fullness like bloating after eating.

EMPLOYMENT INTERVIEWS

Cominco Ltd. invites applications for permanent and summer employment from graduating students and post graduates in Geological Engineering and Honours Geology; and from Class of 1971 geology students for summer employment only.

Interviews with Cominco representatives:

DECEMBER 5, 1969—For Summer Employment Only

DECEMBER 11, 1969—For Permanent Employment Only

Further details available from Student Placement Office.

Violent protest doomed to die: Davis

Violent demonstrations are a useful means of protest but are going the way of the great auk, according to Chandler Davis, U of T professor of mathematics.

Davis, who spoke about violent protest at Monday's Hillel meeting, has been a political activist on and off campus for a number of years.

He said the violent movement is just a wave which has suddenly become popular. Unfortunately, he said, it is doomed to die like its predecessor, the non-violent movement.

When the non-violent movement died in 1965 due to "ideological dissension" and a contradictory attitude towards violence, violent demonstration became a necessity, said Davis.

Pacifists saw that demonstrations had to be "de-stabilizing," since they are trying to change society and therefore they cannot go by the rules of that society.

The present custodians of the means of power in our society have discredited themselves through their use of it. Therefore, "the problem is not one of initiation of violence, but of responding to violence perpetrated by the state."

According to Davis, violence is more justified when used by the demonstrators trying to change society rather than by society trying to suppress opposition. He said, however, that the violent phase was doomed to die out for the same reasons the non-violent movement died.

photo by Sheldon Schachter
 Chandler Davis, professor of math.

Remember all those groovy courses you signed up for in Sept.? Remember how some of them weren't so groovy so you went back to the registrar and changed 187 of them for dull courses?

Well, today is the last day to register for your exams and junk and stuff to get your marks to get your degree to get your job to get your junk and stuff.

If you don't register today you will have to fork over one dollar per day until you do. So do it. See your friendly registrar today.

→ Searching for the right career?

UCO offers outstanding opportunities in Manufacturing, Wholesaling Retailing, Marketing.

CONTACT YOUR PLACEMENT OFFICE NOW TO RESERVE AN INTERVIEW

UCO

United Co-operatives of Ontario.

 Quality Products.

The Two hijacked
 Israeli Passengers are still being held captive in Syria!

The Ad-hoc
 Free the Passenger Committee will hold a meeting

 Wednesday, November 26th

1:00 p.m.

Sidney Smith Room 1086

HERE AND NOW

TODAY ALL DAY

SCM Office, Hart House Christmas cards now available. Silk screened original designs, limited edition.

"Flight for Life" — short film on Biafra — Sid Smith foyer 12:00 — UC Refectory, 12:30 — Wymwood — Victoria College, 1:00 — New College Cafeteria — Biafra PEACE NOW Nov. 27
Tickets for HAIR at 10 per cent discount. Show dates Wed Jan 28 and Thurs Jan 29. Orders (cash or cheque) accepted now at Inns II, 63 St. George St., Room 110 and 202. Today and everyday.

9 a.m.

Geography Departmental Office 5th floor, Sid Smith Nominations for TUGS executive will be accepted for a period of one week. All nominations are to be accompanied by the signatures of two nominators.

12 noon

Graduate Historical Society Open Forum on Teaching Assistants in the Undergraduate Program, Sid Smith 2124

12:10 p.m.

Physics film — Optical Masers — presented by Math and Physics Society and Course Union, Rm 102 New Physics Bldg

12:30 p.m.

Speak-out with John Riddell, socialist candidate for Mayor. All men and women welcome. Arbor Room, Hart House

1 p.m.

Unipax Biafra Final Organization meeting — Biafra, PEACE NOW UC Rm 106
TUGS presents a film show including the color film "Volcano Sturtesey" 622 Sid Smith (Basement)

Release the Israeli passenger committee meeting Sid Smith 2127

Music Room Hart House. The second of four noon-hour classical concerts: KATHY WUNDER, violinist. Ladies welcome (free). Hart House Camera Club Demonstrations and Print mounting

Dan Drache and George Haggai discuss: American Professors at U of T. The significance of Numbers (Canadian Liberation Movement) Sid Smith 2102

T.C.D.S. lunch-hour theatre presents "The Forced Marriage", by Moliere. Directed by Ron Blattell. Admission free. Cartwright Hall St. Hilda's College, Devonshire Pl.

Contemporary Music Group Impromptu Ensemble Edward Johnson Bldg Rm 078. Bring your lunch

Yavneh presents Abe Warzecha on The Life of Rabbi Joseph Kairo Rm 2129 Sid Smith

3 p.m.

All M.P.S.C.U. members and Math or Physics staff invited to open meeting of Faculty Council of Arts and Science. Cody Hall, Nursing Bldg

4 p.m.

Special campaign meeting of the Young Socialists. Topic: "Why Revolutionaries Run in Elections" Inns College
Jazz. The Al Neil Trio presents a multimedia concert consisting of tapes, slides, drums, piano and a dancer. Ladies Welcome. Free Admission Hart House

4:15 p.m.

Bickelstath Room Hart House Open meeting — Presidential Advisory Committee on the Future Role of Hart House

8:15 p.m.

"Barberella" with Jane Fonda in cinemascope. Admission restricted to people 18 and over. 75c. Also at 8:30

7 p.m.

Debates Room, Hart House Special SAC meeting to discuss and propose new structure for the SAC

7:30

Sid Smith Rm 2118 Sergei Eisenstein's film "Ivan the Terrible" Part II. 75c at door

8 p.m.

"The Church in the World" will be discussed with Or. L. DaKoster, Calvin Scholar. Visitors Welcome. Newman Club, white room, 89 St. George

Library evening with Ian Montagnes, author of Hart House, And Uncommon Fellowship Library, Hart House
WC Fields stars in "Tillie and Gus" in Wetmore Hall, New Collage Admission $1.00. Come one, come all International Student Centre F.U. of T Third World Film and Discussion Group film from Cuba (in English) on the Cuban Literacy Campaign
Victoria Women's Association Meeting, Wymwood, 150 Charles St. Speaker, Dr. A.B.B. Moore

THURSDAY noon

Rev. Dick Quinn, walker at a food relief station in Biafra and Samuel Imku a Biafran Cabinet Minister will speak at Convocation Hall

1 p.m.

Harry Lampman's film, "This is Biafra" narrated by Oscar Winner Cliff Robertson. Convocation Hall

Poetry reading with Prof. Blostein. Music Room Hart House

1:15 p.m.

TCDS lunch-hour theatre presents "The Forced Marriage" by Moliere. Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's College, Devonshire Place. Free even

2:30 p.m.

Write-in to Canadian government concerning Biafra. Free Speech area Sid Smith

3 p.m.

New time for writers' workshop. If you'd like to read bring copies of your work. Writing lab, Inns I (north of main library)

5:15 p.m.

Come for supper in the New Meds Building Cafeteria and then at 6:30 in rm 2173. Don Freeman will lead us in a new and different look at Christianity

6 p.m.

Stephen Lewis, MPP will speak at Convocation Hall, followed by a second screening of the film "This is Biafra". Hallel buffet dinner, 186 St. George St

7 p.m.

Educational Workshop session re. Cnstrs in Israel, 186 St. George St

7:30 p.m.

Mass candlelight procession down Bay St. to City Hall to hear Stanley Burke. Starts from Convocation Hall

A general meeting of the Political Economy Course Union — all students taking a poli sci, econ or comm course. Rm 1071 Sid Smith

7:45 p.m.

Academic Activities Committee — Symposium on "The Genetic Theories of T.D. Lyenko: Scientific or non Scientific?"

International Student Centre

8 p.m.

Hart House Debate on the question: "In Toronto Money is Worth more than people and this house regrets it." Honorary Visitor: John Sawall, Aldermanic candidate Hart House Debates Room

School of Nursing Variety show "Sneezles '70". Cody Hall, School of Nursing

8:30 p.m.

New York Brass Quintet Concert Hall, Edward Johnson Building

FRIDAY ALL DAY

Tickets for HAIR at 10 per cent discount, for shows Jan 28 and Jan 29 Inns II, Rms 110, 202

Christmas cards now available. Silk screened original designs limited edition. SCM Office, Hart House
One man photo exhibit, Brian Thompson Buttery, Trinity

10 a.m.

CIN 191 present Prof. Dales of the Pol Ec department, to discuss over-population and pollution and their economic implications. Inns II, Rm 103

1 p.m.

U of T Bahai's invite you to learn about their way of life. North Sitting Room Hart House

Robin Mathews & James Steela authors of "The Struggle for Canadian Universities" Convocation Hall

1:15 p.m.

TCDS lunch-hour theatre presents "The Forced Marriage" by Moliere. Directed by Ron Blattell. Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's College, Devonshire Place

2 p.m.

Peter Watkins will speak on "The Mass Media and the Influence of the Networks" follows a screening of "The War Game College of Ed Aud

4 p.m.

GSU wine and cheese party. Admission $1

8 p.m.

Films "Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge" and "Shoot the Piano Player" Rm 3, New Academic Building Vic 75c at the door.

Toronto Student Movement (unit of CSM) presents a conference on "The Genesis of Fascism" — Medical Sciences Bldg Rm 3163

8:30 p.m.

Attention all ethnic groups — "Hellu '69 Dance" food drinks and entertainment UNF Hall (west of Spadina Ave)

9 p.m.

West Indian Students' Assoc. Dance GSU, 16 Bancroft Ave
Dance, Ladies 75 cents, men 99 cents. Duell Hall (after hockey game)

SATURDAY

1 p.m.

ISC — Mann Lounga Miles for Millions. Walk Organizational meeting

SUNDAY

10 a.m.

Educational Workshop re. cnstrs in Israel. Special Extension to Dec 10 has been arranged for University Health and Accident Plan. Brochures are available at Registrar's Office, SAC or health service. Overseas students should enroll now

HART HOUSE 50

Music Committee Presents

Avant-Garde Jazz

AL NEIL TRIO

Mixed Media Concert

TODAY

Music Room, 4-6 p.m.

Ladies Welcome

CLASSICAL CONCERT

Today, Music Room, 1-2 p.m.

KATHY WUNDER, Violinist

Ladies Welcome

CAMERA CLUB

PRINT MOUNTING & SPOTTING DEMONSTRATION

Today, Club Rooms, 1-10 p.m.

HART HOUSE DEBATE

Thursday, November 27

8 p.m. — Debates Room

Honorary Visitor

JOHN SEWELL

Topic

IN TORONTO MONEY IS WORTH MORE THAN PEOPLE

AND THIS HOUSE REGRETS IT

(Ladies Welcome)

NOON HOUR FILMS

December 1 and 4

East Common Room, 1-10 p.m.

Quiet Social Comments:

ONCE UPON A PRIME TIME.

23 SKIDOO and TOYS

Ladies Welcome

JAZZ CONCERT

Tuesday, December 2

THE SURVIVAL JAZZ QUINTET

East Common Room, 12-2 p.m.

Ladies Welcome

NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL

TICKETS ON SALE NOW

HALL PORTER—UNDERGRAD. OFF.

BACH

ART OF FUGUE

HART HOUSE ORCHESTRA
SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 30th
GREAT HALL — 8:30 P.M.
BOYO NEEL — CONDUCTOR

STUDENTS $1.50
OTHERS $3.00

BACH

GOODYEAR WELT LACE, $1.98. A RECORD BREAKER.

No. 15R883 HOW IT IS MADE. This shoe is made from the Badger calfskin over the fashionable Boston last, with handsomely perforated tip, ramp and lace stay, oak soles and a fine dogpile top. The shoe is fitted in the best manner, with fine tudor top factory. Fact is, it is made right along side of our best shoes by the same shoemakers, and no matter what the cost to us, you get such a shoe as to give the customer for the price.

Weight averages 30 ozs.
For postals rate see page 4.
No. 15R883 Price, per pair.

Sizes and half sizes, 5 to 11. Widths, D, E and EE. UNION MADE. $1.98

Mayorality candidates clash at U of T

By JEAN BUBBA

The Students' Administrative Council Metro Election Committee arranged a discussion-debate Monday among mayorality candidates Margaret Campbell, Stephen Clarkson, John Riddell and incumbent Mayor William Dennison.

The panel was asked if they had any concrete proposals for involving the citizenry in re-development schemes. Mrs. Campbell felt the issue wasn't constituent involvement but the inadequacy of legislation. Clarkson proposed "working to establish a non-profit organization that citizens can control in the area.

Riddell dismissed community power as "fool's gold" unless the majority of City Hall members represented the working class.

Dennison implied that "making homes more interesting to live in and allowing private development without increased assessment" was the extent to which community participation in area development should be allowed.

Clarkson maintained that "there is nothing that the City of Toronto should not relate to from Vietnam to tenants' rights." He said it was necessary to "press Queen's Park, not just with demonstrations, but with appropriate legislation as private bills; that is, the use of the pressure of public opinion and put Queen's Park on the spot."

The Spadina Expressway issue brought some interesting comments from a few panelists.

Riddell said "I am against the Spadina Expressway, sin, war and all that."

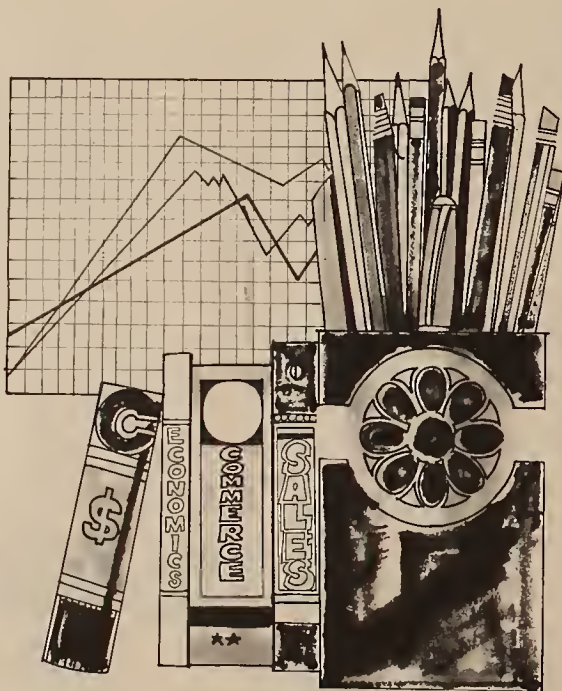

"Would you have stopped the Gardiner Expressway just because you don't like expressways?" queried Dennison. "This city is growing because it has a good mixture of rapid transportation systems: 40 per cent expressway and 60 per cent rapid transit."

The University College Players' Guild
presents

EMPEROR JONES

by Eugene O'Neill
directed by Mark Manson

Hart House Theatre
December 4, 5, 6 8:30 p.m.
Admission $1.50

Hoechst is Marketing

And plenty of it. Hoechst has over a full century of research and achievement to draw upon — products and ideas that have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents.

But big as we are in marketing, we're more than just marketing. We're medicine too, and engineering and plastics and dyestuffs. And chemistry. And ideas. Ideas most of all. Ideas about the future, about people's needs and wants. About how to meet those needs and wants. Good ideas, young ideas. Your ideas maybe.

If you'd like to know more about Canadian Hoechst, write our Head Office.

CANADIAN HOECHST LIMITED

3400 JEAN TALON STREET WEST MONTREAL • ASSOCIATES OF FARBERWERKE AG, WEST GERMANY

A CENTURY OF SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT THROUGH RESEARCH

CUG

The CUG Programming Committee announces the following series of public meetings on the St. George Campus to discuss the CUG Report:

Wednesday, November 26: 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. Room 3, Victoria College, New Academic Building.

Tuesday, December 2: 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. Room 2158, Medical Sciences Building.

Thursday, December 4: 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. Debates Room, Hart House.

Scarborough and Erindale Colleges announce the following public meetings to discuss the CUG Report:

Monday, December 1: 12 noon to 2 p.m. Meeting place, Scarborough College.

Wednesday, December 3: 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. Room 292, Erindale College

IF YOU HAVE QUESTIONS ABOUT CUG, COME AND ASK THEM. THE COMMISSIONERS WILL BE PRESENT. ALL MEMBERS OF THE UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY, ACADEMIC AND NON-ACADEMIC, ARE WELCOME TO ATTEND AND TAKE PART IN THE DISCUSSION.

MARIPOSA CONCERT

Sunday, Nov. 30

MICHAEL COONEY
PENNYWHISTLERS
OWEN McBRIDE
BRUCE COCKBURN

8.00 p.m. Convocation Hall
University of Toronto Campus

TICKETS: $3.50 Sam the Record Man
Toronto Folklore Centre,
284 Avenue Rd.
SAC Office, 12 Hart House Circle

INFORMATION: 920-6268

Get your tickets now —
space is limited

Radicals act out Oedipal complexes

Radical students acting out the primeval encounter of their Oedipal complexes? Prof. R. J. Lifton of the Yale School of Medicine thinks there might be some validity to this popular interpretation of campus unrest.

Speaking Tuesday to an audience comprised largely of history students and staff at New College, Lifton attacked the tendency of historians and psycho-analysts to work at cross purposes and urged them to "embrace the paradoxes" of their two disciplines.

Referring to his own studies of Mao Tse Tung and survivors of the bombing of Hiroshima, Lifton offered psycho-historical analysis as a key to understanding the phenomena of revolution.

While labelling a strict Freudian approach as anti-historical, Lifton views the marriage of history and psycho-analysis as a logical one, concerned with historical flow, rather than with the cause and effect of historical events.

"History is intimately bound up with the conflicts and struggles of the human mind. Individuals simultaneously act upon and are acted upon by history," he says.

Lifton's radical approach to the study of history is the result of a deep personal response to immediate history — specifically to the Vietnam War. He maintains that psycho-history necessarily requires a "considerable ethical commitment" to the area being studied.

Enraged and ashamed by recent reports of American atrocities in Vietnam, Lifton dedicated his address to: "All those who are resisting American complicity in that war and seeking to bring about its end."

Biafra

cont'd from page 8

lief are kept separate. But there is no reason why all relief should pass through Nigerian territory and risk being shot down.

SYMPOSIUM

The symposium being held Thursday at Convocation Hall will not be a newspaper to inform people about what's going on in Biafra. The symposium has come about because there are people of influence who can no longer stand the lack of action on the part of the government.

People move a government. From noon until 2:30 p.m. on Thursday, Rev. Dick Quinn, a worker at a food relief station in Biafra and Biafran cabinet minister, Samuel Imiku, will speak. Their talks will be supplemented by the film, "This is Biafra", narrated by Cliff Robertson.

At 6 p.m. the film will be shown again. New Democrat MPP Stephen Lewis will speak.

A candle-light procession will move down Bay St. starting from Convocation Hall at 7:30 p.m. to join the Toronto Biafra movement at City Hall. Stanley Burke will address the mourners.

Students' Administrative Council University of Toronto HIGH SCHOOL ORGANISER

DUTIES

- i) Broaden Free University of Toronto to include introductory courses on the university or other courses high school students may desire.
- ii) Creating links between existing high school organizations.
- iii) Act as a resource person where students ask for information. The person must have the organizational ability and the necessary material available.
- iv) Research into high school problems with some concentration on the problems of transfer from high school to university.
- v) Establishing links in communication between free schools and potential free schools.
- vi) Organizing some form of newspaper.

JANUARY TO TO JUNE 70
SALARY $95 PER WEEK
PLEASE apply stating qualifications before December 5 to:
EXTERNAL AFFAIRS
COMMISSIONER
UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
STUDENTS'
ADMINISTRATIVE COUNCIL
UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

Open Window HANDICRAFTS

Reasonably priced:

- IMPORTED TOYS
- THEATRE POSTERS
- ESKIMO ART
- "IN" JEWELRY & ACCESSORIES

595 MARKHAM STREET
(Village)

GENERAL S.A.C. MEETING TONITE 7 P.M. Hart House Debates Room Discussion of the Structure of S.A.C.

Student stand-by ticket plan

You can now buy tickets to any Ballet performance on a stand-by basis for $2.00

For any seat in the house after 7:00 pm
(12:30 pm for matinee performances)

National Ballet of Canada Fall Season November 18-29 at O'Keefe Centre Toronto Premiere: Kranerg

First Week Nov. 18-22, Eva: 8:30 Sat. Mat: 2:00
Roland Pelti's triumphant success that opened Ottawa's National Arts Centre and rocked the ballet world. Lynn Seymour and Georges Pilletta will guest star in this sensuous, electrifying, full-length ballet. Greek composer Iannis Xenakis created the original score and Victor Vasarely and Yvare designed the black-white art symbolic decor.

Second Week Nov. 24-29 Eve: 8:30 Sat. Mat: 2:00
Mon & Tues. Nov. 24 & 25 Swan Lake.
Wed. Nov. 26 La Sylphide, The Lesson (Premiere).
Thurs. Nov. 27 Bayaderka, Le Loup (Premiere), Four Temperaments.
Fri. Nov. 28 The Lesson, Bayaderka, Le Loup.
Sat. Nov. 29 Mat: La Sylphide, Le Loup. Eve: The Lesson, Four Temperaments, Le Loup.

Tickets: Mon.-Thurs $7.50, $5.75, $4.50, $3.50, $2.50
Fri. & Sat. Eve: $7.75, $6.25, $4.75, $3.75, $2.75
Sat. Mat: $5.50, $4.50, $4.00, $3.00, $2.50: Specially priced reserved seats for students.

LOW ON BREAD FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS?

USE YOUR CHARGE - ACCOUNT AT THE UNIVERSITY BOOKROOM

CLASSIFIEDS

Waterpolo squad bows to McGill 9-6

ALLOTTIONS for new Anouilh play at Studio Theatre February Wed Nov 26, Friday Nov 28 Phone 964-0709 or 537-5280

CHEMISTRY TUTORING by OCE type A. Chemistry grad for 1st year A&S, and Engg. Reasonable 72 Welton or Message capoor 922-5616

FREE XMAS MONEY — Quiet University Prof will rent modern apt. over Xmas vacation. Write Full details to Prof. Innes, Sweet Mary's University, Halifax N.S.

COUNTER HELP needed 2 to 5 days per week noon to 2:00 p.m. Blooi University Area. Pay $3 plus lunch per day. Phone 445-0040

TYPING thesis, essays, notes, charts, English, French, other languages. Mimeo graphing, electric typewriters. Mary Dale Scott (M. Oakes) 86 Bloor St W. Room 225. 922-7624

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Oay you buy a diamond" H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416, 921-7702

SALTY OOG Osocthequa will rent premises Monday to Thursday day or evening. For information call A. Conry 964-7050 or 613-2677

EMPEROR JONES sings at Hart House Theatre Dec 4, 5, 6 8:30 p.m. Tickets at Lit. Relectory Theatre $1.50

APT. TO SHARE — Male — Student or slat — Mostly furnished — Available immediately. Call Bruce 787-7625

TELEVISION Thursday November 27 at 4 p.m. S.A.C. Television committee first general meeting. Stick with SAC and we'll make you a star! All welcome

EXPERIENCED TYPIST will type thesis, reports and essays. IBM electric typewriter. Call 461-8935. St. Clair and Yonge BEERROOM — STUOY — board optional in quiet comfortable home. Residential area close to buses and subway. Mefe 489-6766 after 6 p.m.

Varsity waterpolo Blues lost 9-6 to McGill in the first game of a total goals to count series played Sunday in Montreal.

Two members of the team, Andy Hackett and Mike Guinness, could not play because of illness and several players were suffering from viral infections, but Blues managed to keep the score down to a respectable 9-6.

McGill's strong swimming team played a very tight checking game and stifled Blues' offense for the first three quarters of the game. Sloppy defensive work and some blatant defensive lapses by Blues gave McGill excellent scoring opportunities.

Blues were ineffective offensively and only some very strong goaltending by Hartley Garfield prevented the Redmen from running away with the game. The score was 4-0 at half-time.

During the late stages of the third quarter the Blues started playing up to their potential. Capitalizing on a one-man-advantage situation the Blues notched their first goal, Jim Adams being the marksman. At the end of three quarters McGill led 8-1.

Blues completely dominated the final quarter, outscoring McGill 5-1, as Alex LeRoy scored three goals, Terry Bryon and Jim Adams scored one each.

Although teamwork may have been minimal for most of the game, fine individual performances were turned in by Terry Bryon, Alex LeRoy, Brian Barras, and Hartley Garfield.

Coach Kirk Thompson was pleased with the outcome. "We played according to the game plan. We weren't expecting to win but wanted to keep McGill to a three goal lead."

"We will have a definite physical and psychological advantage when we play in Hart House on Friday. However, our teamwork will have to improve for the next game."

The outstanding play of the final quarter should serve as ample warning for McGill when the two teams play the second game of the series on Friday, at 7:00 p.m. in Hart House.

Fans, come early and assure yourselves of a seat for what promises to be a fast and exciting game of waterpolo.

The winner of the series will play McMaster for the O.Q.A.A. championship. Blues will play an exhibition game against McMaster tonight at 7:30 in Hart House.

Public Lecture
XXY CHROMOSOMES AND CRIME
 RICHARD G. FOX
 Centre of Criminology
 Wednesday, November 26, at 7:30 p.m.
 New Medical Sciences Building, Room 3153

HART HOUSE DEBATE
IN TORONTO MONEY IS WORTH MORE THAN PEOPLE AND THIS HOUSE REGRETS IT
 Honorary Visitor
JOHN SEWELL
 For the Ayes: Peter Kent, SGS; Alan Bowker, SGS
 For the Noes: Ted Rotenberg, II LAW; Gary Segal, II LAW
 Speaker of the House: Don Short, IV NEW 8:00 p.m. Thursdays, November 27th
 Ladies Welcome

A SPECIAL OFFER . . .
 A $132.00 ENTERTAINMENT VALUE THAT COSTS YOU ONLY $2.50
 The "ACTIVITY PASSPORT" is a book of FREE PASSES, and discount coupons which invites you to enjoy various entertainment and recreational pleasures around TORONTO. Every establishment that is represented in the "ACTIVITY PASSPORT" has given a written guarantee that each pass will be fully honored.
 Here is an opportunity for you to enjoy A FULL YEARS ENTERTAINMENT for ONLY $2.50
 Below is a resume of the tickets that make up your "ACTIVITY PASSPORT".

ACTIVITY	TICKETS	VALUE
Hockey — Maple Leaf Gardens (Jr. A)	1	$ 3.50
Skiing — Honey Pot	1	3.50
— Uplands Ski Hole	2	10.00
Discotheque — Varsity Bird	1	8.00
— Riverboat	4	10.00
— Speak Easy	2	2.00
— The Onion	4	6.00
— The Ultimate Gramophone	1	2.00
— Soul City	1	1.00
— Picasso Key Club	1	3.00
— The Rod Pool	2	3.50
Ballroom Dancing — Club Interlude	1	4.00
Theatre — Studio Lab Theatre	1	8.00
— Toronto Workshop Productions	1	1.50
Golf — Forest Hills Golf Club	1	2.50
— Hornby Tower Golf Course	2	6.00
Swimming — Central V.M.C.A.	1	5.00
Karate — Tsumoto Karate School	1	5.00
Judo — Hatashita Judo Club	1	5.00
Bowling — Don Mills Bowl, Shea's Bowl	3	4.03
Billiards — Embassy, Don Mills, Broadway	3	5.00
Carling — The Terrace	2	7.00
Horseback Riding — Circle M Ranch	2	4.00
Ice Skating — The Terrace	1	2.00
Sleigh Ride — Central Don Stables	1	4.00
Roller Skating — The Terrace	4	18.25
Bridge Studio — Kate Beckman's	1	2.00
Latin Dancing — No Mo's Discotheque	1	2.50
Total Value		$131.70

There are just 2500 passports available — Certainly not enough for everyone, so it's advisable that you hurry and get one for yourself NOW!
 AVAILABLE AT: ENGINEERING STORES, MILL BUILDING

Swimmers win another

U of T swim blues continue their pre-season warmup by defeating McMaster 78-26 and Waterloo 81-21 in a triangular meet over the weekend.

On the other angle of the meet McMaster edged Waterloo 57-42.

For Blues, the meet was more of a success than the score would seem to indicate, as both veterans and rookies put in excellent early season times.

Swimmer of the meet, Doug McIntosh, anchored both the winning freestyle and Medley teams. He also won the 100 yard freestyle with a personal best time of 51.4 sec.

Six year veteran Theo van Ryn turned in a good early season time of 22.6 sec, in the 50 yard freestyle and was followed closely by Varsity's John Twobig.

Other event winners for Toronto were Jim Shaw in the 200 Fly and 200 I.M.; Ross Ballantyne with 200 Breaststroke; and Bob Watt in the 200 yard freestyle.

The divers are still improving but their best in this meet was third behind Waterloo and McMaster.

George Roy, all Canadian from Waterloo, won the 1000 Free and Jones from McMaster won the 200 Back.

Blues will put their top swimmers to the test this Saturday night at the Etobicoke Pool as Varsity is host to the O.Q.A.A. invitational relays.

It promises to be the big meet of the fall season, and 200 swimmers representing some eight colleges are expected to attend.

Spectators are welcome. Meet starts at 7 p.m.

INTERFAC SOCCER CHAMPIONSHIP
 Scarborough vs Grad 'A'
 Thursday Nov. 27 Varsity Stadium 12:15

A Book of Mystical Knowledge
 The Author gives the wisdom of three most important subjects which are the main keys to achieve permanent peace, and explains the Retributive-Karmic Law, and how and why the whole human race are brothers and sisters.
 The author suggests to those who are interested in peace and brotherhood, to get this book and prove to themselves that: without true knowledge of the 3 above subjects, there will never be lasting peace nor brotherhood in this squint-eyed world.
 This book is written for the benefit of humanity and is free for all, but donations will be accepted to help for publishing and mailing.
 Apply: Rolly's Store
 634 Yonge Street
 Toronto, Ontario

I beseech you, Mr. Editor, Bring back Humor, Bring back Irrelevance, Bring back Gellius!!

by GELLIUS LACROSSE

Varsity Sports, in collaboration with IBM and John von Neumann, is proud to present the Final (absolutely the last) Lacrosse Standings. Offprints of these Standings are available on request; send twenty-five cents and two lacrosse sticks in a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

GROUP I (4 to playoffs.)

1. Vic	5	0	1	19
2. PHE	6	2	2	14
3. SMC	5	4	1	11
4. Dev House	3	7	0	6
5. Erin	2	7	1	5
6. Innis	2	7	1	5

GROUP II (2 to playoffs.)

1. For	5	0	1	11
2. Law	2	3	2	6
3. PHEB	2	4	0	4
4. Eng.	1	4	1	3

GROUP III (yet 2 more to playoffs.)

1. Scar	5	0	1	11
2. Trin	4	1	1	9
3. Knox	4	2	0	8
4. Dents	2	3	1	5
5. Eng II	1	3	2	4
6. For B	0	5	1	3

And we continue with the PLAYOFFS as an added bonus.

Vic got goals from Ryan (3), Vallillie (2), Somerville (2), Hart and Clem (you remember that early Rock standard, "Heart and Clem", don't you?) to down Law (Macdonald 2, Pashby 2, Scott 2), 9-6.

ENDORSEMENTS

Gellius uses an Underwood typewriter.

BASKETBALL

Meds got a much-needed 10 points from Lloyd Rossman (former Globetrotter now in Canada for political reasons) and 22 from Lewis to beat PHE (Penny 15), 79-57.

Pyne (OE Plural of "pie") hit for 26 as Law axamaxaxo'd New, 75-51. Horenblax (it is said that a horenblax from Gabriel's trumpet will signal the end of the world). Tickets available now at Sam's had 20 for the Gnus (a small south African antelope related to the iconoclast.)

Innis (Lockhart, Oleszkowicz 10) 39; Scar (Dow 8) 26.

Sternberg (an iceberg that sneaks up from behind — nautical term; cf. "bowspit", to expectorate forward) scored 14 (though Erin's Shaw had 18) and UC beat Erin, 45-42. The game was highlighted by pretty Erin cheerleaders shouting, "Erin Gu Bragh!". "Gu

Sincerely,

Rod Mickleburgh

Sports Editor

Penticon Herald

Bragh" is the new name of the township of Port Credit.

SMC (Roney 10) 41; Vic (Tonisson 10) 32.

Hellza Poppenk's 12 was tops as Jr. Eng. beat Pharm, 46-15.

Bus' Huestis (2d person plural of the verb "husum", "to be hu") scored 13 points and this naturally helped beat Archieandrews, 43-21, in despite of Kohn's 9 points.

INTERFACULTY SWIM MEET

Well, APSC won with 91 points followed by PHE (49) UC (48), Vic (40) and SMC (29) Top individual was SMC's Twohig ("twohig is better than one" — old proverb) who won two events and was second in another.

EPILEGOMENA

"Happy trails to you Until we meet again. Happy trails to you Keep smiling until then."

AFGHAN COATS
Long fleeced
Suede jackets & coats
Hand made
Limited supply

LIDCHI ORIENTAL RUGS
2098 Yonge Street at Manor Road
Phone 481-5601

GIRL POWER

It's a combination of all those little tricks every woman knows. Like tilting your head at exactly the right angle when you ask a special favor. Or knowing just when to wear that particular dress. It's knowing how to squeeze every minute out of every day and living it to the fullest.

That's why Tampax tampons can be mighty important. They keep you free to be every bit a woman, every bit of the time. They free you to wear your most flattering clothes. And to be completely comfortable and confident no matter where you are or what you're doing. The reason's simple: Tampax tampons are worn internally, so nothing can show; no one will know.

Convenient Tampax tampons fit easily into pocket or purse. They're completely disposable. And they come in three absorbency-sizes: Regular, Super and Junior.

NO BELLS
NO PINS
NO PANTS
NO BODIES

PhysEd, Vic battle for Mulock at 1 p.m.

VICTORIA

NAME	POS	NO
John Baird	QB	12
Bruce Carroll	FB	14
Oon Munnings	HB	15
Peter Wade	HE	20
Jim Atkinson	HB	21
Dave Harris	HB	22
Rick Kiyonaga	HB	23
Aarne Karnia	HB	25
Steve Johnson	HB	30
Peter White	FB	31
Peter Fairgrieve	HB	34
Paul Lasko	HB	35
Bryce Oyer	G	40
Paul Gryslar	C	41
John Icton	G	42
Paul Hurly	G	50
Bill Dalziel	G	51
Joe Comacchia	T	52
Ron Gray	G	53
Bruce Falis	T	55
Ken Howarth	T	60
Bob Potts	G	61
Dave Beal	T	62
Rocco Basta	E	65
Rick Nellis	T	66
Steve Diviner	T	70
Murray Marshall	E	71
Bruce Monick	E	73
Art Hankey	E	75
Fred Farris	E	76

COACH: Tony Spiciale
ASST COACH: Rick Christie
MANAGER: Mark Hebner

MULOCK CUP

Vic seeks 12th straight; game at Varsity Stadium

PHYSED

NAME	POS	NO
Larry Theed	vHB	10
Don Crocker	FI	10
John Osbome	QB	14
Keith Johnson	HB	15
Gord Harvey	HB	16
Ron Nastuk	E	17
Wayne Cousins	HB	21
Doug Neeve	E	25
Steve Burton	HB	30
Ken Harris	QB	32
Dave Rae	FB	33
Bob Marrow	HB	34
Rick Johnson	E	40
Gary Boguski	LB	41
Bruce Parreck	LB	45
Paul Rocks	C	46
Ian Macintosh	E	51
Roy Dahl	E	52
Ken MacKay	T	53
Rob Miller	LB	55
Jim Hornig	G	56
Roger Oale	G	58
Bob Feaver	T	61
Walt Pocarovsky	T	61
Glen Gibbs	T	65
Jrm Orfanakos	T	65
Bill Rowland	LBHB	66
Norm Doddgson	LB	70
John May	E	71
Louis Sialtas	LB	72

COACHES: Kerth Johnson
Walt Pocarovsky
Chris Mitskinis MANAGER:

OFFENCE

Split end — John Chapman, Toronto and Oon Manahan, Waterloo, Tie.
Tight end — Rick Van Buskirk, Queen's.
Flenker — Eric Welter, Toronto.
Centre — Jay Harris, McGill Guards — Bob Climie, Queen's, Mike Evans, McGill and Derek Turner, Toronto, Tie.
Teckles — Jim Kellam, Toronto; Bobby Taylor, McGill
Quarterback — Vic Alboini, Toronto.
Half — Keith Eaman, Queen's, Dave Fleischer, McGill, Wally Sehr, Toronto.

Complete SIFL All-Star Teams

DEFENCE

Teckles — Howie Mednick, McGill, Jim Bennett, Toronto.
End — Alex Squires, Toronto; Jim Sherritt, Queen's and Ed Scorge, Waterloo Tie Linebackers — Bill McKenna, McGill, Bob Berke, McGill, Ottawa Colosimo, Western Half — Chris Rumbell, McGill, Mike Lambros, Queen's, Peter Lemtie, Toronto; Bob LaRose, Western, Gairney Richardson, Western

DEVELOPED BY J. HOSHORN
NOW USED BY MILLIONS OF WOMEN
TAMPAX TAMPONS ARE MADE ONLY BY CANADIAN TAMPAX CORPORATION LTD.
BARRIE, ONTARIO

The Hart House Music Committee
Presents

AVANT-GARDE JAZZ
with
AL NEIL TRIO
Mixed Media Concert
Music Room, Hart House

Today, 4-6 p.m.

Ladies Welcome

Westinghouse

WILL BE ON CAMPUS DECEMBER 11, 12, & 13, 1969
TO INTERVIEW 1970 ENGINEERING GRADUATES

A well-defined training program is offered to prepare candidates for positions of responsibility in:

DESIGN AND DEVELOPMENT ENGINEERING
RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT
MANUFACTURING ENGINEERING
INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING
FACTORY ENGINEERING
SERVICE ENGINEERING
FIELD INSTALLATION
TECHNICAL MARKETING AND SALES

These positions will afford opportunity for career development to graduates with potential.

Professional salary scale and increases based on performance as well as excellent employee fringe benefit plans.

Contact the Placement Office for detailed information, brochures and interview appointment.

Western here Friday

Hockey Blues win twice on U.S. tour

By COLIN PILMER

"Looking ahead, at least five members of the team will be gone by next year. In short the future is uncertain."

This statement was printed last year in The Varsity following the triumph of the star-studded Blues in the CIAU finals.

Its pessimistic tone seemed justified at the time; Blues were losing such perennial all stars as Steve Montieth, Ward Passi, and Gord Cunningham and their replacements were unknown quantities.

Today, after four wins and a tie in their first five games, Blues prospects are much brighter.

The team came away with two more wins from their weekend sortie south of the border. Clarkson Institute of Technology, always a power in NCAA hockey, bowed 5-2; St. Lawrence University came close to being shutout as they lost 4-1. Last year, Blues lost to Clarkson 4-3 and demolished St. Lawrence 8-3.

Both games featured outstanding goaltending for the Blues in the face of numerous opposition power plays.

Grant Cole was great in the St. Lawrence game as Blues were outshot 36-25 and picked up 38 minutes in penalties to the Americans 14.

The next night Adrian Watson held Toronto together as Clarkson fired 36 shots to Blues 20; Blues again took the lion's share of the penalties with 26 minutes (Clarkson received 2 minors.)

With Cole holding the fort, Blues jumped into a 4-0 lead against St. Lawrence on goals by Thompson, McGuinn, Wright, and Boland. Brian Hind rounded out the scoring for St. Lawrence.

Against Clarkson Blues gave up the first goal but came storming back with three in the second by McGuinn, Boland, and Wright to give Blues the lead. Varsity kept up the momentum in the third as McGuinn tallied again and Nuppola added a single before Magnusson got Clarkson's second and last goal.

To get an idea of how well Blues are doing, check their record so far. Last year at this time Toronto had lost to Clarkson and Loyola and went on to lose to York. This year Blues have two victories and a tie in the same games.

Varsity opens the SIHL campaign against Western Mustangs at Varsity Arena Friday at 8 p.m.

INSTITUTE FOR THE HISTORY AND PHILOSOPHY OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

"Historical Relations Between Science and Technology" by Derek J. de Solla Price, Avalon Professor of the History of Science, Yale University.

3rd December 1, 10 p.m. Room 202 McLennan Laboratory
(New Physics Building)

Sponsored by the Varsity Fund. All members of the University Community are invited.

VIC

CAMPUS CENTRE WANTED YOU!

Who's you?

Anyone and everyone interested in a VIC CAMPUS CENTRE.

TWO preliminary phases are now being carried out:

- 1) Informal Discussion Groups on the campus centre are being held on Thurs. Nov. 27 and Thurs. Dec. 4 in the Council Room, Wymilwood at 3 p.m. Come and contribute your ideas and tell us what you would like to see in the proposed centre.
- 2) Briefs on basic concepts as to the purpose, role, and design; what facilities should be included, (etc.) are urgently needed from all parts of the U of T Community. Briefs should be left, or mailed to Miss Mary Ballachey, V.C.U. Office Wymilwood, 150 Charles St. W.

Penultimate SIFL stats

LEADING RUSHERS		CARRIES	YARDS	TD'S	FBL'S	LONGEST
Oave Fleischer	McGill	111	703	10	3	46
Jeff Hilton	Western	116	552	8	2	44
Keith Eaman	Queens	102	548	4	0	50
Walt Sehr	Toronto	78	436	3	4	75
Ken Arken	McGill	112	413	4	0	25
Bill Stankovic	Toronto	73	351	0	0	16
Ron Clark	Queens	56	333	2	0	90
Chuck Wakefield	Waterloo	63	283	3	2	40
Brian Warrender	Queens	42	281	1	2	44
Greg White	McMaster	67	251	1	0	32
Jamie Spears	McMaster	55	206	0	2	10

LEADING PASSERS		ATTEMPTS	COMP	YARDS	TD'S	INT	LONGEST
Vic Alboini	Toronto	170	91	1441	9	12	85
Oave Groves	Waterloo	186	92	1004	10	17	56
Steve Stankanko	Western	112	54	648	8	10	77
Bill McNeill	Queens	85	41	522	6	4	55
Al Tanner	McMaster	47	25	330	1	6	82
Alex Lockington	McMaster	46	20	265	1	9	36
George Wall	McGill	57	21	228	2	6	26
Dan Smith	McGill	42	17	219	0	0	62

LEADING RECEIVERS		COMP	YARDS	TD'S	LONGEST
Oon Manahan	Waterloo	26	245	2	33
Eric Walter	Toronto	25	552	6	85
Walt Sehr	Toronto	24	290	2	51
Rick Wiedenhoef	Waterloo	19	283	5	41
Wayne Fox	Waterloo	19	235	1	33
Bob Baytor	McMaster	18	295	1	82
Cor Ooret	Toronto	16	153	2	31
John Chapman	Toronto	13	275	2	51
Pete Bender	McGill	13	236	2	62
Jeff Hilton	Western	12	73	0	66

INTERCEPTIONS		NUMBER	YARDS RETURNED
Bob Larose	Western	5	121
Bob Berke	McGill	5	53
Peter Lamantia	Toronto	4	93
Kevin St Michael	Western	4	64
Steve Neville	McGill	4	46
Mike Lambros	Queens	4	44
Jody Orved	Toronto	4	27

PUNTERS		PUNTS	YARDS	AVE	LONGEST
Mike Lambros	Queens	62	2388	38.7	75
Paul McKay	Toronto	70	2555	36.5	70
Paul Knill	Waterloo	78	2823	36.2	95
Joe Fabiani	Western	72	2565	35.7	72
Alec Lockington	McMaster	65	2307	35.5	51
Ron Kelly	McGill	56	1948	34.8	49

KICKOFFS		KICKOFFS	YARDS	AVE	LONGEST
Alec Lockington	McMaster	13	661	50.9	70
Paul Knill	Waterloo	24	1207	50.3	60
Ottavio Colisimo	Western	26	1249	47.1	68
Chris Rumball	McGill	30	1393	46.4	55
Bill Stankovic	Toronto	21	963	45.8	65
Jim Turnbull	Queens	18	634	35.2	59

Fencers travel to McMaster after split with York

The clash of swords in McMaster salle on Friday evening heralds Toronto's strongest Canadian challenge. In last year's OQAA sectionals, Blues won the foil 6-3, epee 8-1 and the sabre 5-4, but only four of that team will compete in this match.

Our chances lie with the foils of Oscar Wong and Vladimir Gettler, the epee of Bill Gibson and the sabres of Vladimir Hatchinski and Jan van Maanen.

Meanwhile McMaster retain last year's team with two experienced rookies, an ex Blue OQAA individual foil champion and an as yet anonymous sabreur.

Last Saturday, York's foils dealt out the points in the art of fencing, dismissing Blue's first group by 6 bouts to 3.

Richard Wong (Toronto) and Ron Malinski (York) were outstanding and their bout of classic foil went to York by a 5-4 margin.

Toronto rookies Vladimir Gettler, Alex Lee and Jan van Maanen took their chance and led York right up to the last bout.

The last hit decided the match and Gettler's bout with Malinski gave York a 5-4 victory.

Toronto had slight revenge bombing the York B team 7-2 and 6-3.

CHESS

The U of T Hart House chess team captured 16½ of a possible 24 points to win the Eastern Canada Collegiate Chess Championship played at Hart House recently.

The Toronto team narrowly edged high-calibre teams from Carleton and McMaster as a total of 54 players from nine colleges competed in the two-day event.

With over two-thirds of the participants having official Canadian chess ratings, competition was continually on a keen, hard-fought level with excellent offensive and defensive gambits in almost every match.

Only three unrated players managed to achieve a 50 per cent score.

NEW YORK PIZZA HOUSE

620 YONGE STREET CORNER OF ST. JOSEPH — 925-1736
 We specialize in New York and New England style pizza and home-made spaghetti. WE MAKE THE BEST PIZZA IN TOWN
 STUDENTS FREE DELIVERY IN OUR AREA & HOT PIZZA
 RIGHT TO YOUR ROOM
 5:00 P.M. — 1:00 A.M. DAILY

SPORTS SCHEDULES WEEK OF DEC. 1st

HOCKEY

Mon Dec 1	12:30	Eng I Yr	vs	IV Ind B	Westlake, Allen
	1:30	U C III	vs	Innis II	Westlake, Allen
	7:00	Med A	vs	St M B	Miller, Des Roches
	8:15	Vic I	vs	Trn A	Miller, Des Roches
	9:30	For A	vs	PHE B	Embrey, Seckington
	10:30	Law III	vs	Med B	Embrey, Seckington
Tues Dec 2	1:30	Music	vs	Vic VI	Murray, Richardson
	7:00	Jr Eng	vs	Law II	Ellis, Bernhouse
	8:15	Dev Hse	vs	U C I	Ellis, Bernhouse
	9:30	Knox	vs	Campus Co-op	Dubnek, Gordon
	10:30	Wyc	vs	Vic V	Dubnek, Gordon
Wed Dec 3	12:30	For C	vs	Trn D	Murray, Richardson
	1:30	Law I	vs	St M A	Murray, Richardson
	5:00	Arch	vs	Innis I	Bullock, Pierce
Thurs Dec 4	12:30	U C I	vs	PHE B	Allen, Des Roches
	7:00	PHE A	vs	Sr Eng	Sullivan, Hemphill
	8:15	Pharm A	vs	U C II	Sullivan, Hemphill
	9:30	Dent C	vs	Trn C	Fraser, Boland
	10:30	IV Civil B	vs	IV Chem B	Fraser, Boland
Fri Dec 5	12:30	Jr Eng	vs	Vic II	Bullock, Wright
	1:30	IV Elec	vs	St M E	Bullock, Wright
	3:30	Geol	vs	St M F	Skinner, Klinck
	6:30	Law II	vs	Dev Hse	Skinner, Klinck
	8:00	Ern	vs	Dent A	Miller, Billings
	9:15	Bus I	vs	Scar	Miller, Billings
	10:15	Dent O	vs	Vic VII	Miller, Billings

WATER POLO

Tues Dec 2	7:30-8:15	St M	vs	Eng I	Petzold
	8:15-9:00	Oent	vs	Scar	Breech
Wed Dec 3	7:30-8:15	PHE	vs	Vic	Breech
	8:15-9:00	Innis	vs	Knox	Petzold
Thurs Dec 4	7:30-8:15	Arch	vs	Law	Heyduck
	8:15-9:00	Pharm	vs	U C	Ouvall
	9:00-9:45	Forestry	vs	Eng II	Ouvall

BASKETBALL

Mon Dec 1	4:30	PHE B	vs	Bus	Gee, Cotes
	5:30	Enn II	vs	Med B	Coles, Gee
Wed Dec 3	4:00	Trn A	vs	Law A	A Sternberg, Cunningham
	6:30	Jr Eng	vs	Arch A	Saltzman, Schwartz
	7:30	Vic II	vs	SGS	Saltzman, Chapnick, Schwartz
	8:30	Pharm A	vs	U C II	Chapnick, Schwartz, Saltzman
Fri Dec 5	6:30	St M B	vs	New I	Doug Mockford, A Sternberg
	8:00	Scar	vs	Dent A	Ooug Mockford, L Sternberg
Sat Dec 6	12:00	Med A	vs	U C I	Tessis, Don Mockford
	1:30	Enn I	vs	St M A	Don Mockford, Tessis

NOTE — The Friday night and Saturday games are full length and women spectators are welcome

VOLLEYBALL (Balance of League Schedule)

Mon Dec 1	4:30	Vic	vs	PHE	Gesing
	5:30	Arch	vs	For B	Gesing
Tues Dec 2	1:00	Eng I	vs	St M	Orav
	8:00	Dent C	vs	Knox	Horenblas
	9:00	Eng II	vs	Dent A	Horenblas
Wed Dec 3	5:00	Innis	vs	Bus	Senkiw
	6:00	Ern	vs	Med	Senkiw
	7:00	Dent B	vs	Ern	Bodnaruk
	8:00	Arch	vs	Dent C	Bodnaruk
Thur Dec 4	7:00	Scar	vs	U C	Orav
	8:00	For B	vs	Wyc	Orav

SQUASH

Tues Dec 2	6:20	New	vs	Eng
	7:00	Dent	vs	St M B
	7:40	Vic I	vs	PHE A
	8:20	SGS	vs	Trn A
Wed Dec 3	7:00	Forestry	vs	Med B
	7:40	Med A	vs	Law A
	8:20	Innis	vs	Wyc
Thur Dec 4	6:20	Vic II	vs	Trn B
	7:00	PHE B	vs	St M A
	7:40	Scar	vs	Law B

THE BULL
 Draught beer on tap from noon till after midnight. Hearty lunches from 75c. Wild atmosphere.
THE BEAR

The Bull and The Bear in The Sutton Place Hotel on Wellesley east of Bay

Convocation Hall • Tomorrow noon and 6 • March to City Hall at 8

THE

varsity

VOLUME 90 No. 9
November 28, 1969

TORONTO

A Special

Community Issue

University and community face common issues

The University of Toronto has never developed a working relationship with the surrounding community.

Today this relationship is especially important — with the Spadina Expressway threatening both the university and the Kensington community. In addition, those on the fringes of the university are paying for the university and receiving none of its benefits.

Yet the problems of the expressway and of access to education are only two aspects of a much larger range of common concerns which include how the university expands, and the reaction of both the university students and the community to that expansion.

Originally we planned this issue of The Varsity solely for the Kensington area. But as we investigated these problems, we found they are not confined to the Kensington area, but affect the whole city.

Spadina Expressway

If the Spadina Expressway goes through, it threatens to destroy any community in Kensington or the university.

The university is already fragmented by Queens Park Crescent and St. George Street with the result that students on the west side of the campus have nothing in common with students on the east side of the campus.

With the expressway, the main streets through the university will become access and exit routes.

Traffic density will be enormous.

The university would look as if it were planned for the convenience of automobiles, not for the needs of the university community.

No matter how much traffic you shove through the university, it won't be destroyed. It will merely add to the artificial barriers the university itself has already set up to divide faculty from students, graduates from undergraduates, professional students from arts students, and administrators from everyone.

But the Spadina Expressway will not only disrupt the Kensington area, it will destroy it.

The lower part of Spadina Avenue will be converted into a rapid transit road and the garment industry, which is Spadina, will suffer.

A recent report commissioned by the Spadina Businessmen's Association found that the completion of the expressway could destroy the industry by forcing it to relocate. Since the industry draws the bulk of its workers from the surrounding area, relocation would leave these people without jobs.

For the young executive in North York, the Spadina Expressway means an extra 15 minutes of sleep in the morning. For the garment worker, it means he won't have a job to walk to.

As more cars are channelled down the expressway into the centre of the city, the side-streets in Kensington will become clogged with traffic.

The open air markets cannot exist in the midst of traffic jams. And the market is essential to the economic survival of the community.

But the expressway will affect the whole city. Expressways follow expressways. Already planners are considering a cross-town expressway and there are plans to extend Highway 400 down to the Gardiner.

So what you get is a city that's great to travel through — efficient and well planned from an engineer's point of view.

What about the people whose homes are expropriated to make way for the expressways? Plans for the Spadina Expressway were based on a feasibility study from an engineering standpoint only. There were no social or economic studies on how the expressway affected the people directly concerned — the people receiving the expropriation notices.

City Planners seem to think that more efficient traffic flow is more important than the livelihood of the people displaced by the expressway.

University Expansion

In many respects, university planners are like the city planners, expanding without consideration of the effect on the people who happen to be in the way.

The university needs more space; therefore it must expropriate. It's as simple as that.

The proponents of university expansion argue that the university must grow in order to take in more students.

But chances are that the families receiving the expropriation notices will not benefit by the increased enrolment capacity of the university they pay for.

Children in the lower classes very seldom make it to university. University expansion forces lower class families out of their homes so that more upper-middle class children can go to university.

As the university has the money and the power to buy out houses arbitrarily, people will be forced to move out against their will.

Ironically, as the university expands into the community, it separates itself further from the community.

The university must merge with the community, not destroy it.

Kensington Student-Housing Project

The Students' Administrative Council of University of Toronto tried to become a part of the community, but it failed. SAC wanted to build a student residence in Kensington that would provide educational facilities to the nearby residents.

At SAC's request, U of T secretly sought the site for the student residence. SAC pledged to work with the Kensington residents and gain their approval before deciding what to do with the site.

SAC found that the Kensington Area Residents Association (KARA) did not represent the residents. It was dominated by a small group led by Allan Schwam.

The group pushed a proposal that Cadillac Development Corporation plan and build for the site.

The people of Kensington fell prey to manipulation by two small bodies: SAC and KARA. The story on the centre pages of this newspaper shows how that manipulation took place.

The people were squeezed out of that small area of city planning the same way they have been ignored in the larger areas: general expansion of the university and the planning of the Spadina Expressway.

Inside the University

The few who are making the decisions are exploiting the many who are affected by them. When those few are the only people who know what's going on, naturally they are the only people who have the expertise to make the decisions.

Just as the nature of society is determined by the few in power, so is the nature and function of the university.

The needs of tenants' groups are directly opposed to the policies of the Inside this special community issue of The Varsity, the University of Toronto student newspaper, you will find the following stories:

- Rich kids aren't any smarter than poor kids, they just get all the breaks • page 4
- Expansion and the University • page 8
- Kensington Market • page 9
- One Block of Land in Kensington • centre
- St. Christopher House: Temporary Relief or Social Change? • page 14
- The Election in Ward Six • page 16
- The Spadina Expressway • page 18
- Are Expressways the Most Efficient Means of Transportation Within the City? • page 22

corporations which are looking for contracts to build expressways and apartment buildings, just as the needs of the students and society which support the university are directly opposed to the goals of the corporations which have a hand in the control of the university.

Universities examine problems academically but do not attack them at their social source. For example, the University of Toronto, the largest university in Canada, conducted so little pollution research that a separate student group — Pollution Probe — was formed to force action on pollution, not just talk about it.

The function of the university will not allow students and faculty to gear their education towards people, for the university is an integral part of an economy which is geared not to people but to efficiency and profit.

Just as politicians obscure people's needs in order to sell expressways, our university education programs students to train themselves to design those expressways.

A few students are challenging the function of the university. They say their education doesn't serve their needs or society's needs because they have no control over what they are taught and how they are taught it.

So students, like tenants, are organizing to gain control over decisions which affect their lives.

Barriers to Education

The public has reacted strongly against the student revolt. Many people think students are a privileged group that should be grateful for their education. But education should be a right, not a privilege.

And it's a right that's denied to the majority, although the majority pays the bulk of the education tax dollar.

The few who make it to university are privileged: most are financially secure and come from upper-middle class families.

These are the kids who get all the breaks. In middle-class neighborhoods children naturally attend the local arts and science school. Their families often would not allow them to go to a technical or a commercial school. These children are prepared for a university environment from the first grade.

The parents who live in lower-middle class areas can't afford to give their children the luxury of a purely arts education.

These children are streamed into technical and commercial schools which are concentrated in lower-middle class districts.

Lower-class children can't risk taking an arts and science program. When they reach the end of such a program, and if they can't afford the price of a university education, it's too late for anything: the arts and science program hasn't trained them for a job — just for university.

The common myth is that anyone who has the "ability" can go to university.

But it's just that — a myth:

- lower-class children are barred from university, not because they aren't intelligent enough, but because they are streamed away from it;

- students from low-income backgrounds are very hesitant about borrowing money;

- OSAP is the only aid available — and students regard it primarily as a loan scheme;

- the amount of aid available cannot begin to offset the unequal access to education — it helps some middle class students, but that's all;

A salary system is the only way of providing secure financial aid to students from all classes, since any loan system forces lower-income students to go into debt.

We need to radically reform the taxation system — to eliminate the class barriers that are at the root of the discrimination. We need equal access to housing and employment in order to set up conditions that would allow equal access to education.

Most people realize there is inequality in our society and they accept this fact. They tell you there's no way to change it.

But our education and our culture falsely teach us that "anyone can be a prime minister" and that people are poor because of individual faults, not because there is a system which allows a small group of people to remain affluent at the expense of the majority.

Of course all people are not "equal" or "the same." That won't change. But people can demand equal opportunity.

And although people can demand their fair share all they want, they won't get it until they have the power to enforce their demands.

varsity

TORONTO

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints should be directed to business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

This special community issue of The Varsity is the result of many weeks of discussion and planning by the entire Varsity staff. The paper was financed by a $2,000 grant from the Student's Administrative Council.

Editor Brian Johnson

Staff this issue:

Community Issue

Editor Mary Kate Rowan

Design

Susan Perly, Gary Robins, Larry Haiven, David Frank

Photography

Errol Young, Dan Andrew, Bill Rodgers.

Artwork

Mary McLoughlin

Copy Editors

Jim Cowan, Geoff Meggs

Advertising

Carol Cooper 923-8171

Varsity Offices.

91 St. George St.
923-8741 923-8742

Rich kids aren't any smarter

by michael kent

Last summer four graduate students from the University of Toronto, Edmund Clark, David Cook, George Fallis, and Michael Kent, set out across Ontario. During the month before schools closed for the summer vacation, they visited more than 25 high schools and met with and talked to over 8,000 students from Grades 9 to 13.

The Ontario Government asked them to find out what sort of things are affecting today's students when they make their decisions about school. Why do some students finish high school and others do not?

They also evaluated the Ontario Student Awards Program (OSAP), the government aid program set up "to ensure equality of opportunity at the post-secondary level".

The researchers decided on two criteria to evaluate the effectiveness of student aid. First, student aid should ensure that lack of money is not a barrier to continuing one's education. Second, an aid program should ensure that a representative number of students from all income backgrounds reach the level at which they are eligible to receive aid.

The 1.5 million pieces of data collected from the survey were analyzed and compiled in a report entitled, "Student Aid and Access to Higher Education in Ontario". The study received support from two sources, the Department of University Affairs and the Ford Foundation Research Program on Efficient Resource Allocation in Higher Education, through Prof. R. W. Judy of U of T's Institute for Quantitative Analysis. The final report was submitted to the government for their consideration at the end of September.

Despite the fact that the average man in the street insists that Canada has no social classes, the study makes it very clear that they do exist. The rigid class barriers of past generations are gone. However, as the report clearly proves, a person's socio-economic background or class determines to a large extent the success he will enjoy in school and in later life.

The report destroys the myth that anyone can become whatever he wants if he is only willing to work hard enough. The disadvantages a student from a low income home faces upon entering school are severe.

The study makes it clear that it is truly the exceptional student from a low income background who is able to break loose from his origins and become a success. In Ontario classrooms students from upper income backgrounds are significantly more successful in doing well in school than their lower income counterparts.

For analysis, the high school students were divided into four classes (less than $5,000; $5,000 to $8,000; $8,000 to $10,000; and more than $10,000 a year). In 1967, 39 per cent of Ontario families earned less than $5,000, 37 per cent earned between $5,000 and $8,000, 11 per cent earned between $8,000 and $10,000, and 13 per cent earned over $10,000.

Students from high income groups consistently obtain higher marks, score better on intelligence tests, stay in the school system longer, and enter the courses leading to post-secondary education in greater proportion than students from low income groups. The researchers point out that these differences would not exist between income groups if family background or class did not affect a student's development.

"Students from wealthy homes wanted and expected to go farther in school, and to obtain better jobs in terms of prestige and monetary rewards," the report states.

The researchers are careful to make it clear that low income students are aware of than poor kids

(they just get all the breaks)

what it means to be a success in our society. Low income students agree that it is desirable to be well educated and well-to-do.

From the report it is obvious that all students want the same things in life but not all feel they will be able to get them. Many of these students who must settle for something second best are from low income families.

Unlike the upper income student, students from low income homes are forced into re-assessing what they expect to get out of life. This disparity between what a low income student would like and what he knows he can expect contributes to the sense of defeat and frustration many of the students felt.

Today we are all exposed to the "good life" of vacations, clothes, cars, and expensive homes. Everyone is sold on the idea of success. Unfortunately not everyone is able to enjoy these things to the same degree.

Even more depressing to the researchers was the extent to which many students who were not doing well in school have resigned themselves to low paying jobs, jobs they would not take if they had the option.

Today everyone realizes that education is the key to success and a good job. What disturbed the authors of the report was the fact that the low income students are the ones who are doing poorly in school and would seemingly "lose out on the future", as one student in Eastern Ontario put it.

On the other hand, upper income students indicate they see very little difference between what they want and what they expect to get. They want to continue their education after high school and most of them expect to.

The researchers asked themselves why students from low income homes should be doing so poorly. The results of present intelligence tests seem, at face value, to indicate that the low income students are just less intelligent than the high income students. This is false. Unfortunately many educators use this statement as an excuse to limit the educational opportunities of the poor child.

Thirty-three per cent of the lowest income group have IQ's of less than 100 (an average IQ is 100). Only 15 per cent of those in the highest income group have a similar score.

Conversely, 30 per cent of the wealthier group have IQ's of over 120 (very bright). Only 13 per cent of the poorer group have IQ's in the very bright range.

The report states that too many people who use IQ scores in the schools are not adequately informed of just exactly what the scores indicate.

The IQ is definitely not a measure of innate intelligence. It is now accepted by investigators in the field of standardized testing that intelligence tests are a special form of achievement test.

Intelligence tests are reliable indicators of a student's acquired ability and good predictors of academic success.

Instead of concluding that the low income students, as a group, are less intelligent than high income students because of the former's lower IQ scores and poorer marks, educators must begin to ask themselves why certain groups of students have failed to develop their intellectual capacities more fully.

If we can find ways of correcting this situation, both the students and society will benefit.

The extreme difference in IQ scores between the low and high income students should be seen as objective evidence of the degree to which lower income students missed out on the early childhood experiences which equip a child with the preliminary skills needed to learn more abstract ideas in school.

There are many ways in which the parents can transmit these preliminary skills to their child's developing mind well before he enters school.

The researchers refer to the work done by developmental psychologists to explain why the low income child starts his school career with fewer skills than the high income child.

It is very important that a child be exposed to a large number of new and stimulating experiences when he is very young. When his nervous system is still in the process of organizing itself, it is important to feed the child both nutritious food and nutritious ideas.

Ideally a child's early years should be filled with lots and lots of interesting things when he is still naturally curious. His parents should encourage his curiosity and provide an atmosphere where learning new things and experiencing new situations should be fun.

The list of things a child wants to know about is as long as his imagination. It could include everything from the alphabet to sand castles.

It is at once obvious when you look at the hardships a low income family is forced to endure just to meet the material requirements of food and shelter, that such an environment is not the most suited to preparing a child for his school career.

Often two jobs take the parents away from their children for long hours. Money problems don't leave much time for showing a child the world of language and books or for trips to the zoo.

The problems of raising children in a family where money is in such short supply that an outing to a restaurant is an untasted luxury, are very complex. However, the researchers were able to clearly document the effects of growing up in a family where there is never enough money.

When a low income child enters a school system which is essentially dominated by middle class values, his generally poor morale and lack of ability to handle abstract concepts do not allow him to function well.

"A low income child also learns that life is a continuous series of unsatisfied desires, few things are ever secure. It is not long before he realizes that his father is not very successful. This has become a serious problem in our society because one theme of success dominates."

On the other hand, a child from a high in-

continued on next page

continued from page five

come home is materially secure and his wishes, if reasonable, are usually met. He develops a sense of relative confidence. His father is a successful man.

Other, much more obvious differences exist. A father who earns less than $5,000 a year at two jobs is certainly not able to buy off his son or daughter with a car or trip to Europe in an effort to keep him in school.

The school system does little to lessen the gap between the low and high income students. The low income student gets farther and farther behind. The work becomes harder and harder and eventually he just gives up in desperation.

The researchers conclude that today's class barriers are not external forces but are built into the child's mind during the first years of his life. Society no longer restricts people to a specific status according to the lot they are given at birth.

Society tells the truck driver's son he can become a bank president if he has the ability and desire. Many such low income students have this ability but because their parents were unable to provide an environment where this ability could develop and flourish they fail to realize their full potential. This loss is everyone's loss.

An important part of every human being is forged in the early part of life in his home where he learns what the world is all about for the first time.

It is in the home where parents must transmit to a new generation the skills and "tricks of the trade" necessary to survive in the system. If you are born to successful parents you are lucky. They can give you a good, sound awakening to the world. If, however, your parents are not successful, they are not equipped to awaken the potential necessary to get ahead. And so the vicious cycle sets in.

Obviously student aid does assist those low income students who are able to finish high school and who want to continue their education. However, the researchers found that students should be made more aware of the existing student aid.

This is particularly important at the Grade 9 level. It is in Grade 9 where students make important decisions of whether to enter a program leading to higher education or not. The study reports that only 40 per cent of students in Grade 9 have "heard" of OSAP.

The researchers also found that the low income student who does go on to post-secondary institutions, goes to colleges of applied arts and technology, and vocational schools in larger proportions than does the high income student.

The high income student heads for the university. The university is currently dominated by the middle and upper middle classes.

The report concludes that student aid is not the solution to getting more low income students to post-secondary institutions. Most of the low income students drop out well before they are eligible for aid. The home environment is where the change has to come about. Low income parents must be alleviated from the constant stress of financial difficulties.

As a replacement for the existing student aid the study says "the only effective, and just as significant, the only equitable aid scheme would be one which would provide grants to cover all educational costs and living expenses for any student who lacked the money to pay for such costs himself."

With this plan the report suggests that a tough means test is necessary. Means tests do not necessarily have to be degrading. The idea of a means test that is tough yet not embarrassing is being developed now.

At the conclusion of the study the following situation still exists. In Ontario, if your father makes over $10,000 you have better than one chance in two of successfully making it to Grade 13.

On the other hand, if your father happens to make under $5,000 you have only one chance in four of making it to Grade 13.

Education in Ontario has come a long way since its beginnings over a century ago. It has been said by professional educators that the ongoing educational programs in Ontario are some of the most progressive to be found anywhere in the world. The present study points to the areas where further reform is necessary. The Hall-Dennis Report points out others.

The government should be willing to experiment and the report argues that "governments are formed in order to provide citizens with services which they as individuals cannot obtain."

Therefore, the study recommends a pilot study with the following features:

- an area in the province where incomes are low would be chosen for the study.

- "community-corporations" should be established to provide employment to all who seek it.

- all work of all types should be rewarded according to a common scale based upon the number of dependents.

- a co-ordinated attack on the many problems which accompany income deprivation should be made. This attack should include co-operative medical and dental clinics, a Head Start program, and a comprehensive housing project.

- all those involved in these supportive programs should be paid on the same basis and according to the same scale as those in the community-corporations. Emphasis should be placed on direct control of the organizations by the people in the community.

- the number of families should not be more than 2,000 in order that sufficient experimental controls and the essence of the project be maintained.

"Nevertheless," said the researchers, "it was clear to us that no report could alone hope to bring such a commitment, that the mere recommendation of a movement towards equality was not sufficient. The barriers presented by unequal income are so great that no cultural program will be able to have a meaningful effect until they are removed."

The Economic Council of Canada is one of several bodies now working to expose the crippling psychological effects of poverty. Certainly increasing someone's income or bank balance is not the entire answer. It is a necessary first step.

A major commitment by not only the government but the population as a whole is essential if real progress is to be made.

Sir,
If the government would give an opportunity to the ones who can't get learning, or information into their heads. What I mean is, there are men today who ~~can~~ have not got a certificate because they can't learn. But these give them practical work and it can be done just as good as an educated man. You know a man's hands can do better than his head. This is why so many men lose out on the future.
Thank you,

EXPANSION AND THE UNIVERSITY

The University of Toronto is expanding and the surrounding community feels threatened and powerless.

In 1961 President Claude Bissell predicted that by 1970 U of T would have reached the limits of its physical expansion and enrolment.

We are just approaching 1970 and the University's downtown campus has already gone beyond Dr. Bissell's predictions, both in terms of enrolment and physical expansion.

In a recent Globe and Mail article Alex Rankin, executive vice-president (non-academic) for U of T says that Bloor Street, Spadina, Avenue and College street are presently recognized as the ultimate boundaries.

Inside those boundaries are hundreds of private residences which might be lost if the university reaches those limits.

The U of T Master Plan of 1976 says, "holding at the above enrolment (24,000) in no way assumes that floor space and land needs will be held. On the contrary, space needs of all kinds will continue to rise. This implies a need to purchase more land, erect new buildings and rebuild existing facilities."

A basic point in university expansion is the right of expropriation vested in the Board of Governors. The U of T Act gives the University an almost unlimited right of expropriation.

"The Board shall have power to, without the consent of the owner . . . enter upon, take, use and expropriate all such real property as the Board may deem necessary for the purposes of the University. . . ." says the Act revised in 1947.

The Huron-Sussex Resident's Association asked the University if it used their expropriation powers as a lever in buying property in the area immediately surrounding. The university replied "no".

Yet a letter to one resident in the area, which the university admits is a standard letter, points out the university's need for more land and asks that the owner consider selling his property.

One paragraph of the letter says, "the University of Toronto has under the law the power to expropriate lands subject to authorization by a county court judge, but it is to be hoped that we can reach an agreement without recourse to such action." But the university says it doesn't use this power as a threat.

The university has also been accused of bad planning in its expansion program. The Huron-Sussex Association, led by architect Stan Benjamin, question the university about the nature of the actual staff that make planning decisions.

The University said that the basic planning staff consists of 14 engineers and one architect. Planning consultants are only hired when deemed necessary.

The City of Toronto maintains a regular Planning Board to advise the city about its expansion. The University of Toronto Faculty of Architecture has a number of highly skilled urban planners who teach but are apparently not used by U of T's Planning department.

When the Huron-Sussex Association asked U of T about their policy towards the community, the university said, "We accept this group as representing the community, and we would like to establish and carry on a close relationship with you."

Alex Rankin later said, "you (the Association) cannot tell the Board of Governors how to operate. We are not prepared to allow you to take part in the planning of this area.

The contradictions and confusion in the university's expansion and implementation are bewildering.

The university buys houses in the area whenever they come up for sale.

photo by Jon Craneman Karsmeyer

On the north-west boundary there are university-owned houses sprinkled within the existing community.

The university also destroys houses where a new university building is planned or where houses are in poor condition.

This policy of destruction has led to a general problem in the area. In a letter to Stan Benjamin, a university representative said "it is not our policy to demolish isolated residential properties except where such a course is dictated by the physical condition of the properties."

This is true, but sometimes the university is responsible for letting the houses get into this poor condition.

A house on the corner of Washington Ave. and Spadina, for example, has been vacant and unheated for nearly two years and has naturally deteriorated.

Coupled with the destruction of property for university buildings is the uncertainty of government funds. This causes delays.

The initial construction of the new Innis College residence has been eagerly anticipated for nearly three years and the starting date is still uncertain.

A number of houses were torn down in anticipation of the construction of the residence. The site is now covered with gravel and used for parking. Across the street on St. George two other houses are now being demolished for a future graduate student residence, but that site will probably be used in the interim for parking.

Parking is a problem, as it is anywhere in downtown Toronto. But is the answer to this problem the destruction of perfectly good houses to provide gravel patches?

The houses the university acquires are either used by the university or rented out through the Crown Trust Company. The Huron Sussex Association asked the university if it kept these rented properties up to "standards of city by-laws as the rest of us are forced to."

The university said yes.

A letter from the Physical Plant Department of U of T to the Director of Housing Standards for the City of Toronto says:

"We concur that work necessary to protect health and safety should be carried out but do suggest that consideration should be given to not requiring work beyond a standard necessary to provide this protection."

The new Graduate Library, now under construction on St. George St., perhaps best exemplifies all that is bad in campus expansion. There was never any thought at all of preserving any of the housing on this block either for the university or any other use.

The University claims that it is too expensive to get some of these houses up to standard for fire regulations, but there is 40 million dollars to build this library, which, until a recent price-slashing, had such extras as granite counter tops.

The University of Toronto Handbook states "the pace continues to be brisk . . . a monumental research library for the humanities and social sciences is under construction."

What or who is the building a monument to? Who wants monumental buildings instead of homes and yards to grow and play in?

"We shall be a university of 22,000 by 1970. It is our intention to stay at this figure certainly until the end of the 25 year period we are now beginning.

"Another area of perhaps even greater certitude is that of physical expansion; for given our position in the centre of the city, there are obvious limits beyond which we cannot go, and by 1970 we shall have reached these limits."

— address by Dr. Claude Bissell, 1961.

“They change Spadina into like University Avenue. The municipal government, they give permits for big buildings.” The short fellow in the checked shirt shrugged his shoulders and went back under the clothing-draped awning. Kensington businessmen, whatever their nationality, all have the same distrust of City Hall and the coterie of land-hungry builders sheltering in its shadow.

But in addition they have a more positive common bond: their Market, while a livelihood for them, is also something unique, a uniqueness not solely imparted by the clichéd “colorfulness” most often put forward in its defence.

According to Sam Lumansky, of the Augusta Fruit Market,

continued on next page

"This area is the most humane property in the whole city . . . people settle here and find their way to become new Canadians. You give them a chance to balance themselves in a new environment."

Even though businessmen often don't speak the language of a particular ethnic group, "they have a feeling for them. Immigrants feel content when they walk into a store that is not modernized like the chains, where you go your merry way like a robot. Even if it's sign language, you have the time and patience to get through."

Other businessmen echoed his sentiment in different ways, from Saul Stockhamer's simple " . . . there's no discrimination in the Market; everybody's welcome" to Joe Lottman's enthusiastic remark that the Market is "unique; it's the only one in the world I can think of where so many ethnic groups shop side-by-side."

Lottman is president of the Kensington Businessmen's Association — whose membership he places at about 65 of the 200 businesses in the area — and he is a fighter. Like Lumansky, he is one of the old-time Jewish businessmen who in many ways are still the backbone of the neighborhood. Despite the many pressures on the area, he cannot see it relocating or being relocated.

It is a central distribution point for imported foodstuffs which come "by the boatload", and in addition "there's a lot of it which is actually European style manufactured right here in the area: Yugoslavian, Hungarian meats."

"How can you relocate a business like this?" he says. These aren't just stores, this is an area, something that's been here 60 years."

For all its venerable 60 years, the bread-and-butter of today is largely in the hands of newly-arrived Portuguese who take their place in the ethnically-layered history of the Market. Fernando Figueiredo, of Correia and Sousa Importers, estimates that his company imports $30,000 worth of seafood alone each month, of which three-quarters is sold within the few blocks of the Kensington Market. For those who desire them, his firm provides snails from Casablanca and octopi to satisfy octopus-favoring palates.

Although many Portuguese are so newly-established they hesitate to talk about the Market, he is enthusiastic, particularly over the Kensington Businessmen's Association plan to try and cut off traffic and make a mall of Augusta Street.

Others have not had such a happy experience. Albert Decaires, who imports basketry, buots and wine-bottle holders for his Madeira House, complains that business for him is slow. The neighboring Portuguese are not interested, he says, and Torontonians who come through are looking for bargains he simply cannot offer.

As we stood amidst merchandise that came from his father's factory on Madeira (an island off the Iberian coast), he lamented the government's lack of positive attitude toward the Market.

Back home municipal authorities would keep such an area cleaner — he pointed to a heap of oily boxes in front of a store across the street — and encourage it to grow. His wife added, "The city Lisbon has about ten markets like this, only larger."

Every businessman is conscious of political calousness toward the market, and they all maintain that it will either die or survive where it is.

As Saul Stockhamer, owner of West Indian Specialties, puts it: "The Market could move, but it wouldn't be as colorful as it is now. This Market grew by itself, it wasn't planned. That's what makes it so special."

David Tennebaum, of Joe's Fruit Market ("Joe isn't here any more") is another long-time businessman who sees the Market threatened: "We're fighting continually for survival," he says. "I don't know why they should want to destroy a market like this."

"They" are the politicians who have granted expropriation rights to Toronto Western Hospital on the west, George Brown College on the east, and the U of T, which, in Joe Lottman's words, "is gradually sneaking across the street (Spadina)".

Lottman watched one 1962 official plan simply find a shelf and moulder. In the Star (April 18, 1968) he said, "I see no point in our association (the KBA) cooperating further until there is a definite body charged with the responsibility of improving the area."

To him, as to the others, the Spadina Expressway is at worst just another threat, at best an unknown quantity which everybody continues to waffle about.

His tone is not so polite as in 1968; today he has the tone of Al Capone's right-hand man: "We comply with all the wishes of City Hall; they are the tellers, we are the spenders . . . bugged by the police, bugged by the million inspectors, the boys are going to get hot under the collar some day. This is their life."

Lottman's association has plans for making the Market more competitive with the land-hungry developers surrounding it. If by some miracle he can cut off traffic on Augusta St., a mall will be built, "not changing any of the storefronts; leave the atmosphere there, but tile the streets, put in the odd flowerpot."

In addition, there will be a more powerful Businessmen's Association. At present, the members "are mainly older ones, but now we're starting to work with the other groups. The city keeps us split apart by not helping us. But shortly in the future we're going to have a powerful association."

Sam Lumansky has a more measured enthusiasm: "The older people are more involved in the political and social way of life; some of the newcomers are not fully aware, or some people don't care any more. It's been eight years back and forth."

"Maybe the idea is we should get confused . . ." But out of the exasperation with the city comes a determination to do it themselves. David Tennebaum still admits the city to the workings, but in a secondary manner: "The plan wouldn't cost atmosphere; it would improve the market, if the city would cooperate with us. But we'll change it our way, we're in the business, we know what the people want. We won't build like the Toronto Dominion Centre, a hundred floors up."

Whatever the outcome, it is certain that the businessmen are fighting not only with predictable self-interest, but also with a community feeling quite alien to the disjointed urban colossus around it.

Joe Lottman summed it up characteristically when I asked an unfortunate question about the possibility of the Market being squeezed out:

"Squeeze a grapefruit, you get it in the eye."

story by ray conlogue

ONE BLOCK OF LAND

IN KENSINGTON

by Brian Johnson

THE UNIVERSITY of Toronto is not popular in the community of Kensington. As the university expands westward, creeping dangerously close to the Spadina boundary, Kensington fears for its survival. But one unusual and unsuccessful attempt to expand the U of T was generated not by the U of T administration, but by the university's Students Administrative Council.

And now U of T students are on the black list of the Kensington community leaders.

The reason is a barren, 52,000 square-foot plot of land on the south side of College Street between Lippincott Street and Bellevue Avenue.

The U of T owned the land in trust for the Students Administrative Council (SAC), who had been planning to build a student residence on the site.

For 15 months SAC tried to co-operate with the Kensington Area Residents Association, (KARA) which was planning another development for the site.

Frustrated, impatient, and financially insecure, SAC finally turned its back on KARA in June and secretly authorized the U of T to sell the land to the Toronto Board of Education.

The University of Toronto is one of the bodies most hated and feared by Kensington. The other is the Toronto School Board.

ness from the government and SAC began to look weak in the light of two bad facts:

(1) SAC obtained the land secretly (in order to keep the price down).

(2) Although SAC said it would cooperate with the residents and jointly plan the site, the student council hired an architect, Georges Robb, to draw up detailed plans for the residence.

Robb broke confidence with SAC and published the plans in a professional architectural journal.

KARA and the KURC were furious. Before seeing the journal the Kensington leaders had no idea the plan existed.

BUT NEITHER KARA nor the KURC had ever invited co-operation. "KARA just was not interested in talking to us," says Brian Levitt, who became SAC's full-time director of the housing project in May, 1969.

"They proposed an alternate solution to the problem," he adds. "And when I say 'they', I mean Allan Schwam, the real power-broker in the area. Schwam suggested a deal. He said, 'You give me your land, and we'll put 100 students in this block, 100 in another block, 75 down on Alexander Park, and 69 on Bathurst, and that sort of thing.'"

Allan Schwam, the former President of KARA, is its most influential member.

the SAC block that would receive "special dispensation".

"There was inconsistency after inconsistency," said Levitt. "The people of Kensington were being manipulated."

Each KURC member was to be elected for his own block, but the representative from Block Two, John Moran, lives across the street from the block — on the other side of Oxford Street.

The block-committee meetings for Block Two did not represent the composition of the block:

- Homeowners owned about 2,000 square feet. But minutes for one meeting show only seven out of 24 owners attended. Only 13 of the 24 owners are Portuguese, and about half of them are Portuguese. The Portuguese have little confidence in Schwam and very rarely attended the meetings.

- The U of T owned 33,000 square feet. But it was not invited to any of the meetings except one, and it was refused the minutes.

- Murray Bluestone owned 35,000 square feet. He tried to develop his property for two years but had been stopped by Schwam and KARA. Bluestone was told to tow Schwam's line or face expropriation.

- Imperial Oil owned a gas station on the corner. It was not even consulted. Levitt received a letter from Imperial Oil saying they were not aware that Kenny Wright worked for Cadillac, says Schwam.

Levitt and SAC do not appear to have a full-time job and can be reached at home at any time of the day, according to Peter Marselme.

And Kenny Wright claims he is an airplane salesman and flier.

Although Schwam does not have direct control over the KURC, his henchmen do. When he spoke to Levitt, Schwam made continual references to "the boys" — meaning Ed Clarke and John Moran of the KURC.

Schwam said he hoped to see the KURC take over control of the block meetings from the KARA.

When Ed Clarke, KURC Secretary, met with Levitt, he kept talking about "they" when referring to the people negotiating with Trader's Finance Company over the development of the Trader's block. When pressed to say who "they" were, Clarke replied, "Oh, Berman and Schwam."

Joe Berman is the Vice-President of Cadillac Development Corporation. Trader's Finance Company owns a substantial interest in Cadillac. Schwam held an effective monopoly over planning in Kensington.

BUT SOMETIMES people got in the way. Antonio Vaz, a Portuguese community worker in the area, had frequent run-ins with Schwam.

Levitt and SAC felt they were fighting one man's control of a residents' association that did not represent the community.

They were unable to fulfill their pledge to work with the community — even by working with Schwam.

They considered some drastic alternatives, as they were faced with the financial problem of turning the lot into a park until it was developed.

In his May 27 report, Levitt suggested two possible courses of action. If SAC wanted to continue with the project:

- (1) We must somehow try to get out of paying the money to clean up the lot. Possibly by refusing to do it until we get admission to the block meetings and all other functions. We could also just refuse to do it and absorb a few fines from the city. This would cost less but could tarnish our public image.

- (2) We could say to the city that we want impossible terms for the park, and thus stall the whole matter. This would help tide the matter over to the fall and then we could promise them a skating rink again.

In his report of June 1, 1969, Levitt outlined the final possible courses of action.

He said that SAC could build the project by court order, if necessary, but Kenington. The other is the Toronto Board of Education. Kenington represents both of them for their almost unlimited power of expropriation.

The history of the piece of land and the resulting conflict between the U of T and KARA is one of bad faith and secrecy on both sides.

In the spring of 1968, SAC embarked on the idea of building their own student residence. Then they had the best intentions:

- At that time there was a drastic shortage of student housing on campus, and the university residences that were available charged exorbitant fees and were isolated from the outside community.
- SAC's aims in building the residence were:
- to show that students could plan and operate their own residence cheaper and better than the university administration;
- to alleviate the student housing shortage;
- to break down the barriers between students and the outside community by opening up educational facilities to the community; and just by having students living and working with the community.

The students considered a number of sites and finally decided upon the College Street lot.

In April, 1968, the U of T — with provincial government help — secretly bought the land for SAC.

SAC had decided it would not go ahead with the project without the approval of the residents in the area.

"We wanted to co-operate with the things they wanted to do, and meet the needs of the students and of the residents," said Steve Langdon, who was then SAC President.

KARA also had the word of Premier John Roberts:

"I wish to assure you," he told KARA, "that no final decision will be made on this matter without adequate discussion with you and representatives of your organization."

Meanwhile — KARA and the Kenington Urban Renewal Committee (KURC), a subcommittee of City Council, were planning their own development for the block containing the U of T land.

They considered giving Cadillac Development Corporation the rights to plan and build the proposed development.

The pledges of good faith and open-

Oil saying they were not aware that any redevelopment was being planned for the block. Schwam told Levitt that the President of Imperial Oil was on the Board of Western Hospital, which was wanting to expand into Block Two. He'll go along with us when we need him, Schwam said.

PEOPLE WORKING with Schwam and the KURC had close connections with developers: Malcolm Woods, an employee of the City of Toronto Planning Board, worked with the KURC to develop a plan for the area — the proposal that Cadillac would handle.

Woods spent so much time at Schwam's house that some of the neighbours thought he was a boarder.

His boss Ray Spaxman was unable to obtain information regarding what was going on in Kenington.

Spaxman and another city planner, Peter Marselme, were not allowed to attend the block meetings.

One of Allan Schwam's closest associates is Kenny Wright. They both had a hand in developing Flemington Park. Wright and Schwam worked with Cadillac to develop Kenington, and they are trying to get into Niagara Street development.

While Kenny Wright was on Cadillac's payroll, his father, Percy Wright, sat on the Kenington Urban Renewal Committee, which pushed the Cadillac proposal.

"I felt that both Allan Schwam and quent run-ins with Schwam. Vaz made up a questionnaire to distribute to the residents in the area so that the Planning Department could get an idea of what the people of Kenington thought about urban renewal. Schwam vetoed the idea.

All the KARA and block meetings were held in mid-week. Vaz took a survey that showed 75% of the people wanted the meetings on a Saturday night. Since they worked in jobs like office-cleaning on other nights, they couldn't come to mid-week meetings. Vaz recommended the meetings be held on Saturday nights.

Under Schwam's direction, KARA took no action.

On KARA's recommendation, the City had accepted Vaz as a community worker in April, 1968.

Vaz soon discovered he had been directly employed by a non-existent organization — the Portuguese Social Service Centre. He was told to take all his orders from Allan Schwam, who was then KARA's President.

Vaz struggled to get Portuguese representation on KARA and worked on finding out what the residents wanted from urban renewal.

He developed a program of home-renovation, termite-control, etc.

He also insisted that KARA and the KURC become more responsible to the wishes of the residents.

Schwam opposed Vaz when he started to develop such programs instead of following Schwam's orders.

When alderman Monty Harris asked for an inquiry into the affair, City Council directed the KURC to hold a judicial inquiry. But the KURC — controlled by Schwam — was initially prejudiced.

"So what you had was an inquiry into why he was fired by the body that, in effect, fired him," says Levitt.

"Schwam has got this thing really locked up tight," Levitt adds. What emerges is the figure of a guy who is trying to control a community. He uses his residence in the community (he's lived there for years), his credentials as a 'town planner' to wow the people, and he's also a fairly articulate guy, a real rattle-brouser.

"He plays off the town-planner (Woods) against his boss, gets a hold of the social-worker (Vaz), fires the one he doesn't like — that sort of thing."

ject by court order if the land-holder that U of T (the legal land-holder) would not permit that "for political reasons".

Levitt also suggested SAC could try to assemble the rest of the block and develop the whole block.

Levitt said such a move would be financially impossible and politically unwise, since it would require buying 26 houses. It would also involve rezoning problems.

The only other alternative that would keep the SAC project alive was "to work with Schwam and company".

Levitt discounted that alternative for these reasons:

- Schwam's scheme of housing students would provide adequate accommodation for only about 300 students near the university;
- working with Schwam would violate their written pledge to work with the residents;
- they were unwilling to negotiate at the time;
- "There is a very real possibility that no projects will get started in this area for some years to come because of the situation which has developed";
- with the delays, SAC could lose about $73,000 — money it did not have.

Levitt recommended to SAC that it ask the university and the government to sell the land, and SAC accepted the proposal.

The land was sold secretly to the Board of Education, which will build a school on the site.

SAC SOLD the land secretly so that a private developer like Cadillac would not have access to it, says Levitt.

Schwam, KARA, and the KURC were understandably furious. Their power had been undercut.

The daily press rightfully condemned SAC and declared Allan Schwam and KARA marjors. Critics like James Lorimer, automatically equated them with 'neighbourhood power'.

Two small, powerful groups — SAC and Schwam-and-company have fought out a long battle over a piece of land. Neither group responded to the wishes of its constitutional base. SAC operated quite independently of the students it claimed it was working for, and KARA did not represent the Kenington community.

Meanwhile the people of Kenington were caught in the middle. They had no power over anything that happened.

St. Christopher House: temporary relief or social change?

by naomi ridout

KENSINGTON — colourful and quaint. For many Torontonians, aware that a great city must be cosmopolitan, "the market" with its colourful old houses and open stall shops has become an in-place to love. It gives Toronto an old-world flavor that is very popular with suburban tourists on Saturday mornings.

But just south of Western Hospital, on Wales Ave., is St. Christopher House; a settlement house, the sign that the neighborhood needs help from outside. "St. Chris", a conglomeration of buildings that have seen better days, opened in 1912, when immigrants first started flooding into the area.

Today, the problems presented by recent immigrants remain, compounded by those resulting from rapid urbanization. Despite the external signs of prosperity such as the large cars, and the fact that many families own or are buying their own houses, there is enough real poverty to justify the continued existence of a "neighborhood centre." Problems like overcrowding, heavy mortgage debts, unemployment and language difficulties create cultural and generation gaps, and educational handicaps that stem from a non-middle class, non-Canadian environment.

In addition, the neighborhood as a whole now feels its existence threatened by the probable growth of George Brown College, Western Hospital, and the Spadina Expressway. St. Christopher House is the area's most accessible servant; what does it do to help?

St. Chris' brochure describes a varied program, which looks impressive if you can wade through all the propagand. It includes a large nursery school, a music school ("brings beauty and melody to the neighborhood and over two hundred neighbours"), courses in English and nutrition, sewing classes for adults ("strengthening the family by increasing mother's skills. Can father be far behind?"), art groups ("becoming whole, thoughtful, creative, and caring through the medium of art"), as well as an extensive general program for older children and teenagers. Its facilities are also available for ratepayers and residents meetings.

And so it goes. But underneath the press releases, does St. Christopher House actually serve the community? If the answer to that question is to involve any sort of genuine, permanent change rather than piecemeal, symptomatic relief, the answer is possibly no.

The large nursery school, for example, was run, until recently, almost exclusively on United Appeal grants. Fees were low, but even then hardly anybody paid the full amount.

Then, a couple of years ago, when the money was running out, the City of Toronto was asked to help with financing. In came city money, along with city budget experts and all the red tape that had previously been avoided. Now the fees for five half-days are comparable to Holy Blossom Temple and Hillcrest School!

Of course, few people are really expected to pay that much — all that anyone has to do to get his child in on reduced fees is submit to a means test.

A means test involves far more than just stating the income plus the number of dependents. It means that a raise of 10 cents an hour or a decision to rent an extra room to help with the mortgage must be reported to the authorities, and a new assessment made.

As the former school director commented, "I just could not go to women who are my friends, and say, 'now Mrs. X, tell me exactly how much your husband makes, and how he spends it!'"

As a result, the nursery school, while still pretty full, no longer caters to the poor working man's family. A few people do pay the fees, but primarily the children belong to welfare recipients. Another means test does not mean too much to them any more — they're down as far as they can go, and cannot afford to care about pride.

The music school and the art classes are highly organized and apparently very successful; the kids return year after year, and when they perform in a violin ensemble, folk group, or whatever, it is with an enthusiasm not always visible at expensive private teacher's recitals. Their success could be due in part at least, to the fact that they are independent of the regular social workers. The "music committee" is filled with musicians and interested laymen, with a few representatives from the Board of St. Christopher House.

The house is having a bad time with the teenagers' programs this year. When last year's Athletic Director returned to graduate school, he was not replaced, and the once popular and successful games program is in a state of total chaos. Last July, St. Chris also lost its youth worker, who despite hassles with the administration, was immensely popular with both the neighborhood people and the volunteers who worked under him.

The two new workers, both non-professionals and not very experienced,

Naomi Ridout has worked for two years as a volunteer at St. Christopher House.

who have the sensitive positions of coordinating the teenage boys and girls activities, as yet lack skill and confidence, with the result that fewer teens are now coming to the house.

The teenage program, which should be one of the most important, consists of "club groups" and drop-in centres. The former attempts to get the kids doing things which both interest them and widen their horizons. Too often though, that is not the case.

Outings are curtailed when there is one child who cannot afford a ticket for even the planetarium, because the house does not subsidize tickets. Then the group is forced to remain in the house doing arts and crafts with the few facilities available, or cooking unambitious things like fudge (there is a shortage of cooking utensils).

Drop-in centres seem to be part of the simplistic philosophy that removing the kids from the sources of temptation is the best way to keep them out of trouble. There is little attempt to provide anything concrete, since the trend is to "unstructured" programs.

The crucial difference between a program structured from above and one that is planned by the participants is often overlooked, with the result that most evenings consist of a session in the gym with the basketball, followed by a half-hearted dance. The staff and volunteers are nothing but chaperones, and the drop-in centre is no more than an easy way out of having to come to grips with a situation. Nothing "meaningful" is achieved, but the centre's very existence is supposed to prove somehow that the worker is earning his keep. On an activity report it proclaims for the staff, "Look we're here, we're trying, what more can we do?"

Administrative red tape is no less present in St. Christopher House than anywhere else. For all that it is supposed to be the focal point for the neighborhood, the house is not open on weekends! Volunteers cannot meet their groups on the weekends on outside territory.

The reasons given for this by the program director were that there would be no (paid) staff on duty, so the house could not be held responsible for the children's whereabouts (the "children" in question are thirteen and fourteen years old.) and that if a staff member is not present, no "report" can be made.

The group cannot meet Saturday afternoons, because it is supposed to meet Thursday evenings. It cannot meet both times, because one group cannot have more attention than another!

At no time did the program director actually suggest that it might be better to have the house open on Saturdays (and closed on one weekday, if it is so necessary to adhere to a five day week). In another case, permission for a small group of friends, (about 19-22 years old) to meet on Sunday evenings was refused several times until an ex-staff member was obtained to "supervise" them.

Instances like these (and there are lots more) raise an interesting question — do the staff workers exist for the people's benefit, or do the people, children and adults alike, exist to keep the staff in self-perpetuating jobs?

There are other questions too, that should be asked by all the staff involved in such an agency. For example, do most of the programs even attempt to achieve anything over a long period of time? Or are they there merely to fill in time? The purely negative idea of simply "keeping kids off the streets" persists, but there is no real attempt at achieving anything longer lasting, or even to find out how each other thinks.

The hostility and resentment that exist are not open; perhaps when they were, it was easier for a good worker to see the problems and try and cope with them. Now the problems are subtler but more complex, the hostility has turned in on itself, the resentment is silent, and there is no true communication.

Some people get out, by climbing the accepted steps in the middle-class ladder to success. It's surprising, really, that so many do make it when they are not told how to find the steps. Nevertheless, this allows people to sit back and say, with some justification, that it is possible in free enterprise society for anybody to make good — if they've got the guts. They will also say that the poor always have, and always will exist. When the time comes, they will of course, give painlessly "at the office", safe in the knowledge that their donation will pay professionals to do the dirty work out of sight, without ruining the warm, expansive feeling that is supposedly the joy of giving. That feeling is merely Lady Bountiful, with both the lovely lady and the bounty gone, and is to be replaced by means tests, reports, and red tape. St. Christopher House should not be a part of this.

Its place is neither simply to give symptomatic relief, nor to propagate middle-class values as the only viable alternative, but to provide the residents of Kensington and the surrounding area with the desire and ability to make choices — to know what they want and demand it from everybody.

The election in Ward Six

The residents of Ward Six feel they may be about to lose their front and back porches.

With the Spadina Expressway shovelling more and more traffic into the heart of the city and the University of Toronto peering greedily past its new library, the residents of Ward Six have reason to closely examine the candidates who hope to represent them as aldermen at City Hall.

Incumbent city council members Horace Brown, Michael Grayson and June Marks have each spent at least two terms at City Hall.

The challengers, as of November 17, are: Helen Roedde of the New Democratic Party, Liberals Don Flowers and Peter Stollery, and John Conforzi of the Civic Action Party (CIVAC).

Party politics, a supposed remedy for the traditional divisiveness of city council is already facing a crisis. Stollery and Flowers, although nominally running mates, are campaigning separately, each emphasizing himself as a member of the "Liberal team".

All the candidates say the central issue in the campaign is the survival of the Kensington area, although their proposed solutions vary greatly.

EXPRESSWAYS

All the candidates except Grayson oppose the completion of the Spadina Expressway.

Mrs. Marks, who supported the construction halt and complete review of the plan, says "We have made a mistake which must not be compounded."

Brown agrees: "The Expressway was not people-planned." He favours a high-speed busway along the route which would completely exclude private transportation.

Mrs. Roedde expresses concern for the possible effect multi-lane traffic could have on the garment industry's parking and delivery facilities. If the industry were forced to relocate, large scale unemployment could ensue in the Spadina area.

Grayson, however, argues that Spadina, like York St., will undergo a commercial revival when it becomes a main thoroughfare. But he says his main concern is for a rapid transit system "which was to have accompanied the Expressway and seems to have gone by the board." He also sees groups like the Kensington Area Residents Association as instrumental in helping to explain city plans to residents.

Grayson also favours the extension of Highway 400 through Ward Four to the lakefront.

While all the candidates regard public transportation as an important issue, the two women candidates take the hardest line. Both foresee eventual free city-wide transportation facilities.

THE UNIVERSITY

Says Grayson: "It is time the university ceased to act as a power unto itself."

Most of the other candidates agree.

Mrs. Marks particularly is worried about the destruction of the community surrounding the university and the loss of revenue from unassessed, expropriated lands. She wants city council to set up a special committee to deal with the university's role in the community.

Flowers takes a harder line. "I would like the city to increase pressure on the province to limit by legislation the university's powers of expropriation," he says.

Brown is not so optimistic about the community's power

by karen coulter
and david price

HELEN ROEDDE

MICHAEL GRAYSON

HORACE BROWN

JOHN CONFORZI

TOM PAINE
TOM PAINE
TOM PAINE
TOM PAINE
TOM PAINE

IN CONCERT
THE MOODY
HUMAN SPECTACLES
4-3
AT NOV 2

to effect change. He sees an appeal to the university's "moral equity" as the only hope of limiting expansion. But, he says "so far as I am aware, they don't have any."

Brown and Flowers also disagree over the closing of some on-campus streets in line with university proposals.

Flowers says closing St. George to traffic would help preserve the campus community. He also says overhead walkways could be built as an interim measure.

Brown thinks the city shouldn't go along with the university's proposals. "The city has been damned good to the university," he says.

Grayson proposes that university expropriation plans be submitted to the city for approval, but he did not indict any concrete steps he had taken in this direction while in office.

comes from Conforzi, who says: "I don't think it is fair to the rest of Ontario that a few houses should stand in the way of what is best for the public at large."

HOUSING AND URBAN RENEWAL

"I prefer to try to help people use their own plans to renew their own area than to rip something down and put something up and take something away that's grown and is unique" says Helen Roedde and most of the candidates agree.

Conforzi, though, believes private homes are impractical, serving only to hold together neighborhoods that should assimilate with the rest of the city.

The candidates generally feel renewal should be implemented by a joint effort of the federal, provincial and municipal governments, but Brown says "there is a freeze on urban renewal at the federal level and until the funds are made available, the city is pretty helpless."

Grayson and Conforzi spoke out against outright grants, saying that such a method invites abuse, though Grayson suggests that if a homeowner remained in his house for a specified time, the loan could be written off. Flowers suggests tax-rebates as an incentive for housing rehabilitation.

Brown points out the usefulness of the Kensington Urban Renewal Committee, of which he is a member: "It's the first committee of its kind set up in Canada by a city council where elected members and citizen members are both appointed to the committee by council."

Both Marks and Flowers feel the Kensington Area Residents Association is a good vehicle for bringing housing issues to the attention of Council.

The candidates generally oppose a high-rise policy in housing. Stollery, who lives in an apartment building himself, says "High-rise has been a complete and utter failure for lower income groups. Those cold buildings have not worked. The places are a wreck before they've even been built, because of the coldness of them. These people don't know what it is that they don't like; they just know they don't like it."

Mrs. Roedde, however says there shouldn't be one exclusive approach to housing. "It depends on the group of people they're serving and how well they're planned to meet the needs of those people."

The way to make apartment buildings effective, she says, is through including in their plans facilities for day care. The tenants of many low-cost complexes are couples with young children and often both parents must work to stay together.

"It costs the community more in the long run if families break up and their children have to be taken into care," she argues. "Besides, it's not terribly human. It's better to do anything you can to strengthen the family."

And apartment housing, she suggested, is where many families get their start.

Brown insists on community centers accompanying housing plans and says, "I've always wanted to see St. Christopher House go in the triangle which I added to Alexander Park and be a service both to Alexander Park and to the Kensington Area. I still hope that we can find the three-quarters of a million dollars that's needed to do this."

THE SPADINA EXPRESSWAY

stories by david frank

Back in 1948 a decision to improve and widen Spadina from Fleet St. to St. Clair Ave. at a cost of $3,000,000 was put to the people in a city-wide referendum.

With 66,000 people voting, the plan was accepted by a 2,183 vote majority.

Since then there has been no public participation in the planning of highways and expressways in the city.

Metro Council makes the decisions. The City of Toronto used to have half the seats on this council; now it has about one-third.

The Spadina Expressway was in the works for almost ten years before Metro Council voted on and approved the $154,000,000 expressway and transit system project.

By September, $58,000,000 had been spent on the road. Then a committee decided to hold back a grant until there was public discussion of detailed plans for the route below Eglinton Ave.

The withholding of funds was prompted by charges that the Expressway was poorly planned, that its possible effects had not been considered and that there was some secrecy involved.

Planners admit they have done a poor selling job on the Expressway but say most of the reaction against it has been emotional.

Critics say the Expressway was planned purely in technical and physical terms, without regard to its social or economic effects.

Detailed plans will be presented to the newly-elected Metro council in January.

One out of every ten working people in Toronto may have to look for new jobs if the Spadina Expressway is completed as planned.

Sound ridiculous?

Well, there has been only one study done about what effects the Expressway could have on the whole district south of Bloor St., and it warns that the Toronto garment industry might be forced to move someplace else.

The prediction is based on a fear that the Expressway will increase land values along Spadina south of College St., that rents and prices will soar, and developers will buy the district out.

Redevelopment projects — for offices, for parking lots, for apartment buildings — would spread out on both sides of Spadina, destroying the present character of the area.

And that would mean that the 23,000 people who work in the garment industry, most of them living nearby, would have to choose between travelling to a suburban location for work or giving up their jobs.

But this is all guessing.

The real fact is that city planners have not seriously tried to find out what effects the Expressway will have after it has been built.

The only study which has been done was prepared this summer by the Spadina Businessmen's Association and it says Toronto can't afford to take the chance of destroying the garment industry which it calculates is worth more than one billion dollars to the city.

Critics of the Expressway point to the example of New York, where, they say, the hat industry was destroyed by a poorly planned expressway.

THE SPADINA EXPRESSWAY

If you have a big city, you need a lot of big roads going in and out and around it.

That's the reasoning behind the Spadina Expressway, a $136,000,000 six-mile pavement corridor which will funnel traffic from North York right down to a point one block south of Bloor St. on Spadina Ave.

So far the Expressway has been completed from north of Wilson Ave. to Lawrence Ave. It passes right by the Eaton's - Simpson's - Yorkdale complex which was built on the understanding the Spadina Expressway would be there to bring in customers. Work is almost finished on the section from Lawrence to Eglinton.

And now a big fight is shaping up over whether the last section, from St. Clair to Bloor, should be built.

The controversy is over what the expressway will do to the Spadina area south of Bloor St. and generally to the character of the entire downtown area.

In 1975 — the year the expressway is scheduled to reach Bloor St. — it will double the present amount of rush-hour traffic on Spadina.

The steady tide of traffic it will disgorge each morning and collect later in the day will cause what critics predict will be "the most awful traffic jam in the whole world."

And increased traffic will simply mean there will be a need for more expressways, perhaps including an extension of the Spadina down to the lakefront.

But traffic jams aren't the biggest worry.

The fear is that the Spadina district — the area of small businesses, Kensington Market, working class and immigrant homes — will be destroyed by redevelopment.

With the convenience of the Expressway, Spadina will become a very attractive area. Land values will soar.

People who rent their homes and businesses will be priced out of the area. Real estate agents are regularly canvassing the neighborhood near the proposed end of the expressway and making offers. Eventually the price will be right (after all, it isn't nice to have an expressway in your backyard) and people will sell their homes.

With the Expressway, Spadina will probably become a focus for high rise apartment builders, and for offices, stores and businesses spilling out of overcrowded downtown.

THE SPADINA EXPRESSWAY SQUEEZE

Also, with the number of cars in the downtown constantly growing, there will be need for plenty of parking lots.

And so, Expressway critics say the entire Spadina area is in for a major facelift, including a boulevard down the centre and an end to diagonal parking. And the fear is not unjustified when you consider what Metro Roads Commissioner Sam Cass, whose ideal of a city is Los Angeles, says:

"We are trying to make Spadina Avenue look as much like University Ave. as we can."

But, the reasoning still goes, if you have a big city you need a lot of big roads.

There are almost 700,000 cars in Metro Toronto and they need space.

Defenders of the expressway plan say Spadina will help relieve congestion on Toronto's most heavily travelled roads.

And people opposed to it say the expressway will only create a need for more highways inside the city to handle more traffic — already on the drawing boards are a Cross-town Expressway (at about Davenport Rd.), a Scarborough Expressway and an extension of Highway 400 south to the Gardiner (this latter will destroy some 1500 homes).

Frederick G. Gardiner, Metro Toronto's first chairman, predicts the Spadina Expressway will eventually have to be linked directly to the lakefront expressway that bears his name. (Incidentally, the Spadina Expressway is officially supposed to be called the William R. Allen Expressway, after the second Metro chairman, who served from 1962 until this year).

This kind of pattern is fine with city planners and many politicians who are striving to make the city convenient for car travel.

They say Toronto has one of the most balanced transportation systems on the continent, giving a maximum of choice as to mode of travel and time spent.

No matter how many subways you build, you can't change people, they say.

And so that is why there is probably going to be a subway line right up the Spadina Expressway route — if the TTC can find the money to pay for it, that is.

On Queen St. the streetcars are continually clogged with people; a Queen St. subway has been talked about for a long time and it would be invaluable for Toronto working people.

But it hasn't received much priority.

The only thing that is certain is that the Spadina Expressway system is being built so that people can have "freedom of choice" about how to travel.

People against the expressway are also worried about cars. They are afraid cars could destroy the city.

Spending money on expressways solves nothing, they say, it only attracts more cars, and we run the risk of turning the city into a maze of concrete and parking lots.

We also run the risk of increasing pollution levels, of increasing accident tolls, and of destroying chunks of the city, perhaps including the neighborhoods and small businesses of Spadina.

"IS THE EXPRESSWAY THE MOST EFFICIENT MEANS OF TRANSPORTATION WITHIN THE CITY?"

Ross Mackinnon is a professor in the University of Toronto's Center for Urban and Community Studies. He was interviewed by Varsity reporter Henry Mietkiewicz.

Mackinnon: It depends on the way the city's people want to live. If they show a desire for high-density residential communities, then a subway or bus system is the most efficient. But if they want their own backyard, a suburban set-up, then they must live further from the core. In this case, the automobile serves the purpose.

It could be technologically possible in the future to move traffic faster in the city without expressways by somehow reducing the number of cars on the road. But North America has a love affair with the automobile and everyone wants his own car unless he lives a couple of blocks from work.

Varsity: Have expressways ever internally damaged any other cities?

Mackinnon: Yes, of course. Expressways tend to go through a path of least resistance. They gobble up parklands because there is no human residence there. Then they go to work on stores, houses and recreational facilities.

In the past few years, Reno has been separated by US 40 from its beautiful and torrential

Truckee River; the Jones Falls Expressway has obliterated Baltimore's civic pride, a park designed in a romantic tradition; and a Boston expressway has cut away part of the waterfront which has since gradually died of attrition.

— The Reporter Feb. 8, 1968

Slum area housing goes quickly because the residents are inarticulate and can be pushed around easily. Expropriation is accomplished in the name of urban renewal, and vertical slums are erected alongside the new expressway.

Expressways also divide communities and act as barriers. This makes it very hard for one area to interact with the other.

PISCATAWAY, N.J. Residents of that town didn't object when Interstate 287 split their community in half eight years ago. And they remained generally calm when a state road cut the township into quarters a few years later.

But recently they were threatened with a decision to run Interstate 95 through still another part of town. Piscataway citizens are now strongly objecting to being cut into six parts.

— New York Times Feb. 16, 1969

Varsity: Is there an alternative to cutting right through a city?

Mackinnon: Yes. In Toronto's case, I think that the Spadina Expressway could possibly be rerouted to the west. The trouble is that everyone likes the benefits of an expressway; but nobody wants it in their backyard. A big change in a city always hurts somebody, and it becomes a matter of morality versus self-interest.

If an expressway must go through the city, one could build it below ground level. This would reduce the noise and keep the community together, but the highway would still be a big ditch.

If anybody wants to buy a $1.3 million 960-ft. tunnel that goes nowhere, the city of New Orleans has one available.

Running under the International Trade Center, it was built to link segments of a proposed interstate expressway. But last week, in a decision applauded by architects, planners, and preservationists around the country, Transportation Secretary John A. Volpe rejected the planned highway because of the potential damage to the "historic quality" of the city's famed Vieux Carre, or French Quarter.

Meanwhile, the city is still trying to figure out uses for its tunnel. Local suggestions include converting it into the world's largest wine cellar, or using it to grow mushrooms.

— Business Week July 19, 1969

Elevated highways on stilts are cheaper to build, but they tend to be quite ugly.

Instead of building expressways which cause an influx of people into an already overcrowded central core, it might be more feasible to construct five or six sub-cores based at points of high accessibility.

Varsity: Has a highway or expressway ever completely destroyed a town?

MacKinnon: Yes. A number of hamlets and villages have been wiped out, particularly in the country.

BEDFORD, N.Y. A gargantuan jumble of blasted rock marking the future roadbed of Interstate 87 lies at the bottom of a hill where a town used to be.

Families who thought they were living in the country found themselves drawn into the urban net and battered by the steady din and grit of heavy construction.

The town's residents fought the proposed route and lost. As a result, a 200-foot deep cut has been blasted into the wooded ridge between two wildlife sanctuaries.

The Bedford Planning Board has managed to incorporate into the town's plans recommendations for a house or two and occasional horse farms along Interstate 87.

— New York Times Nov. 18, 1968

Varsity: Can the average citizen do anything to keep from being bulldozed out of the way?

MacKinnon: Yes, but it really isn't as simple as that, because your question implies the following: either the expressway gets built the way the planners want, or it doesn't get built at all. The proper course of action is more involvement in the decision-making process. Politicians must be sensitive to public opinion and set up panels of experts and citizens regarding proposed routes.

WASHINGTON, D.C. Expressway builders who only recently have learned that they cannot blithely bulldoze people out of the way in laying concrete ribbon across the cities, now say they are having to learn an even harder lesson: how to make highways work for people and not against them.

Nearly 350 highway planners who met this week think they may have the answer to a local expressway problem. Instead of smashing a super-highway through the city, indiscriminately scattering people and breaking up neighborhoods, they are attempting to use all the fallow space available near residential areas. The roadway itself would then become the focal point of intricately assembled neighborhoods.

The planners learned that people are not going to let them dictate what kind of community is going to be built; that planning the city is to be done as much on the street corner and in the neighbourhood meeting-hall as in the architects' and bureaucrats' offices.

— New York Times Nov. 17, 1968

MacKinnon: I understand that one of the problems in Toronto is that no such meetings have taken place. It would be to the advantage of both the politicians and the citizens to get together on this matter in order to keep the "disbenefits" as low as possible. A lot can be done regarding exits, interchanges and the effects of the expressway on the people in the streets adjacent to it. Because it's not simply a matter of "build it or don't", the people should get involved.

WASHINGTON, D.C. A regulation by the Federal Highway Administration has been proposed to give the public a stronger voice in the determination of routes, particularly through cities.

The rules would include requirements for effective advance publicity on all hearings, an opportunity for representatives of the public to testify, full consideration of such factors as social, economic and environmental effects of proposed routes, and the publicizing of decisions reached.

The regulation was drafted by Alan S. Bayd, Secretary of Transportation, in response to complaints from citizens' organizations that highways have been routed through communities without sufficient regard for civic, scenic and other environmental considerations.

— New York Times Oct. 26, 1969

KENSINGTON MARKET

THE DEATH OF FETHERLING IN THE CELEBRATED 1959 CANADIAN DRUGSTORE
or
STE. GWENDOLYN'S REVENGE

i discovered it friday,
a 1959 drugstore hidden rite here
in toronto

i 4get exactly where but i cried big soda fountain tears unashamedly wandering among the tampax & toothbrushes
squeezing yellowed penguin paperbacks
2 see if they were real but pushing onward 2 the grill be4 the reaction came

... A SPECIAL OFFER ...

A $132.00 ENTERTAINMENT VALUE THAT COSTS YOU ONLY $2.50

The "ACTIVITY PASSPORT" is a book of FREE PASSES, and discount coupons which invites you to enjoy various entertainment and recreational pleasures around TORONTO. Every establishment that is represented in the "ACTIVITY PASSPORT" has given a written guarantee that each pass will be fully honoured.

Here is an opportunity for you to enjoy A FULL YEARS ENTERTAINMENT for ONLY $2.50 Below is a resume of the tickets that make up your "ACTIVITY PASSPORT".

ACTIVITY	TICKETS	VALUE
Hockey - Maple Leaf Gardens (jr. A)	1	$ 3.50
Skating - Honey Pot	1	3.50
- Uplands Ski Hole	2	10.00
Discotheque - Myrah Bird	1	8.00
- Riverboat	4	10.00
- Speak Easy	4	2.00
- The Onion	4	6.00
- The Ultimate Gramophone	1	2.00
- Soul City	1	1.00
- Picasso Key Club	1	2.00
- The God Pod	1	3.00
Ballroom Dancing - Club Interlude	1	3.50
Theatre - Studio Lab Theatre	1	4.00
- Toronto Workshop Productions	2	8.00
Golf - Forest Hills Golf Club	1	1.50
- Hornby Tower Golf Course	1	2.50
Swimming - Central Y.M.C.A.	2	6.00
Karate - Tsuroka Karate School	1	5.00
Judo - Hatashita Judo Club	1	5.00
Bowling - Oon Mills Bowl, Shea's Bowl	3	.90
Billiards - Embassy, Oon Mills, Broadway	3	4.05
Curling - The Terrace	2	5.00
Horseback Riding - Circle M Ranch	3	7.00
Ice Skating - The Terrace	2	4.00
Sleigh Ride - Central Don Stables	1	2.00
Roller Skating - The Terrace	2	4.00
Bridge Studio - Kate Buckman's	4	18.25
Latin Dancing - Mo Mo's Discotheque	1	2.00

Total Value $131.70

There are just 2500 passports available - Certainly not enough for everyone, so it's advisable that you hurry and get one for yourself NOW!

AVAILABLE AT: ENGINEERING STORES, MILL BUILDING
ERINDALE SAGE OFFICES, ROOM 155
RADIO VARSITY

SCARBORO STUDENT SOC OFFICES, ROOM S421A

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
Toronto Professional Bldg,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 101, Ontario

IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS

Telephone 364-0973

HART HOUSE MUSIC COMMITTEE PRESENTS NOON HOUR CLASSICAL CONCERT

Wednesday, December 3
Music Room, 1-2 p.m.

ESTHER GARTNER, IV Music
1st 'Cellist, U. of T. Orchestra

Pastorale J. S. Bach
Sonata for 'Cello & Piano Beethoven
Fantasia Pieces, Op. 73 Schumann

Caroline Godel, at the piano
Ladies Welcome

THIS WEEK AT SAC

- Tuesday, Dec. 2nd: - Education Commission Meeting
1:00 p.m., SAC Office
- Centennial Film Society - to Discuss upcoming film - all welcome
5:00 p.m., SAC Office
- Union-Mgmt. meeting - open discussion between local 1222 and SAC
4:00 p.m., SAC Office
- Cultural Affairs Commission - discussion on campus pub - also budget allocation
5:30 p.m., SAC Office
- Executive Meeting
6:30 p.m., SAC Office
- Wednesday, Dec. 3rd: - SAC General meeting - housing report
7:00 p.m.,
- SAC lawyers
Alumnae Hall, - Orache report
Victoria College, research groups
- CUG
- Campbell
- AUSC
- Radio Varsity
- Spadina

Thursday, Dec 4th: - Union of Course Unions
1:00 p.m., Hart House

Coming again this year on Dec. 19 - All Oay
SACUS - BACCHUS - FRACCUS
COME ONE, COME ALL
ENJOY - ENJOY - A SAC XMAS PARTY
FREE! FREE!

ROCHDALE IS ALIVE!

We aren't leaving. We have good reasons to stay. Perhaps you have good reason to come.

The cost of residence is reasonable:

Single rooms with community kitchen $70-$73 mo.

Double rooms with community Kitchen $50-$53 mo.

Double rooms with Kitchen in unit $60 mo.

Meals $1.00 or $11.00 the week.

ROCHDALE COLLEGE

come live with us

341 BLOOR ST. W.

921-3168

Pink Whiskers

BOUTIQUES
2200
Yonge St.
at Eglinton

1 Godford Rd.
at Bloor
924-1874

COLONIAL TAVERN

203 YONGE ST.

MILES DAVIS QUINTET

ALL THIS WEEK

SAC discovers irrelevance

McIlwain attacks Abols' SAC leadership

By TREVOR SPURR

The Students' Administrative Council met to justify its existence Wednesday night and wound up hearing a stinging attack on president Gus Abols from Engineering Society president Art McIlwain.

"This could be a really important and a really worthwhile meeting", said Art Moses III UC passionately, as the meeting opened.

Yet two and one-half hours later only aimless discussion had taken place. At this point the chair recognized Wayne Hankey (SGS).

"I've been sitting here doodling and I find I've been writing a hymn from the Mass for the Dead. The line reads, 'this is the day in which the age dissolves in the dust'," he said.

He pointed out there is no debate over ideologies in this year's council and none of the people raising new ideas on campus ever come to SAC meetings.

SHADES OF CUS

"There is nothing happening in SAC this year."

"The proposals being made here tonight are the kind of thing I heard three years ago when the Canadian Union of Students was in the first stage of dissolution," Hankey said.

He was referring to earlier discussion on the need for SAC members to get back in touch with the grass roots.

"This is the cycle inherent in elite organizations.

"I think a certain historical process has happened. That process is over and SAC is now irrelevant," he said.

NEW AWARENESS

"A political awareness has come to this campus. What former councils hoped would happen was everyone would become leftist.

"Well the students have become aware all right, but they have not become pinkos," Hankey continued.

He cited the number of student organizations who stated their various positions at the discipline crisis in September and concluded SAC no longer can speak for the students.

NO FOLLOWERS

"We can't simply produce a policy here and have people follow anymore," he said.

Hankey also used SAC president Gus Abols and the rest of the Executive as an example of why SAC can have no leadership function.

"These elected people are not going to reach any sort of compromise position on an issue.

"They don't work together to create a new analysis. They tolerate each other," he said.

"We are no longer needed structurally or ideologically. We are politically insignificant," he concluded.

SAC POWERLESS

SAC President Gus Abols concurred with Hankey in the belief power no longer rests in SAC.

"Students are no longer apathetic. They're politicized.

"They see SAC as a threat to what they want," he said.

But Abols also believed the council does not have power because its members are split into two factions.

Art McIlwain then rose and laid the blame for SAC's demise on its president Gus Abols.

OUT TO LUNCH

"Without effective leadership from the top of the council there can be no action from SAC.

"If the president is unwilling or unable to formulate ideas SAC can have little power," he said.

"My personal reaction to Abol's attitude towards his council is he is out to lunch," he added.

"Will Mr. McIlwain desist from his personal attack on Abols", interjected Hankey.

McIlwain nevertheless continued, saying he feared the CUG report would die because SAC had lost its leadership function by default.

ATTACKS ABOLS

"It's not because the prerogative has gone from SAC to other bodies but because the SAC president is unable or unwilling to provide the leadership which is necessary," he said.

McIlwain concluded with a plea for unity.

"I see CUG dying. The thing SAC has worked for during the last three or four years and it's all because of petty factionalism.

"Please lets stop this factionalism", he said.

Abols had remained silent throughout the attack on his leadership. He sat staring at the papers on his desk.

"This is the first time the council has really started to talk to each other", he then said

In a statement to The Varsity after the meeting, McIlwain retracted his attack "First of all, I would like to say I support Mr. Abols and the direction of his leadership of SAC.

"I felt that the time had come for an end to the factionalism which has made meaningful actions on SAC's part impossible.

"There is between Mr. Abols and myself no fundamental difference of opinion, but, at least on my part, a considerable amount of respect."

Abols, who had accompanied McIlwain to The Varsity to make the statement, asked if the attacks had been aimed at the entire executive.

"No," replied McIlwain.

"Well, let's go and get the last round at the Bull and Bear," said Abols.

George Murray and Bernie Teitelbaum follow SAC proceedings two weeks ago as Abols and McIlwain confer.

LOW ON BREAD FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS
PRESENTS?

USE YOUR CHARGE -
ACCOUNT AT THE UNIVERSITY
BOOKROOM

BOOKS

On dropping 20,000 pink papers in the real world

Twenty thousand copies of Friday's Community Issue of The Varsity were distributed outside of the university. Commercial distributors dropped 13,000 at houses and schools. We would like to thank the 30 eager people who stood on cold street-corners to distribute the other 7,000. Special commendation goes to Paul Corson who gave one to Gordon Sinclair.

"Yes, it's us again," he told Sinclair. Chuckling.

How was the community issue received?

Someone in Simcoe Hall commented about the colour: "I guess the Varsity is getting ready for Christmas."

Meanwhile we've received some reaction from Kensington itself. Mrs. Dan Martyniuk, whose husband is the Kensington Area Residents' Association president, phoned to say she liked our treatment of Alton Schwom, a long-time opponent of Mr. Martyniuk.

Apart from that, we're still waiting for a reaction from the community. It's a big city, and you get the impression that the 20,000 copies have been dropped down a well.

Here's how one distributor felt:

It's four in the afternoon and I'm standing in front of Eaton's at College and Yonge with 300 copies of the Varsity Community Issue.

Through the cold and monoxide I'm learning why the Spadina Expressway has got this far, and why it will probably reach Bloor after the civic election is over and the candidates have forgotten their promises.

I'm also learning why the university can expropriate all of Kensington and half of Lake Ontario if a feasibility study deems it necessary.

The wrong people are taking the papers from my hand.

It's not that old woman, kids on their way back from hockey practice, and construction workers shouldn't know about the expressway, expropriation and their effect upon the people of Kensington.

It's just that these people aren't in a position to do anything about it. They have no power. If they did the expressway might have never got past the planning stage.

It's the suit-and-tie executives, the suburban mother with her children coming out of Eaton's or getting off the subway, the "silent majority" who have the power. They are the people that William Dennison and Allan Lamport represent.

Few of them are taking my papers. Most either ignore me altogether or dismiss me with frosty stares that say anything distributed for free must be either communist propaganda or just plain crap.

I wonder whether it's my long hair and beard that's turning them off, or is it just that their lives are so oriented towards money that they can't accept someone standing in the cold and getting nothing in return.

Thinking this to be the case, I try a new approach yelling "Find out where your tax dollar is going!" Immediately three businessmen grab copies from my hand saying that it's about time somebody told them.

One man asked me if we had anything nice to say about the establishment for a change. I told him that, if the establishment was against the Spadina Expressway and thoughtless expropriation, then we had something nice to say about them.

Unfortunately, the establishment was throwing the community issue into the trash can. They may be apathetic but at least they're not litterbugs.

jim struthers

the varsity

TORONTO

Editor Reviews Editor Associate Review Editor News Editors City Editors Feature Editor Sports Editor CUP Editor Photo Editor Executive Assistant Advertising Manager Editorial Offices Editorial Phones Advertising Office	Ernie Johnson Larry Moran Jack McCarthy Jim Cowan Glen Meege Louis Eichman Neil Strickley Mary Kate Rowan Paul Carson 923-4053 Sue Rankie Mark Rubin Bernad Kudekai Carol Cooper 923-8121 93 St. George 2nd Floor 923-8741 923-8742 91 St. George 1st Floor
---	--

The Varsity is a member of Canadian University Press which was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in the newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the printed or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campaigns, Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

jean macbubba discovered the real reality of love and it was terrible, barb baked bang-up banana cake, johnson dropped pills all night for a tom said carson as cowan muddled over a story and marshall dillon exited fustled and fastest spurred on kariminitis in the hall as police came thick and fast and pam kleinburger knows the score on rochdale you said dave here is cupseup as snow came in the winniewad there's no tell-tell when'll happen to struthers, do-gooder editor, said mark as he got his hallingworth, it's much cooler outside but good to get back to mae: meggs.

LETTERS

a quill in the hand is worth a bush in the mouth

It was my privilege to be featured in a front page headline in your November 26 issue "Ivey questions student competence to govern at CUG programming meetings." One disadvantage of participation in open meetings is that one can be too readily labelled as a bad guy — or a good guy — on the basis of a brief headline. Some of my colleagues have congratulated me on taking a stand against student participation, and some students have chided me for my lack of trust of students. I am equally unhappy with both of these opinions.

It is probably impossible to counteract the effect of a headline by a letter to the editor, and I usually refrain from trying to do so, but I felt that this time I should take pen in hand (quill, of course). The headline was accurate but incomplete in that I did not single out the student estate. It might more appropriately have read "Ivey questions staff, student and lay competence to govern." I would prefer to be labelled as anti-everybody, rather than simply anti-student, if I am to be labelled at all.

It was my understanding that the purpose of the open meetings of the Programming Committee was to give members of the University an opportunity to discuss the Report with the Commissioners. I asked what I felt to be a fundamental question of some importance, and I believe that the four Commissioners present also felt that it was important, because they each responded to it sensibly and at some length. My question was summarized reasonably accurately in the U. of T. Bulletin as "Would members of the proposed Governing Council be so busy educating themselves about their new responsibilities that the job of running the University would be left to a bureaucracy?" The Commissioners themselves have suggested that they spent a great deal of time educating one another before reaching the stage of producing a consensus report — and members of the Governing Council are not likely to be able to spend anything like the amount of time that the Commissioners did.

Even though I had been an academic staff member in the University for many years before accepting an administrative post, it seemed to take a year or so in such a role before I felt knowledgeable enough to contribute usefully to the deliberations of senior governing councils. While granting the possibility that I am a slow learner, or suffer from an excessive modesty, it is this experience that led me to initiate a discussion of this question.

D. G. Ivey,
Principal,
New College

P.S. Perhaps we should write our own headlines. How about "Quill in hand"?

violent protest

Let's try again. I did describe the glorification of violent demonstrations per se, and the intense factionalism, which have marked the left increasingly in the last four years. I did say that this tendency, a reaction to the non-violent movement of 1956-1963, had reached its high-water mark, and it was time for an assessment. The assessment I attempted was too extensive and too delicate to report in a short news story, or a short letter to the editor. It did not conclude that violent protest would "die out".

Chandler Davis
Department of Mathematics

insulting request

Could we please have more comix? Thank you.

Maurice Saliga (II SMC)

CUG:

'academic freedom' protects interests of faculty only

By HAL WHITE

Hal White is a graduate student and teaching assistant in the Department of Philosophy.

A substantial portion of the Association of Teaching Staff believe that students have no place in decisions on hiring, firing, promotion, and tenure. In the second part of this article I will discuss their arguments. But to lay the groundwork, I will first look at the traditional arguments against public and administrative interference in these and other areas.

The standard argument for professional autonomy or "academic freedom" can be found in many places. In the 1915 Declaration of Principles of the American Association of University Professors, is this version:

(1) One of the main social purposes of the universities is to "advance the sum of human knowledge."

(2) Academics are engaged in a disinterested (e.g. free of economic motives) search for truth.

(3) The public and the administration have special interests, often financial, and their interference would "react injuriously upon the efficiency and morale of the institution."

Therefore any restrictions on academic freedom are not in the interests of the public.

When giving this argument, academics usually mention that with their rights is a responsibility — though only a moral one — to the general public. But they are made quite uncomfortable by the common allegation that they are not only morally responsible, but accountable to the public, since "He who pays the piper calls the tune."

Arthur Lovejoy says: "The principle of academic freedom is . . . a paradoxical one; it asserts that those who buy a certain service may not prescribe the nature of the service to be rendered."

Howard Mumford Jones admits that common man finds the traditional argument "unintelligible". Jones accepts the special relation between the professor and his employers.

"I believe the popular mind can be brought to accept it," he concludes condescendingly.

Let us now examine the standard argument. The most obvious thing that strikes one is that the second and third premises are false. The second premise is false because it is no longer the case that all or almost all academics are disinterested. The 1915 Declaration spoke of the following ideals:

"The proper discharge of this function (seeking and imparting knowledge) requires . . . that the university teacher be exempt from any pecuniary motive or inducement to hold, or to express, any conclusion which is not the genuine and uncolored product of his own study. Indeed the proper fulfillment of the work of the professoriate requires that our universities shall be so free that no fair-minded person shall find any excuse for even a suspicion that the utterances of university teachers are shaped or restricted by the judgment . . . of inexperienced and possibly not wholly disinterested persons outside their ranks. . .

To the degree that professional scholars, in the formation and promulgation of their opinions are . . . subject to any motive other than their own scientific conscience. . . to that degree the university teaching profession is corrupted. . . and society fails to get from its scholars. . . the peculiar and necessary service which it is the office of the professional scholar to furnish."

At the U of T this past year, professors received 1.4 million dollars from the U.S. Department of Defense, that in August, for instance, certain professors were to complete a $161,000 contract, for the Pentagon on "Very-High-Altitude Missile and Decoy Gas Dynamics."

Note that the CUG reported: "Dr. G. DeB. Robinson, Vice President (Research Administration) stated that even the existing rules on processing research grants were at first resisted by some faculty members."

There is even more resistance to the mild reforms suggested by CUG. There will be immense resistance to what I propose now: that professors make public the amount and sources of all outside income.

No "fair-minded" person can doubt that substantial numbers of professors sell their services to "not wholly disinterested persons outside their ranks".

By the standards of the 1915 Declaration, the profession contains substantial corruption, and the public is being cheated. And the profession is not taking speedy steps to remedy that corruption. The stage is set for public intervention.

This brings us to the reason why the third premise is false, why it is false that public or administrative interference always hinders the pursuit of knowledge. Jones gives the basic argument against this premise, though he attributes it to "demagogues" and "democrats".

"We do not permit doctors to practice except when they are licensed by the state, nor lawyers, nor dentists, nor clergymen, nor undertakers. We regulate banks and railroads and insurance companies and fraternal orders by law." Here's the general point:

It is both inevitable and desirable that those whose lives are affected by the practice of a professional group regulate that group in certain ways.

This does not mean that interference is desirable at every point.

The layman, for instance, should not guide the surgeon's hand, but he does have the right to be on a jury deciding a malpractice suit. In general, you can justify interference by recognizing that professional groups, cliques, and individuals have selfish interests which may keep the profession from correcting obvious evils and inequities.

Certain sorts of interference with a professional group help rather than hinder that group in serving its function disinterestedly.

Frank Underhill was correct when he said a profession is granted its autonomy "as a privilege due to the high quality of the service it performs."

The corollary to this (though it would make Underhill uncomfortable) is that defects in the service provided by a profession constitute, prima facie, a basis for public or administrative intervention.

In such cases the burden of proof is on the profession to demonstrate that it can better correct the evil on its own. Academics, of course try to put the shoe on the other (i.e. wrong) foot. They like to argue that they have an absolute right not to be interfered with, and have the outsider try to justify the exception.

We are now in a position to criticize arguments that students should have no say in hiring, firing and tenure. The favorite argument here says that students have no scholarly competence, and that their interference would hinder academic pursuits. We have already given reasons for thinking that even if students had no academic competence, it would not follow that professional pursuits would be hindered by their "interference". But here this anti-lay argument does not apply. For the student is not, in many cases an ignorant layman. If he is an advanced student, he may know more than certain members of his department in certain areas.

Thus the opponents of student power must put their arguments this way: Students are in general less competent to judge scholarship than the faculty, therefore only the faculty should judge. By looking at the form of this argument alone, we can tell that it could never establish its intended conclusion. The fact that one group in general is more competent gives us no reason for holding that only individuals from that group should judge. Some students may be more competent than some faculty.

If a certain level of competence is required of all those in a department who judge, there is no rational basis for including all faculty members without at the same time including some students. (It is assumed here that all faculty members do have a right to judge, that monarchical and oligarchical departments are on the way out.)

Continued on Page 7

Only Canada allows an "academic common market" charge professors

By TOM WALKOM

A talk Friday on Americanization of Canadian Universities was dramatically interrupted by a telephone call from a University of Winnipeg professor just fired for "refusing to teach an American-centred Canadian political science course."

Professors James Steele and Robin Matthews, two Carleton University English professors, who several months ago startled the academic world with a plea to de-Americanize university faculties, were speaking in Convocation Hall.

As chairman Michael Vaughan (SGS) rose to introduce the panel, Matthews slipped off stage.

"I guess he's got a phone call," grinned Vaughan boyishly.

Matthews was not grinning when he returned.

TOO NICE

"We've been too nice about the situation," he said, recounting his phone call from a Prof. Raymond Rogers at the University of Winnipeg.

Matthews described Rogers as "a leading political scientist in Canada — one who has published over 20 articles."

When Rogers last year criticized the number of American professors at U of W, he was "muzzled" by the chairman of his department.

The chairman is an American.

This year, Matthews said, Rogers attempted to revamp

the first year Canadian political science course. The existing course "centred on U.S. problems; four out of five texts were American."

DISCIPLINE THREATENED

Rogers was told by his chairman that "disciplinary steps would be taken" if he did not teach the course as planned.

Rogers, a Canadian who had just come from the U.S. was at the time paying American income tax. As is the custom, he served notice on the university that he was not liable for Canadian income tax for a two year period.

"The university considered him to have resigned because of this notice," said Matthews.

"Yet other professors, who were American citizens and who served the same notice, were not considered to have resigned."

An American citizen teaching in Canada is granted a two year tax holiday from both countries.

ATTACK POLICY

Both Matthews and Steele criticized the Canadian university for choosing Americans over Canadians.

"The international community of scholars is a fairy tale," said Steele. "An academic common market exists in one country only — Canada."

"Every country in the world except Canada makes it difficult for foreign scholars to compete with domestic ones," Steele went on.

"When all countries except Canada discriminate, the result is discrimination against Canadian scholars, Canadian graduates face the toughest market conditions in the world."

In 1961, 75 per cent of Canadian university positions were held by Canadians, while today the percentage is 50 said Steele.

MORE OUTSIDERS

Although the number of Canadians receiving degrees has increased, the number of appointments going to foreigners has accelerated to 86 per cent, he said.

Matthews quoted a letter from a recent Canadian PhD graduate, who found the only possible way to get employment was by "taking out American citizenship and getting a job in Canada; taking a Berlitz crash course in BBC English and getting a job in Britain, or getting a job in an underdeveloped country."

The real problem is not the plight of the university graduate said Steele. "We agree that Canadian academics have no right to run a closed shop."

The crux, he said is that "Canadian particularisms will not be taken into account by Americans, and Canadians will lose control of what is taught, who teaches and who hires."

Matthews and Steele recommend government legislation that requires two-thirds of a university faculty be Canadian.

Dr. Robert Croach, a Canadian on the staff of a New York graduate school explained why Americans come to Canada in the first place.

"The U.S. has many more graduates and fewer jobs," he said.

He cited the Vietnam war, which motivates students to stay in school till they are 26 and gain a PhD, as the cause of the former, and state cutbacks in educational spending as reason for the latter.

NATIONALITY OF TEACHING STAFF

(from the Drache Research Report on the Faculty of Arts and Science) This shows the importation of U.S., British and other professors in the U of T arts and science faculty.

COUNTRIES IN WHICH PHDs WERE EARNED by 1969 arts and science faculty (from Commonwealth Universities Yearbook). This shows the exportation of Canadians for degrees.

Our campuses are "colonial outposts" — Drache

The Americanization of Canadian universities came under fire last Wednesday from George Haggart, a former York University professor, and Dan Drache, author of the controversial Drache Report to CUG.

"Americanization is not simply a fact of numbers," said Haggart, who calls himself "the only unemployed PhD in the country."

"The American approach is much more dangerous than the fact that 'x' numbers of Americans are teaching here," he said.

Haggart said he has no quarrel "with distinguished scholars of any political stripe."

"But we are not bringing in distinguished scholars — just the B.A.'s and M.A.'s," he said. "Last year 1,013 Americans and only 362 Canadian out of a graduating class of 10,000 were hired."

Drache called Canadian universities "colonial outposts," which ten years ago were controlled by the British and are now "a prime channel for protecting American interests."

He quoted figures describing the make-up of the Arts and Science faculty at U of T.

Canadians make up 54 per cent of the faculty, Americans 18 per cent, British 14 per cent, and other 14 per cent. Of the Canadians 37 per cent received their degrees from American schools. (See graphs.)

In hiring procedures especially, this American composition has great influence, said Drache.

Hiring for Canadian universities is done not through open advertising, but through a grapevine method. Faculty members advise the department chairman to hire people with whom they have a personal knowledge or acquaintance.

This leads to an acceleration of American teachers, said Drache.

"Fifteen per cent of Americans here in political science came because they couldn't find jobs in the U.S.," said Haggart. "American professors coming to Canada gain a two year tax holiday, too."

One professor was absolved from the U.S. draft when he came to U of T because his teaching in Canada was in "the national interest," said Haggart.

photo by Errol Young

About 150 candle-bearers marched from Convocation Hall to City Hall Friday to mourn the civilian dead in the Biafran war. In Nathan Phillips Square the mourners were addressed by Dr. Samuel Imiku, Biafran chairman of Rehabilitation Commission and Stanley Burke, broadcaster turned orator, who told the chilly crowd "there is a ground-swell in Canada which is being felt in England where people are saying 'This bloody war has gone on long enough.' " Skaters on the City Hall rink were unconcerned.

academic freedom

Continued from Page 5

Another point that should be raised here is that competence plays less of a role than is commonly admitted in such things as hiring and promotion. Because of specialization, faculty members within one department are often judging a man's performance in an area they know almost nothing about. The student, in this case would be at no special disadvantage if he knows nothing about the area either. And he may, of course, have specialized in that area himself, though no faculty members in his department have.

Another popular argument against student participation is that students have less at stake (careers, etc.) and should not judge.

The fallacy of this argument is that it turns what is usually considered a disqualifying factor, into a requirement — namely, interest.

Because academics have professional and economic interests involved, they are supposed to be better judges. We are supposed to believe that academics do not blackball and back-stab and aggrandize themselves when their interests are at stake. I suggest that members of departmental cliques or monoliths may be poorer judges than many of their students.

The last argument has a stench to it, though it is often heard: Students on personnel committees would introduce political considerations into academic matters, etc. etc. One is supposed to consider the absence of radicals in tenured positions as due to Providence or the "law of supply and demand" or similar bullshit.

This argument is evidence of an almost pathological inability to distinguish how the world is from how one might like it to be. A university in which political considerations play no part has never existed.

The faculty's resistance to student participation is an attempt to preserve the status quo of scholarship — in itself a conservative, political act.

We have a political struggle between students, who wish to change the form and content of present scholarship, and the faculty, who do not.

HART HOUSE 50

UNDERWATER CLUB
INNERSPACE SEMINAR
Tonight, Debates Room, 7:30
SURGEON-COMMANDER KIDD
Presenting new research on Decompression Phenomena
Ladies Welcome

NOON HOUR FILMS
Today and Thursday
East Common Room, 1:10 p.m.
Quiet Social Comments:
ONCE UPON A PRIME TIME
73 SKIDOO and TOYS
Ladies Welcome

JAZZ CONCERT
Tuesday, December 2
THE SURVIVAL JAZZ QUINTET
East Common Room, 12-2 p.m.
Ladies Welcome

CLASSICAL CONCERT
Wednesday, December 3
Music Room, 1-2 p.m.
ESTHER GARTNER, 'Cellist
Ladies Welcome

CAMERA CLUB
Wednesday, December 3
Club Rooms, 1:10 p.m.
8x10 BLACK AND WHITE
Maximum — 4 Prints
Judge: MR FRANK ROYAL

STEAK & CHAMPAGNE
AT THE
NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL
Tickets on Sale now
from Hall Porter &
Undergraduate Office.
$17/couple

enter Free! DANCE MARATHON
At BAZAAR '69
SUNDAY, DEC. 7
12 Noon - 11 p.m.
ST. MICHAEL'S MARKET
FRONT & JARVIS
$100's in prizes

(PLEASE PRINT)

NAME: _____

ADDRESS: _____

AGE: _____ PHONE: _____

MALE FEMALE

I hereby give my consent for the use of any publicity photographs which may be taken during the marathon.

Send application form to: BAZAAR '69 Signature
c 31, 223 Church St., Toronto 9 Ontario PHONE: 966-4781

NOW AVAILABLE

S.C.M.
CHRISTMAS CARDS

Silk screened
Original Designs
Limited Edition.

S.C.M. Office
Hart House

St. Michael's College
Teach-in
on CUG

Thursday, December 4
and
Friday, December 5
STUDENT - FACULTY CENTRE

bitchy old 1959 waitresses flat footed in 1959 brown & white saddle oxfords
(1 rather kind, 1 tuft; like cop interrogation team)
& i lost control of myself in a regression of greasy hamburgers
& chocolate milkshakes multitalty

& the portrait of the queen was faded & stained i turned rack of dusty sunglasses old teen type magazines conjured golden age of modern music beebop voice staggering not kodachrome postcards of provincial parliament

i craved plomaine pie
i cry even now @ olden golden radio record programmes
the meat loaf yet moltons me 2 come

!CONFEDERATION IS PRESERVED!

i have found the bicultural drugstore of my dreams @ popular prices
w/ translation in 2 moon language on facing pages

sperm oil wells out of my mouth in greasy spoon ecstasy
i crawl into some strange rubber instrument & stay there FOREVER

— Doug Fetherling,
THE DEATH OF FETHERLING IN THE CELEBRATED 1959 CANADIAN DRUGSTORE,
published by House of Anansi, 1968

CONTEST

In honour of the demise of Mac's The Varsity is sponsoring a contest. Entries must supply a suitable outline to go with this picture. Mail or bring to 91 St. George. Answers will remain confidential until they have been judged. Then they might be published if the decision of the judges is Gallus.

MACDONALD

The fickle finger of expropriation will claim another victim as MacDonald's restaurant-cum-variety store closes in a couple of weeks. The area will be used for the new research library.

Mac's, on Hoskin near St. George, has served the university community for 33 years and many of its customers are downright annoyed to see it go.

Ken Fisher, a graduate student in zoology and a Mac's customer for some six years, said the closing would be "a hell of a nuisance" because the store "served a real need." Languages professor Ermio Neglia, a newer customer said that he "liked the place" and that it was very convenient.

Mac's started back in 1937 when a young pharmacist named E. S. MacDonald opened a small drug store and restaurant. After the war the restaurant and pharmacy facilities were doubled and business boomed.

At the time St. George St. was lined with fraternities and boarding houses and, as Mr. MacDonald recalled, "meet you at Mac's had some meaning then."

On football days, students swarmed into Mac's like bees in a hive and the store was as much a part of university life as books and skipping lectures. After the game students returned to Mac's to gather supplies for the parties that followed — whether the game was won or lost.

In those days you could get a full course meal for 25 cents and the atmosphere was as lively as a barrel of students. Today the prices have inevitably changed, and the atmosphere is need subdued. Students eat their chips and drink their shakes as before, but there is no boisterousness and to most, Mac's is just another building on campus.

Some of the staff at Mac's have worked there for some 20 years and are leaving the area with mixed emotions. Sadie McNeill, a waitress for the past six years said, "I'm going to miss all those saucy little boys and girls" and Mrs. Corkun, her co-worker said that "most of them were quite nice."

From the start the store was student oriented, and its "best-selling" products reflect this. For example, piles of tooth-paste tubes are sold while baby bottles gather dust on the shelves. Mac's never discriminates against any of its customers, but when it comes to bubble gum, priorities are priorities — graduate students get "double-bubble" while undergrads have to settle for just plain "bubs". And the amount of bubble gum sold is unbelievable.

MacDonald could not recall any really unpleasent experience with students throughout his long stay. He chose to trust them and until last week even cashed their cheques on the presentation of an A.T.L. card.

His association with the provincial government, however, has been less pleasant. He has been expropriated three times, only to have the notice rescinded or delayed by the government. After the first notice he cleared his dispen-sary but did not refurbish it again because it was simply too expensive. On the whole he was left, as he said, "hanging for 13 years" not knowing whether to renovate or pack up and go.

He feels no bitterness however, and regards leaving with nostalgia and realism. Nostalgia, because he has spent more than three decades serving the university and the neighbourhood. And realism because he recognizes that things are not what they used to be and "Mac's has served its purpose."

Indeed it has.

INSTITUTE FOR THE
HISTORY AND PHILOSOPHY OF
SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

"Historical Relations Between Science and Technology" by Derek J. de Solla Price, Avalon Professor of the History of Science, Yale University.

3rd December 1 10 p.m. Room 202 McLennan Laboratory
(New Physics Building)

Sponsored by the Varsity Fund. All members of the University Community are invited.

CAREERS AT CGE

for

Engineers and Science Majors

Canadian General Electric's GRADUATE ENGINEER DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM provides an avenue of entry into careers in Information Processing, Manufacturing, Marketing, Research, Development and Design, and Employee Relations.

There are continuing opportunities for professional development. The broad diversification of the Company and its decentralized organization provide a dynamic environment for self-development and the opportunity through your career to move not only across functions,
but also between product businesses.

Company recruiting officers will visit your campus to conduct interviews on:

DECEMBER 11, 12, 13

CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC

CIA detains Sewell-late for HH debate

The guest of honor was detained by the CIA.

John Sewell, candidate for alderman in Ward 7, was the special guest at the 20th Hart House debate on Thursday evening. Sewell's previous engagement with the Regent Park Community Improvement Association (RPCIA) had run overtime.

He arrived just in time to hear Peter Kent's summation for the ayes on the motion: "In Toronto, money is worth more than people and this house regrets it."

Sewell, a graduate of the University of Toronto Law School, was a founding member of the Toronto Community Union Project. He has spent the past three years as a volunteer community organizer in Trefann Court on a weekly salary of $50. Last October, the SAC voted to support his campaign with a $300 grant to help defray expenses.

In a brief address following the debate, Sewell said: "The campaign is being fought on the issue of citizen participation. It is the only way to fight money and power." He is, however, pessimistic about the prospects for change.

With increasing violence in U.S. cities, Toronto is fast becoming an ever more popular convention centre. "The municipal and provincial governments are in league to encourage this new trade by building a downtown airport and eliminating houses from the city's core," says Sewell.

He predicts that the abolition of the Board of Control will lead to a lot of political backscratching in the bid for the four executive positions on city council. "Any chance of a maverick being elected will be scotched," he says.

The debate earlier in the evening was a lively exchange of insults and oneupmanship.
Alan Bowker (SGS) and Peter Kent (I Law), for the ayes, roundly defeated Gary Segal
(II Law) and Ted Rotenberg
(II Law) 32 to eight. Bowker concluded the evening, observing that perhaps next time Mr.
Speaker should pick his notes more carefully.

Faculty parity debate continues

Academic Freedom and Scholarship are alive and well and hiding in the Arts Faculty Council.

The Council decided Wednesday that they would not be hasty in coming to a decision on the staff-student parity issue.

Prof. W. H. Nelson, who presented the motion to the council, said, "it is not my purpose to reject student participation in our affairs or to reject student participation in department affairs and committees."

Nelson said he did reject staff-student parity in department government affairs. The issue of parity became a central one because of student pressures for equality within the community.

But said Nelson, equality is not the same as parity.

Prof. J. M. Rist argued that if students were given parity on hiring and firing committees political commitments might be introduced.

It might be, said Rist, that a professor's ideology would be the basis for the student's choice.

Bob Barkwell, SAC vice-president told the Council that the question of student participation is one of power.

"Student's have the right to make decisions over things that affect their lives," said Barkwell.

"If the faculty of the university fail to recognize that students have the right to participate in decisions that effect their lives then students will organize to get that power."

After two and one half hours of debate the Council adjourned promising to return and continue at their earliest possible convenience.

29 arrested at UCLA for short sit-in

LOS ANGELES (CUP-CPS)
— Twenty-nine UCLA students have been charged with conspiracy and kidnapping after a sit-in which held an administrator prisoner for less than two hours. If convicted they face possible life sentences.

The students, members of the SDS and the Asian Radical Movement, were protesting the firing of a black cafeteria worker who allegedly took an unauthorized coffee break.

Charles Bargaineer, the worker who was employed as a busboy, had reportedly been asked to continue working and take his break later because of unusually heavy business
October 6, the first day of classes.

When he refused, his supervisor George Leshefka fired him. Leshefka refused comment on why Bargaineer was fired, saying SDS has "blown this thing completely out of proportion."

The students said racism was behind the firing. Laura Ho, Chairman of ARM, said Bargaineer was fired "because he spoke out, he fought back against the exploitation, repression and racism in food services".

The students had gone to the office of Associated Students executive director Adolph Brugger the afternoon of November 19 following a noon rally.

The food services are part of the Associated Students. The students negotiated throughout the afternoon, with Brugger offering to rehire the worker with back pay pending a hearing by a disciplinary board.
Although there have been protests for over a month, this was the first mention of a board to hear the charges.

The students turned down the offer, demanding Bargaineer be rehired without qualification. They voted to stay until the demand was met and barricaded the office about 7 p.m.

All agreed that Brugger was not threatened or hurt in any way except that he was not allowed to leave his office.
Twenty-five UCLA campus police assisted by 20 Los Angeles police arrived at 8:15 p.m., and after issuing two warnings that students were violating the law, broke down the barricades and arrested those inside.

HART HOUSE

NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL

- * JIMMY MACDONALD
- * ALLAN WOOD
- * STEAK DINNER AT MIDNIGHT
- * TOAST THE NEW YEAR IN WITH CHAMPAGNE
- * Tickets, $17/couple from
* Hall Porter & Undergrad. Off.
- * THE MAGIC CYCLE
- * ALEX RAGTIME REED

Would World War II have started if someone had talked to Hitler?

By JIM STRUTHERS

If the right person had talked to Adolph Hitler, Sirhan Sirhan and Richard Speck, at the right time, there would have been no World War II, and Robert Kennedy as well as eight Chicago nurses would be alive today.

This is the firm conviction of Dr. Charles Mercieca, international president of the International Association of Educators for World Peace, who has been in Toronto for the past ten days attempting to establish a chapter of his organization at this university.

"If we could have had a chapter in Los Angeles and talked to Sirhan about politics telling him that no matter who was president the policy of the U.S. towards the Middle East would not change he might not have killed Kennedy," said Mercieca.

A professor of educational philosophy and sociology at Alabama A and M University, Mercieca formed the association over a year ago with the hope of promoting peace through just such a personal approach.

"Every problem we have in the world today starts in the mind of one person. Consequently if we approach a person who is a potential destroyer of mankind, we could avert a world disaster," he explains.

END VIOLENCE

The aim of the organization is to establish chapters in every conceivable city and university campus throughout the world with the hope that eventually every potential murderer, assassin, and fanatic would be approached by a member and logically convinced that his planned violence would be detrimental to himself as well as the rest of mankind.

Although there are now chapters in over 30 countries including the USSR, East Germany and Czechoslovakia, the 500-member association still has a long way to go.

Each local chapter meets once a month to discuss some family or community problem.

McGill Senate vetoes student constitution

MONTREAL (CUP) — The McGill senate dealt a stunning blow to the autonomy of the campus student council Wednesday, refusing to ratify the students' new constitution which was overwhelmingly adopted in a student referendum last March.

If the senate had approved the constitutional amendments it would have been the last time the university's highest academic body would be called on to examine the document which governs student affairs — and therein lies the problem.

The new constitution would delete the clause requiring amendments to be ratified by the senate: Thursday the senators insisted

"Then steps are outlined in how one can help his brother, cousin, friend or next-door neighbour that has fallen or is about to fall a victim of an involved problem. This method of approach will be an initial step toward the creation of a global family community that would eliminate hatred and abolish evil," states the organization's newsletter.

Mercieca is not dismayed by the massive amount of organizing necessary to achieve that goal.

UNIVERSAL PLANS

"It will take four to six generations before our universal plans will be felt everywhere," he cheerfully predicts.

Mercieca's approach of promoting peace by convincing potential criminals that their violent plans are unwise is unique to say the least. But then so is the professor. He is firmly convinced that murderers such as Richard Speck and Sirhan Sirhan were not insane.

"I believe that in any kind of murder that takes place, the individual murderer is perfectly sane," Mercieca explains.

"Richard Speck had something to gain from his murders and that was pleasure. He was a sadist. But you can't call a sadist insane. He wanted pleasure through pain just as the Mafia wants pleasure through money."

Mercieca added that had he been able to talk to Speck before he committed the murders, he could have convinced him to change his plans.

NO MISERY

"I would have shown to him how a person could achieve his pleasure without incurring misery to himself or others."

Mercieca's belief in the rationality of murderers is the reason for the existence of the IAERP.

"We are all potential delinquents. We are all potential assassins. Thus we want chapters in every city so we can spot individuals who are potentially destructive."

The professor emphatically discounts the typical psychological explanation for the Richard Speck type of murder.

"If a psychiatrist says that these type of people are momentarily insane at the time they commit these murders then I say that that psychiatrist was momentarily insane at the time of saying that."

ADMIRE DE GAULLE

Mercieca's "person to person" approach to peace carries over into his efforts to expand IAERP's membership. He is an ardent admirer of Charles de Gaulle's strategy of making friends and enemies of the right people. And although they are few in number, people hostile to the organization do exist.

Dr. Charles Mercieca

"We do find some people trying to do something good for mankind and when they find out about our organization it makes them panic. They do not say it but it is crystal clear that they are jealous. These people, for reasons of envy and hate try to destroy what we do," Mercieca said. He did not say who these enemies were.

For the future the professor plans to, "just keep on travelling, building new chapters and strengthening old ones."

If you are interested in joining the IAERP Dr. Mercieca returns to Toronto on Dec. 19.

He'll be glad to talk to you in person.

POOR STUDENTS

Low on bread for Christmas presents? Cheer up!

The Textbook Store has gifts you can afford

Inflatable Zodiac Cushions

Cedar Mounted Prints (looks good, smells good)

Silk screened, hand finished Linen Place Mats

Records (the new Donovan)

Books (e.g. The Impacted Lower Third Molar $1.98)

Starts Wed. November 26 and if you're really desperate, just say "Charge it!"

THE TEXTBOOK STORE

SAILORS

On Tuesday December 2nd, there will be a meeting at 7:30 p.m. in the Music Room of Hart House. Racing Films, constitution, spring schedule. Come on out and see what's happening.

The Two hijacked Israeli Passengers are still being held captive in Syria!

The Ad-hoc Free the Passenger Committee will hold a meeting Monday, December 1st

1:00 p.m.

Sidney Smith Room 1084

Give us a chance to let our hair down, too.

We're not as square as you think! Behind our seemingly straight-laced image, there throbs some pretty way-out projects. And people.

Alcan is involved in many unexpected areas. Because we do a lot more than just produce aluminum. We and others try to find new uses for it.

For example, one new use that came to our attention was developed in Belgium and refined by a Montreal artist. Through a process called Anochrome, he "paints" on specially prepared aluminum panels. The resulting work of art has a water-colour effect with unusual depth and perspective, and endless applications in art and architecture.

And that's just one of the exciting new developments in aluminum.

Alcan researchers and scientists are continually searching for better ways to do things with aluminum. And it's not always easy. Often they have to struggle for years to find ways of making their ideas come to life.

So you see, they aren't the only ones who have to cope with hairy problems.

ALUMINUM COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD.

SINGERS

(especially men):

A few parts are still open for the PLS February production of the FLEURY Play of Herod, to be directed by David Klausner. Auditions will be held in the Edward Johnson Bldg. Room 116 Monday (today), 5-7 p.m. Please bring any prepared item.

CLASSIFIEDS

TYPING (theses, essays, notes, charts, English, French, other languages) Mimeographing electric typewriters. Mary Dale Scott (M. Dawes) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225. 922-7624

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet. The Day you buy a diamond! H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416. 921-7702

SALTY DOG Discotheque will rent premises Monday to Thursday, day or evening. For information call A. Curry 364-7060 or 633-2677

EMPEROR JONES reigns at Hart House Theatre Dec. 4, 5, 6 8:30 p.m. Tickets at Lt. Rectory Theatre $1.50

ESSAYS, Theses, typed professionally on electric machine. Paper supplied, 30¢ per page. Close to campus, 75 Madison Avenue. Phone 922-8564 after six. Ask for Loree

COUNTER HELP needed 2 to 5 days per week, noon to 2:00 p.m. Bloor University Area. Pay $3 plus lunch per day. Phone 445-0040

FREE XMAS MONEY — Quiet University Prof. will rent modern apt. over Xmas vacation. Write full details to Prof. Jones, Saint Mary's University, Halifax, N.S.

FAST ACCURATE Home typing — Mrs. Linda Flood — 884-6526. Keep this name and number for future use.

APT. TO SHARE — Male — Student or staff — Mostly furnished — Available immediately. Call Bruce 787-7625

EXECU-SEC SECRETERIAL SERVICES — Public Stenographers. Essay, Theses — top quality intelligent typing. IBM Executive and Selectric Typewriters. Mrs. Walker 449-7077 (days) 449-3744 (evenings)

TYPING: Never missed a deadline yet! Call anytime 465-3141

SPEAK YOUR MIND on Anthropology in Anthropology Opt. Newsletter. Most opinions and articles welcome. Submit before Wed. Dec. 3rd to Sid Smith 1037

ROOM & BOARD Males — on campus 350 Huron St. Apply at house

LOVERS OF MUSICKE: An opening in a thoroughly modern 3 bedroom apartment equipped with modern harpachord, clavichord, harp and recorders, subway convenient. Call Jim at 762-1441

APARTMENT FOR RENT — Rochdale 1 bedroom self-contained $140/mo. Unfurnished. Bob or Omar: 925-7250

SKIIS — FOR SALE — fiberglass, Kneiss white str. with Simples toe-piece, good condition, call 622-2404

INTERESTED PARTIES would like to contact Society dedicated to redeeming the name of King Richard III of England. Call the Graphic Artist — 920-8328

CHRISTMAS TREE is coming! Hart House Dec. 10

TYPING: ENGLISH, FRENCH, Fast accurate service on IBM Selectric by experienced typist two blocks from campus, 177 St. George St. 929-5370. Call before 6, low rates

JAPANESE: Tutor wanted for beginners. Phone 249-0623 before 6:00.

TYPING DONE — for fast efficient service phone 769-6065

LDST: Blue patterned silk scarf on Nov. 21. Sentimental value. Please return to Chris. Room 3048 Wilson Hall or phone 244-4512 after 7. Reward

3 GIRLS WANTED to join a household at 35 Madison Ave. 1 place available immediately, 2 more on Jan. 1. Call 921-4970 or drop in at 35 Madison

DIAMONDS, RUBIES, SAPPHIRES, emeralds, opals — certified quality in unusual designs. Remarkable new merchandising method saves you more money than you spend. Toronto Jewellery Exchange 21 Adelaide W. 368-4466

CHEMISTRY TUTORING by OCE Type A' Chemistry grad for 1st year A & S, and Eng. Reasonable. 72 Walmer or Message CAPOOR 922-5616

The University College Players' Guild

presents

EMPEROR JONES

by Eugene O'Neill

directed by Mark Manson

Hart House Theatre

December 4, 5, 6 8:30 p.m.

Admission $1.50

VARSITY ADVERTISING DEADLINES

MON. PAPER — THUR. NOON
WED. PAPER — FRI. NOON
FRI. PAPER — TUES. NOON

COPY SHOULD BE TYPED

DELIVER TO
91 ST. GEORGE

BasketBlues off to slow start

By PETER WHITE

It was only an exhibition game but oh my! — the Basketball Blues are not soon likely to forget it!

They were pasted but good on Friday night, losing 81-56 to the Scarborough Bo-Peep Restaurateurs (yes, basketball's their game) a lion of a team with a pussy of a name, in a game played out yonder at Winston Churchill Collegiate.

This defeat was especially disappointing to those associated with the team after last week's close 73-63 loss to the YMHA which had been a somewhat encouraging opener.

However, the Peepers are a top senior team led by several past Varsity gunners including Jim Holowachuk one of the big Hart House Names of recent years.

Blues shooting and ball handling were grim but the unhappiest weakness was rebounding where the Blues, outmuscled and undersized offered little opposition particularly on the offensive board.

Other aspects of the game will probably fall in place, but if the Blues let their lack of height get the best of them, it will be a long season. Coach McManus has introduced a fast break offence which should help.

This game offers little margin for either team, or individual praise, but for the record Toronto fans can expect to see exciting basketball this season.

This week-end will be a busy one for the Blues with night games — at Ryerson Friday and York Saturday. So give yourself a break, and join the growing cast of Varsity Basketball nuts! A cheaper thrill you will not find anywhere!

Blues scoring: Hadden 12, Katz 12, Markowsky 8, Braid 8, Stevens 4, McNaughton 4, Barker 3, Boston 2, I. Betcherman 2, Sickle, M. Betcherman.

SwimBlues impressive at Relays

Varsity swimmers captured six of eight events at the O.Q.A.A. Invitational Relay meet Saturday evening at Etobicoke Memorial pool.

The meet, conceived three years ago as low pressure early season competition, has now developed into a highly competitive event.

McGill took the first event, the 400 medley relay on a Toronto disqualification and Western took the 300 Breaststroke Relay.

Toronto swept the other six, the 400 crescendo, 400 Individual Medley, 300 Back, 200 Free, 400 Breast—Fly and 400 free relays. In addition to the six firsts, Toronto scored two seconds and four thirds.

The most exciting for spectators was the 300 Back relay. McGill seeded first spotted Johnston, McGuire and Hawes against Toronto's Bryon, Twohig and Shaw. A full body length separated Shaw from Hawes as the last leg started, but Jim caught Hawes on the third turn and won by three-tenths of a second.

The freestyle events proved to be the most important to the Toronto fans. McGill, traditionally strong in freestyle were challenged by several new recruits and Blues swept all three freestyle relays with Theo Van Ryn, Doug MacIntosh, Mike Guinness, John Twohig and Jim Adams.

Sports
can't count

SCHAUM'S
OUTLINE
SERIES

Theory and Solved Problems

ADVANCED CALCULUS
including 923 SOLVED PROBLEMS

ANALYTIC GEOMETRY
including 378 SOLVED PROBLEMS

BASIC EQUATIONS of ENGINEERING SCIENCE including 1,600 BASIC EQUATIONS

CALCULUS
including 1,175 SOLVED PROBLEMS

COLLEGE ALGEBRA
including 1,940 SOLVED PROBLEMS

COLLEGE CHEMISTRY
including 375 SOLVED PROBLEMS

COLLEGE PHYSICS
including 625 SOLVED PROBLEMS

COMPLEX VARIABLES
including 640 SOLVED PROBLEMS

DESCRIPTIVE GEOMETRY
including 175 SOLVED PROBLEMS

DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS
including 560 SOLVED PROBLEMS

DIFFERENTIAL GEOMETRY
including 250 SOLVED PROBLEMS

ELECTRIC CIRCUITS
including 350 SOLVED PROBLEMS

ELECTRONIC CIRCUITS
including 180 SOLVED PROBLEMS

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA
including 2700 SOLVED PROBLEMS

ENGINEERING MECHANICS
including 461 SOLVED PROBLEMS

FEEDBACK & CONTROL SYSTEMS
including 580 SOLVED PROBLEMS

FINITE MATHEMATICS
including 750 SOLVED PROBLEMS

First Yr. COLLEGE MATHEMATICS
including 1,650 SOLVED PROBLEMS

FLUID DYNAMICS
including 100 SOLVED PROBLEMS

FLUID MECHANICS & HYDRAULICS
including 475 SOLVED PROBLEMS

GENERAL TOPOLOGY
including 550 SOLVED PROBLEMS

GENETICS
including 500 SOLVED PROBLEMS

GROUP THEORY
including 600 SOLVED PROBLEMS

LAGRANGIAN DYNAMICS
including 275 SOLVED PROBLEMS

LAPLACE TRANSFORMS
including 450 SOLVED PROBLEMS

LINEAR ALGEBRA
including 600 SOLVED PROBLEMS

MACHINE DESIGN
including 320 SOLVED PROBLEMS

MATHEMATICAL HANDBOOK of Formulas and Tables

MATHEMATICS OF FINANCE
including 500 SOLVED PROBLEMS

MATRICES
including 340 SOLVED PROBLEMS

MECHANICAL VIBRATIONS
including 225 SOLVED PROBLEMS

MODERN ALGEBRA
including 425 SOLVED PROBLEMS

NUMERICAL ANALYSIS
including 775 SOLVED PROBLEMS

PLANE GEOMETRY
including 850 SOLVED PROBLEMS

PROBABILITY
including 500 SOLVED PROBLEMS

PROJECTIVE GEOMETRY
including 200 SOLVED PROBLEMS

REINFORCED CONCRETE DESIGN
including 200 SOLVED PROBLEMS

SET THEORY
including 530 SOLVED PROBLEMS

STATISTICS
including 675 SOLVED PROBLEMS

STRENGTH OF MATERIALS
including 425 SOLVED PROBLEMS

STRUCTURAL ANALYSIS
including 200 SOLVED PROBLEMS

TEST ITEMS IN EDUCATION including 1,600 TEST ITEMS

THEORETICAL MECHANICS
including 320 SOLVED PROBLEMS

TRANSMISSION LINES
including 165 SOLVED PROBLEMS

TRIGONOMETRY
including 600 SOLVED PROBLEMS

VECTOR ANALYSIS
including 480 SOLVED PROBLEMS

including

A & A BOOKS & RECORDS
Most Complete Selection of Long Playing Records - Anywhere!
351 YONGE ST. PHONE 364-6271
HOURS 7 A.M. - 12 P.M.

SPECIAL EXTENSION

TO ENROLL FOR YOUR

UNIVERSITY HEALTH AND ACCIDENT PLAN

THREE PLANS TO CHOOSE FROM

PLAN I

EXTENDED HEALTH CARE

NO DEDUCTIBLE AND ACCIDENT BENEFITS

PLAN II

OVERSEAS AND AMERICAN STUDENTS

STUDENTS ON STUDENT VISA

PLAN III

NEWLY LANDED IMMIGRANT

INTERIM HOSPITAL COVERAGE
EXTENSIVE CARE PLUS LIFE

LIFE

$10,000 FDR $22.00 A YEAR

USE REGULAR APPLICATION

You need this coverage if you fall under one of the following categories:

1. Canadian students who are covered by OHSP and OHSC and need extended health care
2. Students in Canada on a student visa and are not covered by OHSP or OHSC
3. Students in Ontario from another province who do not have coverage from that province.
4. Newly landed immigrant students who are required to wait three months for the provincial plans to become effective.

ADMIN. — JOHN INGLE,
700 BAY ST. 364-4114
BAY AT GERRARD

NOTE: If you have not received your brochure, additional forms may be obtained of the Registrar's office, Student Council Office, Graduate Studies Office, International Students' Centre the Health Service, or Faculty Offices.

S.A.C.
NEEDS A

MINUTE-TAKER

FOR S.A.C. GENERAL MEETINGS
(THIS IS A PAID POSITION)

APPLY: S.A.C. OFFICE

BY DEC. 4-5 P.M.

ITS WHERE ITS HAPPENING

Meet your friends at

PETIT PALAIS COIFFURE

All the Latest Mod Styles
and Cuts by any of our 5 Stylists

We specialize in long hair styling

20% discount Monday through Thursday
with proof of A.T.L. Card

415 Bloor St. W. Corner Spadina - Borders, campus

Open Thursday and Friday Evenings

For appointment phone 922-2823

HERE AND NOW

MONDAY

All Day

Tickets for HAIR at 10 per cent discount. For show Jan. 28, 29 and Feb. 1 Inns II Rooms 110,202

Submit nominations for TUGS executive to Rm 5047 Geography dept. SS.

8 a.m.

Radio veristy will be broadcasting live all this week from the textbook store. Drop over, watch us do our thing

12:15 p.m.

Pollution Probe is showing the film "In the Balance" First of a series of six TV programmes from the Nature of Things on pollution. Ramsay Wright Rms 133, 131, 102, 104

1 p.m.

John Borovilos, IV EL&L at Vic, discusses the significance of the Gable in Beowulf I and II Wymilwood Vic

Educational workshop re: crisis in Israel Rm II UC

Vic VCF has invited Willy Ziegler, a student at Emmanuel College to discuss "The Art of Listening." Wymilwood Music

Room

Film "Vibrations of Molecules NMR." Rm 159 Chemistry Bldg

TUESDAY

ALL DAY

Submit nominations for TUG (Toronto Geographical Society) executive Geography Department Offices Room 5047, Sidney Smith

Camera Club members who want their 4 prints judged on Dec. 3, 1969 should enter them by tonets to Hall Porter, Hart House

Tickets for HAIR at 10 per cent discount Show dates: Jan. 28, Jan. 29, Feb. 1 Orders (cash or cheque) accepted now Inns II, 53 St. George St. Room 110, 202

12-2 p.m.

Noon Hour Jazz Concert, featuring "The Survival" Quintet Ladies Welcome Admission Free. Hart House, East Common Room

12:15 p.m.

Pollution Probe is showing 1/2 hour film "Urban Crises" — second of a series of six TV programs ("Nature of Things") on pollution entitled "Oanger — Man At Work."

Ramsay Wright Building, Herbert Street entrance Rooms 133, 131, 102, 104

Concert. Degmar Kopecky, organ. School of Music Concert Hall, 273 Bloor St. West Admission Free

1 p.m.

Color film of the earth, as seen from satellites A TUGS event Sidney Smith Hall Room 622

YAVNEH presents Zev Herschtel who will speak on Parshat Vayehshev Sidney Smith Hall Room 2129

4 p.m.

There will be another glorious Psychology Student Union meeting. Come one and all. Innis I.

5 p.m.

F U of T course — Communism 205 Innis II

7 p.m.

Educational workshop re: crisis in Israel. 186 St. George.

7:30 p.m.

F U of T seminar on the family Advisory Bureau.

Chemical Institute of Canada technical meeting, Messrs J. V. Cross and C. E. Stokell of John Labatt Limited on "Production and Industrial Uses of Enzymes" Faculty Club.

8 p.m.

U of T Homophile Association discussion group. GSU — 2 Bencroft

8:30 p.m.

Opening of Anouilh's "Antigone" directed by Robert Galbraith. New Vic Theatre. New Academic Bldg., Victoria College.

Two students from Sir George Williams will be speaking to U of T students about events which have followed the computer burning at Sir George Williams University, today at 7:00 p.m. at Sid Smith. Look for posters telling room number.

Joseph Stroeder lost a pair of black-rimmed glasses last week in the St. George-Bedford Ave. area. If you found them please phone Joe at 368-8927.

Hoechst is Engineering

And plenty of it. Hoechst has over a full century of research and achievement to draw upon—products and ideas that have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents.

But big as we are in this area we're more than just engineering. We're medicine too, and chemistry and plastics and dyestuffs. And marketing. And ideas. Ideas most of all. Ideas about the future, about people's needs and wants. About how to meet those needs and wants. Good ideas, young ideas. Your ideas maybe.

If you'd like to know more about Canadian Hoechst, write our Head Office.

CANADIAN HOECHST LIMITED

3400 JEAN TALON STREET WEST MONTREAL • ASSOCIATES OF FARBERWKE AG WEST GERMANY

A CENTURY OF SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT THROUGH RESEARCH

GETTING ENGAGED?

"Contessa"

- 42 Carat Diamond
- 18 Kt. Gold Setting
- Excellent Clarity
- Excellent Colour

$300.00

Also Available in 1/4, 1/3 and 1/2 Carat Sizes

WE ARE DIRECT DIAMOND DEALERS
Hugh Proctor & Co.
DIAMOND DEALERS
131 BLOOR W. STE. 416
921-7702

Interfac finals

SGS wins soccer; Skule takes rugger

By UNCLE CHARLIE

Grads A won the intramural soccer title edging Scarborough 1-0 on the frozen pitch of Varsity Stadium Thursday afternoon.

Paced by the stellar play of smooth and lanky historian Ted Symons, the Grads scored an early goal then hung on desperately for their win.

GSU president M.B.Q. Vaughan has not yet announced the date of a special beer and beer party to celebrate the victory, but he is expected to do so shortly.

Grads A, who finished first in the first division, reached the final with a 4-2 win over Innis College and a 8-0 trouncing of St. Mikes B.

In the first game, outside-left Russ Hughes led the Grads with a pair of goals while Jaro Sodek and Tom Johnson added singles. Mike D'Arnelles and Chris Grosskurth replied for Innis.

In the second game, it was Hughes again — with three goals, Martin Newbould (the Grads regular goalie) and Toks Oshinowo with a pair each.

Scarborough College who were undefeated in winning the second division, downed Trinity A 8-0 and Sr. Engineering 2-0 in their playoff action.

Against Trinity center-forward Tony Galati led the way with a five goal performance. Steve Rajtek, Stu Sawyers and Ewart Taylor added singles.

Against the Engineers Scarborough received a first half goal from Galati and a second half marker from Taylor.

Last year's Arts Cup winners, PhysEd, failed to reach the playoffs this time.

RUGGER

The Engineering rugger team captured the intramural championship and the Nankivell Cup with a 28-0 victory over St. Mikes in the final week last Friday.

It was the first title for the Engineers since play was initiated in 1961.

The Skule rugger seven, who finished the regular season in a 3-way tie for first place in the first division, dominated play in the championship game from start to finish.

Jim Tibbo was the scoring star as he counted nine points on a try and three converts.

Don Kocur, Jim Hamilton and Dave Stephen added single tries.

St. Mikes reached the final with a 5-0 victory over Scarborough College and a 6-0 triumph over Engineering II.

Skule ousted defending champions Trinity A 11-3 in the other semi-final.

Women curlers finish fourth in fun bonspiel

OTTAWA (Special) — Varsity's women's curling team finished fourth in an exhibition bonspiel hosted by Carleton University this weekend.

The Varsity gals defeated McMaster 7-3 and overcame Carleton II 9-4 but lost to Western 8-7 in an extra-end.

Sir George Williams won the competition with 39 points, Western edged Queens 31 to 30, and Varsity was close behind with 28½.

Charlotte Sutherland (III SMC) skipped the Toronto team, with Lynda Eilbeck (II POTS) as vice-skip and Susan Meikle (II New) and Marion Moore (II Nursing) on the front end.

Women's Intercollegiate Hockey — regular practice Tuesday a.m.; all players check at Varsity ad office today regarding new equipment.

Where are the leaders?

Anyone will tell you that the Leaders are enjoying the advantages of military training and university subsidization through the Regular Officer Training Plan (ROTP).

If you are a full time male undergraduate student with a successful academic record you should know about the opportunities that the Canadian Armed Forces can offer you as an ROTP cadet. You will continue your civilian studies towards a degree at your University.

Enquiries are invited to:

THE CANADIAN FORCES RECRUITING CENTRE
25 ST. CLAIR AVENUE EAST
TORONTO 20, ONTARIO
TELEPHONE 966-6564

The Regular Officer Training Plan
For University Undergraduates.

CAMP STAFF

Manitou-wabing Camp of Fine Arts

Now accepting applications from counsellors, assistants and instructors in the following:

Sailing, Water-Skiing, Swimming, Canoeing and Tripping, Golf, Tennis, Riding, Riflery, Fencing, Music (String and wind players), Guitar, Drama, Drawing and Painting, Graphics, Pottery, Sculpture. Some executive positions open. Section Heads.

Graduate and undergrad. students with experience, call RU. 3-6168 or write 821 Eglinton Avenue West, Toronto for applications and further information.

Waterpolo team sunk 8-1

The Varsity Waterpolo team ended it's season Friday losing convincingly to McGill 8-1.

The Blues again started slowly and were down 7-1 at the half. They couldn't get their attack off the dressing room black board due to the strong checking of the McGill guard.

The Blues lone goal was scored by Terry Bryon to give Toronto a 1-0 lead. From that point on the Blues slowly sank into oblivion.

Hartly Garfield played well in the nets to prevent an even higher score.

The Blues picked up in the second half, holding McGill to one goal, but still were unable to get any sort of attack going.

Varsity coach Kirk Thompson said after the game, "Although we didn't play up to our potential; we were beaten by a better team."

McGill had a lot of experience and talent on their team, whereas this is only the first year of Toronto's rebuilding program. Only Hackett, Duvall, LeRoy, and Barras are veterans from last year.

Next year Blues will lose two of their more productive players, Alex LeRoy and Hartly Garfield. Dave Breech, however, will be returning after a year of ineligibility. With rookies and the rest of this year's team, Thompson will be able to give Toronto a strong contender.

Thompson is to be commended for bringing a team with nine rookies so far this year, and producing a 6-4 won-lost record for Toronto.

Oh yes, McGill went on to win the OQAA Championship by drubbing McMaster 15-7 on Saturday.

VICTORIA COLLEGE DRAMATIC SOCIETY

presents

JEAN ANOUILH'S ANTIGONE

DIRECTED BY ROBERT GAILBRAITH
DEC. 2-6 8:30 p.m. NEW VIC THEATRE
NEW ACADEMIC THEATRE
TICKETS IN WYMLWOOD OR AT THE DOOR

ENGINEERING GRADUATES

The Inland Steel Company, Indiana Harbor Works, East Chicago, Indiana invites you to investigate our many career opportunities. Consult the specific job description in the pocket of our brochure. Our representatives will be on your campus on

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1969

INLAND STEEL COMPANY
INDIANA HARBOR WORKS
EAST CHICAGO, INDIANA

We are an Equal Opportunity Employer in the Plans for Progress Program

PhysEd ends Vic string with 16-12 win

Grant Tadman (76) and Bob Feaver (61) lead determined PhysEd charge at Vic QB John Baird (hidden behind Tadman) as PhysEd defeats perennial Mulock champs 16-12 last week.

By LYNDON LITTLE

Grant Tadman is the type of fellow you can look up to.

Actually, it's more a matter of necessity, as he stands a good notch over six feet, tips the scales a shade under 300 lbs. and generally makes you feel as if you're standing in a 10 ft. hole when you speak to him.

Every time one of the Varsity football coaches see him, they immediately go into a drool as they imagine what he would look like in a Blues uniform. As yet, however, they have not been able to coax him to come out for the team.

The "Tad", as he is affectionately referred to by his comrades at the School of Physical and Health Education, is a very versatile man.

Earlier this fall he set new records in the discus and shot putt in the intramural track meet. He also plays defensive end for the PhysEd football team and last Wednesday he was at his best as he led them to a 16-12 victory over Vic ending the Vic interfac football dynasty at eleven straight Mulock Cup's.

It was PhysEd's first Mulock: they were finalists in 1965.

The second half of the final at Varsity Stadium opened with Vic holding a slim 5-3 lead.

IMPORTANT INTERCEPTION

On the second play of the half, PhysEd defensive back Bill Rowland intercepted a John Baird pass at his own fifty and returned it to the Vic twenty-seven. Five plays later fullback Dave Rae smashed four yards over left tackle for a major that gave PhysEd a narrow 9-5 lead.

Just minutes later, Vic was forced to punt deep in their own end. Punter Peter Wade moved back to his fifteen to kick but Tadman broke through to block the punt.

Tadman's defensive linemate "Newf" Feaver booted the ball into the Vic end zone where Louis Sialtis fell on it for the decisive touchdown that gave PhysEd a commanding 16-5 lead.

"Tadman and Newf made great plays", said Sialtis, "for Newfs part he could have just fallen on the ball where it was, but he saw the rest of us coming so he knocked it into the end zone."

Vic coach Tony Speciale agreed that it was the turning point of the game.

"We played well," he said, "but that one bad break killed us."

Tadman's toe was responsible for the 3 points PhysEd scored in the first half as he booted a 24 yard field goal on the last play of the second quarter.

LATE RALLY BY VIC

Vic rallied in the fourth quarter and for a while it looked as if they might pull it out.

With less than 9 minutes remaining, Baird hit his fine end Bruce Monick with a 44 yard pass-and-run play for a touchdown. Joe Cornacchia's convert brought Vic to within four points.

After that major the "Scarlet and Gold" turned over the ball once on a punt and by the time they got it back again they were deep in their own end with time quickly running out.

A fine run by halfback Peter Fairgrieve after catching the short swing pass gave Vic a first down on the Vic 31 yard line.

Following a short run by fullback Bruce Carroll, Baird found his speedy flanker Wade behind the PhysEd secondary with a pass that Wade gathered in and headed towards the PhysEd goal line.

Defensive half Rowland had to make his second big play of the game to stop Wade with a diving tackle on the PhysEd twenty-seven. The clock ran out on Vic and their eleven-year championship streak three plays later.

A jubilant Rowland described his game saving tackle this way.

QUOTE OF THE YEAR

"I saw the ball coming to Wade and I said to myself, 'Oh shit! We're just 4 points up so I'd better get him!'"

Vic's five points in the first half came on a 41 yard field goal by Cornacchia and a safety touch which was conceded by PhysEd punter Doug Neave.

The rushing game of both teams was virtually equal as Vic picked up 139 yards to 137 for PhysEd. Individually, Carroll netted 102 yards on 26 carries; Rae picked up 81 on 19 attempts.

Vic held an edge in the pass attack as Baird hit on 11 of 16 for 172 yards while PhysEd's QB John Osborne was good on 7 of the 11 passes he threw for 69 yards.

Blues score early, clobber Stangs 14-1

By JIM COWAN

The University of Western Ontario Mustangs were a little late getting to Varsity Arena for Friday night's hockey game, but by the time they left they were probably wishing they hadn't made it at all.

Come to think of it, they didn't.

The Stangs, playing their second game in two nights, were the unwilling victims of a 14-1 blasting at the hands of the good guys, the U of T Varsity Blues.

Playing with six regulars on the sidelines and two players called up from the interfaculty league, Blues took command with a goal by Bob McGunnin after 40 seconds, and needed only one more by rookie Mike Cyr at 2:20 to wuu

After that goal, Western coach Ron Watson hunched his starting goalie Dave Duncan and sent in Pat Crandall. With tremlets like Watson, Crandall doesn't need any enemies.

Crandall lured slightly better than Duncan it took Blues three and a half minutes to score on him. But after number three, by Paul Laurent, the slaughter began in earnest Led by John Wright, Bill Buba and Mike Boland, Blues went to work and dismantled the Stangs with almost ridiculous ease. Wright led the way with five goals and three assists, Buba picked up three goals and two assists, and Boland set some sort of record with assists on five consecutive goals. In all, the line had a hand in nine of the 14 Varsity goals.

BUBA STARTS EARLY

Buba started the line off at 7:52 of the first period. With Blues Dave McDowall off for charging, Buba took a pass from Wright and broke into the clear. He drew Crandall and tucked the puck in for his first regular season goal.

His second goal finished off one of the prettiest passing plays of the night. Defenseman Bill L'Heureux passed to Boland at the left of the Western net, Boland flipped the puck out to Buba, who deflected it past Crandall before he could move.

The whole line combined to complete Buba's hat trick before the end of the second period. Wright took a pass from Boland at centre ice, carried the puck into the Western end and when the lone defenseman moved to cover him, passed out to Buba who was all alone in front of the net. Bang.

Wright's first two goals came on deflections off Western players. On his third, assisted by (you guessed it) Buba and Boland, his first shot was stopped by Crandall, but he was left standing long enough to score with his second. Only then did the Mustang defense get close enough to hit him.

A BOMB AND A GIFT

His fourth goal was a blazing shot from just inside the blue line which caught the upper corner of the net, while his final marker followed a shot from the point. The puck trickled past the corner of the net, where Wright was standing unmolested, and all he had to do was grab it and steer it back into the open goal.

Crandall should have got a medal for bravery, for all the support his defense gave him. When they weren't being caught up ice they were standing around admiring the way Blues forwards handled the puck.

One of the best examples of how not to play defense was Robbie Ellis's goal. Ellis had originally carried the puck out of the Varsity end, then took a pass back from Mike Cyr. Ellis fanned on his first shot, but still had time to swing around and backhand the puck past Crandall. Who was the defense, you may well ask. Who knows?

Blues other goals came from Bryan Tompson and Rod Brown, called up from the interfac league. Tompson's was a beautiful breakaway effort after he was sprung loose by a pass from Laurent. John Wright assisted on Brown's goal.

Grant Cole played a solid game in Blues net and despite the lopsided score earned a shutout, but the goose egg was broken with less than two minutes remaining when a screen shot by John Pirie slipped past.

BLUESNOTES: Shots on goal were 35-24 with Blues on top. . . Toronto picked up 14 minutes in penalties to Western's 8. . . Dave McDowall was fingered for four minor penalties, but nonetheless assisted on two goals. . . Cyr, Buba, Ellis and Brown all scored their first goals as Blues in SIHL play. . . Wright said after the game his line had a bad week in practice. . .

THE DEATH OF FETHERLING IN THE CELEBRATED 1959 CANADIAN DRUGSTORE
or
STE. GWENDOLYN'S REVENGE

i discovered it friday,
a 1959 drugstore hidden rite here
in toronto
i 4get exactly where
but i cried big soda fountain tears unashamedly
wandering among the tampax & toothbrushes
squeezing yellowed penguin paperbacks
2 see if they were real but pushing onward 2 the grill be4 the reaction came

macphatus by Karen Smiles

MAC'S GETS THE AXE • SEE CENTRE

... A SPECIAL OFFER ...

A $12.00 ENTERTAINMENT VALUE THAT COSTS YOU ONLY $2.50
 The "ACTIVITY PASSPORT" is a book of FREE PASSES, and discount coupons which invites you to enjoy various entertainment and recreational pleasures around TORONTO. Every establishment that is represented in the "ACTIVITY PASSPORT" has given a written guarantee that each pass will be fully honoured.

Here is an opportunity for you to enjoy A FULL YEARS ENTERTAINMENT for ONLY $2.50 Below is a resume of the tickets that make up your "ACTIVITY PASSPORT".

ACTIVITY	TICKETS	VALUE
Hockey - Maple Leaf Gardens (Jr. A)	1	$ 3.50
Skating - Honey Pot	1	3.50
- Uplands Ski Hute	2	10.00
Discotheque - Mynah Bird	1	8.00
- Riverboat	4	10.00
- Speak Easy	2	2.00
- The Onion	4	6.00
- The Ultimate Gramophone	1	2.00
- Soul City	1	1.00
- Picasso Key Club	1
- The Bad Pod	2	3.00
Ballroom Dancing - Club Interlude	1	3.50
Theatre - Studio Lab Theatre	1	4.00
- Toronto Workshop Productions	2	8.00
Golf - Forest Hills Golf Club	1	1.50
- Hornby Tower Golf Course	1	2.50
Swimming - Central Y.M.C.A.	2	6.00
Karate - Tsuruoka Karate School	1	5.00
Judo - Hatashita Judo Club	1	5.00
Bowling - Don Mills Bowl, Sheg's Bowl	3	.50
Billiards - Embassy, Don Mills, Broadway	3	4.05
Curling - The Terrace	2	5.00
Horseback Riding - Circle M Ranch	3	7.00
Ice Skating - The Terrace	2	4.00
Sleigh Ride - Central Don Stables	1	2.00
Roller Skating - The Terrace	2	4.00
Bridge Studio - Kate Buckman's	4	18.25
Latin Dancing - Mo Mo's Discotheque	1	2.00
		Total Value $131.70

There are just 2500 passports available - Certainly not enough for everyone, so it's advisable that you hurry and get one for yourself NOW!

AVAILABLE AT: ENGINEERING STORES, MILL BUILDING
 ERINDALE SAGE OFFICES, ROOM 155
 RADIO VARSITY
 SCARBORO STUDENT SOC OFFICES, ROOM S421A

HART HOUSE MUSIC COMMITTEE PRESENTS NOON HOUR CLASSICAL CONCERT

Wednesday, December 3
 Music Room, 1-2 p.m.

ESTHER GARTNER, IV Music
 Ist 'Cellist, U. of T. Orchestra

Pastorale J. S. Bach
 Sonata for 'Cello & Piano Beethoven
 Fantasie Pieces, Op. 73 Schumann

Caroline Godiel, at the piano
 Ladies Welcome

THIS WEEK AT SAC

Tuesday, Dec. 2nd: - Education Commission Meeting
 8:00 a.m., SAC Office
 - Centennial Film Society - to Discuss upcoming film - all welcome
 5:00 p.m., SAC Office
 - Union-Mgmt. meeting - open discussion between local 1222 and SAC.
 4:00 p.m., SAC Office
 - Cultural Affairs Commission - discussion on campus pub - also budget allocation
 5:30 p.m., SAC Office
 - Executive Meeting
 6:30 p.m., SAC Office

Wednesday, Dec. 3rd: - SAC General meeting - housing report
 7:00 p.m., SAC Office
 - SAC lawyers
 Alumnae Hall, Victoria College
 - Orache report research groups
 - CUG
 - Campbell
 - AUSC
 - Radio Varsity
 - Spadina

Thursday, Dec. 4th: - Union of Course Unions
 1:00 p.m., Hart House

Coming again this year on Dec. 19 - All Day
 SACCUS - BACCHUS - FRACCUS
 COME ONE, COME ALL
 ENJOY - ENJOY - A SAC XMAS PARTY
 FREE! FREE!

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
 Toronto Professional Bldg,
 123 Edward Street,
 Toronto 101, Ontario

IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS

Telephone 364-0973

ROCHDALE IS ALIVE!

We aren't leaving. We have good reasons to stay. Perhaps you have good reason to come.

The cost of residence is reasonable:

Single rooms with community kitchen $70-$73 mo.

Double rooms with community Kitchen $50-$53 mo.

Double rooms with Kitchen in unit $60 mo.

Meals $1.00 or $11.00 the week.

ROCHDALE COLLEGE

come live with us

341 BLOOR ST. W.

921-3168

Pink Whiskers
 BOUTIQUES
 2200 Yonge St. at Eglinton

1 Bedford Rd.
 at Shear
 924-1874

COLONIAL TAVERN
 203 YONGE ST.
MILES DAVIS QUINTET
ALL THIS WEEK

SAC discovers irrelevance

McIlwain attacks Abols' SAC leadership

By TREVOR SPURR

The Students' Administrative Council met to justify its existence Wednesday night and wound up hearing a stinging attack on president Gus Abols from Engineering Society president Art McIlwain.

"This could be a really important and a really worthwhile meeting", said Art Moses III UC passionately, as the meeting opened.

Yet two and one-half hours later only aimless discussion had taken place. At this point the chair recognized Wayne Hankey (SGS).

"I've been sitting here doodling and I find I've been writing a hymn from the Mass for the Dead. The line reads, 'this is the day in which the age dissolves in the dust,'" he said.

He pointed out there is no debate over ideologies in this year's council and none of the people raising new ideas on campus ever come to SAC meetings.

SHADES OF CUŠ

"There is nothing happening in SAC this year."

"The proposals being made here tonight are the kind of thing I heard three years ago when the Canadian Union of Students was in the first stage of dissolution," Hankey said.

He was referring to earlier discussion on the need for SAC members to get back in touch with the grass roots.

"This is the cycle inherent in elite organizations.

"I think a certain historical process has happened. That process is over and SAC is now irrelevant," he said.

NEW AWARENESS

"A political awareness has come to this campus. What former councils hoped would happen was everyone would become leftist.

"Well the students have become aware all right, but they have not become pinkos," Hankey continued.

He cited the number of student organizations who stated their various positions at the discipline crisis in September and concluded SAC no longer can speak for the students.

NO FOLLOWERS

"We can't simply produce a policy here and have people follow anymore," he said.

Hankey also used SAC president Gus Abols and the rest of the Executive as an example of why SAC can have no leadership function.

"These elected people are not going to reach any sort of compromise position on an issue.

"They don't work together to create a new analysis. They tolerate each other," he said.

"We are no longer needed

structurally or ideologically. We are politically insignificant," he concluded.

SAC POWERLESS

SAC President Gus Abols concurred with Hankey in the belief power no longer rests in SAC.

"Students are no longer apathetic. They're politicized.

"They see SAC as a threat to what they want," he said.

But Abols also believed the council does not have power because its members are split into two factions.

Art McIlwain then rose and laid the blame for SAC's demise on its president Gus Abols.

OUT TO LUNCH

"Without effective leadership from the top of the council there can be no action from SAC.

"If the president is unwilling or unable to formulate ideas SAC can have little power," he said.

"My personal reaction to Abols' attitude towards his council is he is out to lunch," he added.

"Will Mr. McIlwain desist from his personal attack on Abols", interjected Hankey.

McIlwain nevertheless continued, saying he feared the CUG report would die because SAC had lost its leadership function by default.

ATTACKS ABOLS

"It's not because the prerogative has gone from SAC to other bodies but because the SAC president is unable or unwilling to provide the leadership which is necessary," he said.

McIlwain concluded with a plea for unity.

"I see CUG dying. The thing SAC has worked for during the last three or four years and it's all because of petty factionalism.

"Please lets stop this factionalism", he said.

Abols had remained silent throughout the attack on his leadership. He sat staring at the papers on his desk.

"This is the first time the council has really started to talk to each other", he then said.

In a statement to The Varsity after the meeting, McIlwain retracted his attack.

"First of all, I would like to say I support Mr. Abols and the direction of his leadership of SAC.

"I felt that the time had come for an end to the factionalism which has made meaningful actions on SAC's part impossible.

"There is between Mr. Abols and myself no fundamental difference of opinion, but, at least on my part, a considerable amount of respect."

Abols, who had accompanied McIlwain to The Varsity to make the statement, asked if the attacks had been aimed at the entire executive.

"No," replied McIlwain.

"Well, let's go and get the last round at the Bull and Bear," said Abols.

George Murray and Bernie Teitelbaum follow SAC proceedings two weeks ago as Abols and McIlwain confer.

LOW ON BREAD FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS
PRESENTS?

USE YOUR CHARGE -
ACCOUNT AT THE UNIVERSITY
BOOKROOM

BOOKS

On dropping 20,000 pink papers in the real world

Twenty thousand copies of Friday's Community Issue of The Varsity were distributed outside of the university. Commercial distributors dropped 13,000 at houses and schools. We would like to thank the 30 eager people who stand on cold street-corners to distribute the other 7,000. Special commendation goes to Paul Carson who gave one to Gardan Sinclair.

"Yes, it's us again," he told Sinclair, Chuckling.

How was the community issue received?

Same as in Simcoe Hall commented about the colour: "I guess the Varsity is getting ready for Christmas."

Meanwhile we've received some reaction from Kensington itself. Mrs. Dan Martyniuk, whose husband is the Kensington Area Residents' Association president, phoned to say she liked our treatment of Allan Schwam, a long-time opponent of Mr. Martyniuk.

Apart from that, we're still waiting for a reaction from the community. It's a big city, and you get the impression that the 20,000 copies have been dropped down a well.

Here's how one distributor felt:

It's four in the afternoon and I'm standing in front of Eaton's at College and Yonge with 300 copies of the Varsity Community Issue.

Through the cold and monotony I'm learning why the Spadina Expressway has got this far, and why it will probably reach Bloor after the civic election is over and the candidates have forgotten their promises.

I'm also learning why the university can expropriate all of Kensington and half of Lake Ontario if a feasibility study deems it necessary.

The wrong people are taking the papers from my hand.

It's not that old woman, kids on their way back from hockey practice, and construction workers shouldn't know about the expressway, expropriation and their effect upon the people of Kensington.

It's just that these people aren't in a position to do anything about it. They have no power. If they did the expressway might have never got past the planning stage.

It's the suit-and-tie executives, the suburban mother with her children coming out of Eaton's or getting off the subway, the "silent majority" who have the power. They are the people that William Dennison and Allan Lamport represent.

Few of them are taking my papers. Most either ignore me altogether or dismiss me with frosty stares that say anything distributed for free must be either communist propaganda or just plain crap.

I wonder whether it's my long hair and beard that's turning them off, or is it just that their lives are so oriented towards money that they can't accept someone standing in the cold and getting nothing in return.

Thinking this to be the case, I try a new approach yelling "Find out where your tax dollar is going!" Immediately three businessmen grab copies from my hand saying that it's about time somebody told them.

One man asked me if we had anything nice to say about the establishment for a change. I told him that, if the establishment was against the Spadina Expressway and thoughtless expropriation, then we had something nice to say about them.

Unfortunately, the establishment was throwing the community issue into the trash can. They may be apathetic but at least they're not litterbugs.

jim struthers

Varsity

TORONTO

Editor: Brian Johnson
 Associate Editor: Larry Harven
 News Editor: Jack McCallister
 City Editor: Jim Cowan
 Features Editor: Geoff Mergo
 Sports Editor: Sandy Buchanan
 Photo Editor: Noel Stackley
 CUP Editor: Mary Kate Ryan
 Photo Editor: Paul Carson, 923-4053
 Advertising Manager: Sue Benson
 Editorial Office: Mark Rubin
 Advertising Office: Pamela Kofsky
 91 St. George, 2nd Floor, 923-8741, 923-8742, 91 St. George, 1st Floor

The Varsity is a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset Publications, Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Editorial comments on the editorial or business pages of this paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Representatives Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

Jan Macbubba discovered the real reality of love and it was terrible, barb baked bang-up banana cake, Johnson dropped pills all night for a toothache but that's what they all say, wolkem by tom sold carson as cowan mulocked over a story and marshall Dillon exited fustest and foolest, spread on katininis in the hall as police come the thick and fast and pom kleinburger knows the score an rochdale you said dove here is cuppuscup as snow come in the winniedow, there's noel telling what'll happen to struthers, do-gooder editor, said mark as he got his hollowing, it's a much cooler outside but good to get back to moor: megg.

LETTERS

a quill in the hand is worth a bush in the mouth

It was my privilege to be featured in a front page headline in your November 26 issue "Ivey questions student competence to govern at CUG programming meetings." One disadvantage of participation in open meetings is that one can be too readily labelled as a bad guy — or a good guy — on the basis of a brief headline. Some of my colleagues have congratulated me on taking a stand against student participation, and some students have chided me for my lack of trust of students. I am equally unhappy with both of these opinions.

It is probably impossible to counteract the effect of a headline by a letter to the editor, and I usually refrain from trying to do so, but I felt that this time I should take pen in hand (quill, of course). The headline was accurate but incomplete in that I did not single out the student estate. It might more appropriately have read "Ivey questions staff, student and lay competence to govern." I would prefer to be labelled as anti-everybody, rather than simply anti-student, if I am to be labelled at all.

It was my understanding that the purpose of the open meetings of the Programming Committee was to give members of the University an opportunity to discuss the Report with the Commissioners. I asked what I felt to be a fundamental question of some importance, and I believe that the four Commissioners present also felt that it was important, because they each responded to it sensibly and at some length. My question was summarized reasonably accurately in the U. of T. Bulletin as "Would members of the proposed Governing Council be so busy educating themselves about their new responsibilities that the job of running the University would be left to a bureaucracy?" The Commissioners themselves have suggested that they spent a great deal of time educating one another before reaching the stage of producing a consensus report — and members of the Governing Council are not likely to be able to spend anything like the amount of time that the Commissioners did.

Even though I had been an academic staff member in the University for many years before accepting an administrative post, it seemed to take a year or so in such a role before I felt knowledgeable enough to contribute usefully to the deliberations of senior governing councils. While granting the possibility that I am a slow learner, or suffer from an excessive modesty, it is this experience that led me to initiate a discussion of this question.

D. G. Ivey,
Principal,
New College

P.S. Perhaps we should write our own headlines. How about "Quill in hand"?

violent protest

Let's try again. I did describe the glorification of violent demonstrations per se, and the intense factionalism, which have marked the left increasingly in the last four years. I did say that this tendency, a reaction to the non-violent movement of 1956-1963, had reached its high-water mark, and it was time for an assessment. The assessment I attempted was too extensive and too delicate to report in a short news story, or a short letter to the editor. It did not conclude that violent protest would "die out".

Chandler Davis
Department of Mathematics

insulting request

Could we please have more comix? Thank you.

Maurice Soligo (II SMC)

CUG:

By HAL WHITE

Hal White is a graduate student and teaching assistant in the Department of Philosophy.

A substantial portion of the Association of Teaching Staff believe that students have no place in decisions on hiring, firing, promotion, and tenure. In the second part of this article I will discuss their arguments. But to lay the groundwork, I will first look at the traditional arguments against public and administrative interference in these and other areas.

The standard argument for professional autonomy or "academic freedom" can be found in many places. In the 1915 Declaration of Principles of the American Association of University Professors, is this version:

(1) One of the main social purposes of the universities is to "advance the sum of human knowledge."

(2) Academics are engaged in a disinterested (e.g. free of economic motives) search for truth.

(3) The public and the administration have special interests, often financial, and their interference would "react injuriously upon the efficiency and morale of the institution."

Therefore any restrictions on academic freedom are not in the interests of the public.

When giving this argument, academics usually mention that with their rights is a responsibility — though only a moral one — to the general public. But they are made quite uncomfortable by the common allegation that they are not only morally responsible, but accountable to the public, since "He who pays the piper calls the tune."

Arthur Lovejoy says: "The principle of academic freedom is . . . a paradoxical one; it asserts that those who buy a certain service may not prescribe the nature of the service to be rendered."

Howard Mumford Jones admits that common man finds the traditional argument "unintelligible". Jones accepts the special relation between the professor and his employers.

"I believe the popular mind can be brought to accept it," he concludes condescendingly.

Let us now examine the standard argument. The most obvious thing that strikes one is that the second and third premises are false. The second premise is false because it is no longer the case that all or almost all academics are disinterested. The 1915 Declaration spoke of the following ideals:

"The proper discharge of this function (seeking and imparting knowledge) requires . . . that the university teacher be exempt from any pecuniary motive or inducement to hold, or to express, any conclusion which is not the genuine and uncolored product of his own study. Indeed the proper fulfillment of the work of the professoriate requires that our universities shall be so free that no fair-minded person shall find any excuse for even a suspicion that the utterances of university teachers are shaped or restricted by the judgment . . . of inexperienced and possibly not wholly disinterested persons outside their ranks. . .

To the degree that professional scholars, in the formation and promulgation of their opinions are . . . subject to any motive other than their own scientific conscience . . . to that degree the university teaching profession is corrupted. . . and society fails to get from its scholars . . . the peculiar and necessary service which it is the office of the professional scholar to furnish."

At the U of T this past year, professors received 1.4 million dollars from the U.S. Department of Defense, that in August, for instance, certain professors were to complete a $161,000 contract, for the Pentagon on "Very-High-Altitude Missile and Decoy Gas Dynamics."

Note that the CUG reported: "Dr. G. DeB. Robinson, Vice President (Research Administration) stated that even the existing rules on processing research grants were at first resisted by some faculty members."

There is even more resistance to the mild reforms suggested by CUG. There will be immense resistance to what I propose now: that professors make public the amount and sources of all outside income.

No "fair-minded" person can doubt that substantial numbers of professors sell their services to "not wholly disinterested persons outside their ranks".

By the standards of the 1915 Declaration, the profession contains substantial corruption, and the public is being cheated. And the profession is not taking speedy steps to remedy that corruption. The stage is set for public intervention.

This brings us to the reason why the third premise is false, why it is false that public or administrative interference always hinders the pursuit of knowledge. Jones gives the basic argument against this premise, though he attributes it to "demagogues" and "democrats".

"We do not permit doctors to practice except when they are licensed by the state, nor lawyers, nor dentists, nor clergymen, nor undertakers. We regulate banks and railroads and insurance companies and fraternal orders by law." Here's the general point:

It is both inevitable and desirable that those whose lives are affected by the practice of a professional group regulate that group in certain ways.

This does not mean that interference is desirable at every point.

The layman, for instance, should not guide the surgeon's hand, but he does have the right to be on a jury deciding a malpractice suit. In general, you can justify interference by recognizing that professional groups, cliques, and individuals have selfish interests which may keep the profession from correcting obvious evils and inequities.

Certain sorts of interference with a professional group help rather than hinder that group in serving its function disinterestedly.

'academic freedom' protects interests of faculty only

Frank Underhill was correct when he said a profession is granted its autonomy "as a privilege due to the high quality of the service it performs."

The corollary to this (though it would make Underhill uncomfortable) is that defects in the service provided by a profession constitute, prima facie, a basis for public or administrative intervention.

In such cases the burden of proof is on the profession to demonstrate that it can better correct the evil on its own. Academics, of course try to put the shoe on the other (i.e. wrong) foot. They like to argue that they have an absolute right not to be interfered with, and have the outsider try to justify the exception.

We are now in a position to criticize arguments that students should have no say in hiring, firing and tenure. The favorite argument here says that students have no scholarly competence, and that their interference would hinder academic pursuits. We have already given reasons for thinking that even if students had no academic competence, it would not follow that professional pursuits would be hindered by their "interference". But here this anti-ly argument does not apply. For the student is not, in many cases an ignorant layman. If he is an advanced student, he may know more than certain members of his department in certain areas.

Thus the opponents of student power must put their arguments this way: Students are in general less competent to judge scholarship than the faculty, therefore only the faculty should judge. By looking at the form of this argument alone, we can tell that it could never establish its intended conclusion. The fact that one group in general is more competent gives us no reason for holding that only individuals from that group should judge. Some students may be more competent than some faculty.

If a certain level of competence is required of all those in a department who judge, there is no rational basis for including all faculty members without at the same time including some students. (It is assumed here that all faculty members do have a right to judge, that monarchical and oligarchical departments are on the way out.)

Continued on Page 7

Only Canada allows an "academic common market" charge professors

By TOM WALKOM

A talk Friday on Americanization of Canadian Universities was dramatically interrupted by a telephone call from a University of Winnipeg professor just fired for "refusing to teach an American-centred Canadian political science course."

Professors James Steele and Robin Matthews, two Carleton University English professors, who several months ago started the academic world with a plea to de-Americanize university faculties, were speaking in Convocation Hall.

As chairman Michael Vaughan (SGS) rose to introduce the panel, Matthews slipped off stage.

"I guess he's got a phone call," grinned Vaughan boyishly.

Matthews was not grinning when he returned.

TOO NICE

"We've been too nice about the situation," he said, recounting his phone call from a Prof Raymond Rogers at the University of Winnipeg.

Matthews described Rogers as "a leading political scientist in Canada — one who has published over 20 articles."

When Rogers last year criticized the number of American professors at U of W, he was "muzzled" by the chairman of his department.

The chairman is an American.

This year, Matthews said, Rogers attempted to revamp

the first year Canadian political science course. The existing course "centred on U.S. problems; four out of five texts were American."

DISCIPLINE THREATENED

Rogers was told by his chairman that "disciplinary steps would be taken" if he did not teach the course as planned.

Rogers, a Canadian who had just come from the U.S. was at the time paying American income tax. As is the custom, he served notice on the university that he was not liable for Canadian income tax for a two year period.

"The university considered him to have resigned because of this notice," said Matthews.

"Yet other professors, who were American citizens and who served the same notice, were not considered to have resigned."

An American citizen teaching in Canada is granted a two year tax holiday from both countries.

ATTACK POLICY

Both Matthews and Steele criticized the Canadian university for choosing Americans over Canadians.

"The international community of scholars is a fairly tale," said Steele. "An academic common market exists in one country only — Canada."

"Every country in the world except Canada makes it difficult for foreign scholars to compete with domestic ones," Steele went on.

"When all countries except Canada discriminate, the result is discrimination against Canadian scholars, Canadian graduates face the toughest market conditions in the world."

In 1961, 75 per cent of Canadian university positions were held by Canadians, while today the percentage is 50 said Steele.

MORE OUTSIDERS

Although the number of Canadians receiving degrees has increased, the number of appointments going to foreigners has accelerated to 86 per cent, he said.

Matthews quoted a letter from a recent Canadian PhD graduate, who found the only possible way to get employment was by "taking out American citizenship and getting a job in Canada; taking a Berlitz crash course in BBC English and getting a job in Britain, or getting a job in an underdeveloped country."

The real problem is not the plight of the university graduate said Steele. "We agree that Canadian academics have no right to run a closed shop."

The crux, he said is that "Canadian particularism will not be taken into account by Americans, and Canadians will lose control of what is taught, who teaches and who hires."

Matthews and Steele recommend government legislation that requires two-thirds of a university faculty be Canadian.

Dr. Robert Croach, a Canadian on the staff of a New York graduate school explained why Americans come to Canada in the first place.

"The U.S. has many more graduates and fewer jobs," he said.

He cited the Vietnam war, which motivates students to stay in school till they are 26 and gain a PhD, as the cause of the former, and state cutbacks in educational spending as reason for the latter.

NATIONAULTY OF TEACHING STAFF

(from the Drache Research Report on the Faculty of Arts and Science) This shows the importation of U.S., British and other professors in the U of T arts and science faculty.

COUNTRIES IN WHICH PHDs WERE EARNED by 1969 arts and science faculty (from Commonwealth Universities Yearbook). This shows the exportation of Canadians for degrees.

Our campuses are "colonial outposts"—Drache

The Americanization of Canadian universities came under fire last Wednesday from George Haggart, a former York University professor, and Dan Drache, author of the controversial Drache Report to CUG.

"Americanization is not simply a fact of numbers," said Haggart, who calls himself "the only unemployed PhD in the country."

"The American approach is much more dangerous than the fact that 'x' numbers of Americans are teaching here," he said.

Haggart said he has no quarrel "with distinguished scholars of any political stripe."

"But we are not bringing in distinguished scholars — just the B.A.'s and M.A.'s," he said. "Last year 1,013 Americans and only 362 Canadian out of a graduating class of 10,000 were hired."

Drache called Canadian universities "colonial outposts," which ten years ago were controlled by the British and are now "a prime channel for protecting American interests."

He quoted figures describing the make-up of the Arts and Science faculty at U of T.

Canadians make up 54 per cent of the faculty, Americans 18 per cent, British 14 per cent, and other 14 per cent. Of the Canadians 37 per cent received their degrees from American schools. (See graphs.)

In hiring procedures especially, this American composition has great influence, said Drache.

Hiring for Canadian universities is done not through open advertising, but through a grapevine method. Faculty members advise the department chairman to hire people with whom they have a personal knowledge or acquaintance.

This leads to an acceleration of American teachers, said Drache.

"Fifteen per cent of Americans here in political science came because they couldn't find jobs in the U.S.," said Haggart. "American professors coming to Canada gain a two year tax holiday, too."

One professor was absolved from the U.S. draft when he came to U of T because his teaching in Canada was in "the national interest," said Haggart.

photo by Errol Young

About 150 candle-bearers marched from Convocation Hall to City Hall Friday to mourn the civilian dead in the Biafran war. In Nathan Phillips Square the mourners were addressed by Dr. Samuel Imiku, Biafran chairman of Rehabilitation Commission and Stanley Burke, broadcaster turned orator, who told the chilly crowd "there is a ground-swell in Canada which is being felt in England where people are saying 'This bloody war has gone on long enough.'" Skaters on the City Hall rink were unconcerned.

academic freedom

Continued from Page 5

Another point that should be raised here is that competence plays less of a role than is commonly admitted in such things as hiring and promotion. Because of specialization, faculty members within one department are often judging a man's performance in an area they know almost nothing about. The student, in this case would be at no special disadvantage if he knows nothing about the area either. And he may, of course, have specialized in that area himself, though no faculty members in his department have.

Another popular argument against student participation is that students have less at stake (careers, etc.) and should not judge.

The fallacy of this argument is that it turns what is usually considered a disqualifying factor, into a requirement — namely, interest.

Because academics have professional and economic interests involved, they are supposed to be better judges. We are supposed to believe that academics do not blackball and back-stab and aggrandize themselves when their interests are at stake. I suggest that members of departmental cliques or monoliths may be poorer judges than many of their students.

The last argument has a stench to it, though it is often heard: Students on personnel committees would introduce political considerations into academic matters, etc. etc. One is supposed to consider the absence of radicals in tenured positions as due to Providence or the "law of supply and demand" or similar bullshit.

This argument is evidence of an almost pathological inability to distinguish how the world is from how one might like it to be. A university in which political considerations play no part has never existed.

The faculty's resistance to student participation is an attempt to preserve the status quo of scholarship — in itself a conservative, political act.

We have a political struggle between students, who wish to change the form and content of present scholarship, and the faculty, who do not.

HART HOUSE 50

UNDERWATER CLUB
INNERSPACE SEMINAR
To-night, Oebates Room, 7:30
SURGEON-COMMANDER KIOO
Presenting new research on Oecompression Phenomena
Ladies Welcome

NOON HOUR FILMS
Today and Thursday
East Common Room, 1:10 p.m.
Quiet Social Comments:
ONCE UPON A PRIME TIME
23 SKIDOO and TOYS
Ladies Welcome

JAZZ CONCERT
Tuesday, December 2
THE SURVIVAL JAZZ QUINTET
East Common Room, 12:2 p.m.
Ladies Welcome

CLASSICAL CONCERT
Wednesday, December 3
Music Room, 1:2 p.m.
ESTHER GARTNER, *Cellist
Ladies Welcome

CAMERA CLUB
Wednesday, December 3
Club Rooms, 1:10 p.m.
8x10 BLACK AND WHITE
Maximum — 4 Prints
Judge: MR FRANK ROYAL

STEAK & CHAMPAGNE
AT THE
NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL
Tickets on Sale now
from Hall Porter &
Undergraduate Office.
$17/couple

enter Free! DANCE MARATHON
At BAZAAR '69
ST. LAWRENCE MARKET
FRONT & JARVIS
SUNDAY DEC. 7
12 Noon to 11 p.m.
$100's in prizes

(PLEASE PRINT)

NAME: _____

ADDRESS: _____

AGE: _____ PHONE: _____

MALE FEMALE

I hereby give my consent for the use of any publicity photographs which may be taken during the marathon.

Send application form to: BAZAAR '69 Signature _____
c 31, 223 Church St., Toronto 7 Ontario PHONE: 366-4781

NOW AVAILABLE

S.C.M.
CHRISTMAS CARDS

Silk screened
Original Designs
Limited Edition.

S.C.M. Office
Hart House

St. Michael's College
Teach-in on CUG
Thursday, December 4
and
Friday, December 5
STUDENT - FACULTY CENTRE

bitchy old 1959 waitresses flat footed in 1959 brown & white saddle oxfords
(1 rather kind, 1 tuff: like cop interrogation team)
& 1 lost control of myself in a regression of greasy hamburgers
& chocolate milkshakes multimalty

& the portrait of the queen was faded & stained
i turned rack of dusty sunglasses
old teen type magazines conjured golden age of modern music boobop voice staggering not leadachrome postcards of provincial parliament

i craved platamine pie
i cry even now @ olden golden radio record programmes
the meat loaf yet moltons me 2 come

!CONFEDERATION IS PRESERVED!

i have found the bicultural drugstore of my dreams @ popular prices
w/ translation in 2 moon language on facing pages

sperm oil wells out of my mouth in greasy spoon ecstasy
i crawl into some strange rubber instrument & stay there FOREVER

— Doug Fetherling,
THE DEATH OF FETHERLING IN THE CELEBRATED 1959 CANADIAN DRUGSTORE,
published by House of Anansi, 1968

CONTEST

In honour of the demise of Mac's The Varsity is sponsoring a contest. Entries must supply a suitable outline to go with this picture. Mail or bring to 91 St. George. Answers will remain confidential until they have been judged. Then they might be published if the decision of the judges is Gellius.

MACDONALD

The fickle finger of expropriation will claim another victim as MacDonald's restaurant-cum-variety store closes in a couple of weeks. The area will be used for the new research library.

Mac's, on Hoskin near St. George, has served the university community for 33 years and many of its customers are downright annoyed to see it go.

Ken Fisher, a graduate student in zoology and a Mac's customer for some six years, said the closing would be "a hell of a nuisance" because the store "served a real need." Languages professor Erminio Neglitz, a newer customer, said that he "liked the place" and that it was very convenient.

Mac's started back in 1937 when a young pharmacist named E. S. MacDonald opened a small drug store and restaurant. After the war the restaurant and pharmacy facilities were doubled and business boomed.

At the time St. George St. was lined with fraternities and boarding houses and, as Mr. MacDonald recalled, "meet you at Mac's" had some meaning then.

On football days, students swarmed into Mac's like bees in a hive and the store was as much a part of university life as books and skipping lectures. After the game students returned to Mac's to gather supplies for the parties that followed — whether the game was won or lost.

In those days you could get a full course meal for 25 cents and the atmosphere was as lively as a barrel of students. Today the prices have inevitably changed, and the atmosphere is ineer subdued. Students eat their chips and drink their shakes as before, but there is no boisterousness and to most, Mac's is just another building on campus.

Some of the staff at Mac's have worked there for some 20 years and are leaving the area with mixed emotions. Sadie McNeil, a waitress for the past six years said, "I'm going to miss all those saucy little boys and girls" and Mrs. Corkun, her co-worker said that "most of them were quite nice."

From the start the store was student oriented, and its "best-selling" products reflect this. For example, piles of tooth-paste tubes are sold while baby bottles gather dust on the shelves.

Mac's never discriminates against any of its customers, but when it comes to bubble gum, priorities are priorities — graduate students get "double-bubble" while undergrads have to settle for just plain "bubs". And the amount of bubble gum sold is unbelievable.

MacDonald could not recall any really unpleasant experience with students throughout his long stay. He chose to trust them and until last week even cashed their cheques on the presentation of an A.T.L. card.

His association with the provincial government, however, has been less pleasant. He has been expropriated three times, only to have the notice rescinded or delayed by the government. After the first notice he cleared his dispendary but did not refurbish it again because it was simply too expensive. On the whole he was left, as he said, "hanging for 13 years", not knowing whether to renovate or pack up and go.

He feels no bitterness however, and regards leaving with nostalgia and realism. Nostalgia, because he has spent more than three decades serving the university and the neighbourhood. And realism because he recognizes that things are not what they used to be and "Mac's has served its purpose".

Indeed it has.

INSTITUTE FOR THE
HISTORY AND PHILOSOPHY OF
SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

"Historical Relations Between Science and Technology" by Derek J. de Solla Price, Avalon Professor of the History of Science, Yale University

3rd December 1.10 p.m. Room 202 McLennan Laboratory
(New Physics Building)

Sponsored by the Varsity Fund. All members of the University Community are invited.

CAREERS AT CGE

for

Engineers and Science Majors

Canadian General Electric's GRADUATE ENGINEER DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM provides an avenue of entry into careers in Information Processing, Manufacturing, Marketing, Research, Development and Design,
and Employee Relations.

There are continuing opportunities for professional development. The broad diversification of the Company and its decentralized organization provide a dynamic environment for self-development and the opportunity through your career to move not only across functions,
but also between product businesses.

Company recruiting officers will visit
your campus to conduct interviews on:

DECEMBER 11, 12, 13

CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC

CIA detains Sewell-late for HH debate

The guest of honor was detained by the CIA.

John Sewell, candidate for alderman in Ward 7, was the special guest at the 209th Hart House debate on Thursday evening. Sewell's previous engagement with the Regent Park Community Improvement Association (RPCIA) had run overtime.

He arrived just in time to hear Peter Kent's summation for the eyes on the motion: "In Toronto, money is worth more than people and this house regrets it."

Sewell, a graduate of the University of Toronto Law School, was a founding member of the Toronto Community Union Project. He has spent the past three years as a volunteer community organizer in Trefann Court on a weekly salary of $50. Last October, the SAC voted to support his campaign with a $300 grant to help defray expenses.

In a brief address following the debate, Sewell said: "The campaign is being fought on the issue of citizen participation. It is the only way to fight money and power." He is, however, pessimistic about the prospects for change.

With increasing violence in U.S. cities, Toronto is fast becoming an ever more popular convention centre. "The municipal and provincial governments are in league to encourage this new trade by building a downtown airport and eliminating houses from the city's core," says Sewell.

He predicts that the abolition of the Board of Control will lead to a lot of political backscratching in the bid for the four executive positions on city council. "Any chance of a maverick being elected will be scotched," he says.

The debate earlier in the evening was a lively exchange of insults and oneupmanship. Alan Bowker (SGS) and Peter Kent (1 Law), for the ayes, roundly defeated Gary Segal (11 Law) and Ted Rotenberg (11 Law) 32 to eight. Bowker concluded the evening, observing that perhaps next time Mr. Speaker should pick his noes more carefully.

Faculty parity debate continues

Academic Freedom and Scholarship are alive and well and hiding in the Arts Faculty Council.

The Council decided Wednesday that they would not be hasty in coming to a decision on the staff-student parity issue.

Prof. W. H. Nelson, who presented the motion to the council, said, "It is not my purpose to reject student participation in our affairs or to reject student participation in department affairs and committees."

Nelson said he did reject staff-student parity in department government affairs. The issue of parity became a central one because of student pressures for equality within the community.

But said Nelson, equality is not the same as parity. Prof. J. M. Rist argued that if students were given parity on hiring and firing committees political commitments might be introduced.

It might be, said Rist, that a professor's ideology would be the basis for the student's choice.

Bob Barkwell, SAC vice-president told the Council that the question of student participation is one of power.

"Student's have the right to make decisions over things that effect their lives," said Barkwell.

"If the faculty of the university fail to recognize that students have the right to participate in decisions that effect their lives then students will organize to get that power."

After two and one half hours of debate the Council adjourned promising to return and continue at their earliest possible convenence.

29 arrested at UCLA for short sit-in

LOS ANGELES (CUP-CPS) — Twenty-nine UCLA students have been charged with conspiracy and kidnapping after a sit-in which held an administrator prisoner for less than two hours. If convicted they face possible life sentences.

The students, members of the SDS and the Asian Radical Movement, were protesting the firing of a black cafeteria worker who allegedly took an unauthorized coffee break. Charles Bargaineer, the worker who was employed as a busboy, had reportedly been asked to continue working and take his break later because of unusually heavy business October 6, the first day of classes.

When he refused, his supervisor George Leshefka fired him. Leshefka refused comment on why Bargaineer was fired, saying SDS has "blown this thing completely out of proportion."

The students said racism was behind the firing. Laura Ho, Chairman of ARM, said Bargaineer was fired "because he spoke out, he fought back against the exploitation, repression and racism in food services".

The students had gone to the office of Associated Students executive director Adolph Brugger the afternoon of November 19 following a noon rally.

The food services are part of the Associated Students. The students negotiated throughout the afternoon, with Brugger offering to rehire the worker with back pay pending a hearing by a disciplinary board. Although there have been protests for over a month, this was the first mention of a board to hear the charges.

The students turned down the offer, demanding Bargaineer be rehired without qualification. They voted to stay until the demand was met and barricaded the office about 7 p.m.

All agreed that Brugger was not threatened or hurt in any way except that he was not allowed to leave his office. Twenty-five UCLA campus police assisted by 20 Los Angeles police arrived at 8:15 p.m., and after issuing two warnings that students were violating the law, broke down the barricades and arrested those inside.

HART HOUSE

NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL

- * JIMMY MACDONALD
- * THE MAGIC CYCLE
- * ALLAN WOOD
- * ALEX RAGTIME REED
- * STEAK DINNER AT MIDNIGHT
- * TOAST THE NEW YEAR IN WITH CHAMPAGNE
- * Tickets, $17/couple from Hall Porter & Undergrad. Off.

Would World War II have started if someone had talked to Hitler?

By JIM STRUTHERS

If the right person had talked to Adolph Hitler, Sirhan Sirhan and Richard Speck, at the right time, there would have been no World War II, and Robert Kennedy as well as eight Chicago nurses would be alive today.

This is the firm conviction of Dr. Charles Mercieca, international president of the International Association of Educators for World Peace, who has been in Toronto for the past ten days attempting to establish a chapter of his organization at this university.

"If we could have had a chapter in Los Angeles and talked to Sirhan about politics telling him that no matter who was president the policy of the U.S. towards the Middle East would not change he might not have killed Kennedy," said Mercieca.

A professor of educational philosophy and sociology at Alabama A and M University, Mercieca formed the association over a year ago with the hope of promoting peace through just such a personal approach.

"Every problem we have in the world today starts in the mind of one person. Consequently if we approach a person who is a potential destroyer of mankind, we could avert a world disaster," he explains.

END VIOLENCE

The aim of the organization is to establish chapters in every conceivable city and university campus throughout the world with the hope that eventually every potential murderer, assassin, and fanatic would be approached by a member and logically convinced that his planned violence would be detrimental to himself as well as the rest of mankind.

Although there are now chapters in over 30 countries including the USSR, East Germany and Czechoslovakia, the 500-member association still has a long way to go.

Each local chapter meets once a month to discuss some family or community problem.

"Then steps are outlined in how one can help his brother, cousin, friend or next-door neighbour that has fallen or is about to fall a victim of an involved problem. This method of approach will be an initial step toward the creation of a global family community that would eliminate hatred and abolish evil," states the organization's newsletter.

Mercieca is not dismayed by the massive amount of organizing necessary to achieve that goal.

UNIVERSAL PLANS

"It will take four to six generations before our universal plans will be felt everywhere," he cheerfully predicts.

Mercieca's approach of promoting peace by convincing potential criminals that their violent plans are unwise is unique to say the least. But then so is the professor. He is firmly convinced that murderers such as Richard Speck and Sirhan Sirhan were not insane.

"I believe that in any kind of murder that takes place, the individual murderer is perfectly sane," Mercieca explains.

"Richard Speck had something to gain from his murders and that was pleasure. He was a sadist. But you can't call a sadist insane. He wanted pleasure through pain just as the Mafia wants pleasure through money."

Mercieca added that had he been able to talk to Speck before he committed the murders, he could have convinced him to change his plans.

NO MISERY

"I would have shown to him how a person could achieve his pleasure without incurring misery to himself or others."

Mercieca's belief in the rationality of murderers is the reason for the existence of the IAERP.

"We are all potential delinquents. We are all potential assassins. Thus we want chapters in every city so we can spot individuals who are potentially destructive."

The professor emphatically discounts the typical psychological explanation for the Richard Speck type of murder.

"If a psychiatrist says that these type of people are momentarily insane at the time they commit these murders then I say that that psychiatrist was momentarily insane at the time of saying that."

ADMIRE DE GAULLE

Mercieca's "person to person" approach to peace carries over into his efforts to expand IAERP's membership. He is an ardent admirer of Charles de Gaulle's strategy of making friends and enemies of the right people. And although they are few in number, people hostile to the organization do exist.

Dr. Charles Mercieca

"We do find some people trying to do something good for mankind and when they find out about our organization it makes them panic. They do not say it but it is crystal clear that they are jealous. These people, for reasons of envy and hate try to destroy what we do," Mercieca said. He did not say who these enemies were.

For the future the professor plans to, "just keep on travelling, building new chapters and strengthening old ones."

If you are interested in joining the IAERP Dr. Mercieca returns to Toronto on Dec. 19.

He'll be glad to talk to you in person.

their veto power had to stay, and showed why by using it.

If the senate were to ratify the document, said vice-principal Stanley Frost, "The students' society would then become a completely autonomous body."

Student Senator Sheely Ungar proposed that the senate pass those clauses in the constitution that were acceptable and return only the disputed clauses.

But student president Julius Gray attacked the proposed compromise as "a bigger sell-out than if the whole constitution were returned," and Ungar's motion died for lack of a seconder.

POOR STUDENTS

Low on bread for Christmas presents?

Cheer up!

The Textbook Store has gifts you can afford

Inflatable Zodiac Cushions

Cedar Mounted Prints (looks good, smells good)

Silk screened, hand finished Linen Place Mats

Records (the new Donovan)

Books (e.g. The Impacted Lower

Third Molar $1.98)

Starts Wed. November 26 and if you're really desperate, just say

"Charge it!"

THE TEXTBOOK STORE

SAILORS

On Tuesday December 2nd, there will be a meeting at 7:30 p.m. in the Music Room of Hart House. Racing Films, constitution, spring schedule. Come on out and see what's happening.

The Two hijacked Israeli Passengers are still being held captive in Syria!

The Ad-hoc Free the Passenger Committee will hold a meeting Monday, December 1st

1:00 p.m.

Sidney Smith Room 1084

McGill Senate vetoes student constitution

MONTREAL (CUP) — The McGill senate dealt a stunning blow to the autonomy of the campus student council Wednesday, refusing to ratify the students' new constitution which was overwhelmingly adopted in a student referendum last March.

If the senate had approved the constitutional amendments it would have been the last time the university's highest academic body would be called on to examine the document which governs student affairs — and therein lies the problem.

The new constitution would delete the clause requiring amendments to be ratified by the senate: Thursday the senators insisted

Give us a chance to let our hair down, too.

We're not as square as you think! Behind our seemingly straight-laced image, there throbs some pretty way-out projects. And people.

Alcan is involved in many unexpected areas. Because we do a lot more than just produce aluminum. We end others try to find new uses for it.

For example, one new use that came to our attention was developed in Belgium and refined by a Montreal artist. Through a process called Aluchromie, he "paints" on specially prepared aluminum panels. The resulting work of art has a water-colour effect with unusual depth and perspective, and endless applications in art and architecture.

And that's just one of the exciting new developments in aluminum.

Alcan researchers and scientists are continually searching for better ways to do things with aluminum. And it's not always easy. Often they have to struggle for years to find ways of making their ideas come to life.

So you see, they aren't the only ones who have to cope with hairy problems.

ALUMINUM COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD

SINGERS

(especially men):

A few parts are still open for the PLS February production of the FLEURY Play of Herod, to be directed by David Klausner. Auditions will be held in the Edward Johnson Bldg, Room 116 Monday (today), 5-7 p.m. Please bring any prepared item.

CLASSIFIEDS

TYPING (theses, essays, notes, charts, English, French, other languages) Mimeographing electric typewriters. Mary Osh Scott (M. Dawes) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225 922-7624

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Day you buy a diamond" H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St. W. Suite 416, 921-7702

SALTY DOG Orsocheque will rent premises Monday to Thursday day or evening. For information call A. Cury 964-7060 or 633-2677

EMPEROR JONES reigns at Hart House Theatre Dec 4, 5, 6 8:30 p.m. Tickets at Lit Relectory Theatre $1.50

ESSAYS, Theses, typed professionally on electric machine. Paper supplied 30c per page. Close to campus. 79 Madison Avenue. Phone 922-8564 after six. Ask for Love.

COUNTER HELP needed 2 to 5 days per week, noon to 2:00 p.m. Bloor University Area. Pay $3 plus lunch per day. Phone 445-0040

FREE XMAS MONEY — Quiet University Prof will rent modern apt over Xmas vacation. Write Full details to Prof. Innes, Saint Mary's University, Halifax, N.S.

FAST ACCURATE Home typing — Miss Linda Flood — 884-6526. Keep this name and number for future use.

APT. TO SHARE — Male — Student or staff — Mostly furnished — Available immediately. Call Bruce 787-7625

EXECU SEC SECRETÉRIAL SERVICES — Public stenographers. Essay, Theses — top quality intelligent typing IBM Executive and Selectric Typewriters. Miss Walker 449-7077 (days) 449-3744 (evenings)

TYPING: Never missed a deadline yet! Call anytime 465-3141

SPEAK YOUR MIND on Anthropology in Anthropology Dept Newsletter. Most opinions and articles welcome. Submit before Wed. Dec. 3 to Sid Smith 1037

ROOM & BOARD Males — on campus 350 Huron St. Apply at house

LOVERS OF MUSICKE: an opening in a thoroughly modern 3 bedroom apartment equipped with modern harpsichord, clavichord, larp and recorders, subway convenient. Call Jim at 762-1441

APARTMENT FOR RENT — Rochdale 1-bedroom self-contained $140/mo. Unfurnished Bob or Omai 925-7250

SKIIS — FOR SALE — fiberglass, Kneissl white star with Simples toe-piece, good condition, call 822-2404

INTERESTED PARTIES would like to contact Society dedicated to redeming the name of King Richard III of England. Call the Graphic Artist — 920-8328

CHRISTMAS TREE is coming! Hart House Dec 10

TYPING, ENGLISH, FRENCH, Fast accurate service on IBM Selectric by experienced typist two blocks from campus. 177 St. George St. 929-5370. Call before 8 low rates.

JAPANESE: Tutor wanted for beginners. Phone 249-0623 before 6:00

TYPING DONE — for fast efficient service phone 763-6065

LOST: Blue patterned silk scarf on Nov 21. Sentimental value. Please return to Chris Room 3046 Wilson Hall or phone 244-4512 after 7. Reward

3 GIRLS WANTED to join a household at 35 Madison Ave. 1 place available immediately, 2 more on Jan 1. Call 921-4970 or drop in at 35 Madison.

DIAMONDS, RUBIES, SAPPHIRES, emeralds, opals — certified quality in unusual designs. Remarkable new merchandising method saves you more money than you spend. Toronto Jewellery Exchange 21 Adelaide W. 368-4466

CHEMISTRY TUTORING by OCE Type 'A' Chemistry grad for 1st year A & S, and Eng. Reasonable. 72 Wolmer or Message CAPOR 922-5616

The University College Players' Guild

presents

EMPEROR JONES

by Eugene O'Neill

directed by Mark Manson

Hart House Theatre

December 4, 5, 6 8:30 p.m.

Admission $1.50

VARSIITY

ADVERTISING DEADLINES

MON. PAPER — THUR. NOON
WED. PAPER — FRI. NOON
FRI. PAPER — TUES. NOON

COPY SHOULD BE TYPED

DELIVER TO
91 ST. GEORGE

BasketBlues off to slow start

By PETER WHITE

It was only an exhibition game but of my! — the Basketball Blues are not soon likely to forget it!

They were pasted but good on Friday night, losing 81-56 to the Scarborough Bo-Peep Restaurateurs (yes, basketball's their game) a lion of a team with a pussy of a name, in a game played out yonder at Winston Churchill Collegiate.

This defeat was especially disappointing to those associated with the team after last week's close 73-63 loss to the YMHA which had been a somewhat encouraging opener.

However, the Peepers are a top senior team led by several past Varsity gunners including Jim Holowachuk one of the big Hart House Names of recent years.

Blues shooting and ball handling were grim but the unhappiest weakness was rebounding where the Blues, outmuscled and undersized offered little opposition particularly on the offensive board.

Other aspects of the game will probably fall in place, but if the Blues let their lack of height get the best of them, it will be a long season. Coach McManus has introduced a fast break offence which should help.

This game offers little margin for either team, or individual praise, but for the record Toronto fans can expect to see exciting basketball this season.

This week-end will be a busy one for the Blues with night games — at Ryerson Friday and York Saturday. So give yourself a break, and join the growing cast of Varsity Basketball nuts! A cheaper thrill you will not find anywhere!

Blues scoring: Hadden 12, Katz 12, Markowsky 8, Braid 8, Stevens 4, McNaughton 4, Barker 3, Boston 2, I. Betcherman 2, Sickle, M. Betcherman.

SwimBlues impressive at Relays

Varsity swimmers captured six of eight events at the O.Q.A.A. Invitational Relay meet Saturday evening at Etobicoke Memorial pool.

The meet, conceived three years ago as low pressure early season competition, has now developed into a highly competitive event.

McGill took the first event, the 400 medley relay on a Toronto disqualification and Western took the 300 Breaststroke Relay.

Toronto swept the other six, the 400 crescendo, 400 Individual Medley, 300 Back, 200 Free, 400 Breast-Fly and 400 free relays. In addition to the six firsts, Toronto scored two seconds and four thirds.

The most exciting for spectators was the 300 Back relay. McGill seeded first spotted Johnston, McGuire and Hawes against Toronto's Bryon, Twohig and Shaw. A full body length separated Shaw from Hawes as the last leg started, but Jim caught Hawes on the third turn and won by three-tenths of a second.

The freestyle events proved to be the most important to the Toronto fans. McGill, traditionally strong in freestyle were challenged by several new recruits and Blues swept all three freestyle relays with Theo Van Ryn, Doug MacIntosh, Mike Guinness, John Twohig and Jim Adams.

Sports
can't count

SCHAUM'S
OUTLINE SERIES

including

Theory and Solved Problems

ADVANCED CALCULUS
Including 325 SOLVED PROBLEMS

ANALYTIC GEOMETRY
Including 125 SOLVED PROBLEMS

BASIC EQUATIONS OF ENGINEERING SCIENCE
Including 1400 BASIC EQUATIONS

CALCULUS
Including 1175 SOLVED PROBLEMS

COLLEGE ALGEBRA
Including 1940 SOLVED PROBLEMS

COLLEGE CHEMISTRY
Including 125 SOLVED PROBLEMS

COLLEGE PHYSICS
Including 625 SOLVED PROBLEMS

COMPLEX VARIABLES
Including 640 SOLVED PROBLEMS

DESCRIPTIVE GEOMETRY
Including 125 SOLVED PROBLEMS

DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS
Including 560 SOLVED PROBLEMS

DIFFERENTIAL GEOMETRY
Including 500 SOLVED PROBLEMS

ELECTRIC CIRCUITS
Including 350 SOLVED PROBLEMS

ELECTRONIC CIRCUITS
Including 160 SOLVED PROBLEMS

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA
Including 2700 SOLVED PROBLEMS

ENGINEERING MECHANICS
Including 460 SOLVED PROBLEMS

FEEDBACK & CONTROL SYSTEMS
Including 600 SOLVED PROBLEMS

FINITE MATHEMATICS
Including 750 SOLVED PROBLEMS

First Yr. COLLEGE MATHEMATICS
Including 1850 SOLVED PROBLEMS

FLUID DYNAMICS
Including 100 SOLVED PROBLEMS

FLUID MECHANICS & HYDRAULICS
Including 475 SOLVED PROBLEMS

GENERAL TOPOLOGY
Including 550 SOLVED PROBLEMS

GENETICS
Including 500 SOLVED PROBLEMS

GROUP THEORY
Including 600 SOLVED PROBLEMS

LACRANGIAN DYNAMICS
Including 275 SOLVED PROBLEMS

LAPLACE TRANSFORMS
Including 450 SOLVED PROBLEMS

LINEAR ALGEBRA
Including 600 SOLVED PROBLEMS

MACHINE DESIGN
Including 320 SOLVED PROBLEMS

MATHEMATICAL HANDBOOK OF FORMULAS AND TABLES

MATHEMATICS OF FINANCE
Including 500 SOLVED PROBLEMS

MATRICES
Including 340 SOLVED PROBLEMS

MECHANICAL VIBRATIONS
Including 225 SOLVED PROBLEMS

MODERN ALGEBRA
Including 425 SOLVED PROBLEMS

NUMERICAL ANALYSIS
Including 775 SOLVED PROBLEMS

PLANE GEOMETRY
Including 850 SOLVED PROBLEMS

PROBABILITY
Including 500 SOLVED PROBLEMS

PROJECTIVE GEOMETRY
Including 200 SOLVED PROBLEMS

REINFORCED CONCRETE DESIGN
Including 200 SOLVED PROBLEMS

SET THEORY
Including 630 SOLVED PROBLEMS

STATISTICS
Including 875 SOLVED PROBLEMS

STRENGTH OF MATERIALS
Including 630 SOLVED PROBLEMS

STRUCTURAL ANALYSIS
Including 200 SOLVED PROBLEMS

TEST ITEMS IN EDUCATION
Including 3100 TEST ITEMS

THEORETICAL MECHANICS
Including 225 SOLVED PROBLEMS

TRANSMISSION LINES
Including 165 SOLVED PROBLEMS

TRIGONOMETRY
Including 600 SOLVED PROBLEMS

VECTOR ANALYSIS
Including 480 SOLVED PROBLEMS

A & A BOOKS & RECORDS

Most Complete Selection Of Long Playing Records - Anywhere!

351 YONGE ST. PHONE 364-6271

HOURS 7 A.M. - 12 P.M.

SPECIAL EXTENSION

TO ENROLL FOR YOUR

UNIVERSITY HEALTH AND ACCIDENT PLAN

IS YOUR PROTECTION MISSING?

A MAN WITHOUT INSURANCE IS LIKE A SNAIL WITHOUT A SHELL.

THREE PLANS TO CHOOSE FROM

PLAN I

EXTENDED HEALTH CARE

NO DEDUCTIBLE ON ACCIDENT BENEFITS

PLAN II

OVERSEAS AND AMERICAN STUDENTS

STUDENTS ON STUDENT VISA

PLAN III

NEWLY LANDED IMMIGRANT

INTERIM HOSPITAL COVERAGE
EXTENDICARE PLUS LIFE

LIFE

$10.00 FOR $22.00 A YEAR

USE REGULAR APPLICATION

You need this coverage if you fall under one of the following categories:

1. Canadian students who are covered by OHSP and OHSC and need extended health care
2. Students in Canada on a student visa and are not covered by OHSP or OHSC
3. Students in Ontario from another province who do not have coverage from that province.
4. Newly landed immigrant students who are required to wait three months for the provincial plans to become effective.

ADMIN. — JOHN INGLE,
700 BAY ST. 364-4114
BAY AT GERRARD

NOTE: If you have not received your brochure, additional forms may be obtained of the Registrar's office, Student Council Office, Graduate Studies Office, International Students' Centre, the Health Service, or Faculty Offices.

S.A.C.
NEEDS A

MINUTE-TAKER

FOR S.A.C. GENERAL MEETINGS
(THIS IS A PAID POSITION)

APPLY: S.A.C. OFFICE
BY DEC. 4-5 P.M.

ITS WHERE ITS HAPPENING

Meet your friends at
PETIT PALAIS COIFFURE

All the Latest Mod Styles
and Cuts by any of our 5 Stylists

We specialize in long hair styling

20% discount Monday through Thursday
with proof of A.T.L. Card

415 Bloor St. W. Corner Spadina - Borders, campus
Open Thursday and Friday Evenings
For appointment phone 922-2823

HERE AND NOW

MONDAY

All Day

Tickets for HAIR at 10 per cent discount for show Jan 28, 29 and Feb 1 Inns II Rooms 110, 202

Submit nominations for TUGS executive to Rm 5047 Geography dept. 55

8 a.m.

Radio varsity will be broadcasting live all this week from the textbook store. Drop over, watch us do our thing

12.16 p.m.

Pollution Probe is showing the film "In the Balance". First of a series of six TV programmes from the Nature of Things on pollution. Ramsay Wright Rms 133, 131, 102, 104

1 p.m.

John Borowlos, IV EL&L at Vic, discusses the significance of the Gable in Beowulf I and II. Wymilwood Vic

Educational workshop re crisis in Israel. Rm II UIC

Vic VCF has invited Willy Ziegler, a student at Emmanuel College to discuss "The Art of Listening". Wymilwood Music

Room Film "Vibrations of Molecules NMR" Rm 159 Chemistry Bldg

TUESDAY

ALL DAY

Submit nominations for TUG (Toronto Geographical Society) executive Geography Department Offices Room 5047, Sidney Smith

Camera Club members who want their 4 prints judged on Oct. 3, 1969 should enter them by tonite to Hall Porter, Hart House.

Tickets for HAIR at 10 per cent discount. Show dates Jan 28, Jan 29, Feb 1. Orders (cash or cheque) accepted now. Inns II, 63 St. George St. Room 110, 202

12.2 p.m.

Noon Hour Jazz Concert, featuring "The Survival". Quarter Ladies Welcome. Admission Free. Hart House, East Common Room.

12.16 p.m.

Pollution Probe is showing 1/2 hour film "Urban Crises" — second of a series of six TV programs "Nature of Things" on pollution entitled "Oeager — Man At Work"

Ramsay Wright Building Harbord Street entrance Rooms 133, 131, 102, 104

Concert Dagmar Kopecky, organ School of Music Concert Hall, 273 Bloor St. West. Admission Free

1 p.m.

Color film of the earth, as seen from satellites. A TUGS event. Sidney Smith Hall Room 622

YAVNEH presents Zev Hershchel who will speak on Perishet V'yehshev. Yehuda Smith Hall Room 2129

4 p.m.

There will be another glorious Psychology Student Union meeting. Come one and all. Inns I.

5 p.m.

F U of T course — Communism 205 Inns II

7 p.m.

Educational workshop re. crisis in Israel. 186 St. George

7.30 p.m.

F U of T seminar on the family. Advisory Bureau

Chemical Institute of Canada technical meeting. Messrs J. V. Cross and C. E. Stoikell of John Labatt Limited on "Production and Industrial Uses of Enzymes." Faculty Club

8 p.m.

U of T Homophile Association discussion group. GSU — 2 Bancroft

8.30 p.m.

Opening of Anouilh's "Antigone" directed by Robert Galbreath. New Vic Theatre. New Academic Bldg. Victoria College

Two students from Sir George Williams will be speaking to U of T students about events which have followed the computer burning at Sir George Williams University, today at 1:00 p.m. at Sid Smith. Look for posters telling room number.

Joseph Stroeder lost a pair of black-rimmed glasses last week in the St. George-Bedford Ave. area. If you found them please phone Joe at 368-8927.

Hoechst is Engineering

And plenty of it. Hoechst has over a full century of research and achievement to draw upon—products and ideas that have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents. But big as we are in this area we're more than just engineering. We're medicine too, and chemistry and plastics and dyestuffs. And marketing. And ideas. Ideas most of all. Ideas about the future, about people's needs and wants. About how to meet those needs and wants. Good ideas, young ideas. Your ideas maybe. If you'd like to know more about Canadian Hoechst, write our Head Office.

CANADIAN HOECHST LIMITED

7400 HAN TALON STREET WEST MONTREAL • ASSOCIATES OF FARBERWERKE AG WEST GERMANY

A CENTURY OF SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT THROUGH RESEARCH

GETTING ENGAGED?

"Contessa"

- .42 Carat Diamond
- .18 Kt. Gold Setting
- Excellent Clarity
- Excellent Colour

$300.00

Also Available in 1/4, 1/3 and 1/2 Carat Sizes

WE ARE DIRECT DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.

DIAMOND DEALERS
131 BLOOR W. STE. 416
921-7702

Interfac finals

SGS wins soccer; Skule takes rugger

By UNCLE CHARLIE

Grads A won the intramural soccer title edging Scarborough 1-0 on the frozen pitch of Varsity Stadium Thursday afternoon.

Paced by the stellar play of smooth and lanky historian Ted Symons, the Grads scored an early goal then hung on desperately for their win.

GSU president M.B.Q. Vaughan has not yet announced the date of a special beer and beer party to celebrate the victory, but he is expected to do so shortly.

Grads A, who finished first in the first division, reached the final with a 4-2 win over Innis College and a 8-0 trouncing of St. Mikes B.

In the first game, outside-left Russ Hughes led the Grads with a pair of goals while Jaro Sodek and Tom Johnson added singles. Mike D'Arnelles and Chris Grosskurth replied for Innis.

In the second game, it was Hughes again — with three goals, Martin Newbould (the Grads regular goalie) and Toks Oshinowo with a pair each.

Scarborough College who were undefeated in winning the second division, downed Trinity A 8-0 and Sr. Engineering 2-0 in their playoff action.

Against Trinity center-forward Tony Galati led the way with a five goal performance. Steve Rajtek, Stu Sawyers and Ewart Taylor added singles.

Against the Engineers Scarborough received a first half goal from Galati and a second half marker from Taylor.

Last year's Arts Cup winners, PhysEd, failed to reach the playoffs this time.

RUGGER

The Engineering rugger team captured the intramural championship and the Nankivell Cup with a 28-0 victory over St. Mikes in the final week last Friday.

It was the first title for the Engineers since play was initiated in 1961.

The Skule rugger seven, who finished the regular season in a 3-way tie for first place in the first division, dominated play in the championship game from start to finish.

Jim Tibbo was the scoring star as he counted nine points on a try and three converts.

Don Kocur, Jim Hamilton and Dave Stephen added single tries.

St. Mikes reached the final with a 5-0 victory over Scarborough College and a 6-0 triumph over Engineering II.

Skule ousted defending champions Trinity A 11-3 in the other semi-final.

Women curlers finish fourth in fun bonspiel

OTTAWA (Special) — Varsity's women's curling team finished fourth in an exhibition bonspiel hosted by Carleton University this weekend.

The Varsity gals defeated McMaster 7-3 and overcame Carleton II 9-4 but lost to Western 8-7 in an extra-end.

Sir George Williams won the competition with 39 points, Western edged Queens 31 to 30, and Varsity was close behind with 28½.

Charlotte Sutherland (III SMC) skipped the Toronto team, with Lynda Eilbeck (II POTS) as vice-skip and Susan Meikle (II New) and Marion Moore (II Nursing) on the front end.

Women's Intercollegiate Hockey — regular practice Tuesday a.m.; all players check at Varsity ad office today regarding new equipment.

Where are the leaders?

Anyone will tell you that the Leaders are enjoying the advantages of military training and university subsidization through the Regular Officer Training Plan (ROTP).

If you are a full time male undergraduate student with a successful academic record you should know about the opportunities that the Canadian Armed Forces can offer you as an ROTP cadet. You will continue your civilian studies towards a degree at your University.

Enquiries are invited to:

THE CANADIAN FORCES RECRUITING CENTRE
25 ST. CLAIR AVENUE EAST
TORONTO 290, ONTARIO
TELEPHONE 956-6564

The Regular Officer Training Plan
For University Undergraduates.

CAMP STAFF

Manitou-wabing Camp of Fine Arts

Now accepting applications from counsellors, assistants and instructors in the following:

Sailing, Water-Skiing, Swimming, Canoeing and Tripping, Golf, Tennis, Riding, Riflery, Fencing, Music (String and wind players), Guitar, Drama, Drawing and Painting, Graphics, Pottery, Sculpture. Some executive positions open. Section Heads.

Graduate and undergrad, students with experience, call RU. 3-6168 or write 821 Eglinton Avenue West, Toronto for applications and further information.

Waterpolo team sunk 8-1

The Varsity Waterpolo team ended it's season Friday losing convincingly to McGill 8-1.

The Blues again started slowly and were down 7-1 at the half. They couldn't get their attack off the dressing room black board due to the strong checking of the McGill squad.

The Blues lone goal was scored by Terry Bryon to give Toronto a 1-0 lead. From that point on the Blues slowly sank into oblivion.

Hartly Garfield played well in the nets to prevent an even higher score.

The Blues picked up in the second half, holding McGill to one goal, but still were unable to get any sort of attack going.

Varsity coach Kirk Thompson said after the game, "Although we didn't play up to our potential; we were beaten by a better team."

McGill had a lot of experience and talent on their team, whereas this is only the first year of Toronto's rebuilding program. Only Hackett, Duvall, LeRoy, and Barras are veterans from last year.

Next year Blues will lose two of their more productive players, Alex LeRoy and Hartly Garfield. Dave Breech, however, will be returning after a year of ineligibility. With rookies and the rest of this year's team, Thompson will be able to give Toronto a strong contender.

Thompson is to be commended for bringing a team with nine rookies so far this year, and producing a 6-4 won-lost record for Toronto.

Oh yes, McGill went on to win the OQAA Championship by drubbing McMaster 15-7 on Saturday.

VICTORIA COLLEGE DRAMATIC SOCIETY

presents

JEAN ANOUILH'S ANTIGONE

DIRECTED BY ROBERT GAILBRAITH

DEC. 2-6

8:30 p.m.

NEW VIC THEATRE

NEW ACADEMIC THEATRE

TICKETS IN WYMLWOOD OR AT THE DOOR

ENGINEERING GRADUATES

The Inland Steel Company, Indiana Harbor Works, East Chicago, Indiana invites you to investigate our many career opportunities. Consult the specific job description in the pocket of our brochure. Our representatives will be on your campus on

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1969

INLAND STEEL COMPANY
INDIANA HARBOR WORKS
EAST CHICAGO, INDIANA

We are an Equal Opportunity Employer in the Plans for Progress Program

PhysEd ends Vic string with 16-1/2 win

Grant Tadman (76) and Bob Feaver (61) lead determined PhysEd charge at Vic QB John Baird (hidden behind Tadman) as PhysEd defeats perennial Mulock champs 16-12 last week.

By LYNDON LITTLE

Grant Tadman is the type of fellow you can look up to.

Actually, it's more a matter of necessity, as he stands a good notch over six feet, tips the scales a shade under 300 lbs. and generally makes you feel as if you're standing in a 10 ft. hole when you speak to him.

Every time one of the Varsity football coaches see him, they immediately go into a drool as they imagine what he would look like in a Blues uniform. As yet, however, they have not been able to coax him to come out for the team.

The "Tad", as he is affectionately referred to by his comrades at the School of Physical and Health Education, is a very versatile man.

Earlier this fall he set new records in the discus and shot putt in the intramural track meet. He also plays defensive end for the PhysEd football team and last Wednesday he was at his best as he led them to a 16-12 victory over Vic ending the Vic interfac football dynasty at eleven straight Mulock Cup's.

It was PhysEd's first Mulock; they were finalists in 1965.

The second half of the final at Varsity Stadium opened with Vic holding a slim 5-3 lead.

IMPORTANT INTERCEPTION

On the second play of the half, PhysEd defensive back Bill Rowland intercepted a John Baird pass at his own fifty and returned it to the Vic twenty-seven. Five plays later fullback Dave Rae smashed four yards over left tackle for a major that gave PhysEd a narrow 9-5 lead.

Just minutes later, Vic was forced to punt deep in their own end. Punter Peter Wade moved back to his fifteen to kick but Tadman broke through to block the punt.

Tadman's defensive linemate "Newf" Feaver booted the ball into the Vic end zone where Louis Sialtis fell on it for the decisive touchdown that gave PhysEd a commanding 16-5 lead.

"Tadman and Newf made great plays", said Sialtis, "for Newf's part he could have just fallen on the ball where it was, but he saw the rest of us coming so he knocked it into the end zone."

Vic coach Tony Speciale agreed that it was the turning point of the game.

"We played well," he said, "but that one bad break killed us."

Tadman's toe was responsible for the 3 points PhysEd scored in the first half as he booted a 24 yard field goal on the last play of the second quarter.

LATE RALLY BY VIC

Vic rallied in the fourth quarter and for a while it looked as if they might pull it out.

With less than 9 minutes remaining, Baird hit his fine end Bruce Monick with a 44 yard pass-and-run play for a touchdown. Joe Cornacchia's convert brought Vic to within four points.

After that major the "Scarlet and Gold" turned over the ball once on a punt and by the time they got it back again they were deep in their own end with time quickly running out.

A fine run by halfback Peter Fairgrieve after catching the short swing pass gave Vic a first down on the Vic 31 yard line.

Following a short run by fullback Bruce Carroll, Baird found his speedy flanker Wade behind the PhysEd secondary with a pass that Wade gathered in and headed towards the PhysEd goal line.

Defensive half Rowland had to make his second big play of the game to stop Wade with a diving tackle on the PhysEd twenty-seven. The clock ran out on Vic and their eleven-year championship streak three plays later.

A jubilant Rowland described his game saving tackle this way.

QUOTE OF THE YEAR

"I saw the ball coming to Wade and I said to myself, 'Oh shit! We're just 4 points up so I'd better get him!'"

Vic's five points in the first half came on a 41 yard field goal by Cornacchia and a safety touch which was conceded by PhysEd punter Doug Neave.

The rushing game of both teams was virtually equal as Vic picked up 139 yards to 137 for PhysEd. Individually, Carroll netted 102 yards on 26 carries; Rae picked up 81 on 19 attempts.

Vic held an edge in the pass attack as Baird hit on 11 of 16 for 172 yards while PhysEd's QB John Osborne was good on 7 of the 11 passes he threw for 69 yards.

Blues score early, clobber Stangs 14-1

By JIM COWAN

The University of Western Ontario Mustangs were a little late getting to Varsity Arena for Friday night's hockey game, but by the time they left they were probably wishing they hadn't made it at all.

Come to think of it, they didn't.

The Stangs, playing their second game in two nights, were the unwilling victims of a 14-1 blasting at the hands of the good guys, the U of T Varsity Blues.

Playing with six regulars on the sidelines and two players called up from the interfaculty league, Blues took command with a goal by Boh McGuinn after 40 seconds, and needed only one more by rookie Mike Cyr at 2:20 to win.

After that goal, Western coach Ron Watson benched his starting goalie Dave Duncan and sent in Pat Crandall. With friends like Watson, Crandall doesn't need any enemies.

Crandall fared slightly better than Duncan - it took Blues three and a half minutes to score on him. But after number three, by Paul Laurent, the slaughter began in earnest.

Led by John Wright, Bill Buba and Mike Boland, Blues went to work and dismantled the Stangs with almost ridiculous ease. Wright led the way with five goals and three assists, Buba picked up three goals and two assists, and Boland set some sort of record with assists on five consecutive goals. In all, the line had a hand in nine of the 14 Varsity goals.

BUBA STARTS EARLY

Buba started the line off at 7:52 of the first period. With Blues Dave McDowall off for charging, Buba took a pass from Wright and broke into the clear. He drew Crandall and tucked the puck in for his first regular season goal.

His second goal finished off one of the prettiest passing plays of the night. Defenseman Bill L'Heureux passed to Boland at the left of the Western net, Boland flipped the puck out to Buba, who deflected it past Crandall before he could move.

The whole line combined to complete Buba's hat trick before the end of the second period. Wright took a pass from Boland at centre ice, carried the puck into the Western end and when the lone defenseman moved to cover him, passed out to Buba who was all alone in front of the net. Bang.

Wright's first two goals came on deflections off Western players. On his third, assisted by (you guessed it) Buba and Boland, his first shot was stopped by Crandall, but he was left standing long enough to score with his second. Only then did the Mustang defense get close enough to hit him.

A BOMB AND A GIFT

His fourth goal was a blazing shot from just inside the blue line which caught the upper corner of the net, while his final marker followed a shot from the point. The puck trickled past the corner of the net, where Wright was standing unmolested, and all he had to do was grab it and steer it back into the open goal.

Crandall should have got a medal for bravery, for all the support his defense gave him. When they weren't being caught up ice they were standing around admiring the way Blues forwards handled the puck.

One of the best examples of how not to play defense was Robbie Ellis's goal. Ellis had originally carried the puck out of the Varsity end, then took a pass back from Mike Cyr. Ellis fanned on his first shot, but still had time to swing around and backhand the puck past Crandall. Where was the defense, you may well ask. Who knows? .

Blues other goals came from Bryan Tompson and Rod Brown, called up from the interfac league. Tompson's was a beautiful breakaway effort after he was sprung loose by a pass from Laurent. John Wright assisted on Brown's goal.

Grant Cole played a solid game in Blues net and despite the lopsided score earned a shutout, but the goose egg was broken with less than two minutes remaining when a screen shot by John Pirie slipped past.

BLUESNOTES: Shots on goal were 35-24 with Blues on top. . . Toronto picked up 14 minutes in penalties to Western's 8. . . Dave McDowall was fingered for four minor penalties, but nonetheless assisted on two goals. . . Cyr, Buba, Ellis and Brown all scored their first goals as Blues in SIHL play. . . Wright said after the game his line had a bad week in practice. . .

This was the scene in Old Physics Building lecture hall Monday when a dozen students bodily ejected members of the New Left Caucus from Prof. T. L. Thorson's Political Science 101 class. The student at right is shouting "I'm paying good money to be here" at the radicals.

Poli Sci 101 students manhandle hecklers

By PETER HALL

The New Left Caucus got a rough reception from members of a political science class Monday when a classroom confrontation backfired.

One member of the radical group was punched in the stomach, another had his face scratched and his glasses broken and three more were bodily ejected by angry students from Political Science 101 at the Old Physics Building.

When the NLC members demanded Prof. Thomas Thorson, who teaches the course in political theory, answer their questions about his lecture, he appealed to the class for support.

To shouts of "Out, Out, Out" almost a dozen regular students in the class got up and, when the NLC still refused to leave, dragged five of them from the room to the applause of the rest of the class.

The incident marked the culmination of two weeks of conflict between Prof. Thorson and about 15 members of the NLC who have been trying to disrupt his lectures.

Two weeks ago about 20 members of the NLC, some who were enrolled in the class, joined Thorson's Monday lecture and began to read newspapers during the lecture.

NEWSPAPERS FORBIDDEN

Prof. Thorson, who earlier in the year had specifically forbidden students to read newspapers in his class declared he would not continue the lecture unless this stopped.

When the New Left continued to read and began to shout, "He's feeding you bullshit", Thorson abruptly left the room.

Last Wednesday's class again saw a few members of the NLC present, but they simply asked a few questions of Thorson at the end of the lecture.

On Monday things were different. Students entering the room found about twenty members of the NLC sitting across the middle of the room.

Prof. Thorson's voice was tense and the lecture was punctuated with phrases like, "I know you're not going to like this... but..."

Mitch Kelner (1 Trin.), a non-NLC student, said, "The whole lecture was a very defensive kind of lecture."

At 12:40, after answering a number of questions on the lecture, Prof. Thorson indicated he wanted to finish.

The members of the NLC demanded that their questions be answered, saying that with no tutorials this was the only chance they had.

MID-WEST REPUBLICAN

A number of the NLC members threw paper airplanes and cried "Bullshit!" and "What does a mid-west Republican know about Marxism?"

Earlier in the lecture, Thorson, who sought a Republican nomination for the U.S. Congress in Indiana in 1962 and 1968, interpreted the Marxist viewpoint on the politics of industrialization.

"I'm not going to take any more of this," Thorson said. "Everybody knows what is going on. There's no mystery involved in what's going on here!"

"Are you going to sit still for this?" he asked, and was greeted with a chorus of "No".

"What are you going to do about it?" he asked. Most of the class shouted, "Out, Out, Out."

One student in the middle of the class yelled, "I'm paying good money to be here. You'd better shut up."

With that, he and about a dozen other regular students in the class got up. When the NLC still refused to leave, they dragged five of them out of the room, to the applause of the rest of the class.

The rest left on their own and the class ended in confusion.

MAKES CHOICE

Jim Hilton, (1 Trin.), one of those who helped throw out the radicals explained later, "My main purpose is to learn. I figure Thorson has more to say than the NLC does. You have to make a choice. I made my choice."

Mitch Kelner suggested, "The majority of the class wanted those people out."

Rob Ryan, (special), an NLC member, defended the disruption. "We were simply insisting on the right of students to ask questions in the lecture," he said.

"By asking questions we wanted to point out that what Thorson was saying does not adequately describe historical events or the way the world works."

After meeting with representatives of the Political Economy Course Union today, Thorson agreed to spend part of Wednesday's class discussing the situation in that class.

A Political Economy Course Union meeting will also be held at 1 p.m. today in Room 2102 of Sid Smith to consider the disruption.

Prof. T. L. Thorson: "Are you going to sit still for this?" photos by errol young

Have you Visited
the Sale at the

TEXTBOOK STORE yet?

Records - .98 to 4.98

Books - from 10 cents

Posters - from 25 cents

Prints - from 50 cents

Would you believe - inflatable cushions?
(Zodiac' of course)

Gillette Gift - Pac...
$2.95 each

'Are course unions breeding bureaucracy and elitism?'

By PETER HALL

Mr. Hall, a second-year Arts student at Trinity College, was recently elected president of the Political Economy Course Union.

Elitism! What a word! No student radical should be without his basic vocabulary of Imperialism, Bourgeoisie, Confrontation, Lackey, and Elitism.

No organization can be considered functioning these days until it is accused of being elitist by someone. Consequently we find course unions (a few of which are functioning) being described as isolated from the rest of the students and elitist. And many of them are. The German Course Union last year consisted of half a dozen students who really represented no one but themselves. It no longer exists.

The Political Economy Course Union, last year had on its executive some of the most anti-elitist people in this university; yet it too remained cut-off from the mass of the students.

MASS PHENOMENA

Craig Heron, University College students' council rep. and the first chairman of the first course union (the History Students' Union) suggests that the majority of course unions are elitist, although most people organizing course unions are anti-elitist.

Conservative estimates are that 90 per cent of the students on this campus have never had contact with any course union.

To improve communication the History Students Union tried publishing a newsletter. And SAC is ready to sponsor a newsletter for all the Social Sciences and Humanities.

Several unions such as the Political Economy Course Union are trying to get a representative in each class whose main purpose is to encourage communication among the union and the students.

BETTER THAN AVERAGE

Nevertheless if a course union meeting gets one per cent turnout of its members it is still doing better than average.

Craig Heron admits that "Communication is not as good as it should be partly because of over-involvement (of Union executives) at the departmental level in their committees."

"That kind of elitism really cuts student bureaucrats off from their students. It is as bad as a professional elite."

To combat this, the Psychology Students Union prohibits any executive member of their union from sitting on any departmental committee. According to Bernie Green, past-president of the PSU, "Their executive acts solely as a communications force", and to coordinate policy for the union.

Why don't we do it in the road?

171 are busted as women defy Montreal bylaw

By LIZ WILLICK, R.N.

Liz Willick is a former Varsity student and sometime U of T staffer.

On Friday evening 171 women were arrested for taking direct political action in the streets of Montreal.

Organized by women of the CSN (Conseille des Syndicats Nationaux) under the title Front Commune des Femmes, the action probably signalled one of the most important events in the history of modern woman.

It was the first serious challenge to the new city bylaw banning demonstrations and gatherings in public places. For those of us who were involved, it had a tremendous personal significance as well.

The action was planned around a single word — "Oyez". Dare. Dare to think. Dare to act.

It was an attempt to fight the forces that could deny the people of Montreal the right to voice their opinions collectively in the streets of their city, but grant it to the tourist-attracting, mindless exuberance of the Grey Cup.

We arrived at the Monument Nationale in old Montreal to find reporters and photographers clamoring unsuccessfully for admittance. Half a dozen police cars already cruised the block.

Riot-equipped police were gathered in a parking lot across the street. Groups of men clustered, waiting and watching, outside numerous tavern doors.

REAL FEAR JUSTIFIED

I found a place with a small group of English-speaking women. We smiled nervously at one another and laughed too often.

Fear — the real fear that Montrealers now know to be justified when they dare to think that the streets belong to the people — was a tangible presence.

We did not expect to be allowed to march the several blocks to City Hall.

There was a brief speech about the unconstitutionality of the bylaw, the impending police state and overt fascism.

My understanding was sketchy in places, but the message was clear. It was time to make ourselves heard as women and as human beings with the right to live in freedom.

The speaker moved to a discussion of the tactics for a peaceful demonstration.

We rehearsed the Algerian women's cry — a weirdly effective, highly keening "La-la-la-la" followed by a menacing low-toned "oooooooooo".

Then we moved out — down the stairs and into the street — on the run. The U-shaped red-banded human chain of the service d'ordre closed round us. And so did the cops.

CUT OFF

Four paddy wagons cut us off front and rear. At times it seemed that the police outnumbered the 200 women.

Seated and encircled by marshalls whose wrists were securely locked together with chains, we swung into a chant of "Liberte! Liberte!". The guerrilla theatre troupe in the centre began a take-off on the Miss Grey Cup pageant — a slave auction culminating in the revolt of the slaves.

According to the press, there were police orders given in French and English to disperse. I heard neither. The cops began immediately hauling the service d'ordre into one of the paddy wagons at the front.

There was difficulty because they were all seated and securely fastened together. Police could not break into the body of the group in an attempt to disperse us.

We could hear the roar of unmuffled motorcycle exhausts, reverberating between the buildings, frighteningly near.

I could feel the wave of fear, pass through all of us, drawing us to our feet. "Assis, Assis" came the cry, and we dropped back down onto the pavement. The intimidation attempt had failed and was abandoned.

"Solidarite! Solidarite!" A burly police woman grabbed me by the shoulder to tell me to go home while I still could. I tore myself away, pushing back into the press, linking arms with a Quebecoise sister.

"Solidarite! Solidarite!" Police were now dragging away anyone they could get their hands on. The protection of the chain was gone. We pressed together, not feeling the cold.

WONDERING LOOKS

Wondering looks on the faces of men from the taverns. On others (comrades, husbands?) anger, helplessness, clenched fists deep in pockets.

The police — mostly grim and hostile; a few bewildered and unhappy. "Vive la Greve illegale des policiers!" The odd, almost involuntary, grin.

With only about 15 women left outside the wagons, another Torontonian and I decided that having contributed our bodies and voices, it would serve little purpose to have two Toronto addresses in the Montreal police records. We would leave if that was still possible.

We were turned back twice before two women cops actually grabbed us. I think I was almost glad. But a young policeman told the women to let us go when he realized that we did not understand their words.

"They're from Calgary", he said. Whether he was personally sympathetic or not, we had been saved by virtue of the fact that we were "Anglos" in a French land.

OTHERS JAILED

One-hundred and seventy-one women arrested. All but 30 will be charged with violating the new bylaw; conviction resulting in 60 days and/or $100.

The next day, the Grey Cup parade unrolled between smiling lines of Montreal's finest. Hundreds of mini-skirted majorettes, twirled their batons, kicked their booted feet, and smiled on the crowd.

The evening papers trumpeted banner headlines about the fun and games and "No trouble, no trouble, no trouble".

But as the Molson's float passed the television cameras, two of its go-go-dancing young women unfurled a ten-foot banner that said "Vive Québec Libre! Non a la Repression!" The banner was immediately torn down by the parade marshalls. The women were arrested.

We must be prepared at one and the same time for both the confrontation of power and the limitation of power.
— Lyndon Baines Johnson

A test case for discipline

The first two months of the academic year were marked by the ever-present fear of violent disruption of due process by the student left.

U of T President Claude Bissell and the majority of liberal faculty and students preached the motherhood of "peaceful dissent" while warning against the threat of violence resulting from disruption.

The Campbell Report tried to accommodate — even disruption — while trying to maintain the equilibrium of the university.

The discipline crisis left us with Dr. Bissell moderating his hard-line policy but appearing to win a victory over the student left as he revelled in the cheers in Convocation Hall.

After the everyone's "deep concern" followed by the fanfare of liberal triumph, we were left with a committee to implement the Campbell report, a body that's finally getting off the ground.

And that committee is left with an abstract dichotomy between constructive dissent and violent disruption — the dichotomy that the Campbell Report could not bridge.

Then something concrete happened.

Violent disruption. Two weeks ago NLC members distributed and read copies of The Varsity in Professor Thomas Thorson's Political Science 101 class.

Prof. Thorson got quite upset about it: in a class of 350 students sitting in the Room 135 of the Old Physics Building, a few people reading papers were enough to disrupt due process of education.

The tension built up between the NLC and Thorson until Monday.

That day a few NLC members put up their hands to ask questions at the end of the class.

Thorson refused to recognize the hands and there was some shouting. Then he told the NLC to get out of the class.

In the early sixties Thorson played at being a politician in the United States — a Republican. His action Monday was a dramatic demonstration of the tactics of his illustrious compatriots — Nixon, Reagan, Daley.

• Thorson used a familiar ploy; he labelled the dissidents as outside agitators. The McCarthyite cry of "foreign subversives" begins to weaken when registration in the class is considered the basis for legitimate political citizenship. The same cry was raised when non-members of University College disrupted orientations in September. The strict divisions between colleges, courses, classrooms, and disciplines, conveniently prevent students from organizing. Students are divided into neat bundles, and communication is kept to a minimum.

• The chief complaint against radicals is that violence is the natural outcome of their politics. "Our society must change not through the violent coercion by a minority, but by peaceful, democratic transition... blah, blah, blah..."

Thorson looked on in silent approval as a number of students bodily ejected five NLC members. Result: a broken pair of glasses and a cut on the head.

The incident is just a theatrical farce compared to campus violence in other North American universities.

But it's extremely significant.

By condoning violent repression of dissent, Prof. Thorson has revealed the true attitude of most administrators and faculty:

• Thorson's tactics were clear. He played upon the political resentment the majority bore against the left to eject them from the classroom. He used the notion majoritarian "democracy" to destroy dissent — the element which mythically characterizes our "freedom" in pluralist North America.

But in Thorson's class, the violence came from the right, not the left. The NLC's questions challenged the political content of the course, but they also challenged the security of obedience. For most students in that class, the passive process of lecture-education, examinations, and competitive grading overruled the need to ask questions.

The New Left Caucus failed tactically. They alienated most of the members of the class. They won no political victories. They can be censured for bungling an attempt at classroom organizing.

But clearly Thorson's class was a legitimate target for dissent. Three hundred and fifty students sitting in a lecture hall and listening to one man's view of the political status quo is not even a liberal introduction to political science.

Thorson has negated the right to organize in the classroom. His action has received no rebuke from administration or faculty, and that's a more realistic indication of the university's policy on discipline than a speech in Convocation Hall or a committee's report.

the varsity

TORONTO

Editor
Brian Johnson

Review Editor
Laine Haven

Associate Review Editor
Jack McCaffrey

News Editor
Jan Cowan

City Editor
Geoff Mugga

Features Editor
Louis Eastman

Sports Editor
Neil Stacking

Club Editor
Mick Reid

Photo Editor
Paul Carson 923 4053

Executive Assistant
Johnston

Advertising Manager
Hermel Kidekel

Editorial Phone
923 8741

Advertising Office
91 St. George St. 2nd floor

Editor
Laine Haven

Associate Review Editor
Jack McCaffrey

News Editor
Jan Cowan

City Editor
Geoff Mugga

Features Editor
Louis Eastman

Sports Editor
Neil Stacking

Club Editor
Mick Reid

Photo Editor
Paul Carson 923 4053

Executive Assistant
Johnston

Advertising Manager
Hermel Kidekel

Editorial Phone
923 8741

Advertising Office
91 St. George St. 2nd floor

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset Print Centre, Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Council Relations Committee, Varsity Box 200, Downsview, 91 St. George St.

so whose gonno write the methsed ad asked benson twist mouthful of pineapple chicken balls? not peter ball or bubbly bubba, not karen koren not a winner, or bev dillon in the dates or lanky jane hallingworth who left early or mkr who was out to sup, not pam beaton and not joms klity kat, not art mosses whose illegible or lit whose writes for the slits in a second, not john benson and not michael kouffman of reactor set fame, not us chorus succo, leuis, pensive jomes and lyndon baines little, so whose left? me political note remember bill charlton who ran against honest tom foulkner two years ago this month? same bill won seat on board of education monday no guff... social note terry hoivens has cold fingers education note the globe is doing a feature on campus meros, but only if they find enough sm, so do your bit

All Varsity staffers: We're having an important meeting Friday at 1 p.m. We're also looking for new staff, so if you have a vague inkling that you'd like to write for The Varsity come Friday. And hey, how about all you people we haven't seen for weeks? Come! Come! Come!

LETTERS

haggar's not alone

George Haggar says he is the only unemployed PhD in the country (Varsity, Dec. 1). But I can think of several women with PhD's who are unemployed or employed at the level of graduate assistants. Hiring committees either prefer male candidates or are inflexible about the use to which part-time staff can be put.

Canadians are rightfully concerned that their universities be staffed by people who respect the Canadian past and have a stake in Canada's independent future. But getting rid of Americans hardly solves the problems if it just delivers the English-speaking universities back to the hands of white Anglo-Saxon males of independent means. Women live in Canada. So do workers. So do Ukrainians, Indians, Italians, Germans, Hungarians, Chinese and so on. When the government and the universities begin to facilitate the training and hiring of talented young people in substantial numbers from a much broader range of backgrounds, then there will be a chance to talk of "Canadian universities."

Natalie Zeman Davis,
Associate Professor of History

faith restored

As mother of a U of T student and daughter of an eighty-four year old lady now living in the Church Home on Bellevue Avenue, let me congratulate you on your Community Issue of the Varsity. I read it from cover to cover and it restored my faith in your paper.

Over the last few years the faith has all but vanished.

Congratulations and keep up the good work.

Date Carnegie would approve too.
Elizabeth Johnston

More letters — Thorson right or wrong?

get rid of thorson

On Dec. 1 I had the dubious privilege of seeing democracy, or should I say, the mob in action, lead by that great champion of free speech, Prof. Thorson.

For the benefit of those who were not there, I shall elucidate. Prof. Thorson was giving his usual boring review of secondary school history to show the superlative workings of democracy. Members of the NLC attempted to raise points of disagreement. I question the methods of the NLC, but not the theory behind them. As much as I disagree with the NLC on many points, they and anyone else should retain the right to question the gospel according to Thorson. The professor did not see the matter in this light. Paraphrasing the professor, "mine is the only point of view that is meaningful". He actually followed this theme up with (and this is a literal quote) "If you think I'm brainwashing you, you're crazy."

Continuing to ignore the NLC's questions and like a typical bar-room bully the professor arbitrarily unified himself with the class, asking, "Are we going to sit here and take this?" The class, as a majority, (turned off by the NLC because of previous encounters, and wanting to finish Thorson's classes, get a pass, and be rid of him) answered, "No."

Thorson's "boys", emboldened by his attitude and that of the fair damsels looking on, showed their muscular prowess by ganging up on the NLC and literally throwing them out.

Meanwhile the girls applauded and Thorson looked benevolently. Though some may argue that Thorson's actions were not a crime of commission, his certainly is a crime of omission in allowing the class to go to the stage where physical force was used. Thorson has denied those precepts he claims to hold so close (i.e. free speech, freedom from harassment, etc.)

If, as the administration claims, "violence is not to be allowed in the classroom", then it had better start backing words with actions and rid itself of Prof. Thorson.

Jim Hilton
Judy Bastedo

James Dent (IUC)

new left caucus' grossly unfair'

For the past two weeks, the Political Science 101 class has been disrupted by the tactics of certain members of the New Left Caucus. Today their singularly asinine questions and their rude, obnoxious manners resulted in their being forcibly ejected from the lecture hall by members of the class. Although forcible ejection is by no means a good solution to the problem of class disruption, neither is the stationing of police in the proximity of the lecture-hall a good solution, but it may yet prove to be necessary.

The singular disregard for the rights of the professors and of the students in the class by the NLC tends to nullify their doctrine of protections and propagation of students' rights in the society of the university environment.

Their actions have been grossly unfair to the students in the class who have only a few more lectures to attend before writing an exam deciding a sizeable portion of their years' mark.

A.T. Tossonyi (I Trin)

Professor Thorson appeals to his Political Science 101 class during New Left Caucus 'disruption'.

thorson encouraged violence

Professor Thorson's Political Science 101 cannot be called the most democratic on campus. It consists of two lectures a week. There are no essays and a final exam is required. Students have no choice whatsoever as to having an exam or essays, no say in the course content. It is difficult to have any meaningful dialogue between class and professor when there are 350 students and no tutorials to have any discussion.

It seems that the New Left Caucus decided to pick on Thorson's class, due to Thorson's reputation as an American Republican (Nixon-kind). So enter the New Left on Monday, Nov. 23. Thorson lectures for five minutes, then walks out, due to the unusual amount of shuffling newspapers. Bedlam breaks out, with hysterical cat-calling on all sides, and nothing being accomplished. So the New Left manages once again to alienate most of the first year students.

By Wednesday they are back. This time a shift in tactics. Very quiet, and ask two or three good questions. Thorson plays it cool and manages to avoid confrontation. No more cracks about the workers with their two cars and colour television sets.

Monday, Dec. 1 they are back again. This time questions increase, and are definitely aimed to discredit Thorson. By 12:45 Thorson blows his cool. Approximate quotes; "I don't want anymore of these destructive nitwit questions, are you guys going to get these clowns out of here or not." Very sneaky, he manages to sic students on students. Group of vigi-lantes, waiting for the word, jumps up and violently haul the New Left out of the class. Thorson beams triumphantly in the corner. Total damage includes one cut forehead and a pair of broken glasses. Majority of class sits there stunned.

The New Left had no business being in that class. We have no need of outside agitation. Students seem to be perfectly happy to sit and listen to Thorson's spiel. The New Left were originally disruptive. It is better to have a lousy lecture rather than none at all. On the other hand Thorson had no right whatsoever to spark his disciples on to violence during the third lecture. The New Left were only asking questions, and not bad ones at that. It was about time that someone challenged Thorson's ideological views. Thorson did encourage some of the students to physically expel the New Left from the classroom.

He could have just as easily asked them to hold off their questions until the end of the lecture. There is no justification for Thorson's encouragement of violence, and he made no attempt to stop it. The majority of the class did not like the New Left, but were sickened by this use of force.

More important are the underlying causes of the disruption. There ought to be three classes of Poli. Sci. 101; instead there is one. We need tutorials to ask questions, there are none. We as students should at least have some choice in the method of our evaluation, and there is absolutely none in Poli. Sci. 101.

Groeme Hicks (IUC)

Community Issue was an exercise in 'stolid, moralizing prose'

Monday's page four editorial, "On dropping 20,000 pink papers in the real world" seemed to cry out in loveless anguish to any sympathetic soul willing to offer attention. So here is a critique which — while hopefully not loveless — will be of necessity unsympathetic. You said "...we're still waiting for a reaction..." And you shall wait that way forever. To provoke a response from any given matrix one must initially interject a stimulus. The Community Issue hardly qualified as a stimulus. Sedative would be more appropriate. Even that is too generous.

In one Kensington poultry shop I observed the management meticulously tearing and crumpling unread Varsities for — you've guessed it — kittylitter for their live roosters. Unless roosters read, I am forced to conclude that all those pages of scintillating Varsity prose wound up as soggy wadding full of scared-to-death chicken droppings. There are two main reasons for this pungent fate; the content of the paper and the actual form of this content.

Content. The Community Issue took the world very seriously. This aspect of the issue obviously turned people off. They don't want your social conscience. Many people are tired of bad news; some are fed-up with all news. I'm not implying a value-judgment; I'm just trying to look at what is happening. If you fail to communicate with what is happening, then as journalists you might as well pack it in.

Look at recent events on campus, then try to understand student response to these events:

Why did less than one-third of the eligible voters bother marking up ballots over the CUS affair? Why are CUG meetings folding because no one bothers showing up? Why has SAC been reduced to a floating seminar in irrelevant rhetoric? Why were the Moratorium Day activities ruined by a handful of anal-retentive ideologues and largely ignored by everyone else? I know this sounds subversive but... people are fed up with politics.

The Varsity has of late tried to include more non-political material in its campus editions; the recent torays into satire, cartoons and creative journalism were most refreshing, and incidentally very effective politically. But along comes the Community Issue and we regress forty decades back to the politics of boredom. What makes you think the surrounding community's reading tastes are different?

But if the content was stiling, the form was a complete shutdown. Catchy layout, photos and graphics cannot disguise the inadequacy of a papers' writing. An enduring Varsity irony is that the paper always looks better than it is. The Community Issue was pleasant to look at but oh so bad, bad, bad to read. If you don't enjoy doing something, then don't do it.

The general style level of the entire issue, with the possibly exception of Ray Conlogue's bit, was abysmally dull and lifeless. This is going to sound malicious but I'm afraid it is sadly true. If you had inserted simple announcements at the end of each article stating that the first ten people to phone the Varsity office would receive a cash award, I honestly doubt that you would have received more than fifty responses. Fifty out of thirty-eight thousand. Think I'm kidding? Then try it next time. My estimate is based on the hypothesis that substantially less than one per cent of the Community Issue articles were read through from beginning to end. Not even an intrepid cereal-box reader could have chopped through the dry-rot jungles of all that stolid Varsity moralizing prose.

Bill Templeman

POOR STUDENTS

Low on bread for Christmas presents? Cheer up! The Textbook Store has gifts you can afford

Inflatable Zodiac Cushions
Cedar Mounted Prints (looks good, smells good)
Silk screened, hand finished Linen Place Mats
Records (the new Donovan)
Books (e.g. The Impacted Lower Third Molar $1.98)

Starts Wed, November 26 and if you're really desperate, just say "Charge it!"

THE TEXTBOOK
STORE

Dining with Jane

Even with doors open, Great Hall is still "If-ish"

By JANE HOLLINGWORTH
Male chauvinists! Your panic's showing! Hart House is opening its massive gates to second-class citizens.

Half-suspecting a Massey College-type hoax, this female walked into Hart House not once but three times (count them!) last week. None of the forays was what you could term a mind-blowing experience.

In fact, male reaction was less ego-boosting than what you get from an Engineering class or a football team's change room. Generally, you can get just as good stares on any downtown corners as you get from Hart House habitués.

Some of the comments, however made the whole effort worth-while (although nothing is worth the effort it takes to down a Hart House milkshake).

Comments ranging from "if you're ever taken to the Upper Gallery for dinner, get measured for your wedding gown" to "if I see any more girls in here I'm going to take a bunch of guys into Benson Building", came from inmates who proved vocal as well as opinionated.

After my first visit to the Great Hall, a university dining room straight out of "If", a male asked, "Have you seen the Tuck Shop at 1 o'clock? We're crawling over each other."

Naturally I rushed over to see this inter-faculty sport and it was all true. For a quiet male retreat (retreat from what?) this scene was anything but soothing: all the noise, crowds and cafeteria smell of a high-school lunch room.

For any girls planning a Great Hall lunch — and there have been very few so far — there is the pleasure of eating off "Hart House" china.

Everyone should stir their hart photo by errol young

Post-liberation scene at Hart House Great Hall.

coffee with a genuine silver "Hart House" spoon at least once: it makes up for all the paper-cup swill.

Still, unless you're a girl with an extraordinary sense of direction, the male bastion will remain just that. A favorite male ploy is to casually mention some room he "always" likes to relax in, a room you didn't even know existed.

Finally, take advantage of the open-door policy but: don't wait for anyone to push the big front door for you — lean on it hard and you'll manage; don't stand gazing at the sculpture on the first landing — it's an obvious tourist move; don't shyly approach the hall porter for directions — he already knows you're lost.

Militant feminism aside, it's nice to visit but I wouldn't want to live there.

DRESSES DRESSES

THE DRESS BOUTIQUE

La Ronde

131 BLOOR WEST
THE COLONNADE

DRESSES DRESSES

GENERAL MEETING

Political Economy Course Union
To Elect Members To Ad Hoc Committee On CUG

WED. 1:00 P.M.
S.S. 2102

Graduating students in:

COMPUTER SCIENCE
MATHEMATICS & PHYSICS
MATHEMATICS

are invited to discuss a career opportunity in

ELECTRONIC DATA PROCESSING

during an On-Campus interview
DECEMBER 11 & 12, 1969

Crown Life Insurance Company

120 Bloor Street East,

Toronto 5

Firings follow the
SFU strike failure

BURNABY (CUP) — Twelve teaching assistants who took part in the recent strike at Simon Fraser University have been dropped by the university's political science, sociology and anthropology department.

The 12 were passed over by a committee — which included Robert Wyllie, chairman of the PSA Department, and two graduate students — which was hiring teaching assistants for the coming term. A PSA announcement said enrolment would be cut by two-thirds in the lower-level PSA courses and there would be no classes for the assistants to teach.

But David Adair, one of those whose contract was not renewed, charged that all those who worked during the strike were re-hired.

The 41-day strike, supported by 700 PSA faculty and students, protested administrative interference in the department. SFU President Kenneth Strand broke the strike by suspending striking teachers and obtaining a court injunction prohibiting further protest.

SAC picks a winner -- Sewell in 7

By KAREN COULTER

Aldermanic candidate John Sewell couldn't quite buck the growing tide of New Democratic popularity in Ward 7.

Sewell, who had received financial support from SAC, conducted his campaign upon the single issue of "giving the people a voice".

In his near-deserted campaign headquarters, the usually laconic Sewell, paced the floor in high-heeled cowboy boots, studied the returns, and predicted that the "good" pools were still to come.

As the NDP's Karl Jaffary edged up to a 386 vote lead, he made it quite clear that second place wasn't really good enough.

Every so often, someone wondered aloud how Margaret Campbell was doing.

Over at Regent Park United Church the atmosphere was hardly more festive. There, Sewell's wife, Diana, presided over a home-made cookies-and-cake reception and answered some reporter's corny questions about her faith in her husband, etc.

Students, young lawyers, and urban poor huddled around the television and made gloomy predictions about the prospects for change. The only tie of the evening was worn by Sewell's father, a corporation lawyer.

When Sewell arrived shortly after ten o'clock, the applause was of a cautious, wish-we-could-have-gone-all-the-way-for-you nature.

Climbing onto a chair, Sewell rejoiced: "We have just knocked Sigsworth (Oscar, the incumbent) out of municipal politics—perhaps forever!"

Reaffirming his distrust of politicians, he asked his supporters to stay involved and passed his father's hat to help cover campaign expenses.

CLASSICAL CONCERT TODAY

Music Room, 1-2 p.m.

ESTHER GARTNER

Cellist

Ladies Welcome

CAMERA CLUB TODAY

Club Room, 1:10 p.m.

8 x 10 BLACK AND WHITE

Maximum - 4 Prints

Judge: MR. FRANK RDYAL

THE CHAPEL

ALL BELIEVERS IN GOD ARE INVITED TO PRAY IN THE HART HOUSE CHAPEL EVERY THURSDAY FROM 8:00 a.m. TO 5 P.M.

VARSITY TABLE TENNIS TOURNAMENT

Date: December 13, 1969

Time: 1 p.m.

Place: Lower Gym, Hart-House

Register: Hall Porter's Desk

Fee: 25c

STEAK & CHAMPAGNE

AT THE

NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL

Tickets $17 couple on Sale Now

Hall Porter and Undergrad. Office

VICTORIA COLLEGE DRAMATIC SOCIETY

presents

JEAN ANOUILH'S ANTIGONE

DIRECTED BY ROBERT GAILBRAITH

DEC. 2-6

8:30 p.m.

NEW VIC THEATRE

NEW ACADEMIC THEATRE

TICKETS IN WYMLWOOD OR AT THE OORR

Sewell scons the poll results

photo by karen coulter

Minutes, correspondence, etc....

Tonight's merry meeting of the Students' Administrative Council commences at 7 p.m. in the Alumnae Hall of Victoria College.

You can come and hear your elected representatives fight over some of the following topics:

- Danny Drache's Research Report. CUG has agreed to publish 150 copies, but will control distribution.

- The advisability of a SAC-controlled page in The Varsity.
- A discussion of current and future events with regard to the CUG report and its implementation.

- A report from the Services Commissioner on the operation of the co-op book store.

- Also: Rites of Spring, Point Blank School, the Toronto Research Group, Praxis, the housing project, and the prob- lem of SAC lawyers.

- Not to mention old favourites like minutes, correspondence, announcements, etc.

TCI

A BETTER WAY TO UNDERSTAND LITERATURE

When you need the best help for your literature class.

For papers.

For exams.

For class discussion.

Pick up a book in this new series.

Twentieth Century Interpretations.

"TCIs" give you more help.

More help than any so-called "literary study guide."

Better help.

No conned opinions in a "TCI."

Just great criticism.

The best. Written by the best critics of our time.

Buy a new "TCI."

They cost $1.50.

TWENTIETH CENTURY INTERPRETATIONS

"A & A BOOK STORE"

351 Yonge St. Toronto, Ontario

Hours 7 A.M. - 12 P.M.

364-6271

HAMILTON (CUP) — In an unanimous vote last night, the McMaster University student representative assembly threw the university's student union solidly behind the legalization of marijuana.

The motion, calling for a letter to Health and Welfare Minister John Munroe, passed with little comment. But one councillor was mildly excited about the possibilities of legalization.

"It would sure liven up these meetings," he said.

Northern Electric COMPANY LIMITED

ELECTRICAL - MECHANICAL - INDUSTRIAL

ENGINEERS '70 GRADS

Canada's largest manufacturer of telecommunications equipment will be holding interviews at

University of Toronto
December 11 and 12, 1969

Principal plants, offices and laboratories are in Montreal, Toronto, London, Belleville, and Ottawa. For information and an appointment, see your Placement Office.

Letter from Hong Kong.

by Joseph

Hong Kong is a crowded city with four million people in an area of 3½ square miles.

The city is a major port in the Far East as well as a leading financial centre. And the skyline from Victoria Peak is even beautiful.

But then, no one lives in the office buildings. The area is really a mixed bag of incredible material goods and great natural beauty, of British colonialism and Chinese industriousness, of great wealth and much poverty.

Tourists seldom see the poverty — the rural areas, the squatter sites, the crowded reclamation areas and the fishing villages. But these places exist even without the beautiful skyline, the travel folders and the tourists.

And the people, they exist too — for awhile. They inevitably have children — too many of them. And they all die, some of old age, but many of TB, gastroenteritis and a whole host of other diseases which are prevalent where poverty and poor sanitation exist.

Education is marginal and illiteracy high. Earnings are small and opportunities are limited. It is in these areas where Project Concern does its work to provide dental, medical and educational facilities. There are four clinics in all, all under staffed, undersupplied and overworked.

GOLD TEETH

The old Walled City is the location of the oldest clinic, established seven years ago. One of the streets in the area is lined with dental clinics specializing in replacement rather than repair (gold & silver teeth are status symbols among the poor). These "shops" are run by dentists from mainland China whose qualifications are not recognized by the Hong Kong Government. Consequently they operate illegally.

Between two of these dental shops is a narrow "street-alley" that descends about 15 feet while the smell ascends to greet you halfway. The clinic is here, amidst ragged little children, ratty looking dogs (man — you wouldn't believe it!) and crowded, unsanitary conditions that would make Cabbage-town look like Bayview and York Mills.

Three other clinics have also been built, two of which I saw, the Jordan Valley Clinic and the floating clinic — Yauh Oi (Brotherly Love). The facilities vary in size and equipment.

The oldest one was by far the smallest and most poorly equipped whereas the floating clinic has a radiological unit with an X-ray technician and 2 foreign nurses (from Australia when I visited it).

Most of the doctors, however, are from mainland China although an occasional foreign doctor is present (i.e. from Australia, New Zealand, Canada or the U.S.). Volunteer staff remain two to six months usually.

EDUCATION

There is also a new clinic being prepared in the Wan Shan resettlement area to serve 176,000 people. Although it will be the largest clinic it will still be considerably understaffed.

However, all the clinics are faced with the same tasks — educating the people to take care of themselves, family planning and providing curative and preventative care to people whose concept of sanitation consists of shitting over the side of a boat.

There are two basic problems which any medical project faces in the Far East. The first is sanitation, the second birth control.

One cannot feel sympathy for people in these situations without feeling a certain measure of frustration. Frustration not merely because you feel peo-

Joseph Blankier graduated from U of T last year and is now The Varsity's Travel Editor. He is on a trip around the world, mailing us reports from his various stopping points.

His last letter was from Berkeley a couple of months ago. Now he's in Hong Kong. This time he enclosed some snapshots he took with his faithful companion Brownie.

Next stop: Saigon. (And we're not even paying postage.)

Canadian lab photo

ple should not be living in such conditions (a value judgement) but to a greater degree because one is faced with a lack of total understanding of the situation and its context. It is in a struggle to try and comprehend the "whys" the "hows" and their implications that one faces the greatest dilemma.

Anyone who speaks of such conditions (in the Orient, at least) solely in terms of a political context surely does not speak from experience. Such problems involve at least if not more a cultural and social aspect than a political one.

But it is important to try to understand the people one is trying to help and have some concept of the consequences of such help — not in idealistic terms but in realistic ones.

To impose change will not necessarily alleviate a problem. It will merely place it in a different context.

Perhaps some people will accuse me of creeping cynicism or more likely of just plain "chickenshit", but when you have seen poverty, not just in HKG, but in Japan, Okinawa, Taiwan and the Philippines and realize that you will see worse still in S.E. Asia & India, it's difficult not to become either a victim of cynicism or at the very least feel intensely frustrated.

LOOK POOR

The people I have seen and of whom I now speak look poor. You know what I mean — they look poor! Their clothes may betray them, but their faces do a far better job. The little children present an especially sad and ironic picture. Whereas the parents may be illiterate, the children are still innocent. It's sad because they are simply not aware of their future or lack of one.

I suppose one might even say that the irony is heightened by the realization that there are too many children. It is not at all an original thought that the poor tend to be prolific. But the reasons for this probably vary to some degree with the society. However, family planning is of necessity desirable in poorer areas, the fishing villages particularly.

Nevertheless Project Concern has met with mixed reaction in their family planning work. Although the women seem to support the idea, the men are rather opposed. The reason is quite simple, really. The father does not have to worry about the extra mouths to feed, nor the bodies to look after. The only consequence for him is that he has extra hands and feet to do the required work.

This problem is an indication of my meaning when I say that problems of poverty are social as well as cultural, not simply political or medical.

You who read this may find that I've concluded rather abruptly. Well you're quite right, I have. My intention is to give you my impressions; not to recommend methods of change.

Certainly, I do have some opinions but it would hardly be fair to either of us to include them because 1) they are still in a state of flux, as they should be and 2) this column is not a forum for debate across 12,000 miles.

Dr. Frank J. B. Hooper of Vancouver on duty at the Floating Clinic.

ANNOUNCING!!!

HART HOUSE
NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL

9 p.m. — 3 a.m.

- * DANCING
- * DINING
- * SINGING
- * FIRESIDE ROOMS
- * DANCING
- * DINING
- * CHAMPAGNE
- * DANCING
- * SINGING

All for only $17 a couple

Tickets: Hall Porter
& Undergraduate Office

- * DANCING * DINING
- * SINGING * CHAMPAGNE

One Year Before the Mast

Are you interested in sailing the Pacific July 1971 to July 1972. Join us. We're four students seeking like-minded people for this serious adventure. Women Welcome.

Organizational Meeting
North Sitting Room
Hart House
Dec. 4 — 5:15 P.M.

ANNOUNCING!

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS TREE

WED. DEC. 10, 1969 GREAT HALL, HART HOUSE

GLEE CLUB, CAROL SINGING
POETRY READING

ADMISSION FREE!

We the undersigned demand immediate action to secure the release of the two innocent Israeli citizens who are now unlawfully being detained in Syria following their forcible removal from a commercial flight to Tel Aviv
August 29, 1969.

Please sign this and bring it with you.
Buses leave for airport from Sidney Smith, 2:00 p.m., December 4th.

CLASSIFIEDS

TYPING thesis, essays, notes, charts. English French, other languages. Mimeographing, electric typewriters. Mary Dale Scott (M. Davies) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225, 922-7624

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Day you buy a diamond" H. Procter and Co., 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416, 921-7702

SALTY DOG Discotheque will rent premises Monday to Thursday day or evening. For information call A. Curry 984-7080 or 633-2677

APT. TO SHARE — Male — Student or staff — Mostly furnished — Available immediately Call Bruce 787-7625

EMPEROR JONES reigns at Hart House Theatre Dec. 4, 5, 6 8:30 p.m. Tickets at Lit. Refectory Theatre $1.50.

DIAMOND RINGS from importer, high quality, low prices. Call 368-9474 for a private appointment. Under no obligation

JAPANESE: Tutor wanted for beginners. Phone 249-0623 before 6 p.m.

TYPING DONE — for fast efficient service phone 769-6065

3 GIRLS WANTED to join a household at 35 Madison Ave., 1 place available immediately, 2 more on Jan. 1. Call 921-4970 or drop-in at 35 Madison

B.A. '70 (GENERAL ARTS)? "What do I do with it?" — For suggestions, send your resume we campus mail to Rm. 333, 121 St. Joseph.

DIAMONDS, RUBIES, sapphires, emeralds, opals, certified quality in unexcelled designs. Remarkable new merchandising method saves you more money than you spend. Toronto Jewellery Exchange 21 Adelaide St. W., 368-4466

TYPIST WITH ELECTRIC MACHINE, experienced with everything from term essays to publishers manuscripts for books 45¢ per page 3¢ each additional copy. Phone 489-2367

"AFTER SIX" or "Po Szóstce" — the new concept of socializing "po polsku" Come and discover. Every Sunday 8:00 P.M. (SPK) Beverley & Cecil. NOTE DEC. 7.

WILL GIRL who wore green mask and carried green biochemistry book while marching in Biafra War protest Thursday night, please contact Bob at 920-6318

FLORIDA — MIAMI share driving or expenses or both, can use our car or yours, leaving Fri. Dec. 19 phone 661-2558

RIDE WANTED to Montreal Friday, December 19 for 2 people Barbara Friedberg, 925-6194

EXECU-SEC Secretarial Services Public stenographers, Essay, Theses — top quality intelligent typing IBM Executive and Selectric Typewriters Mrs. Walker 449-7077 (days) 449-3744 (evenings)

G.S.U. FRIDAY NIGHT DANCE

December 5 - 9:00 p.m.
Admission: $1 ladies $1.25 gents

Music by

'UNDERGRADS'

Interested In Informal Debating?

Interfaculty Debating League Starts Soon

CONTACT: _____

- U.C. - Neil Smith 781-1654
- Wycliffe - W. Steggle 964-9990
- Trinity - Tom Curran 928-2518
- St. Mikes - Dan Lecki 222-7536
- New College - Hersh Gold RU 3-6365
- Other Others - Brian Morgan 928-2517

SAC seeks campus centre money

The Students Administrative Council has again requested Ontario Government help to finance the long-delayed campus centre.

The request came in a brief presented to the Committee on University Affairs, which met a delegation from the University of Toronto yesterday at Erindale College.

The Committee on University Affairs is an advisory body to the Provincial Government. It is composed of various university representatives and laymen.

The SAC brief outlined the lack of eating facilities on the western part of campus and argued a campus centre would provide a focus for student activities at the university. It would contain meeting rooms, office space for campus organizations, recreational facilities and cafeterias.

SAC proposed the centre be located near the corner of Huron and Willcocks Streets, on land which now includes the Faculty Club. It suggested facilities for both staff and students be incorporated under one roof, and pointed out the Faculty Club itself is "no longer adequate".

Following a plea by GSU President Michael Vaughan for a new graduate student complex, CUA member Leslie Frost, former Ontario Premier, asked whether Hart House couldn't be expanded and adapted into a student centre.

SAC president Gus Abols replied that Hart House itself is now badly over-taxed, and Prof. L. Lynch pointed out that it was not designed to serve as a student union building.

HERE AND NOW

TODAY ALL DAY

Tickets for HAIR at a 10 per cent discount. Show dates: Wed Jan 28, Thurs Jan. 29, and Sun. Feb 1. Orders (cash or cheque) accepted now at Innis II, 63 St. George St., Room 110, 202. Today and everyday.

Exhibition of drawings by Jeremy Smith Buttery, Trinity.

9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Final day to submit nominations for positions on the TUGS (Toronto University Geographical Society) Executive. Submit to TUGS mailbox, Rm. 5047 Sid Smith

12:15 p.m.

Pollution Probe is showing half-hour film "Water" — third of a series of six TV programs ("Nature of Things") on pollution entitled "Oanger — Man at Work." Ramsay Wright — Harbord St. entrance. Rms 133, 131, 102, 104 MPCSU physics film "The Zero Gradient Synchrotron": Elementary particle research at the Argonne labs. New Physics. Rm. 102.

1 p.m.

Yavneh presents Simon Pellman who will speak on the life of Rabbi Shimon Raphael Hirsch. Sid Smith. Rm 2129.

Hart House Camera Club. Judging of members 8x10 prints in club room. Lecture on advanced printing in the evening. Check bulletin board for more details.

Institute for the History and Philosophy of Science and Technology presents Oerek J. de Solla Price, Avalon Professor of the History of Science, Yale University, talking on "Historical Relations Between Science and Technology." Rm. 202. New Physics Bldg.

The third of four classical concerts: Esther Gartner, cellist. Ladies Welcome. Admission free. Music Room, Hart House.

Nomination Meeting — TUGS executive. Last chance to nominate for all executive positions. Candidates will speak. Rm. 622. Sid Smith General Meeting of the Political Economy Course Union to elect members to ad hoc committee on CUG. Sid Smith Rm 2102.

4 p.m.

F.U of T Third World film and discussion group — "Malcolm X — a Tour of North Africa by Malcolm X (Afro American Productions).

5:15 p.m.

Sergel Eisenstein's "Ivan the Terrible" Part I. Admission 75c. All welcome. Also at 8:30. Rm 2118. Sid Smith.

8 p.m.

W.C. Fields Movie: Six of a Kind. New College — Wetmore Hall.

8:30 p.m.

Jean Anouilh's Antigone, directed by Robert Gelbraith. New Vic Theatre. New Academic Bldg. Vic.

THURSDAY 12:15 p.m.

Pollution Probe is showing half-hour film "Air" — fourth of a series of six TV programs ("Nature of Things") on pollution entitled "Oanger — Man at Work." Ramsay Wright — Harbord Street Entrance. Rms. 133, 130, 102, 104

12:30 p.m.

Meeting of all students interested in liberating the Trinity Buttery, UCJCR.

1 p.m.

If you believe in God you are invited to use Hart House Chapel anytime Thursdays to pray for your areas of interest and concern.

Information meeting with opportunity to talk to returned volunteers and learn the terms of CUSO service. CUSO Office, International Students Centre.

Yavneh presents Rabbi N. L. Rebinovitch of Clinton Park Synagogue who will give a lecture on "Problems of Secular or Religious State in Israel". Rm. 2129. Sid Smith.

There will be a meeting to discuss the changes in 3rd and 4th year of next year's Arts and Science program. All students are cordially invited to attend. Rm. 2135. Sid Smith

2 p.m.

Regular meeting of the Aryan Affairs Commission. Discussion will include forthcoming beehall purchase and opening of Hart House. Rm. 666. The Grounds

4 p.m.

Meeting of the Hellenic University Society. ISC Morning Room.

5 p.m.

All are invited to meet with the Versity Christian Fellowship for supper at 5:15 in the Meds Building Cafeteria, at 6:30 in Rm. 2173. Don Freeman will continue sharing some insights into Christianity through Ephesians. Meds Bldg Cafeteria

5:15 p.m.

Trin-UC Classics Club Christmas Banquet. Prof. Bognani of Trent U will speak on "Eating up the Past". Admission $3.25. Students. $4.25 faculty. Scott's Restaurant, 11 Bloor St. W.

8 p.m.

Jean Anouilh's Antigone, directed by Robert Gelbraith. New Vic Theatre. Vic New Academic Bldg.

3 one-act plays by Pinter, Strindberg and J. M. Morton, directed by Norme Levine and Nigel Spencer. Admission free. Studio Theatre — 4 Glen Morris (between Huron and Spadina)

Students' Administrative Council
University of Toronto
HIGH SCHOOL ORGANISER

DUTIES

- i) Broaden Free University of Toronto to include introductory courses on the university or other courses high school students may desire.
 - ii) Creating links between existing high school organizations
 - iii) Act as a resource person when students ask for information. The person must have the organizational ability and the necessary material available.
 - iv) Research into high school problems with some concentration on the problems of transfer from high school to university.
 - v) Establishing links in communication between free schools and potential free schools.
 - vi) Organizing some form of news paper.
- JANUARY 70 TO JUNE 70
SALARY $95 PER WEEK
PLEASE APPLY
before December 5 1969
- EXTRA-CURRICULAR AFFAIRS
COMMISSIONER
UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
STUDENTS'
ADMINISTRATIVE COUNCIL
UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

CAMP STAFF

Manitou-wabing Camp of Fine Arts

Now accepting applications from counsellors, assistants and instructors in the following:

Sailing, Water-Skiing, Swimming, Canoeing and Tripping, Golf, Tennis, Riding, Riflery, Fencing, Music (String and wind players), Guitar, Drama, Drawing and Painting, Graphics, Pottery, Sculpture. Some executive positions open. Section Heads.

Graduate and undergrad, students with experience, call RU, 3-6168 or write 821 Eglinton Avenue West, Toronto for applications and further information.

Graduating students in:

MATHEMATICS & PHYSICS MATHEMATICS
ACTUARIAL SCIENCE

are invited to discuss your future in an

ACTUARIAL CAREER

during an On-Campus interview

DECEMBER 12, 1969

Crown Life Insurance Company

120 Bloor Street East,

Toronto 5

Firestone

TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY OF CANADA LIMITED to interview Dec. 12 on campus

CHEMICAL, MECHANICAL and ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING, HONOURS CHEMISTRY
'70 GRADUATES

We invite prospective graduates to read our literature in the Placement Office and attend interviews.

The University College Players' Guild

presents

EMPEROR JONES

by Eugene O'Neill

directed by Mark Manson

Hart House Theatre

December 4, 5, 6 8:30 p.m.

Admission $1.50

Hoechst is Engineering

And plenty of it. Hoechst has over a full century of research and achievement to draw upon—products and ideas that have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents.

But big as we are in this area we're more than just engineering. We're medicine too, and chemistry and plastics and dyes. And marketing. And ideas. Ideas most of all. Ideas about the future, about people's needs and wants. About how to meet those needs and wants. Good ideas, young ideas. Your ideas maybe.

If you'd like to know more about Canadian Hoechst, write our Head Office.

CANADIAN HOECHST LIMITED

3400 JEAN TALON STREET WEST MONTREAL • ASSOCIATES OF FARBERWERKE AG WEST GERMANY

A CENTURY OF SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT THROUGH RESEARCH

against Jesus?

But have you ever been fair enough to give him a hearing? Now you can read and study what he said and inspired others to write. And no one will call on you, unless you ask for it. Send for your free correspondence course.

to: Bible Studies
Box 644, Station Q,
Toronto 7, Ontario.

name: _____
address: _____

please check main interest:

- basic Bible study
- Christian doctrine
- the Christian life
- other: _____

GETTING ENGAGED?

"Star-Glo"

- .42 Carat Diamond
- 18 Kt. Gold Setting $300.00
- Excellent Clarity
- Excellent Colour

Also Available in 1/4, 1/3 and 1/2 Carat Sizes

WE ARE DIRECT
DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.

DIAMOND DEALERS
131 BLOOR W. STE. 416
921-7702

What dirty film??

If you don't see so good, it's like having a dirty film over your eyes—or maybe you've just got badly scratched glasses. So get your eyes tested, then come choose from our fantastic collection of futuristic frames. We're Braddack Optical just round the corner at 158 St. George. And as a student, we give you 20% off.

Fencers over Mac 16-11; prep for rematch

Blues delicately carved their victory in the annals of their first visit to the new McMaster athletic complex.

The sabreurs showed no mercy or perhaps it was the Blues Director sweeping to a 7-3 victory. Hatchinski, undefeated, Moskovits and van Maanen combined for their best action this year.

The epeeists toyed with their opponents but received the same nonchalance from ex-Blue Norman Bradwell restricting their victory to 6 bouts to 3.

The foilists struggled against unusual tactics but the Wong's, Richard and Oscar, collected three valuable victories in their 3-6 defeat.

The rock like performance of Bradwell accounted for 6 of the 11 Mac victories in the 16-11 Varsity victory.

This Saturday in the Main Gym of Hart House a rematch gives you the chance to see both our teams in battle array.

photo by brian r sweet

TAKE THAT, KNAVE!!
Varsity foilist Richard Wong

Blues host improved Gryphons tonight

Varsity hockey Blues had the Midas touch last Friday when they really didn't need it, and coach Tom (Goldfinger) Watt is hoping the same fantastic luck continues tonight when the injury-riddled team just might need a few breaks.

Last week Blues opened defense of their SIHL crown with a ridiculously easy 14-1 win over an out-classed and out-lucked Western Mustangs team that was still suffering from the effects of a tough game the previous night.

Tonight, Blues will face much sturdier opposition from the rejuvenated Guelph Gryphons. Game time is 8 pm at Varsity Arena.

Gryphons are coached by former Varsity defense star Dave Chambers, a fixture of Toronto's championship team in 1961-62. Guelph captain is Jim Wilson, who played defense for Varsity in 1965-66.

Chambers came to Guelph this year from Saskatchewan and reportedly persuaded several of his better players from the West to follow suit.

In any case, Gryphons, once SIHL pasties, are a tough, hard checking club quite capable of producing an upset. They've already scared Waterloo, and should give Blues a solid effort tonight.

JIM WILSON
Now Captains Guelph

ENGINEERING GRADUATES

The Inland Steel Company, Indiana Harbor Works, East Chicago, Indiana invites you to investigate our many career opportunities. Consult the specific job description in the pocket of our brochure. Our representatives will be on your campus on

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1969

INLAND STEEL COMPANY
INDIANA HARBOR WORKS
EAST CHICAGO, INDIANA

We are an Equal Opportunity Employer in the Plans for Progress Program

SPECIAL EXTENSION

TO ENROLL FOR YOUR
UNIVERSITY
HEALTH AND ACCIDENT PLAN

IS YOUR PROTECTION MISSING?

A MAN WITHOUT INSURANCE
IS LIKE A SNAIL WITHOUT A SHELL

THREE PLANS TO CHOOSE FROM

PLAN I

EXTENDED HEALTH CARE

NO DEDUCTIBLE ON ACCIDENT BENEFITS

PLAN II

OVERSEAS AND AMERICAN STUDENTS

STUDENTS ON STUDENT VISA

PLAN III

NEWLY LANDED IMMIGRANT

INTERIM HOSPITAL COVERAGE
EXTENDICARE PLUS LIFE

LIFE

$10,000 FOR $22.00 A YEAR

USE REGULAR APPLICATION

You need this coverage if you fall under one of the following categories:

1. Canadian students who are covered by OHSIP and OHSC and need extended health care
2. Students in Canada on a student visa and are not covered by OHSIP or OHSC
3. Students in Ontario from another province who do not have coverage from that province
4. Newly landed immigrant students who are required to wait three months for the provincial plans to become effective.

ADMIN. — JOHN INGLE,
700 BAY ST. 364-4114
BAY AT GERRARD

NOTE If you have not received your brochure, additional forms may be obtained of the Registrar's office, Student Council Office, Graduate Studies Office, International Students' Centre the Health Service, or Faculty Offices.

EMPLOYMENT INTERVIEWS

Cominco Ltd. invites applications for permanent and summer employment from graduating students and post graduates in Geological Engineering and Honours Geology; and from Class of 1971 geology students for summer employment only.

Interviews with Cominco representatives:

DECEMBER 5, 1969—For Summer Employment Only
DECEMBER 11, 1969—For Permanent Employment Only

Further details available from Student Placement Office.

Westinghouse

WILL BE ON CAMPUS DECEMBER 11, 12, & 13, 1969
 TO INTERVIEW 1970 ENGINEERING GRADUATES

A well-defined training program is offered to prepare candidates for positions of responsibility in:

DESIGN AND DEVELOPMENT ENGINEERING
 RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT
 MANUFACTURING ENGINEERING
 INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING
 FACTORY ENGINEERING
 SERVICE ENGINEERING
 FIELD INSTALLATION
 TECHNICAL MARKETING AND SALES

These positions will afford opportunity for career development to graduates with potential.

Professional salary scale and increases based on performance as well as excellent employee fringe benefit plans.

Contact the Placement Office for detailed information, brochures and interview appointment.

goals

brian

r.

sweet

Three of Blues 14 goals in last week's win over Western. At top, Varsity rookies Reb Ellis (7) and George Nuppola (21) join Mustangs Greg Care (7) and Dick Oudekerk (20) in watching yet another Blues shot whistle past goalie Pat Crandall (11). Middle pic shows eight-year veteran Bryan Tompson (17) slipping the puck (arrow) past Crandall during a supposed Western power play. At bottom, starting Stangs goalie Dave Duncan sadly watches as Mike Cyr's shot settles to the bottom of the cage at 2:20 of the first period. Duncan muffed two of the three shots he faced and was replaced without further adieu.

St. Michael's College Teach-in on CUG

Thursday, December 4
 and
 Friday, December 5
 STUDENT - FACULTY CENTRE

COLONIAL TAVERN

203 YONGE ST.

MILES DAVIS
 QUINTET

ALL THIS WEEK

Gellius sells organs to children

by GELLIUS

ELECTRIC ORGANS

One of which I have and would like to sell for about $400. It's a Lowrey with two manuals, pedals, recently completely overhauled electronically by the Company, cries and wets its bed, and costs $800 new. Phone me at 922-7787 or come up to 119 Hazelton and take a look.

INTERMEDIATE HOCKEY SELECTIONS

(edited by Miss Boyd)

Whittaker, Gee, and Marshall were goal-scorers as Vic X blanked Dents E, 3-0.

Music (Martin, Williams, Mills, Eady (2)) 5; Vic VI 0.

Intermediate Hockey Selections (formerly "An Anthology of Intermediate Hockey") will recur from time to time and feature various guest editors. If you have a favourite lousy team, why don't you drop us a line and we'll include it in the next issue. If I feel like it. The Varsity cares.

BASKETBALL

Basketball was discovered by James Naismith (a young Canadian basketball-discoverer)

er) in 1890. One day young Naismith was listening to the radio when Ella Fitzgerald came on. "A tisket, a tasket, a green and yellow basket" she sang. Naismith was puzzled, this seemed like the veriest nonsense. "A tisket" — that was simple enough; the Beatles had just finished singing "Tisket To Ride"; and what could "a tasket" be but a small task? But Naismith was fascinated by the nonsense-word "basket"; so (being a rugged frontier type and all) he decided to build himself the world's first basket. Now, it so happened that the wheel had recently been invented by Naismith's neighbour, Jethro Wheel. So our Hero (Naismith, q.v.) took a wheel just hot from the oven, tacked vertical boards to it and called it a "basket". After that, the rest was easy.

Lloyd Rossman was abducted by Vic supporters shortly before game time and the dastardly deed bore evil fruit as Vic (Franklin 12) beat Meds (Barker 14), 45-39. Rossman is believed to be held in Damascus.

Business (Wilkie 13) 36; PHE B (Cheesman 13) 34.

Oleszkowicz hit for 15 as Innis beat SMC B, 41-31. Thomann on the Totem Pole had 16 in a losing cause (SMC B's, in fact.)

Law (Harrison 12) 36; Scar (Greenspan 11; cf. "When Adam delved and Green span/Who was then the gentleman?") 28.

Schuk had 14 as SGS (Siamese Gefultefish Stockpilers) beat Erin II, 61-16. Johnston had 9 for Erin II.

It was Singer and not the song for Vic as they beat Eng (Grace 8), 30-23. Singer scored 14.

SPORTS SCHEDULES

Dec. 8th To End Term

IMPORTANT MESSAGE Schedules for week of January 5th will be published in the Varsity Wed Dec 17th. Copies will also be available at the Intramural office

HOCKEY

Mon Dec 8	12 30	St M E	vs	II Elec	Murray, Barnhouse
	1 30	Tnn D	vs	Vic X	Murray, Barnhouse
	7 00	Vic I	vs	St M A	Sullivan, Miller
	8 15	PHE A	vs	Law I	Sullivan, Miller
	9 30	Innis I	vs	Knox	Boland, Cyr
	10 30	Med B	vs	III Mech	Boland, Cyr
Tues Dec 9	1 30	For B	vs	Law IV	Allen, Kolin
	7 00	Tnn A	vs	5r Eng	Bullock, Hemphill
	8 15	Scar	vs	Dent A	Bullock Hemphill
	9 30	Bus I	vs	St M B	Koutsaris, Ellis
	10 30	IV Ind A	vs	III Ind B	Koutsaris, Ellis
Wed Dec 10	12 30	Vic V	vs	III Chem	Richardson, Seckington
	1 30	IV Civil	vs	Emman	Richardson, Seckington
	5 30	Arch	vs	New I	Bullock, Gordon
	9 15	Ern	vs	Med A	Bullock, Gordon
	10 30	St M F	vs	II Civil	Bullock, Gordon
Thur Dec 11	1 30	Tnn B	vs	Vic III	Allen, Dubnak
	7 00	For A	vs	Vic II	Dubniak, Barnhouse
	8 15	Campus	vs	U CII	Dubnak, Barnhouse
	9 30	Vic VII	vs	Med C	Nebata, Bertrand
	10 30	Bus II	vs	III Civil	Nebata Bertrand
Fri Dec 12	2 30	PHE A	vs	Trn A	Richardson, DesRoches
	1 30	Law I	vs	Vic I	Richardson, DesRoches
	5 00	II Ind	vs	III Ind B	Bullock, Skinner
Mon Dec 15	2 30	PHE B	vs	Jr Eng	Richardson, Murray
	1 30	U CII	vs	Arch	Richardson, Murray
	7 00	St M A	vs	5r Eng	Hemphill, Sullivan
	8 15	Ern	vs	Scar	Hemphill, Sullivan
	9 30	Vic VIII	vs	Med D	Skinner, Miller
	10 30	Dent B	vs	Vic IV	Skinner, Miller
Tues Dec 16	1 30	U C I	vs	Law II	Dubniak, Allen
	7 00	St M B	vs	Oent A	Wright, Gordon
	8 15	Pharm A	vs	New I	Wright, Gordon
	9 30	Campus	vs	Innis I	Klinck Boland
	10 30	Trn C	vs	Pharm B	Klinck, Boland
Wed Dec 17	12 30	IV Chem A	vs	St M D	Bullock, DesRoches
	1 30	IV Mech	vs	PHE C	Bullock, DesRoches

BASKETBALL

Wed Dec 10	5 00	Innis I	vs	Law I	Hafner, Schwartz
	6 30	Ern I	vs	St M A	Don Mockford, Gee
	8 00	Oent A	vs	Tnn A	Doug Mockford, Hummel
(Full length games — ladies welcome)
Thur Dec 11	1 00	St M A	vs	Sr Eng	Doug Mockford, Hummel
	4 00	Arch A	vs	U C II	A Sternberg, Boguski
Fri Dec 12	1 00	Bus	vs	Jr Eng	Saltzman, Boguski
	6 30	Ern I	vs	Med A	Chapnick, Tessis
	8 00	York	vs	Scar	Tessis, Chapnick
(Full length games — ladies welcome)
Mon Dec 15	1 00	U C I	vs	PHE A	Doug Mockford, Schwartz
Tues Dec 16	6 30	Ern II	vs	PHE B	Puzeris, Saltzman, Gee
	7 30	SGS	vs	Pharm A	Puzeris, Gee, Saltzman
	8 30	Med B	vs	Vic II	Saltzman, Gee, Puzeris
Wed Dec 17	6 30	Scar	vs	New I	Chapnick, L Sternberg
	8 00	St M B	vs	Oent A	Hummel, A Sternberg
(Full length games — ladies welcome)

WATER POLO

Tues Dec 9	7 30	St M	vs	PHE	Duval
	8 15	Vic	vs	Med A	Duval
Wed Dec 10	7 30	Law	vs	Med B	Heyduck
	8 15	Trn	vs	For	Brownridge
	9 00	Pharm	vs	U C	Brownridge
Thur Dec 11	7 30	Innis	vs	Eng II	Archibald
	8 15	Dent	vs	Arch	Archibald
Tues Dec 16	7 30	Eng I	vs	Med A	Petzold
	8 15	Vic	vs	St M	Petzold
	9 00	Scar	vs	Med B	Petzold
Wed Dec 17	7 30	Law	vs	Dent	Breech

SQUASH (Schedule resumes Jan 6th)

Tues Dec 9	6 20	Vic I	vs	PHE B
	7 00	St M A	vs	Med A
	7 40	Med 8	vs	Innis
	8 20	New	vs	For
Wed Dec 10	7 00	Law B	vs	Law A
	7 40	Tnn A	vs	Scar
	8 20	Eng	vs	Dent
Thur Dec 11	6 20	PHE A	vs	SGS
	7 00	Trn B	vs	Wyc
	7 40	St M B	vs	Vic II

S.A.C. NEEDS A MINUTE-TAKER

FOR S.A.C. GENERAL MEETINGS

(THIS IS A PAID POSITION)

APPLY: S.A.C. OFFICE

BY DEC. 4-5 P.M.

CAREERS IN SCIENCE

VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS GOVERNMENT OF CANADA
BACHELOR GRADUATES (MAJORS AND HONOURS)

ALL SCIENCES

INTERVIEWS ON CAMPUS
DATE: DECEMBER 11, 1969

DETAILS AND ADDITIONAL INFORMATION AVAILABLE AT YOUR PLACEMENT OFFICE

Public Service of Canada

HAVE YOU TASTED THE ZUMBURGER EXPERIENCE?

ZUMBURGER

Two groovy little restaurants
at Bloor and Yonge, and Bloor and Bay

3 new locations opening soon

If Africa, Asia and South America go communist, don't blame him.

Karl Marx is not responsible for famines in Asia or epidemics in Africa. It's not his fault that the average South American earns 75¢ a day.

All he did was predict the consequences.

That a population living in misery will turn to communism as a way out. Unless something is done to alleviate these conditions.

But the countries themselves don't have the economic resources to make these changes. The U. N. doesn't. Even the United States doesn't.

They need the help of world industry. Particularly U. S. industry.

Industry is in an ideal position to do this. It can deal directly with the people of a country. It can change their lives in a way no government can.

A small case in point: in 1958, Olinkrut, a subsidiary of Olin, bought a paper mill in Igaras, a small town in the remote interior of Brazil.

Igaras was the kind of town on which communism thrives—a declining mill, no doctors, shoeless children, men working an 84-hour week, etc.

It wasn't hard to increase the production of the mill eightfold, to lower hours and raise wages, to reforest the woodlands—but that wasn't enough.

We hired a doctor, nurses, teachers; expanded the school; built a dispensary, a clubhouse; provided free medical and dental care; and medicines at cost to non-employees; financial housing loans and helped set up a cooperative store.

And then the people joined in. They rebuilt their own homes, paid for their own teachers, built and operated their own store and, in effect, revitalized the town.

But the people weren't the only ones to benefit. Olinkrut, a subsidiary of Olin, is now able to start an extensive expansion program.

Igaras, of course, is only one town. But Olin is only one company. Imagine this kind of success multiplied by tens of thousands of companies and towns all over Africa, Asia and South America.

The deeds of industry may well be as important as the gospel of democracy.

Olin

—reprinted from Saturday Review

Poli Sci 101 class members move: "From this day forward this class will not tolerate outside agitation or disruption" while Prof. Thorson (right) looks on. photo by francine sten

SAC rejects motion to investigate Thorson disruption...

The Students' Administrative Council last night expressed concern that there is still no viable interim judicial body.

THE AD HOC COMMITTEE ON THE RESTRUCTURING OF Caput disintegrated during the discipline crisis two months ago. The ATS and SAC are presently locked in a quarrel about the method of selection for the members of the interim disciplinary body.

The ATS has been holding out for appointment by random lot. SAC originally asked for direct appointment but last night agreed to a proposal to appoint 20 candidates and then select the six student representatives by lot from that group. The ATS will still appoint its representatives by random selection.

Council also considered New Left Caucus challenges to the authority of Prof. Thomas Thorson. NLC attacks on Thorson's teaching methods and course content led to their forcible eviction from Political Science 101 by several class members on Monday.

COUNCIL STUDY VETOED

SAC President Gesta Abols suggested the Council conduct a study of the situation because, he said, the time would come "when we have to make a decision on the issue".

But Gerrit Van Geijn (I APSC) said that "this specific instance is none of our business except insofar as it is precedent-setting and has ramifications for the future judicial system."

Services Commissioner Chris Szalwinski expressed reservations about SAC assuming any judicial role. He felt that Abols' suggestion was analogous to the administration reversing or ignoring the work of lower committees and bodies.

Craig Heron (IV UC), course union specialist, agreed, "A formally structured committee imposed from above by the SAC would squash the little bit of initiative that's been sparked in the poli sci course union."

The motion for a study was defeated.

POINT BLANK GRANT

George Martell made a request to Council for a grant of $800 to Point Blank in addition to a previous executive grant of $200.

Point Blank is a small, experimental free school in Cabbagetown. Finance Commissioner Bob James introduced Martell and threw his support behind the request which he said was in line with the educational philosophy of the SAC.

Martell asked about Point Blank's method of selecting and teaching children, replied that anyone who asked was accepted and that it was hoped that the project would be a neighbourhood school involving parents as well as students.

Martell pointed out that Point Blank is approached by many children who have previously dropped out of the school system "because they'd like to learn something serious."

"Clearly many are going to have absolutely no intention of going back into the regular system," he said. Should they wish to, preparation to pass the necessary exams is relatively simple. "It's a six-month job to fit them into University," he said.

The motion granting the $800 carried.

... while Poli Sci 101 discusses course

"I think Thorson's lectures are horrible."

With that sentence Professor Thomas Thorson's, Political Science 101 class broke into open debate, Wednesday, over disruption, Thorson's teaching and the lecture format in general.

"You should be able to challenge the professors," Bob Kincaid, a regular member of the class, suggested.

"Thorson has one point of view but this is still a large class. You can't ask questions throughout all the lecture," said Kincaid.

"You've got to think. He's not going to give you the answers."

Bob Bossin, a teaching assistant who attended the lecture, suggested, "There is a question about a whole system of values here." Challenging the idea that a lecture could be objective, he said, "No such thing can be true, in the sense that a guy is standing up there and laying it on you."

The discussion, which was organized by the Political Economy Course Union, was attended by over three hundred students, many of them not regularly in the class.

Members of the New Left Caucus rubbed elbows with A. C. Hallett, Associate Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science, Jean Smith, Associate Chairman of the department and A. C. Kruger, Undergraduate Secretary of the department, as well as many other curious staff and students.

Discussion was dominated by the members of the class, however, many of whom spoke out in favour of having tutorials and smaller lectures.

Prof. Kruger, expressed a hope that the students and faculty would negotiate on these matters this year.

Bill Orr, that class representative to the PECU, chaired the meeting and commented afterwards, "I thought the discussion was good. I was disappointed that more of the class didn't speak as to why they threw out the agitators on Monday."

He also released the results of a written poll taken during the lecture on the question. In the poll about 35 per cent of the people who evaluated Thorson's lectures felt that they were good or excellent while another 35 per cent considered them poor or of little value. About 90 per cent of those commenting were opposed to the disruption of the lectures.

*Important Varsity staff meeting . . . in the Varsity office today at 1 p.m. . . don't miss it
. . . bring a friend . . .
newcomers come.
Please.*

THE UNIVERSITY OF WESTERN ONTARIO
LONDON, ONTARIO
FACULTY OF ENGINEERING SCIENCE

POST GRADUATE STUDENTSHIPS

in
MATERIALS SCIENCE

Applications are invited from students graduating in 1970 with honors degrees in

METALLURGY, PHYSICAL SCIENCES or ENGINEERING to study for the degrees of

M.E.Sc. and Ph.D. Min. value $3,600

Research areas Corrosion, Mechanical & Electrical Properties,
Phase transformations.

Write to:
Dr. J.P. Brown
Faculty of Engineering
U.W.O. London 72, Ontario

The City's Oldest Surviving Church

LITTLE TRINITY

ANGELICAN - EVANGELICAL MINISTRY:
Rev. Harry Robinson
ASSOCIATE:
Prof. Thomas Harper
Services 11 a.m. & 7 p.m.

Old King St. E. near Parliament

The University College Players' Guild
presents
EMPEROR JONES
by Eugene O'Neill
directed by Mark Manson
Hart House Theatre
December 5, 6 8:30 p.m.
Admission $1.50

Steele's
RESTAURANT - TAVERN

Charcoal-Broiled
Sizzling STEAKS
Served in Burgundy Wine
and succulent ROAST BEEF

Entertainment nightly in the
UPSTAIRS VENETIAN LOUNGE & BAR
Appearing Nightly ANDY NICHOLS

Steele's
TAVERN-RESTAURANT
RM. B-5180 349 YONGE ST.
(fully licensed)

Bloor Street
BLOOR AT HURON

MINISTERS:
THE VERY REV. DR. E. HOWSE
REV. DAVID R. ALLAN
THE REV. DONALD GILLIES
MINISTERS OF MUSIC
10 A.M.
CHURCH SCHOOL SEMINAR
CAMPUS & THE CHURCH
11 A.M.
DR. REX DOLAN
NURSERY CARE DURING SERVICE

R E N T A L S

TYPEWRITERS
ADDING MACHINES
T.V.'S
STEREO TAPE RECORDERS
STEREO RECDRD PLAYERS

698-2589
DANFORTH TYPEWRITER
2940 DANFORTH AVE
FREE DELIVERY

TRINITY UNITED

427 Bloor St. West at Walmar Rd.
Minister:
Rev. J. Robert Watt,
B.A., B.D.
Organist: John W. Linn
11 A.M.

"MIRACLE ENOUGH"
HOLY COMMUNION (OPEN COMMUNION - OF WARM WELCOME TO ALL STUDENTS

YES!

THE U of T CHORUS is alive and well and singing with the Hart House Orchestra this SUNDAY, DECEMBER 7

- * 3:45 P.M. - Scarborough College
(no tickets required)
- * 8:30 P.M. - Great Hall, Hart House

(tickets available at S.A.C. office and from Hart House Hall Porter)

AND IT'S ALL ...
FREE

NEW COLLEGE presents A...

$2/person

PETER SELLERS MARATHON

- 4 BIG MOVIES:
1. "PINK PANTHER"
 2. "WHAT'S NEW PUSSYCAT?"
 3. "A SHOT IN THE DARK"
 4. "CASINO ROYALE"

TONITE! 9:00 P.M. til.....? OLD PHYSICS Rm. #135

SAC holds post mortem on housing project debacle

By PAUL CARSON

In the wake of last Friday's special Varsity Community Issue, the students council informally discussed the demise of the SAC housing project in Kensington after Wednesday's general meeting.

In April 1968, SAC bought a 52,000 square foot lot on the south side of College between Lippincott and Bellevue with the intention of building a high-rise student-operated residence.

But the building never materialized and this summer SAC secretly sold the land to the Toronto Board of Education.

In the interval SAC spent $25,000 for a feasibility study and preliminary plans conducted by U of T architecture professor George Robb, and $18,000 for another report by sociologist David Hunter, a former SAC vice-president (1966-67).

These expenses were recouped in the re-sale of the site to the Board.

About 20 SAC members stayed for the rambling discussion, which was held after the regular meeting adjourned at midnight for lack of a quorum.

Focus of the debate was a personal five-page report on the housing project prepared by Tom Johnson, a third-year architecture student.

INEPT HANDLING BY SAC

Johnson charged SAC's "inept handling of the project has resulted in enormous loss of prestige for the Students Administrative Council" and suggested "sole responsibility for the political consequences of the housing project must ultimately rest with SAC."

Johnson is not a member of SAC and did not become involved in the SAC housing project until after the site was sold to the Board of Education.

Last year, then SAC president Stephen Langdon (IV Trin) outlined SAC's aims as meeting the need for inexpensive student housing on the campus and providing a style of living not available to students in regular university residences.

PRIORITIES SHIFT

However, Johnson claimed, "none of these purposes were accomplished, and SAC retired from the fray with a stunning list of casualties."

SAC got out of the housing project, Langdon said, because "for very good reasons it's political priorities shifted."

"University residences were improving and other issues such as CUG and discipline became more important."

Brian Levitt, former SAC housing director, called Johnson's report "moralistic hindsight" and said current selling practices in Toronto necessitated some kind of secrecy on SAC's part.

"How many times does SAC have to let itself get hit before it hits back?", Levitt asked, defending the sale to the Board of Education without consulting the Kensington Area Rate-payers Association.

Johnson conceded KARA, dominated by self-proclaimed "urban planner" Allan Schwam, "probably doesn't represent the views of most Kensington residents."

Levitt then reminded him that SAC would have been foolish to call for open bidding on the site "since that would just mean handing the land to an apartment developer."

The Board of Education is not allowed to use public money in competitive bidding for land, Levitt pointed out.

EXCELLENT BARGAIN

Langdon added the site was an excellent bargain when first purchased.

"It is close to the university, no demolition was needed, and the price was reasonable," he said.

"I would remind you," Langdon said to Johnson, "that the building could have been completed if we had adopted pure power tactics with the residents."

"Are you seriously suggesting," Levitt asked Johnson, "that SAC throw $70,000 of the students' money away just so some Kensington residents can have one hour of glory at City Council before Cadillac Construction takes over the land? That's ludicrous."

Abols blames Thorson and NLC

SAC President Gus Abols last night struck out at both sides in the confrontation between the New Left Caucus and Prof. Thomas Thorson's Political Science 101 class.

"In my mind, if they (the NLC) wanted to make a legitimate criticism of Prof. Thorson they should have approached the course union, or called a special meeting of the students when there weren't any classes," Abols said.

"It's deplorable that the situation involved actual physical violence," he said, but predicted that "students will continue to resort to violence to protect what they see as their rights" if no standard of discipline is set.

"Thorson's action should certainly be investigated closely," said Abols, "because of what seems to be an implicit condoning of the violence."

On Monday, a dozen students in Thorson's course bodily ejected five NLC members after Thorson asked if the class would permit continued disruption. The conflict culminated two weeks of NLC demonstrations against Thorson.

Abols launched a personal investigation into the events after SAC defeated a motion Wednesday night which would have set up a formal committee to look into the matter. Only about a half dozen members voted for the proposal.

SAC chooses discipline reps

The Students' Administrative Council has appointed its three representatives to the committee to implement the Campobell report on campus discipline.

Wayne Hankey (SGS), Michael Scherk (III UC) and Peter Beyer (II Innis) were chosen to join five faculty members, one GSU member and one part time student member appointment on the committee.

The Campbell report, released during last September's discipline crisis calls for major changes in campus disciplinary procedures.

The implementation committee will help interpret the more ambiguous sections of the report and establish new campus disciplinary structures. Meetings will begin this week.

New College men can't maintain erection

A penis was erected on Sunday night, and stayed that way until Tuesday morning.

Two engineers, with the help of an artiste, spent two hours building the six-and-a-half foot giant out of snow. It rose up in the middle of the New College quad, under the watchful eyes of shy girls peeking through their curtains, and proud guys standing in their rooms.

A petition was started the next morning in the women's residence to demand its removal.

But it got little support, for many of the girls found it funny, and according to one source in the residence, half of them didn't know what it was.

But the main talk in the residence was among those who wanted to know whose it was.

Bill St. Louis (III APSC) and Scott Tiffin, (III APSC) who engineered its construction, said they thought of the idea a few years ago and were happy it had come off so well.

In fact, it was so anatomically perfect, a passing doctor was heard to say that it was one of the best specimens he had ever seen.

The artiste who aided the engineers has not been identified, although some feel he is a campus activist.

On Monday afternoon, two girls walked up to what they felt was a very impressive bit of abstract art, and started patting it, until one of them realized what it was. They screamed and ran away.

The erection finally fell Tuesday morning, when a janitor, acting under administration orders smashed it to pieces with a shovel, starting from the top.

Bill and Scott winced with every strike. Although it is not known which administrator gave the order to cut it down, students are sure that someone was merely satisfying a strong castration complex.

One student, who is a moderate on most issues, denounced the administration for the sinful way it took the situation into its own hands. Once again the administration has rubbed the students the wrong way.

The great end of life is not knowledge but action.
 Thomas Henry Muxley
 It is better to know nothing than to know what ain't so.
 Henry Wheeler Shaw

THE DEFENDANT ALLEGES THIS COURT HAS DEPRIVED HIM OF HIS CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

GAG THE DEFENDANT

THE CO-DEFENDANTS SIDE WITH THE DEFENDANT.

SHACKLE THE CO-DEFENDANTS.

THE PRESS IS CRITICAL.

IMPOUND THE PRESS

THE COUNTRY IS SHOCKED.

SEQUESTER THE COUNTRY.

THE MEASURES TAKEN HERE TODAY ARE ONLY TO INSURE A FAIR TRIAL.

People of Pluralismo – a parable for our time

Once upon a time in the happy land of Pluralismo there lived a voluptuous princess by the name of Shirley. But that's another story. To get back to the original, the happy people in Pluralismo all had the right to say whatever they wanted. They could write whatever they wanted and could go wherever they wanted.

Of course, there were many places they couldn't go, because they were dirty and foul-smelling. And there were many things they didn't care to say because it would make them less happy in the long run. And there were many things they couldn't write because other people who were more important were writing and nobody would listen to them.

Nevertheless, everybody in Pluralismo was very happy. If somebody wanted to get something done, he would make himself important and compete with all the other important people for the sanction of the government of Pluralismo. And everybody was happy.

One day somebody thought: "We could get things done a lot faster if all the important people got together and decided to do the same thing by common decision. If they are important, they know what the happy people of Pluralismo want." So they did just that.

But then they thought, "Well what if more and more people want to become important and start disagreeing with us?" So they made the important people's group very important and the new important people had a hard time becoming very important.

And in this way, the very important people of Pluralismo made decisions very fast. Soon they became so good at it that they didn't have to make decisions at all. And things progressed very well and the happy people of Pluralismo were very happy.

One day one of the very important people of the country came up with a bright idea. "Why don't we kill off all the children under ten years old?" he suggested. In that way we will stop all of them from growing up and becoming important."

"You can't do that – it wouldn't be democratic," said one of the younger very important people.

"You should be the first one to go," shot back the older very important person, but he agreed with the younger very important person, and so the older very important person decided to go on a speaking tour of the country to explain the new plan.

Everywhere crowds listened to him.

They didn't applaud. They didn't boo. They took notes and were very happy.

The older very important person was so encouraged that he wired back to all the very important people to start implementing the plan.

Every crowd listened patiently, took notes and said nothing, even when the older very important person asked for questions.

That was until one day. In the middle of the very important person's speech, a young person in the audience stood up and asked in a very weak voice, "Why".

The crowd became angry. Another person stood up and yelled, "How dare you interrupt. If you don't like it in Pluralismo, you can go to some other country."

And before the young person could say, "But I like living in Plur. . . .", the crowd at the behest of the very important person fell upon the young person and killed him. Then they went back to listening and taking notes.

Editors
 Business Editor
 Associate Business Editor
 News Editors
 City Editors
 Features Editor
 Sports Editor
 CUP Editor
 Photo Editor
 University Assistant
 Advertising Manager
 Editorial Offices
 Editorial Phones
 Advertising Offices

Brian Johnson
 Larry Haven
 Jack MacCarty
 Jim Cairns
 Geoff Meege
 Louis Eichenbaum
 Noel Stackley
 Mary Kate Rowan
 Paul Carson, 923-4053
 Sue Rander
 Mark Rubin
 Harriet Kutchak
 Carol Gordon, 923-8171
 91 St. George Street
 923-8741, 923-8742
 91 St. George, 1st Floor

The Varsity is a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by The Great Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

LETTERS

sent and disruption of classes equivalent?

And as to the 350 students sitting in a lecture hall listening to one man's view of the political status quo — be reminded that lectures are only a minuscule part of any course, and once outside the class students are free to read anything they wish — including NLC literature and Varsity editorials.

You must realize that dissenters and defenders of the status quo have essentially the same view of the opposing side, with the former having the overwhelming advantage of being a minority and being suppressed and, to quote you, blab, blab, blab.

It seems that the silent majority, which is usually content to allow dissenters to shoot all the bull they like providing enough passive and at times active opposition to give dissent a sense of urging and a tinge of martyrdom, finally chose to dissent from the dissenters.

Again the dissent was carried by a minority of students present but this time the majority supported them. If the majority had not supported the action it would have been classed as honorable dissent. Now that they did it becomes violent repression.

Where is the logic?

James Karamitanis (UC II)
 Varsity Reporter.

More letters on Thorson and the NLC

Class voted to expel agitators

In the past two weeks I have been a witness to the "confrontations" between the New Left Caucus and Professor Thorson.

It was unfortunate that the NLC remained oblivious to the fact that we, the students of registered in Political Science 101 were also involved. They infringed on our rights to attend lectures in this subject for a period of two and one half weeks and the only noticeable impression that they made on the majority of students was that they were thickheaded.

The first two bumbling attempts to disrupt our class were ignored as being the actions of an irritating child. On the day of the third eruption, Professor Thorson left it up to the students registered in the class to decide, by rule of majority, whether to allow them to remain. The decision, made both by a show of hands and a vocal vote, was overwhelmingly in favour of asking the agitators to leave.

Professor Thorson requested that they do so. Continued outbursts of "I've got a question" and "We demand that you answer us" left Thorson no other alternative but to discontinue classes. My total pages of notes on that lecture was one line. Oh yes, one member of the NLC reverted to being an ape, or so it seemed. He hopped out of his seat and tore off down the hall of the Old Physics Building, wavy locks flying and arms flapping shouting at the top of his voice, "Thorson, I want to say something to you".

Last Wednesday was a repeat of Monday's lecture, continual interruptions and name calling such as "Communist" and "Marxist". Total number of notes — three lines; it was improving. After all the mid-term test was only four days away. Who's worried?

Now we come to Monday. Seats were hard to find that day. There seemed to be a great many new students. NLC had invaded! Seated throughout the hall they sat, primed and ready to fire. During the first twenty minutes of the class nothing out of the ordinary happened. That is, nothing we were not becoming used to.

A continuous volume of voices chattering away to each other and not listening to any part of the lecture. Professor Thorson was graphically describing the balance of authority and liberty. Voices clamoured to be heard. Petty questions about the exact time of change in the balance. Questions on Marx's theory of revolution. Fingers snapping. Then the great ome came from out of the mouth of a bespectacled NLC. "He is teaching bullshit, the whole course is bullshit". Why do you sit here and take it?"

Well, we did not sit there and take it. Several of the male students with almost total encouragement from the class moved over to the radicals. The NLC was given a choice. We had on three previous occasions shown our desire that they either shut up or get out. Again they were given this choice. Refusing to stop destroying our lectures, they were bodily ejected.

By this time Professor Thorson had left. My term test was that night at 8:00. I had all of fourteen lines from the past five lectures to show for attending class. Blow that test!

The NLC must have planned their publicity very well. On in which an outrageous comparison is made

It has been asserted, with great earnestness and vehemence, that Professor Thorson has bias. Wow — what a great perceptive and profound insight into workings of the human mind! Of course he has opinions (call it nasty fascist propaganda if you wish) just as any intelligent being does who is not entirely a vegetable. It is a perfectly obvious point and applies to any discipline in the humanities. What the clowns in the New Left Caucus want is merely a completely new set of biases — mainly their own.

For the purposes of getting anything done at all it is necessary to hear one set of biases at a time. I have heard Thorson's and the NLC's and I have chosen to hear the former's until Christmas. I want to sincerely apologize for sounding like a stupid fascist but I must admit I like Thorson's opinions — that's right, I really do! I cannot tell a lie!

(b) Another opinion I have heard a lot is that he is not "teaching political science". Obviously it depends on what you mean by the term. Political science is an infinite field of study. It contains such concepts of democracy which we are learning now. It also contains concepts of revolution which this course was not designed to cover. Some people feel that they were betrayed since they didn't learn how to start a revolution. Any course which doesn't deal with it is immediately rotten and decadent. What utter bullshit!

In conclusion, I should like to make an outrageous comparison with the Americans in Vietnam and the NLC. The former are killing, looting and destroying in south-east Asia; the latter are disrupting classes, making silly asses of themselves and impinging on the rights of students chose to learn. Both do so in the name of freedom and democracy!

Lorne Griffith (1 UC)
Poli-Sci 101

Wednesday the Varsity had front page coverage of their childish behaviour. Wednesday's class was useless. Walking to the Old Physics building I heard two male students, (both third year, to judge from their jackets) saying, "I hope something exciting happens and we haven't come here for nothing". The hall was packed by students obviously holding the same viewpoint. They had come like the Roman populace to see a slaughter.

Professor Thorson announced that he had agreed to turn over the last half hour to the Political Economy Course Union for discussion re our present problem in class.

The problem was how to make the NLC realize that they were neither wanted nor accepted in our class. A majority vote seemed to have failed. This is surely an expression of our right as fee-paying students to attend our classes without having to compete with agitators for the attention of our professor. It seems the NLC was against our right to have freedom of assembly to learn. They were so thickheaded that even being removed bodily from the class failed to make an impression.

But, I thought, perhaps the Course Union will enforce or relay forcibly the desire of the majority of the students enrolled in Poli Sci 101 to attend and listen to lectures on that subject.

I should have known better. After listening to ten or eleven different people saying, "But the question here is . . ." I realized that no resolution was going to be set up and voted on by the registered students in this course. Bob Bossin lectured us on the advantages we have now and how it wasn't like that when he was young. He advised us to take action.

We did, but it did not seem to have been understood.

1. We wanted the NLC to stop interrupting our classes.
2. If they wanted to ask questions, Professor Thorson repeatedly stated he would be available after class for discussions, but would they keep their questions until then, as his time was limited.
3. Not content with disrupting the lecture they forced us to use physical strength to eject them.

Can't the NLC take a hint? Professor Thorson finishes teaching this part of the course in two or three weeks.

So far I haven't enough notes in the last three weeks to cover one third of a page of paper, yet alone write tests.

Jeannie Hastie — (1 Vic)

NLC used personal attacks on Thorson

Some comments and observations on the course of events in Poli-Sci 101 this week . . .

. . . an impassioned plea for equality and democracy was made Wednesday by a student who flagrantly displayed his abysmal ignorance of the whole point of the course. He apparently failed to comprehend the most crucial aspect of the term "democracy" — that is an arbitrary, relative concept which can be applied both to totalitarianism and anarchy.

. . . supporters of the New Left Caucus attempted to justify their actions (which in effect amounted to a personal attack on Thorson's political affiliations) with cries of "freedom of speech" and the "rights of education".

. . . other would-be critics cited the fact that Thorson's lectures failed to relate to contemporary political issues. May I remind them that this is a course in political theory, and not an elementary discussion of "current events".

. . . allegations of Thorson's pro-American bias are outright lies. I can recall a comment by Thorson to the effect that "America is ruled by slob".

. . . criticism by the New Left Caucus centred around Thorson's association with the American Republican Party, and was only incidentally related to his teaching methods and views.

So much for this particular incident. However additional discussion of some general issues, such as the functioning of the system, and the educational process, are now crucial.

In any introductory course in Poli-Sci the professor, if he wishes to avoid vague generalizations, must structure his analysis around a certain point of view, presumably his own. Granted all personal opinions are biased. But this approach is invalid only if it assumed that students are unintelligent and easily indoctrinated.

Education is not merely the ability to ask questions. Questioning, per se, has no intrinsic merit. It is the search for an answer which is crucial. This search is the responsibility of the student, not the professor.

A situation in which a professor is reduced to a lecturer, is a result of flaws in the system, which can, with some effort be resolved. It is for this purpose that course unions exist.

Chaunistic discrimination and petty campus politics have no place in the classroom. These tactics have reduced what should be a forum for intelligent discussion into a fist-pitting, brawling fracas.

Rita Bailey, (1 5MC)
Poli-Sci 101

Remodelling & Alterations
— A Specialty —

STUDENTS' ELITE

Cleaners & Tailors

654 Spadina Ave.

922-4361

10% DISCOUNT

ON PRESENTATION

of A.T.L. cards

MEMBER OF INDEPENDENT
CLEANERS ASSOC.

Good old golden rule days

Back when Grandima was in school this old world was quite a bit younger. So Grandma had fewer history dates to remember and fewer authors, poets, playwrights and artists to study. Fewer chemical elements and less advanced math. All in all, she had it pretty easy.

But there's one thing she didn't have to make life in general more pleasant: Tampax tampons. So those difficult days each month were really uncomfortable.

She didn't know that internally worn Tampax tampons would come along and keep her free of discomfort and irritation. Never let odor form. She had no idea that this modern development would permit her to swim any time, bathe any time. In fact, grandia just didn't know what she was missing. But you do. So now that it's "back-to-school time," shouldn't it be "try Tampax tampons time," too?

NEW YORK PIZZA HOUSE

620 YONGE STREET CORNER OF ST. JOSEPH - 925-1736
 "to specialize in New York and New England style pizza and home-made toppings. WE MAKE THE BEST PIZZA IN TOWN
 STUDENTS FREE DELIVERY IN OUR AREA & HOT PIZZA
 RIGHT TO YOUR ROOM
 5:00 P.M. - 1:00 A.M. DAILY

EXPORT "A"
Canada's Finest
FILTER
Cigarette
REGULAR AND KINGS

Canadians racist, imperialist--Douglas

By JEAN BUBA

Rosie Douglas Monday accused Canadians of racism and imperialism.

Douglas, one of the black students arrested in the crisis at Sir George Williams University last February, was speaking to a throng of 20 at Sidney Smith Hall.

On bail and facing charges of conspiracy, arson and public mischief, Douglas said that while in jail, the 97 students arrested at the SGWU disturbance were segregated by color.

The average bail for the 52 white students was $1500. The average bail for the black students was $5000 plus their passport, he said.

"People there are beginning to question 'Is Canada part of the United States?', where they never questioned before."

"They are questioning the Canadian investments of $90,000,000, the all-white executives of Canadian companies in the Caribbean and the 75- to 80-year contracts," said Douglas. "This may well mark the beginning of a Caribbean Revolution."

Douglas asked for white student support to "help black people not only to help themselves but to help change society."

He asked U of T to "send a delegation to Ottawa and to the Caribbean to see the effects of Canadian imperialism."

"You don't seem to be tying in what's going on here to other issues. Relations outside your community will help credibility in your area," he said. "We have to relate."

HERE AND NOW

Robert Galbraith, New Academic Bldg Vic

TODAY
ALL DAY

Drawings by Jeremy Smith on display
Buttery, Trinity

Tickets for HAIR at 10 per cent discount for shows Jan. 28, 29 & Feb 1 Inns II, 63
St. George, Rooms 110, 202

12:15 pm

Pollution Probe is showing film "Pestricides" Fifth of a series of six TV programmes on pollution entitled "Danger - Man at Work"

1 pm

Meeting of U of T Baha'i club, New College Rm. 74

Urgent meeting for all people who want to sell advertising for the UC Folklife Programme and earn commission. See Erle Swadron, Lit Office, JCR University College

Dept of Geology Films "Searching (Mineral Exploration)", "World in a Marsh" and "Ultimate Structure" Mining Bldg

2 pm

John Borovilos (IV EL & U) conducts a seminar on JRR Tolkien's "Snow White and the Seven Gables" Wymilwood, Vic

8 pm

The Varsity Christian Fellowship invites you to an open house at 118 Walmer Road at Bernard Coffee and conversation

Revolutionary films "Battleship Po-temkin" and "Lenin in 1918" McLennan
Bldg Rm. 102

St. Michael's College film club presents the best in the series "The Silence" by In-ger Bergman Carr Hall, 50 St. Joseph St

8:30 pm

Jean Anouilh's "Antigone" directed by

9 pm

Peter Sellers' movie marathon presented by New College. "What's New Pustycat", "Shot in the dark", "Pink Panther", "Casino Royale" Rm. 135 Old Physics, S2
admission

10 pm

Bellybutton coffee-shop and discotheque in basement of Wilson Hall, New College. Folk singing and dancing. Stegs
50c. Drags 75c

SATURDAY

8:30 pm

YAVENEH presents the Noam Singers in concert. Price $2.00 all proceeds go to orphans in Israel. Vaughan road Collegiate

10 pm

Bellybutton Coffee shop and Discotheque. Folk singing and dancing between sets. Stag 50c. Orag 75c. Basement Wilson Hall, New College

Sunday

3 pm

U of T Concert Band presents its first concert MacMillan Theatre, Edward Johnson Building Free

3:45 pm

U of T Chorus and the Hart House Orchestra presents a free concert Scarborough College

8:30 pm

In Cold Blood, Truman Capote's grisly movie Wetmore Hall, New College. Admission $1.00

8 pm

Take a break Penowle i panrenki, za praszamy zgrudna na zabawe zapozne-wca. Relieve your essey blues Sunday. Bevery and Cecil

8:30 pm

U of T Chorus second free chorus of the day with the Hart House Orchestra. Great Hall, Hart House.

9 pm

In Cold Blood movie from Truman Capote's novel Wetmore Hill, New College.
Admission $1.00.

Career Opportunities with MacMillan Bloedel Limited

Canada's largest integrated Forest Products Company

GRADUATES

ENGINEERING (Mechanical)
COMMERCE (Bus. Admin.)
FORESTRY (Harvesting and Production)

COMMERCE (Bus. Admin.)

ENGINEERING (Civil) ENGINEERING (Agricultural)

ENGINEERING (Chemical)

FORESTRY (Harvesting and Production)

We Invite You To Discuss Opportunities With Us For Production Trainees Assignments In Production Planning, Scheduling, Capital Planning And Budgeting, Cost Analysis, Special Studies, And Production Supervision.

Desk Salesmen Assignments To Regional Offices
Provide Experience And Knowledge Of Marketing
And Sales Procedures, Products, And Familiarity With Regional Customers.

Technical Sales Representatives Responsibilities
In Market And Product Development, Promotion, And Sales For Building Materials.

Process Engineering Conduct Process And Quality Studies And Inspections, And Recommend Changes
In Operations, Raw Materials, Equipment, Or Control Procedures As Required To Improve Costs And Quality.

Engineering Assistants Responsibilities In Road Location And Construction, Setting Layouts And Related Studies Along With Assignments In Annual And Long Term Operations Planning, Equipment Evaluation, Methods Studies And Special Projects.

We Will Be Interviewing On Campus December 10th, 12th, And 13th. Please Contact Your Student Placement Office For Further Information And Appointments.

add a little fun to good food and what do you get?

Zumberger is fun and the food's
great.
Come and revel in the way-out
music and unique surroundings.
You'll love the Zumberger, the
Boston Burger or a delicious pastry
In fact everything on the menu.
Come and taste the Zumberger experience for yourself. You'll be glad you did.

Opening Special SATURDAY, DECEMBER 6TH

Come and meet
MISS TORONTO
Bring a friend, buy a
Zumberger, get one FREE

270 Bloor Street West
(Bloor & St. George Street)

VARSITY BLAZERS
 Varsity Tartan
 Kilts, Flies and Scarves
 made to order
RICHARDSON'S
 546 Yonge St. 922-3141

ELECTIONEERING LIES!

It has been industriously represented, with a view to injure me in the opinion of my Friends and Neighbours, the ELECTORS OF EAST-WORCESTERSHIRE, that I went to Kingwinford Workhouse and pulled the Plugs out of the Beer Barrels, to prevent the Poor from having the Beer. I solemnly declare this to be a Scandalous Falshood, which Mr. WEBB, another Guardian of the Stourbridge Union can bear witness to.

J. H. H. FOLEY.

Dudley, July 6th, 1837.

Live, work and learn in ISRAEL

Sherut La'am Program

SHARE YOUR EDUCATION, TRAINING, AND KNOW-HOW IN A UNIQUE PEOPLE-TO-PEOPLE VENTURE

ONE YEAR SERVICE CORPS IN ISRAEL

THREE TYPES OF PROGRAMS

1. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM
2. KIBBUTZ PROGRAM
3. TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL PROGRAM

ALL PROGRAMS INCLUDE A THREE MONTH HEBREW STUDY ULPAN IN ISRAEL

COST: $595 includes round-trip group flight from New York; room and board throughout the year; excursions and seminars

SHERUT LA'AM

515 Park Avenue
New York, N.Y. 10022
Phone: 753-0230/0282

TORONTO:
783-4722

Contact:

A.O.S.C. STUDENT FLIGHTS

(Former CUS Travel Dept.)

ALL JET FLIGHTS 1970 FOR AOSC MEMBERS ONLY

Flight No.	DESTINATION	AIRLINE	DEPARTURE	RETURN	FARE
1	Toronto London Return	Caledonian	May 11	Sept. 2	$205.00
2	Toronto London Return	BOAC	May 12	Sept. 13	$212.00
3	Toronto London Return	AIR CANADA	May 17	June 19	$193.00
4	Toronto London Return	AIR CANADA	May 24	Aug. 31	$212.00
5	Toronto London Return	BOAC	May 27	July 27	$212.00
6	Toronto London Return	Caledonian	May 27	Sept. 8	$205.00
7	Toronto London Return	Caledonian	May 29	Aug. 28	$205.00
8	Toronto London Return	BOAC	May 31	Aug. 25	$212.00
9	Toronto London Return	Caledonian	June 2	Aug. 27	$205.00
10	Toronto London Return	BOAC	June 13	Sept. 1	$230.00
11	Toronto London Return	Caledonian	June 19	Aug. 16	$185.00
12	Toronto London Return	BOAC	June 24	Sept. 7	$230.00
13	Toronto London Return	Caledonian	July 5	Aug. 30	$225.00
14	Toronto London Return	Caledonian	July 30	Aug. 26	$225.00
15	Toronto London Return	BOAC	Aug. 4	Sept. 2	$212.00
16	Toronto Rome-London Toronto	AIR CANADA	May 24	June 22	$221.00
17	Toronto Paris-London Toronto	AIR FRANCE	June 6	July 4	$211.00
18	Halifax London Return	AIR CANADA	June 4	Aug. 31	$189.00
19	Toronto Tokyo Return	AIR CANADA	May 27	July 27	$425.00
20	Toronto Tokyo Return	AIR CANADA	June 5	June 27	$450.00
21	Toronto Tokyo Return	AIR CANADA	Aug. 14	Sept. 7	$450.00
22	Winnipeg London Return	AIR CANADA	June 7	Sept. 5	$232.00
23	Winnipeg London Return	AIR CANADA	June 11	July 12	$211.00
24	Winnipeg London (one way)	AIR CANADA	Sept. 12		$113.00
25	Toronto London (one way)	Caledonian	May 28		$100.00
26	Toronto London (one way)	AIR CANADA	Sept. 9		$104.00
27	Toronto London (one way)	AIR CANADA	Sept. 22		$104.00
28	Toronto London (one way)	AIR CANADA	Sept. 25		$104.00
29	Toronto London (one way)	Caledonian	Oct. 6		$100.00

Fares do not include flight or luggage insurance

FULL INFORMATION WITH APPLICATION FORM WILL BE AVAILABLE AT YOUR STUDENT COUNCIL ON DECEMBER 12th OR,

WRITE TO:
Association of Student Councils,
44 St. George Street,
Toronto 5, Ontario. Tel: 921-2611

Also available from AOSC, Student Tours, Eurailpass, Car Rentals, Travel Insurance Charter Flights within Europe, Student host list, International I.D. cards.

daughter raped

by reich in college

"Hold everything!"

I personally find Freudian psychology utterly fascinating. Its emphasis on capturing the meaning of actions we feel are meaningless finds a soft spot in my heart. Even if Freud's interpretation of the actions were wrong, the effect of psychoanalysis is to reveal, all too clearly to many people, that the parameters of our rational powers are determined not by ourselves, but by external forces.

There are two major methods of coming to grips with this determinism: optimistic or pessimistic, radical or conservative. The pessimist (conservative) believes man can do nothing to affect this determinism, or as Freud himself thought, that this determinism and its resultant consequences (i.e. repression) are necessary instruments for the preservation of civilization. Paul Robinson's book, however, deals with the other variety, the Freudian optimists, The Freudian Left.

Robinson deals with three major Freudian optimists; Wilhelm Reich, Geza Roheim, and Herbert Marcuse. He analyzes their development into Freudian radicals and examines their respective brands of radicalism. At the same time, he relates to evolution of the radical tradition to the history of the psychoanalytic movement as a whole, and to the general course of European and American social thought in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Reich, Roheim, and Marcuse share the conviction that politics and sexuality are intimately connected with one another. Their radicalism consists of regarding sexual repression as one of the principal mechanisms of aolitical domination.

Robinson's style is very entertaining, almost engrossing (if it weren't such a taboo to become emotionally involved with a book, especially one on Freudian thought). He writes with a clarity that is a disappearing art for most academics.

He points out his methodology quite bluntly and frankly in the Introduction:

"Let me indicate that I have made no pretense to neutrality in this essay. I consider the Weberian ideal of a wertfrei science misguided and . . . illusory. In general, I think it advisable for the intellectual historian to approach his subject with sympathy, although without forfeiting his critical perspective."

This book makes for fascinating and absorbing reading. The men and the ideas examined are interesting in themselves, but the scope of the book, showing intellectual thought in its evolution outlining, as well, its subsequent distortions (aberrations?), give it its ultimate significance.

The ideas and the arguments are impressive, and I could not help but come to a similar conclusion. Robinson summed it up when he wrote:

"I cannot be convinced that Freud was anything less than a revolutionary, the man who rendered for the twentieth century services comparable to those Marx rendered for the nineteenth."

Paul A. Robinson. The Freudian Left. Harper & Row, $7.50

Shrader certainly believes in the need for action. Several times he talks of its necessity: "Students attend, read, talk, and intellectualize, but they never act in the world. They feel that by singing, talking, praying, and apraising that they have done something, when in actuality they have done nothing."

Or even more vehemently and succinctly: "Faith, it seems to me is not the acceptance or endorsement of a creed or a person; faith is to act. Action is not the result of faith, it is faith."

Shrader quite obviously sympathizes with youth, and pleads with adults to try to understand their children's actions. He argues that youth are not immoral, but rather that it is a question of different perspectives and perceptions.

"You raise the question of morality. Larry thinks of it in terms of such matters as killing, as economic exploitation; as racial appression. These are moral issues and Larry feels deeply about them. However, Larry feels that love and sex do not become moral questions unless or until abuse and exploitation are involved. He feels that between consenting adults, love and sex are personal questions and should not be regulated either by law or custom."

College Ruined Our Daughter, Wesley Shrader paperback, 156 pp. $2.25 Harper & Row

alf chaiton

PINTER "A Slight Ache" / STRINDBERG "The Stronger" / MORTON "Box Cox"
ADMISSION IS FREE
at the Studio - 4 Glen Morris
8:30 p.m. Tues. Dec. 13 - Sat. Dec. 19

G.S.U.
FRIDAY NIGHT
DANCE
December 5 - 9:00 p.m.
Admission: $1 ladies $1.25 gents
Music by
'UNDERGRADS'

ENGINEERING GRADUATES

The Inland Steel Company, Indiana Harbor Works, East Chicago, Indiana invites you to investigate our many career opportunities. Consult the specific job description in the pocket of our brochure. Our representatives will be on your campus on

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1969

INLAND INDIANA HARBOR WORKS EAST CHICAGO, INDIANA

We are an Equal Opportunity Employer in the Plans for Progress Program

On Monday at 9 p.m. Miles Davis and his men stormed the stage at the Colonial Tavern and detonated a chain reaction of increasingly furious tonal explosions. The New Music had arrived.

And we had to accept it, indeed love it, because this was Miles, the leading creator of music in modern jazz, long recognized by all who have ears as the man who stands for all that is great in jazz.

We had bought his records faithfully for many years now. We had followed his career from the early days with Charlie Parker, then had noted his involvement in the formation of the so-called "cool" school of jazz. We saw him scorned or ignored when he formed his first quintet, then exulted in his final triumph as the leading figure in modern jazz. We approved his creation of new sounds in small group playing, first with Coltrane et al., then with Williams and Hancock. Miles was our man.

With the arrival of Miles Smiles (Columbia), we figured the trumpeter had reached the ultimate pinnacle in jazz. Davis and Wayne Shorter, his current tenor saxophonist, improvised with apparently complete freedom on short abstract themes, while the fantastic rhythm section of Williams, Carter, and Hancock responded seemingly as one sensitive individual to every nuance of the hornmen, creating complex textures, shifting rhythms and moods — all the while laying down a solid beat, endearing themselves to us old traditionalists.

But Miles In The Sky (Columbia) signalled another advance. The forms were freer still, and the group, with its electric piano and suggestions of rock rhythms was moving toward a new sound.

But none of this, not even the latest recording — In a Silent Way — prepared us even slightly for the ear-smashing, mind-bending explorations in sound which Davis is creating nightly at the Colonial.

Davis — a sartorial wonder, as always — arrives on stage last, as Chick Corea is tentatively mulling over some chords on the electric piano. Then suddenly, the bell of the trumpet swallows the head of the microphone, and the batteries of speakers (the group's stuff of course — they would be left helpless if they had to depend on the quaint old "sound systems" of night-clubs) hurl the trumpeter's piercing hot sound at us. Jack DeJohnette's drums and cymbals roar and crash demoniacally. Chick Corea's fingers go scuttling off in all directions, seemingly at random, like a hundred mad piano-playing tarantulas.

The tempo — insofar as one can be discerned — is terrifyingly fast, the rhythms wild, surging, unpredictable. The group plays uncompromisingly loud, except for the occasional interval when Davis wants to suggest, only in the most oblique fashion, some of the themes he used to play — Stella by Starlight, maybe, or Round Midnight.

Even when he dictates a more tranquil mood, you know it won't last long. Round Midnight, for instance, quickly gives way to the unbridled exhortations of Wayne Shorter, who shouts, screams, and moans in the midst of the boiling caldron of sounds cooked up by Corea, DeJohnette, and bassist Dave Holland.

When the band has fully delved into the meaning of one musical thought, they segue directly into another theme. Round Midnight gives way to Footprints, an eerie minor blues by Shorter. But no matter what the nature of the material, the group almost invariably pushes the music to the farthest imaginable frontiers, and sometimes beyond, climaxing in the most cataclysmic intensity of sound.

No doubt about it, this the new music, the sound of today, the sound that Ornette Coleman had the temerity to asking. And I don't know the answer.

When the band occasionally lapses into playing chord changes — sort of — and keeping a strict, swinging time, when DeJohnette restrains his thunder, when Miles or Shorter play a melody I've heard before — those are the moments I love. Nor do I think they are any less "creative" than the "free" sounds.

But Miles is great, and one cannot doubt the strength of his music, nor can one fail to admire the seriousness and passion which he brings to it. Miles is still our man. If you want to see where modern music is and where it is going, then this is — really, seriously — your only chance.

Miles Davis plays tonight, and tomorrow afternoon and evening at the Colonial.

jack mccaffrey

miles beyond the frontiers

A TOPICAL TEMPEST

Toronto Workshop Productions has opened its Tenth Anniversary Season with a production of Shakespeare's The Tempest. For a company whose leanings are towards plays of political and social relevance, the selection of The Tempest is most curious and, indeed, the production itself is too.

Director George Luscombe has made use of a set that in addition to being able to move on top of one can move underneath, yea, in and out. A synthetic fabric giving the impression of thin jersey covers the stage and is also used as a skim-like backdrop. Holes are cut at various points in this cloth allow the actors to make exits and entrances as if they were coming right from the ground itself. Artistically it becomes ambiguous, giving assorted impressions ranging from the lunar surface to the sand dunes of Typee.

Technically, however, the result is outstanding. During Ariel's "ditty" when he is remembering Ferdinand's "drowned father", those members of the company who are for that scene mounds of earth sing too, enriching Ferdinand's line: "In the air, or in the earth?" The genius of this set is relied upon greatly in another scene, in which Alonso, Sebastian and Antonio, waist-deep as it were, fight off swaying forms made by pressing the material tightly to the body. The whole concept of ground, however, is completely thrown out when during Prospero's last monologue the cloth turns into water.

Mr. Luscombe has pared the cast down considerably by deleting the minor parts of Adrian and Francisco as well as the nymphs and sprites. The first excision is certainly deft surgery. Mr. Luscombe's replacement for Shakespeare's very engaging masque, however, does not seem to accomplish the same thing as the original group of sprites and goddesses. Instead Ferdinand and Miranda are given as a "vanity" of Prospero's art a series of shadow plays depicting, as Prospero has asked Ariel, "the past ten years." Among the sketches which one can make out at all are a parade, a circus, and various and sundry battle formations, I think.

Here Mr. Luscombe has chosen something counterpoint to the text: by supplanting a pastoral with an historical, tension where the Bard wanted ease. By employing here the same technique used for the opening tempest scene, Mr. Luscombe is, I think, making a comment about the outside world, the world beyond this island.

The past ten years seems also to have been on Mr. Luscombe's mind when he did his casting. Prospero played by Stephan Bush comes to us very much as a revolutionary. Bearded, lean and intense he reminds one of Pasolini's Christ in his Gospel According to St. Matthew. I think this rendering fits nicely with Prospero as magician and ex-king, but draws him as a weak father in his dealing with his daughter Miranda. Nonetheless, Mr. Bush by all means carries the show.

With the assistance of Ray Whelan's Ariel, who is both hairy and airy, the two work well together giving the impression of a tightly run island. At the same time, Ariel lightens the show not only by his singing and spriting, but by various stances into which Mr. Luscombe has put him. Costumed in the mute yellow color of the magic carpet, he is sometimes a rock upon which one character or another leans. In the love scene between Ferdinand and Miranda he becomes the logs which the prince must bear and is actually carted from one part of the stage to the other.

Ferdinand (Rick McKenna) and Miranda (Diane Grant) are a difficult pair. This is due in part to Shakespeare's brevity of their roles. In the TWP rendition Mr. McKenna's reading contains the boyish kingliness necessary, yet Miss Grant's portrayal appears more to be an exaggeration of the naive girl who knows not one of her sex. Miss Grant accomplishes the role with a fair amount of credibility, but is at times a bit too strong, perhaps in reaction to playing opposite an entirely male cast.

In Mel Dixon's Caliban we have at once a very fine character portrayal and some more of Mr. Luscombe's past ten years. In short, the part is tropical and topical. Mel Dixon is very big and very black; both qualities make him a "most delicate monster." Through a very clever piece of staging in which Trinculo straddles Caliban backwards, Mr. Dixon's size and color provide a delightful contrast as well as an effective technical feat as the two cavort about the stage. Caliban's freedom dance takes on several tones of modernity as Mr. Dixon leaps and bounds in ritual fashion. The concept of slave is not a token suggestion nor is it a hit over the head with a bat. Dixon is imposing and dynamic. One only regrets that the poetry is lost, for Mr. Dixon speaks the part as straight and starkly as he acts it.

Rather than trying to form Caliban and the two clowns, Stephano and Trinculo into a trio, Mr. Luscombe has pitted them against each other. The effect works both visually and dramatically, placing a Neopolitan Laurel and Hardy opposite Mr. Dixon's Caliban. Peter Faulkner's Trinculo is particularly engaging, especially in his little two-step as counterpoint to Caliban's majestic freedom dance. The highlight of this group's scenes is their last, in which they attempt to kill Prospero. The jim-dandy cloth is stretched to its full height, and while Trinculo and Stephano run around inside, Caliban tries desperately to convince them to come out.

The royal ensemble is disappointing. As Antonio, Jim Bearden plays a fine blond villain with a gracefully sinister style, but somehow Calvin Butler's Sebastian does not meet it. If Mr. Butler was aiming at a low key to play up Antonio as the stronger character, it doesn't work. Mr. Butler and Jack Boschulte's Alonso seem to have the same vocal problem: neither can handle the language. But Francois Klanfer's Gonzalo comes across as an enchanting old eccentric, the only relief in the bitching and bantering of Sebastian and Antonio vs. Alonso.

Michael Craden's score contains band music, electronic music and musique concrète. Every use of these elements is most enticing. It is the "realistic" music during the shadow play which gives it any other worldly quality, in this case the "other" world being the "real" one. Ariel's songs are sung at the electronic accompaniment rather than with it, creating something new in between.

The costumes designed by Nancy Jowsey are bright, using color here and there with a slight symbolic twist. A vaguely medieval dating becomes explicit in the case of the royal retinue, who look like they stepped out of Bergman's Seventh Seal. This doesn't jive with the modern innuendoes throughout the play, unless one is to take it as meaning that man hasn't really progressed since the Middle Ages. Such a reading, I believe, is too forced.

At one point, however, the modern and the ancient meet, and that is in the use of plexiglass swords. Shaped like very simple short-swords, they are made out of a thick transparent plastic. Prospero's staff/magic wand is of the same material. The effect is very poetic in that they're there and they're not there.

In all, the TWP people should be pleased with this Tempest. It is one of the most effective contra-Stratford productions done by a professional company in Toronto for some time. It continues until late December with dark Mondays.

barry brodie

AN ANTAGONISTIC ANTIGONE

Having had first hand experience with Victoria College's room 3, where Antigone is currently being performed, I can appreciate the difficulties faced by a director mounting a production there, and I sympathize. The stage is small and low set, which restricts effective stage movement. Further, its proximity to the seating renders more difficult the possibilities of a distancing effect between actors and audience.

Director Bob Galbraith had obviously recognized the problems posed by this stage, but his solution — consisting of levels and ramps — to some degree defeated its own purpose by both cramping the actors' movements and intensifying the audience's awareness of the diminutiveness of the acting area. While the platforms should have suggested opportunities for pictorially representing authority and control (a device which should have lent a badly needed crutch to Creon), such opportunities were overlooked or neglected.

The matter of distancing the audience is one which specifically concerns this play, for Anouilh has deliberately used a single actor chorus as a link between the play and its spectators. It is crucial to the play's effectiveness that the actors, excepting the chorus, convey the impression that they are very much acting a play, and one written with the missing fourth-wall convention very much in mind.

Playing to the audience, as the actors in this production constantly did, destroys the illusion of intimacy and privacy inherent in this convention. As a result we were unable to feel or appreciate those scenes where these qualities were vital to their success and effectiveness. Most notable were the love scene between Antigone and Haemon and practically the whole interview between Antigone and Creon. An unfortunate by-product was seen in the Chorus who is deliberately meant to speak to the audience but who lost much of the power of direct confrontation because the device had been wasted on other characters.

The unevenness of acting was pointed up by the aftereffects of Trick Brymer's superb caricature of Private Jonas: the audience was not able to recover sufficiently to accept or appreciate the tragic message of the play. As Creon, Ken McEvoy's considerable presence was hampered by mechanical stage movements — especially in the totally unconvincing fight sequences — and lacked the conviction, command and authority of the character. Carol Peck, though obviously young, proved herself quite capable. Her enigmatic and ingenious approach provided an effective foil to flashes of emotion which took us by surprise but were in perfect keeping with the character. John Goddard's Chorus was a well thought-out, controlled performance whose deliberateness and ease evidenced a thorough understanding of the text, its nuances, and its rhythms.

I am confident that this production will improve considerably with the relaxation that repeated performance brings. Trick Brymer is worth the price of admission by himself.

paul mullolland.

REVIEW 5

White eagles rampant

Woodies descend

The Moody Blues put in their first Toronto appearance last Saturday night to a packed house at Massey Hall. They were extremely well received. The audience refused to let them go after they had finished their set, clapping their hands and stamping their feet until the band came back for another number.

Why the group went over so well in unclear. There's absolutely nothing to them. They do sound is pretentious and sentimental. They do have a sound (in fact, they have only one sound: a full organ gushes away in the background; stops set to replicate a chorus of violins. The music is conceived with the market for Muzak in mind.

The Woodies (as the DJ called them) had supposedly stopped touring for some time in order to put together a new act. None of this was evidenced. Most of the songs done were from earlier albums, a couple from a forthcoming album (they record for Deram—their last 'p is on The Threshold of Dream). Each song was laboriously introduced, with careful reference to title and album. The implication is that they take their music seriously (which records to buy).

The lyrics have the usual bad rock allusions to crystal seas, white eagles, and King Arthur, the usual tasteless lapidarianism but (not like Donovan, say, who employs the same devices with subtlety and humor). In intent the music and the lyrics are a kind of rock equivalent to Debussy (though only in kind, since it never comes off). The details of what are recounted, with hallucinations thrown in for good measure.

The constant patter of jokes and stories was pretty annoying (perhaps this is what they worked up for their new act). "Legend of the Mind" ("Timothy Leary's dead/no, no, no, he's on the outside looking in") was introduced with a five-minute account of what a fine acid trip they had with Leary. From the sound of it (and their music) it might have been their first and only acid trip (not unlikely, since some of the group members look like they're pushing thirty).

Preceding the Woodies was another English group, Humble Pie. They do long monotonous dope songs and don't concern themselves with hitting notes at the right time (though one of their songs, "Shaky Jake," sort of country, was alright). They kept playing a drum song over and over until the lights came on and "w was intermission. They were still playing.

All in all it was a boring evening. But the audience seemed to like everything.

Just the sounds of silence, please!

CBC offered a pit-in-a-poke last Sunday night at nine. Billed as one of the most eagerly awaited shows of the season, Simon and Garfunkel's Songs of America did as much for America as did the Song My Scandal.

The show, allegedly "built around the social, political and philosophical attitudes of the two singers," was trite and banal social comment. Both Simon and Garfunkel were often inarticulate and indulged themselves in some of the most incoherent patterns of cliché. If they're "the voices of their generation," then I'm resigning my membership in their generation. They might be able to sing, but comment, they can't. If they have to be the voices of a generation then let them try the silent majority.

Paul Simon, Arthur Garfunkel and Charles Grodin directed the program. Hence their own fuzzy thinking was admirably translated on television full of eclectic smatterings of Americana: JFK to Flash Gordon, from the jungles of Viet Nam to the grooves of Woodstock. They seem quite capable of handling the forms of good television, though, at times, mixing their songs and the visual images a little too obviously. And often following one of their own half-finished comments with what in other programs would be very powerful film footage, but that falls flat here.

I enjoyed their songs very much, but found the rest of the show distracting. Until Simon and Garfunkel find out what they really want to say, better they sing about it; they don't have to be as coherent.

daniel mack

Jo Mapes. As for some of the others:

THE CHAROLYN HESTER COALITION Mercedes 1900. Charolyn Hester received limited fame for a nice tune called "That's My Song," but more for being very good-looking. The new Charolyn Hester (plus Coalition) is ordinary in the extreme. Ordinary arrange-ments, ordinary singing, ordinary songs. Blah.

BUFFY SAINT-MARIE, Illumination. Various 79360. Illuminations, songs, more like The Darkling Plain, making 79360 work. Cohen sound like "The Beach Boys Smiley." Smile. Brooding, often violent stuff, well arranged by Peter Schickele (perpetrator of the P.D.Q. Bach series). Buffy sings like a woman. Led Zeppelin recorded lying in a dive with the 25c vibrator bed turned on because the hell else is there? Black, brilliant record.

JUDY COLLINS, Recollections. Electra 75044. All old songs, the best of Judy Collins' albums, 3 through 5, which is just fine, maybe the high point of early Dylan-Paxton-Farina urban folk. Not as deep or demanding as her later stuff, but tastefully sung and played. A free album to anyone who can find any Collins that isn't first-rate.

JON MITCHELL's Clouds (Reprise 6341) deserves more space, for Mitchell just might produce the musical equivalent of Cohen's Spite Box of Earth. But not yet. Her recording voice is haunting and echoey, not quite right for her older, more innocent material. Most of the songs on Clouds were written several years back, but not recorded. Still "I Know Where I Stand" and "Both Sides Now" are Angel. "Chelsea Morning," "Don't Know What's Happening Here," "Both Sides Now" are gems. The newer stuff seems less carefully crafted, sometimes cluttered, vague and timeless. "Midway Song," one of the new ones is, however, both catchy and gripping. Cohen's Stranger Song. The arrangements are right. Cross fingers.

JOAN BAEZ's Baptism (Vanguard 79275) was released over a year ago, but... A fine cross-section of modern poetry and music that moves deeper and wider than any other record ever attempted. Baez sings and reads magnificently, and Peter Schickele's arrangement are perfect. Defendable as the best "popular" album ever produced. It didn't sell (readers should approach Bob Bossin, not the Review, for prizes).

The details, ma'am

Toronto chamber players

On Saturday, November 29th, the Toronto Chamber Players, opened their concert season with the Edward Johnson Building. This, young direction of Victor Martin, violinist and professor at the Faculty of Music. The members are all professional musicians, and Saturday's concert was the result of some three months work. Composers represented on the program were Geminiani, Handel, Corelli, Vivaldi, Mozart and Schubert, producing a varied evening's music.

The first half of the concert offered Concerto in D major by Geminiani, Handel and Corelli, with the 25c vibrator bed turned on because the hell else is there? Black, brilliant works call for astuteness in the tempo and phrasing; a certain lack of coherence and support in slow movements was not remedied by an often detrimental increase in all tempo. The group had difficulty in sustaining a long phrase and somehow lacked the magnanimity to anyone who can find any Collins that isn't first-rate.

In later movements the playing was exciting and alive with a wonderfully unified sound perfectly balanced between violins and lower strings. While the cello and bass sound seemed somewhat anaemic, we must keep in mind that this music is written predominantly for violins, and the accompaniment by lower strings should be somewhat underplayed. The bright, exciting sound of the violins is the ensemble's great asset and almost offset the lack of unity at the ends of movements. High-contrast, however, was the harpsichord, which invariably anticipated the strings with the tonic chord at the end of each movement.

The second half of the concert consisted of Concerto by Vivaldi, Five German Dances by Schubert and the Symphony No. 1 by Mozart. The performance was now more confident. Tempo more relaxed, as a variety of musical styles were richly interpreted. The Schubert work especially showed the versatility and beauty of the group. With a little more attention to details and more confidence the Toronto Chamber Players should become a first-rate musical group.

teny jahn

Relating the ramayana

Indonesia maintains a cultural complex rich in the variety and uneasy juxtaposition of indigenous, Hinduistic and Islamic elements. The Budaya

b. b.

daniel mack

n.s.

Duck concert lays an egg

The Rockpile is no more, after a financially disastrous Led Zeppelin appearance, but apparently the building, the Masonic Hall, will still be used for concerts, although if they're to be like the one presented there on Saturday night, this won't last long.

The completely nondescript blues trio which played first was followed by, of all things, a comedian, who was trying awfully hard to be hip. His material might have seemed funnier if he hadn't been so out of place. He would have been fine at the Victoria, or cleaned up a bit, on the Ed Sullivan Show, but at a rock concert....

Mother Tucker's Yellow Duck, the main group, is a country-oriented band which has gained some popularity in Vancouver. Their sound, at its best, can be described as pleasant. Although some of their up-tempo songs, like "Times Are Changing," aren't too bad, much of their music consists of slow numbers, which sound just like the sort of thing you used to hear around the campfire in old Roy Rodgers movies: the lonesome harmonica, the Sons of the Pioneers raising their voices in mellow harmony. It's possible that there are groups that can do this kind of stuff and bring it off, but Mother Tucker's Yellow Duck isn't one of them.

It shouldn't audience seemed to like everything.

r. d. schwartz

Fleshfilm 2000

Bambi-fetishists beware!

Camille 2000 is a flesh-film rehashing of that noble old weeper, Consumption and the Single Girl (viz. Dumas fils and Giuseppe Verdi). Regrets to both previous authors. Although Camille 2000 is not so amonoush that you can view it as solid comedy, in the tradition of King Kong and Sex Queens of Uranus, it is far enough below acceptability for it to be unambiguously dull.

The camera-work is as glossy as that in a Paris edition of Vogue magazine, and about as emotionally and intellectually stimulating. For those who are haue couturiers, there are lots of great dresses and one really stunning, highly-garbed faggot, who is the only vaguely likeable character in a very motley crew. — not suggestive of anything to much as a selection of bagged Casaubon melons.

Alright, this is a Hugh Hefner special, but where are the audiences of bowdy bear-willing vulgarians? I think the public is getting wise to the game and staying home to read dirty books. In the case of undefeated but no champion

Something interesting is happening to the Western these days. "The Wild Bunch" and "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" both take place long after the brief hey-day of the Wild West in the late 1860s and early '70s, at a time when the cowboys were losing their modern age. But "The Undeclared" moves back as far as possible right to the end of the Civil War, when the film was just beginning. Its treatment of death and individualism and things that moved back with it. There is nothing wrong with that, alone, especially if the movie remains entertaining, but this movie is a rotten piece of entertainment made worse by a lot of silly pretensions and mistaken notions about modern sensibilities, and above all, by a crude attempt to make money.

Everything points one way and leads another. We are told that the battle which opens the picture is unnecessary even in the context of the war for which it is fought (it is fought after the end of that war); but there is no attempt to make the battle objectionable. Every one dies needlessly fast and clean and the tone in John Wayne's voice as he speaks of the death of these soldiers is one of embarrassment. In this movie, dying is an unfortunate by-product of the fight. But even the attempt to make fighting glorious, an idea which could possibly be more convincing, is a failure. An extremely long, mass fire-light loses its significance because of its length and the stupid, jocular treatment given it. A group of Mexican bandits attacks a wagon train of pioneers and we are supposed to laugh at the fact that no one in the bandits are supposed to ride the damn things to ride around a circle of wagon wheels, resting with rifles, the effect is spoiled by the gasped-out "I'm supposed to do this" suppose anything which is made glorious, or even fun, but the trouble is these men are dying of our laughter. Fighting itself might be beautiful and noble, but we all know that people are hurt and people die, and the movie-maker who doesn't deal honestly with this fact is treating his public in a high-handed manner.

A group of Southerners led by Rock Hudson are living in a never-never land and can be saved from death only by the hard-headed Yankees led by John Wayne. So the Yankees must be presented to us as being fairly real. It may be true that nowadays we just don't die fighting for fighting's sake, which is as far as the Yankees can see (Wayne says of wars: "You win one — you lose one."), but still, the one concession to realism, a tendency on the part of the Yanks to spit a lot, is ostentatious and becomes absurd. And if the Confederates are living in a fantasy, why is Hudson at the end, allowed to toast "the United States of America — and the Confederacy?"

Everything is played for laughs, but the laughs come too easy and the actuality of the situation is destroyed. Is he or not the movie-makers? — one is tempted to say John Wayne's — realistic point of view is good or bad, ultimately true or ultimately false, I don't know, but this movie is a very poor statement of that point of view.

William Conrath

It shouldn't happen to a bach-lover

Performances of Johann Sebastian Bach's "The Art of the Fugue" should be clearly marked "For Bach-lovers only". This work, Bach's contrapuntal masterpiece opus, makes no pretension to be concert material. It is a systematic treatise of contrapuntal writing consisting of a set of 14 fugues on one theme. As a scholarly musical treatise the work is unparalleled in the history of music; yet this type of intellectual writing is far rather poorly in concert performance.

The piece was performed by the Hart House Orchestra, with Douglas Booth harpsichordist, in an orchestral version arranged by Prof. John Beck. The performance was most impressive, with increasing respect for the enthusiasm of the audience, with orchestra, or of Dr. Neel himself. Mechanically, the beating time in military band fashion, he may have been some help to the feverishly counting players who had no help to the pollyolly nodding audience.

Why was this concert so poor? Even if the Hart House Orchestra had not been under-rehearsed, and Dr. Neel had given musical as well as metronomic guidance to the group, the performance would have been uninspiring. Bach wrote The Art of the Fugue in four parts, with unspecified instrumentation. A viable rendering of the work must give voice its own character in timbre, phrasing and accents. To my ears, the organ performance of Helmut Walcho on DGG Archives records comes closest to this ideal.

The Art of the Fugue is not mathematical; it is music, but serious cerebral music. The innate beauty which can hardly be reproduced in an arrangement which frivolously stresses variety for variety's sake, and is performed by a small musical group. I'm not polemologizing the prostitution of Bach's music in the style of Stokowski's super-orchestra arrangements either; for this work is pure music with no need for added interest. And when Sunday's concert attempted to dress up Bach, the results fell far short of success.

tony john

disc column

Whatever happened to those woman folk-ingers we used to hear on the Randy Ferris show? A free album for whenever can re-locate Hinduistic and Islamic elements. The Buddha trope presented the ancient Hindu epic Ramayana in a manner so as to best demonstrate the multi-faceted nature of their nation's traditions.

The production was intensely formalistic and stylized down to the last knee bend, finger spread, and head nod. In spite of the mixing of styles, the epic never lost its spiritual excellence and esthetic polish. The dancers, especially Sardono, who played the evil demon king Rawana and Hanuman, the monkey messenger of Rama, managed to deliver a very vivid and engaging portrayal of the epic adventure. Sardono's Hanuman was intensely physical, sensitive and delicate down to the last nuance.

Accompanying the dancing, the gamelan orchestra, which relies very heavily on percussive instrumentation and sounds a bit like slapping cymbals, was divided into rhythms for the greater and elegance of the dance. The gamelan orchestra last Thursday for the first time, which in fact was a real violation since, through the medium of the shadow play, Unforgotten, because Rawana was full of a demonic energy, and forces which was inadequately presented in the shadow play.

As good as the presentation was, there were moments when the production lagged and the incredible subtleties and attention to detail just bored an audience not accustomed to this sort of dance. Even more boring were the cries of Bravo which were exclaimed at uneven intervals. Indications as familiar with the Ramayana as we are with Santa Claus. The tale is told on innumerable occasions and is often accompanied by laughing, drinking and even sleeping. The staid Macmillan Theatre audience insisted on treating it as something to silently reverie out of respect for the Troupe. The Ramayana is a festive happening not standard concert repertoire. The Prague orchestra, with their warm string sound supported, somewhat modestly, by mellow controlled woodwinds, argued that they should appear more frequently. The bassoon in particular; playing in a very high almost Stravinskyesque range, showed beautiful phrasing and produced a persuasive tone. The rest of the program consisted of more standard works. Symphony No. 99 of Haydn and Symphony No. 38 by Mozart. They were conveyed with great inner conviction. The tempi chosen for the Mozart called for considerable technical virtuosity and was rendered with very exciting results.

don quinlan

Boffo basso

The Women's Musical Club concert on Nov. 20th at the Eaton Auditorium featured former vocalist and conductor, Thomas Paul, now a very successful bass singer with many stage roles and recordings to his credit.

Mr. Paul's large and varied program included examples of musical styles all the way from an early Baroque aria from Jacopo Peri's opera "Dafne" through Mozart, Schubert, and Ibert to Benjamin Britten. It was an excellent selection of songs, although none seemed the sort that tax a singer's vocal powers much.

Paul's rich, well-aphorized voice, with his tasteful vibrato and tasteful musical style (much enhanced by the discreet piano accompaniment), was very nice to listen to. It's not easy to fill Eaton Auditorium with mellow sound, but Mr. Paul managed very well, and if his interpretations were less warm up the hall with the very essence of the generally relaxed atmosphere of the concert. High and ersatz virtuosity of most modern symphony of the afternoon was Paul's Mephistophelean laughter in the Faust songs by Berlioz and Tchaikovsky, this more subtle means of seduction. Those of which seemed to send shivers down not a few spines in the predominantly female audience.

nicholas schmid

tony john

THE TEXTBOOK STORE
CHRISTMAS-RECORD-SALE records

Rock

Jethro Tull
Fat Matress
AL Kooper
Grand Funk Railroad

Folk

Joni Mitchell
Leonard Cohen
Gord Lightfoot
Donovan

Jazz - Blues - Pop - Soundtrack - Spoken voice plus:

Deutsche Grammophone
new subscription series:

Hayden - the Creation - reg. 14.00 - 9.00
Beethoven - symphonies " 55.00 - 24.95
Brahms - Chamber Music " 104.00 - 54.98 Wagner - Siegfried " 34.99 - 25.00 classical L.P.'s from 98¢

BOOKS, PRINTS, POSTERS, PAPERBACKS, GIFTS

SPECIAL: sale of Medical books on second floor, hundreds of titles from 49¢

THE TEXTBOOK STORE

ORIGINAL MOTION PICTURE SCORE
"ALICE'S RESTAURANT"
ARLO GUTHRIE

GARRY SHERMAN

PETER FONDA DENNIS HOPPER
JACK NICHOLSON

GREAT WHITE WONDER

THE WORLD'S FIRST

Masculine hygiene deodorant spray

(If you think you don't need it you're kidding yourself.)

Specifically formulated to be a man's second deodorant. Controls perspiration odor in the groin area. Because it's absorbent and smoothing it soothes irritation, chafing and scratchiness. Once you try it, you'll wonder how you ever were a one deodorant man.

Braggi Private Deodorant Spray

Conceived and created by Charles Revson of Revlon.

soft-core pornography of the week what next?

—this is an editorial that originally appeared in the Excalibur

Men! Do you suffer from that unhealthy, unsightly, uncomfortable physical defect called P.O.?

Penis odour, a new bodily disease has been recently discovered by the makers of a product called BRAGGI, the world's first masculine hygiene deodorant spray, and as the ad says: "If you think you don't need it you're fooling yourself."

This new Revlon creation, which appeared in Playboy magazine last month is undoubtedly the masculine response to the recently-marketed Feminine Deodorant Spray (FDS).

As incredible as it may seem, this product will eventually find its way to the shelves and cupboards of affluent males throughout North America.

BRAGGI is designed to control and suppress all "unpleasant" natural functions in the groin area, functions which most males have probably never felt concerned about in their lives.

But just as the advertisers of the profitable sex industry have convinced the public that hair on the female body is obscene, that the application of FDS is a necessary process for every female in search of a loyal bedmate, that perfume, makeup, shaving lotion, and deodorant are prerequisites for people entering into the company of others, they will no doubt assure men — especially those interested in the "liberated sex life" of Playboy magazine — that they really do have smelly crotch rot, and that girls naturally will not go to bed with them unless they use BRAGGI.

The exploitation of sex for the purpose of making profit, in the last decade, has been primarily geared towards the ever accessible house-bound market of women, but obviously the business is so good that Revlon has decided that its time to work on the fellows, and where is a better place to begin than with the most sensitive and vulnerable — culturally and physically — area of a man's body, his genitals.

Perhaps the most destructive aspect of this industry, besides its utter wastefulness of human and economic resources, is the perverse attitudes toward love and sex it forms in the minds of men and women.

Because of the powerful effect of advertising, products such as BRAGGI and CUPID'S QUIVER really do become human "needs" after a period of media indoctrination. Most men today almost naturally think of hair on the legs of women as an ugly sickening sight, and it is quite likely that, because of this, they would be sexually unarousable even though they might be attracted to the "hairy" girl in other ways.

Armpit hair and perspiration have become "hangups" for both sexes, and the continual bombardment of the playmate of the month image, that is, the flawless, hairless body with not a pimple or wart in sight has caused men to desire such a perfect sexual object.

It has caused women to seek artificial body beautifiers in order to attain the unreachable physical perfection of Miss Playmate or Miss America.

It would seem that even the girls who are sickened by what they are told to do with their bodies would submit to pressure anyway, simply because they believe that men won't take them any other way.

Interestingly enough, Desmond Morris points out in The Naked Ape, that "The female who so assiduously washes off her own biological scent then proceeds to replace it with commercial 'sexy' perfumes which in reality are no more than diluted forms of the products of scent glands of other totally unrelated mammalian species." P.79. Perhaps this proves that animals are more intelligent than humans in this respect, since their attraction to each other does not depend on the suppression of their natural sexual characteristics.

For us, living in the midst of the Revlon and Avon world, it is hard to believe that before industrialization men actually could stomach having sexual intercourse with a natural undeodorized, unshaved female.

We wonder if we would consider Cleopatra as ravishing as Anthony did, if, while portraying the queen, Elizabeth Taylor appeared on the screen displaying pubic hair under her arms. We would even guess that Eve had a terrible case of B.O. living in the jungle like that, but Adam apparently got over it despite the absence of Ban and FDS.

However Adam and Eve were uncivilized, and ironically, in the name of progress, the thriving, very rich sex industry has replaced those natural but 'unattractive' sexual habits with perverted new concepts, such as "Necessary second deodorants", in order to solve the very pressing problem of penis odour.

We simply can't wait till BRAGGI comes out in flavours. Maybe our sex life will improve.

LOW ON BREAD FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS
PRESENTS?

USE YOUR CHARGE -
ACCOUNT AT THE UNIVERSITY
BOOKROOM.

Are you trying to tell me you don't like our brand spanking new, panoramic, air-conditioned campusbank? Gak!

True Chequing Accounts. Complete banking services for students and faculty.

Visit your Campusbank Bank of Montreal

Canada's First Bank

University Ave. & College St. Branch, 640 University Ave.
St. George & Bloor Sts. Branch, 262 Bloor Street West.
Bloor & Bay Sts. Branch, 55 Bloor Street West.
Bay & Breadalbane Sts. Branch, 880 Bay Street.

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS TREE

8:30 P.M.

WED. DEC. 10, 1969

GREAT HALL, HART HOUSE

-GLEE CLUB

-POETRY READING

-CAROL SINGING

B.Y.O.B.

(BRING YOUR OWN BLANKET)

(FOR SITTING ON THE FLOOR)

There is MORE VARIETY and MORE OPPORTUNITY in Chartered Accountancy today than in almost any other avenue of endeavour

If you are graduating in Engineering and would like to discuss this statement, members of our firm will be on your campus on to answer your questions.

Saturday, December 13

If by chance you are unable to make an appointment at this particular time, get in touch with us direct by calling Mr. Warren Labrie, or the partner in charge of our Toronto Office, at (416) 366-6521.

TOUCHE ROSS & CO.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Halifax • Saint John • Quebec • Montreal • Ottawa • Toronto • Hamilton • Kitchener • London • Winnipeg • Regina • Saskatoon • North Battleford • Calgary • Edmonton • Vancouver • Victoria • Nassau and Freeport, Bahama Islands

CLASSIFIEDS

DIAMONDS, RUBIES, SAPPHIRES. emeralds, opals — certified quality in unusual designs. Remarkable new merchandising method saves you more money than you spend. Toronto Jewellery Exchange 21 Adelaide W. 368-4466

TYPING theses, essays, notes, charts, English, French, other languages. Mirrored graphing, electric typewriters. Mary Dale Scott (M. Davies) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 226. 922-7624

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Day you buy a diamond" H. Proctor and Co. 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416. 921-7702.

SALTY OOG Discotheque will rent premises Monday to Thursday day or evening. For information call A. Curry 964-7080 or 633-2677.

EMPEROR JONES reigns at Hart House Theatre Dec. 4, 5, 6, 8, 30 p.m. Tickets at Lit. Releatory Theatre $1.50

3 GIRLS WANTED to join a household at 35 Madison Ave. 1 place available immediately, 2 more on Jan. 1. Call 921-4970 or drop in at 35 Madison.

JAPANESE: Tutor wanted for beginners. Phone 249-0623 before 8:00.

TYPING OONE — for fast efficient service phone 769-6085.

APARTMENT WANTED for Christmas Vacation. Contact Mike 366-1346 after 7 p.m.

ESSAYS, THESES, typed professionally on Electric machine. Paper supplied 30c per page. Close to campus. Phone 922-8564 after six. Ask for Loree.

EXPERIENCE SECRETARY does typing at home. Experienced in all phases of typing, including legal and thesis. Please keep my telephone number handy for future use. Call: Mrs. Cecile Buck 221-5126.

RENT HOME — share all expenses. Pref. female grad student. Total of 3 people living in large home 20 min walk from Campus. Call 536-1870 — 8-9 p.m. all day Sat. & Sun.

A FEMALE graduate student to share furnished two-bedroom apartment near campus. Call 921-9727 on weekdays after 10 p.m. on weekends anytime.

FOR SALE: Stereo record player — brand new Motorola portable, cost $140, must sell: $95. Call Paul 929-0800.

ECOLE MONTESSORI Chercha surveillants parlent français pour son camp d'été. Telephone 889-6882.

FURNISHED two bedroom apt. To share 10 min. walk from campus $15 week. 925-7862 329 Palmetton Blvd.

MR. FUNKY PRESENTS: "SUPER SOUL SPECTACULAR" 4 big bands — "Atlantis" (10 piece R. & B.) — "Omar Williams Trio" — "The Straightjacks" (6 piece R. & B.) — "Brass Webb" (6 piece R. & B). Coming Oct. 12th New College.

"IN COLD BLOOD" Sunday Nite at The Movies 6:30 & 9:00 p.m. at New College (Classic & Huron) $1 parson.

PETER SELLERS movie MARATHON featuring: 1. "Pink Panther" 2. "What's New Pussycat" 3. "A Shot in the Dark" 4. "Casino Royale" TONITE! 9:00 p.m. Old Physics 135 52 head presented by New College.

"THE BELLY-BUTTON" Coffee house-Discotheque every Friday & Saturday nite 10:00 p.m. — 1:00 a.m. at New College (Wilson Hall) Snack Bar (Willocks St.) live entertainment! 50c stag 75c drag.

LOST: Ladies U of T ring (small). If found please contact Pat Sutherland. 399 Huron St. 923-0674. Small reward.

THE CHRISTMAS TREE is coming! Great Hall, Hart House 8:30 p.m. Wed. Dec. 10.

WANTED — Small apartment to sublet for Christmas holidays. Please contact Greeme Hicks 928-3468.

FLORIO — Miami share driving or expenses or both. Can use our car or yours. leaving Fri. Dec. 19 phone 651-2558

EXECU-SEC SECRETARIAL SERVICES. Public Stenographers. Essays theses — top quality intelligent typing IBM Executive and Selectric Typewriters. Mrs. Walker 441-7077 (days) 449-3744 (evenings)

TRANSLATION from German into English or vice-versa. Fine Arts Students. Will accept rush orders. Call after 5 p.m. 929-0585 our grand ole opry

c & w at massey hall

An old man in a huge white cowboy hat, a fellow named Red who sang praises to all the truckdrivers of the world, and Charlie Pride. They all played at Massey Hall last Friday night. There were many others on the show, but these were the jewels.

Wilf Carter is an old, old, Nova Scotian who's been singing country music for nearly half a century. He rode the boxcars, made about forty albums and still goes on about how he's managed to remain a Canadian. His trademarks are a huge white hat (he's one of the good guys) which he flourishes in great, grand, swooping gestures, and the ability to yodel like hell. He must be about seventy, probably older, but his voice remains strong and the audience called him back again and again. Full of gentle humour, "You don't have to buy my records, I've paid for my VW.", he sang The Old Rugged Cross. "It's my right." It was.

Sounding like a young 'Old Ranger', Red Sovine sings paeans to the gearjammers on the road. Actually his songs are little dramas, with Red acting all the parts of dead truckdrivers and poor little Italians who have lost their baby daughters. Phantom 309, one of his biggest hits is about a dead truckdriver (he died averting a collision with a schoolbus) who still gives people a lift and a dime for a cup of coffee, saying "Tell them Big Joe sent you." Sovine injects a little melodramatic romanticism into the most mundane of lives. Surprisingly, his overdone dramatics actually work, and for a moment his audience really believes the tale.

Charlie Pride, the target of the frenzied affection of matrons and secretaries, the groupies of C&W, is a rare commodity in country music; he's a black man. Big, handsome, he comes from Sledge, Mississippi and doesn't like to remember his cotton picking days. His sophisticated gentility won the ladies over. Whether singing Kershaw or Gibson or gospel songs, he had the crowd stomping, clapping, and clamouring for more. After three encores, his manager finally pulled him off the stage. I think I understand why some people call Massey Hall the Grand Ole Opry of the North.

dan quinlan

don't read it, see it

Of the campus fashionable triumph of playwrights this year — Mrozek, Shakespeare and O'Neill — the latter is featured at the Hart House Theatre until Saturday night.

The sketchy plot of his play, Emperor Jones, concerns the flight through a West Indian forest of an American Negro, once a Pullman porter (the modern Uncle Tom), then a convict who enacted a twisted version of the "rags-to-riches" tale that was still popular with the playwright's 1920's audience. Having become emperor of a native kingdom "not yet self-determined by White Marines" (O'Neill's note), his flight is prompted by a rebellion of his maltreated subjects.

The play's content raises the question of the inherent savagery of the civilized native, but gives little meaning to this or any other question. This accounts for the slowness of the one-act play's long introductory scene, which features a wooden throne familiar to regulars of University College's Junior Common Room. But the starkness of the stage, and the lackluster content of the play, are soon alleviated by various aspects of the production.

The mystic forest is represented by the striking silhouettes and well-synchronized movements of six modern dancers. They are first cast as trees whose gigantesque shadows may symbolize Emperor Jones' magnified fears of the forest. The dancers then provide a refreshing, surreallistic version of these forest fears, of a gang of convicts and a boatload of African slaves. Jones' devolution is presented amid the increasingly tense, incessant beat of a tom-tom.

Jones' demise from arrogant emperor to timorous slave, which is effected by degrees, is forcefully portrayed by Phil Ennis. The role is demanding, because Jones is always on stage, and carried half the play's content in a monologue. A secondary speaking role is that of a "white trash" trader, played by Randy Paisley whose unsure grasp of a Cockney accent contrasts with Ennis' pidgin English, but whose physical posturing matches Ennis' expressiveness.

Ennis won Best Actor at the Simpson's Drama Festival competition, where the play, Forest Hill C.I.'s entry, placed second to a New Canadian Play. Honourable mention was deservedly given to Barb Rosenberg's choreography, Linda Rostein's stage managing, and Mark Manson's direction. The original cast was assembled, and the production resurrected on two weeks' notice as a UC Players' Guild production. "But the production has changed," says Manson, one of the few student directors at the Ontario-wide competition. "For one thing, the performers are more mature. And transition from scene to scene, which was marked by blackouts, is now handled with coloured strobe lights."

The latter serves to lend a unity and an aesthetic appeal to a play which makes pretty dead reading, but worthwhile watching.

agi lukacs

ghetto children

Richard Margolis writes poems by arranging simple words into a few short lines — easy enough to do, but difficult to do well. Unless a poet can pour depth and originality into such a form, the form by its nature, will expose him.

The poems in this book are good; sometimes flawed, but sometimes very fine. They are an attempt to capture the experience of childhood in the ghetto-world. Simplicity seems an appropriate vehicle, for each day consists of a number of straightforward and predictable events. Yet for all its predictability, existence is really incomprehensible. It is the stark simplicity of youthful incomprehension that drives this fact home. 'My Homecoming' and the title poem, 'Looking For a Place', both derive their strength from the narrator's inability to understand a situation he is describing.

At the same time, the city instills a certain kind of knowledge. The poet makes frequent use of this wisdom/innocence paradox. 'Bitter-Sweet', for instance, seems to me a tremendously ironic and compact poem:

Most Sundays
I sin for condy.
I keep the dime
my mother gives me
to drop in the collection.
There's o way to palm the dime and at the same time make the box clink.
It's a small sin,
I think.

A slender volume of brief, easy poems such as this one has drawbacks. Short squibs ('Too bad about substitute teachers: / they don't know our names') suffer from not being in a heavier setting. You tend to read the book very quickly — hardly fair to the poet. And it is easy to mistake slight means for slight meaning.

Just the same, Margolis does well. His accomplishment, I think, is that he reverses the usual relationship between poet and simple form. Instead of struggling against the blattancy and hollowness the form invites, Margolis allows the simplicity to reflect and intensify the irony implicit in the gap between the world and one's perception of it. Richard Margolis. Looking for a Place. Lippincott, $4.75 gregory ross

Hillel Major Lecture

IRVING LAYTON

on

"THREE MONTREAL JEWISH POETS"

Sunday, December 7, 8:30 p.m.

Y.M. Y.W.H.A., 750 Spadina Avenue

EVERYONE WELCOME

DAFFYDIL'70

december 9-13

HART HOUSE THEATRE

TICKETS AVAILABLE AT HART HOUSE

'BEST SHOW ON CAMPUS' - varsity

'FAST, FACILE, FUNNY' - telegraph

'OFF COLOUR, RIBALD, FILTHY
- WE LAUGHED - THE WRITERS

WEEK NIGHTS 2.50
FRI SAT 2.00

editor....larry haiven

associate....jack mccaffrey

films....ian ritchie

watsUP

MUSIC

Well, there's finally a major jazz event in town for a change. MILES DAVIS closes out his week at the Colonial on Saturday, and you'll be lucky if you can get in.

Next Thursday at 2:00, the Women's Musical Club of Toronto presents a recital by pianist ANTON KUERTI at Eaton's Auditorium. Tickets 75c with ATL card. Tomorrow night at 8:30, the FESTIVAL SINGERS are appearing at St. Anne's Anglican Church (Dufferin north of Dundas). Tonight at 8:15, the Central Tech Opera Workshop is presenting VERDI's RIGOLETTO complete. Tickets $1.00.

DAVID RAE finishes his two weeks at the Riverboat this weekend; BRUCE COCKBURN opens there Tuesday. At the Onion, it's OWEN McBRIDE through Sunday with BILL CORDRAY opening Wednesday. DOC WILLIAMS & STOMPING TOM CONNORS are at the Horseshoe Tavern for a lengthy stay, and you can catch both LITTLE CHARLES & THE SIDEWINDERS and the FEMALE BEATLES at the Coq D'Or.

Free

Sat. Dec. 6th. 4:00, organ recital by PATRICK WEDD, St. Pauls Church (Bloor & Jarvis).

Sun. Dec. 7th. 3:00, Faculty of Music Concert Band. Johnson Building.

3:00 U of T Chorus at Scarborough

8:30, U of T Chorus will do Handel's ODE TO ST. CECILIA'S DAY in the Great Hall at Hart House.

8:30, Horn recital by BARRY TUCKWELL at the Johnson Building.

Mon. Dec. 8th. 1:00, JOSEPH MACEROLLO (accordian recital) at the Johnson Building.

Tues. Dec. 9th. 8:30, A Christmas program of BRAHMS, BEETHOVEN SCHUBERT and others by Contralto and strings at Goethe House (1067 Yonge).

TV

About those drinks over the holidays . . . CTV's Our World offers "Point Zero Eight" — a sobering study of the dangers of drinking and driving and the new breathalyzer tests. Minister of Justice John Turner is interviewed on the specifics of the law; and a film of experiments on impairment with racing car drivers, first sober, then with a few drinks. Tuesday, December 9. 10:30. Channel 9.

drm

RADIO

If you think "Solidarity Forever" is a song about Lot's wife, then you've got another think coming. This week CBC Soundings is presenting a program about the Bobbies, the IWW or the Industrial Workers of the World and the fact that it still lives and kicks on 2422 North Halsted Street in Chicago as well as all around the US and Canada. Thrill to the strains of "Where the Fraser River Flows". Sing along with Joe Hill ditties. Learn about the labour movement. It's this Wednesday, 6:30 on CBL, 740 on your dial. Program was prepared by our own Larry Haiven. The Review goes audio.

MUSIC

If you prefer your entertainment from midnite until 4 P.M., try The Matador After Hours Club at the corner of Dovercourt Rd. and College St. Country music is featured and big names often drop in and just join the show. Ann Dunn is your sexy hostess and she has said she will offer special rates to university students on presentation of an A.T.L. card.

JAMBOREE

Every Sunday at 8 P.M. The Locarno Ballroom at 2714 Danforth Ave. E (between Main and Victoria Pk. subway stations) hosts the Boot Country &

Western Jamboree. There is special emphasis on developing Canadian C&W talent and at least once a month there will be a special show with the best in C & W like Myrna Lorrie and Julie Lynn. Proceeds of the show often go to funds for retarded children. It's a good cause all round and for $1.50, it's a bargain.

THEATRE

Two one-act plays open Tuesday night December 9 at the Drama Centre's church on Glenmorris street: Strindberg's The Stronger, directed by Norma Levine, and Pinter's A Slight Ache, directed by Nigel Spencer. They'll be playing through Saturday night, with curtain at 8:30 and no admission charge.

Tonight and tomorrow night at 8:30, Anouilh's Antigone, directed by Bob Galbraith, is being presented in the New Vic Theatre. Same time, same nights, Eugene O'Neill's one-act Emperor Jones is on in Hart House Theatre by a high school group under the auspices of University College Players' Guild. On Tuesday the 9th, also at 8:30, the Medical Society will take over in Hart House with their annual revue, Daftydil, which will continue through Saturday night. The show is rumored to include a medical students' home movie.

Also opening next week is a Trinity College Dramatic Society production of a new play, The Canadian Lynx, by Jerry O'Carroll. The stage of Cartwright Hall in St. Hilda's College will be transformed into a cottage in the Canadian North at 7:30 on Monday through Wednesday, Friday and Saturday evenings. Tickets $1 at the door. Tuesday to Friday: at 8:30 New Vic Theatre "The Conscript Fathers" by Dr. David Knight.

Elsewhere . . . Ernie Schwartz' Studio Lab Company opens Dionysius in 69 — Euripides' Bacchae as adapted by Richard Schechner — at 8:30 on Thursday, 11 December, thereby aceing out Hair to Toronto's on-stage nudity premiere. The Anthony Newley Revue is at the O'Keefe through tomorrow night, to be replaced on Monday by George M. (as in Cohan), a musical starring Darryl Hickman (as in Dobie Gillis). And still playing . . . The Price at the Royal Alex and The Tempest at Toronto Workshop Productions.

— mo'c

music.... peter hatch

art....mike kesterton

photography....errol young radio and television....daniel mack

films....ian ritchie

associate....jack mccaffrey

editor....larry haiven

radio and television....daniel mack

theatre....marion o'connor

books....bob bossin and steve langdon

Tarpons win championship

The U of T women's intercollegiate synchronized, diving and speed team, collectively known as the Tarpons, won top honors in the WITCA championships at McGill last weekend.

The synchronized gals, under the direction of Mrs. Sheila Romeiko, led the way to victory Friday night by placing first in their section.

Beth Smith placed third in the strokes with a total of 71.0 and Judy Maxwell placed fifth attaining 69 points. The third strokes competitor, Marnie Churchill, did well in this event, but only two competitors are allowed to place in the stroke and figure events.

Janis Hughes gained second place in the figures competition with 74 points. Mary Lou Hawkins came a close third with a sum total of 72 points. Sylvia McVicar should have placed fifth with 64.5 points.

Mary Lou Hawkins, performing "Festivals of Greece", drew full attention from the audience but only 356 points from the judges, to give her a well deserved second in that event behind McGill's outstanding Brenda Olsen (384).

"It had better be Tonight" was the thought in the minds of the U of T competitors as well as the title of the winning duet performed by Mary Lou Hawkins and Janis Hughes.

The diving competition took place on Saturday morning, but the early hours didn't stop Barb Beatty from placing first with 190.65 points nor Pamela LeMay who was fifth with 172.60 points.

Linda Geale was a close follow-up to these divers, but again only two competitors could place. The excellent form of these girls earned Toronto first place in diving.

In the speed events, competition was really tough, but we hung in there gaining an overall second beating Western, MacMaster, McGill and Queen's, but failing to top Guelph's strong swimmers.

TORONTO RESULTS

200 yard medley relay — Judy Kent, Mable Ann Brown, Francis Flint, Anu Pettai 4th (2:16.9)

100 free — Merrily Stratten-first (1:01.3), Liz Daniel-3rd (1:02.9)

50 Back — Randy Croome-2nd (31.7), Beth Smith-10th (40.0)

100 yd. indiv. medley — Liz Daniel-3rd (1:12.5), Ruth Unger-4th (1:14.8)

50 Breast — Maryl Hurley-8th (42.1), Mable Ann Brown-3rd (39.3)

100 Fly — Francis Flint-4th (1:20.2), Pamela LaMay-7th (1:40.1)

100 Breast — Liz Daniel-3rd (1:23.0), Maryl Hurley-10th (1:33.6)

50 Fly — Francis Flint-2nd (34.0), Pamela LeMay-6th (37.5)

100 Back — Randy Croome-2nd (1:10.4), Ruth Unger-5th (1:14.5)

50 Free — Anu Pettai-3rd (29.9), Judy Kent-8th (30.7)

200 Free — Merrily Stratten-2nd (2:10.4), Randy Croome-4th (2:26.2)

200 Free Relay — Anu Pettai, Judy Kent, Ruth Unger, Merrily Stratten — 1st (1:57.3)

MABEL ANN BROWN

LIZ DANIEL

MARYL HURLEY

BARB BEATTY

story and pictures
by pat smith

CHEVRON STANDARD LIMITED
Calgary, Alberta

offering permanent employment in

PETROLEUM EXPLORATION

will conduct on Campus interviews on December 11

for

POSTGRADUATES - GRADUATES
in

GEOLOGY: Honors Geology
Geological Engineering

GEOPHYSICS: Engineering Science
(Geophysics Option)
Physics and Geology
Geological Engineering
(Geophysics Option)
Honors Mathematics and Physics
Honors Physics

ARRANGEMENTS FOR PERSONAL INTERVIEWS MAY BE MADE

THROUGH THE UNIVERSITY'S
PLACEMENT OFFICE

581 Spadina Avenue. (Corner Willcocks)

CAMP STAFF

Manitou-wabing Camp of Fine Arts

Now accepting applications from counsellors, assistants and Instructors in the following:

Sailing, Water-Skiing, Swimming, Canoeing and Tripping, Golf, Tennis, Riding, Riflery, Fencing, Music (String and wind players), Guitar, Drama, Drawing and Painting, Graphics, Pottery, Sculpture. Some executive positions open. Section Heads.

Graduate and undergrad, students with experience, call RU. 3-6168 or write 821 Eglinton Avenue West, Toronto for applications and further information.

DRY CLEANING

8 LBS. - $3.00
½ HOUR

Church & Wellesley Self Serve
- DRY CLEANER

OPEN EVERY DAY
WEEKNIGHTS TILL 9:00 P.M.
Courteous Attendant on Duty

560 CHURCH ST.
924-6010

ANTON KUERTI
pianist

PRESENTEO BY WOMEN'S MUSICAL CLUB
THURSDAY AFTERNOON

DEC. 11th - 2 P.M.

EATON AUOITORIUM

Student Tickets at Ooor

WITH A.T.L. CARO - 75c

For Information Phone 225-0318

NEW YEAR'S EVE?

HART HOUSE, OF COURSE, DAHLING!

STEAK & CHAMPAGNE
3 BANDS
HONKY-TONK

$17/COUPLE

HALL PORTER & UNDERGRADUATE OFF.

DRUGS, MYSTICISM, AND COMMUNION

UNIVERSITY
LUTHERAN CHAPEL

The deepest need of every individual is to know he is an accepted and valued part of some community. As John Donne put it in the 16th Century, "no man is an island, entire of itself." Even on a 30 thousand population campus in a city of 2 million, one often feels he is an island. Many feel a terrifying sense of loneliness and meaninglessness that even high academic achievement does not resolve. In the midst of such uncertainty and pain, there are those who turn to sex, and to drugs, with the hope of solving and healing themselves. The desire for such healing is so strong in some it amounts to a mysticism, a search for the Ultimate Healer.

Persons trapped in circumstances like these often turn to drugs, and to the community of drug users with the hope that the harsh edges of their problems will be resolved. On a far more profound level there are those drug users who become aware of their desire for communion with Divinity. Indeed some drug users speak of having a "religious" experience, and they sing praises to drugs for providing the short cut to God. The tragedy is that this drug "communion" is a travesty of that life-restoring and person-serving communion Christians affirm.

Untold numbers of Christians have enjoyed the fulfillment of themselves and their neighbors, through a communion without drugs. The initiator of this communion is our Creator, the Lord God our Father. He does not require any spiritual or mystical virtuosity, or moral perfection as a prerequisite. He has come to us just as we are, through Another like us . . . only more so . . . whom Christians know as Jesus Christ. Christians know Christ as the bridge to the highest truth, the greatest love, the fullest humanity, the broadest service to God and man, and to the most rewarding community. Crossing the bridge time and again has filled many a Christian with a heady delirium of rejoicing which banishes loneliness, emptiness, and meaninglessness. This is why we celebrate Christmas with festivals of music and service. It is our launching pad from which we orbit to enjoy the mysteries of the universe.

Worship 11 A.M. "The Book of Healing and Hope."
Evening Discussion 7 P.M. Situation Ethics with Dr. Bruce Alton of Trinity College as leader.

GETTING ENGAGED?

"Gomeni"

- .42 Carat Diamond
- 18 Kt. Gold Setting
- Excellent Clarity
- Excellent Colour

$300.00

Also Available in 1/4, 1/3 and 1/2 Carat Sizes

WE ARE DIRECT
DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.

DIAMOND DEALERS

131 BLOOR W. STE. 416
921-7702

A "Mini Course" can make your degree worth more

Get a head start on success. Qualify for a better career by combining practical business training with your academic studies.

Shaw "Mini Courses" are keyed to your time table and individual needs.

DROP THIS COUPON IN THE MAIL

RUSH me more details about your "Mini Courses"

Name _____

Address _____

Phone _____

I'm interested in _____

SHAW COLLEGES

2436 YONGE ST.
TORONTO 315
481-6477

"For 75 years, we have specialized in Total Business Training." 731-A

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
Toronto Professional Bldg,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 101, Ontario

IMMIGRATION
CONSULTANTS

Telephone 364-0973

CONSOLIDATED - BATHURST LIMITED

BACKGROUND

In 1967 two solid and long-established companies and their subsidiaries joined forces in a dovetailed operation that represents wider geographical dispersion and greater product diversification. The integration brought with it a new name: Consolidated-Bathurst Limited. Consolidated Paper Corporation Ltd. had been linked traditionally with newsprint, Bathurst Paper Ltd. largely with packaging paperboards and containers made from paperboards.

Consolidated-Bathurst is 93% Canadian owned, with its Head Office in Montreal. Sales in 1968 were $295 million. The Company harvests 22,000 sq. miles of woodlands and operates eight mills and some thirty converting plants in Canada. The Company has manufacturing subsidiaries in the United States and in West Germany. One of Canada's largest producers of newsprint, Consolidated-Bathurst has about half of its total dollar sales in packaging materials in paper, wood and plastic. It also sells bleached kraft pulp and has a wood products group of five sawmills.

OPPORTUNITIES

In the structure of the parent Company there are five business or operational groups: Woodlands, Mill Manufacturing, Newsprint and Pulp, Wood Products and Packaging. The Company's management philosophy and its organization into functional and business groups are intended to provide every opportunity for the advancement of promising employees, present and future.

Top quality graduates in the faculties or departments of chemical, electrical, mechanical and civil engineering, chemistry (research — graduate and post-graduate levels), and mathematics will be offered positions that will allow them to demonstrate their ability to perform with competence and progress to management responsibility at an early age.

While on-the-job training will be emphasized, graduates, along with other Company employees, will participate in development programs coordinated by the Manpower Planning and Management Development Department.

DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Performance is reviewed annually and salary increases and promotions are based on individual performance and potential. A complete range of coordinated employee benefits is comparable with the best available.

Consolidated-Bathurst representatives will visit your campus on Friday, December 12, 1969. Please see your Placement Office for further details.

GRADUATE ENGLISH ASSOCIATION

Prof. R.A. GREENE

SPEAKING ON THE FIELD & ITS FUTURE

RHOODES HOUSE, TRINITY

MONDAY, DEC. 8, 8 P.M.

8:00

Beverly & Cecil

Sun. Dec. 7

TRINITY COLLEGE LIT PRESENTS

ROMAN POLANSKI'S REPULSION

WITH CATHERINE DENEUVE

8:30 SUNDAY, DECEMBER 7

SEELYE HALL, TRINITY COLLEGE

50¢

The Wymilwood Concert Committee invites you to come and sing Christmas Carols

Sunday, Dec. 7 — 9 p.m.

Wymilwood Music Room
Coffee afterwards

CUG: Parity will take decisions out of the dark

By JOHN BENSON

The CUG Programming Committee sponsored the final meeting in its present series of debates on CUG yesterday in the Hart House Debates Room.

Attendance at the meeting was typically sparse, as about 30 people showed up to question CUG Commissioners Prof. J. S. Thompson, D'Arcy Martin and Gary Webster. Martin and Webster were two of the three students on the commission.

Staff-student parity at the department level was again the main issue. In discussing student parity on hiring, firing and tenure, Prof. Thompson said, "The number of times that staff and students are going to have opposite views about tenure and other issues are fewer than one might expect."

Thompson, who is Chairman of the Department of Anatomy, said, "I personally would welcome a situation in which the chairman of a department would have a definite clear input of information of staff and student opinion about the competence of a member of the faculty. Presently, many chairmen do not have this input and as a consequence have to make decisions about competence 'in the dark'."

Another advantage in having staff and students decide on tenure and promotions would be that "the faculty member would be happier knowing where the chairman's opinion comes from so that an appeal would be possible", said Prof. Thompson.

PARITY BEST PRINCIPLE

Martin said, "Staff-student parity is the best principle in terms of human relationships. If the students were in a minority they would feel that their opinions were being bulldozed over and would become more defensive.

"This would lead to a tendency to take the discussion outside the department. If parity was instituted, there would be a general feeling that an agreement had to be reached and there would be less of a tendency for students to advocate extreme positions.

"Once the groups, both staff and students, have equal representation there would be less group identification. This breakdown of role identification would lead to more co-operation among the members of the university," Martin said.

Gary Webster said "The objection that the student, because he does not spend as many years at the university as does the average faculty member, should not have as much say in the running of the university is not completely valid. While it is true that the individual student does not spend a long time here, the student body does have a large stake in the affairs of the university."

STUDENT EXPERTISE

"Students should be regarded as a category," he said, "because student concerns transcend personalities."

Regarding the question of student expertise, Webster said, "there is a tendency for students to elect representatives who have experience and knowledge about the university."

Prof. Thompson agreed. "The question of expertise of students and staff sitting on the Governing Council and Department councils is being over-worked. The type of expertise required by members of the Governing Council is not business expertise, but a personal knowledge of the learning environment. The Governing Council will be primarily concerned with the style of life inside the university."

On December 18th, there will be a special meeting specifically for the support staff to discuss their role in the university.

It is likely that classes will be cancelled sometime early in the new year to facilitate discussion of the CUG Report.

Although the CUG Commissioners will not be sponsoring any more meetings, they will be available for consultation to any groups or departments on campus who wish to discuss the CUG Report.

POOR STUDENTS

Low on bread for Christmas presents?

Cheer up!

The Textbook Store has gifts you can afford

Inflatable Zodiac Cushions

Cedar Mounted Prints (looks good, smells good)

Silk screened, hand finished Linen Place Mats

Records (the new Donovan)

Books (e.g. The Impacted Lower

Third Molar $1.98)

Starts Wed. November 26 and if you're really desperate, just say

"Charge it!"

THE TEXTBOOK
STORE

BOOKS

HART HOUSE 50

CLASSICAL CONCERT

Wednesday, December 10th

Music Room, 1-2 p.m.

RUTH BISHOP

Pianist

Ladies Welcome

VARSITY TABLE TENNIS TOURNAMENT

Date: DECEMBER 13, 1969

Time: 1 P.M.

Place: LOWER GYM, HART HOUSE

Fee: 25¢ - Register at Hall Porter's Desk

STEAK & CHAMPAGNE

3 BANDS & HONKEY-TONK

NEW YEAR'S EVE

Tickets: $17/couple - Hall Porter

& Undergraduate Office

Could pollution rights be sold?

By BEV DILLON

Prof. J. H. Dales, economics professor at U of T, thinks putting a price on air and water, will solve the problem of pollution.

Speaking to a class of about 30 students last Friday, the professor outlined the economic consequences of over-population and pollution.

"Life has a price. Nobody is going to pay the price to create an atmosphere like the one when Columbus was here," Prof. Dales said.

The problem of pollution, as Dales sees it, is that no one knows how much money it will cost to remove the waste or how to pay for it if the cost was known.

He feels since the quality of the environment is a "public good," it follows that "there is no other way of deciding the quality of that environment except collectively, through the government. Nobody is individually responsible for pollution."

Dales said George Kerr, Minister of Energy and Resource Management at Queen's Park, is "infuriating" when he says that the problem of pollution is each individual's responsibility.

"Kerr misunderstands the problem. Individual's are helpless. Anything the individual can do is insignificant."

Dales contended that pricing systems are the best method to use in controlling pollution, primarily because they adjust themselves automatically to changes in the environment, particularly to population growth.

"Growth is the cause of pollution," he said. "We cannot reduce pollution without reducing the population or the standard of living because air and water are fixed commodities."

Canada doesn't have the pressing problem of over-population because land is priced, Dales explained. When it gets scarce the price goes up. But over-population with respect to air and water is a different category because they are not priced.

"If we can't own a thing, we can't price it. If we can't price it, then we can't own it. There is a one-to-one relation between user rights and the price system."

To implement the price system he suggested that the government decide on a maximum level of pollution which would then be divided into portions. The right to pollute would be sold as bonds.

NAOMI OF LONDON HAIRSTYLISTS

wishes to announce the moving of her salon to a new, super location at 81 BLOOR ST. EAST by the Towne Cinema of Bloor subway, and invites all her friends to drop in and relax in the soothing, eclectic atmosphere. She would also like to introduce to Toronto Mr. JOSEPH, of Alexander's of Paris, he's just arrived and bringing over with ideas for appointment phone 924-9542-3

And Also
MISS SMILEY
of London England
She is a whiz at
WHAT'S NEW

All students with
A.T.L. CARDS
20% DISCOUNT

THE BULL & THE BEAR

Draught beer on tap from noon till after midnight. Hearty lunches from 75¢. Wild atmosphere.

The Bull and The Bear in The Sutton Place Hotel • On Wellesley east of Danforth

FOR MAYOR CLARKSON

(well, would you believe Prime Minister)

By PAUL CARSON

A funny thing happened to U of T political science professor Stephen Clarkson on his way to the may-orally Monday night.

He lost. Badly.

Clarkson demonstrated for all fellow political scientists to see that the ingredients of Trudeau-mania aren't included in the recipe for electing the mayor of the City of Toronto.

The Clarkson campaign had the slogans, the teenie-boppers, the apparently informal but actually carefully-scheduled public appearances, the money, the best of the usually-potent Metro Liberal machine, endorsements from the Globe and the Star, and he got clobbered.

Stephen Clarkson's wife, Adrienne, is attractive, intelligent, a successful novelist and well-known as a television hostess.

William Dennison's wife, Dorothy, is polite, bland, and gets a big thrill out of her paint-by-number kits, when her husband hangs the resulting product in his city hall offices.

MILD BILL & CO.

And William Dennison and his band of good, grey, polite non-entities outpolled Stephen Clarkson's Beautiful People and teenie-boppers by more than two-to-one.

Moral? None, really.

Clarkson's headquarters are at 62 Richmond West, an old law office. Monday night they seemed more suited to elections for a high school student council than for a serious campaign for mayor in an adult world.

The kids were everywhere.

Probably seven or eight freshly scrubbed high school types for every campaign worker of voting age.

Most are girls, in two shapes, busty and bustier.

The photographers had a pleasant evening.

JUST CONNECTIONS

"It's really easy, actually," explained Ann Brown (H SMC), a regular Liberal worker since the 1965 federal election.

"It's just a matter of connections. We get a contact at Bishop Strahan, so the boys at UTS come down to follow them, which brings in Branksome, which brings the guys from Ryerson " " see?"

The girls, and their enthusiastic followers, are busy phoning voters in proven Liberal polls, trying to get out every possible vote, especially from apartment complexes and Forest Hill.

"We've got to get the vote out. Do that and we win," shouts a campaign worker from Ryerson.

As the polling stations close, reports of long line-ups and 60 per cent turnouts are filtering in. Good sign. Shouts of joy.

At 8:30, Dennison is running way ahead of Stephen (never Steve, never Clarkson, never "our candidate") roughly 5,500 to 2,400.

Bad sign. Sighs.

Clarkson and wife arrive at the campaign rooms shortly afterwards.

They are greeted warmly, applause, no hysterics, no Trudeau-mania. There is no elitism or sense of distance.

TEAM EFFORT

From the way Clarkson and his workers treat each other, the Liberal campaign, if nothing else, was a genuine team effort.

The Globe and Mail said of Stephen Clarkson, "He has the brains, the right kind of conscience, the money, the style . . . he knows how to wear a Hardy Amies suit without being pushy about it."

The election night package is in medium grey with red and white pin stripes. Maybe Hardy Amies, but it's kinda hard looking at labels when a suit stays buttoned and the wearer doesn't answer.

Light maroon shirt, patterned silk tie, polished black shoes, sculptured hair. Neat
* Wife in green. Wife smiles.

Photogs busy again. So much for the teenie-boppers.

PARTY POLITICS ARE GOOD FOR YOU

Clarkson is dispensing Polisci 100 dribble about the value of party politics on the municipal level ("good clean efficient city government").

The kids stand by, gazing in mixed admiration and dreams ("maybe someday, me . . ."), the earnest young reporters are busily paraphrasing each predictable sentence, the old reporters are making the odd jot and looking at the girls. Can't blame them.

I look at clippings pinned to the walls.

Liberal newsletter . . . "now is the Time for all good Liberals to come to the aid of the City . . .", Globe, Star, Chinese paper, Ukrainian, Toike.

Toike?

Toike of Nov. 20 with cute story attacking bumbings of Dennison.

SZENDE COMMENTS

Andy Szende talks about Stephen Clarkson as a politician.

"He's hopeless, absolutely hopeless.

"Look, Clarkson's been at U of T, what, five years, and he still doesn't understand the political reality there. He desperately wanted to get an endorsement from The Varsity, but that's not worth anything in the city. He wanted Varsity coverage, for what? How many votes is that worth?

Adrienne Clarkson and youthful campaign worker adopt the proper look of wiseful odoron as Stephen Clarkson (stylishly-suited forearm and leg off left) makes his non-concession concession speech Monday night.

photo by paul carson

"I understands civic problems all right, but as academic issues, as an academic exercise. Here he might stumble into being mayor and he has no conception of how this city is really governed, the people, the power alliances, nothing."

HURRAH FOR CLARKSON!! HURRAH FOR CLARKSON!! SOMEONE IN THE CROWD IS SHOUTING HURRAH FOR CLARKSON!!!

The teenie-boppers are at it again.
CLARKSON, CLARKSON, DY—NA—MITE!! WE'LL FIGHT FOR HIM WITH ALL OUR MIGHT!! YEA CLARKSON!!

It's like a bloody high school pep rally. But the cameramen like it, so the kids run through a few more. Ugh.

KIDS HAVE SIMPLISTIC VIEW

When the cheering stops, I talk to a few of them. Sure, they say, campaigning's fun, and we sure do learn a lot.

They know both sides of every issue, the right, logical Clarkson / Liberal side and the stupid, old-fashioned, wrong Campbell / Dehonso side.

And if they happen to forget the official version, they can run into the wall-safe turned store-room, grab any one of two-dozen or so policy statements and refresh their memories.

There is a Stephen Clarkson position on almost everything from amalgamation to the state of Toronto's storm sewers.

The Spadina Expressway, Clarkson doesn't like it; the North York Liberals love it.

Clarkson describes this as an example of the value of the party system.

"It shows we can have our differences and talk about them in a friendly way," he says.

DEFEAT IS CERTAIN

By 9:30 it is apparent that the impossible has happened. Stephen Clarkson has lost.

The cream of The Toronto Liberal Establishment from Walter Lockhart Gordon on down are not going to unseat Bill Dennison and his paint-by-number mentality.

Barbra Sullivan looks sick.

Introduction: Barbra Sullivan is the wife of former SAC President Jordan ("There are only four true careers — priest, teacher, doctor, and politician — and I'm going to be a politician") Sullivan, but we shall not saddle her with any guilt-by-association.

Barbra does nice things for the Liberal party and the Liberal party does nice things for her — a research project on "campus and underground newspapers" for the Senate committee on the Press.

Someone tells her The Varsity is covering the Clarkson campaign.

Barbra Sullivan smiles.

THE NON-CONCESSION CONCESSION

Stephen Clarkson is going far in politics; he's already learned how to concede without really conceding.

He mounts a chair, adoring wife and star-struck girl from Branksome Hall move to his side. The reporters press close. Speech Time.

"Party politics are here to stay."

"Party government is good government for the city."

"We proved that the city is a national problem."

"It was a great fight; you all did well."

Of 16 official Liberal candidates, two are elected. CIVAC, a purely municipal party, elected five; the NDP elected four.

FEW TEARS ARE SHED

There are no tears, no gloom, no despair. Just cigarette smoke and many, many coffee cups strewn about the floor.

An earnest young worker pleads with Clarkson not to concede anything.

A TV set flashes a picture of victorious Bill Dennison accompanied by a youngster of grade-school age, a nephew perhaps.

"Don't concede; 10,000 votes might appear at any moment!"

Clarkson keeps a straight face and moves on.

"Who's that twerp," a UTS boy asks sarcastically. "the representative of the national association of nursery school kids?"

It has been a night of mechanics and techniques, not idealism or philosophy.

People start to drift towards an all-night Clarkson party elsewhere; perhaps there they will drink something stronger than coffee and say something more profound than "Party government is good government".

Nobody is shedding tears for Professor Stephen Clarkson.

After all, he's only 32.

And next time, a grateful party will give him a safe federal or provincial seat to run in.

Which may, perhaps, have been his goal all the time.

Why be mayor when you can be Prime Minister?

And don't forget the kids.

Lose to Guelph 3-2

Blues must rebound against Warriors

By COLIN PILMER

The perennial question in intercollegiate sports, "What's a Gryphon?", was finally answered Wednesday night at Varsity Arena as the Guelph Gryphons upset the Blues 3-2.

A Gryphon is a collection of hockey players who win exciting games against over confident opponents.

The game itself was scrappy and very, very dull (the Canadian Press reporter eventually turned to reading The Republic Plato's Republic). Neither team enjoyed much of an advantage, although Blues had a slight edge in the play.

Varsity grabbed a 2-0 lead in the first period on power-play goals by Paul Laurent from close in and a screened slapshot from the point by Dave Field.

Guelph skated stronger in the second period and were rewarded when Bob Fierheller scored on a three-on-one break. Blues momentum died somewhat and only the Buba-Wright-Boland line showed any real spark.

Guelph continued to improve during the third period, and although they never assumed control of the play Gryphons did manage to score twice to win the game.

With Dave McDowall serving a cheap hooking penalty, Ron Sevigny put a soft backhand into the net at 2:32. Varsity goaltender Adrien Watson was screened and never saw the shot.

The winner came at 10:31 when Sevigny blocked a shot at his own blue-line and broke in alone on Watson. Adrien made a sprawling save but Rob Halpenny coasted in to net the rebound.

Biggest problem facing coach Tom Watt is how to put together his injury-riddled team and get them up for tonight's match, following Wednesday night's miserable showing against Guelph.

Blues' wingers were unable to finish off their plays and the defense was often trapped up ice.

A lot of little things adding up to one big loss.

The Blues face their stiffest test of the season tonight as they travel to Waterloo to meet the U of W Warriors.

Waterloo, meanwhile, is riding the crest of an undefeated season, and with three games under their belt the Warriors are showing signs of being the league powerhouse. In their first three starts they beat Guelph 3-1, Macmaster, 3-2 and Windsor 8-2.

All this, despite the fact that they lost the league's leading scorer, Ron Robinson, who is now playing Senior A hockey in Oakville.

Game time is 8 p.m.

Double header faces BasketBlues after three exhibition losses

By PETER WHITE

Well fans — it's basketball time of year again! Our lonely (so sad) Blues operating out of a credibility gap these past weeks expose themselves at last to their adoring public of frustrated basketballers, disenfranchised hockey buffs and ballers and duffers of other sorts this week-end.

Blues appear on Friday night at Ryerson and Saturday night bounce forth against York on our distant court at the institution of the same name. Both games are set for eight p.m.

After three exhibition losses the Blues find themselves with the happy prospect of approaching reality and expect, with the addition of a well-healed Larry Trafford, to finally show their class. So come and see a classy show; the password, gang, is Action — as in run, run, run!

Blues suffered a most self-satisfying loss Monday which is the source of this optimism about the future. The team displaying heretofore unseen coherence were breathing heavy on the asses of the basketball-fed children of Buffalo State (those are big boys) and found themselves behind a trifling four points close to half time.

That they were finally KO'd 94-59 hardly seemed to matter. If our half-ripe muscles had held up — well that's a matter of future interest.

HARK HARK
More Sports
on Page 19
Women, even

SPECIAL EXTENSION

TO ENROLL FOR YOUR UNIVERSITY HEALTH AND ACCIDENT PLAN

THREE PLANS TO CHOOSE FROM

PLAN I

EXTENDED HEALTH CARE

NO DEDUCTIBLE ON ACCIDENT BENEFITS

PLAN II

OVERSEAS AND AMERICAN STUDENTS

STUDENTS ON STUDENT VISA

PLAN III

NEWLY LANDED IMMIGRANT

INTERIM HOSPITAL COVERAGE
EXTENDICARE PLUS LIFE

LIFE

$10,000 FOR $22.00 A YEAR

USE REGULAR APPLICATION

You need this coverage if you fall under one of the following categories:

1. Canadian students who are covered by OHSIP and OHSC and need extended health care
2. Students in Canada on a student visa and are not covered by OHSIP or OHSC
3. Students in Ontario from another province who do not have coverage from that province.
4. Newly landed immigrant students who are required to wait three months for the provincial plans to become effective.

ADMIN. — JOHN INGLE,
700 BAY ST. 364-4114
BAY AT GERRARD

NOTE: If you have not received your brochure, additional forms may be obtained of the Registrar's office, Student Council Office, Graduate Studies Office, International Students' Centre, the Health Services, or Faculty Offices

Pat. & Joseph HAIR DESIGNS

116 A BLOOR ST. W.

CUT ONLY — $3.00
SET FROM — $4.00
COCKTAIL RINSE — $4.00 PLUS SET

BOOK YOUR XMAS & NEW YEAR'S APPOINTMENT NOW.
CALL PATRICK GR JOSEPH
921-1234 — 921-4884

KIBBUTZ ALIYA DESK GET INVOLVED WITH THE KIBBUTZ

The kibbutz is a unique social experiment in cooperative living which strives for personal and community self-realization.

We invite you to experience the kibbutz through the following programs, which are available any time, all year round.

KIBBUTZ ULPAN

A six month program of ½ day work and ½ day Hebrew studies

AGE: 18-35
COST: Transportation
DATES: Year round

For information and application for these programs and for permanent settlement, summer and teenage programs, contact:

ZVI ZEXER

KIBBUTZ ALIYA DESK
Suite 1301
200 Park Avenue
South
New York,
New York 10003
(212) GR 7-5663

TEMPORARY WORKER

Living and working on a kibbutz
One month or more

AGE: 18-35
COST: Transportation
DATES: Year round

ASA ARNON
Room 312
188 Marlee Avenue
Toronto 19,
Ontario
(416) 783-4722
(evenings: 633-7225)

SAVE OUR CITY

A horse and buggy and a haywagon will lead a parade down the proposed route of the Spadina Expressway Saturday.

Defeated mayoralty candidates Margaret Campbell and Stephen Clarkson, and Jane Jacobs, author of Death and Life of the Great American Cities, will join the march, which is being organized by the "Stop Spadina! Save Our City" committee. "It's important to keep the defeated politicians hearts up," said Committee chairman Alan Powell, a U of T Sociology Professor. Eighty four thousand people, in voting for Campbell, Clarkson and Riddell, voted against the expressway; only 64,000 voted for Dennison."

A press conference will be held at 8:30 Saturday morning at the beginning of the route, at Everdeen and Ava, near Eglinton. Interested individuals are encouraged to join at St. Clair to march down Spadina to Queen St.

Here the marchers will disband, while the buggy and wagon continue to four the city streets.

Marchers should join the parade at Wells Hill Park on St. Clair, one block east of Bathurst, at 10 a.m.

Suggested equipment includes umbrellas, gas masks, and Victorian costume to emphasize that expressways are not progress but are taking us back to the days of the horse and buggy.

"This is not only Toronto's problem but the problem of every Canadian city. The United States has already lost the battle", said Alan Powell.

Kensington Market — an area that will be destroyed as the Expressway moves southward.

Will your house be one of 12,000 to go?

This key indicates how the Expressway will affect this area once it is completed.

- 1 six-lane expressway
- 2 proposed tunnel under Casa Loma
- 3 Already crowded Davenport and Dupont will become major exit roads for traffic coming into the city. During the morning rush an estimated 1,800 cars an hour will have to get off the expressway at these two streets.
- 4 Service roads are meant to meet the slow traffic needs of local residents, but cars unable to get off at Davenport or Dupont will fill the service roads with incoming traffic. This traffic will then filter into The Annex grid of streets at Bernard and Lowther
- 5 Four sunken lanes flanked by two surface roads.
- 6 Cars exiting onto Dupont will cause massive backups forcing traffic onto The Annex grid streets. St. George, Haron, Madison, Warner, Kendal, and Brunswick.
- 7 Noise along the expressway will be deafening. It will be difficult for people to hear clearly even in the high rise apartments, 20 or 30 floors up.
- 8 The homes on the east side of expressway, facing Madison will all back up to the expressway. The Spadina Northbound lane will require the removal of houses all along this side of the street. (Approx. 12,000 homes removed all the way to 401)
- 9 This school serves neighbourhood which includes large number of homes on far side of expressway.

10 Lowther is planned as a major exit and entrance street for the expressway. It is far too narrow to handle the traffic it will receive. Street parking will be banned. The street will have to be widened — at the expense of residents' homes.

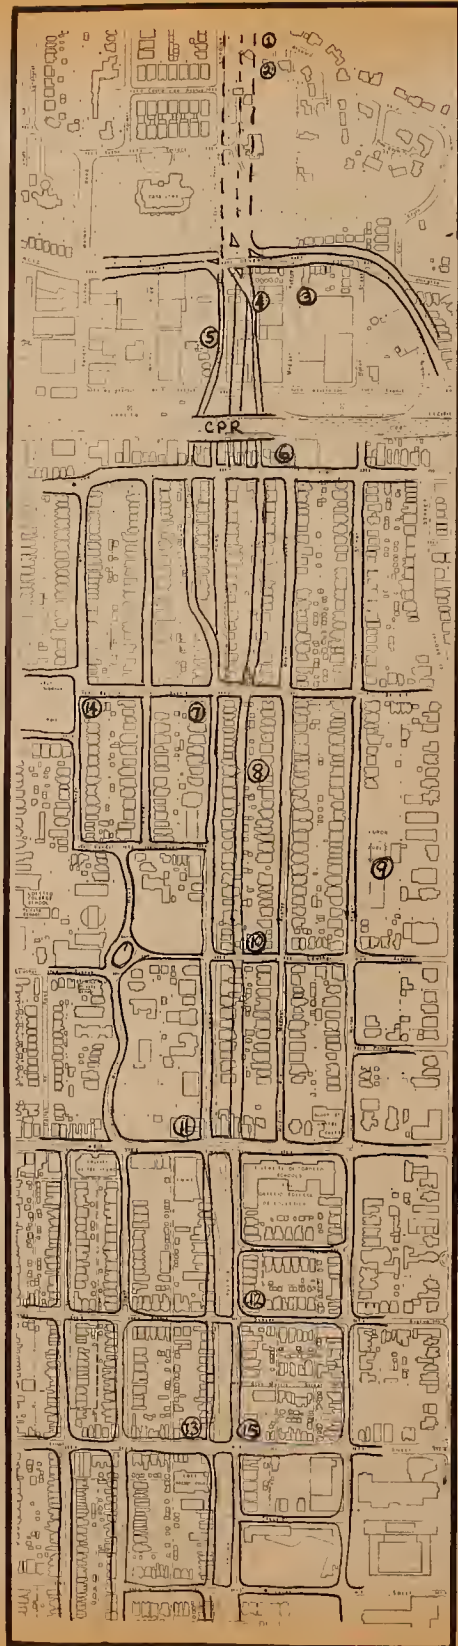

11 Three thousand cars an hour will be deposited on Bloor St, virtually eliminating Bloor for normal cross town traffic. Cars attempting to get off the freeway at this point will cause massive tie ups.

12 Sussex, with Robert and St. George, will become major access routes to the expressway which surfaces at Sussex. The increased traffic will make Roberts and St. George hazardous for pedestrians and will eliminate on the street parking on Robert and Sussex.

13 Harbord will now become the only outlet for cross town traffic unable to use Davenport, Dupont or Bloor. It will probably require widening to serve the increase in traffic it will receive.

14 Cars exiting at Bernard will pass by the Jean Sibelius Park. If Kennell is widened the Park will be the first to go.

15 From this point south the Expressway will merely take a strip of sidewalk on each side of the street down to Front Street. The increase in traffic and the congestion and pollution will wipe out the small shops and businesses now situated on Spadina, and virtually eliminate the garment industry in Toronto

A mixture of about 50 people dressed in the garb of old Toronto accompanied a hoy-wogon complete with horses down the proposed route of the Spodina Expressway. They song Stop Spodino, a tune of their own composition. See TILLY TORONTO on page 3.

Faculty, students say Loyola like a police state

MONTREAL (CUP) — A group of 70 Loyola College students clogged the halls in front of president Patrick Malone's office Friday to protest administration hostility toward a Canadian Association of University Teachers investigating team scheduled to begin hearings in Montreal today.

And in a statement released the same day, 35 Loyola faculty — including three department chairmen and two past presidents of the Loyola Faculty Association — condemned the administration for "growing police state conditions on campus".

The antagonism between administration on the one hand and students and faculty on the other at the Jesuit-controlled campus, is not expected to die down in the immediate future.

Friday's hour-long demonstration in front of Malone's office — probably the most protested area in the country, with at least nine sit-ins to its credit in the past three months — took the side of CAUT in its battle to secure the right of binding arbitration in the case of nuclear physics Prof. S. A. Santhanam.

Santhanam was dismissed by the Loyola Board of Trustees at the beginning of the year. No reason was given for the action.

The Loyola administration has steadily resisted CAUT interference in the dispute and has declared Santhanam's case "closed."

The 35 faculty, meanwhile, have charged that the administration has attempted to "suppress the basic freedom of an actively dissenting minority" on the campus, and listed nine specific items of repression, including:

- Open threats of dismissal against faculty who supported Loyola students in a three-day strike Oct. 27 to 29. Loyola students approved the strike by a narrow margin Oct. 14, in an effort to bring binding arbitration in the Santhanam affair.

- Administration use of police to eject former student council President Marcel Nouvet from a senate meeting Nov. 6. The meeting was called to ratify an administration dictum prohibiting all demonstrations on the campus related to the Santhanam affair.

- During a faculty boycott of their association's elections Nov. 26, "agents of the registrar" checked individual classrooms apparently to record the names of boycotting professors.

The election, which was invalidated due to the boycott, was re-run Wednesday: five "radical" faculty — who support binding CAUT arbitration in the Santhanam affair — defeated a slate of candidates supporting the administration.

The 35 protesting faculty also condemned a statement by vice-president Jack O'Brian, which suggested that a bombing which shook the Loyola campus Nov. 20 — the day Quebec's bilingualist Bill 63 passed third reading — was the "logical result" of dissent over the Santhanam affair.

According to O'Brian, the bombing was "in the cards" for Loyola, "you can't play those kind of games for five months without expecting this," he said. Malone had stated Nov. 21 he was sure the Santhanam case was not connected to the bombing.

The 35 dissenting faculty said the administration's actions were an admission of "its own intellectual poverty."

"No longer hopeful of winning support on the basis of rational discussions and community decision-making, the administration now openly employs the sole advantage still in its hands, coercive power," they said.

Faculty pick anti-parity Rist to head ATS

Prof. J. M. Rist

Prof. J. M. Rist, co-author of the anti-parity motion brought to the Arts and Science Faculty Council ten days ago, was elected chairman of the Association of Teaching Staff Tuesday.

Prof. W. H. Nelson, co-sponsor of the motion, is also on the ATS executive as chairman of the University Government Committee.

An amended version of the Rist-Nelson motion brought up by Prof. J. K. Conway and Prof. P. Brock, comes before the Arts and Science Council tomorrow. Both Rist and Nelson have withdrawn support from this amended motion since it calls for matters of appointment and dismissal to be judged "finally" instead of "solely" by members of the academic staff.

Rist, a Classics Professor, succeeds Prof. Frederick Winter as chairman of the ATS. Winter is a member of the CUG Programming Committee, which is now attempting to implement Cug recommendations.

The Varsity has been commissioned to gather a series of epic poems commemorating Rist's election. The first of these follows below. (All proceeds go to the "Calley in '72" campaign fund).

Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. OF MONTREAL & NHS
Y COUNTRY CAMP

Staff Openings
Counsellors - Male & female with experience - Work with teens

Unit Heads - College graduate with 3 years counselling experience.

Specialists - Arts & Crafts - Drama

Model camp in the Laurentians. Applications accepted. Interviews possible in Toronto. Write Mr. Bekoff, Director, Y* Country Camp, 5500 Westbury Ave, Montreal

Pink Whiskers

BOUQUETS
2200
Yonge St.
at Eglinton

8 Bedford Rd.
at Bloor
924-1974

SAC needs
20 students for INTERIM DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE

to act as CAPUT until Campbell Report is implemented.
6 of the twenty will be chosen by lot.
Address applications to SAC Judicial Committee - c/o SAC Office
Deadline - Friday, Dec. 12 - 5:00 P.M.

WEST SIDE STORY

Still Needed

- SET DESIGNER
- MALE DANCERS
- PRODUCTION STAFF

Monday Dec. 8 Wetmore Dining Hall 7:30

GRADUATE ENGLISH ASSOCIATION

Prof. R.A. GREENE

SPEAKING ON THE FIELD & ITS FUTURE

RHOODES ROOM, TRINITY

TUESDAY, DEC 9, 8 P.M.

CLASSICAL CONCERT
Wednesday, December 10th
Music Room, 1 p.m.

RUTH BISHOP, Pianist

Programme:

Sonata in G	Mozart
Sonata Op. 110	Beethoven
8 Pieces, Op. 73	Brahms

Ladies Welcome

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
Toronto Professional Bldg,
123 Edward Street,
Toronto 101, Ontario

IMMIGRATION CONSULTANTS

Telephone 364-0973

THE INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTRE

Invites YOU to
BE BRAVE!
BE DIFFERENT!

in YOUR choice of Holiday Gifts at Sane Prices.

VISIT
TREASURE VAN

(A Project of World University Service of Canada)
Unique Gifts From 32 Countries of our World.

DECEMBER 11th and 12th 10:00 A.M. - 9:00 P.M.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTRE 33 St. George Street

DAFFYDIL '70

december 9-13

HART HOUSE THEATRE

TICKETS AVAILABLE AT HART HOUSE

'BEST SHOW ON CAMPUS' - Varsity '88

'FAST, FACILE, FUNNY' - Telegraph

'OFF COLOUR, RIBALD, FILTHY - WE LAUGHED - THE WRITERS

WEEK NIGHTS 2 1.50
FRI & SAT 3.00

THIS WEEK AT SAC

Sunday, Dec. 7
Committee to Examine the Structure of SAC
8 p.m. - St. Mike's College Lounge

Tuesday, Dec. 9
University Government Committee
6:30 p.m. - SAC Office

Tuesday, Dec. 9
Education Commission Meeting
1:00 p.m. - SAC Office

Wednesday, 10
Executive Meeting
5:00 p.m. - SAC Office

Despite moral impasse

Exiles urged to uphold US tradition

By HARRIET KIDECKEL

American deserters and draft-dodgers were urged Sunday not to "dissociate themselves completely from the United States."

At a teach-in sponsored by the newly-formed American Deserters Committee, June Callwood, a Toronto journalist, said she was sorry that many American exiles "reject that society that has made you the people you are; a home where you were brought up to be individuals."

"Part of what you are is America and don't be ashamed of it," she said.

Rabbi Abraham Feinberg, an American now living in Toronto, said that while in North Vietnam two years ago he told the late Ho Chi Min. "I am in Hanoi as an American. I love my country and I felt it my duty to preserve its soul."

Despite the "moral impasse and bankruptcy into which the U.S. is falling," Feinberg urged Americans not to "forget the fine tradition (America) stands for". Miss Callwood reminded the Canadians present they should be "aware of the contributions Americans are making to Canada, especially in the fields of child care and social work"

Miss Callwood, a vice-president of the Canadian Civil Liberties Union has helped American immigrants find jobs.

She asked if any Americans in the audience had difficulty obtaining jobs because of discrimination on the basis of nationality.

CHECKED BY RCMP

Though none said they had, one member of the audience reported that the RCMP had checked on him through his job.

Another member of the audience said that members of the Black Panthers, (a militant black group in the U.S.) are being stopped from entering Canada at the border.

"Americans are trying to annihilate the Panthers either through imprisonment or murder," Feinberg said.

Anne Ross, of the Union of American Exiles, commented, "there are an inordinate amount of blacks being drafted."

Miss Callwood called for the Canadian government "to offer political asylum to the Black Panthers".

"It is a political party and an example of the political confrontation now going on in the U.S." Feinberg stressed.

"Americans — even deserters — are supposed to be allowed into Canada on an equal basis with other immigrants and we should take advantage of this enlightened attitude in Canada," he added.

The other two speakers on the panel, both American deserters and founders of the American Deserters Committee, said they wanted to "help Americans relate to Canada and become useful in the Canadian community."

"Guys come up from the U.S.; they're confused and scared and afraid of what their government can do to them," explained Bill Debra. He and Kelly Frey, working out of a small apartment on Eglinton, hope to set up counselling services to aid Americans in adapting to Canada.

YANKEE REFUGEE Lanconver

The ADC also emphasized their need for money to start their counselling service. Any contributions can be sent 243 Eglinton Ave. W., Apt. 3, for further information, call 483-1382.

Tillie Toronto despoiled

Toronto is in danger of becoming another Nephelococcygia, a Varsity reporter said last night.

James Karamitanis, who covered a march protesting the Spadina Expressway Saturday, said the city could go the way of Aristophanes' city, which hung between heaven and earth and was ruled strictly by The Birds.

The march, sponsored by the Stop-Spadina Committee, followed the proposed route of the expressway. The protesters wore Victorian costumes and were led by a horse-drawn hay cart.

A guerilla theatre group, the Provocative Street Players, enacted morality skits on the road, ritually repressing the despoilation of Tillie Toronto by the mad Baron Edsel von Expressway.

About 50 marchers were joined by unsuccessful mayoralty candidate Stephen Clarkson, American author Jane Jacobs and Alderman-elect Ying Hope.

Mrs. Jacobs, who wrote "The Life and Death of Great American Cities", has called Toronto "the most hopeful and healthy city in North America".

Mr. Hope is so deadset against the Spadina Expressway he suggests a "play-by-play" resistance movement, undoing or obstructing the work as it progresses.

"A city is neither a plethora of houses on well-paved streets nor a group of suburbs connected by expressways," said Mr. Karamitanis. "For all its diversity and sprawling hugeness, it must still maintain a core or a heart, because if it decays the city as a whole falters."

Spadina's fate will be decided this January when the new Metro Council decides whether construction will continue.

photo by Bill Rodgers

LOW ON BREAD FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS
PRESENTS?

USE YOUR CHARGE -
ACCOUNT AT THE UNIVERSITY
BOOKROOM.

Rist arrives from nowhere to head the ATS

Professor John Rist is the new chairman of the Association of Teaching Staff.

He's the same John Rist who seconded the motion in the Arts and Science Faculty Council — that the Faculty Council bar student participation in hiring, firing, promotion, and tenure of professors, and that it reject the concept of parity for "matters of departmental and faculty governance".

History Professor John H. Nelson moved that motion.

Oddly enough, Nelson also received a key position — chairman of the University Government Committee, the committee of the ATS that will deal with the Commission on University Government's report.

In a telephone interview last night, I asked Rist what his platform was.

"Oh no, I didn't have a platform. I was nominated," he replied.

I had falsely assumed that ATS chairmen were elected democratically. But Rist told me how a nominating committee composed of ATS past chairmen prepares a slate of candidates for the ATS Council. The council, a group of about 20 faculty representatives, then chooses the final names from the nominees.

Last week's general meeting of the ATS did not vote for their chairman or their committee heads. They just heard the final names read to them.

I asked Rist why he was chosen for the position.

"I have no idea what their motives were," he replied.

A general meeting of the ATS is open to all U of T faculty except teaching assistants.

Rist defines the ATS as "a body designed to represent the widest interests of the faculty."

I asked him if he thought teaching assistants should be included in the ATS.

"I have no strong feelings on teaching assistants," he replied.

Rist was not elected by the faculty-at-large. He arrived in his position through a process as democratic as the Vatican's selection of the Pope.

But the aberrations of democracy that placed Rist in his position are not serious, for the ATS is quite irrelevant.

What's more significant is that people like Rist and Nelson are emerging as leaders of faculty opinion, while paranoia sets into the academic guild during the initial discussions of the CUG Report.

Rist's view of the university makes Jerry Farber's analogy — Student as Nigger — look like less than an academic exercise.

In his brief to CUG, Rist uses the traditional argument that students are incompetent in order to show they have no place on hiring and firing committees:

"Students, even graduate students, have little notion of the boundaries of their subject and comparatively little skill, combined with no experience, in determining the quality of research done by a competent professor. Very frequently they are led astray by misleading talk about relevance . . . student concepts of relevance are inevitably tied to their necessarily limited personal experience."

" . . . student power should be minimal in all committees concerned with the employment of academic staff. . . the decisions must be made by the faculty. . . any alternative system will corrupt academic departments."

At the last Faculty Council meeting Rist and Nelson raised the image of student participation corrupting and ultimately destroying scholarship — the present form and content of scholarship.

Hopefully student parity would destroy the status quo of scholarship that builds upon itself and stagnates as one departmental chairman appoints his faculty in his own image.

" . . . the percentage of students on curriculum committees should be low, probably no higher than 20%"

Rist relegates student participation to the role of advise and consultation. He denies students have a right to any effective control over their own education.

"In brief students should ultimately have little say in what is taught in a university . . . The purpose of student representatives . . . should be to inform, not to control. It is true in one sense that faculty and students are the university, but the relation between the two groups should basically be that of master and apprentice."

Rist is one of the school that believes politics plays no part in academia, that all decisions to evaluate students and faculty are based on pure, value-free competence.

At the Faculty Council meeting he made the standard when-I-was-a-student reference about boring professors being good and stimulating professors being bad.

Rist is a Classics professor.
brian johnson

THE SORCERER'S APPRENTICE ?

Varsity cartoon by Fran Short.

Will the student apprentice rebel against the sorcerer Rist? "The relation between the two groups (faculty and students) should basically be that of master and apprentice."

THE varsity

TORONTO

Editor Larry Haven Review Editor Jack McCaffrey Associate Review Editor Jim Cowan News Editors Geoff Meggs Louis Sackman City Editors Aval Stuckey Features Editor Marty Kase Rowan Sports Editor Paul Carlson, 923-4053 CLIP Editor Sue Risher Photo Editor Mark Rubin Executive Assistant Estel Young Advertising Manager Hilary Kidecker Editorial Offices Cecil Cooper, 923-8171 91 St. George, 2nd floor Editorial Phone 923-8741, 923-8742 Advertising Office 91 St. George, 1st floor	Brian Johnson Jack McCaffrey Jim Cowan Geoff Meggs Louis Sackman Aval Stuckey Marty Kase Rowan Paul Carlson, 923-4053 Sue Risher Mark Rubin Estel Young Hilary Kidecker Cecil Cooper, 923-8171 91 St. George, 2nd floor 923-8741, 923-8742 91 St. George, 1st floor
--	---

The Varsity, a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Priority Mail Web Offset Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Students Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Formal complaints about the editorial or business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

VARSITY STAFF MEETING:
Wednesday at 1 p.m. everyone interested, old and new, come up to talk about Christmas.

How BUSINESS negates women's struggle for self-determination

In a recent experiment, Monica, an honors student, was asked to tell a story based on one clue: "After first-term finals, Anne finds herself at the top of her medical-school school class". Monica wrote:

"Anne starts proclaiming her surprise and joy. Her fellow classmates are so disgusted with her behavior that they jump on her in a body and beat her. She is maimed for life."

Another girl given the same clue wrote this:

"Although Anne is happy with her success she fears what will happen to her social life. The male med. students don't seem to think very highly of a female who has beaten them in their field . . . She will be a proud and successful but alas a very lonely doctor."

—Psychology Today, November.

What's with these girls? Are they deranged? Freaks? They are probably normal college girls simply exaggerating a profound and very real fear that prevents many women from trying to compete with men in a "man's world".

THE ONLY THING SHE'S WEARING IS WHAT WE'RE SELLING.

After all, how long will a girl struggle against self-doubt when she is told by a U of T medical-school administrator that she will be past her most fertile years by the time she gets her M.D.? Can she even pretend to be competing on equal terms with men when she goes for an interview for an articling job (a prerequisite to admission to the bar) and is asked how long she intends to practice law? Implicitly, a woman is expected to quit working after several years to dedicate her life exclusively to raising children and keeping a home.

What is important about these stories is that they demonstrate the strong, unrelenting pressure on a woman to feel unfeminine if she is intellectual and ambitious. John Stuart Mill, observing this, wrote, "The subjection of women to men being a universal custom, any departure from it quite naturally appears unnatural". Women consistently get higher test-anxiety scores than do men. Laboratory achievement-oriented situations demonstrate the uniquely feminine motive to avoid success.

SELF-CONFIDENCE UNDERMINED

A woman discovers very early that many university courses demand certain skills that she has not sufficiently developed. The female mind seems more able to accommodate details than design. If a woman takes courses that heavily tax her underdeveloped organizing, synthesizing, abstracting and integrating skills, she may conclude that the female intellect is truly inferior to the male's. Even if she maintains a good grade average, her self-confidence is undermined because she has not grasped the totality of her subject as she believes most men do. Men seem by nature more capable of using their knowledge to understand the world around them.

A woman who is motivated to achieve, then, is handicapped not only by the fear that her ambition will make her unfeminine and unmarriageable, but also by a lack of certain basic skills. Knowing that in a few years he will be fighting for survival, a man may complain that his courses do not provide adequate preparation. He may despair when what the world offers him as work is meaningless to him. But he relates what he learns to the world beyond the university. A woman, on the other hand, is more concerned with finding the right man to take care of her. She cannot easily relate her courses to the world because she can barely see it. Part of her femininity is her dependence and her dependence turns her attention away from the world to the family.

You're looking at it but you can't see it. At 100 to 140 dollars, you shouldn't. Reid-Meredith, makers of modacrylic fiber wigs. If you know it's a wig, it's not a Reid-Meredith.

Little girls are taught very early at school, just as at home, that certain modes of behaviour are expected of them that are not required of boys — that dependence is not only tolerated but often encouraged in the, but not in boys. A primary school teacher writes, "I have seen many instances where girls are used as models of good behaviour in the classroom for being neat, obedient and quiet. Their male counterparts are rewarded for aggressive, ambitious and competitive qualities. Timidity and lack of initiative in a girl are acceptable traits, whereas a boy with similar traits is looked upon as "having a problem". Thus he receives special attention and encouragement from the teacher.

The teacher in her classroom reinforces the home-teachings as to the girls' proper social role. Girls are often asked to help the teacher with the general clean-up of a classroom, while boys on the other hand are given the heavier chores to do.

"Many teachers, I am sure do not realize that they have accepted different standards of behaviour from the girls and boys in their classrooms. But teachers unconsciously do this because of what they have been taught about the role of the woman in society.

ROLE OF TENSION-MANAGEMENT

Why have women been socialized for certain roles and why does society sanction the limitation of their development? Because through these roles women perform certain essential economic and social functions for the maintenance of our social system as it is.

First of all a woman has certain responsibilities to the family, and enormous pressures are put on this institution. Through the family unit, people literally "recreate" themselves — are fed, clothed, cared for and comforted in illness. The family is based on a partnership of husband and wife. Only one aspect of the partnership is their social relations and few people consider how valuable the time which a wife spends soothing her worker-husband's frustrations is to the exchange economy. Other aspects of the partnership take more time.

To earn her share of the paycheck, which takes most of the husband's time, the woman is responsible for the care and feeding of her breadwinner and children, providing domestic labour which is not a part of the exchange economy, but which the exchange economy presupposes. The man may be a businessman, a worker, a farmer. The woman is in the class of her husband (unless she has property in her own name or has a profession in a higher or lower class). Usually she remains in her husband's class to the extent that she performs the domestic labour, socializes the children, manages the tensions of the family in the manner that her husband's class demands. This is her job; her "product" is her husband's and children's well-being. Their lives and personalities become her "work", her "contribution" to society, a particularly alienating experience for her children (I've given my whole life to you — and now look how you treat me.)

RESERVE-LABOUR FORCE

Wife and mother are the woman's primary roles, but very often and increasingly so, a single breadwinner cannot support a family unit. Sometimes the wife is forced to enter the labour market untrained and is forced to take a low-paying job. Here the full-time homemaker and sometime worker serves as reserve labour power in much the same way as Negroes in the U.S. But since there is already unemployment in Canada, it is difficult to see how there will be room for women to participate fully in the economy without serious economic reorganization. (During the war when the demand for labour went up, the ethic against women working was temporarily reversed, only to come back into full force after the war.)

For those few women who manage to obtain satisfactory professions, the competition and discrimination can be very debilitating. Women are forced to become mannish in order to survive.

The family unit is in crisis because it is overburdened with economic and social tensions, and the fetishization of certain family relations have stunted the social growth of all its members. As a part of this, the female roles required to maintain the family are in a state of breakdown. The family unit as it now exists presupposes that women are second class citizens. The underdevelopment of women is at the heart of much of the breakdown of social relations that men experience as well. If some kind of family unit is viable, it seems to us it will be under radically different social conditions based on the equal development of men and women as people, in a society where the full development of children and adults is a priority.

We and other members of U of T's Women's Liberation Movement have found that talking about problems like those raised in this article is a good way to begin finding solutions to them. We invite anyone interested in these issues to come to our meetings every Monday. Check the Here and Now for the time and place.

Marylin Cole
Charney Cunningham
Pat Rankin

GAMMER GURTON'S NEEDLE

St. Michaels College

Brennan Hall

DEC. 10, 11, 12

8:30 P.M.

ADM. 50c

GETTING ENGAGED?

"Contessa"

.42 Carat Diamond
.18 Kt. Gold Setting
Excellent Clarity
Excellent Colour

$300.00

Also Available in 1/4, 1/3
and 1/2 Carat Sizes

WE ARE DIRECT
DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.

DIAMOND DEALERS

131 BLOOR W. STE. 416
921-7702

ENGINEERING Final Year Students

Today, the Chartered Accountant plays one of the most exciting roles in business management. He tackles complex and fascinating problems. For the professionally-trained man the scope is limitless.

Discuss career opportunities with Clarkson, Gordon representatives, on campus

DECEMBER 13th

Appointments should be made in our Student Placement Office. If this time is not convenient, please contact us directly: 368-2751

Clarkson, Gordon & Co.
CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Holland • Saint John • Quebec • Montreal • Ottawa • Toronto
Hamilton • Kitchener • London • Windsor • Thunder Bay • Winnipeg
Regina • Calgary • Edmonton • Vancouver • Victoria

CLASSIFIEDS

DIAMONDS, RUBIES, SAPPHIRES, amethysts, opals — certified quality in unusual designs. Remarkable new merchandising method saves you more money than you spend. Toronto Jewellery Exchange 21 Adelaide W 368-4466

TYPINO thesis, essays, notes, charts, English, French, other languages. Mimeographing, electric typewriters. Mary Oate Scott (M. Oate) 46 Bloor St. W. Room 225 822-7624

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or photo today for free booklet. The Olay you buy a diamond. H. Proctor and Co. 131 Bloor St. W. Suite 416, 921-7702

SALTY DOG Discotheque will rent proms. Monday to Thursday day or evening. For information call A. Curry 964 7060 or 633-2677

TYPING, ENGLISH, FRENCH, Fast accurate service on IBM Selectric by experienced typist two blocks from campus 177 St. George St. 929 5370 Call balero 6, low rates

ROOM & BOARD Meals on Campus 350 Huron St. Apply at house or call 920-9176

LOST: contact lenses in white case. If found please call E Block 922-9737

ÉCOLE MONTESSORI Cherche Surveillance pädagog. française pour Son Camp d'été. Téléphone 689-6662

INNER CITY program requires volunteers to tutor teenagers in high school subjects. Emphasis is on developing personal relationships. Call 532-3303 between 9 and 5

LOST: Purple ring in gold setting, left in second floor women's washroom. Sid Smith on Tuesday at 3:00 p.m. Rowland 3rd yr. Jack or Cash Phone Jackie 924-0456, 923-0671

FOR SALE Britannia set of brook books. Founder's edition with ten volume reading guide and bookcase $500. 267-9222

W. C. FIELDS in the Bank. Once last movie in series so it's your last chance to see the great one. Wed. Dec. 10 at Walmere Hall, New College $1 admission

SUPER SOUL spectacular at New College Fri Dec. 12. Mr. Funky presents 4 big bands in both Walmere & Wilson Hall. Dining Halls. Chicks $1 Hawks $1 50 Orags $3

HELP U C FOLLIES and earn commission selling advertising for the Fellows programme. Come to Lit Office J C R at 1:00 today and see Erle Swadron PLEASE

LOVERS OF MUSICKE: on opening to a thoroughly modern 3 bedroom apartment equipped with modern hi-fi stereo, clavi-cord, herd and recorder. Subway convenient. Call Jim at 762-1441

CHEAP — KITCHENER EXPRESS-WEELY, Fri. Bus leaves Concession Hall 6:30 arrives 8:00 p.m. SUN. Leaves Kitchener 6:30, arrives 8:00 p.m. Tickets at S.A.C. office. For information 691-3266

RENT HOME, shore all expenses. Part female grad student. Total of 3 people living in large home. 20 min. walk from campus. Call 536-1670 6:30 p.m. all day Sat & Sun community issue — slander and innuendo

LETTERS

Let's you feel even more isolated from the COMMUNITY, than you already appear to be, let me make some comments on the recent Community Issue of your paper. I am doing so because I am a member of a community which is threatened by the University of Toronto (the Sussex area, west of Spadina), because I am a member of this University, and because I have worked with some of the people about whom you have written so unflatteringly and, may I say so at once, unfairly. I am referring to the story about the SAC housing project.

All of us who care about the communities in which we live are very pleased that some students at the University are beginning to be interested in what we are doing and even want to join us. I suppose The Varsity's community issue is part of this very encouraging trend. But there are some things that you have to learn, I am afraid. One of these things, I guess, is responsible journalism. The whole community issue was written in the style which is so typical of the University as a whole: elitist. The people to whose homes the issue was brought already know about the problems; we fought the Expressway long before you discovered the issue; we have been fighting the University for years. What we want from The Varsity and the University as a whole (particularly the town planners, the engineers, the sociologists and the economists) is creative alternatives to the Expressway and to the expansion of this University. What we do not want or need is slander, innuendo and silly, useless griping (such as the article about St. Christopher House).

It seems to me that people in the Kensington perceived the SAC housing project as elitist and imperialistic, despite the best intentions people like Tom Faulkner and Steve Langdon may have had. Given the poor relationship which the University has and always had with the surrounding communities, this perception is not really surprising. Your community issue, by the way, did little to improve that relationship, since you presented only the SAC version of the story. When we first heard that the community issue was being planned, we suspected that (1) The Varsity would attempt a white-wash job on the SAC project in Kensington and (2) that The Varsity just would not understand the complexity of a community such as Kensington.

When we learned that The Varsity had been granted $2,000 by the SAC for the community issue, our fears only increased. When I found the paper on my door step last Friday, all my worst suspicions were confirmed.

It seems that Mr. Johnson has listened to only one side of the side — that of the SAC. Clearly he did not have all the relevant documents before him; clearly he does not understand all the questions and problems before the Kensington community. As a result, the story in The Varsity was a biased and unfair attack on one group and one person in the Kensington community. The attacks against Mr. Schwam and his associates are totally unfounded and slanderous, to say the least. Mr. Johnson exhibited a complete unconcern for the effect his article might have on the community. Responsible journalism and creative involvement in the community does not mean innuendo and slander.

The SAC might have done much better to donate its $2,000 to the Meals-on-Wheels program which, incidentally, operates out of St. Christopher House. It would have been much better for our community.

If the community issue of The Varsity is an indication of the willingness and ability of University of Toronto students to come to grips with the problems and issues confronting our communities, then let me urge them to keep their hands off and to continue to make revolution in the University alone.

Eliert Ferichs,
United Church Chaplain to the University of Toronto.

A student-housing project?

c.c. Mr. Alan Schwam
100 Oxford Street,
Toronto, Ont.

THE BULL & THE BEAR

Draught beer on tap from noon till after midnight. Hearty lunches from 75c. Wild atmosphere.

The Bull and The Bear in The Sutton Place hotel & on Wellesey east of D.C.

sane judgement

The students who kicked out members of the NLC from Poli Sci 101 last Monday exercised sane judgement. Disruptions of this kind ought not to be tolerated. We're at this university to learn from instructors who know more than we do and thus they should be allowed to instruct us without interruptions from anyone in the class.

David Penny (III New)

BECOME AN OFFICER IN THE NAVAL RESERVE

LEARN INTERESTING NEW SKILLS
PAID WINTER TRAINING

GUARANTEED SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

APPLY 8 P.M. WEDNESDAY EVENINGS AT RECRUITING OFFICE, HMCS YORK 659 LAKESHORE BLVD. WEST

Here's the latest from Course Unionville...

Science students favor trisection of Faculty of Arts and Sciences

The Chemistry Students Union would like to see the breakdown of colleges as the administrative units of the university.

Dave Boal (IV Vic), an executive member of the CSU, says, "The college system is an artificial division of students. Most scientists on campus regard their respective colleges as a place to pay their fees."

The CSU also favours the division of the Faculty of Arts and Sciences into three distinct faculties, Social Sciences, Natural Sciences and Humanities.

"Under the present system," says Boal, "the science student is always in the minority."

He cites the absence of a science representative on the CUG Committee as proof. He feels membership in the larger faculty is detrimental to the outstanding progress made by the CSU.

The union has achieved parity on the Staff-Student Liaison Committee, which discusses curriculum, and on the department's CUG Implementation Committee.

But Boal says, "Most decisions are already made in back rooms by faculty members before the committees meet."

The Union is taking an anti-CUG stand in opposing the college system and favoring a policy of "double franchise", whereby voting and representation would take place on both the college and course level.

There is general agreement on the necessity for regulation of research grants. The department insists on open publication of all research findings. "This university is just not war-oriented," says Boal.

The Psychology Course Union's main problem is the lack of popular support.

"Psychology students are notoriously unpolitical," says Peter Byer (II INN), publicity chairman for the Union executive.

Twelve people showed up at our formation meeting, with the result that the executive is grossly unrepresentative." We function largely as a communications and integrative group", Byer says.

The three students on the six-man CUG implementation committee are all from outside the Union executive. Prof. D. E. Barlyne, the senior faculty member on the committee favours closed meetings and refuses to discuss CUG with students, Byers says.

The PSU also faces a unique problem. Extension students, offended at being overlooked in the formation of the CUG committee, are demanding representation.

Since no professor is willing to sit on the committee and offset the new student member, Byers is hoping that the extension students will settle for a non-voting membership.

Philosophy students have made no effort to organize a union. "All efforts to politicize them from the outside failed," says Craig Heron (IV UC), SAC co-ordinator of the cross-campus course union movement.

'Engineer can improve his education by acting'

The engineers' role in education is to take part in community decisions within the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering and not in setting up a separate student caucus.

It opposes the establishment of a course union per se since it is "predicated on the conflict theory on administration in the university," Art McIlwain, president of the Engineering Society says. "The students, faculty and administration are separate estates and each party seeks specified amounts of power."

The Society is trying to set up an independent structure for course evaluation. It has designed a "feedback loop" between the students and the administration which will operate independent of the Society.

This "feedback loop" consists of a series of resource unit councils, one for each course, as well as program and resources co-ordinating committees, an executive committee and a faculty council. Students have representation in all groups in varying degrees, not exceeding 40 per cent.

"What the Engineering Society has done was to consider the needs of the student and to design a system around his needs," said McIlwain.

"To know what the student needs, the effects of the present courses must be known. Therefore, the student must participate in all estates," he said.

"If the students want a better quality in the learning experience, participation is a useful first step in that direction. Given our analysis and the need, the only conclusion we can draw is that people will participate. If not, then they're not really interested," he said.

McIlwain feels the engineering society is at the same stage that the university is at with CUG. "We are both trying to create students who will respond to their own needs," McIlwain explained.

The "feed-back loop" is the result of survey carried out on both engineering students and faculty.

"The applicability of this system to other faculties is SAC's job," said McIlwain.

"Of what use is power for its own sake with the conflict approach?" he said. "One essential thing to realize is that leadership is not a dirty word."

HSU wants history humanized

Discussions between the History Students Union and the History Department have bogged down over the meaning of parity.

And progress does not seem likely, according to HSU President Gary Lax (II UC), as long as the faculty continues to see the Union as a "bunch of radicals out to decrease academic freedom."

The HSU has been refused seats on the executive committee which, says Lax, considers parity unacceptable for staff morale.

"Friction has resulted, and a mutual lack of understanding has caused stereotypes to be invented by both parties," he said.

Lax believes that reform in this and other issues will come about only through unprejudiced communication between faculty and students.

The abolition of most final History exams is one example of success for the Course Union, the first one on campus, since it involves a clear examination of the facts and a questioning of the basic beliefs of education.

The HSU also hopes to channel its efforts into the modification of courses and the removal of the de-humanizing aspects of CUG. Lax feels that CUG has "failed to consider the quality of learning in the classroom by not relating university restructuring to its own effects."

He hopes to have students gain a more powerful voice in outlining courses "in which until now the professor has had too much latitude and which we just rubber-stamp."

Because high schools adequately cover the general survey course in History, the HSU also prefers the removal of courses which simply deal with a block of past events in favour of tracing the roots of a present-day problem, with emphasis on labour and social aspects.

The implementation of the HSU's suggested changes, particularly in the decision-making process, Lax thinks, will humanize the student-teacher relationship and make history students part of a community to which they feel they really belong.

BLUE AND WHITE SOCIETY'S CHRISTMAS TREE

8:30 P.M.

WED. DEC. 10, 1969

GREAT HALL, HART HOUSE

FREE ADMISSION

TICKETS AT SAC OFFICE OR AT DOOR

DANCE

4 BANDS

8:30 P.M.

FRIDAY

DEC. 12

NEW COLLEGE

1) ATLANTIS 10 PC.

2) STARLIGHTERS 6 PC.

3) OMAR WILLIAMS TRIO

4) BRASS WEBB 6 PC.

CHICKS - $1 HAWKS - $1.50 DRAGS - $3

PINTER

"A Slight Ache"

STRINDBERG

"The Stronger"

ADMISSION IS FREE

at the Studio - 4 Glen Morris
8:30 p.m. Tues. Dec. 9 - Sat. Dec. 13

HERE AND NOW

TODAY

ALL DAY

Exhibition of drawings by Jeremy Smith
The Buttery Trinity, until Dec 19
Nominations are open for SAC by election to take place Dec. 16 St. Michael's Student Council Office

Tickets for "HAIR" at a 10 per cent discount Show dates are Wed Jan 28,
Thurs Jan 29 and Sun Feb 1 Oides
(cash or cheque) accepted now at Innes 11, 63 St. George St. Rms 110, 202, today and every day this week.
F U of T FORTRAN course, free evening lectures available information posted in

Meggie Bizzelli's office, SAC Building

12:15 p.m.

Pollution Probe is showing a half-hour film, "The Silent Crisis", best of a series of six TV programs (The Nature of Things) on pollution, entitled "Danger - Man At Work" Ramsay Wright, Harbord St. entrance, Rms 133, 131, 102 and 104

1 p.m.

TUGS presents a film by NAWAPA about American use of Canadian water
Rm 622, Sidney Smith

Vic VCF, a panel of students discusses reactions to the moratorium march, Wymilwood Music Room, Victoria College

3 p.m.

The Psychology Students' Union is holding another of its really heavy meetings
Inns I

4 p.m.

Women's Liberation Meeting Rm
1021, Sidney Smith

Soc Course Union Executive open meeting, visitors welcome Borden Building lounge

7:30 p.m.

West Side Story, Dancers, production staff, set designer needed Wetmore On-ing Hall.

TUESDAY

1 p.m.

Yavneh presents Nathan Wise, who will speak on Parshat Miketz Rm 2129, Sidney Smith

4 p.m.

Faculty of Arts and Science Council, special meeting to debate the Nelson-Rist motion on student party Convocation Hall.

6:30 p.m.

University Committee meeting Anyone interested in CUG or university reform welcome (We need people!) SAC office

7 p.m.

Meeting of Blue and White Society, new members welcome Bickersteth Room,
Hart House

8 p.m.

U of T Homophile Association, discussion, Graduate Students Union, upstairs lounge

Two one-act plays by Pinter and Strindberg, directed by Norman Levine and Nigel Spence Admission Free Studio Theatre,
4 Glen Morris

8:30 p.m.

The Conscript Fathers, by David Knight, directed by Ronald Welsh Admission free
New Vic Theatre, New Academic Building Runs to Dec 12

add a little fun to good food and what do you get?

ZUMBURGER

Zumberger is fun and the food's
great

Come and revel in the way-out music and unique surroundings.

You'll love the Zumberger, the
Boston Burger or a delicious pastry.

In fact everything on the menu.

Come and taste the Zumberger experience for yourself. You'll be glad you did.

NOW OPEN

270 Bloor Street West
(Bloor & St. George Street)

Representatives of
THE INTERNATIONAL NICKEL COMPANY OF CANADA, LIMITED

will visit the university to discuss career opportunities with graduating and post-graduate students in

ENGINEERING ■ mining ■ metallurgical ■ chemical
■ electrical ■ mechanical ■ civil
CHEMISTRY GEOLOGY and GEOPHYSICS

Interviews will be held on campus

DECEMBER 11, 12 and 13

We invite you to arrange an interview through the Office
of Student Personnel Services

INTERNATIONAL NICKEL

The International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited
Copper Cliff, Ontario, Thompson, Manitoba

'Is faculty paternalism hurting course unions?'

By PETER HALL

He was a friendly man with a warm friendly accent, and leaning back from his typewriter he said, "Why yes, I only wish we could get more students involved in our department."

"We try you know, but not too many of them seem interested." He reminded me more of a favorite old uncle than head of a department.

As he warmed to the subject with the admonishment, "I don't know if you should print my name", he described how as head of the department last year he had initiated several staff-student committees and invited the students to participate in decision-making in his department.

"It was difficult at first to find students who were interested but finally they were very helpful in setting up the new curriculum."

"Yes, they voted in the department council meeting on all the proposals except one which some professors thought was too controversial and beyond the scope of the students."

And then I realised that this kindly professor, who was genuinely interested in helping the students was his students' worst enemy.

MORE HARM

It is hard to admit that professors like this professor who advocate university reform, professors who take the initiative to involve the students in their department, are doing the students more harm than good.

The first sign and the prerequisite condition of the student responsibility is the initiative to organize in the department. This initiative must come from the students themselves.

If the faculty has to approach the students before the students approach the faculty then any decision-making procedure which assumes that students are ready and able to really participate in the decisions made in the department is nonsensical and ludicrous.

There was a time when the primary impetus behind course unions came from the staff. There was a time when independent student action was a curiosity-piece.

INDEPENDENT ACTION

Today if that independent action is not a fact, it is at least the assumption behind all the proposals for democratic reform of our governing structures.

The CUG Report says, "It should be made quite clear that both the faculty and the students are included in the term 'members of the department' . . . at the departmental and faculty levels the students and staff have a real responsibility to participate."

The minimum that this responsibility demands of the students is enough initiative to start a course union, or whatever you want to call it, on their own.

No matter how well meaning the professors or how apathetic the students any faculty attempt to organize the students subverts the student's responsibility to participate on their own initiative.

Student representatives who are on a committee purely by the grace of the faculty, student representatives who have no interested electorate to represent and no student-oriented intellectual justification to rely on, can have no ability to confront the faculty with a coherent idea for change. They are labouring in a void.

ONLY AN ECHO

There is no point in giving an uninterested and apathetic student body a voice in academic decisions. Such a voice can only be an echo.

When two people show up to an open meeting of second year students taking English at Trinity to elect two course representatives to a staff-student committee it is easy to select those two representatives.

But with a turn-out like that is it worth having student representatives at all? Two empty chairs would more accurately reflect student opinion.

This phenomenon of student apathy is widespread but seems particularly characteristic of the college subjects — German, English, French, Philosophy, Classics and some more esoteric disciplines such as Near and Far Eastern Studies.

The English Department has an elaborate committee structure which features individual college staff-student parity committees and four standing sub-committees of the Combined Departments of English on which students have substantial representation.

VIC ONLY UNION

Unfortunately only Victoria College has a functioning English Course Union. In the other colleges, students had to be urged by the faculty to participate on these committees.

The Classics Club and French Clubs tend to be more social societies than substantive forums for student consideration of their disciplines and the German Course Union, although rumoured to exist has never been found.

The students in Near-Eastern Studies have a monthly tea to discuss matters of mutual interest and with the small size of the department most students seem reasonably satisfied. In Philosophy no real course union is functioning this year.

As Robert Mills, a member of last year's union, puts it "This department is so damn flexible that it is hard to find any complaints . . . it's a sort of utopia — no government, no problems."

HAPPY STUDENTS

Perhaps the small size of these departments, the large number of courses offered and the decentralization of administration in these departments keeps the students fairly happy.

Or perhaps it only keeps them unorganized.

This lack of student organization, while embarrassing to some of the faculty ("Does it really mean no one cares about my subject") is less embarrassing than an active course union demanding change.

It would be unfair to accuse all the faculty who are organizing student committees of trying to co-opt the students but it is a fact of the administrative life that a few students on a few committees can come up with some helpful ideas while, significantly, their moves for reform can be easily channelled and controlled if necessary.

Daniel Drache in his research report to CUG, writes, "It is one of the ironies of power that reform is no less the imperative of those wishing to maintain their control over an institution than those who are attempting to democratize it."

INEVITABLE REFORM

Some sort of reform, superficial or real, in this university seems inevitable. Unless students are concerned enough about the shape of that reform to organize themselves on their own to affect the realities of that reform, then they can have no real voice in the university of the 70's. And they will deserve no real voice.

It is not up to the faculty to organize the students. It is up to the students.

When you have to encourage the students to get together and to sit on committees, it seems much more logical from the faculty point of view to give those committees purely advisory power.

Indeed it seems absurd to let students who seem uninterested in the affairs of the department make decisions equally with staff whose career lies in the department. And it is absurd.

HART HOUSE 50

FOLK CONCERT

East Common Room, 1 p.m.

Tuesday, December 9th

SHELLEY POSEN

Ladies Welcome

CLASSICAL CONCERT

Wednesday, December 10th

Music Room, 1-2 p.m.

RUTH BISHOP

Pianist

Ladies Welcome

CAMERA CLUB

Wednesday, December 10th

Club Rooms - 8:30 p.m.

ADVANCED PRINTING TECHNIQUES

by MR. W. BROOKS

VARSITY TABLE TENNIS TOURNAMENT

December 13th - 1 p.m. - Lower Gym

Fee: 25¢ - Registration - Hall Porter

SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT

9 p.m. - December 14th - Great Hall

FESTIVAL SINGERS OF CANADA

Conductor: Elmer Iseler

Tickets: Hall Porter

STEAK & CHAMPAGNE

3 BANDS & HONKY-TONK

HART HOUSE NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL

Tickets: $17/couple - Hall Porter

& Undergraduate Office

Deported Panther shot by Chicago police

Chicago sources, the Panthers decided after Hilliard's arrest that Hampton and Rush were spokesmen for the Panthers, and that the Party's National Headquarters would be moved to Chicago.

CHICAGO (CUPI) — Saskatchewan Attorney-General Darrell Heald doesn't have to worry any more about Black Panther William Calvin, who was deported from Canada following charges by Heald that the Panther was "stirring up sedition among Canadian Indians" during a Canadian visit two weeks ago.

Calvin was shot and killed by Illinois State Police Thursday during a 15-minute gunfight at his Chicago apartment.

The police were looking for Fred Hampton, deputy chairman of the Illinois Black Panther Party, and for state chairman Bobby Rush, both on charges of illegal possession of firearms.

Rush is now in hiding. Also killed in the incident was 22-year-old Panther Mark Clark.

Calvin and fellow-Panther Jeraldine Eldridge were deported from Canada Nov. 21 after Canadian Immigration Officials declared they were "imposters," travelling under false names and credentials.

The two spoke to students at the University of Alberta and the Regina campus of the University of Saskatchewan, where "Chairman Fred" (Calvin's nickname in the Party) told students that "the only difference between Canada and Chicago is that you're a further north part of Babylon."

The two were travelling under the names of Fred Hampton and Stephanie Fisher. They were deported following a closed hearing, after Heald made his accusations and after complaints from Regina City Council that "there is something wrong with the Immigration Department if these people are let in" to the country.

The Chicago incident oc-

Poem

ODE TO CHAIRMAN RIST

Sing, O goddess of the wrath of Rist,
Benevolent pedagogue, bespect'led yet fierce,
Who came to the aid of the faculty nation
When threatened by wierdos and leftists and kids,
By parity, Bissell and Etkin and Lynch,
By student involvement in student affairs.

ADDRESS TO THE TROOPS

"Protect our fortress, lest the tower be soiled.
Keep out the Resnicks and Wernicks and Beatniks.
Only we heroes can be apolitical;
Only we gods have unbiased beliefs.
Repulse the filth of the cold outside world
Lest relevance sully our keenly-honed minds,
Lest the faces that launched a thousand degrees
Be forced to consider what everything means."

PAEANS TO THE ASSOCIATION

And thou ATS, in thy wisdom and might,
To prepare for the battle thou know must be fought
Have selected for champion, Rist — beloved of Zeus.
For when nations are threatened, then generals arise
To lead forth their people in militant form.
Down Barkwell! Down CUG! Beware Robin Ross!
Though last year supporting the parity cause.
The ATS now will battle its rise —
For such is the whim of the gods.

THE SEIGE OF SIDNEY SMITH HALL

Forward heroes — to the Council of Arts;
Forward brave Rist and thy golden companion,
The Hector of History, Nelson of course,
Who also is high in the fair ATS,
Who holds the Committee of Government helm,
Lest politics tarnish our governing farm.
Onward brave heroes to Council on Tuesday;
Strike down revisionists Canway and Brack.
Return sacred "solely" to its place in the sun,
To holy position in parity motion.
Onward brave heroes; leap into the fray,
For soon you'll be joined by the greatest of all,
Descendent of Heracles, most noble of Greeks,
Hired by your purified, student-purged Council —
Director of Studies — dear Spiro Agnew. — tom walkom

You'll love being a Kitten girl!

Glenayr

Kitten

MACHINE-WASHABLE

PURE WOOL

An attractive English botany pullover, with buttonhole-stitch patterned front, lull-fashioned long raglan sleeves, mock-turtle neckline with zipper, Continental band and cuffs. Glorious new Fall colours. Colour co-ordinated to compliment and perfectly-match Kitten sweater colours—straight-cut pants in hand-washable superfine pure wool worsted English botany in the new "Kitten" plaid. Also as 700, worsted A-line plaid skirt.

PURE VIRGIN WOOL

Without this label  it is not a genuine KITTEN.

CHEVRON STANDARD LIMITED

Calgary, Alberta

offering permanent employment in
PETROLEUM EXPLORATION
will conduct on Campus interviews on December 11

for POSTGRADUATES - GRADUATES
in

GEOLOGY: Honors Geology
Geological Engineering

GEOPHYSICS: Engineering Science
(Geophysics Option)
Physics and Geology
Geological Engineering
(Geophysics Option)
Honors Mathematics and Physics
Honors Physics

ARRANGEMENTS FOR PERSONAL
INTERVIEWS MAY BE MADE
THROUGH THE UNIVERSITY'S
PLACEMENT OFFICE
581 Spadina Avenue, (Corner Wilcocks)

Pine shoots could destroy insect sex

The possibility of reproducing the odour of Female European Pine Shoot moths, and using this scent to destroy the usual sexual behavior of the insects kept a Convocation Hall audience enraptured Saturday night.

Biologist P. J. Pointing was speaking to the Royal Canadian Institute on What Animals Do. Illustrating his lecture with revealing slides, Prof. Pointing explained that male moths found their mates by tracing their scent.

Should several prospective males be exposed to the scent with no female to mate with, their regular heterosexual behavior could possibly deteriorate, and they might exhibit homosexual tendencies.

Prof. Pointing finished his talk by calling two dogs from the audience and demonstrating how they could be taught to alter their behavior.

ANNOUNCING!

BLACK HART PUB

HART HOUSE TUCK SHOP

DECEMBER 11th

4-11 p.m.

(Guys & Dolls will be asked for proof of age & Library Cards)

Blues weak on fundamentals

from page 12

the early going.

Aside from the heads-up play of returning Larry Trafford, whose long one-handers kept us in the game just when Blues appeared determined to get their last rites, the most newsworthy feature of this win was the dumb-dumb give and go's of the timekeepers who somehow managed to let the twenty minutes of first half stop time slip by in a record shattering eighteen minutes.

And so it was on to York for the Saturday night Blues.

As in the Ryerson game the Blues stayed close but were never really a threat until late in the game. Coach McManus started the big boys but was quick to pull them as York moved ahead easily.

Coming into the second half the Blues went into a hustling half-court press and began to reverse the 30 per cent shooting of the first half. But again they fell back and with nine minutes to go looked gone, down by 13 to a very strong opponent.

Again Blues fought back but could not squeeze it closer than four points. The loss of good-shooting Mike Katz on fouls did not help the comeback bid.

Coach McManus was most disturbed by the embarrassing shooting of his team. As in all these exhibition games most players saw considerable action but no combinations have so far really clicked. The closest thing to certainty is the presence of a "token" Betcherman on the court.

Larry Trafford grabs a rebound

What does the future hold for Varsity? Rumour has it that Mike Eben will join the team on the Buffalo trip Wednesday. He should add a lot of much needed fire-power on the boards. Next Saturday Blues jump off with Mohawk College in Hamilton.

BLUES SCORING

Against Ryerson: Katz 8, Ivan Betcherman 3, Mike Betcherman 2, Markowsky 2, Hadden 20, Trafford 13, Boston 4, Braid 9, Evans 1, McNaughton 4, Barker 3.

Against York: Katz 13, Hadden 13, Trafford 10, Evans 4, McNaughton 9, Braid 9, Boston 2, Gord Betcherman 2, Mike Betcherman 1, Ivan Betcherman 2.

POOR STUDENTS

Low on bread for Christmas presents? Cheer up!

The Textbook Store has gifts you can afford

Inflatable Zodiac Cushions

Cedar Mounted Prints (looks good, smells good)

Silk screened, hand finished Linen Place Mats

Records (the new Donovan)

Books (e.g. The Impacted Lower Third Molar $1.98)

Starts Wed. November 26 and if you're really desperate, just say "Charge it!"

THE TEXTBOOK
STORE

BOOKS

Get campus
Notebooks
and Writing Supplies
at your Book Store

Stationery Supplies

SPECIAL EXTENSION

TO ENROLL FOR YOUR

UNIVERSITY
HEALTH AND ACCIDENT PLAN

IS YOUR PROTECTION MISSING?

A MAN WITHOUT INSURANCE
IS LIKE A SNAIL WITHOUT A SHELL

THREE PLANS TO CHOOSE FROM

PLAN I

EXTENDED HEALTH CARE

NO DEDUCTIBLE ON ACCIDENT BENEFITS

PLAN II

OVERSEAS AND AMERICAN STUDENTS

STUDENTS ON STUDENT VISA

PLAN III

NEWLY LANDED IMMIGRANT

INTERIM HOSPITAL COVERAGE
EXTENDICARE PLUS LIFE

LIFE

$10.000 FOR $22.00 A YEAR

USE REGULAR APPLICATION

You need this coverage if you fall under one of the following categories:

1. Canadian students who are covered by OHSIP and OHSC and need extended health care
2. Students in Canada on a student visa and are not covered by OHSIP or OHSC
3. Students in Ontario from another province who do not have coverage from that province.
4. Newly landed immigrant students who are required to wait three months for the provincial plans to become effective.

ADMIN. — JOHN INGLE,
700 BAY ST. 364-4114
BAY AT GERRARD

NOTE: If you have not received your brochure, additional forms may be obtained of the Registrar's office, Student Council Office, Studies International Students' Centre the Health Service, or Faculty Offices.

Blues refuse to fold, hold Warriors at 3-3

By LYNDON LITTLE

The Varsity hockey Blues have taken a big step towards re-establishing themselves atop the OQAA shiny picture.

After Wednesday's discouraging 3-2 loss to Guelph Blues made one of their most difficult road trips of the year Friday night. They traveled to that insane asylum that passes itself off as a hockey arena at Waterloo to meet the undefeated Western division leaders Waterloo Warriors, and brought back a well earned 3-3 draw.

The anti-Toronto psychology so prevalent in rural Ontario was in abundant evidence. The Waterloo fans, who were doubtlessly kept in cages without food all week and released just prior to the game, were on hand in full force an hour and a half before the face-off time.

Their attempts at intimidating Blues included the posting of the Western division standing on the front door of the arena. Also, the best minds on campus must have spent the week congering up brilliant slogans to greet the Blues but the best they could come up with was "F O —T.O." which they hurled with a lusty, unadorned delight.

THE SOCIAL EVENT OF THE YEAR

As the rink announcer informed me with undisguised pride, "this is the social event of the year at Waterloo".

Despite the setting, the game was a remarkably clean, fast skating affair.

Varsity started out poorly and spent the first five minutes defensing their end from the warming Warriors.

Waterloo went one up at the 1:69 mark with Blues' Dave McDowall off for high sticking. Warrior's fine defenseman Ian McKegney connected with a screened shot from the point.

Blues began to recover and tied the score on their first good opportunity of the game. At the five minute mark, center John Wright won a face-off to the left of Waterloo goal-tender Ian Scott. He passed to his left-winger, rookie Bill Buba, in front and Buba beat Scott with a backhand shot that went between the goalies' pads.

Waterloo came back to take the lead once again at 11:31. Warrior winger Dave Rudge picked up a loose puck in the Toronto end and swept behind the Blues' goal. When no Varsity defender covered him, Rudge came right in front and beat Blues' Grant Cole with a shot from close in.

BRILLIANT GOAL BY LAURENT

A fine individual effort by five year veteran center Paul Laurent tied it up for the second time just before the first period ended. Waterloo's Ken Laidlaw tried a centering pass from behind the Varsity goal. The puck came back to the Toronto blue line untouched where Laurent picked it up and had a clear break on the Warrior net where he shot from 15 feet out after shifting to his backhand. Scott was beaten cleanly with just six seconds remaining.

Tom Watt's charges showed their talent in the second stanza as they controlled play and picked up the only goal. Defenseman Dave Field scored early in the period on a screened shot from the point that caught Scott's pads and just trickled over the goal line.

Varsity also showed some fine penalty killing skill as they defended successfully two consecutive minors at mid-period as first McDowall and then Bill L'Heureux got the gate.

The two teams played an even, exciting third period as Waterloo's Bob Reade gained the Warriors a tie with a goal at 12:42. Reade broke into the Blues' end on his left wing and hit the top left corner shooting from the face-off circle to the right of Cole.

Waterloo held a 30-22 edge in shots while the Blues picked up eight minor penalties to five for the Warriors.

BLUESNOTES — Warrior coach Bob McKillop was impressed with Blues' rookie netminder Cole who, with his large size and ability, he claims reminds him of Ken Dryden now with the National team and late of Cornell. . . . Blues' defenseman L'Heureux played with a cast to protect an injured right wrist. . . . On Wednesday Blues travel to Hamilton for the first game in an home and home series with McMaster. . . . Mac lost to Western on Friday 9-8. . . . bring on the adding machine. . . . Blues are now 1-1-1 while Warriors are 3-0-1

A sliding save by lanky Varsity goaltender Grant Cole and harassment from defenseman Dave McDowall combine to thwart a scoring bid by dangerous Warrior forward Ken Laidlaw.

BasketBlues edge Ryerson, lose to York

By PETER WHITE

The Basketball Blues came through their busy weekend with all pieces intact; but they are still faced with the task of fitting those pieces to the proper spots of their jig-saw puzzle.

Both games were reminders that the confidence needed to win ball games is folly if not backed by good basket-sense and the fundamentals — passing, shooting, dribbling etc.

Blues squeaked through a so-so Ryerson team Friday 68-64 with a late ditch stand, and were frustrated by York on Saturday 70-65.

These scores are inaccurate barometer by which to measure play; in both games Blues were widely out-everythinged. That they hung in so close indicates the potential may be there — but for the meantime noses will be put to the hard-court grindstone in an effort to overcome the sloppy and inconsistent style which has emerged as the hallmark feature of Blues' play.

The Ryerson game was a truly dull affair for three quarters with Toronto down by 14 at one stage. Blues playing their deliberate game failed to put it anywhere and what impressed was not the Ryerson team but the myopic ineptitude of the Blues.

However, at the 33-minute-mark Big Gord Wilson, the Ryerson center, until then the dominant figure in the game, went out on fouls. Blues, capitalizing, snapped out of their lethargy and were led by three quick Katz jumpers into the now overall thickening of things.

A John Hadden basket tied it at 58-58 with four minutes left in the game.

To say the Blues never looked behind would be an anomaly, but they did hang on until two Trafford fouls shots iced the ole ball game with 18 seconds showing on the clock.

For the smattering of Toronto patriots in attendance it was a nice exciting game but for the team and other critics it was an indicator that one thing that will never kill this ball team is speed — especially in

see BLUES WEAK on page 11

JOHN HADDEN

Boisterous Waterloo fan bumps intrepid Varsity photog as Blues defenseman Terry Parsons (5) moves to block slapshot by Waterloo's Ian McKegney (B).

photos by jim cowan

Macmillan Bloedel Limited, one of Canada's largest logging companies, starts its recruiting drive on campus today. Mac and Blo — an employee nickname for the firm — have long been active in the forests of Western Canada. Lately, they have begun to expand into Ontario.

In the name of progress and happy share-holders, the Mac and Blo people have, unfortunately, upset the balance of nature. They are responsible for what one Vancouver columnist described as "the business-like rape of Vancouver Island".

Today The Varsity goes hitchhiking in Mac and Blo country — see centre. On Friday we'll present comments on the problem by university ecologists and foresters. Oh yes — if you'd like to work for Mac and Blo, you can catch them at the student placement bureau on Spadina all this week.

Faculty Council rejects student participation in hiring and firing

The Arts and Science Faculty Council has rejected the principle of student participation in decisions regarding matters of appointment, tenure or dismissal.

In a meeting yesterday afternoon at Convocation Hall, the anti-participation motion passed by a vote of 122-52.

The resolution was one of three presently before the council, and reaffirmed the council's determination that "its academic staff members continue to be judged . . . by members of the academic staff of this University."

The bulk of the debate, however, took place on the second resolution that rejects staff-student parity on governing bodies of the faculties, departments or colleges.

Speaking against the principle of student parity, Prof. W. H. Nelson said "parity is wholly wrong in that it sets up mechanical principle of political equality."

He added that "parity is as mistaken an ideal as the splitting of Germany into two halves, because it institutionalizes confrontation."

Nelson said "it is better to attack principles that are fundamentally unsound now rather than refrain from doing so because we should have done so earlier." He was referring to the lack of representation made by the faculty in debating the CUG proposals.

The debate lasted for more than two hours. One member stated that "student parity in the decision making process would lead to rumour, accusation and politicking."

Prof. Dereck Paul of the Physics Department said that "the two council meetings have filled me with distress."

He urged that the "motion should be defeated not for the details of the motion but because it is contrary to the spirit of the age we live in. These motions will close off the possibility of discussion."

Prof. Kenneth McNaught of the history department said "the CUG Report sets up the teaching situation as the most important element of the uni-

Prof. W. H. Nelson addresses the Faculty Council meeting which passed his resolution rejecting student parity for hiring and firing.

versity and ignores the protection of scholarly excellence."

Answering the arguments against student parity, Prof.

Morris Wayman, chairman of the Innis College Council, said "the council at Innis has adopted student parity and student advice has been actively sought on many issues including student housing. There has never been a split along staff-student lines in any discussion."

He said he would vote against the passage of the resolutions opposing student parity because "Innis Council would not want any motion passed that would obstruct the process of experimentation now going on in their college."

Prof. W. W. Sawyer, from the mathematics department, said "some of the best scholars are lousy teachers and giving the students a say on determining teaching ability would offset the pressure to hire faculty strictly on their research ability."

Prof. K. O. May, also of the mathematics department, supported Sawyer and said "if the public ever found out that behind the facade of a teaching institution the university is really research-dominated they would probably clamp down and reduce the university's budget."

He said that "parity is a red-herring and the students will inevitably take a strong role in participating in the decision

This is the resolution passed by the Faculty Council yesterday:

Be it resolved:

That the Council of the Faculty of Arts and Science, while welcoming student participation in all University questions, affirms its determination that its academic staff members continue to be judged in matters of appointment, tenure and/or dismissal solely by members of the academic staff of this University, or where proper, by professional colleagues outside this University.

making process."

"The resolutions reflect an unrealistic feeling of fear among the faculty," he said.

Gus Abols, SAC President, agreed and said he detected "a certain amount of selfishness in the debate." He said "instead of fearing the motives of some selfish students, the faculty should make students participants in the community you're trying to protect."

At the close of the meeting Ken McEvoy (III Vic), a member of the CUG Programming Committee, turned in his seat to leave and mumbled, "Up the Revolution — and you can quote me on that."

Dean Allen could go to York U.

Arts and Science Dean Albert Allen is one of three candidates to be nominated to succeed Murray Ross as president of York University in July of next year.

The other two candidates are John Saywell, dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science at York and Michael Oliver, vice-president of McGill University.

A ten-member Committee of Search for a New President, made up of members of the York Senate, Board of Governors, faculty and students chose the nominees.

Dean Allen said yesterday he preferred not to comment on the news "until something else happens."

One of the nominees will be chosen by the York Senate in early January.

The final choice, however, rests with the Board of Governors, which will select a president after hearing the Senate's recommendation.

The Senate is made up of about 150 administrators, teachers and alumni representatives and includes ten students.

Dr. Ross leaves after ten years as York's first president.

Arts and Science Dean Albert Allen

photos by Jan Blanchet

T.C.D.S. PRESENTS
THE CANADIAN LYNX
 A PLAY IN TWO ACTS
 BY JERRY O'CARROLL

DEC. 10, 11, 12, 13
 7:30 P.M.

CARTWRIGHT HALL, ST. HILDA'S COLLEGE,
 DEVONSHIRE PLACE
 $1 AT DOOR

CLASSIFIEDS

TYPING theses, essays, notes, charts, English, French, other languages. Mimeographing, electric typewriters. Mary Gale Scott (M. Owens) 86 Bloor St. W. Room 225, 922-7624

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet. The Day you buy a diamond. H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St. W. Suite 416, 921-7702

SALTY OOO Osoctheque will rent premises Monday to Thursday day or evening. For information call A. Curry 964-7050 or 633-2677

LOVERS OF MUSICKE an opening in a thoroughly modern 3 bedroom apartment equipped with modern hi-fi/chorchord, clavicord, hi-fi and recorders. Subway convenient. Call Jim at 762-1441

FAST ACCURATE Home Typing — Keep this name and number for future use — Mrs. Linda Flood — 894-6526. Free pick up and delivery.

DIAMOND RINGS from importer. High Quality. Low Prices. Call 359-9474 for a private appointment. Under no obligation.

ROOM & BOARD — Males — on campus 350 Huron St. Apply at house or call 920-9178

INNER CITY program requires volunteers to tutor teenagers in High School subjects. Emphasis is on developing personal relationships. Call 532-3303 between 9 and 5

LOST: Purple Ring in gold setting. Left in second floor women's washroom. Sid Smith on Tuesday at 3 p.m. Reward $3.00. Jock or cash. Phone Jesse 924-0458 923-0871

HAPPY 18th BIRTHDAY JOHN G — from the relectory gang

FOR SALE 8-antenna set of great books — founder's edition, with ten volume reading guide $5.00 and bookcase 267-9222

ECOLE MONTESSORI Cherche surveillants penant francais pour son camp d'ete. Telephone 899-6882

MR. FUNKY PRESENTS "Super Soul Spectacular" 4 big bands — "Atlantis" (10 piece R & B) — "Ormer Williams Trio" — "The Starlighters" (6 piece R & B) — "Brass Webb" (6 piece R & B) Coming Dec. 12th. New College

ELVIS PRESLEY movie marathon featuring 1 Jailhouse Rock 2. Follow that Dream 3. Flaming Star 4. Wild in the Country Dec. 13. Old Physics Rm. 135 — 9:00

RISE WANTED to Fort William, Sault Ste. Marie for one person. Want to leave Toronto Dec. 19 or possibly later. Will share costs. Phone 923-5627 after 5 p.m.

Specs and Sex!

It used to be said that "men don't make passes at girls who wear glasses" — but not any more! IF you come and choose from our fantastic collection of fashion frames. And as a student you get 20% off! Who are we? Braddock Optical, just round the corner at 158 St. George.

GAMMER GURTON'S NEEDLE

St. Michaels College

Brennan Hall

DEC. 10, 11, 12

8:30 P.M.

ADM. 50c

Public Lectures
THE MACHINERY OF CRIMINAL LAW REFORM
 M.L. Friedlund

of Faculty of Law, U of T
 Wednesday, December 10, 1969
 and
CRIME IN THE WORLD OF 1990
 L.T. Wilkins

of School of Criminal Justice
 State University of New York at Albany
 Wednesday, December 17, 1969 at
NEW MEDICAL SCIENCES BUILDING, Room 3153

THE INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTRE

Invites YOU to
BE BRAVE!
 BE DIFFERENT!

in YOUR choice of Holiday Gifts at Sane Prices.

VISIT
TREASURE VAN

(A Project of World University Service of Canada)
 Unique Gifts From 32 Countries of our World.

10:00 A.M. — 9:00 P.M.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTRE 33 St. George Street

DANCE-4 BANDS

SUPER-SOUL SPECTACULAR

8:30 p.m. FRIDAY
DECEMBER 12
NEW COLLEGE
 U of T

Chicks $1
 Hawks $1-50
 Drags $3

HURON & CLASSIC AVE
WETMORE & WILSON HALLS

UBC admits doing US military research

VANCOUVER (CUP) — The University of British Columbia Monday publicly admitted to doing research financed and commissioned by the American military — but declared the work was “pure science with no direct military applications.”

The revelations may spread to more Canadian universities — as many as 12 — who are implicated in U.S. military research, according to Hugh Keenleyside, Chancellor of Notre Dame University in Nelson, B.C.

Keenleyside made the charges in a speech Saturday, asking why UBC and 12 other Canadian universities were accepting research projects “financed by the Pentagon”.

Monday, Keenleyside identified four more of the universities: McGill, York, the University of Toronto and the University of Manitoba.

UBC Deputy president William Armstrong officially admitted that the university was involved in five research projects for the U.S. armed forces, as well as an additional project financed by the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

But, he said, Keenleyside “left the unfortunate impression that UBC is somehow engaged in war projects for the U.S. armed forces. This impression is false.

“The university as an institution does not engage in research on behalf of the Pentagon or any other agency. Research is supported by individual scientists on the university’s faculty from a wide variety of grants.”

The grants from NASA and the U.S. military amount to only $129,759 “out of a total of more than $12,000,000 being received from all sources for research.”

But the amount represents only this year’s grants from the military, not the total amount pumped into UBC over the years.

Armstrong offered no figures on the total U.S. military investment in research at UBC.

UBC officials maintained that the university would not accept any programs involving secret research — all findings for research must be publishable, they maintained.

Armstrong said all six of the UBC researchers had approached the U.S. services with their projects, were granted funds, and then had the projects approved by the UBC administration.

“I think it’s a case of infiltrating the U.S. Treasury, rather than the Pentagon infiltrating UBC,” Armstrong said.

The University of Toronto is presently involved in at least seven research projects financed by the U.S. armed forces at a cost of $454,400. There is no secret war research at U of T.

photo by Bruce Pendel

A little bit of old Spain came to Erindale last week in the form of dancers and musicians. Next week an Italian Festival will be featured.

York appointee is refused visa

A Polish economist, appointed as a visiting professor by York University this summer, has been refused a visa by the Canadian Immigration Department.

A department spokesman said Kazimiers Laski, who left Poland a year ago after renouncing his Communist Party membership, was denied the visa because “his presence in Canada would not be in the national interest.”

Laski, now living in Vienna, was appointed by York in July and his appointment was approved by the Board of Governors in September.

Laski turned down offers from universities in Paris and Israel to accept the York appointment. He is the second Pole this year to first have, then not have, a job at a Canadian university.

Kazimiers Bilanow, a Polish lawyer, was virtually promised a job last spring with the University of Ottawa Canadian and Foreign Law Research Centre.

But on April 23, Bilanow received a letter from the Center’s secretary Douglas Wallace which spoke of difficulties in convincing the Board of Governors to hire someone “from a socialist country.”

A later letter from Wallace said Bilanow was rejected for financial reasons.

CBC makes Thorson famous and NLC infamous

By PETER HALL

The new campus spectacular, Political Science 101, returned Monday with a cast of thousands and was duly recorded for posterity by an enterprising CBC film crew.

The crew crept in through a rear door and managed to look extremely impartial (if not completely stupefied) throughout the lecture.

Although it lacked the violence which seems a necessary prerequisite for greatness in the modern cinema and which previous classes demonstrated, such an outstanding performance as Monday’s class is obviously a top contender for the Academy Awards this

The Academy Award for the best dramatic actor must go to Prof. Thomas Thorson for blandly ignoring both the heekles of the New Left Campus and the CBC TV crew filming the class; and for making his lecture on revolutions seem credible even in a mid-western American accent.

Two of Thorson’s more notable comments were his opening statement, “Remember the exam is going to be a week from Wednesday” and his characterization of Lenin as “the greatest pamphleteer writer of them all.”

For the Supporting Cast one can only recommend the dedicated regular students of the class (about 7 per cent of those present, I think) who took notes throughout the lecture. (That does not include the Toronto newspaper reporters who got the lecture down word for word).

An Award for Extra Technical Effects should go to the quick-witted student who held up a “Fuck Off” sign in front of the CBC camera.

The Academy Award for Prompt Upstaging belongs to Ed Reed (I Trin), a regular member of the class who managed to ask an irrelevant question about Fabian Socialism before the NLC had a chance.

The Varsity wishes to apologize to both Prof. J. M. Rist and the faculty member erroneously described as him in a photo on the front page of Manday’s issue.

Prof. Grasham walked off with the Award for Appropriateness and Aplomb as he managed to sleep through most of Thorson’s lecture and then remarked at the end, “I always keep my eyes closed.”

The Academy Award for the Best Script By A New Author was won hands down by the NLC member who asked a question which even Thorson did not understand.

Finally the Best Original Screenplay Award goes to the blond cherubic NLC member with the maniacal laugh who, when Thorson said “I think people here are smart enough to understand what I’ve just said” replied “It doesn’t take much!”

With that came the end of the performance. Thorson stepped back from the microphone, the reporters ran unabashedly after any radical-looking student they could find, the class melted into the streets, and the CBC film crew quickly shoved their cameras and microphones into a huge white Lincoln Continental and drove off into the sunset.

LOW ON BREAD FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS
PRESENTS?

USE YOUR CHARGE -
ACCOUNT AT THE UNIVERSITY
BOOKROOM.

... But most students at the University of Toronto just don't give a damn. — john gladki

Be it resolved...

The Arts and Science Faculty Council yesterday voted down direct student participation on hiring and firing committees

The meeting only represented about ten per cent of the full council, but its decision was fairly indicative of faculty opinion in response to the Commission on University Government's Report.

Let's just look at the arguments proposed against student participation on hiring, firing, promotion, and tenure committees:

- Students are incompetent. The argument assumes that expertise is the sole criterion for academic appointment. But teaching ability and relevance, rather than just excellence, of scholarship are criteria that students can judge equally as well as faculty. The Faculty Council meeting chose to discard the importance of those two criteria.

As disciplines become more and more specialized, students in a certain field of a discipline are often more familiar with the nature of that field than professors in other fields in the discipline.

- Students don't know what's good for them.

Faculty often employ a benevolent despotism in assuming they know what kind of an education meets the needs of students.

Their assumption is based on a concept of passive rather than active learning. Students are seen as containers which receive the knowledge passed down the bucket-brigade of academia.

- Students will introduce political considerations that will destroy scholarship.

Political considerations, conscious or unconscious, already exist. Departmental chairmen, who now make academic appointments, usually select faculty who have similar views to their own.

- Students will endanger academic freedom.

Academic freedom is usually a right reserved for faculty and should have the freedom to control not only their own education as individuals, but to have an overall effect on the nature of the discipline and the direction in which it is moving.

Otherwise "scholarship" stagnates and continues to serve purposes which students have not been allowed to question.

- Students have sufficient

Most faculty will allow some proportion of students on curriculum committees and the like. But creating new courses is fruitless if there are no faculty qualified to teach in those fields.

The Faculty Council's resolution is not surprising. But it's a narrow-minded and irrational attempt to preserve academic freedom — for the faculty.

Now it's time for students to begin to break out of their political apprenticeship to the faculty, in the hope that one day they may start to break out of their academic bondage.

varsity

TORONTO

Editor: Brian Johnson
Associate Editor: Larry Hansen
News Editors: Jack McCallister, Jim Cowan, David Meehan, Louis Strichman, Mark Strickland

Features Editor: Mary Kate Rowan
Sports Editor: Paul Cannon 923 4053
City Editor: Sue Pease
Photo Editor: Mark Rubin
Editorial Assistant: Harold R. Ocker

Advertising Manager: Carol Cooper 923 8171
Editorial Office: 91 St. George, 2nd Floor
Editorial Phone: 923 8741 923 8742
Advertising Office: 91 St. George, 1st Floor

The Varsity is a member of Canadian University Press, was founded in 1882 and is published by the Student Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Web Offset. Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in this newspaper are not necessarily those of the Student Administrative Council. For the administration of the university financial complaints about the additional business operation of the paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Committee on the University of Toronto, 616 - Realtime Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

Holes in our copy and holes in our souls, the varsity's poor, and we'll all stay poor, ragged children wandering in from the desert for their daily desert of manna, healthier with kids attacking her from all sides... well, wouldn't you? Leave back from the southern wilds, greiff in search of the holy dicterio, eral stepping down from dove and here, jans made two inches, while jury just made, jans made mistakes, while mary kate, wisest of us all, left early, tom and peter and jim were arty, as usual, carmen struck out early and often in her first valiant struggle, while brian and harriet and uscup just stuck, biblical bill of the sore thumb set, too, as for, hope, b.c. in the rain was my armageddon.

LETTERS

ad hominem attack on rist just promotes faculty paranoia

I protest against the form and content of the attacks against Professor Rist in The Varsity of December 8th. I doubt the relevance and deny the truth of the ad hominem insinuations. Particularly, I object to the association of Professor Rist with Spiro Agnew and the suggestion that his opinions can be explained by his being a classicist.

While I disagree with Professor Rist's views on the place of students in the university and with his assertion or pursuit of the apolitical university, I discovered as a student of his that he is both a progressive, socially active citizen, and an excellent and liberal teacher. Of all the professors under whom I worked in the School of Graduate Studies he was the most open and attentive to the opinions of students and the most willing to submit his own conclusions to their criticism. In practice, he seemed to regard students as intellectual equals engaged in a common pursuit. I do not think that this behaviour is consistent with his views, as reported, but we ought to address ourselves to the refutation and defeat of his position rather than to the ridicule of his person. This kind of attack in which The Varsity indulges can only serve to provide foundation for faculty paranoia.

Wayne Hankey
(II Trin, Div)

nice letter

Dear Miss Rowan,

I would like to congratulate you and the other members of the editorial staff of the special community issue of The Varsity. You have succeeded in focusing attention on several key problems involving the university and the community. The editorials and feature articles are very readable, the photos and layout impressive, and the whole issue should have considerable social impact.

While I cannot agree completely with some of the opinions expressed about student aid and accessibility (your objectives seem admirable but I think some of the conclusions may be astray from reality), I did find this edition of The Varsity the most interesting I have seen to date and I hope it will reach all the people who are concerned with these important social issues.

L. H. B. Peebles
Director, Information Branch
Dept. of University Affairs

dainty academic games

If ATS chairman Prof. J. M. Rist really believes "political considerations" have not been a factor in the appointment and promotion of staff at this university, he is either a naive fool or he spends his time at faculty meetings deep in blissful sleep.

In the days before student representation such committees, "political considerations" often dictated the choice of members to the board of governors; "political considerations" prevented Arthur Meighan from becoming Chancellor of this university and were paramount in the hasty removal of Maurice Coud in favour of Vincent Massey in 1951; "political considerations" held up the honorary degree to Barker Fairley for almost fifteen years because some members of the Board didn't like his wife's political beliefs.

Of course, these "political considerations" are always excused as some other factor. Maybe that's why Rist and company are so afraid of student representation — they suspect students might not be willing to play these dainty academic games.

P. H. Carson (6T7)

thorson: 'if you want to play school, you'll play it my way'

The most noticeable thing in the incident in Professor Thorson's class was that people reacted rather than thought. The next most noteworthy event is that people are now starting, more and more, to actually think about the past two to three weeks' actions. As an enrolled member of the class, I would like to clarify a few events.

Prof. Thorson first won the class over by making jokes and telling us little stories. Then he started to prepare the class for his first little test, which was certainly no joke. The exam offered no choice whatsoever and required, within an hour's time limit, a regurgitation of fact and mimicking of a political view held by a rather Republican prof.

One day, a student was reading a Varsity in Prof. Thorson's class. Thorson told him to put the paper away and went off into another funny story about how someone had made him angry for three weeks. But no one asked why this fellow was reading a newspaper.

If his lectures were relevant Prof. Thorson would find no one reading a Varsity during them.

When the NLC entered the class and distributed Varsities, few students were aware why. Right after a farcical election of a student "rep", Prof. Thorson noticed his lecture was not appealing to a number of students. He very neatly left the matter up to the class, after saying, "OK, you want to play school, you'll play it my way..."

He gave the class a good feeling of participating in democracy by drawing the focus away from why the NLC and others were reading newspapers. He shifted the question to "are you going to put up with this", and left.

Alright, there was reaction; people wanted the agitators out. But did they realize they were aroused and incited by a man who made them think it was originally their own idea to throw out the NLC? How could they fail to see Prof. Thorson still held all the power? He even said so: "Play my way, kiddies."

The next time we were given a lecture about the Philippines — politics of primitive organization. Head-hunters on Luzon, yeah, "real bona-fide head-hunters", and people carrying guns in the street. We learned that the Americans in 1905 changed this primitive society.

They bought the Philippines from Spain after helping to defeat her in a war. They helped the natives grow rice. They taught them how to make good rice for export, and after World War II they gave the savages their independence.

I've got several close friends who are new Canadians, from the Philippines. No head-hunters at all — anywhere. There were — about a hundred years ago. No guns in the street — this was outlawed after World War II. No help needed growing rice either. How could Americans teach a people how to grow rice when those people have been doing it for as long as they have existed? Prof. Thorson also evaded or ignored some questions from the audience.

Monday, Dec. 1, and the details are fairly clear to most people by now. To quote Prof. Thorson's final remarks:

"I don't want to hear destructive, silly questions. (He raises his voice to about three times its normal level.) I want complete silence for the next ten minutes. . . these clowns are not interested in learning — they know it all already. . . these are like the old right-wingers. . . I know you've got minds of your own — I'm not brainwashing you. . . you make up your own mind. . . the rules must be enforced!"

Prof. Thorson refused to answer the questions — any of them — by either evading them or completely ignoring the many raised hands. His lecture was being challenged and he would not allow it. Yet, without tutorials or seminars, how else could students question it?

The class again played into Prof. Thorson's hands. But by raising his voice, he disrupted the class. He swayed some to violence: about a dozen class members assaulted the NLC. By reacting rather than thinking, the class once again gave him the power to rule it any way he wished.

On Monday Dec. 8, no one even questioned how he had arrived at allotting a ten-minute question period at the end of the lecture. Why only ten minutes? Why at the end of the lecture? Why did he stall and actually allow only five minutes of actual question time?

Of course many "reacters" are becoming "thinkers" and this is good. They are realizing the NLC did not come to Poli Sci 101 to waste students' money or time. They came to show who held the power. They came to show how irrelevant and dull the lectures were and create an atmosphere of thinking and questioning.

But on Wednesday, Dec. 17 the class will finally realize that they really have no say whatsoever in this specific course. No choice. Just answer the exam and regurgitate The Logic of Democracy.

Lough Venpiece (1 Vic)
Political Science 101

illegal and strong-arm tactics

The students of Political Science 101 tolerated disruption of their lectures for two weeks by an unruly group of hecklers who were not even registered in that course, before finally ejecting them.

The members of the New Left Caucus, and all the other little pseudo-Communist groups on campus take advantage of a permissive academic society to force their views on the majority. They do this by shouting down whomever they disagree with, such as Prof. Thorson, and absurdly crying "free speech" until they are given the floor. These "radicals" are tolerated because the university nonsense. This, however, does not include the right to disrupt the activities of others.

In your editorial of December 3, you say that Prof. Thorson "used a familiar ploy; he labelled the dissidents as outside agitators", yet on the front page you admit that only some of these people were actually registered in the course. Surely if they had legitimate grievances against their lecturer they could have approached him in his office and avoided these childish theatrics.

Your second point is that the "chief complaint against radicals is that violence is the natural outcome of their politics". The chief complaint is that these people try to justify their illegal actions and strong-arm tactics by saying that they are reforming an evil society. The serious students of political science were finally incited to physical violence by a persistent barrage of personal abuse on their lecturer, paper airplanes, and obscenities from a few punks.

Your third point is that Prof. Thorson "played the political resentment the majority bore against the left to eject them from the classroom". The violence did not originally come from the right! It came originally from the New Left Caucus, and this is why they were forcibly removed from the lecture.

Prof. Thorson and his students are to be commended for one of the first sane acts in dealing with this sort of disruption. Why is it that the NLC chooses to disrupt only large events attended by hundreds of members of the Faculty of Arts and Science? It is because they feel they are safe in a large group where many will tolerate their behaviour?

I would like to see the results of their disruption of a class of engineering students with "pertinent questions". I can assure them that they would be better rewarded by my class for this sort of activity than a broken pair of glasses and a cut on the head.

Gerrie Dickson (III APSC)

open letter to bissell: residents challenge expansion

Dear Dr. Bissell:

The following statement of intent was adopted by a general meeting of the Huron-Sussex Residents Association on December 4. At that time, the Executive was directed to pass the statement on to you in an open letter.

Because of the urgency of this matter, we ask that you reply by December 13, 1969.

Yours sincerely,

S. N. Benjamin
Chairman
Executive Committee

STATEMENT OF INTENT OF THE HURON-SUSSEX RESIDENTS ASSOCIATION

We, the residents of the Huron-Sussex neighborhood exist as a community. We have come to this area, lived here and given much to establishing our lives as members of this community. We now find our future as residents of this institution which refuses to heed the interests of our community.

We have a right to our way of lives: first, as individuals, then, as members of our community, and thirdly, as citizens of the city of Toronto. Any unilateral action by any party detrimental to the survival of our neighborhood as a community will be, therefore, actively opposed and stopped by its members.

Therefore, we make the following demands:

1. Plans for demolition of the houses on the proposed site of the University Chiller Plant be disbanded immediately.
2. Demolition of houses anywhere in our neighborhood cease immediately.
3. Willful deterioration of property in our neighborhood be stopped immediately.

And further, that any party whose actions might affect the goals of this community as stated above must:

1. Work openly with the members of the community.
2. Make all information of intent to demolish or build immediately known and available to community members.

3. Recognize the goals of the community as stated above in all planning affecting the community

The Huron-Sussex Residents Association

ALL VARSITY STAFF: It's the last staff meeting before Christmas and we want everybody here today at 1 p.m. in The Varsity office. We're going to talk about the demystification of Santa Claus, a conscious agent of American imperialism. We're also going to talk about the CUP conference, the last two issues of the term, the PARTY (Christmas not Communists). If you're a staffer, come and bring a friend. If you're a friend, bring a staffer. New people very welcome.

What did you learn in school today?

POOR STUDENTS

Low on bread for Christmas presents?
Cheer up!
The Textbook Store has gifts you can afford

- Inflatable Zodiac Cushions
- Cedar Mounted Prints (looks good, smells good)
- Silk screened, hand finished Linen Place Mats
- Records (the new Donovan)
- Books (e.g. The Impacted Lower Third Molar $1.98)

Starts Wed., November 26 and if you're really desperate, just say "Charge it!"

THE TEXTBOOK
STORE

BOOKS

By CHAD SLATTERY

"As long as the universities have no conception of themselves other than the supermarket conception, they will have to resign themselves to the fact that people will walk in off the street, buy a box of Wheaties, and walk out."

— JOHN GARDNER

An attitude exists among the psychology department faculty that their purpose is to train students. They see their role as one not of guidance, but of certification — a student who can demonstrate X level of knowledge becomes eligible for a grade of Y. If a student has an aversion to simplistic memorization for grading's sake, he will find himself doing poorly in not a few courses.

PSY 200 is one such course. A statistics course for psychology students, it is currently being taught by A. Martin Wall. Now a knowledge of statistics, more so than most arts and science courses, serves as a tool. To a math major, or a CPA, or a statistician, it might be an end in itself; but to a psychologist, it is a means. Once the principles of statistical reasoning are understood, it is a comparatively simple procedure to apply them. Psychologists and researchers have available to them a wide range of reference works and statistical tables with which they can determine the proper method to test a hypothesis. To memorize them would be both tedious and unnecessary. General degree students will probably never use them again; future graduate students, teachers and researchers will always have the texts and tables available. Common to all would be the near-zero retention immediately following completion of the course.

THE "REAL" WORLD?

But PSY 200 is somewhat removed from what our text would label the "real" world. To be sure, Prof. Wall's course is well-planned, and delivered with zest and admirable clarity. In fact, a student who understands and has available the hand-out notes he distributes would be well prepared to apply statistical reasoning to psychological experiments in that real world.

So why does Prof. Wall refuse to let us use them in his course? The answer is simple: to memorize the entire sequence — the reasoning, the selection and application of formulae, the critical examination of results? Does he believe that memorization and subsequent recall is the only gauge of understanding? A better criterion than regurgitation of memorized procedures would be the demonstration that one knows how to apply those procedures using the same tools that will be available to him outside the artificial context of PSY 200.

Perhaps Prof. Wall thinks I won't learn statistical reasoning unless I'm given the "motivation" of having to memorize it and be tested on it. Does he still believe knowledge is something measured in grade points instead of understanding? Is it now better that a student exhibit programmed behavior rather than try to educate himself without exhibiting simplistic mimicking?

CREDIT SYSTEM BETTER

Because statistics is a tool, it would be far better to apply a credit system to it. If a student can demonstrate, using the references and tables which will always be available outside a classroom test, that he can use statistics correctly, he would receive credit. No A's or F's or gold stars; no last minute cramming and memorizing of formulae; no penalties for failure. A student would get as many tries as he needed to pass.

Prof. Wall's classroom is a sheltered, artificial environment in which he — like any professor — can exercise power over his students pretty much at will. He tells us to show up at 7:30 in the evening for a test, and by God we're there.

We have no say in the running of the course, or the method of evaluation. Unless we conform by memorizing and feeding back on a series of three tests, we will be flunked. That the material is soon forgotten, that the non-PSY 200 world has tables and references which make memorization superfluous — this doesn't concern Prof. Wall. He did suggest that I spend "a few minutes cramming" the formulae before the next test, and exchanged comments with an assistant of his on my "unreasonable" attitude after I left. A real failure to communicate, and hence this article.

Statistical Wheaties, anyone?

Research Opportunities At Physics International

Scientists and engineers at PI are conducting research programs that have already expanded the frontiers of several scientific fields. Prominent men of many disciplines and backgrounds have created a highly stimulating and productive atmosphere. The rapid growth in these programs has created several extremely challenging new positions. Coupled with this professional environment are the many physical and cultural advantages of the San Francisco Bay Area.

Career opportunities exist in the research areas listed for individuals with BS, MS, and PhD degrees, with or without experience.

- Gas Dynamics
High performance shock tubes, hypervelocity acceleration, aerodynamics, detonation phenomena, blast wave and fireball simulation, re-entry phenomena.
- Advanced Pulsed Power Systems
HV pulse generation, pulsed radiation sources, HV breakdown phenomena, ultra high current electron beams.
- Stress Wave Propagation
Dynamic response of materials, shock geophysics, equation of state.
- Theoretical Physics
Radiation transport, stress wave propagation, heat transfer, gas dynamics, MHD.
- Nuclear Weapons Effects
Vulnerability analysis, transient radiation effects in electronics, blast effects, hardening.
- Electro-Optics
UV, visible and IR measurements, effects of radiation on optical components.

Campus Interviews

Saturday, December 13, 1969

For additional information please contact the Placement Office

PI PHYSICS INTERNATIONAL

If an interview is inconvenient for you at this time please send your inquiry to Professional Employment Office, 2700 Morced Street, San Leandro, California 94577. We are an equal opportunity employer. US citizenship required.

GETTING ENGAGED?

"Star-Glo"

- 42 Carat Diamond
- 18 Kt. Gold Setting $300.00
- Excellent Clarity
- Excellent Colour

Also Available in 1/4, 1/3 and 1/2 Carat Sizes

WE ARE DIRECT DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.

DIAMOND DEALERS
131 BLOOR W., STE. 416
921-7702

Lung Ashtray

URNS SMOKERS OFF

Created by a medical doctor, this anatomical reproduction of the lungs, mounted on a black heat resistant plastic ashtray, shows what happens. Rises smoke from cigarette leaves residual tar and nicotine. Adjustment band closed off remaining clear. Use as educational tool for children. $3.95 or gift in help encourage a smoker.

For more details, fax to Tony Mc COO's Dept. 3, 211 Cambridge Rd. Wayne Pa. 15087

TAYLOR GIFTS

Dept. 3, 211 Cambridge Rd. Wayne Pa. 15087

Wall-to-wall babies carpet WLM centre

By HEATHER MOORE

Babies all over the place. Babies scooting around on the floor, toddlers running up the hall, and bouncing on rocking horses. Babies laughing, more crying — that's a day care center for you.

This day care center, at 12 Sussex St., was organized last summer by the Women's Liberation Movement and opened in September.

It was originally intended for local residents. But the response from the immediate neighbourhood was disappointing, so that almost all the children belong to university employees.

From the outside, the house is unremarkable: a tall, grey, old fashioned place that gives no hint of the enormous activity within.

The property is owned by the university and rented to the day care center. With university expansion being what it is, the address might not be permanent.

Inside, the bottom two floors are given over to children. What were once the living and dining rooms have been converted to play areas, with the crawlers in the front of the house, and the toddlers in the old dining room.

The doors to the crawlers room are blocked with gates, so that none of the slippery little fellows can get out. At that age they're into everything, but the room is carpeted with carpet samples sewn into a crazy quilt rug, and all the toys are soft and safe.

There are murals on the walls, and wall-to-wall babies. All the while I was there, at least one staff member was in this room, soothing crying children, retrieving toys and pacifiers that had somehow slipped away, and cuddling the children.

The toddlers, who can more or less walk, have the dining room. Their favourite toys seem to be the rocking horses, but one little girl seemed very taken with my clip board, if not with me. Never trust anyone over five.

I sat and watched them as I talked to Aleta Rosensweet, one of the paid staffers who run the house. The center provides care for children whose parents must work, but cannot afford the fees at a regular nursery school.

Only two other places in the city of Toronto will accept children under two and they charge over $100 a month.

Right now of the 17 children enrolled at the center, 14 have at least one parent associated with the university.

They are the children of secretaries, bookkeepers, maintenance workers and students. For working mothers, finding cheap, good child care can be a real problem, and often spells the difference between breaking even or going under financially.

This group charges thirty dollars per month for full time care from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. or $3 a day.

A circular put out by the Campus-Community Daycare Center states "We will try to take care of all the children who apply to us, but in the case of great demand, preference will be given to working women with low incomes, women who head families, and others who need this service most."

"Many mothers have noticed a growing independence, as the child learns to tolerate her absence, and depend on other adults," Aleta said.

When they get a bit more money, the group plans to turn one of the upstairs rooms into another playroom for more creative activities, such as finger painting.

WLM daycare centre, 12 Sussex St., provides care for children whose parents work but can't afford fees at regular nursery school.

photo by Dave Bull

Now the whole second floor houses the cribs. Each child has his own crib with his name above it, and follows his own régime of naps. The center needs cribs, and any donations would be welcome.

Since there are only two staff permanently on duty, volunteers form a very important part of the organization. Some of the volunteers are from the Women's Liberation Movement, some are interested outsiders, and some are the parents of the children enrolled. Five supervisors are always on duty.

The volunteers aren't paid, of course, and the center needs more right away. The duties aren't glamorous, but the children under two. Men are needed as well as women. If you're interested, phone Judy Daniel, 924-3990.

Sheila Maxwell, the other full-time worker, tells the story of a girl from a child-study program, who came to observe one of the babies for her course.

She stood at the door of the room and made notes. When asked to change a diaper, she refused because she didn't know how and was afraid to try.

supervisor of a nursery school or day-care center.

The center is financed mainly by fees, but at $30 a month, they need donations badly.

At present, they operate at a deficit of about $75 per month, but no one seemed worried about the future. Fees might have to go up $5 or $10 a month for those who can afford it, but for now, people at the day care center are optimistic.

Representatives of
THE INTERNATIONAL NICKEL COMPANY OF CANADA, LIMITED

will visit the university to discuss career opportunities with graduating and post-graduate students in

ENGINEERING ■ mining ■ metallurgical ■ chemical
■ electrical ■ mechanical ■ civil
CHEMISTRY GEOLOGY and GEOPHYSICS

Interviews will be held on campus

DECEMBER 11, 12 and 13

We invite you to arrange an interview through the Office
of Student Personnel Services

INTERNATIONAL NICKEL

The International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited
Copper Cliff, Ontario, Thompson, Manitoba

FORESTS, MACMILLAN BLOEDEL

AND...

Hitchhiking Along with Mac and day in July —

Drizzle from an overcast sky spattered steadily along the wide, rut-worn gravel road. I had been trying to thumb a ride for two hours. Four vehicles had passed by; a road-grader, a surveyor's station wagon and two logging rigs — all with NO RIDERS window stickers and overtime drivers with steel-point eyes.

To hitchhike west of Port Alberni you have to be mad. The road is used only by construction crews and the logging rigs, with only an occasional American tourist, obviously lost.

The companies have their no-riдер regulations and obedient employees while the tourists, with their bumper stickers — "We're Proud Of The Member Of Our Family Serving With The U.S. Army" — are understandably reluctant to give sustenance to the enemy.

And so, abandoned migrant in the land of my birth, I slouched under an

by bill templeman

army rain pancho (best U.S. surplus), looking like the unfortunate offspring of a camouflaged anti-aircraft piece and a hooded Buddhist monk and waited while the rain turned my pack-sack into a seventy-pound ball of clammy sleeping bag and soggy underwear. The pleasures of the open road. There had been nothing since the last rig went by, forty minutes ago

I sank into that grave state of existential despair wherein hitchhikers start posing themselves in rigid positions, like catatonic roadside statues. Being 'at onement' with the motionless telephone poles, maybe a groveling sculptor passing by would pick me up, thinking my petrified form perfect for a found abstract. 'Hmmm... cast in plaster — Dionysus with fossilized highway thumb'

My classical phantasies were interrupted by an orange half-ton pick-up lurching past in the rain. The driver waved from the back window then miraculously slowed to a stop.

I picked up my slopping sleeping bag and stumbled up to the cab. Nice neat black letters on the orange door panel: "Macmillan Bloedel Limited — Forest Products". Praise be upon you, gentlemen. My corporate saviors. Jumping in, I thanked my driver — a fat-swollen young man, his corresponding figure in the Pooh pantheon just had to be Heffalump. Noticing his window sticker, I asked why he had stopped.

"I don't work for 'em, just do piece work cutting brush. They can't touch me."

More talk. He said he had come west six months ago from Nova Scotia.

"Oh yeah, if I worked for 'em they'd fire me for picking guys up on the road. But this way they can't do nothin'!"

Macmillan Bloedel be damned! My salvation was due to Maritime cussedness.

We talked on about timber work and the west. The forests that pressed close to the road near Port Alberni had suddenly disappeared. I couldn't help playing the curious tourist "What's all this? Big fire?"

The mountains on both sides had been stripped bare. Everywhere was grey and black char; only new brambles seemed to be growing. The ground had been scorched right down to the road.

"Naw, they cleared this out last spring."

"All of this? What about the burning?"

"Well, see, it's easier for us to torch all the scrap as we go along. They say the burning makes the seedlings come up faster."

Heffalump could see that he was drawing me in. I went on.

"Yes, but over the whole hillside? I thought they had to leave some trees standing to re-seed the area."

Heffalump belched and lit up a plastic tip cigar.

"That's only on land that's leased from the government. This here land has to go back to the government next year. Since the lease is up the company doesn't have to play by the rules."

I could see Heffy was enjoying himself while baiting my righteous curiosity.

"Naw, them guys just come up to the Port and get loaded with the office boys then go back to Victoria. They never come out here. Wouldn't pay them to mess around. The government makes too much money selling wood the the Japanese for them to be fussy."

Feeling comfortable in affairs of the absurd and enjoying Heffalump's skill, I pressed merrily onward.

"O.K. Why does the government want the land back?"

Heffy laughed.

"Elections. What's-his-name, he promised he'd turn all this here into a provincial park for the tourist business."

He had me now and he knew it.

"But no one's going to come to a park that looks like a bomb site! How can they let you keep on stripping it?"

"Parks department doesn't take over 'til spring. They can't kick us out before then. So we're whumping 'em down and haulin' loads around the clock, while we still got time."

A huge rig, piled high with freshly cut timber, bore down towards us, forcing our truck onto the shoulder. I gazed at the wasted landscape, imagining elderly Audubon ladies in pais-

be

ley outing frocks from Vancouver arriving in their Vauxhalls, complete with binoculars and tweed-capped husbands, taking one dismayed look at the remains of our noble national heritage, and immediately scurrying back to the pigeons, pimps and heroin dealers of Stanley Park.

I started again, my social conscience revived by reverie. "Well, if the government doesn't care, what about the people living in the villages within this 'park'? Don't they know what you're doing?"

Heffalump smiled a satisfied smile. Now he knew he could sell me anything.

"Who do you think does most of the cutting? The local boys. Know what we're doin'? Hell, they're the ones that are doin' it. Besides, both villages are company towns, know what I mean? If you don't like what Mac'n Blo are doin', then live somewhere else." Mac and Blo, such an affectionate abbreviation.

Every few miles we passed a grove of stumps festooned with NDP and Socred campaign posters. I was becoming depressed with the ride, the day and Heffalump. But Hefy was just beginning to hit full stride; there is nothing Maritimers love more than stringing a good line.

"Christ no, the townies don't mind. They're going to make a bundle out of the park deal. See, the provincial assembly man for this district has a brother on one of the town councils. As soon as the provincial man caught wind of the government takeover, he told his brother.

Now this brother, using town money, worked some deal with Mac'n Blo — guess it was easy seeing how he's head man out here for Mac'n Blo — anyway, he got rights to a lot of company land, so now the government is going to have to pay him and the town off as well as Mac'n Blo." Heffalump beamed. "Really neat! See, nobody loses."

We were on the western face of the island now. The brown land rolled gently down to the flat horizon which hid the sea. Streams creased the countryside, flowing down from the low hills to the coast. The bulldozers and log hoists couldn't get at the trees standing near the streams and on the crests of the hills.

But on the flat lands they could function very well. Stumps, charred wood and fire weed stretched back to the mountains and down to the sea coast. The barren spaces were marked with road-side signs. "Forest Plantations, 1963 — Macmillan Bloedel Limited". The word 'plantation' seemed cruelly out of place. Everywhere, the country was mottled in appearance, as if in the advanced stages of a global scalp disease.

I tried not to think for the rest of the drive. But my eyes kept moving across the dead country. We were approaching an intersection; road signs stood honour guard, announcing one of the towns. Their messages read "Welcome to Peninsula Park. Your Pacific Woodland Paradise", "Help Keep B.C. Green — Only You Can Prevent Forest Fires".

Words from a speech given by a hysterical ecologist in Toronto last winter came back to mind "We can't let it go on", he raved. "We've badly upset the balance already. If the loggers don't slow down, in ten years the damage will be irreversible. The oxygen and soil cycles will fizzle. Our children might be the last generation." Very tiresome speech. Men of science have only one rhetorical trick: exaggeration. What the hell, Hefy probably made up the whole story. Still, the country looked pretty bad.

Bored with my newsreel imagination, I stared back at Beautiful British Columbia. Heffalump pulled over to let me out, he was turning off to stop at a company supply shed. I opened the door and swung down from the cab, tossing my pack onto the gravel shoulder. I waved goodbye then looked down the silent road that cut through the bare country. Dusk was coming on. I sat down, leaning against the thick stump to wait for another ride. The stump was easily five feet across. Just below the sawline, there was an election poster — "On August 28, Vote for Progress, Vote Social Credit".

graphic by bill templeman

autiful british columbia

HERE AND NOW

Dear Mother. Same old boring day at the Campusbank. Nothing ever happens here.

True Chequing Accounts.
True Savings Accounts. Complete banking services for students and faculty.

Visit your Campusbank Bank of Montreal

University Ave. & College St. Branch, 640 University Ave.
St. George & Bloor Sts. Branch, 262 Bloor Street West.
Bloor & Bay Sts. Branch, 55 Bloor Street West.
Bay & Breda/Bane Sts. Branch, 680 Bay Street.

Canada's First Bank

TODAY
All Day
Her tickets at 10 per cent discount Show dates Wed Jan 26, Thurs Jan 29 and Sun Feb 1 On sale now at Innis II, 63 St. George St., Room 110, 202 Today and everyday this week Great for Christmas gifts
A reminder that the Hart House Photo Contest is in January Consult bulletin boards for particulars Drawings by Jeremy Smith Buttery, Trinity till Dec 19

8 p.m.
W. C. Fields stars in "The Bank Dick" $100/person New College
General meeting of Ward 5 Metro Tenants Association Open to all interested Huron Street School, 541 Huron St

8:30 p.m.
Two one-act plays by Pinter and Strindberg, directed by Norma Levine and Nigel Spencer Admission free Through Saturday, Studio Theatre, 4 Glen Morris (between Huron and Spadina)
Annual Christmas Tree Presented by the Blue and White Society. Admission Free Great Hall, Hart House
"The Conscript Fathers" by David Knight, directed by Ronald Weils New Vic Theatre New Academic Bldg, Vic Admission free Through Friday

1 p.m.
Noon-hour classical concert Ruth Bishop, pianist Admission free Ladies welcome Music Room Hart House
Contemporary Music Group, Works by Stockhausen and student composers Free Bring your lunch and enjoy it. Room 076, Edward Johnson Bldg
SAC Working Group on Housing Reformation of U of T tenants union and relationship to Metro Tenants Association, SAC Office
Pol Ec Course Union meeting to discuss Thorson affair and ad hoc committees on problems facing course union Sid Smith 2102
U of T Liberal Club Analysis of the Harrison Springs Policy Conference Rm 1063, Sid Smith
Bill Collier (III C&F) gives a dramatic reading of Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol" Wymilwood, Vic

4 p.m.
F. U of T 3rd World film and discussion group Film on problems on either Zambia or South Africa ISC, 33 St. George U of T Young Socialists meeting — discussion on the Soviet bureaucracy Innis I

4:15 p.m.
Open Meeting Presidential advisory committee on the future role of Hart House Bickersteth Room Hart House

7:30 p.m.
"The Canadian Lynx", a play in two acts by Jerry O'Carroll $1 at door Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's College, Devonshire Place

7:45 p.m.
Lecture on advanced printing in Club Rooms Hart House Camera Club

THURSDAY
12 noon
Psychology Student Union meeting, All students invited to attend Innis I

1 p.m.
CUSO Information meeting CUSO Office 33 St. George Street, Toronto
HSU guest speaker Prof W T Saywell, Dept. of East Asian Studies, talking on "Chinese Foreign Policy and the Sino-Soviet Dispute" New College 1016

5:15 p.m.
Meet with the VCF in the cafeteria for supper at 6:15 followed by Don Freeman's last exposition on Ephesians Meds Bldg Cafeteria

7:45 p.m.
Soiree de Noel du Cercle Francais Echapper-vous de votre travail pour quelques heures Danse, musique, rafraichissements cadeaux de Noel et meme le Pere Noel Pendaves Lounge, ISC

8 p.m.
Catholic Alumni Club Christmas party All single graduate students and staff welcome Price $2/person Newman Club, 89 St. George Toronto Waffle Movement in the NDP Speaker: Mal Walkins Action Committees and strategy on building a left movement, All Welcome Queen St United Church, 765 Queen West

STAFF! STAFF! STAFF!
Staff meeting, today, The Varsity office at 1 p.m. to discuss Christmas things. Come out and meet your friends. Ladies welcome. Please enter by back door.

TIME IS RUNNING OUT!
BUY TICKETS NOW!

Hart House
New Year's Eve Ball
$17/Couple

- Hall Porter
- Undergrad Office

NEW COLLEGE MOTION PICTURE SOCIETY
W.C. FIELDS

The Bank Dick

TONITE! 8.00 P.M.
NEW COLLEGE (WETMORE)
DINING HALL
HURON & CLASSIC AVE.
ADMISSION: $1.00

ENGINEERS ENGINEERS

NORTHTO ... ?

A NATIONAL CONGRESS - THE CANADIAN NORTH
QUEBEC CITY - February 20-22
Apply Now - Engineering Stores

CONGRESS OF CANADIAN ENGINEERING STUDENTS

"Kensington doesn't hate students"

The Kensington community does not hate students, says Tony Vaz, a former Kensington community worker for the Portuguese in the area.

Vaz was responding to the story, "One Block of Land in Kensington", which appeared in The Varsity's Community Issue two weeks ago.

Vaz said he supported the basic tenor of the article, but he corrected three statements in the article:

- The Varsity reported that "the University of Toronto is one of bodies most hated and feared by Kensington" for its power of expropriation.

- "The community does not hate students," said Vaz. "The students were mistreated

They didn't have a chance to talk to the Kensington Area Residents Association. Schwam and his small clique stopped them."

The community fears university expansion, Vaz added, but it does not hate the university.

- The Varsity reported that Tony Vaz was fired from his job as a community worker. But Vaz said his contract was not renewed and he had not expected to stay in the job for more than a year.

- The Varsity reported that Margaret Campbell forced the Kensington Urban Renewal Committee to include some Portuguese representatives. The pressure came from Mayor William Dennison, said Vaz.

"But the Portuguese who finally became members were not the ones picked by the community representatives," he added. "They were picked by Schwam. They were two little puppets to say 'Yes sir, no sir.'"

"The people of Kensington haven't been consulted, and it will be a long time before they will be consulted."

Quebec survey says police take hard line in law enforcement

QUEBEC CITY (CUP) — Quebec police forces in at least four cities are more hostile towards "beatniks" than criminals, according to a survey released Wednesday by a provincial inquiry into the administration of justice.

Asked on one question to gauge their feelings towards "beatniks" as either "friendly", "neutral" or "hostile," 24.6 per cent of five Quebec forces surveyed admitted to hostile feelings.

Asked the same question about criminals, only 23.6 per cent confessed to hostile feelings.

The survey team, headed by University of Montreal criminologist Denis Szabo, found 74 per cent of the Rimouski police force hostile to beatniks. Only in Drummondville did the police say they were more hostile to crooks than to the bearded set.

Only 8 per cent of the 819 policemen interviewed said they were "friendly" to beatniks, twice as many as said they were friendly to criminals.

The term "beatnik" was not defined in the survey questionnaire.

In the Montreal force — the only one polled by age groups — researchers found younger officers "feel themselves as much activists as other members of their generation (except that they belong to a socio-professional group which forces them to accept certain rules and habits repugnant to the young generation.)"

The result, said researchers, "contributes, by a process of negative identification, to isolate (younger policemen) and to harden their attitudes".

A hard line towards law enforcement was found among all the policemen.

As a group, police feel they should be allowed to arrest drunks, vagrants or "suspicious looking characters," and that citizens should be forced to identify themselves when asked to do so by police.

They also favour "preventative detention" prior to demonstrations or visits by important politicians.

Ryerson suspends prof after pot bust

By HARRIET KIOECKEL

Ryerson Polytechnical Institute has suspended an English instructor without pay and without stated reason following his conviction for possession of marijuana.

Brian Humphries was charged in Kingston in mid-September after the RCMP raided his cottage.

While the police testified they found "about 200 marijuana plants varying in height from two to ten feet growing near the cottage", Humphries' lawyer said "the number of plants was around 80 and the number of roaches in the cabin was two."

Humphries was suspended Sept. 18, the morning after he notified RPI acting president Tony Wilkinson of his arrest. He was reinstated at the request of the English department the following day.

But Humphries was again suspended Nov. 27 after being convicted and sentenced to two years suspended sentence and three months in jail for possession and cultivation of marijuana.

Humphries is now free on bail but jobless while he awaits appeal of the cultivation charge.

A petition protesting the "arbitrary act" of dismissal for criminal offence is now being circulated among RPI faculty.

It says "We reject the view that the personal morality of the teacher can be used as a basis for dismissal. It is possible that an individual teacher might wish to break a criminal law as a matter of conscience."

It rejects "the administration assumption that a person who violates any criminal law, irrespective of its nature, is necessarily immoral."

In a petition submitted on the day of Humphries' second suspension, the majority of the English department staff refused to cover Humphries classes since "it would be an endorsement of his suspension" and "it would be detrimental to the students since Mr. Humphries courses are specialized and he is far better qualified to continue to teach them than we are to take over."

"We can only ensure a good education by hiring and retaining teachers of the calibre of Brian Humphries," it said.

While he awaits trial for cultivation, Humphries is living on money from donations of faculty members.

A similar suspension could occur at U of T even if the recommendations of the Campbell Commission on Discipline are implemented.

The Campbell Report says "both jurisdictions (that is, university and legal) can proceed to try the case under the principle of double jurisdiction."

Though "unlawful action should neither preclude nor make mandatory disciplinary action by the university", the necessity of double jurisdiction depends on "what did he (the accused) do and what is the concern... to an academic institution."

SAC is going to research the structure of all departments and faculties in the university, especially any in which revision is now going on.

Last night's University Commission meeting called for volunteers to carry out the research.

Ken McEvoy (III Vic), commission chairman, noting that "CUG implementation has to come at the lowest level," asked researchers to begin immediately.

DROP OUT

THIS WEEKEND AND SKI THE LAURENTIANS. COACH DEPARTS FRIDAY EVENING AT 9:45 P.M. AND RETURNS SUNDAY EVENING. STAY NEAR ST. JOVITE AND MONT TREMBLANT. ALL ACCOMMODATIONS AND MEALS ARE INCLUDED. $39.95

FOR RESERVATION CALL 364-9118
SPECIAL GROUP ARRANGEMENTS AVAILABLE

HISTORY STUDENTS' UNION
GUEST SPEAKER

PROF. W.T. SAYWELL

"CHINESE FOREIGN POLICY AND SINO-SOVIET DISPUTE"

THURS. DEC. 11/NEW 1016/1:00 P.M.

Out. & Joseph HAIR DESIGNS
116 A BLOOR ST. W.

CUT ONLY — $3.00
SET FROM — $4.00
COCKTAIL RINSE — $4.00 PLUS SET

BOOK YOUR XMAS & NEW YEAR'S APPOINTMENT NOW.

CALL PATRICK OR JOSEPH

921-1234 — 921-4884

La Ronde
131 BLOOR WEST

La Ronde
IN THE COLONNADE

HockeyBlues go to Mac; gals joust at Arena

Coach Tom (Pass the scalpel) Watt and his hardy band of injured hockey players travel to Hamilton tonight for the initial round of a crucial home-and-home series with McMaster Marauders.

Blues will definitely be without the services of at least four regular starters, and if winners Mike Peterman and Len Burman do dress, they will be at less than full effectiveness due to assorted hurts and bruises.

Marauders are going nowhere this season, and dropped a 9-8 decision last weekend to Western Mustangs. However, playing at home, Mac seems able from past performances to come up with the big game just when the opposition least expects it.

As Blues are off to their slowest start in many seasons, tonight's encounter plus the return match Friday at Varsity Arena take on added importance.

Not only are the four points vital in Blues drive for first place, but the players need two solid back-to-back wins to regain some of their confidence. And two big scoring outbursts won't hurt the points and scoring outbursts won't hurt the points and scoring averages either.

Mac has shifted the game from the old Dundas refrigerator plant to a newer emporium called Mountain Arena. It's probably no palace but compared to other inks in Hamilton, it's actually rather pleasant. And the fans are human.

Meanwhile, the women's intercollegiate hockey squad takes over Varsity Arena tonight with an exhibition game against the Varsity Grads.

Game time is 7 p.m., and the gals should provide an entertaining display of close-checking, solid team play, and (maybe) even a few goals.

NAOMI OF LONDON
HAIRSTYLISTS

wishes to announce the moving of her salon to a new, super location at 81 BLOOR ST. EAST by the Towne Cinema at Bloor subway, and invites all her friends to drop in and relax in the soothing, eclectic atmosphere. She would also like to introduce to Toronto Mr. JOSEPH, of Alexander's of Paris, he's just arrived and brimming over with ideas, for appointment phone 924-9542-3

And Also
MISS SMILEY
of London England
She is a whiz at
WHAT'S NEW

All students with
A.T.L. CARDS
20% DISCOUNT

Hoechst is Medicine

And plenty of it. Hoechst has over a full century of pharmaceutical research and achievement to draw upon — products and ideas that have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents. But big as we are in medicine, we're more than just medicine. We're chemicals too, and engineering and plastics and dyestuffs. And marketing. And ideas. Ideas most of all. Ideas about the future, about people's needs and wants. About how to meet those needs and wants. Good ideas, young ideas. Your ideas maybe. If you'd like to know more about Canadian Hoechst, write our Head Office.

CANADIAN HOECHST LIMITED

3400 JEAN TALON STREET WEST MONTREAL • ASSOCIATES OF FARBERWERKE HOECHST AG, WEST GERMANY

A CENTURY OF SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT THROUGH RESEARCH

DRY CLEANING

8 LBS. - $3.00
1/2 HOUR

Church & Wellesley Self Serve
DRY CLEANER

OPEN EVERY DAY
WEEKNIGHTS TILL 9:00 P.M.
Courteous Attendant on Duty

560 CHURCH ST.
924-6010

WHO'S MR
X?

What's all the fuss about every year again? Who's the X in XMAS? Find out from eye-witnesses, people whose lives were revolutionized by XMAS. This correspondence course is free, and no one will call on you unless you request it.

to: Bible Studies
Box 644, Station O,
Toronto 7, Ontario.

name: _____
address: _____

please check main interest:
 basic Bible study
 Christian doctrine
 the Christian life
other: _____

Gymnastics

An injury-riddled Varsity club was no match for MacMaster as the U of T Gymnastics team dropped an exhibition meet 135-100 in Hamilton on Friday night.

With Brian McVey, the number one Toronto gymnast out of action with a wrist injury, Blues were forced to give up valuable points by being short one man in two events. And without him, they could not match the performance of Mac's Steve Mitruk, a member of the 1968 Canadian Olympic Team. Mitruk led the Mac squad by easily taking the all-round title with firsts on four of the six events.

To add to Toronto's woes, their second ranked all-round man, Al Forest, severely hampered by a painful elbow injury, could do no better than fourth as Mac swept the top three all-round positions. Al's best individual performance was a third place tie in the free exercise.

John Kortright trailed Forest by only 0.6 in the all-round competition, and took third on the high bar with a beautifully executed routine.

Carl Sloane made Toronto's best individual showing — second place in the free exercise. Gary Wicks, competing in his first Intercollegiate meet, was third on the pommel horse followed by Arthur Stein in fourth spot. Phil Michaelis' sixth place vault added valuable points.

The coaching of Digby Sale, a former inter-collegiate champion on rings for Toronto, was particularly evident in the rings event, where Mac swept the first five positions.

Nevertheless, Toronto Coach Julio Roncon remains optimistic about the Blues' chances for the season. Mac rates as one of the strongest contenders for this year's OQAA title, and when the effect of injuries is calculated in, Toronto really wasn't that far behind.

POMMELPATTER: This Saturday affords U of T gymnastics enthusiasts an excellent opportunity to learn about the sport and to see entertaining demonstrations of some spectacular movements by Toronto team members. At that time, Coach Julio Roncon will conduct a judge's clinic. Team members will perform while Roncon explains the movements, pointing out the good aspects as well as the mistakes to watch for. Spectators are most welcome. Action begins in the Upper Gym of Hart House at 12 noon.

HART HOUSE 50

TOOAY

CLASSICAL CONCERT

Music Room, 1-2 p.m.

RUTH BISHOP

Pianist

Ladies Welcome

CAMERA CLUB

7:30 p.m. — Club Rooms

ADVANCED PRINTING TECHNIQUES

By: Mr. W. BROOKS

VARSITY TABLE TENNIS TOURNAMENT

December 13th — 1 p.m. — Lower Gym

Fee: 25¢ — Registration — Hall Porter

SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT

December 14th

Great Hall 9:00 p.m.

FESTIVAL SINGERS OF CANADA

Conductor: Elmer Iseler

Tickets: Hall Porter

TIME is running out!

Buy Tickets NOW!

HART HOUSE NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL

$17/couple — Hall Porter

& Undergraduate Office

YOU are invited!

GRAND OPENINGS

BLACK HART PUB

Tuck Shop, 4-11 p.m.

Thursday, December 11th

LAST PAPER

NO VARSITY MON. DEC. 15 LAST ONE WED. DEC. 17
AD DEADLINE FRI. DEC. 12 AT NOON

The Music Committee of Hart House Present FESTIVAL SINGERS OF CANADA

Conductor: Elmer Iseler

SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT

December 14th Great Hall - 9 p.m.

Tickets - Hall Porter

T.U.G.S.

TORONTO UNIVERSITY
GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY

ELECTIONS TODAY

SID. SMITH FOYER 9-5

ALL STUDENTS TAKING ONE OR MORE
GEOGRAPHY COURSES ARE ELIGIBLE TO VOTE

ANNUAL CHRISTMAS TREE

TONIGHT!

8:30 P.M.

GREAT HALL, HART HOUSE

-GLEE CLUB

-CAROL SINGING

-POETRY READING

FREE ADMISSION

TICKETS AT SAC OFFICE OR AT DOOR

B.Y.O.B.

(BRING YOUR OWN BLANKET)

(FOR SITTING ON FLOOR)

Soccer season in review

By UNCLE CHARLIE

After a disappointing start this season, Varsity Blues came back to within a point of clinching first place in the western division of the OQAA again. Their 4-1-3 won, lost, tie record was not good enough to beat Western, who went on to the OQAA finals and were beaten 3-0 by a strong Queen's squad.

The loss of the cups this year which Toronto had held for the five years was particularly depressing as the Blues had beaten and tied the Mustangs in season play. What could have easily been a winning season was marred by the fact that the Blues tied three of their first four games: MacMaster, Western and Guelph all scored last minute markers to tie games at least two of which Toronto should have easily won.

Blues' inability to finish off their plays around the opponents' net made for tight low-scoring games. Injuries to Miles Sosa and Frank Soppella early in the season coupled with Blues defensive play led to sparse scoring opportunities and lengthy midfield play.

John Gero led the scoring with ten of Blues' 23 goals. Trevor Wilson on defense and Sam Cesario in goal, both in their first season with Varsity, had particularly good seasons. Adriaan Verhulst on the half-line played excellent two-way ball and was voted the Charles Osler trophy as this year's most valuable player.

Prospects for next year look bright. Almost all of this year's team will be returning and coach Bobby Nicol, with the help of this season's experience, has the player's and attitude to mold a championship team.

The Blues — All Stars game was revived again this year. Varsity held on to a 3-0 half-time lead to come out on top 3-2. Gero for the Blues and Smith for the All Stars tallied all the goals.

ENGINEERING

Final Year Students

Today, the Chartered Accountant plays one of the most exciting roles in business management. He tackles complex and fascinating problems. For the professionally-trained man the scope is limitless.

Discuss career opportunities with Clarkson, Gordon representatives, on campus

DECEMBER 13th

Appointments should be made through the Student Placement Office. If this time is not convenient, please contact us directly: 368-2751

Clarkson, Gordon & Co.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Hullax • Saint John • Quebec • Montreal • Ottawa • Toronto
Hamilton • Kitchener • London • Windsor • Thunder Bay • Winnipeg
Regina • Calgary • Edmonton • Vancouver • Victoria

WORLD PREMIERE DECEMBER 11th

AGE OF AQUARIUS THE WOODSTOCK GENERATION FILM

An Electronic Happening
CINEMA 2000

329 Yonge Street, Just North of Dundas
Tickets on Sale Now

Recommended as Adult Entertainment

VARSITY BLUES

Front row (left to right): Vito Polera, Andy Rode, Sam Cesario, Jim Kalman, John Cobby (Capt.), Ormond Mendes. Back row: Bobby Nicol (coach), Adriaan Verhulst, Stan Bogucki, Jim Joseph, John Gero, Miles Sosa, Alan Churchill, Trevor Wilson. Absent: Frank Soppella, Mario Palermo, Peter Mucalov, Ken Cancellara.

INTRAMURAL ALL-STARS

Front row: B. Bubbin (Scar.), D. Sorenson (Scar.), M. De Rosa (New), T. Oshinowa (Grad.), G. Kumpala (Eng.) Back row: D. McAuley (Eng.), B. Hutchison (Trin.), R. Smith (Trin.), G. Hamatidis (Eng.), S. Sayer (Scar.) J. Sadek (Grad.), H. Taylor (Scar.), V. Pacallera (St. Mikes), S. Daniel (Erin).

Squash team leaves on US tour

Varsity Squash Blues leave today on their semi-annual trip to the United States. Under coach Ralph Rimmer, Blues have fielded a strong team to take on some of the stiffest competition they've faced in several years.

Thursday, Blues play two matches against sixth-ranked Williams College and eleventh-ranked Amherst College.

The following day they travel to West Point to take on fourth-ranked Army. On Saturday they're at Annapolis for their final match — against fifth-ranked Navy.

Highlight of the trip will be the annual grudge match between Rimmer and Amherst coach Ed Serues. Rimmer won their last encounter two years ago. Last year Serues was knocked out by a squash ball while sitting in the gallery and couldn't make the match.

Members of the team in order of seed are: Vic Harding (Captain), John Stewart, Ashley Perkins, Mike Gardiner (Captain Emeritus), Mark Khanne, Mike Zimmerman (Wardrobe and Social Director), Rupert Bramall and Gord Gibbons (Head Chauffeur).

Fencers defeat Trent and Mac

Rumor suggests that Toronto will have to transfer fencers to the expansion universities to give itself any competition.

The foilists sharpened their weapons on Trent but Mac were not to be denied giving a hard time. Mike Kerwin 2 wins and the Wongs one each fought to get a close 4-5 result.

The sabreurs struck heartily about them to any easy 8-1 victory and Blues lead 12-6. The trio Martin Perod had more difficulty keeping his feet than with the opposition while Andrew (the Fleche) Benvei and Jan van (but I hit him first) Maanen collected the other victories.

Only Rowland Griffin beat the inexhaustable Norman Bradwell, the revenge contest going to Griffin easily 5-2. All our other epeeists dismantled the Mac team except Bradwell to whom they lost by the odd hit.

Over the usual 27 bout event Blues won easily 19-8.

Gellius Part 2 -- with a warning

by GELLIUS

WARNING

This is really going to be a draggy column.

WATER POLO

Oh, Duvall scored 6 and Gibson one as Dents and Scar, tied, 7-7. Avasalmi (Avapickle too: 2, Goldsmith 3, and Carr 2 scored for Scar.

Vic (Adams, Karn 2, Coleman, McIntosh, Bryon 6; PHE (Barras, Vaillancourt 2, Duncan 2-5.

Knox downed Innis 10-7 on goals by Strung (past tense of "Strang", to do something unusual — OED - 2, Brydon 2, Molly Codling 3, and Grunding. Pink had 5 and Milbourne 2 for Innis.

BASKETBALL

Cuthbert had 17 points as Pharm took Vic 11, 35-25 Markowitz replied "8" for the losers. Who (vic 11, that's who) then beat SGS (Society for the Growth of Societies: 47-32. Anderson led Vic 11 with 10, Pincock SGS with 8.

Jr. Eng. (Poppenk 15; Mommenk couldn't make it: 39; Aaaaarrrghhhch (Kohn 17-34.

Alboini and Petch (Ottawa Valley dialect form of "Patch", each had 9 and Law downed Trin (Owen 13, 39-32.

Don't ever say I didn't warn you.

BLACK HART PUB

TUCK SHOP
HART HOUSE

DECEMBER 11th
4-11 p.m.

(Guys & Gals Will Be Asked

For Proof of Age & Library Cards)

Gellius Part 1 -- Reed lead plus speed

by GELLIUS INCENTIVES

One of the reasons there is Interfaculty Sports is so there will be something to give the T. A. Reed Trophy for. Otherwise Mr. Reed would be hurt. The trophy is awarded to the college which amasses the most points in respect to both participation and goodth. Standings follow, pursued by bear.

DIVISION I

Scar	5892
ASPC	5625
SMC	$1 Sorry 4932
Law	4585
Trin	4360
PHE	4171
Meds	4141
UC	3802
VIC	3698
New	3335

DIVISION II

Forestry	7634
Dents	6403
Innis	5236
Artichoke	4800
Knoxwurst	4635
Erin	4320
Pharm	3794
Wye	3655
Emm	2750

Bear.

BASKETBALL

SMC got 28 points from O'Connor to top PHE (Maxwell and serve 23 - 88-69.

UC beat Meds, 71-69. Singer led the winner's with 23. Barker had 15 for Meds and Lloyd Rossman, though held unscorth, was credited with 30 assists and 14 steals.

Scar (Baker 20, Don 19) 74. Dents (Rayman 14 - 69.

Thomann had 59 and SMC B beat New, 59-48. Gilbert paced Gnus with 12 (The gnu is a small South African antelope related to the Intendant Jean Talon.

WATER POLO WATER POLO?

FRAGMENTS OF INTERMEDIATE HOCKEY edited and condensed by Reader's Digest.

The Hazelton Ave. Hasheaters got good goaltending from Mark Golden and two goals from Ralph the Ringer to down the Sussex Ave. Speed-Freaks 4-1 in a game played Saturday morning at 2:30 in the DoubleRink Arena ("Double your profits, Double your fun..."). Ex-king Uldis of Latvia and Larry Larmond completed Hasheater scoring. Sussex (somewhat hampered by shoddy goaling of Mark Golden) was paced by Terry Kaiser and Arnie Solnicki. A partisan crowd of 11,496 (paid) watched the game.

Tempers were high, and it was not until some time after the game that Varsity Sports reporter Qwertyuopus was able to interview various participants. "Puff, gasp" was Solnicki's only comment, though he did add "Wheeze, pant" when pressed for further amplification. "We won it for Jeofrey" yelled a jubilant Hash-Eater, his features obscured by a flood of Chateau Fogels wine. Alternate Captain John Squirrel would not definitely confirm or deny the rumour that Hazleton Av would attempt to get the next World Championships. "The street is long enough", he admitted, "but we have this side-walk hassle".

Head Hasheater Uldis II of Latvia was awarded a Red Rambler and a lifetime supply of Oil as the game's most Valuable Player. He was visibly moved.

The contest was best summed up by a female fan gazing at Skates Budman's yellow sweater, purple scarf, and bell-bottom hockey pants. "C'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas hockey."

Return match this Friday. Tickets available at The Varsity or make your own.

Gellius part 2 see page 14

recommended as adult entertainment

PINTER

"A Slight Ache"

STRINDBERG

"The Stronger"

ADMISSION IS FREE

at the Studio - 4 Glen Morris
8:30 p.m. Tues, Dec. 9 - Sat. Dec. 13

We're in this stinking business too . . .

Canada's gas and germ war labs --- the story of our most secret war research

Also in the first issue:

*Quebec --- into the streets;
Ireland; The Ford Deal; the politics of wheat; Canada's own United Fruit . . .*

THE LAST POST is an independent, radical Canadian news magazine, produced by journalists across the country to investigate and document what is obscured, hidden and forgotten by the press.

Available at U of T bookstore, SCM, Book Cellar. Subscriptions $4 to Box 90, Station G, Montreal. Single issue: 50 cents.

ENROLLMENT DATE EXTENDED
TO DECEMBER 31st

TO ENROLL FOR YOUR UNIVERSITY
HEALTH AND ACCIDENT PLAN

IS YOUR PROTECTION MISSING?

A MAN WITHOUT INSURANCE
IS LIKE A SNAIL WITHOUT A SHELL

THREE PLANS TO CHOOSE FROM

PLAN I

EXTENDED HEALTH CARE

NO DEDUCTIBLE ON ACCIDENT BENEFITS

PLAN II

OVERSEAS AND AMERICAN STUDENTS

STUDENTS ON STUDENT VISA

PLAN III

NEWLY LANDED IMMIGRANT

INTERIM HOSPITAL COVERAGE
EXTENSOCARE PLUS LIFE

LIFE

$10,000 FOR $22.00 A YEAR

USE REGULAR APPLICATION

You need this coverage if you fall under one of the following categories:

1. Canadian students who are covered by OHSIP and OHSC and need extended health care
2. Students in Canada on a student visa and are not covered by OHSIP or OHSC
3. Students in Ontario from another province who do not have coverage from that province.
4. Newly landed immigrant students who are required to wait three months for the provincial plans to become effective.

ADMIN. — JOHN INGLE,
700 BAY ST. 364-4114
BAY AT GERRARD

NOTE If you have not received your brochure, additional forms may be obtained of the Registrar's office, Student Council Office, Studies International Students' Centre, the Health Service, or Faculty Offices.

Associated Press
A Montagnard woman, her forces camp near Cam-attack yesterday.

Losses Termed

of the attack
objective joined the G in the in renellir border has a paramilitary force

Songmy Boy Pants

THE NEW YORK TIMES

BY HENRY KAMM
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES

QUANGANGAI, South Vietnam, Dec. 3 — A little boy in a blue jockey cap, jammed up a toy Tommy gun, jammed it low against his side and pointed it menacingly making the pistol weapon describe an arc before him.

When he put it down and raised his hands, palm against each other, in supplication. He looked upward, as though for pleading, with someone much taller than himself, he made the boy picked up the gun no to go with it. The three South Vietnamese Senators and others watching shuddered at the old's pantomime.

He did not act out the rest of the story. They coaxed them close to the play had come too bear. They coaxed them too the story out in words.

The man wielding the gun the boy said was an American soldier, and the boy's mother. The bust of the boy's the woman and his sister and his sister, and the boy's live. The house where he happened, and the boy's hamlet, in house stood in his which was destroyed during sweep by American troops on March 16, 1969.

An undetermined number of men, women, and children manner similar to that described by the boy, who his name was Cu. This nickname for all little boys

A Citizen Is!

Dec. 3
JOI
SPN can for city to fo ti stations, American establishments (civilian and military) and some foreign missions.

GEAREO TO YANKS

The economy of the city seems to be geared to Americans, soldiers and civilians — at black market prices. You can change dollars to piastres at 200 per dollar (bank rate is 118). Prices are generally very high and you have to bargain with a passion for almost everything. It is both very expensive to live there and not at all a pleasant place.

I actually cannot say for whom I feel the greater sympathy, the American GI's or the Vietnamese. (As far as the foreign businessmen are concerned, I can hardly feel sorry for them. They are lining their pockets with gold from this war.)

I am not in any position to discuss the political situation to any degree greater than what can be gathered from the newspapers. Corruption in the government and poverty in the streets generally run together, but that's nothing new. Anyway, newspaper reporting in the West about the war is fairly accurate despite what Spiro T.

One is aware of the war only by virtue of one's own contact with the violence of it. What is more ironic is that often the enemy is a home-made bomb, or a rocket or an artillery shell or just a sniper's bullet. The enemy is not human, you do not see him, or comprehend him. He exists by virtue of his actions — like God I suppose. Perhaps that is a naive attitude because it fails to consider the logistic involvement of war. But even logistics somehow escapes reality.

I said earlier that I did not know for whom I should feel more sorry, the Vietnamese or the GI's. I spoke to several soldiers. All seemed to be of the same mind. All were not happy about being in Vietnam and were counting the days until they could return home, some back to school. Their comments seem to be in accord with those from other servicemen I spoke to in Okinawa and Taiwan.

I wonder if one feels that he is fighting for one's country or his country's ideas when he's in a ditch and the shells are exploding all around or when one discovers that businessmen are making a killing off the war or, when one reads about My Lai or Song My or that $400,000,000 of the $600-000,000 (Vietnamese) allocated for South Vietnamese presidential expenses are "unclassified". Well, anyway, it's worth wondering about. (So much for cynicism!)

KIOS

Before I close, I do have to tell you about "our street" in fabulous downtown Saigon. It is called Tu Do St. and is the main hotel area. As in Taiwanese cities, hotels here double as bordellos as do the local bars. Hustling hours are whenever you want to pay and the area is far from bankruptcy.

There are always little kids, orphans (maybe?) illegitimate (probably), expert con-men (definitely). If you don't give them money, they punch or kick you. If you do give them money, they hang around, a crowd of them appears out of nowhere and if you aren't care-letter from saigon

by joseph blankier

Agnew has to say.
However, it is a little different to think about the war when you are in the war zone.

OCCURENCES

One comes to realize that war is not a continuous thing. Instead it is a series of occurrences. It is in a sense "peace" with violence. A bombing or shelling occurs several miles away, perhaps only several blocks away; that's the war. A few people are dead — it's over. The war is over — until it happens again.

ful they steal the watch right off your wrist.

The street has another name also — "Rocket Alley". When Saigon is rocket-attacked the Cong inevitably "walk" their shells down the street (and the next one over). But that's history: Saigon has been rather quiet for the last four to five months. Oh, well "there will always be a tomorrow", as Scarlett O'Hara once said.

Well, we're landing in Singapore, so
I'll mail this as soon as I clear customs.
Take care of yourself. Merry Xmas to everyone — the weather here is great!

CUG members term faculty decision 'reactionary'

By HENRY MIETKIEWICZ

The members of the Commission on University Government have expressed great disappointment over the decision of the Arts and Science Faculty Council Tuesday to reject student participation in appointment, tenure and dismissal of professors, a major recommendation of the CUG report.

Labelling this decision "a terrible backward step", D'Arcy Martin (OISE) a student member of CUG, accused the Council of looking at the university in a "narrow and reactionary way."

"It seems to me," said Martin, "that a group of academics dedicated to a life of the mind should be able to demonstrate more than a self-seeking and paranoid reaction when presented with a threat to their power."

Martin felt that it was unrealistic of the council to attempt to deny the existence of students and warned that the case was not at all closed.

"What we need now," he continued, "is a coherent and organized group of students to take up the battle. If we want change, we must achieve it on our own."

FORGET GODS

CUG co-chairman Gary Webster (SGS) saw the Faculty Council's ruling as ultimately hampering any co-ordinated, systematic solution of student-faculty problems, since it runs "directly counter to CUG suggestions."

"It has become quite clear," he said, "that students cannot look for due process or expect matters of reform to fall from the laps of the gods."

"Because the established mechanisms no longer work, students must forget the previous channels, take the issue out of faculty hands, and go outside the CUG framework."

Adverse effects of the Council decision will be felt not only by students, but by the professors themselves, according to Prof. J. E. Hodgetts, a CUG faculty member, and principal of Victoria College.

He considers student participation a kind of catalyst which encourages faculty input. The absence of students will therefore result in the loss of a "fresh voice from both sides".

OPPORTUNITIES THREATENED

"In blocking student participation", continued Hodgetts, "the Faculty Council may have jeopardized any opportunities that CUG held for it."

"You might even say the faculty has cut off its nose to spite its face."

He also added that progress in discussion CUG implementation in the second term depends upon student-faculty discussions which will be quite difficult to hold in view of the present isolation of those two bodies.

Stephen Grant (III Vic), a student CUG member, agreed that the Council decision would "polarize and solidify both sides".

"I thought badly of it", he said, "because it will probably increase the cynicism on everyone's part".

FACULTY REFERENDUM

Prof. Lawrence E. Lynch, the other co-chairman of CUG, was concerned about the impression the decision will make on future discussions and governing councils.

Because less than 20 per cent of the faculty was involved in the ruling, he saw a general faculty referendum as one of the only ways to reverse or modify the Council's decision.

"The ruling has become a disappointing element in the general campus picture", said Lynch, "because it acts as a setback in the attitudes it expresses."

Dr. James S. Thompson, a CUG faculty member, voiced his disapproval, since the decision was "against the spirit of CUG."

Ken McEvoy (III Vic), a member of the CUG Programming Committee, said he was ignoring the Council decision as the final word in the issue of student participation.

"Since Arts and Science is only one faculty", he said, "we can still ask for support from institutes and faculties like OISE, which already has staff-student parity".

THE

varsity

VOLUME 90 — NO. 35
December 12, 1969

TORONTO

Thorson talks about NLC, Philippines, imperialism...

Prof. T. L. Thorson is a political scientist whose Poli Sci 101 class was the scene of several disruptions two weeks ago. Students in his class and members of the New Left Caucus have challenged the assumptions of his lectures and questioned the value of his teaching. A week ago Wednesday, a poll revealed 90 per cent of the class would not tolerate further disturbances. On Wednesday, Varsity editor Brian Johnson interviewed Prof. Thorson.

Varsity: Why do you think the New Left Caucus came into your class?

Thorson: Gee, I don't know exactly. I can only guess. I can guess a number of things. The size of the course and that particular room emboldens people, because if you had a class of 40, it would be a different kind of thing to operate in.

And the way I do it has an appearance of formlessness. It has kind of an amorphous or open quality to it. I'm not the kind of person who gets up and says, "there are six points today," and then really rips through six points in a one-two-three-four-five-six way, that does really an authoritarian, formal lecture thing which I don't do at all. That kind of person is probably more intimidating.

I've always made a practice of saying provocative things.

It's useful to wake people up. I don't necessarily mean I take provocative positions, but I say things in a way that makes fun of things that are otherwise thought of as great, deep, serious, and solemn things.

So consequently the ideological types tend to pick up statements and phrases and things like that and imagine that all kinds of things have been said when that's really not what's been said at all.

I've always been that way so there's nothing new in that respect.

So I might make some wisecrack about the logistical problems involved in the Nazi extermination programs. And — what the hell — there were logistical problems of a very large order. But if you say that in a certain way, it can offend somebody's sensitivities, although I don't mean it that way.

You have to do something . . . you've got 300 people there . . . and you've got to do something to keep them awake. And so I just try to be myself.

And I don't talk much differently there than I do in ordinary conversation.

Continued on page 4

Prof. Thomas Thorson lectures in Poli Sci 101

photo by bob henerson

ANNUAL GENERAL MEMBERSHIP MEETING
WILL BE HELD AT THE ISC, 33 ST. GEORGE ST.
ELECTION OF NEW OFFICERS.

Bloor Street
BLOOR AT HURON

MINISTERS:
THE VERY REV. DR. E. HOWSE
REV. DAVID R. ALLAN
THE REV. DONALD GILLIES
MINISTER OF MUSIC

10 A.M.
CHURCH SCHOOL SEMINAR
CAMPUS & THE CHURCH
11 A.M.
TRUCE FOR A BABY
DR. E.M. HOWSE
7:30 P.M.
MESSIAH, PART 1
CHOIR, SOLISTS, & ORCHESTRA

"THE DIRTY DOZEN"

SUNDAY NITE
TWO SHOWINGS:

6:30 & 9:00 P.M.

At

NEW COLLEGE
(Huron & Classic)

$1.00/person

GETTING ENGAGED?

"Gemeni?"

- * .42 Carat Diamond
- * 18 Kt. Gold Setting
- * Excellent Clarity
- * Excellent Colour

$300.00

Also Available in 1/4, 1/3
and 1/2 Carat Sizes

WE ARE DIRECT
DIAMOND DEALERS

Hugh Proctor & Co.

DIAMOND DEALERS
131 BLOOR W. STE. 416
921-7702

WHOOPIE!

NEW YEAR'S EVE
AS IT SHOULD BE!

THE BALL

3 GREAT GROOVY GROUPS
HONKY-TONK PIANIST

MIDNITE STEAK DINNER
CHAMPAGNE BAR

EVERYONE WILL BE THERE!!!

Get your Tickets NOW
$17/COUPLE
Hall Porter & Undergrad. Office.

HURRY!

Live, work and learn in ISRAEL

Sherut La'am Program

Share your education, training, and know-how in a unique people-to-people venture ————— One year service corps in Israel

Three types of programs

1. College Graduate
2. Kibbutz
3. Technical and Vocational

All programs include a three month Hebrew study
Ulpan in Israel

Cost: $595 (U.S. currency) includes round-trip group flight from New York;
room and board Throughout the year;
excursions and seminars.

Please send me further information about your programs:

NAME _____ AGE _____

ADDRESS _____ PHONE _____

EDUCATIONAL STATUS _____

SEND COUPON TO: SHERUT LA'AM

188 Marlee Avenue Toronto 19, Ont.
Phone: (416) 783-4722

"I think you should learn not burn" --Hendrix

by MICHAEL KAUFMAN

Up the servants' stairs of the Four Seasons Motor Hotel, on Wednesday night, turning right and going down a brightly-lit hall to room 331, finding its door partly open. We knocked hard, but no one came. Looking in, all we could see was a closet with a beige, pointed collared shirt, and a pair of corduroy pants.

I muttered, "Yes, Doug, he wears clothes just like you and I do." We knocked a few more times before we were convinced that he wasn't in his room. As we started to go down to the restaurant to see if he was there, a short, fat, English guy (chap) with greasy long hair, came out of room 330, and with an authoritative voice asked, "Are you looking for someone?"

"We wonder if we could speak to Mr. Hendrix."

"Mr. Hendrix has had a hard day and is very tired. He did a press conference after the trial, and isn't doing any private interviews. Now if you don't get out of here, I'm going to have you thrown out."

Detecting a note of hostility, we went down the the lobby and sank into maroon chairs. We talked to some reporters who had been sitting in the lobby for three days. Hendrix's manager had kept putting them off.

The lady selling candy says that she has talked to him a few times, and thinks "He's a very nice boy." In fact that's what everyone who talks says. So as far as Doug and I could speculate, we felt he would be glad to talk to us.

Douglas Perry, my violin playing friend, had come along with dreams of getting his big break, or maybe smoking some dope with Hendrix, or maybe he would even reward us with a few groupies who he couldn't get off his back, or whatever it was they wouldn't get off of.

We brooded and watched $500-a-dress chicks walk by, clutching onto CBC reporters, who were easily recognizable by their long sideburns, short hair, and double breasted jackets. We checked Hendrix's room every once in a while, but he was still out, probably in one of the five rooms rented out for his manager, agent, travelling companions, and the English greaser.

At 11:45, the house detective, who had been watching us for around a half an hour from behind a copy of The Telegram, came over and said softly out of the side of his mouth: "Are you gentlemen registered guests of the hotel?"

Although we weren't positive that he was addressing us, because he kept looking around at everyone else in the lobby with quick jerks of his head, and because he called us gentlemen, we decided to answer anyway. "No sir." I answered, being more quiet and much more sure of myself than he had been, "We're just waiting to talk to a friend of ours, who asked us to come by at midnight." With an almost inaudible okay, he slinked back

"I really don't know much about that scene, except what I read in the papers. What I've read was that they was gathering weapons. Like that's the opposite way of going about getting something . . . We don't want a Ku Klux Klan in reverse; you know what I mean?"

I just don't like seeing a lot of bright young boys getting mixed up in that, and getting killed . . . You know, like, I think you should learn, not burn."

Starting on something else, I said, "A lot of people are saying that music is going back to rock and roll these days. Is that really a trend?"

"We're not going back to the old tunes or anything. I just think that musicians are trying to capture the vibes and electricity of R & R. It's sort of going back to a primitive state . . . the jungle. There's a lot of R & R in our new stuff."

We talked about the Paul McCartney rumours, and more recently about the rumours about Hendrix himself. (He hasn't turned into a vegetable, by the way.) "You have to remember that there is life after death," he said. "There are all kinds of death; like a change, or moving away from a bad scene. I don't think the Beatles thing was for publicity."

And finally it was a gentle "Like I'm pretty tired. I've been up since six talking to my lawyers. Listen, if you want, why not give me a call tomorrow morning, and maybe you can come up and speak to me again."

into the shadows. Well, about five minutes later our friend, Jim, finally came back to his room:

"Uh, Mr. Hendrix, my name is Michael Kaufman and I wonder . . . etc."

And with a really gentle and kindly voice, he quietly said: "Yeh, well like I'm pretty tired, but I don't mind talking with you for a while."

The first thing I thought of saying was: "One of the things that has been bothering me a lot lately has been the seemingly systematic killing of 28 members of the Black Panther Party, over the past year."

SAC proceeds with disciplinary appointees

By JOHN BENSON

"SAC is selecting delegates for a committee that may never meet," Art Moses, chairman of the Students' Administrative Council Judicial Committee, told The Varsity yesterday.

The committee is the Interim Disciplinary Committee proposed by President Bissell after last September's discipline crisis, but at present SAC and the Association of Teaching Staff are engaged in a running battle over the methods used to select students to sit on the Committee.

SAC had originally planned to appoint students to the committee, but Professor F. E. Winter, chairman of the ATS, demanded the selection of representatives by lot, a proposal of the Campbell Report.

In a meeting Oct. 30 with President Claude Bissell, SAC agreed to compromise with the ATS and decided that they would select 20 students of which six would be chosen by lot to sit on the committee.

Winter agreed to put this proposal before a meeting of the ATS when Bissell said that the Board of Governors would not accept any members on the committee who had been chosen by lot.

The compromise proposal was put before a meeting of the ATS Nov. 12, but the ATS voted to insist that student delegates be chosen by lot because they felt that if the delegates were appointed it would lead to the emergence of "political issues."

SAC disagreed and insisted that delegates would be completely free of SAC influence and would only be recalled in the event of gross incompetence.

Winter met again with SAC in Bissell's office where he reaffirmed the ATS insistence that student delegates be selected by lot.

Moses told The Varsity yesterday, "the proposed Committee is extremely important because it will be acting as more than just a jury. It will be making rules and setting precedents in matters concerning campus discipline."

"SAC is presently going ahead with the compromise proposal in spite of the fact that the ATS refuses to sit on a committee with students who are not selected by lot," said Moses.

"It is strange," he said, "that the ATS is trying to dictate to SAC the methods by which it should select its delegates. SAC has compromised its position once and has never attempted to make any suggestions as to how faculty members should be selected."

Applications for students who wish to sit on the committee have been open all week and close today.

SAC (cus) FRAC (cus)
BAC (cus)

SAC is holding its annual Christmas Party on Friday December 19th — all day long. It's open to everyone!

This gala highlight of the radical's social season will feature (can you believe it, ladies and gentlemen?) — Gus Abols as Santa Claus, Bob Barkwell as Rudolf the Red (knows?), Art McIlwain as Scrooge and last but not least (Madame, please step away from the cage!) — Steve Langdon as the Boy Wonder.

Special — Contest for the Day:

WAS SANTA CLAUS A COMMIE?

First prize is: a trip to the Engineering Stores.

We're having a party. A red one and a green one and a yellow one. So if you are a Varsity staffer in any capacity or if you're a friend of the family, come on up to the office for all those funny details. What more can I say????????????????

VARSIITY: ... and don't you think people in the class wanted to talk about the situation in their class? The course started out as an introduction to political science, but it changed into something else.

THORSON: I imagine they wanted to discuss it. But the course marches on, and certain things have to be done. It's hard for me to be persuaded that everything in that course should come to a halt so we can talk about whether or not someone's free speech is being abused.

VARSIITY: Did you condone the fact that several students threw five NLC members out of the class, and if you didn't condone it, why didn't you try to stop it or suggest another form of discipline?

THORSON: I wouldn't quite use the word 'condone', but I guess the answer to that is 'Yes'. There really wasn't any other alternative. It didn't really seem to me that votes were appropriate. No one wanted to call the police. We could have called the police. We could have got an injunction in the courts. And I know the judges are not going to hold back when it comes to a thing of this kind — disruption of the ordinary business of the university. Injunctions from the courts can be gotten for this kind of thing.

O.K. that's an alternative. But it gets the university's business out into the public process, and I'm not sure that's such a hot thing.

But the issue was not between me and the NLC; it was between the rest of the class and the NLC, in that it was a free situation.

I really don't mind if the NLC, the Royal Canadian Air Force, or anyone else, wants to come to that class. But they've got to allow us to conduct the class in the normal way. I don't care who comes. Never have cared. And I don't care now.

But the class can't go on when people shout and scream, make strange noises, and shuffle their feet.

I mean, you know and I know when's someone's trying to bust up a meeting. I've been on both sides of that in all kinds of places. There's no mystery about it.

If the NLC infringe upon the rights of those who want to listen, and those who came because they want to listen do something about it, that does not surprise me. Nor does it shock me.

VARSIITY: Did you once work in the Philippines?

THORSON: That's right.

VARSIITY: What was the nature of your work?

THORSON: I was a visiting professor at the University of the Philippines sponsored by the Rockefeller Foundation. The university was started at the time of the American occupation.

In the 1950's the Rockefeller and Ford Foundations did a survey of Asian universities to find one that they could develop into a major graduate school for South East Asia.

But Japan of course has its own, and there's no problem there.

They wanted to find one which was far enough off the ground. So they looked in Bangkok, Singapore, and various places. They got a problem there as to not making it a Chinese place. 'Cause they got a lot of conflict between the Chinese and the South East Asians. The Chinese have a separate cultural notion of what it is they're supposed to be doing. This doesn't have anything to do with Communism or the Red Chinese. It has to do with Chinese culture which is a different kind of an animal than that of the other culture.

They settled on the University of the Philippines long before me.

They sent some of the Filipinos off to other places such as the United States and England to improve their graduate backgrounds in England or in Spain, or the United States. In the process they hired some people — mostly Americans — to come in and be visiting professors and pick up the slack while the Filipinos were off getting PhD's in other places.

VARSIITY: Did you leave the Philippines because of anti-American demonstrations?

THORSON: That's partly true, but it's a very complicated story. It really is. In fact it's so complicated that, as a matter of fact, I'm not really sure I know why.

It was at the time of the elections. Philippine politics is not ideological at all. It's a straight two-party system where there are the "in's" and the "out's".

The University of the Philippines is very closely tied to local politics. When the President of the Philippines was defeated, there were a lot of people in the university who were trying to get powerful in the university.

Again, it wasn't for ideological reasons, just for prestige and status, plus the few extra dollars that comes with being a dean. The "out's" began to attack the "in's".

One of the ways the "out's" thought they could get at the "in's" was suggesting that the university was being dominated by American influence and money, and that we were all in the CIA. And over there they really believe it. It's just not hot air. They really think that's the case.

Coming from the Philippines, then coming here — there are certain very great similarities. The Filipinos have exactly the same problem with regard to dominance of American industry, and so on.

I've lived in three countries outside of the United States — Britain, Philippines, and here. And in each case the principle political question is what's called the "special relationship."

They all use the same word, which tickles me.

The Filipinos suppose it's only the Philippines and the Americans who are involved in the special relationship; the Canadians suppose it's only the Canadians and the Americans; and the British suppose it's only the British.

As an American overseas you get stuck with this everywhere.

VARSIITY: "Special relationship" is kind of a euphemism.

THORSON: Yes, but that's what's said.

VARSIITY: One last question; do you think that U.S. imperialism exists, and do you think you're a part of it?

THORSON: Uh ... it depends very much on what you mean by that. If you mean there's some conscious plot to take over the world, I think that's ... (pause) ... plainly untrue. The kind of question you're asking is very similar to "Do you think the international Jewish conspiracy exists ..."

VARSIITY: No, I'm talking about ...

THORSON: Now, wait a minute ...

VARSIITY: But, I'm ...

THORSON: Now, wait a minute. If I was a Jew I'd be part of it, for instance.

VARSIITY: The question I'm asking is do you think imperialism exists. Do you think the United States is economically, politically exploiting other countries for its own profit against the interests of the people in those countries, whether by some conscious conspiracy or by the natural function of it's economic system.

THORSON: Well, I honestly have to answer that question "I don't know". I know the arguments on both sides ...

I really don't know. You look at this country and the Philippines, and you have to ask all kinds all kinds of questions that are very difficult to answer.

For instance, what would the Philippines be doing now were it not for American capital? You know. What would the present Canadian state of affairs be if it were not for American capital and know-how? What would be the state of British industry if American capital had not picked it up in the past 15 years?

I don't know the answers to those questions. I just don't know if it's helpful or harmful to the people there. I vacillate on the question. Sometimes I think it's one way and sometimes I think another.

I understand perfectly well why it would annoy somebody. But we'll know when somebody says, "O.K. We will now throw out all the American money, the American institutions, the American personnel, and the American know-how, and we will do it ourselves."

Then we'll test that out. But until that happens I don't know how we'll test it.

What's the logging industry doing to our forests?

Friends, share-holders and admirers of Macmillan Bloedel and other logging companies will be pleased to know The Varsity has not forgotten them. Last issue we promised we'd present both a forester's and an ecologist's view of 'the forest-ecology problem'.

Surprisingly enough, with the aid of Smokey the Forestry Bear, we've been able to keep our promise. . . See page six.

Smokey also asked us to remind you to support your ecosystem and love your fellow bear by buying a plastic Christmas tree this year. Don't fret, your boycott can't hurt anybody — the plastic trees available at your local hardware are manufactured by — you've guessed it — a Japanese subsidiary of good old Macmillan Bloedel.

Ecologists become particularly impassioned when prophesying the imminent failure of important ecocycles. Of late, the forest industry has become a favourite target.

Critics claim that present forest harvesting practices are detrimental to "the over-all balance of things".

From the forester's view-point, such statements are, for the most part, based on ignorance.

The Canadian forest industry — and professional foresters — want healthy, vital forests. Naturally, foresters share the ecologists' concern over increasing pollution and the growing conversion of forest lands to other purposes.

But the claim that logging operations are harmful to a forest's health is simply untrue.

First of all, a quality distinction must be made. There are loggers — and there are loggers. No one can deny that forests are being abused by some companies. Over-cutting without concern for re-seeding or soil erosion is taking place at this moment at several locations.

However, there are many companies which are actually improving the ecological health of their lands.

To examine more closely the ecological effect of forest harvesting, let's look at what happens both before and after the loggers come into a forest.

Nature re-cycles forests on her own. Leave a forest untouched by man and sooner or later a lightning fire will burn it down. Burning clears off dead wood and humus, allowing for regeneration. The cycle of species is started again.

Obviously, fire is an essential part of a forest's evolution. In fact, wildlife populations are absolutely dependent upon forest fires for the creation of open forage country.

Old, overly mature forests simply do not survive; nature realizes that such forests are ecologically non-supportive. An old forest produces less oxygen than a young, growing forest and contributes far less nutritional material to the soil.

Fortunately, old forests full of dry wood are more prone to the fires that regenerate the entire forest cycle.

Why all this talk of fires? Simply for this reason: keeping the above quality distinctions concerning loggers in mind, logging operations have essentially the same effect as fires.

In fact, logging is perhaps even more ecologically sensible than burning; in logging, the amount of air pollutants released by the burning of waste brush is minuscule in comparison to the pollution caused by forest fires.

When the companies take wood out of a forest, they trigger the same regeneration as caused by fires. By removing mature trees, the loggers influence three main ecological processes: (1) the production of atmospheric oxygen; (2) the production of vegetative wastes for soil nutrition; (3) water cycle maintenance by the soil.

The amount of oxygen is dependent upon the amount of leaf area a forest has exposed to the atmosphere. Most forests reach their maximum leaf area at 25 years of age. After that, the amount of leaf area — and oxygen produced — declines.

So when loggers remove mature trees well beyond 25 years of age, they are removing inefficient oxygen producers to make way for younger, more vigorous trees. The ecologist's criticism in regard to loggers destroying the atmosphere by removing leaf-bearing trees is therefore unsupported. Actually, logging improves oxygen output.

By removing wood from a forest, loggers influence the soil cycle: here their effect is almost identical to that of a fire. The argument is sometimes made that removal of wood constitutes the destruction of material which would eventually fall and rot, thus replenishing the soil.

This is simply untrue; the amount of soil nutrient emitted by a decaying tree trunk is negligible. Soil is nourished primarily low-level vegetation and leaf mould; most low-level growth is choked out by the mature trees loggers remove. Again, it is evident that logging merely accelerates a natural process.

The third process affected by logging — water cycle maintenance by the soil — is the process most vulnerable to disturbance by unreasonable logging practices. However, most loggers today are aware of the danger of precipitating soil erosion by over-cutting.

All of the above analysis is based upon the assumption that the commercial loggers operate according to the directions of professional foresters. Unfortunately, the reverse is the case. The forester in a corporation works under the assumption that his employer can ask — and sometimes demand — a compromising of professional standards.

There are companies which operate according to economic criteria alone. Ironically, the most ecologically-conscious logging firms operating in Ontario are American; Kimberley-Clark and Spruce Falls Pulp are two examples.

At bottom it is the avarice of the public market which is destroying Canada's forest lands. The demands of the share-holder and the consumer encourage exploitative corporations to strip a forest for quick profit, ignoring their ecological responsibilities.

But the ecologists themselves are also a threat to the nation's forests. By closing an area off from natural evolution (i.e. by preventing forest fires) in the name of preservation, ecologists are creating rotting graveyards of dead wood. Both greedy logging and short-sighted conservation can have disastrous ecological consequences.

In the final analysis, Canada's forests must either be managed intelligently or left completely alone. Economically, we are far too dependent upon the forests to ignore them.

The forests we have left must be managed on a long-term basis to insure an enduring resurgence of new timber for commercial and recreational uses, and more importantly, for ecological survival.

(This page is printed on wood-pulp rapped from Canada's wilderness. PROTEST VARSITY COMPLICITY.)

Comment

Will Toronto Island become a rich man's playground?

By LORNE BERNSTEIN

Mr. Bernstein comments on one of his recent sociology lectures.

The Toronto waterfront will become a "high-class playground and this is what we want it to be" said Frank Longstaff of the Metropolitan Toronto Planning Board Tuesday.

Longstaff, who is assistant secretary-treasurer of the board, was discussing the Waterfront Development Plan with students of Sociology 205, a course in urban sociology.

The present Toronto Island community should be destroyed to make way for "second class citizens," he said and he later referred to the present community as "a bunch of shacks."

Although untrue, this surely would classify the Islanders as second or even third class citizens! Is Mr. Longstaff really interested in public opinion? Or is he merely selling a scheme with a presentation more concerned in winning an audience than with information?

He may be forced to sell a plan not of his own creation. But he didn't seem to be worried about its iniquities and sold it wholeheartedly. He is an official of our Metro Planning Board, talking about a plan which will affect us.

CITIZENS' WATERFRONT

The principle behind the plan is to bring the waterfront back to the citizens of Toronto. But the plan will benefit only such "first class" developments as Campeau's Harbour Square and the proposed Harbour City. This topic warrants more than this sort of flippant attitude from an official.

The Waterfront Development Plan has been accepted in principle' by all levels of government. It is a proposal for the redevelopment of the shoreline across the Metropolitan Toronto Planning Area.

Involved is a distance of some 50 miles extending from Ajax to Clarkson. Within the harbour area the plan proposes new port facilities, an airport, the Campeau scheme (ferry terminal and luxury apartments) and Harbour City a high-density residential development.

Most of the questions raised at the seminar relate to land use. Mr. Longstaff said Harbour City would provide the means for the development of the port facilities. He regretted there would not be sufficient funds to pay for the public parks and open spaces projected along the 50-mile stretch.

Harbour City will replace a public park with a more private use. The parkland consequently would be used only by the high-rise residents and not by the great bulk of Metro citizenry. The present users of the park will feel out of place so close to a "rich man's playground."

PARKING PROBLEMS

Also, once this high-rise development is started, with its obvious economic benefits, what's to stop it spreading over the rest of the Island? Once cars are allowed to come to this area of the Island the problem of parking arises. To alleviate this problem, a vast car park is proposed, which will use more parkland.

The City of Toronto gave the Island to the Parks Department on the understanding that the land would be used as parkland. Yet Harbour City is to be situated on Hanlans Airport, new land fill and part of the park — including all of Hanlans Beach.

Mr. Longstaff saw no problem here.

Unfortunately in a plan of this type no long or short-term social or psychological ramifications are taken into account.

Mr. Longstaff agreed. It is merely a "physical" plan, he said.

GREAT CONFUSION

There seems to be great confusion between the various levels of government.

The federal government is concerned, since an airport is planned. The province is concerned — it claims to own part of the land on the west of the Island.

Both the Metro Planning Board and the Harbour Commission have an interest in the area.

However, there has been no effective co-operation between the federal, provincial and Metro governments. For example, no federal government representative turned up at a meeting on the airport this week; they wrote asking for "more information" about the make-up of the committee.

Let's hope Harbour City does not follow the example of the lakefront Ontario Place which started construction before the project had been adequately publicized.

I am concerned for the future of Toronto Island as a park for the citizens. As things are going, I also can foresee Mr. Longstaff's concept of the area as a rich man's playground, that's not "what we want it to be".

The children file in, shake the snow off their boots and hang up their coats and knitted stocking caps.

School begins with prayers, and then lessons start. Reading comes first.

CHRISTMAS BAG OF CONTENTS get your daily exorcize.....R3

we have been naught.....R6

wow, zap, pow.....R7

a less than sunshine sketch....R4 are you curious (yellow)?.....R14

? ?.....R8

some other stuff.....

THE PHOTOGRAPHS ON THIS PAGE WERE TAKEN BY THE STAFF OF THE SCHOOL DURING THE CHRISTMAS CELEBRATIONS. THE CHILDREN IN THE PHOTOGRAPHS ARE ALL FROM THE SCHOOL AND ARE ALL OF THE SAME AGE. THE PHOTOGRAPHS WERE TAKEN IN THE SCHOOL HALLWAY AND IN THE CLASSROOMS. THE PHOTOGRAPHS WERE TAKEN BY THE STAFF OF THE SCHOOL DURING THE CHRISTMAS CELEBRATIONS. THE CHILDREN IN THE PHOTOGRAPHS ARE ALL FROM THE SCHOOL AND ARE ALL OF THE SAME AGE. THE PHOTOGRAPHS WERE TAKEN IN THE SCHOOL HALLWAY AND IN THE CLASSROOMS.

Blair Fraser

a journalist the likes of which...

Two summers ago I was sitting in a booth in the St. Catharines Diana Sweets talking to a fellow summer reporter on the local daily. He was a nice kid, from Ryerson, and he was telling me how he wanted to make a career in journalism. "I think I have a gift that way," he was saying, "to see both sides of an issue and present them in an interesting way."

Interesting way. Both sides

The paper we worked on that summer seemed deliberately to encourage laxness and complacency among the reporting staff. It was the only paper in town, there were plenty of ads, and there was one page of local news to fill. We wrote a lot of sentimental claptrap (my personal gem: "Retiring tailor to devote more time to violin, tape recorder." He was the publisher's tailor) and reported trials, accidents and city council. There was no encouragement to do any different.

The most ambitious people on the paper were the photographers. They kept their police radios on at all hours and arrived at accidents within minutes. Insurance companies pay high premiums for collision scene photos.

Essentially then, reporting was treated in a casual and non-thinking manner, in line with predetermined patterns. Any court story — be it an accident, rape, assault, a 48th arrest for drunkenness — gets a comic slant. And it's the reporters who put it there. Many treat the job superficially because it provides an easy life and good money.

Others, like my friend from Ryerson, are so used to reacting, always reacting mechanically, to what is called Hard News (Eg. "Man Bites Dust") and filling in with inoffensive sentiment, that they never think there is anything more than "both sides" presented in an "interesting way" to journalism.

That's the reality of most newspapers in Canada. Except in the big cities perhaps, there is a greyness, a drabness, a moral lethargy, which infects everyone and masquerades as should lead the world in resolving them.

Those problems, he felt, were twofold — how to achieve a sense of national cohesion in a diverse country, and how to resolve tragic disparities in levels of economic and social development. In Canada these issues were represented by French Canada and by the Indian and Eskimo population. Fraser felt Canada could make a unique contribution by solving on her "laboratory scale" these central modern dilemmas.

Fraser was never dogmatic. Above all he was a reporter — he had to deal in facts. But behind fact lies a value system — Fraser never attempted to hide his predispositions; they were part and parcel of his credibility.

This comes across strongly in a tribute he wrote in 1950 following the death of Mackenzie King. He could write warmly of the Liberal leader's faith in "cooperation" and his ability to hold the country together, while at the same time recording the fact of King's political ruthlessness.

He could not neglect the personal side either, since a deep respect for individuals was an integral part of Fraser's approach. Fraser probably had a better understanding of King's psychology — a lonely, sentimental man, thinking himself a radical and trying to follow public feeling while steering a middle course — than any of his contemporaries. Unfortunately the story in which Fraser tracked down and broke the news of King's spiritualism is not included in the present volume, as it has been published elsewhere.

Watching the political infighting on his Ottawa stomping ground, Fraser wrote extremely shrewd political commentary, pinpointing for instance in the early fifties the weaknesses that were to haunt Diefenbaker and Pearson when they headed governments, in both of them a clumsiness of organization and an acute dislike of being wrong.

But Fraser did his best writing from the field, when he was reporting firsthand. His stories on Quebec — corruption in the liquor business in Duplessis' Quebec, the stirrings of the Liberal Roman Catholic clergy in Quebec, Lesage avoiding the "What does Quebec want" question in Western Canada ("... he didn't quite know himself, except in general terms") — are all examples of first-rate journalism.

As early as 1944 he had placed his finger on the roots of French Canadian discontent:

"The French Canadian demands equality. Tell him he has equality now, and he'll laugh without much mirth — 67 per cent of Quebec's wage earners got less than $590 a year in 1942... only 1.8 per cent of Quebec's workers earned more than $2,950..."

And it was to Blair Fraser that Rene Levesque, whom Fraser dubbed "Separatist Moderate", could candidly admit: "If Pierre wins the next federal election — not this one (1967), the next one — that will mean it's all up with our movement."

Fraser placed a lot of faith in Trudeau, about whose election he intended to write a book. Fraser characterized Trudeau, Pelletier and Marchand in 1966 as clearly "mean of Left" who wanted to steer the liberal party in that direction. Fraser had also named Mitchell Sharp as one of the leaders of the party's Right wing. Sharp's endorsement of Trudeau was instrumental in securing Trudeau the leadership. Fraser's reaction to this apparent contradiction would have helped in assessing his journalism.

Apart from his Canadian coverage, Fraser also brought back from extensive travels sophisticated appraisals of what was happening in India, Africa, the Middle East, Eastern Europe and Southeast Asia — always from his uniquely Canadian personal viewpoint.

Fraser was the first Western reporter to visit and travel in China after the eruption of the Great Cultural Revolution in 1966 and his account of the hysterical quasi-religious confusion of the time is among his best pieces.

What comes across in all Fraser's writing is his deep concern for human values, indeed this motivating force is the major factor in his credibility as a reporter.

He managed to combine a deep moral concern (in particular his passion for Canada,) with a keen day to day observation of social problems and politics.

Both sides. Interesting way. To Blair Fraser journalism meant more than that.

David Frank

Blair Fraser Reports, Selections 1944-1968 edited by John and Graham Fraser Macmillan $8.95

tom paine...a battle of exorcism

When inundated with his own enthusiasm for a play, the best a reviewer can do is warn of the flow of the tide. Let those who venture here in search of watertight objectivity know the currents of approval which confront them. Theatre Passe Muraille's Tom Paine has swept this reviewer along into a flood of praise.

The historical Tom Paine wrote virulently anti-monarchist and anti-privilege documents such as Common Sense and The Rights of Man. He was an exiled Englishman of "low" origins who served the American Revolution as a propagandist, and did so rather more thoroughly than some staid Members of the Continental Congress desired. He was in France for the Revolution there; and after propagandizing for it as furiously as he had the American he again found himself unwanted — so much so as to be in jail and under threat of execution. He returned to New York and died, in the squalor against which he had fought all his life, in 1809.

Tom Paine was one of the original American outside agitators, stirring up the contented colonists against duly constituted authority. It has achieved the status of platitude to say that he would now be allowed into the country. (Messrs. Mitchell Palmer, L.B. Johnson, and John Mitchell can take credit for the laws, and H. L. Mencken for the platitude.) He also had a touching 18th century faith in the power of reason to overcome oppression. He was a man whose spirit must haunt the corporate mind of the makers of mimeograph machines, brooding as it does over the graves of unmade profits. Even if he had been a member of a majority — an occurrence which he deliberately made unlikely — he wouldn't have been silent.

Paul Foster's play about Paine comes from the Cafe La Mama, where it was directed by Tom O'Horgan, the New York perpetrator of Hair. Under Jim Garrard's stunning direction here, Theatre Passe Muraille's ensemble gives visual and aural dimension to the raucous degradation in and by which Tom Paine lived. The play itself is about "the raw stuff that moved the pen," about the sullen drunkard out of whose personal misery came sulphurous attacks on the conditions which created misery in his fellow men. The play is neither a set-piece "portrait of an age" nor an involuted presentation of one man's mind, but a discriminating study of the relation between history and psychology, between thoughts and hang-ups. Tom Paine, no less than the man himself, is not reducible to sociological, dialectical, or other schematized terms. Mr. Garrard's production is — God bless him! — not a tract, but a true work of art: it preserves the nuances and rough edges of Tom Paine's life, rather than filing them down in quest for the symmetry of theory.

One of the guaranteed pitfalls of "social conscience" drama is the tendency among brash writers, directors, or actors to convert men into symbols, and speech into oratory. Mr. Foster's envious discrimination in his selection of incidents prevents the first disability, and his subtle verbal virtuosity obviated the second. Mr. Garrard has colluded with Mike Reynolds (who acts Tom Paine with so much controlled energy that he might be expelled as an agitator himself) in a successful attempt to pretend that the pitfall is not there. It is a privilege to see such massive understanding of the limits and strengths of social drama as is here present between Messrs. Foster, Garrard, and Reynolds. What brashness there is in Tom Paine is not that of smug oversimplification in search of easy relevance, but of daring to work thoroughly within a difficult set of limits.

The other flaw which often cracks social drama is that with which Ionesco charged Ibsen: writing plays about problems which are soluble by better plumbing. The problem here is that of a man who is at once chronically discontented but who has huge oppression as a wellspring of part of it. Profiteers in the American Continental Congress and butchers in the French Committee of Safety exercise Paine's egalitarianism as much as do kings and bishops. Neither revolution nor personal degradation offer Paine contentment, any more than they do other oppressed souls. The play presents Paine's dilemma: what do you do when the revolution sells itself out from under you? This is not a conflict which can be ended by technology — politically — nor by drink — personally. And one of the reasons it is such a "real" problem is that it is so subtle, hence so excruciating. It poses some hard choices, but then the hard questions are the only ones worth asking. The easy ones have been answered already.

Thus neither the production, the play itself, nor the acting are infected with the germs of their own annihilation. Of the two crippling disabilities mentioned above, the first is skirted — it is a defect of technique and the mistake just isn't made — and the second is met and defeated on its own ground, the level of thought. The impression may have been left that this is a monolithically serious play in tone — the audience had it too. But the performance is rife with scenes, such as the Military-Religious-Governmental Conspiracy Waltz in Act II, which accentuate the depth of Paine's persecution precisely because they are so funny. Another such scene is one where the diplomacy attendant upon the American Revolution is staged as a sweaty wrestling match between the King of France (played with effete snobbishness by Danny Freedman) and George III (in which part Don Steinhouse reeks corpulent corruption.) The point is not that there is "comic relief" (that crutch of non-think literature professors), but that the comedy underlines the serious intent of the play. The juxtaposition of a speech by Paine on "the pomp of royalty" with the wrestling match is a gauge of the challenges Paine faces. The obstacles would not bulk so large if they were played straight.

Skillful use of fine-boned timing makes director Garrard's cast an ensemble in performance as well as fact. Their precision and energy — and their omnipresence — graphically demonstrate the fact that Paine fighting his own battle of exorcism is also fighting that of the characters who surround him. Worthy of special note is Ashleigh Moorehouse, who takes a number of roles with felicitous results. The ensemble as a whole is so excellent that they demonstrate, rather than inhibit, the unity of the play. Their parts are played as they are meant to be: not as subordinate to Paine's dissolution, but integral to it.

Miro Kinch's set is a triumph of eclecticism, as Paine's writings were. The stage is a found-art tower of industrial cast-offs: a plastic sheet, pipes, rags, a ladder, bales of hay and a dilapidated British flag. It is a striking composition of dirt, scum, and space; a cross between a slum porch and a hurricane-jostled privy. It must be hell for the actors to get around on, yet the energy of its lines resounds appropriately with that of the play.

The final scene is an inconceivably effectual presentation of a stage death. A character speaks of "swarms of do-good greedies" plucking at Paine's heart, and that is precisely what is staged. A long red filament of cloth issues from Paine's breast pocket, and each member of the cast runs to a different corner of the set and festoons the stage with it. Lines, set, actors, and staging all conspire to produce a triumph of dramatic presentation. Mr. Garrard and his cast are due loud paeans for doing the play, and for doing it justice. It is well worth the trouble of finding the theatre (11 Trinity Square, 2 blocks south of Dundas off the west side of Yonge) in order to witness what goes on there. The production continues nightly at 8:30 until 4 January, with Mondays dark. There is no aesthetic reason for missing this production; a less elevated reason for not going must be found.

AGE OF AQUARIUS

THE WOODSTOCK GENERATION FILM

An Electronic Happening

CINEMA 2000

329 Yonge Street, Just North of Dundas

Tickets on Sale Now

Recommended as Adult Entertainment

DANCE 4 BANDS

8:30 P.M.

FRIDAY

DEC. 12

NEW COLLEGE

1) ATLANTIS 10 PC.

2) STARLIGHTERS 6 PC.

3) OMAR WILLIAMS TRIO

4) BRASS WEBB 6 PC.

CHICKS - $1 HAWKS - $1.50 DRAGS - $3

PINTER

"A Slight Ache"

STRINDBERG

"The Stronger"

ADMISSION IS FREE

at the Studio - 4 Glen Morris
8:30 p.m. Tues. Dec. 9 - Sat. Dec. 13

2001: A Space Odyssey

STRAUSS

RCA Special!

$2.98 (only in Canada)

ALSO ON STEREO 8 TAPE
at.....

Song and Script

RECORDS, BOOKS, MAGAZINES, STATIONARY

98 Bloor St. West
Telephone: 923-3044

Clip & Present This Ad For A Special Discount!

The familiar Leacock: harmless old man

... a younger and very different Leacock

stephen leacock

Around the world, when literary people think of Canada, they think of Stephen Leacock. More than anyone, he captured the Canadian spirit and interpreted it to the world. He demonstrated that Canada could produce first rate literature — it was our fault if we weren't listening. From 1910 to about 1925 he was the best-selling humourist in the English language. His lectures were attended by thousands, his syndicated articles read by millions.

December 30, 1969 will be the hundredth anniversary of this remarkable man's birth. National attention has so far been confined to a few small ceremonies and a postage stamp. At U. of T. only this humble article stands as tribute to a Varsity assistant editor, an alumnus ('91) and recipient of an honorary degree.

Perhaps this is fitting. When Leacock was at the height of his powers, we were a bit afraid to admit he was one of us — at least until we were absolutely certain the rest of the world approved. Only in 1922 did his name appear in the Canadian Who's Who, along with the businessmen, soldiers, and politicians who filled its pages (he had been in the English Who's Who since 1910). By this time, he had been a bestselling humorist for twelve years, had made a triumphal tour of England, and had received five honorary degrees. Small wonder that he wrote most of his work for his lucrative markets, downplaying specifically Canadian content.

There was one exception to this early pattern of neglect. In 1912, Lord Atholstan commissioned him to write some stories of Canadian small town life for the Montreal Star. The result was Sunshine Sketches of a Little Town, "the most Canadian book ever written". The book was immensely popular in this country, but no further commissions were forthcoming; so Leacock returned to his better-paying markets. Canadians wanted more Mariposa stories, but they did not want their faults and foibles analysed, which Leacock had come dangerously close to doing.

We accepted the Sketches, but never fully their author. Orillians resented being portrayed in Mariposa, and never fully forgave their illustrious citizen. His lapses from Canadian standards of respectability were punished in a unique way. When they didn't think him crazy, many Canadians thought him disgraceful. When Leacock arrived in Toronto to deliver an anti-prohibition speech in a condition which betrayed his opinions on the subject, the sales of Leacock books in Toronto dropped nearly to nil for several years. Indeed, one citizens' committee demanded that Leacock be removed from McGill for denouncing prohibition, at a time when the forces of morality had cowed less courageous men into silence.

We could never quite get over our puritan prejudice against humour and humourists; and as a young nation wanting to be taken seriously we were unnerved because our most famous literary figure provoked laughter.

After his most creative years had passed, the tables turned. Leacock was, after all a Famous Man, and sooner or later Canadians worship their Famous Men. But we did it on our terms. We made up anthologies of his works which stressed his nonsense, and we regarded him as a writer of humorous nothings. We took from his writings what we wanted, and left the satire, irony, and social comment alone. Every Canadian schoolboy knows the name "Mariposa" as a ship which almost sank, not as the name of a town wherein the most fundamental characteristics of Canadian small town life were satirized.

To reassure us that the figure which emerged from this selective reading was the real Leacock, we created the Leacock Character. We stressed his kindness, his human sympathy, his infectious chuckle, his twinkling eyes. Everybody's favourite uncle — and, oh yes, an economist, too, wasn't he?

Leacock co-operated. He played the stage role to perfection. No more satire flowed from his pen, only more and more light articles to satisfy the greedy desire of the syndicates for nonsense which offended no one. He wrote far too much — when he ran out of new material, he rewrote old stories. When he ran out of humour altogether he wrote anthologies, third-rate biographies of Dickens and Twain, and paid articles for industries and financial houses. Fleeing from the imagined poverty of his youth, he achieved wealth and security as our court jester. In his books on humour, he said that humour should never wound, should always be kindly. If he had followed his own advice, his best humour would never have been written.

Late in his life, when his best years had passed, and when he was safely locked into his image, we recognized him as a great scholar and asked his advice on history, politics, and economics. Eager to be heard, and with a passionate concern for his country, Leacock complied. The result was a series of books best forgotten except by specialists.

When he died, we honoured him as only Canadians can honour their Famous Men. Orillia styled itself the "Sunshine Town" and wore the name Mariposa with pride. The Chamber of Commerce purchased Leacock's summer home and an acre of land from the developer who had acquired it (and who still owns the remainder of the property), and created the Stephen Leacock Memorial Home.

When our critics found out that much bad work accompanied Leacock's gems, his reputation went into decline. We became obsessed with evaluating and grading him, fitting him into world literature. Just how good was he? For years the judgement "he was not one of the Great Ones, but he may sit at the Table" was accepted as the conventional wisdom.

Leacock's biography was written by an American who understood neither the background nor significance of Leacock's writings about Canada. His thesis for the University of Pennsylvania, on which the book was based, was originally titled "Stephen Leacock — American Humorist"; an act of piracy comparable to the recent American offer to share our energy resources with us.

Recently Canadians have come to recognize that Leacock's style and viewpoint could only have originated in Canada, and that an important part of his message is for Canadians alone. Ironically, it was an Englishman, J. B. Priestley, who pointed this out to us, but recently scholars like Watters, Watt, Bissell, and Cameron have stressed this theme.

The young have discovered that Leacock's early humour has much to say to them. Particularly the passages on Plutonia University in Arcadian Adventures With the Idle Rich reach across the years to hit us where we live.

We've repatriated and rejuvenated Leacock, but we still need to recognize his enormous versatility. There was another Leacock behind the mask — an academic, polemicist, orator, patriot, imperialist, social critic, gut-fighter — who became increasingly, but never fully, overshadowed by Leacock the funny man. If Leacock had never written a line of humour, he would have lived in Canadian intellectual history (whenever it is written) as a rather interesting figure.

This statement is of course absurd, for Leacock's political and academic writings achieved their power from his humorous insight, and his best humour shows the presence of a keen student of politics. In 1899, Leacock gave up his position as modern languages master at Upper Canada College, to study Political Economy at the University of Chicago (Ph.D. 1903). He joined the staff of McGill University and quickly established himself as an important academic. In 1906 he published Elements of Political Science which became the basic text in 35 American universities and in schools in India, China, Egypt, and Britain. Before World War I he published several good books on Canadian history.

A strong nationalist, Leacock saw Canada's destiny as a great and powerful nation in a more closely knit empire. "I am an imperialist", he wrote "because I will not be a colonial". He advocated immigration (white only) to settle the west, greater manufacturing, better government, and direct contributions to the British navy. In 1908 he was named by the Rhodes Trust to make a lecture tour of the Empire, and while he was away, he was appointed head of the Department of Economics and Political Science, a position he held till his forced retirement in 1936. It was not until he was firmly established in this career that he decided to gather pieces of humour he had written fifteen years before and publish them as Literary Lapses (1910).

Space prevents me from making a full discussion of Leacock's academic work. His bibliography features an astounding number of works on subjects like education, history, politics, sociology, and economics. Of course, he had his crotchets — he was a rabid anti-socialist with little real understanding of socialism, and a racialist reflecting the Social Darwinism of his generation; he opposed votes for women, and his conservatism sometimes became reaction. But other men have been forgiven greater sins, and Leacock's noble vision of Canada should be recognized by Canadians.

If you are typical, you have read only a few Leacock pieces in high school readers or anthologies. Rectify this immediately. A suggested reading program is as follows. Start with Literary Lapses (1910) Nonsense Novels (1911), Sunshine Sketches (1912), and Arcadian Adventures (1914). Read the latter two together if possible. Then be prepared for a few disappointments in his less ambitious early works: Beyond the Beyond (1913), Moonbeams From the Larger Lunacy (1915), Further Foolishness (1916), Frenzied Fiction (1919). Then, three more "musts": Essays and Literary Studies (1916), The Unsolved Riddle of Social Justice (1920) and My Discovery of England (1922). Then if you are interested in his political stuff, try the files of the University Magazine, and the London National Review. (see especially "Greater Canada" 1907). Then read Laugh With Leacock, to get the best of his humour of the twenties, and My Remarkable Uncle (1942) for a good later Leacock. By all means look at My Discovery of the West (1937), but don't be thrown by the fact that topical references are a bit dated. This will by no means exhaust the list; if you want to go further, he wrote more than sixty books!

In spite of the passage of time, the generation gap and all that nonsense, you will be surprised to find that our great humorist still has a great deal to say to his youthful countrymen. He has pleased many, and will please long, in spite of all our efforts to make him into a harmless buffoon.

al bowker

...we don't really know him

'the working class and the employing class have nothing in common'

Wesley Everest, lynched by members of the American Legion Armistice Day 1919.

On Armistice Day, November 11, 1919, members of the American Legion crashed through the doors of a hall in Centralia, Washington. A man in an army uniform inside told a friend, "I fought for democracy in France and I'm going to fight for it here. The first man that comes in this hall, why, he's going to get it."

He was a crack shot and emptied the magazine of his rifle into the oncoming crowd, dropped it and ran for the woods. The mob followed close behind. The man ran for the river but when he was up to his waist in the water, he stopped realizing that the current was too strong for him to continue. He yelled to the crowd that he would submit to police arrest but they came in after him. He shot from the hip four times, then his gun jammed. But he slowly and carefully pulled the trigger and shot the leading man dead.

Then he threw the gun into the river and fought the mob with fists. When finally subdued, he snarled, "You haven't got the guts to hang a man in the daytime." He was right. They didn't have the guts. So they dragged him back to town behind a car and hung him from a telegraph pole (not by the neck) before throwing him in jail.

But somehow they got up the guts that night. The city lights were turned off and the mob smashed down the jailhouse door. "Tell the boys I died for my class," the man said to his cellmates as he was dragged outside. He was flung to the floor of a car, castrated, then driven down to a bridge, where he was hanged and then riddled with bullets. His body was buried in a nameless grave.

Sounds like a movie western.

The man was Wesley Everest and he was a member of the Industrial Workers of the World. He was a non-descript lumberjack and he had been a soldier in World War I. What happened to him is true and it was a western — about 50 years too late.

That kind of thing probably wouldn't happen today. From 1906 to 1919, the Wobblies, or the One Big Union, as they were called from time to time, had in their grasp a type of economic power that was slow coming and fast fading. Just as rashly as they could go into a town and organize the working people there and demand better pay and conditions, so could they be brutally smashed.

Today, a mature monopoly capitalist society doesn't need to rely on maddened crowds, to fight the power of worker organization. They have the AFL-CIO to do it. They have court injunctions and local policemen. If Wesley Everest were killed in the liberal year of 1969, there would be a full investigation. All those found responsible would be duly punished by the law. The nation would be aghast and students would march on the American Embassies around the world.

But in 1919, no attempt was made to bring Everest's killers to justice.

He passes into history as one of the many martyrs who died trying to organize the unorganized into one big union with the dream of taking over the means of production. Or as the preamble to their constitution says, "By organizing industrially, we are forming the structure of the new society within the shell of the old."

Around 1967, some young radicals "discovered" the Wobblies in an office at 2422 North Halsted St. on Chicago's near north side. Actually they had been there for years, quietly meeting, putting out their paper, The Industrial Worker, growing old and remembering the days when the IWW had been "An Industrial Army."

To those now over 40, the Wobblies are remembered mainly for the songs of Joe Hill, another martyr to the cause and perhaps the most famous Wobbly. All Union members know some of his songs, "Pie In the Sky", "The Rebel Girl", "Scissor Bill". (cf. Phil Ochs "And I go to the Pete Seeger concert; He sure gets me singing those songs") The Wobblies were romanticized in novels like James Jones' From Here to Eternity where an old-timer tells a young soldier:

"You don't remember the Wobblies. You were too young. Or else not even born yet. There has never been anything like them before or since. They called themselves materialist-economists but what they really were is a religion. They were work-stiffs and hindlebbians like you and me, but they were welded together by a vision we don't possess."

The years have shrouded the IWW legend with a mist of protective unreality. Until very recently the Wobbles were either given a small chapter in books on Labour History ("and so today union rep takes his place proudly among the distinguished members of the community" (sic)) or completely forgotten.

In 1968, at their Chicago Convention, the IWW decided to allow students to join. They figured that students were far from the rich playboys of the 1920's and that in fact they were "training without pay for their life's work. This hard study is an important part of the work of the world, and warrants a place for these students in the One Big Union we aim to build for the entire class of hired hands."

So there's been an upswing in interest in the IWW in recent years, starting with the use of original Wobbly direct action tactics in the Freedom Marches in Mississippi, going through the campus uprisings and now that students can join I.U. 620, there have been sprung up chapters in cities all across the United States and Canada. It surprised a lot of people at the Peterborough Examiner strike last winter to see picketers from Waterloo, Ontario carrying signs reading, "Industrial Workers of the World, Educational Workers, Industrial Union 620, Waterloo, Ontario."

Membership in these student chapters however, is highly seasonal. When a chapter is first organized many people obtain cards "as a laugh" or to be a "house Wobbly", as they are called by the rank and file (which now numbers around 1000).

The Wobblies have been used fruitfully for all the romantic literature that can be squeezed out of them and their songs have been sung in places Joe Hill would never have dreamed of entering. The real value of the Wobblies appears when one studies their history in great detail as Melvin Dubofsky has done in his new book, We Shall Be All.

Students have joined the Wobblies for two reasons: an affirmation of their generational links to a band of radicals who, in a more openly ruthless age, dared introduce a peculiarly American brand of Marxism to North America and an attempt to find out just how the modern capitalist state has grown and how the labour movement, the only source of real power for radical change, has fought for and lost that power. Dubofsky's book, a thorough and incisive documentary is long overdue.

Other books have been published about the Wobblies including an excellent short book by Patrick Renshaw in 1967, a definitive history by Chicago Wobbly Fred Thompson and Foner's Fourth Volume of The History of the American Labour Movement, but Dubofsky's book has one thing that these don't. It's easily readable and is dramatic without overly mystifying or distorting the real facts.

Especially masterful is the way he tells the history of the mining union battles in the West and his biographies of famous Wobblies. It's historic journalism at its best, the kind of history that we seldom see.

Because the IWW now is for all intents and purposes dead, it is very easy for people to conjure up post mortems upon it. They do so with the same romantic detachment that novelists and playwrights use when viewing the Wobblies far in the past.

Dubofsky is not innocent, even though his book is excellent. He ends the book by striking a note of truth, that the ultimate tragedy of the IWW "has been that the brighter they have helped make life for the masses, the dimmer has grown the prospect for revolution in the advanced societies."

But Dubofsky goes on to quote from A. S. Embree: "The end in view is well worth fighting for, but in the struggle itself lies the happiness of the fighter." One can just imagine all the happy Wobblies being shot, lynched, beaten, jailed and otherwise discouraged. But the Wobblies weren't joyful revolutionaries. The book itself shows that political infighting and disillusionment more often than not threatened to destroy the Wobblies just as all other radical groups. It's about time we took a hard look at why they failed, without romanticism but with insight into our real history.

Larry Haiven

We Shall Be All
A History of the IWW
by Melvin Dubofsky
Quadrangle Books $15.00 (gasp)

Joe Hill's Funeral in Chicago

"Three dollars just to watch television!!"

COMMERCIAL

two wrangling litesome broads, one announcer:

Broad A: Cinema 2000 is a movie thing!

Broad B: No, Cinema 2000 is a television thing!!

Announcer (cutting in): Now girls, let's not fight. Cinema 2000 is two, two, two things in one. It looks like a movie theatre and costs like a movie theatre, but it's a closed circuit television theatre. . .

Cinema 2000 is Toronto's newest thing. It's a video theatre that plans to show footage that doesn't normally find its way into television or the movies.

In the Yonge Street block just north of Dundas, there are three small theatres; one at street level and two below; each able to seat over a hundred people. In each long, narrow theatre are diagonal rows of planetarium type of chairs in front of five 25" colour video monitors. There are about four rows of chairs to a monitor.

All VTR and production equipment is located in a booth, only a thickness of slightly tinted glass off Yonge Street. Pity the poor operator; no nose-picking, ass-scratching or sleeping lest he should incur the censure (or applause) of the non-paying Yonge Street audience, helping him to watch his monitors. Placing all technical equipment in the front window is certainly a far cry from the customary exile projectionists usually face; and it adds but one more interesting attraction to the Yonge Street circuit.

Great news for rich insomniacs! Cinema 2000 is open twenty-four hours a day adding one more name to that finite set of never-close Toronto landmarks: Dirty Louis' Coffee Shop, Reid's Books, Metro Burger, Frank's Hamburgers, Ford's Drugs, Starkman Chemists et al. And if you're impulsive and impatient besides, Cinema 2000 staggers the showtimes among the three theatres so that a complete program begins every hour on the hour.

One drawback of Cinema 2000 is the admission price. Three dollars is too much; it's $1 to $1.50 too much in general and for the present feature it's $4.00 too much. The three dollar price is usually reserved for skin-shop magazines and is a bit exorbitant for Dundas-Yonge, a new theatre still with Kinks and the minority that video theatre appeals to.

I imagine that all these innovations in scheduling, medium, presentation and price are supposed to account for the '2000' look. Watching the first ten minutes of the feature makes short work of that.

The Aquarian Age — Part I is billed as "a video documentary; a multiple channel information exchange and energy transmission." Oh wow! It panned out to be a mish-mash; Woodstock, A Visit with the Royal Family, Abbie Hoffman, Washington Peace Demo, Lennon and Ono — a real true mish-mash of the past few months of Americana, all punctuated by light-showish interludes to ragas and rock.

The film is just plain bad quality; glaring, bothersome edits, poor, poor sound track and boringly long out-of-focus and badly framed footage, mostly in black and white. It does little to show off the theatres colour monitors and VTR equipment, boasted to be "the finest presently available."

The Woodstock coverage is exceptionally poor. The young film-makers Rudi Stern and John Reilly seemed to have thought it sufficient to provide copious feet of any and all performers at Woodstock, regardless of the quality of the film. For the greater part of the Ritchie Havens segment one is able to distinguish his chin, the neck of his guitar, the stool upon which he is sitting and the wires holding the canopy over his head. Other performers fare as worse if not worse. There was absolutely none of the powerful momentum and rapport of the Monterey Pop film.

The cameraman must have been a nude freak. Certainly everybody at Woodstock didn't go around au naturel. The obsession with buttocks, and genitals makes the whole festival to be nothing more than a fetishists' weekend at a nudist camp and the bad photography in focusing and framing makes these segments look like home nudist movies. — If it's skin you're after, the shop next door to the theatre has "adult art movies" for a quarter.

The entire video tape suffered from a lack of good judgement, from choice of cameraman to editing. It looks like the one hour and forty minute length was too much for Stern and Reilly to cope with and all they had at hand was garbage to fill with.

This is not to say that there were not some redeeming moments. The interview with Abbie Hoffman regarding his conspiracy trial in Chicago is most enjoyable. Creating an animate rapport he says that the conspiracy needs money; "$500,000 to bribe the judge alone!" Even the limited talents of Stern and Reilly could not have missed the charisma and vitality of Hoffman.

The light show punctuations are only oases of rest and colour before the next bleary delve into black and white. As a light show, they are neither engrossing nor totally environmental. Hell, you're watching a 25" video screen from a distance of four to twenty feet. But if you're in the right position you can see all five monitors at once, offering a quint-image effect that is but briefly captivating.

It's too bad that Cinema 2000 started off with a lemon. One of the very few video theatres in North America and the only one equipped for colour, it has a tremendous potential that the present feature obscures.

Multiple imagery has been dabbled in by Christopher Chapman and Andy Warhol in very different ways and the entire technique has exciting implications. Here's hoping that Cinema 2000 uses its five screens in a more creative manner than it is presently.

Certainly young talent should be encouraged. But it seems that the young men that made The Aquarian Age had only the talent of selling Cinema 2000 a bill of goods.

daniel mack

you're all very nice people, really, yeah and 1 Oct. 13, night: ... leaving class with Kirk and Whatsisname. Girl, wide brown lovely deep eyes, is walking up St. George with us, or is she with Whatsisname? At Bloor invite all up for a beer. "Oh, no, I wouldn't want to intrude", she says obviously wanting to intrude.

Young Prof. Fired for Giving Liquor to Minors in Midnight Raid on Squalid Rochdale Apartment

Beer. Talk. Girl silent. Kirk and Whn preparing to leave. Something tells me girl not leaving. (Probably that she hasn't moved. Brilliant, Bossin, mind like a steel trap.). Kirk exits with lascivious wink.

Teaching Assistant Seduced by Hesitant 18 Year Old St. Mikes Virgin. Fired Anyway. No Sit-in Planned.

Awkward silence, then "... well, I just sort of want to reach someone, I mean nobody really talks to one another here ... and I just can't seem to care about the courses, like it just doesn't matter to me, I don't know maybe I'm dumb, and it feels, well, sort of lonely. I don't know maybe its me, and ..."

I feel oddly gratified; sure, hurt too, for her, and for me — what the hell can I say, "Yup, that's the way it goes?" or "How about a hobby?" or "Me too?", but oddly gratified, because what we radicals have been saying isn't academic, it's real people and this place is still doing it to them. Annually.

Oct. 15, aft.: A lovely vision, rain blue eyes, comes into the experimental course room. "I'd really like to transfer into your course, I really would ... " I twirl my moustache, arch my left eyebrow and think benevolent thoughts.

(If I put a sign on the door saying Couple Making Love, will it keep people out or attract them? will the principal tear it down?)

"That's no problem" I've already registered four engineers an astrologer and his alsatian.

"... like, you see I figure its the last chance I've got to get anything out of the year."

Oct. 16, evening. A lousy class. No-one really being very honest, well maybe a little honest. But people are saying how they look forward to it, "the one time at this place anything real happens" (Was I asleep? What happened to my real-ometer?) If this class stands out, how desperate must the situation be?

2 That's the mood The thoughts that follow are ways I'm trying to get at why, how this is happening. A lot of it stems from a system suggested by R. D Laing in Politics of the Family

3 "A university cannot be first rate unless intellect, passion for ideas, long hours of work and devotion to one's course are socially acceptable to the student body ... The impact of the university rouses all the powers of the mind to the fullest activity and stirs up as much mental conflict as possible." Northrop Frye.

Oh, well.
The impact I remember is depression; lectures through which one is barely awake, or to which one doesn't go at all; areas of work forgotten immediately after the exam; skimmed novels; not reading the stage directions in a play; courses chosen not because the material was new, but because I could get an A; borrowed arguments, footthor or not; questions asked that say "recognize how clever I am", questions not asked for fear of losing term marks or appearing too far out of place (a little out of place is necessary for an A); using words and phrases cautiously, not to elucidate what we know, but to cover up what we don't; parlaying one line from a lecture into an impressive reference to a book we haven't read; half-hoping someone will hotch a question so we can shine.

Don McCulloch, at the U of T Advisory Bureau, sees it as the result of unilateral relationships, with the prof-parent-authority-master up and the student-child-inferior-apprentice down:

The successful end product of a unilateral relationship is easy to recognize because he is most of us. His conceptions of himself do not include the possibility of a creative act or thought — that is the possibility of the genius. Knowing means knowing about things not self, and one acquires it by patient passive attention to the words and works of experts who know. The active process involves merely comprehending these words and works and committing them to memory. He views his own imaginative inner life with alarm and seeks to suppress it or joke about it. If it becomes too urgent, he commits the ultimate folly and asks a psychiatrist expert to explain himself to himself. Since he has long since abandoned if he ever knew, dialogue with himself, he does not understand it as it applies to a two person relationship. When he feels disquiet about the oppressive nature of unilateral relationships, he expresses it by pranks and/or passive resistance ... He becomes persuaded of his own worthlessness and of the worthlessness of his ideas and acts. He becomes apathetic in relation to almost everything except sex, alcohol, drugs and passive entertainments — these being some of the few remaining areas in which he perceives himself as retaining some measure of personal control and mastery.

4 In the secret CBC announcers' manual on how to interview so as to discredit, it says "Question 14: ask student radicals how many students actually agree with them." In the student rads' pamphlet on how to deal with snarky CBC interviewers it says, "14a: say 'not very fucking many' so they can't use it on the air; h: quote from Dr. Zhivago, where Lara says 'But Pasha, the workers don't want a revolution', and Pasha says 'Yes they do, they just don't know it yet.' or, c: lie."

Laing suggests there are two levels of reality, the public events (things that we do and talk about) and experience (the way we feel, how the things we do are actually felt).

Jack and Jill get married. There and since you're all such nice people...

by bob bossin are a hundred wedding guests. The bridesmaids wear yellow. There is a rooster made of chopped liver. But Jack doesn't feel married to Jill until several months later. Jill never feels married to Jack. This is not a happy feeling. One day she says (perhaps in front of the children) she and Jack are not married, Jack is not her husband. Therapy is recommended.

Or after the first months of marriage, her closest friends confide, they too felt that way, but wait until she has children. She has a child, and her feelings don't change. She begins to feel guilty and disavows or represses the feelings, the experience.

Substitute the university for marriage, registration for the wedding, orientation for the trappings, going to a counsellor or the Advisory Bureau for therapy, "when you get to graduate school" for "when you have children".

Actually, the university is, unintentionally, even more repressive. With marriage there has always been a sub-literature debunking the ideal myth, from the classics to situation comedies. The university myth of excellence has been much more sacred. You mean maybe it was always like this? No, it couldn't have been; it must be me, unchallenged...

I remember walking up to Hart House from the library one night in my freshman year and looking at the tower and thinking I shouldn't be there, Martin Luther should, Thomas Aquinas should, not me. I was an A student, but that was sham, I knew that, and it was just a matter of time until I was found out... But, I mean, what's wrong? I don't see any problem... I don't know, maybe it's just me.

Not only can putting forward this discontent seem an admission of failure, but it is often difficult to even find a form for it.

While Laing can categorize Jill's disease, it is more likely that she cannot, and just feels "a big hurt" or (with Simon and Garfunkle) "empty and aching and I don't know why". What can she say? How can she put it that's "good enough," especially in a University community with its emphasis on verbal skills and rhetorical competition.

5

The family as a shared fantasy image is usually a container of some kind in which all members of the family feel themselves to be, and for which image all members of the family may feel each should sacrifice themselves. Since the fantasy exists only in so far as it is "in" everyone who shares "in" it, anyone who gives it up shatters the "family" in everyone else. Laing

Again flip this to the school or university. If the students shouted 'I'm not really learning', if the highschool kids said 'Hey! The emperor has no clothes'... but this cannot happen, because it would destroy the institution. — or as one hears it from many faculty members, "The uprisings at Columbia or Berkley may have gained some concessions, but in the process they ruined a great university".

Therefore:

... there is concerted family resistance to what is going on and there are complicated stratagems to keep everybody in the dark, and in the dark that they are in the dark.

It is no longer the "rules" that seem so dangerous — how we dress, what we study, when we sleep, who with, etc. — but the rules that make it so difficult to question the normal rules, the meta-rules that shape our ways of thinking, perceiving, acting, organizing, the very tools we might have used to free ourselves of the rules.

6

If I want you to do something I may, if I have the power, order you to "do it!", or ask you, or try and convince you to do it, but by far the most effective way is to convince you, as subtly as possible, that you are the sort of person who does it, that you wanted to all along, because, well, that's the sort of person you are. Then there has been no rule made, for there has been no need. We don't have to tell Johnny not to think filthy thoughts, for Johnny is a good boy, and good boys don't think filthy thoughts.

Rule A: Don't. Rule A1: Rule A does not exist. Rule A2: Do not discuss the existence or non-existence of Rules A, A1, and A2. This type of ruling applies only to some rules. One can talk about certain rules (when one can cross the street). But there are certain rules that one cannot talk about without breaking the rule that one should not talk about them.

If you obey these rules you will not know they exist... There is no rule against talking about putting one's finger into the custard pie, though there is a rule against putting one's finger into the pie.

But, I may say, I have never put my finger in a number of... (unmentionable) places. What places? I can't mention them. Why not? I can't say.

Once this matrix is in place, it is held there by internal and external pressures. Internally there is guilt, repression, rationalization, etc. Externally, the pressure to be 'normal', i.e. accept the normal, prevalent myths, there is the power of those in authority, and if pushed far enough, ultimately, the police. This is rarely necessary. The work-force tool is to simply invalidate the horse breaker's experience: 'you're wet behind the ears', 'wait until you've been in the real world', 'you've been duped by the commies', 'anyway, you guys are outside agitators'.

At Victoria College this past month, the internal mechanisms failed as the women petitioned to have their residence visiting hours changed. So the external mechanism was used as the board simply invalidated the girls' experience. This works so long as the women accept that the board has power, and that this power should not be actively questioned. In the debate the residents could not question who sets the agenda, or the effective social agenda; they could not say, "I want the hours changed so I can make love in my room." One does not say that. One does not want that. They could not let out the frustrated emotions that were a real part of the experience. One does not do that in the university. And to do so would be proof that one is childish and needs the rules.

Accepted that change comes slow. That's not a rule, that's the way it is.

7

John Holt in How Children Learn notices that before about five years old, children do things out front, including making mistakes. This does not seem to hang them up overly much. After six, this stops. We grow increasingly defensive. Competition in the schools, mainly.

If all the above is unrealistically intellectual, let me try this.

I went to Vancouver for a conference at the end of second year. I was leader of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band, had run for SAC because I was upwardly mobile and it seemed the next step. I won a scholarship, had a girlfriend and no pimples. Concurrently, the hippy thing was just reaching its early flowery zenith. I was bored and fascinated.

The conference had been uneventful, except for meeting a real hippy named John. One night we were watching Nobody Waved Goodbye, and I began to think screw SAC and the conference. I would like to go to 4th Street, (Vancouver's Haight-Ashbury) for a few days. I'll ask John at the end of the reel I didn't. At the end of the next reel. Well... I... didn't quite get around to it. At the end of the film, then. At the end of the film he smiled and left. I sat there. Then I started to run, not after him or away, just ran, like a kid held at distance by a bigger kid, but punching madly regardless. Looking at it in retrospect, I had discovered, in experience, at a pre-conceptual level, some meta-rules.

8

Once we accept that we are the people we are told we are, we can be filled up like sugar bowls: accepted planned obsolescence, starvation, Trudeau's $2000 fur coat, Song My, cutbacks in public housing and hospitals but not in luxury apartments or different brands of soap, no control over our place of work or learning...

But we must also accept the old tools, particularly tools of learning and thinking. Certainly we question them but only certain questions. Some things are obvious: Learning is passive attention to the words and works of others (and if the NLC tries to introduce conflict, we do not learn from it, we throw them out); I will not work unless I am competing - I would like to cooperate but I must be better, show my most brilliant mask, theory is separate from practice, the classroom is separate from the experience of the people in it, the university from the 'Real World', learning is learning about things not self, feelings are unwanted intruders from a lower world, reality comes in separate compartmentalized problems according to discipline, as on the sixth day He divided the humanities from the social sciences, morality is completely relative the NLC's biases are just as bad as Thorson's; anyway nothing is real, it is all language - "democracy is an arbitrary relative concept which can be applied both to totalitarianism and anarchy" as a recent letter-to-the-editor put it; and we don't have an ideology

But then I don't need to tell you that. It's obvious to any intelligent person, and you are obviously an intelligent person.

And anyway it can't be changed except very slowly. That's not a rule. It's just the way it is.

SUNDAY EVENING CONCERT
WITH FESTIVAL SINGERS OF CANADA
GREAT HALL, HART HOUSE
DECEMBER 11, 9:00 P.M.

Tickets - Hall Porter
Sponsored by Music Committee of Hart House.

x'mas dance

at the
INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTRE

Wednesday, Dec. 24th from 8 p.m.

Music by the Merlyville Hubcaps

Buffet and Shows

$2.00 per person at door

Advance tickets available at I.S.C.

Presented by MALAYSIAN SINGAPORE STUDENTS' ASSN.

IMMIGRATION PROBLEMS?

Perhaps you should talk to us.

BJARNASON, COSTELLO & ASSOCIATES

Suite 1208,
Toronto Professional Bldg.
123 Edward St. at University Ave.

364-0973

R
E
N
T
A L
S

TYPEWRITERS COPIING MACHINES
T.V.'S
STEREO TAPE
RECORDERS STEREO RECORD PLAYERS

698-2589

DANFORTH TYPEWRITER

2940 DANFORTH AVE

FREE DELIVERY

Review Contest No. 4

Find five examples of dramatic irony in Bob Bossin's article pp R8 & 9

Send Answers to 91 St. George St

ane olde play

The anonymous mid-sixteenth century comedy, Gammer Gorton's Needle consists of a kernel of satire against gullibility sweetened — to speak loosely — with a thick icing of anal humour and phallic symbolism. The search for a lost needle is impeded by the mischievous Dicon who manages to drag a cat, Doctor Rat and Dame Chat into the action. The play perhaps works too well in that it can win laughs without requiring more than competence from the actors.

This is not quite fair to the company of students under the direction of Martin Fric who are presenting Gammer this week (including tonight at 8.30) in Brennan Hall at St. Mike's.

The company is to be commended for tackling a play they could bring off with success. On the other hand a city so theatrically impoverished as Toronto can ill afford the luxury of such a large number of pre-Shakespearean plays as are supplied by the Pocoli Ludique Societas and by independent companies such as this group. I suppose we might just as well look at bad old plays as bad new ones, but surely it would take a great cynic to deny that the last three centuries abound with works of theatre far worthier of production than Gammer Gorton's Needle.

—mel bradshaw

quite a dill

You agree to cover a campus review with reluctance: ten to one it will be abysmally dull and you know you can't say that because the cast aren't supposed to be actors, they are pharmacists.

But Daffydil '70, the meds show is one exception. It's good. Of course it's no Beyond the Fringe, Second City or (except for one line) Bodazzled, but it's pleasant. It's fun.

The staging is amazingly smooth for a school show, ditto the lights and the set. Some of the dancers, notably Steve Levinson, can dance, and the choreography (by Levinson) does not just fill time between skits. One long life-dream-LSD dance fantasy is disturbing and effective. And the singers can sing and the actors are straight forward and good natured.

The writing is of course the central thing and Paul Caldwell, Geoff Hodgetts, Chuck King and Russ Schachar have amassed a number of very funny bits and bits of bits. There is still the usual overdose of puns (although none as awful as the "Yum, yum, kippers!" variety I remember from my Skule Nite days), medical terms all of which sound dirtier than the good old anglo-saxon (epitostomy, indeed: why don't they just say fuck when they mean fuck) and skits that have everything but an ending. But there are also some real gems: a guest lecture on aphrodisiacs, the Russians' discovery of a new enzyme that screws around with the mitochondria and ultimately achieves a socialist water balance, and Russ Scheisskopf's anti-flagellent chip-dip.

While it's here, you might spend a light, enjoyable, but filthy evening tonight or tomorrow night at Hart House.

James Ford

Hoechst is Engineering

And plenty of it. Hoechst has over a full century of research and achievement to draw upon—products and ideas that have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents. But big as we are in this area we're more than just engineering. We're medicine too, and chemistry and plastics and dyestuffs. And marketing. And ideas. Ideas most of all. Ideas about the future, about people's needs and wants. About how to meet those needs and wants. Good ideas, young ideas. Your ideas maybe. If you'd like to know more about Canadian Hoechst, write our Head Office.

CANADIAN HOECHST LIMITED

3400 JEAN TALON STREET WEST MONTREAL • ASSOCIATES OF FARBWERKE HOECHST AG WEST GERMANY

A CENTURY OF SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENT THROUGH RESEARCH

at least it's free

Strindberg's The Stronger and Pinter's A Slight Ache are probably better heard or read than seen. The Drama Centre's justification for putting them on stage this week in the Glenmorris Street Church must be, I suppose, that once they were provocative and today they still challenge the student actor.

Both plays are setpieces for verbal virtuosity, a quality offset by the Church's visually clumsy mountings of them. For A Slight Ache, which was originally a radio play, the small stage has been chopped up into levels as a literal representation of four areas in a house. Most of these levels are at an inconvenient angle of vision and none allow the actors more than three paces in which to operate.

As Edward, a man threatened and ultimately displaced by a wordless and omnipresent lump of a stranger, John Ashington compensates for his crowded circumstances with a sense of conversational nuances worthy of Pinter and with a knack for the well-timed, understated gesture. His finest moments are in the first scene, when he and his wife (played with blissfully diminishing theatricality by Leigha Lee) trap a wasp in the breakfast marmalade jar. But the tensions forecast in the opening — I could almost hear a marginal notation of "significant" or "ironic" in the delivery of some lines — never appear long enough to establish themselves, much less interplay, and the production disintegrated along with the central character. The show is, however, certainly worth the going just for author Pinter's, actor Ashington's, and director Nigel Spencer's subtle development of the blah into humor and fear in that opening scene.

The Stronger, a choice specimen of Strindbergian misogyny, pits Supermoth-er Mrs. X against silent, seductive Miss Y for the dubious prize of Mr. X's love. Since the Pinter play's set crams the stage throughout this struggle, the director should have surrendered to circumstances and the script's instructions by maintaining a static stage picture in which the actresses react to each other across a table. The blocking assigned to Mrs. X — much pacing in circles and rolling of eyes at the audience — is so irritating as to focus attention on Miss Y's (Norma Levine) simultaneously impassive and expressive face. And in tracing Mrs. X's monologue from timidity to triumph, Judith Hilderman generally neglects to establish transitions from mood to mood, though she comes on strong once she's jumped to where she's supposed to go.

Neither production consistently manages to pass monologue off as good theatre, but each has some memorable moments. And besides, they're free.

—marion o'connor

gobbling gourmet

HOW TO PREPARE CINEMATIC POTLUCK FROM LEFTOVERS.

Today's dish: The Good Guys and the Bad Guys.

Start with a sparse base of Western comedy left over from Support Your Local Sheriff and Cat Ballou. Mix in vintage Kiehl-land horseless carriages and turn-of-the-century local colour from The Wild Bunch and Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid.

Add liberal amounts of big-name star: Robert Mitchum will do. Portray him as a pensioned sheriff who, as a forswell gesture to his town, teams up with a former arch-enemy in order to catch a gang of train robbers. Evoke public sympathy by having hero feel the weight of his years a la tired-old-cowpoke John Wayne.

To spice up tasteless sequences, stir in a tear-jerking soundtrack by warbling has-been non-singer Glenn Yarbrough.

Be sure to thoroughly confuse the audience. Advertise in newspaper that stars of movie track their stand at the West's bloodiest frontier despite the fact that this is supposed to be light entertainment.

And, of course, no comedy is complete without The Big Chase Scene at the end. Milk chase for all it's worth and climax with The Big Train Wreck Scene.

The Good Guys and The Bad Guys may be served in large portions as one way to induce vomiting for medical purposes. May also be teamed as the headlining feature in a double bill with Son of Teenage Beach Blanket Monster Goes Hawaiian.

henry mielkiewicz

no mind games for kinks

The Kinks from England did two shows last Saturday night at the Hawk's Nest. The songs ranged from old rock standards ("Whole Lot of Shakin'") to the Kinks' own material ("Tired Of Waitin'"). Their loud and hard approach to rock came across impressively.

It seems that the Kinks (along with the Who, but not like, say, the Animals) have matured with time. They've been around since the very beginning of the current wave of rock, but their value has often been obscured by more obvious and self-consciously significant music. For a long time peoples' minds have been occupied with the metaphysical bravado of the Beatles or just plain mush like Simon and Garfunkle. Only the recent return to roots has brought hard rock purists like the Kinks back into focus.

In concert the Kinks came off not old and dated, but very professional. They seemed in complete command of their music. Over the years the guitar work has improved (got more psychedelic), but the foundation in solid rock is as firm as ever. The newest material fit in easily with the old.

Groups like the Kinks have a natural sense of continuity. They remind people not to lose themselves and their music in mind-games. Let's hope they're around for a long time.

r. d schwartz

The Last Post (muckraking)

At last, a new magazine has appeared on the Canadian newsstands that is neither a political party's house organ nor an insult to our intelligence.

The magazine is called Last Post and it's available now at the U of T Bookstore, the SCM Bookroom at Rochdale and the Bookcellar. At 50 cents it's a worthwhile investment even if you only want to keep it around for reference purposes.

The main article, an expose of Canada's part in the ugly chemical and biological warfare (CBW) scene, doesn't say much that's actually new or unknown. But the writer has tied all the bits and pieces together for us in one neat package, effectively proving what some of us suspected all along — that Canada is far from innocent in this ugly business, that she is a willing tool of the U.S. and British war machines.

A lengthy, thoughtful piece on recent events in Quebec serves to put that province's struggle in perspective, and Patrick MacFadden has contributed a sometimes-amusing, sometimes-biting piece on Ireland.

Students of past histories of university boards of governors members may recall a company called Brazilian Light and Traction, which seems to have been a training ground for Canadian supporters of imperialism abroad. The company was renamed Brazilian Light and Power and more recently shortened to Brascan Ltd., but the name change doesn't mean a thing. In a tight little news brief, we learn that Canada can play the imperialism-in-Latin-America game. It's high time somebody pointed out that Canada is perfectly capable of aping the U.S. in supporting right-wing military coups in order to make Latin America safe for foreign enterprise.

In an article on the building of the Great Slave Railway, Trevor Jones points out that the building of this modern-day railway was in every respect similar to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the 1880's. Though much fuss was made about the romanticism of pushing steel rails through the "last frontier" north to within 400 miles of the Arctic Circle, little has been said about the thousands of Portuguese and Italian immigrants who were lured to Canada by the department of citizenship and immigration to work on the G.S.R. These men worked 16 hours a day, seven days a week, clearing maybe $600 a month for 500 hours' backbreaking labor and living under conditions not unlike those of the previous century. Another bit of modern history you can bet won't make the Grade 12 history texts!

Last Post is published by an "editorial cooperative" of young professional journalists who started the magazine because they found there were many things they could not write about in their jobs on their establishment-oriented newspapers. Some of them are afraid to sign their articles for fear they will lose their jobs; and they can't afford to, because as yet, the magazine is hardly what you might call self-supporting.

Last Post has the potential to become a Canadian Ramparts, if it can finance its way through enough issues to build up a healthy subscription list. One can only hope that the traditional Canadian apathy won't allow this vigorous magazine to fail. Although it's still a little rough around the edges — a few grammatical errors and punctuation mistakes did manage to slip by the copy readers this time around — it's worth your while to pick up a copy. In fact, why not buy a subscription?

The Last Post, P.O. Box 98,
Station G, Montreal, Quebec.
Subscription: $4 a year.

—sherry brydson

LOW ON BREAD FOR YOUR CHRISTMAS
PRESENTS?

USE YOUR CHARGE -
ACCOUNT AT THE UNIVERSITY
BOOKROOM.

BOOKS

books and discs for those long lonesome sin, jack mcaffery, nick schmidt, don quinlan, r.d.

Pauline Reage, The Story of O, Grove, No. 95. Probably the best piece of pornography ever written. Positively lurid without being gross. The style is hauntingly gothic, and every now and then has the sting of a comment ranging far past the sexual level into the way women in particular and people in general are used.

b.b.

EARL HOOKER, Sweet Black Angle, Blue Thumb 12.

Earl Hooker is a frail man with TB who plays one hell of a fine monster double-neck blues guitar. After years of having his talent recognized by everybody but the record companies, he's finally getting a break. This is his third album in a year, and it's a good one. Because Hooker underestimates his abilities as a singer, the album is mostly instrumentals, but there is enough inventiveness in the playing to avoid the uninteresting sameness found on many instrumental blues records.

p.h.

ARNOLD SCHOENBERG, Complete Music for Solo Piano, Glenn Gould, pianist, Columbia MS 7098. Glenn Gould has been a champion of Schoenberg's music since the early 1950's; thus the present recording is the result of almost 20 years of playing. The actual taping was preceded by extensive research in the course of which Gould travelled to California to talk with Schoenberg's widow. The results were worth the effort. The present recording surpasses in many ways the only other recording of these piano pieces, by Steermann. Gould has a better understanding of the coherent elements in atonal music; de-emphasis of frequent dynamic changes and subordination of detail shows a conception of Schoenberg's music along broader lines. By emphasizing melodic sequences Gould provides valid terms of reference within these pieces. He performs the music with a rhythmic urge and by presenting frequent quasi-resolutions, endows it with a simulated tonality that gives Schoenberg's twelve-tone writing more than theoretical sense. This is the authoritative recording of Schoenberg's piano music.

t.j.

WAYNE SHORTER, Adam's Apple, Blue Note RST 84232. Though less vehement here than he was last week with his boss Miles Davis at the Colonial, Shorter is no less impressive. One of the best of the young tenor saxophonists around today, he is also gaining a reputation as a composer, 5 of the 6 tunes on this record, including two fine lyrical pieces, are his.

j.m.c.

RICHARD & MIMI FARINA, Memories, Vanguard 79263. Richard and Mimi Farina were a couple of the most engaging latter day folk singers around, and this album, of previously unissued material, gathered as a memorial to Richard, amply demonstrates their charm. Lyrics which show a live poetic imagination, pleasant voices, and a variety of tasteful backings combine to make a thoroughly enjoyable album.

p.h.

TINA & DAVID MELTZER, Poet Song, Vanguard 6519. A second Mimi and Richard these two aren't. The best selections are the six brief recited poems, but the nine songs are at best indifferent, and the orchestral accompaniment is really dreary. David Meltzer evidently needs someone else to set his lines to music. It all sounds like a record co. "product," and it lacks the kind of integrity found on the Farina's album.

p.h.

BLUDWYN PIG, Ahead Rings Out, A&M 4210. There have been many attempts to reconcile jazz and rock, and its by no means an easy thing to do, but Bludwyn Pig is quite successful, even though, like almost all rock groups, they're inconsistent. Some of the songs on the album are excellent, in particular the slow, quiet songs, others aren't so outstanding. On the whole though it's a good album, especially if you like both jazz and rock.

n.s.

ALABAMA COUNTRY 1927-31, OJL 14. For me the high points from this collection are the two cuts by Jaybird Coleman. The original 78s are a bit noisy, but there's little distortion, and his unaccompanied singing and harmonica responses are beautiful. There are other good things too: the guitar/singing duets of the Two Poor Boys, the wild duet by Whistlin' Pete and Daddy Stovepipe, and more great harp by Ollis Martin. Alabama blues can't be categorized easily, but there's some fine music on these old records.

p.h.

C. B. MacPherson, THE REAL WORLD OF DEMOCRACY, CBC, $1.50. Make up for a lost term in one easy reading. MacPherson's book has been translated into about twenty languages and proves that democracy isn't just a bunch of people who have to live together and therefore set up rules. I'll give a free copy to the member of Prof. Thorson's class who said that the questioner-disrupters should be turfed out because "democracy is majority rule, isn't it?"

b.b.

THE ARTISTICS, 754153. These fellows are getting a little older and some of the wrinkles are beginning to show. Some of them still wear processed hair. The music sounds a little tired in places, but generally, the group displays its experience and provides some excellent arrangements of standard songs. Nothing spectacular, just good, disciplined rhythm and blues.

d.g.

THE MOTHERS OF INVENTION, Uncle Meat, Reprise 2024. The soundtrack for an unfinished movie of the same name. Frank Zappa really must be judged as a composer of classical music — as an extension of Stravinsky. Only, the mythology he draws on is that of contemporary America (especially California). Dramatized in sound are hot rods, hamburger stands, air pollution, and fake I.D.'s. The mostly instrumental album is difficult and serious listening. Zappa is probably the only bonafide genius in rock 'n' roll.

r.d.s.

LIGHTHOUSE, Suite Feeling, RCA Victor LSP-4241. Lighthouse attempts too much and ends up being not much more than extremely cluttered. The main problem is Skip Prokop's pedestrian song writing. What good are all those horns, strings, keyboards and so on if they don't have anything significant to play? Prokop's fancy but soulless drumming and weak vocals in some of the cuts don't help much either. What a pity it is to find Paul Hoffert's magnificent vibes solo towards the centre of side one wasted on this record like a pearl sitting in the middle of a heap of garbage. They should have let him do the whole album.

n.s.

Books about Student Power etc.

James Kunen, THE STRAWBERRY STATEMENT, Random House, $5.95 A very funny book about the Columbia University fracas by one of the radicals, (although not all that radical). A good gift for trying to turn mommy and daddy on to revolution. Politically correct fun for the whole family.

b.b.

PINK FLOYD, More, Capitol 6318. This is a little different from your usual movie music score. The movie is about two heroin addicts who fall in love — with each other & the dreaded stuff. The music? Well, it's very quiet & slow & haunting. A lot of simple sound textures conjure up vague settings, unspeakable feelings. There is something sinister that seems to be built into English guitars (Procol Harum, Blind Faith). Pink Floyd has it too. It all makes a beautiful album that you can sit and explore for hours.

c.w.

R. D. Laing, THE POLITICS OF EXPERIENCE, Penguin, $95; THE POLITICS OF THE FAMILY, CBC, $1.50; (with David Cooper) THE DIALECTICS OF LIBERATION, Penguin, $.95. If you haven't yet discovered this brilliant Scottish psychiatric theorist, well . . . wow. "One is expected to be capable of passion, once married, but not to have experienced too much passion too much before. If this is too difficult, one has to pretend first not to feel the passion one really feels, then, to pretend to passion one does not really feel and to pretend that certain passionate upsurges of resentment hatred, envy, are unreal, or don't happen, or are something else."

b.b.

DONOVAN, Barabajagal, Epic BN 26481. After much searching Donovan has finally settled down to a cool dry sound that suits him well. The lyrics — innocent, satirical, and sexy — fit right in with the jazz-like music. The few lapses into love and mysticism on the album are not for everyone — but after all, a performer ought to be allowed his religion.

r.d.s.

BLIND FAITH, Polydora 543.035. One of the finest sounds in all of rock. The influence of Stevie Wynwood, from the now defunct Traffic, is strongly felt, adding a refined acoustic touch to the hard electric sound of (also defunct) Cream's Clapton and Baker. Winwood's voice is without comparison — a one-man choir superimposed on intricate guitar work. There's even some fiddle. Ginger Baker has his usual drum solo.

r.d.s.

BONNY DOBSON, (Nimbus-CBC LSP 4219) can still sing well, but you can hardly tell for the arrangements resurrected from the Make-Believe Ballroom library and brought up to date with the occasional simulated sitar noise circa 1966. But then all Canadian records are arranged like that, and then recorded and mixed all ready for performance on the Juliette show. Still, several of Dobson's own songs were nice, and one wishes her better luck next time.

b.b.

DON COVAY, The House of Blue Lights, Atlantic 8237. Don Covay recorded See Saw and Mercy Mercy, long before Aretha and the Stones made them standards. This man has written and performed some of the best r&b of the recent past, yet he is still relatively unknown. In this album, Covay reaches back for his roots in the blues. Covay has written most of the material, and his vocals fit right in the blues tradition. A good album which will probably go unnoticed.

d.g.

Christmas nights as seen by tony jahn, bob boschwartz, peter hatch and doug watters

MISSISSISSIPPI DELTA BLUES. Vol. 1. Arhoic 1041; Vol. 2. Arhoic 1042. If the blues are moribund in the deep South, they certainly aren't dead yet, as these two recently recorded albums amply demonstrate. The first volume presents a surprisingly wide variety of traditional blues styles from the Delta. The music ranges from straight guitar blues to a kazoo tub bass band and a fife and drum band. With the exception of the near legendary Furry Lewis, the singers are appearing on records for the first time. Volume 2 is devoted to two guitarist singers, Joe Callicott and R. L. Burnside. Callicott, who recorded in 1930 and most recently on a Memphis Blues Festival record, has the more sophisticated style of the two with complicated finger picking, while Burnside uses rhythmic strumming and few chord changes. The two records in this set are both excellent. They're not for anyone whose blues taste runs to Electric Mud, but for those who care about the older styles, they're highly recommended.

p. h.

COLLEGIUM AUREUM. C.P.E. Bach: Four Hamburg Symphonies. BCA Victrola VICS 1543. The performances on this record are excellent. Besides being beautifully transparent, they capture the spirit of Empfindsamkeit well, and the recorded sound, even for having a bit too much echo, is also very good. These early symphonies aren't half bad and any fans of C.P.E. Bach, or anyone interested in the origins of the symphony, which, contrary to popular opinion, did not spring in full flower from Haydn's head, should be intrigued.

n. s.

THE ROLLING STONES. Let It Be. London NPS-4. A further development of trends established on their last album. The music is a mixture of country blues styles and the Stones own hard rock. Steel guitar abounds — as well as acoustic guitar, autoharp, mandolin, and fiddle. A number of people beside the Stones participate in the instrumentation and vocals, including Al Kooper on French horn. Jagger's caustic moralizing is as fine as ever: "You can't always get what you want. But if you try some time, you just might find. You get what you need."

r. d. s.

John Holt, How Children Learn; How Children Fail; The Underachieving School (three books) Pitman, $4.50 ea. To put it simply, disproves the school system. A must for anyone interested in children or human development.

b. b.

Lewis Feuer, The Conflict of Generations. Basic Books, $14.95 Feuer wrote this book because he masturbated when he was little.

b. b.

Robert Jay Lifton, Death in Life, Survivors of Hiroshima. Vintage, $3.50. How calmly we have come to take things like Song My Lifton's book is not very Christmasy. It moves far beyond the survivors of the nuclear blast, to the rest of us survivors.

b. b.

BUCK OWENS in London. Capitol ST232. This album was recorded live at the London Palladium and catches all the fun, excitement and virtuosity of a Buck Owens performance. The Buckaroos, one of the most respected bands in any field of music, never fail to give Buck superb backing. His music is sheer fun and often it parodies the country sound. A very good album with many of Buck's hits included.

d. g.

ABEA CODE 615. Polydor 543,085. One of the more important albums of the year, though it's unlikely that many people will notice it or buy it. A group of Nashville studio musicians got together and recorded instrumental versions of a number of rock songs. Country forms and a rock base are extended through a kind of free variation to produce almost an analogy to jazz. After listening to this album it's hard to listen to anything else that claims to be in a country vein.

r. d. s.

ANTONIO JANIGRO and I SOLISTI DI ZAGREB. Cello Concertos. RCA Camden YCCS 1433. A good recording of two lovely cello concertos by Vivaldi (and in my opinion) a rather dull one by Boccherini. Solo cellist Antonio Janigro unfortunately indulges his romantic proclivities to some excess. There is a certain romantic passion in Baroque music, but it can't be expressed in an overabundance of portamento, rubato, and legato playing. Still, Janigro is too good a musician to let a few lapses into sentimentality really spoil his performances. Sound engineering is very good, which is remarkable since the record was released on one of RCA's budget labels, Camden.

n. s.

ELVIN JONES. The Ultimate. Blue Note BST 84305. The Jones trio's second album maintains the high standard set by the first. Though Joe Farrell's tenor sax, flute, and piccolo all sound good, and Jones' drumming is dynamic as always, it is Jimmy Garrison who emerges as the heavy man, playing fine bass and contributing 4 of the 6 compositions.

j. m'c

DVORAK. Quartet in F major "American"; Smetana. Quartet in E minor "From My Life"; The Juilliard Quartet. Columbia MS 7144. The two beautiful quartets performed on this record are closely associated with the works by which these composers are most remembered: the New World Symphony of Dvorak and the Ma Vlast of Smetana. It is beautiful Slavic music, flawlessly played. The Juilliard quartet has a crystalline clarity of tone which, faithfully reproduced, constitutes a most persuasive introduction to the String Quartet that any musical skeptic could ask for.

j. j.

William Schutz, Joy, Grove, $5.95. A do-it-yourself guide to t-group, sensory and personal awareness, non-verbal communications. Includes many exercises. Particularly valuable for overly intellectual, superverbal, tight-assed people who read the Review. Do it with someone you would like to get to know.

b. b.

Joan Baez, Daybreak, Dial, $5.95. Also in paper. Unlike most other music celebrities, Joan Baez can write. Her journal is gentle, clear, poetic and very loving.

b. b.

GLENN GOULD. Bach: Keyboard Concertos, Vol. II. Columbia MS7294. Glenn Gould is at it again, setting the musical world on its ear with his quirky but amazingly together piano playing. This particular record is the second in a proposed set of the Bach keyboard concertos and if the rest of the volumes are as good as this one, they might be as history-making as the Goldberg Variations ever. Every, but every note is in perfect rhythmic place, every accent is just right, even individual notes in the ornaments come across with the same incandescent clarity that characterizes everything on the record. Always Gould is in perfect control. Perhaps better than any other pianist, Glenn Gould knows what he is doing when he sits down at a piano keyboard.

n. s.

ELLA WASHINGTON. Sound Stage 15007. For a first album, this is a harbinger of good things to come. A sweeping voice, sensitive phrasing and depth combine to present the listener with a performance of solid music and an artist eminently qualified to communicate it. Her voice can cry the lyrics of a song with an intensity of feeling that can only be equalled by the great song stylists. Emotions are not built into a song, it takes an artist to inject a piece of music with her own emotions. Ella Washington takes over the song and pours voice and soul into it. The result is great music. Ella will be around for some time making good vibrations.

d. q.

DUKE ELLINGTON, FLETCHER & HORACE HENDERSON. The Big Bands 1933. Prestige 7645. The Henderson band is the star here, with Coleman Hawkins playing a very prominent solo role. The great tenorman is featured on Talk of the Town, Queer Notions (both jazz classics) and I've Got to Sing a Torch Song. Also in the ranks are Henry "Red" Allen and Dicky Wells.

j. m'c

CANADIAN WRITING FOR CHRISTMAS. God Bless House of Anansi, the Tiny Tim of the Canadian Publishing industry. All the stuff is good and much of it might never otherwise be printed. Highlights: The "Spiderline" novels: Russell Marois' The Telephone Pole an exceptionally conscious, perceptive, bizarre — well, thing of a book. Mat Cohen's Korsantoff, a young U of T philosophy prof amusingly and disturbingly trapped in his own intellectuality, Fallout by Peter Such, a spare style account of the rape of the Ontario North during the uranium boom; John Sandman's Eating Out, which I haven't read yet, and A Perde de Temps, which is in French. $1.95 each. Also, not in the Spiderline series, Graeme Gibson's first novel Five Legs, which was widely acclaimed by critics last spring.

b. b.

NEIL YOUNG. Everybody Knows. Reprise 6349. Very much like the old Buffalo Springfield, at least what Neil Young used to do for them, gentle, tasteful hopeless love songs. The singing's not the greatest, the songs themselves, while mostly written with a fine hand for image, are sometimes just a little too sensitive and sad. The album contains the only good electric violin I have ever heard. Generally fine.

c. w.

Adelman-Lee, THE UNIVERSITY GAME, Anansi, $2.50 Written three years ago, these articles are quite out of date as far as the "student movement" goes, but still dead on as far as the university goes, since the university hasn't really gone anywhere at all. Dr. Don McCulloch's (of the U of T Advisory Bureau) piece brilliantly dissects the way people are de-personalized at the university, not by computers and size, but by being kept powerless and inferior. Lee's article moves him from the traditional classroom to setting up Rochdale. And there is a pointless but funny piece by Prof. Jack Robson, the first of his Prof. Hmnn series. An ideal book for someone who is feeling uncomfortable with the university and does not know why.

b. b.

EAST COAST BLUES 1926-1935. Vazoo 1013. Some of the most superb folk guitarists the States ever produced were the rag/blues players from Virginia, the Carolinas and Georgia. Little or nothing is known about most of the artists on this collection. Even the correct full name of the best known among them, Blind Blake, has been a matter of contention, but obscure though they may be, their music is electrifying. The fi is, of course, not very hi, and some of the old 78s used have a small amount of surface noise, but if you are interested in hearing an exhilarating early blues style, this is a record to look for.

p. h.

THE INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTRE

Invites YOU to

BE BRAVE!
BE DIFFERENT!

in YOUR choice of Holiday Gifts at Sane Prices
VISIT

TREASURE VAN

(A Project of World University Service of Canada)

Unique Gifts From 32 Countries of our World.

DECEMBER 12 TO-DAY 10:00 A.M. - 9:00 P.M.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT CENTRE

33 St. George Street

NEW YORK PIZZA HOUSE

620 YONGE STREET CORNER OF ST. JOSEPH - 925-1736
We specialise in New York and New England style pizza and home-made spaghetti. WE MAKE THE BEST PIZZA IN TOWN
STUDENTS FREE DELIVERY IN OUR AREA & HOT PIZZA
RIGHT TO YOUR ROOM
5:00 P.M. - 1:00 A.M. DAILY

it's a good film after all

give away POSTER sale!! get one FREE with any 4 at... $3.99

Mark quantity of each type:

Famous Faces	Rock Groups
Scenics	Playa-tic
Travel	Black Life

Send Cheque to NAN POSTERS or M/O to 31 Britain St., Toronto, Ont.

And we will send this $12. value of 5 groovy posters to:

Name (print) _____
Address _____

EXPORT "A"

Canada's Finest

FILTER

Cigarette

REGULAR AND KINGS

NOW at the GLOBAL VILLAGE

920-8170 - 17 St. Nicholas - 920-8171
Behind Sutton Place

"Copper Mountain" - Dec. 11-27,
Daily - 1:30 & 7:00 $1.00/head

"Punch & Judy" - Daily at 4:30 Tues.-Sat.

"PLATFORM" - Fri. Sat. 10-down
Live jamming

"New Years Eve Party" $15 couple
Includes 4 day 24 hr. festival

"Eastern Sunday Service Weekly Starting Dec. 28 11 a.m.-12

Films, Sundays at 7, $1.00 by APE

Sweden: the social eutopia. Yet, the Social Democrats, in power for over thirty years, no longer a party of the Left, now occupy the Center and are dominated by an aging coalition of liberals and conservatives. Organized dissent has succumbed to apathy and resignation. The labour movement is itself big business and remains largely ineffective in a highly industrial-based economy. The sexual revolution has suffered from the same ills as the political state — indifference and insensitivity.

Director Vilgot Sjoman (491, My Sister, My Love) indicates that, indeed, all is not well in paradise in his already-infamous treatise on social commitment, non-violence and sex, I Am Curious (Yellow). (Part 1 of the continuing story of I Am Curious is the Yellow film. Part 2 is Blue, and the appended colours in both films are drawn from those of the Swedish flag.)

Sjoman's film, to underline the situation, has received a good deal of international publicity, climaxing in the 1968 decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals which dismissed the obscenity charges levelled against the Grove Press release.

Although the film has been playing in Montreal for several months, the Canadian distributor, Film Canada, has yet to test the liberality of Mr. Silverthorne and his sage associates, the Ontario Board of Censors.

But to repeat Messrs. Hollis Alpert, Norman Mailer, Rev. Howard Moody et al — Sjoman's defendants in the U.S. court battle — I Am Curious (Yellow) is (1) not a exploitation film, (2) is an inoffensive film, (3) is a film with a definite social responsibility, (4) is a unique and enormously complicated film.

Yet, if the Sandrews production is inventive and profound, the reason lies elsewhere than Vilgot Sjoman's technique. Sjoman has refused (wisely) to rely on the trademarks of 'new cinema' simply to colour his film in a compellingly contemporary manner. Although the camera intrudes constantly into the life of Lena, the "I" of the film, Peter Westery's 35 mm. black and white photography is unflamboyant and subdued. And, in the best tradition of Ingmar Bergman, Sjoman's mentor, each take is lengthy and generally filmed from a single one angle camera set-up (eye-level, of course, in accordance with the symbolist interpretation of Swedish cinema).

Nevertheless, from an original 150,000 feet of stock, I Am Curious (Yellow) emerges as an absorbing dissection of Sweden in the late '60's, of the Martin Luther King-inspired non-violent movement, of class structure and of sexual inequality in the 'permissive society'.

In addition to this multi-consciousness operating throughout I Am Curious (Yellow), there are no less than three different vantage points from which the action of the film unfolds. The first is the most evident — that of Lena. Lena is the obvious means by which Sjoman expresses his political and social pre-occupations and it is through her unremittant challenges that the bulk of the film's social messaging is revealed.

Tape-recorder over her shoulder, microphone in hand, she sets out to index the consciousness of a society — no small task for a dumpy, nineteen-year old drama student. She confronts entrenched labour leaders and right-wing businessmen alike with the need for the establishment of a classless society, interviews King Gustav on constitutional monarchy and discusses freedom and force with the Soviet poet Yevushenko.

Her room in her father's Stockholm flat is reminiscent of Travis' room in Lindsay Anderson's If . . . — cluttered with an incredible array of books, pamphlets, newspaper clippings, files, signs and a glass-enclosed portrait of Franco. For Lena, these are the images of a hypocritical democracy, images which reflect her distaste for and fascination with the shortcomings of the prevailing order. Tacked to one wall is a small sign which reads, "I Am free". Hanging on the opposite wall is a black bag labelled "The Social Conscience of Democracy" and we are invited in an upbeat voice-over sales pitch to guess its contents. First prize for the correct answer — a vacation in Spain.

But a second viewpoint, both independent of and yet reliant on the 'external' film is also present — that of Sjoman at work on the film. Something of a Godard influence? A subplot perhaps? Not quite, since the director and the crew are revealed as not simply recording the action but as directly influencing the course of the film.

Sjoman is seen interviewing Olof Palme, then Minister of Transport (now Minister of Education) on the desirability of a classless society. Later, Sjoman runs the interview for Lena on the Moviola and then follows it with a conversation filmed earlier with Martin Luther King.

This brief incident forms the basis for Lena's involvement with the philosophy of non-violence. It begins to be apparent that Sjoman's purpose in introducing an 'internal' film is to blur the distinction between the apparent and the real. (the Bergman influence?)

So, on yet another level, I Am Curious (Yellow) becomes a curiously literate film dealing as much with the abstract nature of reality itself as it does with the nature of a political system. Perhaps Sjoman's point is that the two are, in reality, the same ambiguous sort of concept. Whatever the motivation, the two perspectives operate subtly upon one another.

The final vantage point is the least obvious but the most important — that of the camera filming the camera filming the external film, or that of we, the audience, viewing everything on the screen. (see also paragraph 5, comment 4: "I Am Curious (Yellow) is a unique and enormously complicated film.")

The sex scenes in I Am Curious (Yellow) which were to revolutionize the attitudes of film-makers everywhere to that most exploitable of concepts, are both simulated and unstimulated. Andy Warhol once filmed Ultra-Violet in the nude for some forgotten length of time and succeeded in proving at least one law of sexuality — genitals react in inverse proportion to exposure. Ironically, the more frequently Lena Nyman sheds her garb, the greater the turn-off factor involved. (It may just be another instance of Sjoman manipulating our reactions.)

In any case, although the much-contested sex scenes in I Am Curious (Yellow) are explicit, they are also burlesques, satires and instances of extreme brutality. Since all customary foreplay is absent from those scenes involving Lena and Borje Ahlsstedt, the prevailing feeling is not one of titillation but rather one of an impassionate analytical probe into a very vulnerable moment.

Lena's first encounter with Borje, a salesman in a men's clothing store, is one of broad comedy as the eager couple stumble about with their clothes bunched around their feet. But by the end of the film, Lena is no longer the willing actress of farce. She is raped in three successive scenes by Borje who has come to reveal his true brutal nature. With each rape, a little more of Lena's non-violent crusade dies until, by the end of the film, she dreams of Borje's murder and castration.

Sex is an integral part of I Am Curious (Yellow). Not only is it used to illustrate the hopelessness of non-violence but it also provides several moments of harsh satire during the film. Perhaps the most blasphemous are the two scenes in which we see Lena and Borje first coupling on a balustrade of the Swedish royal palace and later among the branches of Europe's "oldest tree". Symbolism is, no doubt, rampant but above all else both scenes serve to make a mockery of all those trade ads exalting a studio's latest release as "Frank, Bold. A NEW DIMENSION IN REALISM".

I Am Curious (Yellow), like a film by Godard or Fellini or Antonioni, exists on as many levels as you are willing to attribute to your own susceptibility to film and to director Vilgot Sjoman's intelligence. But it is superbly inventive and perhaps Sjoman has directed one of the most compelling and significantly revolutionary films of the past three years.

ian ritchie

watsUP

MUSIC

Here are a few things that will be happening while we're away.

VLADIMIR ASHKENAZY will be the guest pianist with the TSO on Dec. 16, 17 & 19. On the 21st (2:30), 22nd & 23rd (8:00), the Symphony will be joined by the TORONTO MENDELSSOHN CHOIR for a production of THE MESSIAH.

BRUCE COCKBURN, currently at the Riverboat, ends his stay this Sunday. He's followed by ERIC ANDERSON who opens Tuesday, and on the 30th, BROWNIE MCGHEE & SONNY TERRY are back for three weeks. BILL CORDRAY ends at The Onion this Sunday. GARY DAVIS opens there next Wednesday for five days, after which the Onion will be closed for two weeks. They open again Jan. 7th with DOC WATSON.

The Hawks Nest continues its recently formed rock policy. This weekend it's LIFE and CREATION on Fri., the MRQ on Sat., and NUCLEUS Sun. Coming up on future weekends: SHERMAN & PEABODY, MOTHER TUCKER'S...., GOLDEN EARRING (a Dutch group), LUCIFER (New Year's), and ERIC MERCURY. Check their phone-tape (364-8666) for details.

For country & western, DOC WILLIAMS and STOMPIN' TOM COLLINS play on and on at the Horseshoe Tavern.

At 2717 Yonge (just south of Lawrence) a coffeehouse called the COSMIC HOME has been quietly presenting up and coming Canadian rock groups for the past year. They're open all day every day, with music starting at 9:00, Friday through Monday. On Sunday, they show silent movies as well. Tomorrow night, ICARUS is playing, and during the holidays, they'll be having EDWARD BEAR, NEON ROSE and IT'S ALL MEAT, among others. Weekend nights there's a $1.50 entrance charge and on other nights, when the entertainment is informal, no charge. If you'd like more information on who's playing when, call 481-1663. p.h.

THEATRE

The last U of T student production of 1969 opens, courtesy Trinity College Dramatic Society and Prospero Productions, on Tuesday at Central Library Theatre. Richard Reoch's fourth play, Songs for the Coal Forest Children, is an ambitious affair with a large cast. The play is vintage Reoch, with lots of colour, music, madness and lyricism. If you can't see it, read Richard's poem on the green and yellow Songs poster. Dec. 16 through 20 at 8:30 p.m. Students $1.50.

At least as far as theatre is concerned, Christmas is for kids. Holiday offerings for them: at Studio Lab Theatre on Queen Street, Treasure Island plays on Saturdays at 1:30 and 3:00 and Sundays at 2:00 before Christmas, with a four-play holiday programme thereafter; Toronto Workshop Productions will be offering The Magic Trumpet, a new Canadian children's musical by Victor Davies and Victor Cowle, as of December 21. — check with the theatre about their rather complicated performance schedule; another children's musical, Copper Mountain, opened yesterday at Global Village and will continue through December 27, weekdays at 7:00, Saturdays at 1:30 and 3:30, Sundays, Christmas Eve and Christmas Day off; the day after Christmas, the Canadian Puppet Festival opens a ten-day run of Aladdin at the Poor Alex; and there's always The Nutcracker, danced by the National Ballet at the O'Keefe Dec. 26 to Jan. 4.

Compulsive theatre-goers who hate children and children's theatre can console themselves with Dionysius in '69, which opened officially yesterday at Studio Lab and will continue (Mondays dark) into January, and with the new but superb Toronto Dance Theatre, performing in Macmillan Theatre of the Edward Johnson Building Dec. 17 through 20 at 8:30, plus a Saturday matinee at 2:00. They may also be cheered by the thought of good things to come after the holidays: Israeli mime actor Claude Kipnis at York University for a one-night stand on Monday, Jan. 5, and Coghil's Canterbury Tales opening a two-week run at the O'Keefe on the same evening. And lest we forget — though we're not likely to be permitted to do so — Hair opens Dec. 29 at the Royal Alex. — mo'e

No space for review of George M playing at O'Keefe for a while. Thomas O'Connor says it's generally good fun for the whole family, especially for the older generation, very good for that Christmas truce with the folks.

FILM

Due to that annual phenomenon of distribution — pre-Christmas lull — the number of B-Films in the city has been steadily escalating during the past several weeks. But with Christmas near, can new releases be far behind? The various distribution agencies are preparing this year's selection of box-office attractions in which the Hollywood studios have placed their collective hopes for financial success.

Among the more promising contributions to the Xmas fare . . . The Arrangement by Elia Kazan, venerated sage of American theatre and cinema, with beautiful, beautiful Faye Dunaway as the 'other woman', John and Mary by Peter Yates, brilliant director of Bullitt, starring Dustin Hoffman and Mia Farrow (but it may still be a worthwhile effort). Steve McQueen, perhaps the most charismatic figure in American film, appears in an adaptation of Faulkner's The Reivers, produced by McQueen's own company and likely to prove one of the year's finest. On Iler Majesty's Secret Service. The best of Fleming's Bond epics in which our hero is married unto that most sexy of felines, Diana Rigg. With Topaz Alfred Hitchcock, who has been inactive since 1966, makes a much-awaited reappearance with his adaptation of Leon Uris' novel of political intrigue. And finally the controversial Canadian-made feature, Explosion — CFDC-backed, with an American cast — which certain Canadian filmmakers have heralded as an example of the unfairness of the 'Canadian content clause' in the government's film financing corporation.

Also, a new revival theatre, Cinema Lumiere — formerly Cine Campus (formerly smut house anonymous) will be opening shortly with a wide variety of 'classics' to be screened — among them, The Red Desert, Eight and a Half, Shame and Stolen Kisses.

Merry Christmas and whatever happened to Arch Obler, Dzuguze?

TV

CTV's Untamed World presents FISHY LEGROS' CHRISTMAS. In this warm and inspiring documentary, viewers glimpse a way of life different than that led by most urban Canadians as they watch 'Fishy' Legros and family make preparations for Christmas Day in the country. Sunday Dec. 21, 4:30-5:30 ch 9.

The Motown sound comes to CTV on Tuesday, Dec. 16 8:30-9:30 pm EST when the CTV Television Network presents THE TEMPTATIONS, in a fast-paced hour of swinging music and light-hearted comedy.

Should WLM head for the darkrooms?

Say you happen to be born a boy and have developed a penchant for photography. The world is at your feet.

As a student of this university you are also a member of Hart House. And for a small fee the Camera Club is yours to develop photographic pictures — with its five darkrooms, four and a half enlargers, automatic print dryer free chemicals and courses in how to win photo-contests judged by astigmatic judges.

Say you happen to be born a girl and photography is your bag too.

Where can you go to practice your dark art?

There is no University of Toronto Camera Club, and Hart House is of course the male's answer to the Woman's Liberation Movement.

I can hear the anguished cries now: "I knew we shouldn't have let them into Great Hall" and "Not the darkrooms. Is nothing sacred" But the introduction of women might be just the thing to put some life into the club.

Novice members get the impression that the only purpose photography has in this world is the winning of contests. If you've never won a contest, well you are just no photographer.

Perhaps the introduction of some female spirit might do something to break down the academic pretence of the club. (After all, what is the difference between a contest and an examination?)

It's not that girls are more artistic than boys — I would strongly dispute the point — but hopefully the radical change brought about by these women might cause the club to question its aesthetic values.

It seems a shame that the most economic photographic vehicle on the campus is closed to the ones who can afford to support this expensive hobby least. Girls earn less than boys in the summer.

People might say that the facilities are crowded as it is, but why are the darkrooms so empty during the week? Could the camera club afford to get rid of some of their archaic junk and buy something useful with the dues that girls will pay?

Maybe the Women's Liberation Movement should think about occupying the darkrooms and forget about the swimming pool.

— Errol Young

Varsity Christmas Mac's Memorial Contest.

If you remember, The Varsity Mac's Memorial Contest asked for a cutline for a picture of Mac's. The only entry, submitted by David Frankel of Innis College, read "Sleep tight, the war is over." For our new Varsity Christmas Mac's Memorial Contest, the Varsity wants an explanation of this entry. The winner gets to meet David Frankel.

'a say in running the courses?'

Critics of the educational system must be careful that their criticism is reasonable and purposeful. An article in Wednesday's Varsity, which criticized Psychology 200 and its professor, failed to meet these criteria.

It was unreasonable because it probably does not reflect the majority of student opinion (as suggested by an informal poll taken in the class, and by student reaction to the article), yet the author implied he represented student feeling and The Varsity failed to call attention to this fallacious implication.

Secondly, it was unreasonable because of the many factual errors it contained: retention following the course is not "near zero"; "reasoning, the selection and application of formulae, the critical examination of results" are not subject to "simplistic mimicking"; students do have "a say in the running of the course" — we are continually encouraged to discuss any problem with the professor at any time (although some obviously haven't taken full advantage of this opportunity).

The criticism was purposeless. Why did the author write it? If it was to vent his anger, I suggest he has succeeded. But he has also succeeded in alienating himself, damaging a professor's reputation, and irreparably setting back educational progress. Good criticism plans ahead.

Furthermore, the attack proposed no alternatives. If we are to change, what shall we change to? Good criticism considers this question too. It is likely that little growth will come from this attack: it is not a beginning, but a tragic conclusion — "a real failure to communicate", as the author says. Student—faculty polarization does not lead to progress; it leads to paralysis.

Clearly there is much need for change in our university, and in the world. But the would-be actors in the drama of change must be careful to avoid wasting their energy and polarizing the other players by unreasonable, purposeless criticism. Educational improvement awaits the day of improved criticism.

David Stang (GSU)

'hell of a nice guy'

We the undersigned students of Psychology 200, feel a gross injustice has been perpetrated upon Dr. Wall in Mr. Slattery's article "What Did You Learn In School Today?" (Varsity Dec. 11, page 6).

We can state with relative certainty (alpha equals .05) that Mr. Slattery's views are not representative of the class. On the contrary, Dr. Wall has spent the term bending over backwards to give us some appreciation of statistics.

His lectures have been consistently lucid and stimulating and the material with which he took the trouble to supply us obviated the necessity of our taking lecture notes. As far as his exams are concerned, no time limit is placed on us, and his questions are eminently fair; furthermore, Dr. Wall is always flexible, informal, and appreciative of his students' points of view.

We feel Dr. Wall is a superlative teacher and a hell of a nice guy.

Mr. Slattery's article misrepresents, exaggerates, and distorts the facts. Certainly he could have taken issue with the methods of evaluating students without disparaging Dr. Wall's character.

In conclusion, it should have been made explicit by both The Varsity and the correspondent that this article represented only one man's opinions.

S. Hidi, L. Keltz, A. Nissenbaum, J. Simon, I. Smith, M. Top, L. Wiley, V. Vamos, E. Wake (all special students).

MAINE FIELD HOCKEY CAMP FALL 1970

Sept. 1 - 7 inclusive

Sign-up immediately as space is limited

Room 102, Benson Building

HART HOUSE 50

VARSITY TABLE TENNIS TOURNAMENT

Dec. 13th 1 p.m. Lower Gym
Fee: 25c. Registration: Hall Porter

SUNOAY EVENING CONCERT

December 14th
Great Hall 9:00 p.m.

FESTIVAL SINGERS OF CANADA

Conductor: Elmer Iseler
Tickets: Hall Porter

NEW YEAR'S EVE BALL

— CHAMPAGNE
— STEAK
— 3 GROOVY GROUPS
— HONKY-TONK PIANIST
A.L.L. for only $17. couple HURRY! BUY NOW!
Hall Porter and Undergraduate Office.

FOLK CONCERT

Tuesday December 16
East Common Room, 1-2 p.m.
OCH HERRICKS
Ladies Welcome

THE BULL & THE BEAR

Draught beer on tap from noon till after midnight. Hearty lunches from 75c. Wild atmosphere.

The Bull and The Bear in The Sutton Place Hotel * On Wellesley east of Bay

LAURENTIAN SKI HOLIDAYS

SIX DAYS SKING MONT TREMBALNT OR MONT ST. JOVITE.

DEPART SUNOAY DEC. 21ST — RETURN SAT. DEC. 27TH

DEPART SUNOAY DEC. 28TH — RETURN SAT. JAN. 3RD

TOTAL PRICE INCLUDING TRANSPORTATION ACCOMMODATION AND MEALS $109.95

SKI TRIPS ALSO DEPART EVERY FRIOAY EVENING AND RETURN SUNOAY EVENING. $39.95

FOR RESERVATION CALL 364-9118

ENCORE

813 Yonge St. 925-4868

For frugal - 5.00 up

Femmes - rent or buy

Fabulous - short or long

Fussies - a.t.l. - 20%

Blues beat Mac 5-1, play tonight at Arena

Coach Tom Watt made some line changes before Wednesday night's game against the McMaster Marlins in Hamilton.

Veteran center Paul Laurent and rookie centerman Robbie Ellis exchanged lines with Ellis moving between Bob McGuinn and Bryan Tompson while Laurent took Ellis' spot between rookies Mike Cyr and George Nuppola.

However, one line Watt certainly didn't tamper with was the Bill Buba—John Wright—Mike Boland unit who have clicked at such a hot rate that they have accounted for 12 of the 24 goals the Blues have scored in league play this season.

The trio were in good form again against Mac as Buba picked up a pair of goals while Wright added another plus three assists to lead Watt's wounded warriors (four regulars still on the shelf) to a 5-1 victory.

Sophomore winger Len Burman and rookie Mike Cyr scored the other two Varsity goals while four year veteran Mac Hickox notched the lone Marlin tally.

Blues play a return engagement with McMaster at Varsity Arena tonight and then travel to Sudbury on the weekend for an exhibition tilt with the Laurentian Voyageurs. Blues won the first 6-4.

The third and deciding game of the W.A. Dafeo Cup intramural lacrosse final between St. Miles and PhysEd will be played today at 12:30 p.m. at Hart House. PhysEd took the first game 9-8 while St. Miles took the second 12-7. Women welcome!

One last reminder. Don't forget all your gymnastic fans that Julio Roncon and his Varsity gym team will be showing their talents at a free gym clinic on Saturday at noon in the Hart House Upper gym.

ELVIS MOVIE MARATHON

- (1) FOLLOW THAT DREAM
- (2) WILD IN THE COUNTRY
- (3) FLAMING STAR

SATURDAY -
9 P.M.

OLD PHYSICS -
R.M. 135

ERINDALE !!!

(Mississauga Rd. - north of Dundas)

Italian-style Dinner-Dance

Sat. Dec. 13 8:00 p.m.

featuring "Gli Angeli D'Oro"

(The Golden Angels)

Admission $1.00

Buses 7:30 at Convocation

Hall & Islington Subway

Steele's
Restaurant-Tavern
Chercol-Broiled
Sizzling STEAKS
Served in Burgundy Wine
and succulent ROAST BEEF
Entertainment nightly in the
UPSTAIRS VENETIAN LOUNGE & BAR
Appearing Nightly ANDY NICCOLS
Steele's
Tavern-RESTAURANT
EM. 8-5111 349 YONGE ST.
(Fully Licensed)

Today All Day

HAIR tickets are 10 per cent discount Show dates Jan 28, 29 and Feb 1 Orders (cash or cheque) accepted now at Innis 11 St. George St. Rms 110 202

Nominations open for Division 11. Social Science Representative for GSU GSU office Positions open for interim disciplinary committee Two will be chosen by lot GSU Office

Final day for applications to interim disciplinary committee SAC needs 20 applicants from which six will be chosen by lot Send applications to SAC Judicial Committee c/o SAC office Exhibition of drawings by Jeremy Smith Buttery, Timity.

12 p.m.

All interested 4th year and M.A. students in Political Economy Members of the staff will participate in a meeting to discuss opportunities for graduate study here and at other universities Sidney Smith Rm. 1087

12.15 p.m.

Demonstration against the US war in Vietnam on the day of the Third Vietnam Moratorium Sponsored by the Vietnam Mobilization Committee At the US Consulate.

1 p.m.

Jeanne Hastie (1 Vic) will give a lecture on The All Canadian College Girl Wymilwood, Vic

Department of Geology Films Life on Other Planets: Crystals, an Introduction, Microdeformation of Uranium, Mining Bumping

Tout through Winery and tasting Jordan Winery in St. Catharines For transportation, 928-2391

2 p.m.

John Boroulios (IV EL&L) discusses public consciousness in Anne of Green Gables and the Poetry of G. K. Leab, at Wymilwood, Vic.

4 p.m.

Wine and Cheese party Victory celebration for the GSU soccer team GSU building

7.30 p.m.

The Canadian Lynx, a play in two acts by Jerry O'Carroll. $1 at the door St. Hilde's College

Saturday

8 p.m.

Semioformal dinner-dance Italian style, featuring "Gli Angeli D'Oro" (the Golden Angels) Admission $1 Erindale College Buses leave Convocation Hall and Islington Subway at 7:30 p.m.

8.30 p.m.

Two one-act plays by Antei, Stundberg, directed by Norm Levine and Nigel Spencer Admission Free Studio Theatre, 4 Glen Morris St.

8.15 p.m.

Intermediate Orchestra concert under the direction of John Montague and Richard G. J. Concer Hall, 273 Bloor St. West Free

MONDAY

All Day

Buttery Trinity, Drawing exhibition, Art-ist Jeremy Smith.

"HAIR" tickets at 10 per cent discount. Show dates Jan 28, 29, and Feb 1. Innis II, 63 St. George St. Rms 110, 202

1 p.m.

"Why Man Creates" a colour film containing views by Saul Bess on the creative process will be shown by the Media Resource Unit of the Faculty of Applied Science, Galbraith Building, Rm 248.

Christmas is coming. Come and sing Christmas Carols or just listen in Wymilwood Music Room.

TUESDAY

All Day

"Hair" tickets at 10 per cent discount Show dates Wed. Jan 28, Thurs. Jan 29, Sun. Feb 1. On sale at Innis II, 63 St. George St. Rooms 110, 202. On sale the rest of the week

WEDNESDAY

All Day

Exhibition of Drawings by Jeremy Smith, Buttery Trinity until Dec 19

1.10 p.m.

Institute for the History and Philosophy of Science and Technology presents "A Formal Approach to the Philosophy of Science" by Bas C. van Fraassen, Associate Professor of Philosophy, U of T Room 102 McClelland Lab, New Physics Building

8.30 p.m.

Trinity College Dramatic Society presents a new play by Richard Roach, "Songs for the Cool Forest Children", Central Library Theatre, College and St. George Students $1.50

8.30 p.m.

Gammer Gurtton's Needle St. Michael's College, Biennan Hall Admission 50 cents

THURSDAY

12 noon

Seminar on Academic Research Speakers Dr. D. S. Abney, OISE, and Dr. J. W. Giege, COE YM-YWHA main lounge, Spadine and Bloor.

3 p.m.

All writers welcome at Writers Workshop If you'd like to send bring copies of your work Writing Lab Innis I, north of main library

4.10 p.m.

"Spectra of Diatomic Molecules. Rydberg States and Astrophysical Problems" Dr. Alex Douglas, Director, Division of Applied Physics, National Research Council, Room 102, McClelland Lab

FRIDAY

All Day

Exhibition of Drawings by Jeremy Smith, Buttery Trinity Last day

8.30 p.m.

Trinity College Dramatic Society presents a new play by Richard Roach, "Songs for the Cool Forest Children" Central Library Theatre, College and St. George Students $1.50 Copricornus, PBA Hall, 1330 Bloor W Admission $1.50.

CLASSIFIEDS

TYPIST them, essays, notes, charts, English, French, other languages. Mimographing, electric typewriters. Mary Dale Scott (M. Davies) 86 Bloor St W Room 225 922-7624

GETTING ENGAGED? Send or phone today for free booklet "The Day you buy a diamond" H. Proctor and Co., 131 Bloor St. W., Suite 416, 921-7702

SALTY DOG Discotheque will rent premises Monday to Thursday, day or evening. For information call A. Curry 964-7060 or 633-2677

EDDIE MONTESSORI Cherche Surveillants parlant francais pour Son Camp d'ete Telephone 889-6882

INNER CITY program requires volunteers to tutor teenagers in high school subjects. Emphasis is on developing personal relationships. Call 532-3303 between 9 and 5

FOR SALE Britannica set of eight books. Founder's edition, with ten volume reading guide and bookcase $500 287-9222

PARK OFF THE STREET at 165 St. George Street. By the month. Reasonable rates. Phone 811 924 5616, 924-2909

RIDE WANTED to Chicago whenever Will share, phone Julio 322-3647

SITTER WANTED for 10 year old boy — occasional evenings — 8hour/Blainwick district Phone — Mis Gamble Days 928-3383, Evenings 920-9510

EXPERIENCED TYPIST will type essays, charts in own home Telephone 293-8786

DARKROOM EQUIPMENT, Leitz Valley II enlarger Leitz Elmor II, 2.5 lens with timer, easel, tray. Serious parties call 861 1619 Mon. Tues.,. Shows evenings after 8

GARRY HORNE with characteristic benevolence hobby gifts the entire universe and all friends the happiest of hugs this holiday season, and forever after.

SKI PANTS for sale Spenninn — ladies size 9-10. Short, navy blue — like new. Call 221-4451 after 8

THE REALIST Walt Disney poster is at the Textbook Store in full color at $2.50

THE IMPACTED lower third molar is in the manager's office at the Bookstore Press call again

LDST — pair of gold wire rimmed glasses in original case. St. George area. Call Dobbo 783-2057. Reward

RIDE WANTED to Halifax between Dec 19-22, willing to share gas and driving. Phone Anne, 920-5457

FOR RENT — well furnished single and double room in lawyer's home. Fridge. Some T.V.s, kitchen privileges. Girls preferred. Sherbourne St. Call 923-1685 after 5

FREE SKATING at Varsity Arena after hockey game Fri. Dec. 12, Compliments Blue & White Society

$ WANTED — Experienced organist, preferably with singing ability, for rock group, part-time. Call Vincie 247-8548

TYPIST with electric machine, experienced with everything from term essays to publishers manuscripts for books. 45c per page. 3c each additional copy. Phone 483-2387

ELVIS PRESLEY MOVIE MARATHON featuring 1 "Follow That Dream"; 2 "Wild in the Country"; 3 "Flaming Star" SATURDAY NITE beginning at 9:00 P.M. OLD PHYSICS 135

STUDENT JOBS AND TOURS IN EUROPE Every student guaranteed a paying job in Europe. For a complete description and application form in a 42 page booklet, send $2.00 to Gard Allen, 25 Taylorwood Dr., Islington 675

THE DIRTY DOZEN movie starring Lee Marvin and Jim Brown. See this one great bunch of wermogens at Wetmore Hall, New College, Sun. Dec. 14 at 6:30 p.m. and 9:00 p.m. $1 admission

BELLY BUTTON coffeehouse discotheque in the basement of Wilson Hall, New College every Friday, Saturday at 10 p.m. We have folk singing and dancing between sets. Drop by. It's only 50c stog 75c drag

SUPER SOUL SPECTACULAR dance presented by New College featuring Atlantic 10 piece R & B. Brass Wed 16 piece R & B. Sixtymeters 16 piece R & B. and Omo Williams Trio (sponsored by James Brown). It's The Dance of the Year — Tonight at 8:30 at Wetmore & Wilson Halls, Classic & Willocks. Chicks $1, Hawks $1.50, Dregs $3

Psychology

3 - 3

Committee Meeting

Friday Dec. 12/69
12 Noon

Rm. 3050

Sidney Smith Hall

GAMMER GURTON'S

NEEDLE

St. Michael's College

Brennan Hall

TONITE

8:30 P.M.

ADM. 50c

T.C.D.S. PRESENTS
THE CANADIAN LYNX
A PLAY IN TWO ACTS
BY JERRY O'CARROLL
TONITE & TOMORROW
7:30 P.M.

CARTWRIGHT HALL, ST. HILOA'S COLLEGE,
OEVONSHIRE PLACE
$1 AT 000R

Sports Column

The sports dept. has spent this term attempting to report the activities of the U of T Athletic Establishment, administrators, coaches and players. The coverage has fallen somewhat below my hopes, but interesting things are in the works for the new year.

Of all the power group on this campus, Athletics has consistently benefited from the most lenient and uncritical coverage in The Varsity. Unfortunately, some members of the Athletic sub-culture seem to regard the paper as another public relations mouth-piece that should be confined to polite, bland game reports and personality profiles. Such a situation may have existed in the past, but the immunity of the Athletic dept. is over.

THANKS

Some of the people who were Varsity Sports this term — Jim Cowan, writer, photog, copy-reader, fall-guy and unfortunate successor; Gellius, resident genius of interfacland; Lyndon Little, rookie work-horse for soccer, football, hockey and godknowswhat-else; Peter White, aspiring obituary scribe; Colin Pilmer, taciturn successor to fiery phil. Also the various team writers — Dan McAlister (rugger), Rowland Griffin (fencing) Paul Raney (rowing) Ron Factor (sailing), Doug Kayler (track), Art Stein (gymnastics), Vic Harding and the Flux (squash), Dave Breech (water-polo), Robin Campbell (swimming). Also the daring photogs — don andrew, spencer higgins, art mcilwain, brian sweet, ted zier-vogel. Add too Dave Burt, Walt Burgess and Lynn Wolff who did stats. And the wonderful women — Pat Smith, Marie Landmesser, Leslie Johnston, Nan Flindall, Frances Flint, Sandy Pett, Judy Wright and the gals at the WAB

Special thanks to Phyllis Lea, Lorraine Pridham, Kay Boyd, Dave Copp, Mr. Mac, Ted Steadman, the coaches and players who made it all possible — and necessary.

The column marks the end of my five-year career as a Varsity writer, editor, apologist and sometime critic.

Thanks and best wishes to all who have helped make it fun in the past, but it isn't fun any longer.

Which is about all there is to say.

Farewell.

— Paul Carson

The Golden Rule

A CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

Well, gang, it's Christmas time again and you know what that means, don't you? That's right — CHRISTMAS (trademark registered), a SAC student service. I nee Gel lius wants you all (yes, you too) to have a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year and an Orgiastic Michaelmas and Beatific Twelfth Night and all those things and many more (things) besides. Ho ho ho.

CHRISTMAS CAROL

Christ was born on Christmas Day
(Which was a convenient mnemonic)
When angel-voyeurs in choirs stereophonic
Watched shepherds in fields as they lay.

And now that Christ has passed away
(Regretted, so they say, by all)
With holly you should deck the hall
And eat turkey Christmas day
And don't let any Marxist bastard tell you Christmas is bourgeois.
Much love. — Gellius.

Women's athletics go national Women's intercollegiate athletics are going big league, effective next season.

National championships will be held for gymnastics, swimming and volleyball, and a national final in basketball will be added in 1971-72.

At a meeting hosted by the U of T Women's Athletic Association last weekend, thirteen representatives of the four women's intercollegiate conference across Canada agreed on regulations governing the operation of the new national playoff system.

With the election of the first president, Miss Marilyn Russell from the University of British Columbia, the Canadian Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Union (C.W.I.A.U.) began its existence. It is the desire of the C.W.I.A.U. to immediately initiate formal discussions with the C.I.A.U. in the hopes that an affiliation of the two groups can be established.

The delegates suggested that the sites for the 70-71 championships be in Western, Central and Eastern Canada to offer national exposure to these competitions. Ideally the C.W.I.A.U. would also like to run the women's competitions in conjunction with the men's nationals in the same sports.

This move is particularly exciting to the University of Toronto as our past competitive record indicates possible representation at these national events. Toronto women's teams have won their conference swimming championship for the last two years and volleyball has had an unbeaten record since the 1966-67 season. Gymnastics, an emerging sport in the Women's Athletic Association, is also establishing itself as a threat to other conference teams.

It is interesting to note that this decision came at the same time that Quebec and Ontario universities are taking a very close look at their existing women's intercollegiate programmes. Women's athletic personnel have been working since last Spring to propose a new structure to govern their intercollegiate events. The results of their deliberations will be finalized and presented for adoption this coming March.

NEXT WEEK AT SAC

Tuesday, December 16 1:00 p.m., Education Commission at the sac office
6:30 p.m., Executive meeting at the sac office

Wednesday, December 17 7:00 General meeting auditorium in the dental building agenda: One

Campbell
Sac lawyers
Co op grocery store
Cua brief

Friday, December 19: all day sac-us - bac-cus - traccus a sac xmas party leel leel
come one - come all

POOR STUDENTS

Low on bread for Christmas presents? Cheer up!

The Textbook Store has gifts you can afford

Inflatable Zodiac Cushions

Cedar Mounted Prints (looks good, smells good)

Silk screened, hand finished Lamen Place Mats

Records (the new Donovan)

Books (e.g. The Impacted Lower Third Molar $1.95)

Starts Wed. November 26 and if you're really desperate, just say "Charge it!"

THE TEXTBOOK STORE

BOOKS

DANCE

at 888 Yonge St (formerly the Rock Pile)
Saturday Dec 13 - 1969 at 8:00 PM
RCA Recording Group,

LIGHTHOUSE

Tickets available at all Sam the Record Man Locations $3.00 each. Or at the Door, Concert Night.

Latest Smash
RCA LP
"SUITE FEELING"
(RCA LSP 4241)

SPECIAL GUESTS ON THE SAME SHOW

EDWARD BEAR

The Bear's Debut Capitol LP
"Bearings"
(Capitol - SKAD 6328)

- LIGHTSHOW BY CATHARSIS - These fine Xmas Gills available at

"Sam the Record Man"

CANADA'S LARGEST AND BEST-KNOWN RECORD STORE
347 YONGE STREET OPEN 8:30 A.M. TO MIDNIGHT
Just one short block north of Dundas - Even the bus stops at Sam's door

The Politics of Comics

by Stewart Saxe
Canadian University Press

If you are given to believing that large-scale plots are being formed to oppose social change — you might turn very quickly to the daily newspapers for proof.

Not to the news or editorial pages, prime candidates though they might be for such a theory, but to the comic section.

Almost unanimously, the daily and coloured weekend comic strips have found some way to attack student radicals and the hippie sub-culture over the last year. While often supporting the war in Vietnam and mirroring the class distinctions of North America.

And there are some reasons why it's not so very funny.

Buz Sawyer, Terry and the Pirates, Li'l Abner, Apartment 3-G, Smidgens, Flintstones, Wizard of Id, On Stage and of course Dick Tracy are a few of the common strips that have had their turn, sometimes many turns, attacking the two dissident groups.

While hippies may get constant barbs thrown at them, Smidgens for one is always upset that they've picked his flowers to give away or that they smell so bad, the real attacks are saved for the radicals.

And, in fact, those attacks have been so common that it's hard to put down to coincidence just because one believes there's no conscious plot.

Indeed, there is some evidence to suggest that a plot is closer at hand than one might think.

In 1966 the United States' leading comic strip writers were all summoned to a meeting with state department officials.

The officials pointed out to them that they had an important part to play in formulating US public opinion on Vietnam. They were then asked to help support this policy. There was very little dissent expressed at the meeting.

But this hardly explains their united stand on the wider aspects of the attack against social dissenters. Actually the explanation is closer to hand.

The comics are searching for stories based on the more unusual or exceptional things that pass by one's life, for stories based on the bigger news events of the day, and for subjects it can ridicule.

Comic writers on the average are of course just that — an average group of people endowed with a little more creativity in a particular field.

But when it comes to social consciousness and awareness there's no reason why they should be any different than the kind of people they work with — and the kind of neighbors their salaries place them beside — and indeed they're not.

Al Capp responded violently on a recent panel show to the suggestion that he's changed from the anti-right political stance he'd shown a few decades earlier — that he'd gone over.

"When American democracy was threatened by extremism from the right — by isolationism and conservatism — I attacked the right; now America is challenged by extremism from the left and I'll attack it and expose it just as vehemently," Capp entourage of flies and of course smell, allow Capp to include his attack on political activism and non-conformist youth cultures in one great parry of his pen.

They march anywhere, always without reason, and are given to the crudest inconsistencies — Capp's main point.

Carrying signs labelled "Non-violence," they will be violent — demanding better university education they have either never been to classes or are dropouts — calling for distribution of private property to the people they keep it all themselves or destroy it and of course, the means of producing more goods.

Apartment 3-G has been much more subtle than Capp — a man who hardly seems capable of subtlety.

The comic strip about three young women living in an apartment together has just finished a series that involved the girls' friendly next-door neighbor and confere — Professor Papagoras (Subtle name, eh?)

Professor Papagoras had just be-assistant, who trusted and respected the underground journalists at first, comes to learn that high-sounding motives often hide very low goals and sneaky methods. Coming to his senses he is finally able not only to bring the editors of the underground magazine to justice, but also the unscrupulous political agitator who was really behind the whole thing from the beginning.

The lessons that can be learned from this one "comic" strip series are unlimited.

- Good ideals, even when they are truly believed by most involved, are no excuse for any kind of extra-legal action because there are unscrupulous political agitators really manoeuvring the scene.

- We must not hesitate to attack those individuals who preach radical change ven when it seems to make sense because there are deeper things hiding in the shadows.

- We must understand when the authorities are driven to violent action and know that they really regret it.

- We must realize that younger people, even faculty, are led astray but most will return if handled firmly.

- We must overlook occasional extra-legal action on the part of the authorities because they are fighting such dirty underhanded opposition.

- We must remember that radical actions actually stop the changes the liberals wanted to make because they are busy doing battle and must give no ground.

It tends to all seem fairly unimportant — hidden away in the back sections of our newspapers, but it isn't really so.

These comics will be part of the overall communication process that will entrench in people's minds these views of what the new movements are all about.

Combined with similar distortions on the news pages and editorial pages, the comics will be the method by which people are turned against even listening to the activists or the youth subculture.

It wouldn't take any conscious plot — not so long as this kind of distortion can happen so thoroughly — automatically.

The comics of course have their own contradictions. It's inevitable because they take a liberal stance.

Smidgens is a good example.

Between complaining about the hippies the strip is constantly commenting on the alienation of modern life — of the common man's feeling of uselessness.

But no analysis is presented — there are no suggestions that there are real reasons for this situation or real cures.

Like the other sections of the paper, the comics limit themselves to commentary on the phenomenal aspects of our life and its problems. They never seek the roots of those problems — they never suggest solutions.

For seeking the roots of the problem is radicalism — better to have blind faith in the unstudied, mystified, process of the status quo.

"But no analysis is presented — there are no suggestions that there are real reasons for this situation or real cures."

said.

How much more representative a statement could possibly be collected from a person of Capp's economic and social position? Radical positions are attacked not on content but just for being radical.

Capp wraps his attack on the student activists and hippie groups up in one group — Students Wildly Indignant about Nearly Everything. SWINE for short.

The SWINE, who are always dressed poorly, and carrying meaningless signs, who have a constant come acting president of his university when the local underground paper threatened to publish a picture of him with his arm around one of the 3-G girls.

The incident was originally harmless of course — but you know how pictures can look.

Papagoras stands firm through this and further trials though he does lose his calm just once when he strikes a student, who had been previously attacking him in a demonstration, and hospitalizes the fellow.

During the crisis Papagoras' young Apartment 3-G

by ALEX KOTZKY

"We must understand when the authorities are driven to violent action and know that they really regret it".

Support staff considers ATS-style union

About 50 representatives of university clerical and technical staff are meeting in the News Physics building today to discuss the need for a staff association similar to the Association of Teaching Staff.

A single voice for support staff was recommended in the report of the Commission on University Government and the meeting will discuss whether this representation should be at the level of the Governing Council or the departments.

Prof. W. D. Reid of the physics department sent letters to department heads asking them to send a representative from their department. He said that response has been good and he hopes for a turnout of about 50.

If the meeting reaches a consensus, the representatives will be asked to go back to their departments, discuss the proposal for an association with their co-workers and report back to the next meeting.

If there is staff support, the representatives will draw up a constitution and set election for a board of directors.

Reid said that he felt an association would be better than a trade union since it would be parallel to the ATS yet "still provide the essential function of a trade union — unity and strength — in discussing the rights of the employees with the university."

The ATS is voluntary association, without collective bargaining rights. The 1:30 p.m. meeting is in room 257 of the New Physics building.

SAC organizes Student Tenants' Union

A Students' council working group is setting up a Student Tenants' Union to provide legal advice and counsel for student tenants.

The STU would be open to all students who are residential tenants. Registration will be voluntary.

Some students are expected to join in January. The majority will be asked to join next fall during registration.

Tony Usher (III UC) said that some 5,000 students are expected to join. There are approximately 7,000 student tenants.

The STU will be associated with the Metro Tenants' Association, in which students will be full-voting members.

The STU, however, will register its own members and provide its own services wherever possible. Students will also be asked to join local tenants' association.

The STU will make an automatic grant to the MTA and pay a nominal fee per student. It will be administered by SAC and financed jointly by SAC and the GSU.

These proposals have been discussed with the MTA but no formal agreement has been reached.

Santa's sex is questioned at annual Xmas fest

The Blue and White Society showed its Christmas spirit Wednesday night by giving out free candy canes and Eaton's carol sheets at the annual Blue and White Christmas Tree.

The Tree, one of the few remaining Christmas traditions left at U of T, attracted about 200 people including some of the more radically inclined SAC members and one self-avowed Women's Liberation member who insisted on referring to Santa Claus as "she".

The evening began when the Hart House Glee Club paraded into the Dickensian surroundings of the Great Hall led by two of their number bearing a hog's head on a silver platter complete with an apple in its mouth. In the true spirit of Christmas they then dedicated their carols to the RCMP

By far the most popular event of the evening was an excellent reading of Dylan Thomas' "A Child's Christmas in Wales" by the Assistant to the Warden of Hart House, Mr. Alan Toff.

He was followed by teaching assistant Bob Bossin who gave a radical's view of Christmas, including such old standby's as

"O Little Massey College
How still we see thee lie
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep
The rest of the world goes by."

After the customary reading of the Christmas story from the Bible, Dean A. D. Allen asked that members of the university "think about and pray for Peace, not for ourselves but for those areas where Peace is a stranger, and for Prosperity. — again not for ourselves but for those people for whom Prosperity is also a stranger."

And thus endeth the 1969 Blue and White Christmas Tree while ye merrie revellers strode out of the warm glow of the Great Hall into the rain and sleet to wend their sodden way home to ye olde term tests and essays. Amen.

The Students' Administrative Council is sponsoring discussions next week on proposals for a co-op grocery to provide some of the services once handled by the late-lamented Mac's (RIP).

Progress with the plan depends on the number of students who would use the co-op store and the number willing to help set it up. Anyone interested in participating should leave his name in the SAC office.

ENROLLMENT DATE EXTENDED
TO DECEMBER 31st

TO ENROLL FOR YOUR UNIVERSITY
HEALTH AND ACCIDENT PLAN

IS YOUR PROTECTION MISSING?

A MAN WITHOUT INSURANCE
IS LIKE A SNAIL WITHOUT A SHELL.

THREE PLANS TO CHOOSE FROM

PLAN I

EXTENDED HEALTH CARE

AND DEDUCTIBLE ON ACCIDENT BENEFITS

PLAN II

OVERSEAS AND AMERICAN STUDENTS

STUDENTS ON STUDENT VISA

PLAN III

NEWLY LANDED IMMIGRANT

INTERIM HOSPITAL COVERAGE
EXTENDICARE PLUS LIFE

LIFE

$10,000 FOR $22.00 A YEAR

USE REGULAR APPLICATION

You need this coverage if you fall under one of the following categories:

1. Canadian students who are covered by OHSIP and OHSC and need extended health care
2. Students in Canada on a student visa and are not covered OHSIP or OHSC
3. Students in Ontario from another province who do not have coverage from that province
4. Newly landed immigrant students who are required to wait three months for the provincial plans to become effective.

ADMIN. — JOHN INGLE,
700 BAY ST. 364.4114
BAY AT GERRARD

NOTE: If you have not received your brochure, additional forms may be obtained of the Registrar's office, Student Council Office, Student International Students' Centre, the Health Service, or Faculty Offices.

SAC needs

20 students for INTERIM DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE

to act as CAPUT until Campbell Report is implemented.

6 of the twenty will be chosen by lot.

Address applications to SAC Judicial Committee — c/o SAC Office

Deadline — Friday, Dec. 12 — 5:00 P.M.

FREE SKATING

After This Friday' night's Hockey Game.
Blues vs McMaster

Compliments of the Blue & White Society

Hi there, I'm your friendly conscious agent of American Imperialism.

And I'm here to show you a foreign policy to protect you and your loved ones.

It covers you and your family in 3 ways..

1) Planned Perpetual Underdevelopment

If you're in the $40 a year bracket you sure don't want to risk that paycheck for a revolution! By encouraging and financing safe and sane military governments AMERICAN EMPIRE © provides law and order at a low resource and labour premium.

2) Cultural and Economic Control and Influence

If you're a country on the move, in the swing of what's happening and you just don't want to be bothered about all those little icky budgetary problems like ownership, hand the keys over to AMERICAN EMPIRE © For only a small drain on your national resources we'll provide the kind of security and luxuries you've become accustomed to having.

— or — if you're in a hurry and these two are unsatisfactory

— try —

3) Napalm

Our latest development thought up by our researchers, in the tradition of such past plans as the atomic bomb, germ warfare, the M-1, and as far back as the Cavalry Charge and the Bowie Knife. If you're the impatient type and can't wait the 50 or so years it takes for AE's © other plans to work, then napalm is what you're looking for. This coverage is the kind that sticks with you and keeps on yielding effectively even if your home is destroyed by fire or some other disaster.

So if you think that you're in line for our coverage and even if you don't why not see your conscious agent today? He's really not such a special guy. He probably lives next door, plays golf, or football with his kids. Maybe he's your local cop, or teaches your kids. See him today. He's real friendly. Or drop into the friendly American Empire © office in your nearest country.

THE American Empire ©

CANADA LTD.

Washington, Ottawa, London, Lisbon, Madrid, Rome, Bonn, Bern, The Hague, Copenhagen, Brussels, Vienna, Oslo, Dublin, Conberro, Saigon, Manila, Bangkok, Seoul, Rangoon, Kuala Lumpur, Taipei, New Delhi, Tel Aviv, Karachi, Johannesburg, Lagos, Salisbury, Brazilia, Buenos Aires, Quito, Panama City, Lima, Bogota, Santiago, Mexico City, Tegucigalpa, San Juan, Guanatanamo, Paris, Vientiane, Caracas, and many, many more to serve you.

Strike leaders remain jobless at New College cafeteria

By JIM STRUTHERS

Thirty-eight of the 42 New College cafeteria workers who lost their jobs when the college changed catering firms, have been re-hired by Beaver Foods, the new catering firm.

The workers, demanding job security, had gone on strike when they were given notice of dismissal in the third week of December.

The four employees who were not re-hired were strike leaders, identified by campus police in interview sessions.

On Dec. 15, the cafeteria workers were informed that their employers, Commercial Catering Company, had lost the contract for both New College dining rooms, and that they would be unemployed as of Dec. 23. On Dec. 16, they voted to strike.

The New College kitchen workers were not unionized, and this fact was reflected in their working conditions. Employees worked 14-hour shifts, had no pension plan, never received a vacation outside of the seasonal Christmas and summer layoffs. But up to Dec. 16, they at least had jobs.

One month earlier, the New College administration told Commercial Catering Co. that they would not be renewing their contract for the food servicing of both New College dining rooms.

Commercial Caterers had held the contract for the past five years. Student complaints about the quality of the food and two instances of food poisoning in the last three years led to the administration's decision.

The workers were given only a week's notice by their employers of the forthcoming change in management.

The loss of two such large operations meant that Commercial Caterers couldn't offer the workers employment in its other kitchens. Thus, the only chance for job security was if Beaver Caterers, the company awarded the new contract, agreed to re-hire the 42 kitchen workers.

On Dec. 15, a delegation of workers and students, organized by the Worker-Student Alliance, marched on Simcoe Hall to meet with the Director of Administrative Services, M. A. Malcolm, and demanded that the university guarantee the reinstatement of the 42 cafeteria workers as part of the terms of the new contract with Beaver Food Co.

Malcolm then said it was within the university's power to have this condition stipulated in the agreement, but asked for a day to consider his answer.

The next day he refused to guarantee the worker's job security. He promised that the new company would attempt to find places for as many workers as possible, and that job interviews would begin that afternoon.

Application forms were distributed, but there were no job interviews that afternoon.

With only three days remaining in the term, a strike-committee of the workers organized a walk-out. From 6 a.m., Dec. 17, the New College dining rooms were closed.

The next day Malcolm said the strikers would be hired if they agreed to be interviewed individually.

Dec. 19, the last day of the term, the workers decided to undergo the interviews. The campus police presided over the procedure. During the course of the afternoon, 38 of the original 42 cafeteria workers were re-hired.

The four most militant strikers weren't offered jobs with the new company. One no longer wishes to work at the university but the other three, John Kincaid, Doug Annabelle and Peter Swiorkowski, are still seeking jobs from Beaver Food Co. with no success.

They said that, during the interviews, the campus police pointed them out to the new company's officials as the four leaders of the strike, and that they are being singled out for their actions in organizing the strike.

The New College administration disclaims any responsibility for the job security of the cafeteria workers. It claims the issue was strictly between the employees and the two companies.

"It seems silly to suggest that Beaver had the obligation to hire any of the old employees," New College principal D. G. Ivey told The Varsity last night.

"I'm surprised that they hired as many as they did."

But Dr. Ivey said that, since the university was not the employer, it was not responsible.

Ivey admits the university could have insisted on re-hiring of all the former workers, but he says this would have contradicted the purpose of relying on catering companies for food service.

Two of the striking New College cafeteria workers (left) and two sympathetic students (right) picket the service entrance of New College during the last days of the '69 Fall term at U of T.

"The point of the university's dealing with outside people is that the university doesn't have to worry about the problem of personnel in the food-service industry. I think it would have been very foolish to lay this restriction down to the new caterer, since it puts back onto the university the responsibility they avoid by dealing with an outside caterer," he added.

However, if the wages paid by the administration to the kitchen workers of Hart House are any indication, the plight of the New College Cafeteria staff would not have been appreciably different had they been employed by the university instead of a catering company.

Ivey said the problems were the quality of the food, a responsibility of the caterer, and the way in which it was served, which depends upon the personnel.

He feels it would have been unfair to ask Beaver Food to improve the service with essentially the same personnel.

Ivey expressed sympathy for the unionization of workers in the food-service industry.

"If this was a blow in the direction of unionizing these people, I'm all for it. I don't think that in this particular instance this was the case," he said.

Meanwhile, three of the cafeteria workers who want their jobs back face continued unemployment and the 38 who were re-hired have no guarantee that the same thing won't happen again.

There will be a rally at Simcoe Hall at 12:30 today to support the efforts of the three unemployed cafeteria workers to regain their jobs.

Students sit in after Loyola fires 27 faculty

MONTREAL (CUP) — Students at Loyola College began an indefinite sit-in Wednesday in front of administration president Patrick Malone's office protesting the administration firing of 27 faculty members.

The administration's sudden purge is the most drastic escalation of administration interference in academic affairs to date at Loyola.

The students' council voted

Wednesday to support the sit-in and threatened to ask the Quebec government to intervene in the latest stage of the four-month old series of crises which included the unexplained firing of nuclear physics Prof. S. A. Santhanam.

The council unanimously demanded that within two weeks the Jesuit administration of Loyola retract 27 non-renewal contracts issued in a surprise move just before the Christmas holidays.

The council also voted $50 to provide food and other supplies to the 70 students sitting-in and authorized the council executive to grant further money as needed by the demonstrators.

The council's action, endorsed by its executive, came as a surprise at the college as many of the councillors were elected an anti-activist platform in a backlash against the policies of former students' council president Marcel Nouvet.

Departmental officials said they were not consulted in the firings, although they submitted recommendations to the administration on contract renewal. The recommendations were ignored.

If the administration does not comply with the council's demands then the students' association "will consider seeking the intervention of the Quebec government" in the affair.

The council said "at the very minimum" the non-renewals — actually firings — must be considered null and void "until there is evidence that all customary procedures or their equivalent have been implemented."

The college's English department, nearly crippled by

ATTENTION LAW SCHOOL APPLICANTS

NEW ADMISSION REQUIREMENT

Law schools at The University of Western Ontario, the University of Toronto, Osgoode Hall, York University, the University of Windsor, and Queen's University will require all applicants for the year 1970-71 to take the Law School Admission Test. The test will be given at most Ontario university campuses and in major Canadian cities on the following dates in 1970: February 14, 1970, April 11, 1970, May 16, 1970 and July 25, 1970. Since many schools commence selection first year students in the spring, candidates for admission to next year's classes are advised to take the test no later than May 16 if not in February. The test originates from Educational Testing Services, Princeton, New Jersey, and is administered throughout the United States and Canada. The Ontario schools have adopted the test as a result of the growing number of applicants in recent years. The purpose of the test is to provide the schools with additional information upon which admissions decisions can be made. Application forms and further information can be obtained from the admissions office of any of the above five law schools or by writing directly to Educational Testing Services, Princeton 08540, New Jersey, U.S.A.

RENT A TAPE RECORDER
BRAND NEW CASSETTES
AS LOW AS 50¢ DAILY 922-7702

ADVERTISING DEADLINE
Mon Paper-Thurs. Noon
Wed Paper- Fri Noon
Fri Paper - Tues Noon

The City's Oldest Surviving Church

LITTLE TRINITY

ANGELICAN - EVANGELICAL MINISTRY,
Rev. Harry Rakoton
ASSOCIATE Pastor, Thomas
Harvey
Services 11 a.m.
& 7 p.m.

42 King St. E. near Parliament

Readings for a Drama Centre Studio production of Anouilh's Waltz of the Toreadors are being held this Wednesday 2-5 p.m. in Room 2073, Thursday 1-5 p.m. in Room 3173, and Friday 1-5 p.m. in Room 2173. Medical Sciences Building. Those interested in acting or production please attend at these times, or contact Robert Lackenbauer, 923-2198, in the evenings.

YIDDISH FESTIVAL

FRI JAN 9, 8:30 P.M.
ONEG SHABBET at TEMPLE SINAL, 210 WILSON AVE.
IRVING LAYTON NATHAN COHEN Prof. RUTH WISSE McGill University CANTOR SEVERIN WENGORT
SAT JAN 10, 8:15 P.M.
FOLKSONG FESTIVAL at LAWRENCE PARK COLLEGIATE, 125 CHATSWORTH DRIVE
SHLOMO CARLEBACH Hippy Folk Singer THE TRAVELLERS DAVID ELLIN of New York
ADMISSION $2.25
STUDENTS - Advance Sale $1.00 at door $1.50

SUN JAN 11, 11:00 A.M.
2 WORKSHOPS in JEWISH FOLK MUSIC YM/YWHA 4588 BATHURST ST BRUNCH SERVED
Dr. JERRY GREY of THE TRAVELLERS DAVID ELLIN of N.Y.
ADMISSION $1.50 STUDENTS $1.25
SUN JAN 11, 8:30 P.M.
YIDDISH CULTURAL EVENING at Postlans Auditorium, 3560 BATHURST ST
DAVID ELLIN RABBI IRWIN WITTY J KLIGMAN
ADMISSION $1.50 ALL EVENTS $4.00
TICKETS: POLLOCKS • HILLEL HOUSE • NEGEV • HYMAN'S YORK U Progressive Students for Israel • YM/YWHA
OR CALL 363-7190

Sponsored by CANADIAN JEWISH CONGRESS

The University College Search Committee, composed of representatives of the Teaching Staff, Students and Alumni of the College, and concerned with recommending to the President nominations for the position of Principal of University College, invites suggestions of names of persons, either within or outside the University of Toronto, for consideration by the Committee. Nominations, with biographical information for persons who might not be known by members of the Committee, are required by January 19, 1970, and should be addressed to the Chairman of the Committee, Mr. J. H. Sword, Executive Vice-President (Academic) and Provost, University of Toronto, Simcoe Hall, Toronto 181.

THE PRIVATE MAN

An Original Play By ALLAN STRATTON
Entered in the Dominion Drama Festival
JANUARY 13 - 17, 1970 8:30 P.M.
CENTRAL LIBRARY THEATRE
Admission: Tues., Wed., Thurs., $1.50
Fri., Sat., $2.00
Students..... $1.00
Tickets: Box Office, or Wymilwood, Vic.

ROCHDALE COLLEGE

daughters of the social revolution would appreciate your presence in their warm and cozy midst for their forthcoming second of many terms.

Applications are being taken at present (NOW!)

The cost:

Double rooms with community kitchen/$50-53 mo.

Double rooms with kitchen in unit/$60 mo.

Meals $1.00 or $11.00 the week.

Term prices available.

341 BLOOR ST. W.

921-3168

come live with us

ROCHDALE COLLEGE

Bissell calls injunction inappropriate in Thorson disruption

University President Claude Bissell has denied the administration planned to use court injunctions in December to deal with disruptions in Prof. T. L. Thorson's Political Science 101 class.

Dr. Bissell's denial came in reply to a letter from the Students Administrative Council following a Dec. 13 Globe and Mail story on classroom "disruptions" at U of T.

The President doubted an injunction would have been appropriate in the Thorson case, and said he felt the Political Economy Department agreed.

Dr. Bissell reaffirmed that the Campbell Report will shape future university discipline policy.

SAC said the injunction strategy violates the spirit and letter of the Campbell Report.

The president also said he hoped any decisions to use injunctions would be made by the central administration and not by individual professors or departments, even though they have the legal right to do so.

The Globe and Mail story by Ross Munro said several administrators were attending Prof. Thorson's lectures.

"If and when the class gets out of control," the story read,

"their plan is to rise, declare the class disrupted, dismiss the students, and go downtown and obtain a court injunction enjoining students from engaging in further disruptions."

If the disruptions occurred again, "police would be called, and the students would be arrested for contempt of court."

"The injunction strategy was arrived at after discussions with administrators up to and including University President Claude Bissell," the article added.

The SAC Executive held an emergency meeting Dec. 14 and asked Dr. Bissell to clarify his position in light of his promise that the Campbell Report would shape future university discipline policy.

The Campbell Report recommends negotiations with persons involved in "non-destructive" campus disruptions, and an examination of the factors causing disturbances before any outside force or legal procedures are employed.

"If a demonstration cannot be solved by such negotiations," it says, "the use of an injunction from a regular court might be considered, or it might be feasible to hold a referendum on the issues involved in the demonstration."

The SAC letter to Dr. Bissell expressing concern over Mr. Munro's article, asked the President:

- if the plan outlined in the article represented U of T administration policy;
- what the administration position was regarding the use of injunctions by individual professors or departments;
- what Dr. Bissell's position would be if the Political Economy department or Prof. Thorson did seek an injunction;
- if Dr. Bissell's statement of Oct. 1 on the Campbell report still stood.

Dr. Bissell's reply three days later repudiated Munro's account, although the Globe reporter says he "stands by his story" that there was administration acquiescence in the injunction strategy.

Prof. Arthur Kruger, Undergraduate Secretary of the Political Economy Department sat in Prof. Thorson's classes.

"The injunction strategy was discussed," he said last night, "but I don't recall a firm decision having been made."

"There was no firm decision on the strategy to be used, or that mechanically someone would jump up, dismiss the class and get an injunction," he added.

Dec. 17, 1969

Dear Mr. Abols,

Policy at the University of Toronto is not established in the columns of daily newspapers. It is the responsibility of bodies constituted for that purpose.

During this period of transition in disciplinary matters, however, it is difficult to relate policy decisions to specific bodies and we must accordingly draw upon precedent and the results of authoritative discussions. In particular we must draw upon the Campbell Report.

In the present case, I welcomed the attempt by the student course union to resolve the problems facing Prof. Thorson's class, and I hope these efforts will be successful. I believe that incidents of this nature are essentially a matter for determination by the class concerned, or if that fails, by the teaching departments and the council of the faculty of the university concerned.

If such efforts prove unsuccessful, then there are a number of options open to the university. These include reference of the problem to the existing university disciplinary body, the Caput.

If such a reference took place, every effort would be made to ensure that the Caput consideration of this matter took place along with representative students of the university.

"Another possibility, as the Campbell Report suggested in chapter 7, is the use of a court injunction by the civil court, should the circumstances seem grave enough to the university to warrant such an action.

"The university cannot, of course, prevent an individual professor from using an injunction procedure, since this is a right given to him by the laws of the land. I would deeply regret it, however, if this happened, since my view is that it is only the university which should decide upon such an expedient as the use of an injunction.

... The decision whether or not to use an injunction would depend on the circumstances of each case. So far I have no information which would lead me to suppose that the use of an injunction would be appropriate in the case to which your question refers. I believe this is also the view of the department and faculty concerned.

"As you know, we are now in the middle of discussion concerning the implementation of the Campbell report. The committee of academic staff and students to which I referred in my statement of Oct. 1 is now at work on the business of initiating discussion of the Report, of formulating agreed recommendations, and of generally facilitating the implementation of the Report. It continues to be true that the Campbell Report, and the campus deliberation of that report, will shape university policy on discipline in the University of Toronto.

Yours sincerely,
Claude Bissell
President

Integrate staff - student washrooms ?

SAC's benevolent spirit still pervades

It was give-away night at the Students' Administrative Council meeting Wednesday and in a final fling of Christmas Spirit, Santa SAC handed over $500 to the Stop Spadina Save Our City Committee, $200 to the American Deserters Committee, 43 acres of land to the Outing Club, and the Education Commission to Craig Heron (IV UC).

Whether the Education Commission was the booby prize of the evening, or not, Heron seemed pleased to accept Gus Abol's nomination and he was unanimously elected SAC Education Commissioner to replace Lee Coulter (III VIC), who resigned last meeting.

A strong representation by sociology professor Allan Powell, and SSSOCC leader, netted them $500.

Calling his Spadina committee the "only committee in the city that has managed to stay politically clean," Powell stressed the urgency of the group's efforts.

"We have to mobilize the city by Jan. 26 when the Metro transportation committee meets," he declared, "This is more than Spadina.

BEGINNING OF END

"Day by day and week by week I am more amazed and horrified at the stupidity that seems to have resulted in the possibility that Spadina is the beginning of the destruction of the city as we know it and of other North American cities."

Powell quoted figures compiled by U of T economist David Nowlan and his wife for a soon-to-be-published book on the Spadina Expressway. The statistics indicate that it will cost $5 per car using the expressway just to pay the operating costs without reducing any of the initial capital outlay of $200 million.

Responding to Powell's suggestion that this is one issue which could heal the rift between the university and the city, SAC agreed to give the committee $500 to circulate a petition seeking support to all staff members.

SAC President Gus Abols also proposed holding a demonstration sometime around Jan. 25 to build up student interest in the Spadina question. ("If we are going to have a demonstration this year, . . .")

The Outing Club ended up with the jack-pot of the evening when SAC agreed unanimously to make a $7,000 offer for 43 acres of land near Collingwood, adjacent to the hostel which the Outing Club is building.

SUMMER CAMP

Although SAC will own the land, the Outing Club will have its use.

Some SAC reps suggested that it might also be lent to a camp for underprivileged children in the summer.

SAC also endorsed the Student Tenant's Association, a newly-formed group which is trying to organize students renting in Toronto, supported Radio Varsity's bid for an FM broadcasting licence and demanded an end to separate staff-student washrooms.

the University
Bookroom's
January
Sale
for exhausted Post-Christmas pocket books starts January 12th... for one week... featuring:
books
cheap!
cheap!
cheap!
cheap!

BOOKS

The students want problems, not answers. They want probes, not exams. They want making, matching. They want struggle, not goals. They want new images of identity, not careers. They want insights, not classified data
—Marshall McLuhan

who's responsible?

When you examine the statements of all the parties involved in the recent strike of cafeteria workers at New College, one word stands out: responsibility.

Who is responsible for the workers' job security?

Commercial Caterer's, their former employer, could not offer the workers jobs since the loss of such a large operation as New College is too great to allow them to distribute the workers among their other operations.

The new company Beaver Food, is under no obligation to hire the old employees if their contract doesn't stipulate it and, indeed, they would have a good case in arguing that better service couldn't be provided with the same staff.

The administration's case is simply that they are not the workers' employers and that they should not be held responsible for their job security.

But the simple truth is that, without a union, in a capitalist society workers have no job security.

The responsibility falls on the university.

The university continues to oppose the unionization of its employees: or in the case of its food servicing, it delegates the responsibility to outside caterers so it can wash its hands when a contract expires and workers are faced with unemployment.

It's true, of course, that of the 42 cafeteria employees, 38 were eventually rehired. But for over a week, and at a time when most people were preparing for the Christmas season, 42 workers didn't know if they would have enough money to see them through the holidays and three of them are still unemployed.

If it was strictly a matter between the new employers, Beaver Food and the workers as the administration claims, then why were the campus police present at the job interviews and why did they feel it necessary to point out the four strike leaders to the company officials?

If there is an answer to this question it must lie in the administration's consistent hostility to any attempts on the part of campus workers to organize themselves into a union, a fact which the Canadian Union of Public Employees knows only too well.

A unionized food service staff, even though not employed directly by the university, would undoubtedly raise the wages of the workers causing a subsequent raise in the caterer's price.

In resisting that kind of price-increase as part of their programmed "efficiency", the university is directly responsible for the low-wages paid to the workers.

As the "spectre" of unionization on the U of T campus becomes more and more immanent, it's conceivable that the administration will contract out other service operations such as janitorial and maintenance work.

That process artificially divides the real employer (the university) from the employee by setting up a middleman — the contracting company.

Eaton's employed a similar strategy when they hired all of their janitorial workers last year and hired a contracting firm to supply the labour.

The policy of contracting out is just an institutional way of avoiding the responsibility the university has to ensure good job conditions to the people who work for it.

Amidst the battles over student power that have been waged over the past couple of years, the support staff at the U of T have been ignored by students and administration.

"... And did you voluntarily accept a free, hot meal from known Black Panthers at nine a.m., September nine, nineteen hundred and sixty-nine?"

the varsity

TORONTO

Editor: Bruce Johnson
 Review Editor: Larry Kavan
 Associate Review Editor: Jack McCalligan
 News Editor: Geoff Minge
 City Editor: Louis Bruchman
 Sports Editor: Neil Steiner
 CUP Editor: Jim Cowan 523 4053
 Photo Editor: Mike R...

Executive Editor: Alan Reid
 Assistant Manager: Editor: D...
 Editor: ...
 Assistant: ...

The Varsity, a member of Canada's University Press, was founded in 1880 and is published by the Students' Administrative Council of the University of Toronto. Printed by Wide Offset Publications Ltd. Opinions expressed in this magazine are not necessarily those of the Students' Administrative Council or the administration of the university. Editorial complaints about the editorial or business operation of this paper may be addressed to the Chairman, Campus Relations Committee, Varsity Board of Directors, 91 St. George St.

the festival of the oppressed moves into another decade of production and absurdism... Dave teaches home the difference between white and black while Michael Koufs as the cold war is over an weep site thore contentively... "It is this communism," we ask, as we see peely plays the numbers game with c.b. on page 5... "was scainight as lix, and bab vice-bab, however over the mean production, clare had a booker idea (on a clare day you can see favorov), struthers struggled with louis who couldn't see the barricade for the trees, while heather moated the scary ship of discontent, cowan notified the monday meet, "that's ok," he added, stranded in the sports office... koren kouted the kopy and knox from the you be seo pooled at the varsity mess while he sharpened his pencil in moo's ears... don and spencer did things in the dormroom... larry plugged pierre and harriet gave proof to the press... it's all part of a process, george rattled with mox at cup cut, while i de-ductively look for god.

LETTERS

In the past few years, when some members of the university community urged that relations among us be more egalitarian or more brotherly than in society at large, they were told they were being Utopian. Well, maybe so. Maybe there's no need for us to be better than the rest of society, but should we be worse? Should we be indifferent to the possibility that large numbers of workers on campus may be paid less here than for similar work "in the world"? that they may have less job security here, and fewer means of defending their economic and human interests?

It has sometimes been argued that it is justifiable for professors to be paid less relatively than other professional people because the academic life is its own reward. Even if this were true, it certainly can't be extended to the campus workers who have only a few weeks holiday per year, who are not flying off to exciting conferences in Ottawa or Paris, who are not released from work to attend interesting lectures or special campus events. Cleaning off students' dirty trays, mopping up after professors' dirty boots — it's the same dirt here as anywhere else.

Do we professors want the tax-payers and voters of Ontario who receive $1.50 to $3 per hour to support our efforts to raise the salary floor for, say, an associate professor at the University of Toronto from its present $12,300? Then, let us not merely agonize about whether "the plumber (we) pass in the hall may be making more than (we) are" (to quote a recent ATS report), but also concern ourselves with members of our community who earn $1.50 per hour.

Do you students claim that you will be better educated if methods of examination and grading and your other "working conditions" at the university are changed? Then how about using the same reasoning in regard to the "working conditions" of the huge staff of people who serve you here — especially when you start griping about the lousy food or service?

I hope that the various segments of the support staff, whether unionized or non-unionized, paid salaries or paid by the hour, will soon inform the rest of the university community about their conditions of work and about what must be done to remedy their grievances.

Nolalie Zeman Davis
Associate Professor of History

The Commission on University Government talks about the concept of community at the U of T, but devotes little attention to the important third estate of that community that exists alongside faculty and students.

In many cases, the support staff form more of a community with students than do the faculty.

Yet they are the most neglected members of this "academic" community. Their service is bought with the maximum efficiency, even at the expense of inhuman wages and working conditions.

Perhaps it's time the university catered to the workers.

VARSITY STAFF: Important meeting Monday 1 p.m. in the Varsity office. All staff should attend.

NEW STAFF: We need you. We need you if you want to work on a newspaper as a reporter, a features writer, a photographer, an artist, a designer, a typist, or an office clown. Come to the Varsity office Monday 1 p.m.

ESPECIALLY: We need you especially if you have experience in design, i.e. laying out the pages of the paper. You might have noticed that the position Design no longer exists on our masthead. We need someone with experience to fill that position. And there's a small salary involved. Come to the Varsity office 1 p.m. Monday.

If the function of the university is the advancement of learning, the presumption must be that those who are farther advanced in learning should have more say in university policy.

A look at the CUG Numbers Game

by C. B. Macpherson

Professor of Political Science

The strength of the case for a one-tier governing body for the whole university, as against any two-tier system — a case which I consider extremely strong — depends partly on the composition of the proposed single Governing Council. I shall argue that the composition of the governing body should be decided on grounds of the function the university is or should be expected to perform, rather than on analogies with either feudal or democratic political societies; and that, on grounds of aptness to perform that function, the faculty should have at least parity with all others together on the governing council.

The reasoning offered by CUG for its recommendation of 20 students, 20 faculty, 20 laymen, is surprisingly slight, and rather odd. The CUG case for the inclusion of six ex officio administrators is well made, and I do not question it. But why, for the rest, 20-20-20? The Report first lays down the importance of the whole question of proportions by speaking of any discussion of it as "the numbers game", then suggests that the numbers "in the final analysis" tend to be merely symbolic because the three groups are unlikely to vote as blocs. I find this unconvincing. Is it not quite likely that the student and faculty groups would on some crucial issues vote as blocs? The Report itself does a good deal to encourage them to act as blocs at lower levels, and the Commission's own deliberations appear to have been conducted with a steady consciousness of the blocs in its own membership. Numbers, we may conclude, are important enough to require more than passing attention.

Yet the only reason offered by CUG for recommending equal numbers of student, faculty, and lay members is that numbers have "a psychological value in group interaction through discussion": if any one of these three "estates" had "merely nominal" representation its representatives would feel inferior and would contribute less than they should to the discussion; hence parity of the three estates is to be preferred.

There are three things wrong with this reasoning.

One is that it considers nothing between "merely nominal" numbers and equal numbers. But suppose a case were made on other grounds for a proportion of, say, 10-10-20: would either of the 10s be considered "merely nominal"? If not, the harmful effect attributed to nominal representation does not apply to everything less than equal representation, and the argument for equal numbers does not follow.

But if "nominal" is intended to include anything less than equal representation, then the proposition on which the argument relies is that any substantial inferiority of numbers leads to inferiority of performance. That proposition is false (which is the second thing wrong with the argument). It is at least contradicted by one very relevant piece of evidence, namely, the behaviour, over the last several years, of the elected faculty members of the President's Council. They have always been substantially fewer than the administration members — five, later seven, elected faculty out of well over 20 — but that has never led them to take an inferior part in the deliberations of the whole body.

The third and most important thing wrong about the reasoning is that it treats students, faculty, and laymen as three "estates" within the university and leaves it to be assumed that the three groups have equal contributions to make to the determination of university policy. The absurdity of treating the lay representatives, who are by definition from outside the university, as an "estate" within the university, is less objectionable than the assumption that the three groups have equal contributions to make. No grounds are offered for this assumption. And the Commission itself in effect rejects it, at least in respect of the lay component.

The Commission argues the case for all lay component at all on quite other grounds, namely, on grounds of the watchdog function the laymen are expected to perform on behalf of the outside community. The argument is that the public, which pays, is entitled to have some direct representation on the top university body to ensure that what has become a very big business should be soundly managed. Whether lay representation, partly or wholly appointed by the government, is an effective or the most effective way of ensuring sound management might be disputed. But at least the Commission is right in basing the argument for lay members on the ground that they are outsiders. In any case, if we accept the need for the council to contain a watchdog, all that follows is that there should be enough of a lay element to be a watchdog: no pretence is needed that they would be expected to contribute equally with the students or faculty to the determination of policy. So why 20? Why not nine, which would be enough to give lay representation on each of the proposed nine standing committees of the governing council?

The relative size of the student and faculty components should similarly be determined by their relative aptness to perform their part in the functions the governing council would have. Apart from the watchdog function, what functions would the council have? Bearing in mind the very substantial areas of decision-making which the Commission urges should be devolved on Department and Faculty councils, the main function of the University Council would be to set policy about academic and financial priorities so as best to promote the university as a centre for the advancement of learning in the broadest sense.

I take that to include:

the creation of new knowledge, new critical understanding, about man, society, and the universe;

the continuous development of new generations of people — students — who will, later, create more new knowledge and critical understanding; the spreading of knowledge and critical understanding to as many as possible who desire it.

I do not think that the advancement of learning, so understood, can be best promoted by the faculty alone. The second and third functions clearly cannot be performed unless there is active co-operation of students and faculty in the teaching and learning process, and this is not likely to be forthcoming now unless students know that they have significant representation on the top body as well as at the other levels. But it does not follow that they need equal representation with the faculty on the top body.

I do not see how it can be taken for granted that students are equally competent, with faculty to decide on over-all university policy. The faculty have, on the average, been at the job of creating knowledge, and of increasing understanding, longer than have the students; the faculty are the most advanced students; they have credentials which those less far along need not and, in the nature of the case, do not (yet) have; the faculty do know more about knowledge.

I know it is the view of some students that the very fact that the faculty have been at it longer is a disqualification, in that the combined effect of rapid social change and professional specialization makes the professors insensitive or resistant to changes in the kind of knowledge and understanding the world now needs. That North American universities on the whole have exhibited massive insensitivity is not to be denied, though I would assert that this university is less culpable than the typical United States university. But it has to be noticed that it is in each case not the faculty but the university as presently governed (never by the faculty) that has shown this insensitivity.

I would not for the moment suggest that giving all power to the faculty would correct this disastrous failing. I do not propose that all power should be given to the faculty. I think it is sufficiently evident that any rectification of the present situation requires a combination of faculty and student power.

But in what proportions? Here surely we have to weigh the faculty claim of superior acquaintance with the discipline of knowledge against the student claim of continually self-renewing freshness of insight into the problems that beset humanity. If we could assume that the students as a whole, and only the students, had that insight, we might conclude that the balance was equal. But we cannot make that assumption. No doubt the most socially-conscious students have more of this insight than the least socially-conscious faculty. And in the last two or three years it has been on the whole the students with the most advanced social consciousness who have been elected to the most important positions (as, for instance, in CUG itself).

But it would be foolish to erect a permanent system of university government on the assumption that that pattern of election is permanent. And even on that assumption, it is by no means clear that student representatives should, in the interest of the university as a continuing body devoted to the enhancement of knowledge and of critical understanding, govern equally with faculty representatives. On the contrary, if the function of the university is the advancement of learning, the presumption must be that those who are farther advanced in learning should have more say in university policy.

Given this, and given that neither the case made for administration members nor the case made for lay members on the governing council requires a substantial number of administrators or of laymen, it does not seem unreasonable to suggest that the faculty should have parity with all the others together.

EXTINCTION OF THE BLACK PANTHERS

NEW YORK (CUP-LAS) — In a bald attempt at extinction of the Black Panther Party, the American government is waging a nation-wide offensive with an arsenal of frame-ups, no bail, kangaroo courts whose judges conduct half the prosecution, and just plain bullets.

Within the past six months alone, more than 40 Panther leaders and about 125 members have been arrested, and many are facing charges which could lead to life imprisonment or death. In the few years the Party has been around, 28 Black Panthers have been murdered. Panther offices in a number of cities have been attacked by police, who sometimes rain automatic rifle fire at the walls and windows as they storm the steps. (They bring warrants for fugitives; non-existent or miles away.) Hidden assassins have shot at Panthers on the streets of Kansas City twice this fall.

Chicago is turning in some of the ugliest news. In the week which ended with the pre-dawn slaying of Illinois Panther leader Fred Hampton December 8, police shot two Panthers on the street and severely beat three others in a Chicago apartment. The week's toll: three dead and two critically wounded. Other cities also recently reported developments in the government's attempt to wipe out the Panther organization.

In another pre-dawn raid December 8, three more Panthers were shot by cops at the party's Los Angeles headquarters. The four-hour gun-battle with 250 cops was marked by an attempt by police to dynamite the roof off the building.

Party chairman Bobby Seale, recently sentenced to four years in jail for demanding his right to representation by a lawyer of his own choice in Judge Julius Hoffman's Chicago courtroom, is now in San Francisco County Jail in the "hole" — a cold four feet by seven feet cell — where he was thrown November 24 after the police brutally choked and tortured him.

Seale described his ordeal the next day in a taped interview with his lawyer, Charles Garry:

BEATEN FOR "CONTRABAND"

One of them grabbed my testicles while the other was choking me; and the others were holding my arms. They were trying to put handcuffs on me. He grabbed and yanked my testicles and penes. And the choking was so vicious that the only thing I remember after that was I was thrown on the floor inside the solitary confinement cell.

The incident began when a guard found the Black Panther newspaper in Seale's possession — the guard told Seale his visiting privileges would be eliminated as punishment for holding such "contraband."

Garry had given Seale the paper with the permission of the deputy sheriff. Chairman Bobby was preparing materials to aid Garry in defending him against the extradition proceedings which may take him to Connecticut to face a trumped-up murder charge, and Seale needed the Black Panther paper to write out an outline explaining some of the statements the Party had made.

Seale told the guard that he (Seale) had a right to the paper and said,

"Since you're violating my rights, then I just see you as a pig. You're a pig a hundred times."

The deputy sheriffs decided to put Seale in the hole for 10 to 15 days. Seale said that he would go to the hole, but that he would take his legal papers with him. At that point the guards jumped and beat him.

REVERSE TOILET

In his taped remarks, Seale described conditions suffered his first day in the hole:

"Every hour and a half," he said, "the toilet would flush up, flooding the floor with defecation and piss. It's not really a toilet, just a hole in the floor."

"I had to lie in it all day. You lie on the floor; it's kind of like a rubber-padded cell but it's cold, there's no cot, no blanket, just floor and piss and defecation."

Seale told Garry his throat was tremendously swollen from the choking. "I can't hardly hear or talk," he said. He added, "I'm slightly ruptured, and the infection I had in Chicago is coming back."

Panther Party chairman Bobby Seale was strapped into a chair and gagged in a Chicago courtroom last year while being tried for "conspiracy."

police Dec. 1 and pleaded guilty to charges arising out of the murder of Black Panther Alex Rackley last May. Sams is quite a fellow — he had told the police and will tell the court that Party Chairman Bobby Seale any motherfucker that stands in the way of our freedom. We ain't here for no goddamned peace, because we know that we can't have no peace because this country was built on war. And if you want peace you got to the

R e v i e w

we were young once too r7 & 8 awesome cowboys r14 & 15 liberal consensus politics r13

MacMILLAN:

setting the stage for liberalism

TIDES OF FORTUNE are memoirs of the formative years of the era we're still in by a man who helped set the consensus which dominates it. Harold Macmillan, dubbed "Supermac", was the leading figure of the progressive conservatism which developed in post-war Britain, taking the Tory party to the same modern, mildly liberal, highly pragmatic positions which the Liberals in Canada, the Democrats in the U.S.A., and the Social Democrats in Germany govern or governed from throughout the sixties.

Tides of Fortune is in the exhaustively comprehensive tradition of political autobiographies, yet out of character for its fresh and straightforward style. Volume Three of the set, this book covers Macmillan's final wartime assignments in Italy, his brief period of office in Churchill's 1945 Cabinet, his opposition role while Labour held office, then his successive positions as Minister for Housing, Defence Minister and Foreign Secretary in Churchill's and Eden's Conservative government. Still to come is the outline of his years as Prime Minister.

There are three points of focus in this volume, each of them significant and interesting: political developments inside Britain; the breakdown of the British Empire; and the pattern of post-war international relations. Macmillan's book presents valuable insights in all three areas, not least through watching the way his mind considers and analyses each subject; for Macmillan was as much representative of a certain kind of Britain as he was a pragmatic politician.

Son of a wealthy publisher, educated at Eton, Harold Macmillan was of that British aristocracy which uses the Conservative party to exercise its responsibility as natural ruling class of the British people. The Churchills, the Edens, the Macmillans saw this responsibility as a reality; power could be enjoyed but only because it was rationalized as taking care of the nation, seeing that wise decisions were made on its behalf by the elite groomed to make them. There was a surprising element of social commitment and sense of community in men like these but it was commitment within a social community "naturalized" established in hierarchy.

This attitude comes out in Macmillan's description of British politics after 1945. On the whole, for him, the period of Labour government turned out to be reasonably acceptable, because Attlee, the Labour P.M., was calm and sensible and kept the "extremists" in his party under control. That was the real political division in Macmillan's eyes: there were the moderates of the Labour and Conservative parties, men like Gaitskell, Bevin and Morrison, like Eden, Butler and Lord Woolton, and then there were the extremists in both parties, on the left, and on the right.

What was important was that the moderates should keep things in hand, implement reforms without upsetting the natural order of things and generally lower political passion in the country. Macmillan, of course, opposed the widespread nationalization of industry and transportation undertaken by Labour and had hard words for many left-wing budget proposals, but, in retrospect anyway, he sees the Labour period as fair and progressive. He couldn't quite help criticizing the working-class lack of social ease of men like Morrison and Bevin in international diplomacy, but then he does have to have some reason for implicitly believing in elitist rule.

It was the direction in which he helped take his own party which was most significant. Instead of rejecting the welfare state, he had the Tories embrace it, giving business a somewhat greater role than Labour would, but nevertheless accepting economic planning, social security measures and opportunities for social mobility. When the Tories were elected in 1951, the only industry they "denationalized" was steel, and their efforts in, for example, state provision of housing were even more active than Attlee's government.

In short, Macmillan brought the Tory party into the liberal-conservative, conservative-liberal consensus, and established the dominance of that political ideology, an ideology so pervasive that academics announced it meant the "end of ideology", an ideology so powerful that only recently have radicals challenged it. The "moderates", Labour and Tory, ran the show, so much so that British political observers termed "Butskellism" the philosophy of their post-war nation — after the similar economic policies of the two Chancellors of the Exchequer, Hugh Gaitskell of Labour and 'Rab' Butler of the Conservatives.

The consensus, though, was much harder to maintain when it came to the British Empire. For one thing, the "extremists" on each side included a much larger group: even Churchill, then Tory leader, expressed the kind of hard-line policy for retaining India that Macmillan identified with the Conservative right wing. Moreover, many like Macmillan, prepared to approach independence pragmatically, had through their upper class families exercised the same kind of "responsibility" to the colonies as they had to Britain. Macmillan reports a journey through India in this volume, visiting the "loyal" employees of his family's firm there and implicitly shows the mental effort involved in coming to accept the fact that the "British Raj" would no longer rule: colonial paternalism is the off-face of class paternalism, imperialism the parallel of hierarchy, and freeing the empire involved a major contradiction in the minds of most Tories.

They could be pragmatic, like Macmillan, sure that the "winds of change were blowing," but still speak fondly of the empire: "Never, in the long course of history, has an alien national given so much of its best. Service in India became a family tradition and affection for India a legacy from father to son. . . . By the achievement of this period of our rule in India, the British stand justified." Clearly Macmillan's education had missed the millions appropriated from India by the early British "servants" in that nation, the destruction of Indian industry that came with the Empire, and the work of Indian statisticians showing that even in the present century's early years Britain was taking, one way or another, some 10% of India's annual gross income.

If the parts of the book on Empire are more interesting for what they say implicitly, it is the explicit reporting of international relations which is useful in other sections. In a chapter automatically entitled The Russian Aggression Macmillan, in fact, asks whether that was the motivating force behind post-war dispute: "Might it . . . be that the apparent chauvinism of Soviet policy was a form of insurance, not of expansion; that security, not imperialism, was their instinctive goal?" He goes on to claim that "certainly the Russian government must have known that the Americans would never launch a pre-emptive war," yet later in the book talks of hard-line U.S. foreign policy positions, especially under Dulles, that suggest that hawk-like currents of thought existed in America even under Truman.

The portrayal of Americans and their policy in the fifties is devastating. In mid-1954 Macmillan wrote of the Americans, who were then refusing co-operation with the British in establishing a treaty for Indo-China: "One of the difficulties is the weakness and amateurishness of the American administration. Eisenhower is a generous and noble figure. But he is not a strong character. . . . The Republicans have put up a poor show against McCarthy. Eisenhower has treated the problem as Charles II treated Titus Oates — let the plague run its course (But a lot of innocent victims are sacrificed meantime.)" The immense power and rigid intransigence of John Foster Dulles emerge throughout.

There is an attitude of patience and understanding in much of Macmillan's discussions of Dulles and his activities, but there is, nevertheless, a clear implication of British concern about the dogmatism of the man — perhaps more of the "moderate-extremist" dichotomy which Macmillan sees domestically. The Dulles policy on the Far East and on Europe comes across as far too tough for the British. And if these policies seem unaccountably rigid to a Conservative cabinet minister, some questions about the real responsibility for the Cold War arise. It was, after all, in this period that the United States first intervened in Vietnam.

There is more in this autobiography, much more, sketches of British, French, Russian and American political figures, the beginnings of the struggle in the Middle East, the rebellions in Kenya and Malaysia, and of course, many intricacies of British politics.

The great value of the book, though, is still its self-portrayal of a liberal conservative, or conservative-liberal. Pierre Trudeau is probably just a French Catholic Macmillan, and Richard Nixon a less civilized, less comfortable version of the man. Thinking the same, in situations still caught in the basic pattern set after World War II, these contemporary consensus moderates may well act much as "Supermac" did. For those who think that kind of action inadequate, that non-egalitarianism unjust, Tides of Fortune may be a depressing book, but also a useful one.

Harold Macmillan
Tides of Fortune 1945-55
Macmillan Company 1969

— steven langdon

poetry...

He invented a rainbow but lightning struck it shattered it into the lake-lap of a mountain so big his mind slowed when he looked at it

Earle Birney, one of Canada's senior poets, writing of his own country in a powerful, often violent, style.

His newest book, The Poems of Earl Birney, presents a small selection from the larger, six dollar Selected Poems, 1940-66, to make his work more cheaply available to "Canadians under thirty who are the main, and most perceptive, readers of poetry." ("Persons over thirty may buy it too, of course, provided they've already made an honest attempt to acquire the hardback.")

Till we burst at noon to the flashing and floating round Of the peaks. Coming down we picked in our hats the bright And sunhot raspberries, eating them under a mighty Spruce, while a marten moving like quicksilver scouted us.

Unfortunately that Birney cannot always write so vividly, so beautifully, of the land. Unfortunately that he felt compelled to include in the selection a poem entitled "Canada:

Amplified

A CAREER... you'll get life for it

Your career is a lifetime proposition. And we figure if you have to work, you should work at something you'll enjoy.

Improve the odds when choosing a career by learning more about yourself.

STEP ONE:

Take inventory of your real interests and abilities.

STEP TWO:

Calculate your chances of success.

How? By completing the Biographical Inventory Blank (BIB) . . . a multiple-choice inventory of auto-biographical questions. There are over 500 items to answer and there is no time limit for completion. All of the questions in the BIB relate to your own past experience. The BIB is based on the psychological fact that people will tend to act in the future as they have acted in the past. Thus, your past behavior can be related to that of persons who have done well in certain fields or occupations.

Your BIB responses will be recorded and assessed with techniques developed during thirty years of intensive research, financed mainly by various government departments. This continuous research was initiated during WW II with recent applications by NASA and the Peace Corps.

Now you can benefit from this past research when you're choosing your career.

Career Assessment Ltd. will find out what your thing is and where you can do it, too. We'll give you:

1. A confidential counselling resumé of your results on the BIB.
2. Occupationally-oriented assistance for those who desire additional job exposure.

The Biographical Inventory Blank will tell you more about yourself, and the fields in which your interests will best fit your abilities. Then, your career decision will be made that much easier.

Make sure your career is your thing . . . it's a life sentence.

Watch this newspaper for further details on the Biographical Inventory Blank.

EEERCAREERCAREER CAREER
3MENTASSESSMENT ASSESSMENT
ITEDLIMITEDLIMITED LIMITED

51 PRINCE ARTHUR AVENUE
TORONTO, ONTARIO
(416) 964-7721, 964-7725

from home, abroad and elsewhere

Case History: 1969 Version" he teeters tiptoe on his arctic roof
(ten brittle legs, no two together) bearing his royal canadianness white and helpless in the global winds.

Is that really Birney's honest view of Canada? If so, then what of the mountains, the "marten moving like quicksilver" . . . Surely the two views are not compatible.

To my mind, "Canada: Case History: 1969 Version", built around an extended metaphor of Canada as a grotesque beast with ten legs, a dyspeptic belly and falling teeth, and containing vague political references to Quebec, is poor in comparison to the intense lyricism of the other Canadian poems. To my mind, its inclusion can only be explained in terms of a sellout for the sake of relevancy, a sellout I wish he hadn't made.

The poems of Birney's new book can roughly be divided into two halves: The Canadian and the foreign.

Perhaps I am wrong in seeing a lack of intimacy, and depth of perception, in the foreign poems, and that the fault really lies in my lack of sufficient acquaintance with the subject matter, but in any case, the smug "I've been there, have you?" attitude implicit in titling poems "Honolulu", "Epidaurus", "A Walk in Kyoto" . . . turns me right off. That, and the tourist hang-up Birney at least has the honesty not to hide — where tourists warship in a regalia of cameras make me wonder if it would not do him well to avoid the foreign stuff in favour of the land he knows best; the land, that is, and not its politics.

The Poems of Earl Birney, McClelland and Stewart, $1.50.
— lim inkster

Reading Canadian poets is a risky business because there is always the fear that they will be merely parochial or what's worse, overtly nationalistic. So it's a relief to find two new Canadian publications whose authors are obviously neither of the above. They are Ralph Gustafson and R. A. D. Ford, both of them world-travellers, whose poetry, culled from sources as distant as the Yukon and the Sahara, has the timelessness of all good writing.

Gustafson has had four previous books of poetry published and while his present volume Ixion's Wheel stems largely from his travels in the Mediterranean and the Canadian north, his work never degenerates into a travelogue. He is more concerned with distilling his own reactions from a maze of experience so that each poem is first of all an individual and often complicated response rather than mere description. And although it is often difficult for a poet to avoid imposing an over-stated meaning on his writing, Gustafson never does; the language controls and directs throughout in a concise and often ironic manner. Nobody is consistently good, of course, and on occasion some of his shorter poems are regrettably epigrammatic in tone and a few of the longer excessively descriptive, but these are minor considerations and generally he writes well.

Ford's new book of poetry, The Solitary City, takes its title from one of his own poems and while not as prolific as Gustafson, (this is his first volume since 1956), he also writes about his journeys.

To say that his themes examine the isolation of both love and death sounds mundane, if not frankly banal, though as a matter of fact this does characterize the bulk of his work. But what makes him an excellent poet is his craftsmanship; he knows the essential value of words and that's undoubtedly why the last half of the book, which is devoted to translations of Russian, Serbo-Croatian, Portuguese and French poetry is so successful. In short it is a kind of international potpourri of his own work and a sampling of many others', notably Pasternak, Evtushenko and Bandira, and although Ford works on a smaller scale than Gustafson, this is no detriment to his poetry for like any good writer he has something to say about life.

If you're interested in new Canadian poetry, read Ford and Gustafson. They are both imaginative, often intriguing and always readable.

IXION'S WHEEL, Ralph Gustafson, McClelland & Stewart, $4.95.

THE SOLITARY CITY, R. A. D. Ford, McClelland & Stewart, $4.95.

phyllis evans

ARTS - COMMERCE BUSINESS

If you are graduating in an Honour course or are achieving a post-graduate degree and are interested in training for a career in Computing, Finance, Marketing or Personnel we invite you to read our literature in your placement office and meet us when we are on campus.

Graduates begin on carefully planned work assignments designed to provide breadth of experience within a large organization which can lead to a first regular position in any of the above areas.

Ontario Hydro's very rapid expansion will continue to provide challenging careers utilizing the best technical facilities available (computers, etc.) and sophisticated management techniques.

INTERVIEW DATES:

JANUARY 19th & 20th, 1970

If you are unable to make the interview please contact—

Employment Officer,
Professional and Management Staff,
Ontario Hydro,
620 University Avenue,
Toronto 101, Ontario

VARSITY BLAZERS

Varsity Tartan
Kilts, Ties and Scarves
made to order

RICHARDSON'S

546 Yonge St. 922-3141

R E N T A L S

TYPEWRITERS

ADDING MACHINES

T.V.'S

STEREO TAPE
RECORDERS

STEREO RECORD
PLAYERS

698-2589

DANFORTH TYPEWRITER

2940 DANFORTH AVE

FREE DELIVERY

CinemaLumière

NO ONE IS ADMITTED

WHILE THE FILM IS SHOWING

please check the starting times

mon. to fri. : 7:00 & 9:30

saturday: 7:00, 9:15, 11:30

sunday: 2, 4:30, 7, 9:30

the prices
sun. (2 & 4:30), mon. : $1.00

tues., wed., thurs. : $1.50

fri., sat., sun. (7 & 9:30) $2.00

the films

today, saturday, sunday

Resnais' THE WAR IS OVER

(La Guerre est Finie) with Yves Montand

monday, tuesday

Richard Lester's PETULIA

wednesday, thursday

Albert Finney's

CHARLIE BUBBLES

next friday, saturday, sunday

Jean-Luc Godard's WEEKEND

CinemaLumière 290 College St. 920-9817

music

jazz is alive etc. in Toronto (well, this weekend anyway)

With Coleman Hawkins dead and Ben Webster and Don Byas living in Europe, Buddy Tate is one of the few important swing era tenor men left on the continent. Though he usually leads the band at Harlem's Celebrity Club, Tate occasionally sneaks into Toronto for a week or two. This week he is hiding out at the Cav-A-Bob, a steakhouse and bar in the Yonge St. Arcade.

With his big tone and distinctive loping swing, Buddy Tate was the logical successor to the late Herschel Evans whom he replaced in the Basie band of 1940. It was there that he discovered a musical affinity with the fine trumpeter Buck Clayton. The two have often appeared together in good little bands, usually playing at the Colonial in their regular visits to Toronto.

Maybe it's the absence of Clayton, or perhaps the lingering effects of a bout with the Hong Kong flu, but Tate sounded unusually restrained when we heard him the other night. On a couple of tunes he sounded discouragingly desultory, and only rarely did he play in a fully involved way. The majestic arch of phrase and the passionate, commanding sound were only suggested. This is unusual, for Tate is generally a strong and consistent musician; perhaps it was only an off night.

Still, the music was enjoyable enough, consisting mostly of the sort of easy-to-take jazz that some of our parents used to dance to (back in the days before musicians spent their time heralding apocalypse and condemning society, on the bandstand even.) In fact, most of the small number of the faithful were up dancing — except for the young lovers who sat in front of me and necked defiantly right through the set, a phenomenon I have not previously observed while listening to a swing era jazz.

If Buddy Tate was not particularly exciting, at least he was pleasant to hear, an observation I cannot make about Eddie Harris. Mounting the new, more commodious bandstand at the recently redecorated Colonial Tavern, Harris and his hip comrades immediately tried to hint around that they would like very much to follow the directions that Miles Davis is currently outlining. Unfortunately, they gave no evidence of even a particle of the talent required to do this.

Harris commenced the set with some rather dreadful sounds which he made on what is, I believe, known as a saxel-la (basically a trumpet-like instrument which, however, uses a saxophone mouthpiece.) Clearly, Harris has not come anywhere near to mastering the instrument, but he probably thinks this doesn't matter, as he is only producing watered-down "avant-garde" music anyway.

He also played tenor saxophone in a rather pedestrian manner. Both horns were hooked up to amplifiers and control panels, perhaps to allow Harris to sublimate an unconscious wish to be an aviator. Certainly the electronic technology did not result in wonderful music, for although the machines could simulate the sound of, for instance, a bass clarinet, they could not give Harris the ability to play like, for instance, Eric Dolphy.

But take heart, jazz-crazed reader! Some fine music may be in store for us this weekend, if all goes well at Matt Muldoon's. When I spoke to Roland Wollens the other night, he was just installing the second toilet (required by law) in the old Queen Street machine shop which is undergoing a metamorphosis into "jazz concert hall, practice studios, and place of study."

Wollens and the other members of the artists' co-operative of which he is currently the manager are very ambitious in this worthy undertaking. If the first gig is successful, they plan to expand their efforts to create, as Wollens put it, a proper, together atmosphere, where musicians can come together and learn from one another.

Elvin Jones will be playing tonight, Saturday and Sunday nights from 10 til 2. Jones, of course, is the leading drummer in the last ten years of jazz. When he was with the John Coltrane quartet he created a new role for the drums in jazz, which has since been widely embraced by young musicians. Jones currently has a trio featuring Joe Farrell, a highly proficient player of tenor and soprano saxophones, as well as flute and piccolo.

Music like that of Jones has never been heard much in Toronto, for no particularly good reason. Characterized by a hard-driving modernity which managers to stay within the traditions of the jazz mainstream without becoming stale, this music is the lifeblood of the New York jazz scene. Somehow we've missed out on it. But if enough music lovers show up to pay the musicians and the rent, Wollens and the others at Matt Muldoon's hope to bring in musicians like Sonny Rollins, McCoy Tyner, Cecil Taylor, Mingus, etc.

But of course these ventures are always risky; the big problem, no matter how good the intentions, is money and management. So you better get down to 197 Queen E. and dig the music while it lasts.

The scene starts at 8 p.m. each night, with preliminary sounds by various local jazzmen. At 10, the excellent Jones trio takes over. It promises to be an exciting musical event.

jack mccaffrey

hype art, exhibit no. 1. a witches'coven

The problem with popular music since the advent of recording, and perhaps even before, is that the demand is so great that a tremendous amount of monumentally inferior stuff is turned out and, to some extent, bought. In fact, there's so much garbage to be peddled, that the industry routinely uses non-musical methods of selling it, to the extent that hype is considered the normal course of events in the business.

Now although I usually consider that most of the new records at any given time aren't worth having, a few recent entries of hype-art seem worthy of non-musical note.

First of all, there's a record of minor importance, Coven ("Destroys minds and reaps souls") on Mercury. The jacket is made into a kind of booklet with four inner pages, and having eagerly ripped aside the cellophane wrapping and opened it up, I find a full color double page photographs of the blond lead singer (female) lying stark naked in a cruciform position on a table. There's a skull placed neatly in her crotch, a chalice between her breasts, and in each hand she holds a lit candle.

The effect of this startling image is, unfortunately, rather spoiled by a group of zanies who cavort behind her pretending to be a coven. But never mind, I feast my eyes on her nakedness and consider the various pleasant possibilities suggested by the scene, note that, for a dollar, I can have my own 2 by 3 foot poster of the photo, and turn the page looking for more goods.

There, following a page of "lyrics", is what purports to be an accurate description of a satanic mass. It begins with incantations, chants and various Latin mumbo-jumbo, but finally gets to the entrance of "a scared young girl, who has been persuaded to join the coven."

The girl has to perform a number of unimportant ceremonies like breaking a crucifix, denying God, and kissing a goat's ass, before she finally gets to the significant gesture: removing her robe and lying on the table, ("some members of the assemblage, looking ahead to the ceremony where she must submit to the sexual desires of the coven, are beginning to express their emotion," no doubt the very moment at which the photograph was taken).

There follows symbolic copulation with the devil, some most profane behavior towards the host (conveniently stolen from a local church), a suitable amount of ceremonial gabbling, and finally the girl (neophyte) is turned loose to the coven, and, "later, at the end of the Mass, she will be submitted to the carnal desires of members who request her. She will also assist in mass perversions" — wow!

But, shortly afterwards (but before that touching last orgy) the description ends, as "the High Priest wanders among the assemblage, touching the genitals of each member of the coven with a special Satanic blessing to ensure the success of the orgy to follow."

Well now, almost feeling that I've been touched by that Satanic blessing myself with trembling hands and sweating fingers, I endeavor to extricate the record and place it on the spindle.

And of course, sadder but wiser, I find that I am going to have to look elsewhere for gratification of that damn blessing, because when it comes right down to the music, it's totally dull — perhaps the least exciting record of the year. But then, the record was probably only an afterthought anyway.

p. h.

glee! glee! glee!

Canterbury Tales, a musical adapted from Neville Coghill's translation of Chaucer, should appeal to anyone who has any liking for any of: Chaucer in particular, medievalia in general, bawdy battles between the sexes, pageantry, the musical format, or bright colors and sounds in motion. Since I'd check the box for "Almost all of the Above," it's been a while since I've had as gleeful an evening of theatre as I did at the O'Keefe last night.

Like the original, this Canterbury Tales operates as a series of playlets within a play, with five tales about love in and out of marriage being sung, danced and acted out by spring-time pilgrims to Becket's shrine at Canterbury. The script takes the poem's long passages of narrative description of the tales and their tellers and records them in dialogue and action. The onstage presentation makes it possible to realize in a gesture or a detail of costuming many of the living nuances which, thanks to 600 years' worth of changes in the English language, usually get lost in a translation or bored to death in a gloss on the original text.

In dishing up this slice of 14th-century lives and loves to a modern audience, the show pares away a lot of Chaucer's muscle: the Knight, who in the poem is a social pillar supporting "chivalrie, troute and honour, freedom and curtesie," is summarily belittled to a pompous ass of a 19th-century colonialist unable to remember what his wars were about. The spiritual certainties informing the original fare no better than the secular ones, and religious faith is reduced to the silly or sentimentalized to the unpalatably sappy a la Sound of Music.

But the backbone of Chaucer, his relish for the relentless observation of individual men and their interactions, remains intact. And most members of the cast give multiple performances worthy of the assorted characters they present. Particularly alive are the roles of the Miller and Pluto as played by Patrick Hines, and those of the Steward and two cuckolded husbands as played by Ray Walston, who is no longer My Favorite Martian but My Favorite Dirty Old Man.

In an adaptation limited to Chaucer's handling of the themes of love, the crucial character is the five-times-Wife of Bath, and Constance Carpenter carries it well, if somewhat desperately. To the younger roles, Terry Eno (Clerk of Oxford, Absalon, Chanticleer, and Young Knight), Walter McGinn (Nicholas, Alan, and Damian), and Bill Starr (Friar and Fox) bring a remarkable amount of energy and ability and an even more remarkable ability to turn character types into personalities. Most remarkable is the fact that Eno and McGinn manage this differentiation in spite of their physical resemblance and the superficial similarities of some of their roles. Perhaps they could instruct Louisa Flaningham, who, presumably either by director James Hammerstein's choice or her own incapacities, merely bats her eyes at the audience through an indistinguishable and undistinguished succession of Nubile Young Things.

